<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The parties often use certain “key words” to trigger the witnesses’ recollection regarding their previous statements with the police.

Klinge asked if P28 personally heard about women being tortured or sexually abused in Al-Khatib Branch. P28 said that everybody who enters Al-Khatib or any other security branch is tortured. When someone goes to a security branch, he or she is headed to death.

Klinge asked if P28 said that women were tortured in Al-Khatib Branch and that he heard their screams. P28 said that the detainees could hear [women being tortured], but he did not see it.

Klinge asked if P28 personally heard women scream or tortured. P28 said that he did not hear screaming. A woman tried to tell him that she was there. There were women in Al-Khatib Branch.

Defence Counsel Böcker said that the defence did not have questions.

The plaintiffs' representatives did not have questions.

Judge Kerber dismissed the witness.

P28 asked Kerber if he could make a final statement. Kerber permitted the statement. P28 said that he was more psychologically than physically harmed. Physical harm was nothing compared to the psychological condition that he now faces. Until this day, he still lives in cell number five. Even P28's family lives this agony. His child was 5-years-old when P28 was detained and, because of how much the child was scared by P28's detention, he cannot sleep alone or in a closed room. The child is now 17-years-old and suffers because P28 suffered. All of P28's family suffers. P28 still has the images [of detainees] in his head which keeps him awake [haunts him at night], in addition to the tinnitus. Sometimes, he loses self-control. "I am not me."

Kerber thanked P28 and told him that he was heard.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:55AM.

The next trial will be March 11, 2021 at 9:30 AM.

Trial Day 64 – March 11, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were four spectators and two individuals from the media present.

Testimony of P29

The witness's attorney asked Presiding Judge Kerber to allow her client to wear his face mask and to abstain from giving personal information that might endanger his life and liberty.

Kerber asked about the reason for the witness's endangerment. The attorney said that her client was afraid that his family would be threatened, which happened to a former witness.

Kerber allowed the witness to keep his mask on and to not give personal information. Kerber said that she previously received a message from the attorney regarding this matter.

Instructions were read to P29 and he was informed of his rights as a witness.

Questioning by Presiding Judge Kerber

Kerber asked P29 if he is related to the accused by blood or marriage. P29 said no.

Kerber asked P29 how he came into conflict with the regime and how he was detained. P29 said that he participated in demonstrations in Sha'lan شعلان, Al-Qaboun القابون, Douma دوما, and other places. But the reasons for his detention were not based on [the demonstrations]. On May 12, 2012, P29 was on his way home from Al-Jisr Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض. There was a checkpoint at Sabe' Bahrat سبع بحرات. He was stopped at the checkpoint because his identification card was damaged. The issue with P29's ID was just a manufacturing defect near the part of the card that listed his father's name. Although P29 had whiskey with him and [checkpoint personnel were familiar with him], they accused him of being an Islamic extremist because of a Sheikh named Al-Ar'our العرعور who asked people to break their IDs in defiance of the regime. Additionally, P29 is from Homs حمص which opposes the regime. P29 tried to explain the situation, but the checkpoint personnel called another patrol which then took P29 to the Branch. P29 was not tortured to confess. He mentioned this each time he spoke with police. But the conditions during detention were difficult, beginning when he was transferred by car (a Mitsubishi) from the checkpoint to the Branch. The first slap (before he got into the car) was bad and raised his tolerance threshold. He tried to concentrate on where he was being taken. He assumed that the [location] was close to the Council of Ministers and that he was going to Al-Khatib. The car stopped at a random location where there were other detainees. P29 was thrown to the ground, then low-level officials began to kick and sexually harass him. At that time, P29 had longer hair [a note from the Trial Monitor: P29's hair was shoulder-length at the trial]. The officials fondled P29's hair and chest. They put a rifle at P29's bottom as they jumped around and repeated pro-Bashar slogans. The detainees were then put on a microbus. The route was long. At each checkpoint, the door [of the microbus] opened and [the officials] said something along the lines of "we brought Ara'eer عراعر [a derogatory reference to supporters of Ar'our] to you" and had a "welcome party."

Kerber asked if [the welcome party] happened on the bus or at the Branch. P29 clarified that the first party [was on the bus], but the main party was at the Branch.

Böcker did not understand the term that was mentioned and asked the interpreter for clarification. The interpreter said that "Ar'our" is the name of the Sheikh and "Ara'eer" is little "Ar'ours."

P29 said that the detainees arrived at Al-Khatib Branch. He was not tortured. His hands were bound by a zip tie behind his back. Perhaps he stayed like this [he did not mention where] for one or two hours. After that, he was taken upstairs to a low-ranking officer who said that P29 would stay [at the Branch] for a while. [The officer] asked for P29's Facebook and email passwords. P29 tried to provide the correct password with one typo and then was taken downstairs to detention. [The detainees] asked P29 to take off his shoes because [the cell] was where they ate and prayed. During the first few days, there were 100 people (P29 did not remember precisely). It was a long room with a small room on its right-side and a toilet. It was crowded and there was no place for people to sleep. The newcomers either had no place to sleep or alternated spots with old detainees. Ultimately, P29 could not sit for five days. The psychological pressure in the Branch led to group affiliations. People gathered according to city: Damascus, Homs, Hama, Harasta, etc. There was constant fear of the prison guard. The guard was referred to as "Memati ميماتي" after a person in a Turkish series. After four or five days, P29 began to imagine that he was in a reality show. He wanted to sleep. He started to scream and bang on the iron door. The men tried to stop P29, but they could not. A guard came with whips. The detainees were afraid because conflicts were not allowed in the cell. The guard opened the door and spoke with a coastal dialect ("Alawite" dialect). P29 challenged the guard by also speaking the coastal dialect. He said "if you think that you can speak the dialect, then I can speak it better." The detainees were terrified. This was the first time that the guard entered the [cell]. The guard told someone to "go stand and let this donkey sleep." The toilet area was small. There was an Arab-style toilet that P29 slept next to. It became P29's sacred place to sleep and he was not willing to forfeit it. P29 said that he was not directly tortured and was briefly interrogated after the time when he started screaming.

Kerber asked when P29 was detained. P29 said that he tried to forget the date, but his Facebook indicates that he was detained from May 12, 2012 until May 26, 2012.

Kerber asked if P29 knew why he was not tortured. P29 said that [prior to being detained], he asked his friends not to create a Facebook page that advocated for his release because he was not a hero [a Facebook page was commonly made by family and friends of detained individuals to advocate for their release]. Many of P29's friends who were not pro-opposition reached out to contacts to get P29 released. They secured a meeting for P29's mother with a person connected to Hafez Makhoul <sup>مخلوف</sup> حافظ. P29's mother begged the person and, eventually, P29 was released on bail after he signed many blank papers and paid money.

Kerber asked if [P29's release] occurred because of his contact's connection to Hafez Makhoul. P29 said yes.

Kerber asked if a ransom was paid. P29 said no, a ransom was not paid.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner recalled that P29 said during the French police hearing that he was active in the early demonstrations. He asked about P29's observations after he was released. P29 said that there was violence from the first moment [of the uprising in Syria]. He remembered that he witnessed a direct shooting for the first time after a demonstration in Douma <sup>دوما</sup>. He was naive because he was a city boy. He laid on the ground [and pretended to be dead] and people pulled him away. He lost his voice until the demonstration on behalf of the 13 martyrs in Al-Qaboun.

Wiedner asked when [the demonstration in Al-Qaboun] happened. P29 did not remember the exact date, but it occurred between 2011 and 2012.

Wiedner asked if P29 was there when [the 13 people] were killed. P29 said no. The event was a funeral [demonstration] for the 13 people.

Wiedner recalled that P29 said in police questioning that the demonstration was on July 15, 2011 and asked P29 if that was correct. P29 said correct, he participated in the funeral [demonstration].

Wiedner asked if P29 witnessed violence during the demonstrations. P29 recalled many demonstrations in Al-Midan <sup>الميدان</sup> where he heard shooting from a distance and saw injured people [note from the Trial Monitor: "and saw injured people" was not interpreted]. [Violence occurred at demonstrations even before the uprisings, like at] the demonstration against Al-Qaddafi <sup>القذافي</sup> in front of the [Libyan] embassy. P29 wondered why he was summoned to testify in court since he did not witness much: 13 days in detentions was nothing compared to others.

Wiedner said that P29 was detained from a checkpoint and was taken to a location where he was abused. P29 was then taken to Al-Khatib and was eventually released from Al-Jisr Al-Abyad. Wiedner then asked P29 if it was possible that P29 was detained in the same place from where he was released. P29 said that the first time he was released was on May 26th. He was taken by car to Al-Jisr Al-Abyad and was released. The following day, he went back to Al-Khatib Branch for his papers.

Wiedner asked if P29 was sure that it was Al-Jisr Al-Abyad. P29 said that he was 80% sure that it was Al-Jisr Al-Abyad. At first, he thought that it was the Council of Ministers, but it was not.

Wiedner asked if P29 recalled a case with the key word “cigarettes.” P29 said of course. [When he was at the random location before he arrived to Al Khatib], the officials threw cigarette butts at the detainees backs to see if the butts would stick to them and burn their skin.

Wiedner asked if that happened to P29 as well. P29 said of course.

Wiedner asked how P29 knew that he was at Al-Khatib Branch. P29 learned that he was in Al-Khatib Branch after he was released. When [the detainees] were in the Branch, many people did not know where they were or what time it was. Some people suspected that they were at Al-Khatib. When P29 returned the following day (after he was released from Al-Jisr Al-Abyad), he saw the door he went through. At that moment, P29 was certain that he was held at Al-Khatib. Based on that, when they [French or German police] asked him to draw a sketch of the surrounding space, he could draw it.

Wiedner asked if P29 remembered anything about the Branch and where it was. P29 said that it was practically in the basement. There was an iron door to the right and a set of stairs, then another set of stairs. There was a place where they had to put their personal belongings and after that was the room of the officer who interrogated him.

Wiedner asked where the interrogation took place. P29 said that it was either on the ground floor or the first floor.

Wiedner asked if P29 remembered the interrogation room. P29 said that the image is completely absent [from his mind]. He remembered what he told the German police (but not the French): there were green curtains, pictures of Hafez and Bashar Al-Assad (like all government departments), and a brown desk with gold decorations on it.

Wiedner recalled that P29 said in police questioning that he was detained in the basement and that the interrogation took place on the first floor. [P29 consulted his attorney]. P29 still thought the same: either the ground floor or the first floor.

Wiedner asked P29 if he was alone in the interrogation. P29 said that he was alone and initially blindfolded. The interrogator was kind and did not call him bad names. [The interrogator] asked P29 to take off the blindfold, then he asked a few questions that were unrelated to P29’s detention. At that time, P29 felt that [the interrogator] had [already] received a call from the parties who were trying to release him.

Wiedner asked if the interrogator received a call during the interrogation. P29 said no, he felt like the interrogator received the call prior to that.

Wiedner asked why P29 had that feeling. P29 felt that way because of the interrogator’s way of speaking and because P29 compared the appearance of people after they returned from interrogations versus P29’s appearance after he returned. Additionally, he got cardiac medicine after two hours, whereas others with much more serious conditions did not get medicine. P29 recalled an incident in which a person had a severe headache and was not given medicine. A sheikh put his hand on that person and read the Quran to him. The prison guard came inside the cell, beat them, and told them “this is how your headache goes away.”

Wiedner recalled that P29 said that he was treated better than others and the interrogator was nice. Wiedner asked about the subject discussed during the interrogation. P29 noted that the interrogator said that P29 was from a kind family, unlike other detainees. [P29 stopped speaking for a moment.] He apologized and said that he did not remember.

Wiedner said that P29 was shown photos during police questioning. P29 said correct.

Wiedner noted that P29 previously pointed to a person in a photo and indicated that the person might be the accused. Wiedner asked P29 how he identified the accused. Böcker objected to the question's phrasing.

Wiedner rephrased the question. He asked P29 if he recognized Raslan in one of the photos and if P29 saw Raslan in Syria. P29 said that he did not want to speak about a [specific] person. At the moment [when P29 was questioned by the police], Raslan was detained and his picture had spread across the internet. Therefore, P29 thought this would influence his answer. When P29 was released, there was a travel ban on him and whenever he wanted to travel abroad, he had to go to the officer who was responsible for him. One time, P29 had to go to another officer because the officer who was responsible for him defected. The original officer was from the Al-Bab الباب area, which conflicts with the location that was mentioned by the media [referring to Al-Houla, where Raslan comes from].

Kerber asked if P29 recognized Raslan as the officer who was responsible for him. P29 said no.

Kerber asked if P29 recognized Raslan as the officer who was connected to P29's release. P29 said that the officer who released him was an official who was connected to Hafez Makhoul.

Wiedner asked if P29 recognized Raslan as the officer who conducted the interrogation. P29 did not remember.

Wiedner said that he was asking because P29 said during police questioning that he recognized similarities between the person in the photo and the officer who interrogated him at Al-Khatib. P29 said correct, but that he questioned his own credibility. P29 asked Wiedner to put himself in P29's position in Syria while he was in front of an officer who could take away his life. [The interrogator] told P29 to remove his blindfold. P29 is not 100% sure, but there are similarities.

Wiedner asked if P29 heard screams and sounds of torture in the interrogation room. P29 said yes.

Wiedner asked from where the sounds came. P29 said that the area between the offices and the basement was not large. He recalled something that happened during the interrogation: [the interrogator] asked P29 "did they torture you?" which made P29 laugh [after the interrogation] because it was impossible not to hear screams and sounds of torture.

Wiedner asked if P29 actually laughed. P29 said no, he did not laugh.

Wiedner asked if the sounds came from the nearby basement. P29 said yes.

Wiedner asked how many times P29 was interrogated. P29 said once.

Wiedner asked whether P29 saw signs of torture on other detainees. P29 specifically remembered the torture of a person whose name P29 did not remember. He was the chief of the [cell]—a position appointed to one of the detainees. One of his tasks was to prevent the prisoners from waking up the guard at night. One time, the detainees woke up the guard. The guard took the chief, shaved off his hair and beard, then beat him. The detainees heard the chief's screams from their cell. The guard returned the chief to the cell and said, "now, I want to sleep." A [prison guard] used to come inside the cell and beat people.

Kerber asked whether P29 wanted a break. P29 said yes.

***

Wiedner asked if it was correct that P29 was not abused during the interrogation. P29 said correct.

Wiedner asked if abuse happened on his way to the interrogation room. P29 said that there were some provocations.

Wiedner asked if P29 could describe the provocations. P29 said that he was pushed and insulted.

Wiedner recalled that P29 said in police questioning that “he was insulted on the way from the cell to the interrogation room and was sexually harassed by the prison guards who put their finger up P29’s anus. However, he was not tortured.”

Wiedner asked P29 to speak about the key word “collective punishment.” P29 recalled that he tried to evade torture [on the way to Al-Khatib] and blasphemed so he would not be accused of being an Islamist. The personnel’s reaction was strange. They got madder and beat him, saying that he was not allowed to blaspheme without an order to do so. One time, [the detainees] were ordered to get off the bus and lay on the gravel. They were then stepped on. P29 remembered that there was constant beating.

Wiedner said that P29 mentioned an incident during police questioning when a guard entered the cell. P29 said this incident was what he mentioned before the break. [The guard] entered the cell with his whip or other tools, then started beating and cursing until the detainees were pushed to the corners. P29 recalled the name of one prison guard, Memati [according to other witnesses named after a character in a Turkish TV series]. Another guard was named Abu Ghadab or Abu Al-Jamajim [father of skulls]. P29 apologized for not recalling many details and said that one forgets things inside the branch.

Wiedner said that it was not a problem and told P29 that he wanted to give him key words and P29 can talk about them if he recalls something. Wiedner then mentioned the key word “cables with open endings.” P29 did not remember the details, but the signs remained on his back. He sometimes had flashbacks, but not many now.

Wiedner mentioned the key word “electricity” and recalled that P29 said in police questioning that “the most brutal method used to torture detainees during interrogations was when water was put on their bodies then electricity was applied. One’s body jerked afterward and there were signs on his back. P29 saw this on someone who was with him in the cell and heard from others when he was released.” P29 asked when he said that.

Wiedner said P29 said this to the German police. P29 said that he did say that, but in a slightly different context. P29 heard in prison about people who were tortured with electricity, but he did not see that. When he was released, he met a close friend from the presidential palace and she was the one who told him about the electricity and water. P29 saw the injuries of people who were tortured with electricity, but they did not tell P29 themselves.

Wiedner asked if these people were in Al-Khatib. P29 said yes.

Wiedner asked about nutrition in the prison, namely the food and water. P29 said that the floor of the [cell] was [clean] for eating and praying. Pots of cooked food were served with bags of bread. The detainees opened the plastic bags to eat on them. As far as P29 remembered, the food was sufficient.

He thought that three meals were served every day. In the morning, “Hawader حواضر” were served (labneh [strained yogurt] and sometimes eggs).

Kerber asked P29 if he lost weight in prison. P29 said that he lost 8kg in 13 days.

Wiedner said that Al-Khatib was a 5-star branch compared to other branches. P29 confirmed.

Wiedner asked how P29 knew about conditions in other branches. P29 said that he had many friends who were detained at the Palestine Branch and Air Force Branch. Detainees at Al-Khatib had water inside their cells, ways to maintain their hygiene, and the place was relatively bigger than what his friend who was at the Palestine Branch told him. “We” used to hear about the conditions in the Air Force Branch. It is true that the detainees at Al-Khatib were collectively punished. But at the Air Force Branch, collective punishment happened every few hours. “We” were beaten for trivial reasons, however, [detainees in other branches] were beaten with or without a reason.

Wiedner asked why P29 thought that he was not abused during interrogation. P29 said that he did not experience abuse personally because his friends intervened.

Wiedner asked if P29 still has residual injuries due to his detention. P29 said that psychiatrists told him that he had no clinical problems [because of his detention]. P29 had a dental bridge that fell out during detention, but there was no link. P29 often thinks about the first welcome party, but those thoughts are philosophical, not psychological: how could people he didn’t know him beat him?

Wiedner asked P29 to confirm that the guard’s finger went inside his bottom. P29 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if the finger really went inside his anus. P29 said no, but the forepart of the rifle’s barrel went inside him during the welcome party while he wore underwear.

Wiedner asked if that happened before Al-Khatib in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad. P29 was not certain if it was Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, but it happened at the first location before Al-Khatib. What was humiliating was the fondling of his hair and chest. The whole situation did not make sense.

Wiedner asked if that also happened before Al-Khatib. P29 said yes. However, the fingering happened later (P29 apologized for the vulgar term).

Klinge asked if P29 was afraid after he was released. P29 said that he was scared every time [he left home] because his ID was still defected and he was from a pro-opposition area. When he went back to Al-Khatib [he was repeatedly summoned after his release and before he left Syria], he was afraid that he would have to sleep there.

Questioning by Defense Counsel Böcker

Defense Counsel Böcker asked how many times P29 was interrogated at Al-Khatib. P29 said that he was interrogated once at Al-Jisr Al-Abyad (by the low-ranking officer who asked for P29’s passwords), then a second time at Al-Khatib.

Böcker recalled that P29 said in police questioning that he was interrogated at least twice by the same interrogator. P29 did not remember if he was interrogated twice.

Böcker reiterated what P29 said and quoted from the police questioning transcript. P29 said that his statement was probably right, but now he does not remember anything except the instance when the interrogator asked him to take off the blindfold.

Böcker noted that P29 was confused between his client and Al-Gharib. P29 did not remember why he said that.

Böcker asked if P29 said that his client was from Deir ez-Zor. P29 explained that news circulated that Raslan was from Deir ez-Zor, but P29 noted that the defected officer was from Al-Bab, rural Aleppo.

Böcker recalled that P29 said during the German police hearing that "Raslan is from Deir ez-Zor" (full stop) and today P29 said otherwise. Böcker asked if P29 thinks that this affects what [was read from] the transcript. P29 said that, based on his understanding, it could affect his evaluation.

Böcker noted that P29 was asked if the interrogator was from Deir ez-Zor, then P29 apologized because he did not know. P29 said yes. He did not know why Deir ez-Zor was stuck in his mind.

Scharmer interjected that the witness did not say that today, and he asked Böcker to stop confusing the witness.

Böcker asked how P29 was sure that people were tortured during interrogations. P29 said that he was sure because he compared how people looked before and after their interrogations, versus how P29 looked. There was a 16 or 17-year-old boy who was arrived to the Branch before P29. The boy pretended to be tough, until P29 was released and the boy cried. P29 tried to remember his name because he was innocent. If P29 was tortured half as much as that child, then he would have blown himself up. There was something systematic [happening].

Böcker asked if P29 had any other explanation. P29 said that one saw how people went to Najha نجها and cried. One saw how people went to interrogations and were unable to stand on their feet when they returned. That was sufficient [to deduce that things were systematic].

Böcker asked P29 how often he was interrogated. P29 said that the first time was at Al-Jisr Al-Abyad and [the second time was] when he took off the blindfold.

Böcker asked if P29 was interrogated more than once at Al-Khatib. P29 did not remember.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer recalled that P29 said that he was detained at Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, then was abused at some location where there were personnel from Al-Khatib. Scharmer asked P29 how he concluded that the personnel were from Al-Khatib. P29 asked if Scharmer could repeat the question without the introduction.

Scharmer repeated the question. P29 said yes, he found out later the structure [of the intelligence services and how they work]. Personnel from military intelligence cannot detain someone and deliver him to another branch. P29 knew that this checkpoint belonged to General Intelligence.

Scharmer asked if P29 was detained at Division 40. P29 did not have the numbers of the branches memorized. During police questioning, P29 told the police "Al-Khatib" and they told him its number.

Scharmer refreshed P29's recollection by quoting the police questioning transcript: "P29's hands were cuffed behind his back. [The personnel] threw cigarettes at [the detainees]. Sometimes, the cigarettes stuck to the detainees' skin and burned it. After the second cigarette, P29 screamed. They told him that he screamed like women. One of them started fondling his chest. After that, someone inserted the forepart of a rifle into P29's anus." P29 said correct.

Scharmer recalled that P29 said that he was sleeping next to the Arab-style toilet and asked if others used the toilet. P29 said yes. It was impossible to fit one person in that spot. Nonetheless, a person shared that spot with him. That person died later in another branch.

Scharmer asked whether P29 heard about sexual abuse from other detainees. P29 said yes.

Scharmer asked if P29 could describe what he heard. P29 said there were people in Al-Khatib Branch (before he was there) who were overweight and were sexually harassed.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P29 could describe the sexual harassment. P29 said, in general, there was fondling of chests, nipples, and ears. He added “there was also adhesion from behind” [Branch employees approaching a detainee from behind in a sexual manner].

Klinge asked P29 how many people were harassed. P29 did not remember.

Klinge asked P29 about the minimum number of people harassed. P29 said that there were [at least] two people other than him.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked whether P29 witnessed this or was told about it. P29 said that he saw this when he stood in line near the Branch’s door. The person near him was fondled on his chest. P29 did not remember the people or the whole scene.

Böcker asked whether P29 saw the fondling or only heard about it. P29 saw it.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked whether P29 heard about sexual abuse from other detainees in Al-Khatib Branch. P29 did not remember. In his culture, he could not imagine that someone subjected to [sexual abuse] would speak about it.

Defense Counsel Fratzky asked P29 to explain how he knew about the locations Al-Jisr Al-Abyad and Al-Khatib and how certain he was about the locations. P29 said that, after he was released, it took him a long time to form a [map in his mind]. He was 70 – 80% certain of it. He went back to Al-Khatib and was 100% certain that he was there. He concluded that he was at Al-Jisr Al-Abyad after analysing the motion of the car.

Fratzky asked if P29 was 70 – 80% certain of his conclusion. P29 said that he was 100% certain of Al-Khatib. Regarding Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, he still had questions.

Defense Counsel Böcker said P29 mentioned P6’s name during the German police questioning. P29 thought that he asked the police not to include P6’s full name.

Böcker asked if P29 confused P6 to be a relative of Raslan instead of Al-Gharib. P29 clarified that the mix-up happened because of the news that circulated. The name was just mentioned to read a post.

Judge Wiedner said that P29 mentioned similarities between the photos shown to him during the German police hearing and his memory. P29 recalled saying that then, but he might not be able to remember well now.

Wiedner refreshed P29’s recollection by quoting from the police questioning transcript: “P29 does not know the person in Photo 1. The person in Photo 2 resembles the interrogator at Al-Khatib. P29 was not sure, but thought that they looked similar.” P29 confirmed.

Wiedner continued quoting: “P29 does not know the people in the rest of the photos. After P29 was released, he went back to Al-Khatib approximately three times. One of those times, he was told that the officer who was responsible for him defected and he was from Al-Bab.” P29 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P29 if he was told that he was going to be questioned about whether the name Anwar Raslan means anything to him. P29 confirmed.

Wiedner said that “P29 replied that [Raslan’s] pictures were on the internet, but P29 was not sure if Raslan was the interrogator at Al-Khatib. P29 was asked whether he saw Photo 2 on the internet or in the media. P29 said no, [his answers] were not linked to the internet, but rather to his memory of Al-Khatib. P29 remembered that there was a picture of Bashar Al-Assad.” P29 confirmed.

Defense Counsel Böcker said that P29 was questioned about Al-Khatib at the second police questioning in France. At that time, P29 did not remember the face of his interrogator. Böcker now asked if P29 was familiar with Raslan’s name before the hearing. P29 said that he would not have remembered anything about Raslan had it not been for the hearing.

Böcker asked if P29 remembered how many people were at the hearing. P29 said no.

Böcker said that the transcript indicates that there were three people. He asked P29 if there was an interpreter. P29 said that he remembers, but he did not want to say. [He paused and consulted with his attorney.] P29 asked Böcker if he meant the first or the second hearing.

Böcker said the second hearing. P29 said that he did not remember.

Böcker said that there were four people including: P29, two interrogators, and one interpreter. P29 said yes: a lady, a young man, and an interpreter.

Böcker asked if P29 described the interrogator as being slim and plain-clothed. P29 asked if Böcker was referring to the Syrian officer who conducted the interrogation.

Böcker said yes. P29 explained that he might have said that. He wished that he could identify the person, but he could not.

Böcker asked if the interrogator spoke with an Alawite accent. P29 said “Sir, I do not remember the first interrogation. I was standing on my feet for approximately five days and was semi-crazy.”

The witness was dismissed.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer noted that testimonies of witnesses [like P29 validate] the motion by him and Dr. Kroker pertaining to systematic sexual violence used against the Syrian people.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:15PM.

The next trial will be March 17, 2021 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 30

Hearing Date: March 17, 2021

Trial Day 65 – March 17, 2021

The plaintiff P30, a 32-year-old man who was formerly working for the [information redacted] testified on his detention and various interrogations he had to endure at Al-Khatib Branch. He explained the court how detainees had to suffer physical torture in the form of beatings and electroshocks during interrogations and on the way there. He also described how they were subjected to psychological torture was well, including, sleep deprivation, constant exposure to sounds of torture, and prolonged waiting outside their cell prior to interrogation. The witness further described the devastating hygienic and nutritional conditions at the Branch. Raslan's defense raised several questions about how exactly P30 joined the case as a plaintiff.

Day 65 of Trial – March 17, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30AM with nine spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. One of the spectators was a court illustrator. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Testimony of P30<sup>2</sup>

The plaintiff, P30, a 32-year-old man who was formerly working for [information redacted] was accompanied by his counsel René Bahns. P30 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the Defendant by blood or marriage.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber started the court's questioning by asking P30 how he was arrested and how he came into conflict with the regime. P30 explained that he used to participated in demonstrations, however, on March 13, 2012, one of his colleagues betrayed him and P30 was arrested for the first time. He was arrested a second time on March 31 [2012]. P30 said he was taken to Division 40 where he stayed for around one day. After that he was transferred to Al-Khatib. P30 described how on his arrival at Al-Khatib Branch, he had to get undressed to be frisked just like all other detainees.

Kerber wanted to know whether P30 was frisked for the first time at Division 40 or Al-Khatib. P30 said it was at Al-Khatib Branch. Beatings and humiliation started immediately after he was frisked. P30 was then taken to a collective cell where the other detainees told him that he was in Al-Khatib (he did not know that before). P30 was then immediately taken to an interrogation. The prison guards blindfolded him and took him one or two floors upstairs. P30 did not remember the exact floor. P30 had to kneel in one of the corridors while he was waiting. People passing by started to beat him. After having to wait like that for more than five hours, P30 was taken to the interrogation room where the interrogation conducted by an interrogator started. P30 explained that his laptop and mobile phone were confiscated. The interrogator told P30 that they found videos on these devices, so they already knew that P30 was participating in demonstrations. P30 told the court that the interrogation was focused on him being from [information redacted] and his religious background as a Shiite. He was questioned why he participated in demonstrations, considering his religion and employment with the government. The interrogation lasted for more than one hour with two people present: one person standing behind P30 and beating him, and the interrogator who was standing in front of P30. After the interrogation, P30 was taken out of the interrogation room, however, he had to wait some time before he was taken downstairs again. His blindfold was removed when he was back in his cell. From the moment he was taken from his cell until he returned, he was exposed to constant beatings. P30 further explained that he was interrogated a second time on that day, following the same procedure as just described. He added that from the moment he was detained at Division 40 “they” knew everything about him, so lying during interrogations was not an option. In sum, he was interrogated eight or nine times during his 18-day stay in Al-Khatib. P30 further told the judges that there were more than a hundred people in one collective cell. They were transferred depending on size and number of raids that were conducted at that time.

Kerber asked P30 if he was detained for 18 days in total. P30 explained he had to stay in Al-Khatib for 18 days before he was transferred to other branches.

Kerber asked P30 to describe the situation in the collective cell. P30 explained that there were blankets and a separate toilet inside the collective cell. The first day in the cell, there was no space to sit, so P30 was forced to stand the entire time. There was a huge psychological pressure. P30 further explained that the overall situation was very bad. Everyone who entered the cell caught the flu, because the air was bad. The military blankets that were lying in the cell were full of lice. According to P30, everyone who entered the cell got infested with lice. [P30 fell silent]

When asked by Judge Kerber if he needed a break, P30 declined, adding that he was just trying to remember.

Kerber went on to ask P30 about the health condition of the other detainees. P30 said their condition was very bad: detainees were sick, some fell unconscious. The ones who still had some energy left, were standing to let the unconscious people lie down, as there was simply not enough space for all of them to sit or lie down. P30 added that he had to stand for two days. An elderly man eventually tried to make some space, so P30 was able to sit as well. P30 further described that one of the detainees was a 22-year-old doctor who had not graduated yet. He took care of sick detainees in the cell. Regarding food supplies, P30 explained they got three meals per day: a dry slice of bread, some olives and Halawa. He added that the guards who took the detainees to the interrogations, were always very harsh and violent. However, the door of P30’s collective cell had a small window that was usually closed. Some of the guards were nicer than others and sometimes opened the window to let fresh air inside the cell. P30 further described that the detainees were not allowed to speak inside the cell. If the guards heard any noise, they entered the cell and beat the detainees up. One of the prison guards was particularly bad. He used to enter the cell and beat people up without any reason, using a quadruple cable.

Kerber asked for this guard's names. P30 explained it was a nickname from a Turkish series. P30 did not watch it, but the detainees were calling him "Memati ميماتي".

Kerber wanted to know why P30 was detained. P30 said he worked for [information redacted]. However, he participated in demonstrations, a fact that was known to many people. P30's friend [and colleague], [name redacted], once asked P30 if he could use his laptop because he did not have his own laptop with him. Although P30 stored all his media files in a hidden folder, his colleague was able to detect and copy them when P30 allowed him to use his laptop. P30 said before he even realized that his files were copied, he was already summoned by his boss (Legal Director General of [information redacted]) and asked if he was participating in demonstrations. After replying that he had the right to be a peaceful protestor, P30 was reprimanded by his boss but eventually allowed to go.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Wiedner wanted to know in which demonstrations P30 participated. P30 said in summer 2011, he participated in the demonstrations in Idleb إدلب. In November and December 2011, he demonstrated in Kafar Souseh كفر سوسة. P30 explained that he participated in demonstrations in Idleb on a regular basis.

Wiedner asked P30 to describe how the security forces reacted to the demonstrations. P30 described that one time, a delegation from the Arab League was visiting Idleb when two demonstrations were about to merge. The security forces started to shoot at the demonstrators [delegates were among them] and used tear gas as well.

Wiedner wanted to know if people were injured or killed during this instance. P30 affirmed that the security forces used live ammunition. While he was filming the scene, he spotted a sniper on one of the government buildings.

Wiedner repeated his previous question. P30 confirmed that some people were injured.

Wiedner asked P30 if he witnessed people being injured. P30 denied, adding he rather saw it in the videos, because he had to run away due to the live-ammunition shooting.

Wiedner wanted to know if this happened in Idleb and when it happened. P30 confirmed that it happened in Idleb, adding it must have been around November [2011] as far as he remembered. Asked if that happened in Idleb, P30 said yes, in Idleb.

Wiedner asked about the year when P30 was detained in March. P30 said it was in 2012.

Wiedner wanted to know to what Branch P30 was taken when he was arrested. P30 said he was taken to Division 40 where he had to stay for one day.

Wiedner asked how P30 knew that he was at Division 40. P30 explained that several people who were waiting with him on the corridor, told him that.

Wiedner asked P30 to describe the situation when he was waiting on the corridor. P30 explained he was taken to Division 40 where he had to wait to be interrogated. He was waiting on the corridor where other people told him that they were at Division 40.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) where division 40 was located and asked P30 to tell the court as well. P30 recalled that he probably told the BKA that Division 40 was in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P30 was interrogated at Division 40. P30 affirmed, explaining that he was interrogated in different offices. One of the interrogation officers showed P30 clips where P30 filmed himself at demonstrations.

Wiedner asked if the interrogation officer wanted to know anything specific. P30 denied.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that electroshocks were used at Division 40. P30 confirmed, explaining that a person next to him had to endure electroshocks.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 had to endure electroshocks as well. P30 described how one of the employees was using electroshocks on the detainees. When this person wanted to use them on P30 as well, another officer pulled P30 away, telling the person with the electroshocks to leave P30 alone. The person with the electroshocks then started beating P30 with his bare hands.

Wiedner asked P30 about sexual violence. P30 explained that during beatings, the guards were deliberately targeting sensitive areas.

Wiedner wanted to know if sensitive areas were also targeted with electroshocks. P30 explained that because he was blindfolded at Division 40, he could only hear other people scream but did not see what areas were targeted.

Wiedner asked P30 if he was beaten on his sensitive areas. P30 said that he was being beaten, but he closed his legs, so they could not beat him there [between his legs].

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that he and others were being beaten and electroshocks were used on them. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner asked how P30 knew that. P30 said he heard the person next to him saying that.

Wiedner asked how P30 knew that he then was in Al-Khatib and whether the security personnel mentioned something about that. P30 told the judges that other detainees told him that they were at Al-Khatib, the security personnel, however, did not provide any information.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 was mistreated on the way to Al-Khatib. P30 denied being mistreated in any manner on the way from Division 40 to Al-Khatib. However, when they arrived [at Al-Khatib] there were mistreated.

Wiedner asked P30 to describe his arrival at the Branch. P30 explained he did not see the way to the Branch because he was blindfolded. P30 was dropped off at the entrance door. His blindfolds were removed, and he found himself in a hallway inside the Branch. There was a person to whom people had to hand in their belongings. P30 described how he then had to take off his clothes, stand against the wall and squat, like everyone else.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 was somehow mistreated in this situation. P30 affirmed, describing that he was questioned but tried not to say anything. While he was beaten, he was also told what he was accused of.

Wiedner said P30 told the BKA something different, citing from the BKA's transcript when P30 said the ride from Division 40 to Al-Khatib, during which P30 was constantly beaten, took around 15 minutes. P30 denied, clarifying that he was sitting alone in the backseat and was blindfolded. Referring to the BKA's transcript, P30 explained he might have referred to the moment when he exited the car.

Wiedner asked P30 to continue his descriptions from the moment he was frisked until he reached the cell. P30 said he was allowed to put on his clothes. He then had to turn left, walk down the hallway until he reached a cell. P30 described that at this point, he had not yet processed that he was detained. When he was pushed inside the cell, he could see that people piled up. Yet, P30 did not fully comprehend that he had to stay in this place. He told the court that in this moment, he still thought that he could somehow leave.

Wiedner asked about the size of the cell. P30 said that he could not sit down the first two days.

Wiedner again asked about the size and wanted to know how many people were detained in this cell. P30 said the cell measured around 4x8 meters. He assumed that there were more than a hundred people inside.

Wiedner asked how P30 was able to sleep. P30 explained that those who were able to sit, could sleep. The rest had to stand for two or three hours until they swapped.

Wiedner asked how the sleeping arrangement turned out for P30. P30 said initially, he did not have a place to sit because he did not know anyone, so he had to stand. After a while, he got to know other detainees. They were chatting about his hometown, reason for arrest, and news from the world outside.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcripts saying that P30 did not sleep for the first two or three days. P30 confirmed.

When asked by Judge Wiedner, P30 said he needed a short break.

***

Judge Wiedner asked P30 about the situation in the collective cell and the condition of other detainees. P30 recalled that some detainees were tortured every day and returned the following day. Therefore, when they were in the cell, their condition was miserable.

Wiedner asked P30 what he meant by "miserable". P30 said these people were unconscious and covered in blood.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the health conditions of the detainees. P30 said many people were sick and had fever. P30 described a situation that he remembered as the worst condition of a fellow detainee. The guards took a detainee to P30's cell whose back was broken. He was just put on the floor and the guards later returned and took him out the cell again.

Wiedner asked P30 if that person was unconscious. P30 denied, adding that initially he was conscious.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 knew how this person's back was injured. P30 said the person was tortured with the German Chair. He was screaming from pain. Detainees called the prison guards who came back, took the person, and never brought him back to the cell again. P30 said the injured person told the other detainees his father's name and that his father was in Jaramana جرمانا. Some people memorized his name in order to inform his father once they would be released.

Wiedner asked if this person was able to move, considering that according to P30 his back was broken. P30 said the person was lying on the floor. P30 and the other detainees put clothes underneath him.

Wiedner asked P30 what other methods of torture he witnessed or heard about from other detainees. P30 described how several people were taken from the cell at night. Water was poured over them and then they had to endure electroshocks. At night the people were taken (several people) and were splashed with water then were tortured by electricity. When they came back, their bodies just fell on the floor.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P30 saw this himself, was told about it, or endured this himself. P30 said it did not happen to him, but he heard about it.

Wiedner asked P30 if “heard about it” meant he was told about it by other detainees. P30 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly P30 heard from others. P30 said he was told from other detainees that they were hanged (Shabh) at night or being tortured while lying on the floor.

Wiedner wanted to make sure that P30 heard about Shabh. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner asked for more details: if P30 was hanged himself, and where people were hanged. P30 said he was not hanged. He assumed that people had to hang against the walls because he saw nails and other devices in the walls.

Wiedner asked P30 if he was told about that or saw that himself. P30 said he saw it himself, adding that when one was taken out for interrogation, one could see it [devices on the walls].

Wiedner asked P30 to elaborate on what he saw. P30 said he saw nails, torturing tools...Judge Wiedner interrupted, asking P30 if the nails were in the walls. P30 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what it looked like exactly and at what height the nails were stuck in the walls. P30 did not remember exactly, however, guessed that the nails were at a height of around two meters. He assumed that other detainees were hanged there or from the cell doors. However, P30 did not see anyone being hanged.

Wiedner recalled P30 describing the bad conditions inside the cells. P30 said most of the people who fell unconscious or had fever, were small children. He explained that he was always together with four other detainees. Three of them were students who were arrested at school.

Wiedner asked P30 to estimate the age of these students. P30 said they were in tenth or eleventh grade, around sixteen or seventeen years old.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened to the students. P30 said they had fever, were interrogated and tortured. They were laying down for several days and P30 and others were putting water-damped clothes on them.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that detainees used their clothes to fan the children. P30 described that it was not unusual that detainees took off their clothes. Some used them to fan the younger ones.

Wiedner asked if the cell did not have windows. P30 explained there was a small hatch at the toilet, however, it was useless. There would have only been some fresh air if the hatch in the cell door was opened.

Wiedner recalled that this [door hatch being opened] depended on the guards. P30 confirmed, adding that it was depending on the guards' mood, as there was no regulation or anything on when and if the hatch was opened.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that the detainees had a strong smell, and they smelled new detainees. P30 affirmed, adding that new arrivals were usually clean. Detainees who had been in the cell for longer, however, were unable to wash, so they smelled.

Wiedner further recalled P30 telling the BKA that whenever a new detainee came to the cell, the other asked him about the date and whether Bashar al-Assad was still the president. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if there was medical treatment in case of fever for any other patients. P30 got emotional and asked for a break.

Wiedner asked how much time P30 needed. P30 said he needs 10 minutes.

***

Wiedner asked about the medical treatment in the collective cell. P30 said that there was no medical treatment. There were detainees who had asthma and cardiac problems and asked to receive medical treatment but did not get any. The doctor [young fellow detainee, see context above] requested anti-inflammatory pills for the detainees who had wounds, but as far as P30 remembered, they only got medicine once.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that the young doctor used other detainees' clothes as compresses. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner further cited from the BKA's transcripts saying that according to P30 there were instances when people received medical treatment. P30 told the court that one day the cell's door was opened and a man – whose rank or position P30 did not know- asked the detainees if they needed anything. The detainees requested anti-inflammatory pills, asthma medicine, and cardiac medicine.

Wiedner asked if they were given medicine. P30 affirmed, adding that it was however, only this one time and the number of pills they received was very small.

Wiedner recalled that P30 previously told the court about an elderly man with heart problems, and asked P30 if this person received any kind of treatment. P30 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P30 if he was sick and whether he received medicine. P30 said he had fever and the flu, but he received no pills.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 heard noises of other detainees being tortured and mistreated when he was inside the cell. P30 affirmed, explaining that the noise came from the hallways close to the cell and one could hear it every day.

Wiedner asked if that happened at night as well. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know where P30 was interrogated: downstairs where he was imprisoned or upstairs. P30 described how the guards usually took the detainees out of the cell to the hallway, where the detainees were blindfolded and then taken upstairs. There was a smaller corridor on the left-hand side and several interrogation rooms. People had to wait for their interrogation in this small corridor. On the right-hand side there was a room – possibly a kitchen - where people were waiting as well. P30 said he had to wait in this room once and saw food supplies and beds. The room also had a window. He used his friend's back to pull his blindfolds, and saw a residential building opposite to where they were.

Wiedner asked how long P30 usually had to wait before he was interrogated. P30 said it was different each time, but at that instance [in the kitchen], he and others had to wait for four to five hours.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether P30 had to wait for around five hours in the kitchen-like room. P30 affirmed, adding that the room was upstairs near the interrogation rooms.

Wiedner asked if P30 heard any noise from the interrogation rooms while he was waiting. P30 affirmed, specifying that he heard questions from interrogators, answers by the detainees, and beatings.

Wiedner asked if P30 heard screams. P30 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 was beaten while he was waiting to be interrogated. P30 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P30 to describe the situation. P30 described how the detainees had to kneel with their hands tied behind their backs. There was a person beating them. Sometimes, this person left and returned again.

Wiedner recalled that P30 told the BKA about a specific method that was used before the interrogation and asked P30 if he could explain that to the court. P30 explained that all people who had to go upstairs for the interrogation had to endure the same procedure: they were insulted and beaten before the interrogation.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript saying that P30 heard insults and screams from the interrogation room while he was waiting. There were no breaks between interrogations. Detainees had to wait for three hours and every fifteen minutes a guard came and beat them. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P30 what the interrogators wanted to know from him. P30 said they wanted to know if he was producing videos for Arabic or foreign channels, and whether members from his family were participating in demonstrations.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 was blindfolded or able to see anything [during the interrogation]. P30 explained that one was blindfolded all the time from the moment one left the cell until one returned.

Wiedner asked P30 if he was able to perceive how many people were present during the interrogation. P30 said there must have been a person in front of him asking questions, and another one behind him who was beating him.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were orders to beat P30. P30 said he did not hear anything, but the interrogator might have used signs.

Wiedner asked P30 how both people were addressing each other and whether P30 could identify a hierarchy between them. P30 recalled that at times, the interrogator ordered the guard to beat P30 on his feet from the front, not from behind.

Wiedner asked P30 from where these orders came. P30 explained that the person in front of him told the person behind P30 to do so, and the person behind P30 replied with "Sidi" [dear sir]. However, P30 did not identify a concrete hierarchy between them.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether the instructions were given from the person in front of P30 to the person behind him. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that the person who beat him replied to the interrogator with and wore a "commando" [camouflage] outfit. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P30 telling the BKA that during his own interrogation, he also heard noises from interrogations in other rooms. P30 confirmed, adding he heard noises of torture as well as questions coming from other interrogation rooms.

Wiedner cited the BKA'S transcript, saying that P30 heard screams from other room, assuming that the detainees were screaming because they were beaten and asked if they carried weapons. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P30 if he thought that there was a chance that the interrogation might end. P30 denied, adding that he was asked the same questions over and over at each interrogation. Every interrogator had his own style: one of interrogators recalled every detail of P30's life from the day he was born.

Wiedner asked P30 how many times he was interrogated. P30 said he was interrogated eight or nine times.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 was interrogated by the same interrogator, or if there were different interrogators. P30 said there were different interrogators.

Wiedner asked P30 if he saw the interrogators and how he could tell if they were different. P30 said he differentiated between them by their voices. In addition, he was interrogated at different rooms, he was never interrogated in the same room twice.

Wiedner explained that although P30 did not see any of the interrogators, P30 should look to the defendant's bench to his right and tell the court if he ever saw the person sitting there. P30 denied, saying he never saw this person [Raslan].

Wiedner recalled P30 explaining the court how he was beaten on his feet, and asked P30 if there were other methods of torture as well. P30 explained the guards used to beat the detainees with sticks, plumbing objects, sticks, with their bare hands and fists, kicked them. P30, however, was never beaten like that.

Wiedner asked P30 about the general and food related conditions at the Branch. P30 said breakfast and supper were the same. The lunch was something cooked, but eight to ten people had to share one plate, so it was never sufficient.

Wiedner asked P30 if he lost weight during his detention. P30 affirmed, adding that he lost around fifteen kilograms, but he did not stay there for a very long time.

Wiedner recalled P30 talking about students being detained in the same cell than him, and asked P30 if there were other minors as well. P30 described that when he arrived in the cell, there was a man from Bloudan بلودان who had a child with him. Later, there were raids in Duma دوما and Harasta حرستا and one could find detainees of all ages. An entire family including grandfather and children were detained.

Wiedner asked about the age of these children. P30 said he saw children around the age of ten or twelve.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were female detainees as well. P30 explained that he once saw through the gap under the cell's door how a group of male and female detainees – some were wearing hijabs – arrived at the Branch. Two of the men who were severely beaten were taken to P30's cell. P30 said they were injured with scissors, had wounds in their heads, and part of their scalps were removed.

Wiedner asked P30 if he saw that himself. P30 affirmed, adding that two of the men were taken to his cell.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P30 was talking about the men or women. P30 explained that the group who arrived in the hallway in front of P30's cell consisted of men and women. Two of men were taken to the collective cell that P30 was in.

Wiedner asked P30 to confirm that no woman was taken to his cell. P30 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened to the women. P30 said they were taken to another cell. P30 knew that because the women's husbands were amongst the detainees in P30's cell. Whenever he was taken for interrogation, she would also be taken out of her cell and interrogated with him.

Wiedner asked P30 if the women were abused. P30 said they were tortured in the hallway upon their arrival. However, someone from the guards covered the gap under the door of P30's cell, so the detainees could only hear but no longer see anything.

Wiedner wanted to know if P30 heard about sexual violence against women in Al-Khatib. P30 denied.

Wiedner asked where the women were imprisoned. P30 said his fellow detainees who had been detained several times told him that women are usually detained in solitary cells.

Wiedner cited the BKA's transcript, saying that P30 described how the women were tortured at night and kept screaming. They were then taken to solitary cells the following day. The solitary cells had a toilet inside and P30 knew from other detainees that sometimes there was more than one person detained in a solitary cell. P30 confirmed the statement.

Wiedner explained that the court's focus would be on Al-Khatib Branch, however, since P30 was transferred to other places, he should briefly describe his experiences there. P30 said he was transferred to the "state security administration", where he spent twelve or fourteen days. He was then transferred to the "Military Security Branch" in Al-Qaboun القابون, where he and other detainees spent one night. P30 said some people were taken to a court and released. The registry office in charge of P30 was in [information redacted] and therefore, he had to be transferred there. He was therefore first taken to Al-Balona البالونة [prison] in Homs, then to Al-Jamiliyyeh الجميلية, then to [information redacted]. P30 then had to stay with the military police for one day.

Wiedner asked P30 about his release. P30 said he was released from the judge's office [court] where he was told about his charges. The judges decided that the time he already spent in prison was sufficient, so he was released. P30 added that he gave the BKA the document that the judges in Syria gave him at his release.

Investigating Judge in [information redacted]

Wiedner asked P30 what happened to his job after he was released. P30 said he was fired from his job and expelled from university.

When asked by Presiding Judge Kerber whether he needed a break before lunch break, P30 denied.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Klinge wanted to know if P30 heard anything about sexual violence against men in Al-Khatib. P30 denied, adding that he and other male detainees were however beaten on their genitals. However, he did not hear anything about male detainees being "raped or anything like that."

Klinge asked P30 to describe the situations when detainees were beaten. P30 said they were beaten when they had to go upstairs for interrogation.

Klinge wanted to know how exactly detainees were beaten on their genitals. P30 explained how the guards tried to "step" on the detainees' genitals.

Klinge asked if that was deliberate. P30 affirmed, adding that the detainees always tried to keep their legs closed.

Klinge wanted to know whether P30's family was informed about his arrest and detention. P30 denied.

Klinge asked if P30's family asked for information about his whereabouts. P30 explained that his family could not ask anyone, as they were participating in demonstrations as well. However, P30's colleague who betrayed him told P30's brother that P30 was arrested.

Klinge wanted to know if P30 suffered any mental or physical consequences from his detention. P30 said he has only been suffering psychological consequences, explaining that he would still be haunted by nightmares. P30 further said he tried to get treatment in 2018, however, until that very moment in court he did not speak openly about that [trying to get treated for his psychological trauma] before. P30 added he tried to forget about it.

Klinge asked P30 if he wanted to share what happened with him after the treatment. P30 explained that even at the beginning of his treatment, it was difficult for him to talk about his experiences.

Defense's Questioning

Defense Counsel Böcker asked whether it would be correct that the name Anwar Raslan was mentioned during P30's hearing with the BKA. P30 confirmed.

Böcker asked P30 if he mentioned the name Raslan in any other context as well. P30 said he did mention the name, however, he did not speak about any details.

Böcker recalled P30 telling the BKA that he got in contact with a lawyer. P30 affirmed, saying that once he got in touch with that lawyer, he joined the present case [as a plaintiff] with the help of this lawyer.

Böcker wanted to know who this lawyer was. P30 said it was Anwar Al-Bunni.

Böcker asked if P30 met with Al-Bunni in person before P30's hearing with the BKA. P30 denied, saying he only met him a long time after the hearing.

Böcker wanted to know when exactly they met. P30 said they met after P30 provided information to the BKA.

Böcker wanted to reassure if P30 and Al-Bunni met only after P30's hearing with the BKA. P30 affirmed.

Böcker wanted to know when P30 and Al-Bunni met. P30 said it was last year [2020].

Böcker explained he asked these questions because P30 previously stated that he heard the name Raslan from someone in the opposition. Böcker went on to ask P30 how he got to know Raslan's name. P30 explained he heard the name in the media.

Böcker recalled P30 telling the BKA that one of his friends told him that Raslan was the head of interrogations at Al-Khatib. P30 confirmed, explaining that his friend was a journalist who covered the case against Raslan. He said anyone who knows anything about the relevant time frame [was detained in Al-Khatib sometime between March 2011 and September 2012], then one should get in touch with him [the journalist].

Böcker asked if it is correct that it was not Al-Bunni whom P30 got in touch with at that time. P30 confirmed, clarifying that the person he got in touch with belonged to the opposition, however, it was not Al-Bunni.

Böcker further wanted to know if it would be correct to say that Al-Bunni told P30 to get in touch with him after P30 contacted the journalist from the opposition. P30 confirmed.

Böcker asked P30 about the person who connected him and Al-Bunni. P30 explained that he got in touch with Al-Bunni via Facebook. Al-Bunni gave P30 his phone number and P30 eventually called him.

Böcker wanted to know if there was consequently no intermediary connecting the two of them. P30 confirmed that there was no intermediary.

Böcker recalled P30 telling the BKA that Al-Bunni was looking for people who had information about the case [against Raslan]. P30 described that Al-Bunni said everyone who was detained between 2011 and 2012 should get in touch with him to file a case.

Böcker asked if P30 met Al-Bunni in person. P30 recalled how he called Al-Bunni who then referred him to "the European Centre."

Böcker wanted to know if P30 meant the "European Centre for Constitutional and Human Rights (ECCHR)" which he also mentioned during the BKA hearing. P30 confirmed.

Böcker went on to ask with whom at ECCHR P30 got in touch. P30 said he spoke with a female lawyer at ECCHR.

Böcker asked if her name was Ms. Klein. P30 could not remember her name, however, added that he still had her number.

Böcker recalled P30 telling the BKA how he got in touch with multiple lawyers. P30 clarified that in this context he told the BKA about Mr. Kaleck. P30 further explained that he first got in touch with Al-Bunni who then forwarded him to ECCHR, and they eventually started connecting him with several lawyers.

Böcker asked P30 if he knows Wolfgang Kaleck. P30 said he knows that he is the head of the office [ECCHR].

Böcker wanted to know if Wolfgang Kaleck got in touch with P30. P30 explained that Kaleck did not get in touch with him. He was contacted by Patrick [Kroker].

Böcker asked if P30 also had contact with a female lawyer. P30 said he only saw the female lawyer once during his hearing with the BKA.

Böcker wanted to know whether P30 saw her again at a later point. P30 denied.

Böcker asked P30 if he got in touch with Wolfgang Kaleck or Ms. Klein. P30 told the court how he was forwarded to his present counsel [Mr. Bahns], so there was no need to get in touch with any other lawyers.

Böcker wanted to know who forwarded P30 to his counsel Mr. Bahns. [there was a short discussion between plaintiff counsel Bahns and defense counsel Böcker]. Plaintiff counsel Schulz intervened, saying that it would be normal to see more than one lawyer. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer also intervened, asking Böcker about his intentions to ask these questions.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Böcker to clarify his question. Böcker said he had no more questions for P30.

P30 was dismissed as a witness. When Kerber asked him, he decided to stay in the courtroom.

Judge Kerber handed out copies of an email from a witness to the parties. She explained that the witness summoned for March 24 and 25 preferred not to testify in court. The session scheduled for March 25 would therefore be cancelled and the court summoned the BKA inspector who previously interviewed this witness to testify in court instead on March 24.

Proceedings were adjourned at 12:10PM.

The next trial day will be on March 24, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 31

Trial Day 66 – March 24, 2021

The witness who was initially summoned for the day preferred not to come to Koblenz to testify in court. Although the judges explicitly offered her to remain anonymous, partially cover her face, get legal counselling and moral support from a person she trusts, the witness preferred not to come due to mental health issues and concerns about her and her family's safety. Criminal Chief Inspector Knappmann, who previously interviewed the witness was summoned instead to tell the court about a meeting between Anwar Raslan and the witness in Al-Khatib. He explained that according to the witness, Raslan knew about what was going on at the Branch and had a senior position. Although the witness was under the impression that Raslan tried to help her find her confiscated car, she was convinced that he played a part in the crimes committed in Al-Khatib.

The hearing began at 9:35 am with 5 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Kroker was not present. One of Raslan's Defense Counsels, attorney Böcker, joined ten minutes late.

Presiding Judge Kerber opened the session by sharing a submission of witness counsel von der Behrens on behalf of her client, the witness who was summoned for the next session. As none of the parties requested to provide a statement on the matter, Judge Kerber went on to explain that the judges will grant large parts of the defense's request to introduce evidence in court, dated December 9, 2020. She added that the piece of evidence, a Facebook chat between P17 and Abu Akram, would already be on the case file in Arabic, as well as its German translation. The court interpreters will therefore assess the quality of the translation in court, acting as linguistic experts; a practice that was already used several times. Defense counsel Böcker thanked the judges, explaining that the intention of the request to have the chat translated and introduce it as evidence in court was aimed at assessing its content, an assessment of the already existing translation would therefore be sufficient.<sup>2</sup>

Judge Kerber further explained that the judges would now read out the German translation of an English e-mail that the judges received from the witness who was initially summoned for this session.

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Since the interpreter who previously assisted Eyad Al-Gharib's defense, stepped in for one of the court interpreters, Judge Kerber read out instructions to him regarding his role and obligation when acting as linguistic expert, assessing the quality and correctness of translations in court.

Kerber added that this will serve as explanation for why the witness did not appear in court and the judges instead summoned the BKA officer who previously interviewed her when investigating Raslan's case.

[The following is a recreation of the e-mail as read out in court, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Dear Ms. Schmitt [sic],

I received your summons to testify as witness in court. However, I kindly ask you to accept my apologies for not testifying in court, based on the following reasons:

After the investigation [questioning by the BKA] in [information redacted] in August 2019, my mental health significantly worsened.

Despite protective measures [witness protection] I am concerned about the safety of my family, my old parents, who are still living in Syria, in areas controlled by the criminal regime.

I am also concerned about my own safety and the safety of my daughter, in light of the extremist Syrian opposition living outside Syria. They all believe that Mr. Anwar R., a defector and member of the Sunni community is innocent. They are thinking in fanatic categories and I think that they consider me to be Alawite, although I live a secular life.

I hereby confirm all statements I made during by hearing with the BKA on [information redacted].

I assumed that the situation [her meeting with/interrogation by Anwar Raslan in his office in Branch 251] took place on Thursday April 12 or 19, 2012, based on the fact that during the meeting; Mr. Anwar R. received a sheet of paper for his signature. I was able to see that it was a death certificate of a detainee who died from torture in Branch 251. Mr. Anwar R. said that the corpse should not be handed to the family immediately, to prevent them from burying it after the Friday prayers the next day.

I thank you for your efforts to achieve justice and accountability and fighting impunity. I want to pay condolence and respect to all the victims.

Sincerely,

Judge Kerber said that after the court received this email in early March, Judge Wiedner contacted the witness again. Kerber said she will translate and summarize the witness' reply dated March 17, 2021 herself. Kerber said the witness thanked Judge Wiedner for his encouraging words and explained that she cannot come to Koblenz as she is not mentally prepared to be exposed to the matter once again.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Fratzky asked Judge Kerber what Judge Wiedner wrote the witness, as she was referring to his 'encouraging words'. Judge Kerber said the entire conversation took place in English and can be found on the case file. Judge Wiedner added that he told the witness that the court can support her regarding travel arrangements, that she has the possibility to be accompanied by a counsel, an interpreter and can request breaks during her testimony.

Judge Kerber added that Wiedner offered the witness to stay anonymous, partially cover her face, be accompanied by a legal counsel as well as a person she trusts for moral support, that the court would cover all expenses, that she would be supported by a court interpreter during her testimony, that she could request breaks and that the court would take care of all travel arrangements.

As no one had any further questions or objections to this informal read-out, Judge Kerber called the witness who was summoned instead of the initial witness.

Testimony of Inspector Knappmann

Criminal Chief Inspector Knappmann, who previously testified in court several times, was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. Judge Kerber further explained that, as already mentioned when he was summoned, his present testimony should focus on the witness interview he conducted with [name redacted], who was initially summoned to testify in court on this day.<sup>3</sup>

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber first wanted to know when and how the hearing of the witness took place. Knappmann recalled that after his questioning of a witness (P3) on [information redacted], this witness told the BKA about a friend who lives in Paris. He also said that she was questioned by Anwar Raslan, however, he could not provide further information. The BKA then contacted their French colleagues and eventually heard P3's friend, [name redacted] [the witness] in Paris on [information redacted].

Kerber asked whether the witness was informed about her rights and duties. Knappmann affirmed, adding that she was informed about that according to the law, as is done with every witness.

[Note from the Trial Monitor: Three spectators entered the courtroom and took a seat in the public gallery. One of the court officers asked them whether they were summoned as witnesses. All three denied, indicating that they were there to speak with Raslan after the session.]

Kerber asked how long the hearing went. Knappmann said they interviewed the witness from 2pm until 10pm.

Kerber wanted to know whether the witness's testimony was re-translated for her. Knappmann affirmed. Kerber asked whether the witness made any corrections to her testimony based on the re-translation. Knappmann again affirmed, explaining that these corrections can be found in the transcript in form of handwritten amendments.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked Knappmann to first describe the overall situation of the witness hearing, particularly regarding communication with the interpreter. Knappmann explained that as usual, they used an interpreter for the interview. In this particular case, it was [name redacted], who had worked for the BKA several times before that and always did a good job in the eyes of the BKA officers. The French police did not provide an interpreter for German-Arabic interpretation, that was the reason why the BKA was accompanied by [name redacted].

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: For the purpose of this report, the term "witness" will be used to describe the person who Inspector Knappmann interviewed as part of the BKA's investigations into Raslan's and Al-Gharib's cases. The actual witness of this court session, Criminal Chief Inspector Knappmann, will be called by his name.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness was able to communicate with the interpreter or if there were any signs of miscommunication. Knappmann said there were no signs of miscommunication. Just like at every questioning, the BKA officers asked the witness whether she was able to communicate with the interpreter; a question that was affirmed. Knappmann added that throughout the questioning, there were no issues surrounding interpretation.

Wiedner went on to ask about the atmosphere at the interview, asking whether the witness was nervous and/or cooperative. Knappmann explained the witness was very talkative. He did not need to ask many questions and she usually responded fluently and in a coherent manner.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the interview took relatively long. Knappmann referred to his previous statement, adding that including re-translation and corrections to the transcript, the interview happened from 2pm until 10 pm. They had a break at around 8:20 pm before they started to re-translate the transcript to the witness.

Wiedner went on to ask Knappmann about the content of the witness interview. He referred to different logical sections of the interview and asked Knappmann what the witness told the BKA when she was asked to provide personal information. Knappmann shortly explained that the interview was roughly divided in four sections: information about the witness, Anwar Raslan and Al-Khatib, Eyad Al-Gharib, and general questions. He added that three sections dealt with the actual subject matter and that the first part, the section about the witness herself, was relatively long. The witness talked a lot and Knappmann decided that it would not be a good idea to interrupt her, so she kept talking. Amongst others, she said she was born on [information redacted] in Damascus. She grew up in a “politically leftist” family. After she graduated from high school, she studied economics for one year, before she studied drama for four years. The witness then worked as an actress and later received training as a movie director. Knappmann added that she said about herself that she was one of the best actresses in Syria.

Wiedner asked Knappmann whether the witness also spoke about the reason why she left Syria. Knappmann said the witness left Syria in April 2013. She was afraid of further arrests, as she was arrested before that and questioned by the Intelligence Services in April 2012. Knappmann explained that the witness was arrested at a demonstration. She did not participate in the demonstration but supported her friends who participated. She did so by helping them escape from the security forces with her car and by talking to the security forces, trying to prevent them from arresting others. Knappmann said the witness told the BKA that she was taken to Hafez Makhoul's Division in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, what the BKA identified as Division 40. She had to stay there for 6 hours and was interrogated there. Knappmann added that the witness mentioned that this incident was also covered by Al-Jazeera. She was then questioned in Al-Khatib, where she met Anwar Raslan. After that she was arrested by the Air Force Intelligence and another time when she was questioned about her request to leave the country. However, she could not remember where the last interrogation happened. Knappmann said the witness further told the BKA that before she was able to submit her request to leave, she was under a travel ban and not allowed to work for around one year.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness described herself as oppositionist. Knappmann affirmed.

Wiedner went on to ask Knappmann about connections between the witness and Anwar Raslan. Knappmann recalled that after asking her to provide personal information, they went on to ask her about Anwar Raslan.

Amongst others, they showed her eight different pictures, asking her whether she recognized anyone. Without hesitating, the witness pointed at the second photo – Raslan’s picture – and identified him as Anwar Raslan, the person who she met in Al-Khatib.

Wiedner mentioned that the court previously had to deal with different sets of photos that were used during witness interviews to identify the Accused. He asked Knappmann about the number [inaudible] of this set. Knappmann confirmed, adding that it was the set that the BKA previously used. He went on to describe that after the witness identified Raslan on the photo, he and his colleague asked her to provide more information on him and her relationship with him. The witness recalled her arrest in April 2012 and explained to Knappmann that she was not driving her car herself, but a friend. He was arrested as well, and her car was confiscated. The witness further said that she had to stay at Branch 40, where she was beaten, for six hours. After she was released, she went to a friend to use the internet. That was when she found out that according to media coverage, her friend [who drove her car] was arrested as well. Knappmann said that this was when the witness found out that her car was confiscated. She started to search for her car and received a call a few days later. The caller told her to come to Al-Khatib for coffee.

Wiedner wanted to go back to when the witness identified Raslan on a photo during her interview with the BKA. Wiedner asked Knappmann how exactly the witness identified him. Knappmann said she immediately said that she knew the person in the picture and even mentioned the name, although Knappmann and his colleague did not even ask for a name at this point.

Wiedner cited from the BKA’s transcript of the witness’s interview, during which the witness said that she knows the person in picture two. She added that ‘back then’ his skin was a bit brighter, and his name was Anwar Raslan. Wiedner asked Knappmann to provide some information about a birthmark that was mentioned in this situation. Knappmann recalled that in this situation, the witness smiled because all pictures showed people with a birthmark at the same spot on their face. When she asked whether this was on purpose, Knappmann and his colleague affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what the witness said about Al-Khatib. Knappmann said she took a taxi to get to the Branch. She explained to him and his colleague that she was generally afraid of the Intelligence Services. Al-Khatib, however, meant nothing but horror to her. She arrived at a gate before she was allowed to enter the compound. Knappmann added that the witness explained to him that she was not entirely sure about certain things that happened. For example, she could not remember whether she was accompanied by someone on her way to Raslan’s office inside the Branch, or whether she was walking alone. In other situations, however, she was able to provide a lot of detail. According to the witness, some instances were ‘burnt into her memory’. Knappmann further described that the witness heard sounds of beatings on her way to Raslan’s office. She explained that she later found out about people being tortured there. She therefore identified the sound she heard as sounds of beatings. However, in the very moment, she could not identify it. To get to the office, she had to go upstairs. In the staircase she met a guard and a blindfolded detainee with a swollen face. Knappmann said that the witness later explained that this was the moment when she made a connection between the sound she heard, and people being tortured. She further described that the detainee’s upper body was undressed and partially swollen. He was very thin. The witness also described that the windows were open, so she could hear the sound of beatings. A noise that first sounded to her like someone was cleaning a carpet. In this moment, the combination of the noise she heard and the apparently tortured detainee, she got afraid of the guard.

Wiedner intervened, asking whether the witness said anything else about torture in Al-Khatib. Knappmann said she did not see blood but remembered that the detainee's face and upper body were swollen. Knappmann went on to describe that the witness felt scared when she was in the staircase. She then entered a waiting room, when an elderly officer entered the room and took her to another room. In this office she could see a desk and a bed. A very young officer entered the room to look for something. He was dressed in civilian clothes and, according to the witness, had an innocent face. She explained that this officer did not look like a member of the Intelligence Services. However, after he left the room, he apparently changed his clothes and came back now wearing a uniform and an angry face. The witness told Knappmann that in this moment, she 'was expecting the worst'.

Wiedner asked how Knappmann, and his colleague interpreted the last sentence [expected the worst]. Knappmann said this would be a difficult question to answer. She was apparently expecting some violent actions. He added that considering that there was a bed, one might make assumptions about rape. However, this would only be his personal interpretation. The witness did not mention anything in this direction.

Wiedner asked Knappmann to continue his previous descriptions. Knappmann said that the witness was scared and called for an officer. However, she had to wait in this office before she was taken to Anwar Raslan's office. When asked about the location of the two offices, the witness said that Raslan's office was on the right side of the stairs whereas the first office was on the left side. However, she was not sure whether they were situated on the same floor.

Wiedner intervened, saying that there was a handwritten amendment to the BKA's transcript. According to this amendment, the witness said that she was taken to Raslan's office which was on the left side of the stairs. The first officer's office was on the right side. However, she could not say whether they were situated on the same floor. Knappmann affirmed, adding that the handwritten amendment was made when the transcript of her testimony was retranslated to the witness. Knappmann went on to explain that when the witness entered Raslan's office, he was already there. He was very friendly and offered her a coffee. Knappmann said the witness mentioned to him that 'at least they didn't lie about the coffee'.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness described the atmosphere in this situation. Knappmann said she made detailed descriptions.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript according to which the witness said that Raslan was waiting in his office. He was very friendly and shook her hand. Knappmann confirmed. Upon Judge Wiedner's request, Knappmann went on to recall how the witness described the interior of Raslan's office. She said that there was a desk in the back, with a window behind it and two pictures on the wall. One of Hafez Al-Assad and one of Bashar Al-Assad. There were two chairs in front of the desk and in front of these chairs was a sofa and a small table. She said that she sat on the sofa. Knappmann recalled that when the witness drew a sketch of the office during their interview, she explained that she first sat on the sofa together with Raslan. He then left her sitting on the sofa when he went to his desk to work on something. At the end of the meeting, she sat on the right chair in front of his desk.

Judge Kerber said the court will now have a look at this sketch. When asked to describe the sketch, Knappmann added that the witness said there maybe was a computer on the desk, however, she could not say with certainty.

Wiedner asked what the witness told Knappmann about the content of the chat between her and Raslan. Knappmann said that according to the witness, Raslan first praised her work. He said that his daughter liked one of her roles in particular. The witness said that Raslan knew many details about her and was obviously well prepared. He only made one mistake when he assumed that [name redacted], a famous Syrian director, was her father. Raslan said he has a lot of respect for him and his role in society. According to the witness, this was Raslan's only mistake regarding information about her. Raslan then went on to ask her about her opinion of certain actors, some of them pro-regime, some against. Knappmann said the witness mentioned three names in this regard during their interview, however, he could not remember them.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness described the situation with Raslan as a questioning or a normal conversation. Knappmann explained that the witness was under the impression that it was not a classical questioning but rather a normal conversation. However, she also felt like it was some kind of 'cat-and-mouse game'. She was not sure about Raslan's intentions and tried to 'protect herself', however, did not conceal that she was with the opposition. According to the witness, Raslan did not make any accusations.

Wiedner asked about how Hafez Al-Assad's name was mentioned during the witness's conversation with Raslan. Knappmann recalled the witness saying that Raslan spoke positively about Hafez Al-Assad. She thought that Raslan was a supporter of the old regime. Knappmann explained that the witness told him that her family was rather leftist, and her father was detained for four months and her aunt for four years, when Hafez Al-Assad was in power. Therefore, she was very cautious towards supporters of the old regime.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript, according to which the witness said that Raslan praised the methods of the old president Hafez Al-Assad. She therefore had to be cautious about what to say. Knappmann confirmed, adding that the conversation between the witness and Raslan then reached a turning point, when Raslan said that her passport was found. The witness explained the BKA in this regard that her passport was in her car. It was consequently found when her car was confiscated. However, Raslan did not mention the car or the activist [her friend].

When the witness asked Raslan where she could find her car, he did not know, but told her where she could not find it. The Air Force Intelligence was ultimately the only place that was left [that Raslan did not mention]. She thought that Raslan somehow tried to help her and give her a hint. She therefore assumed that her car would be with the Air Force Intelligence.

Wiedner asked whether the witness mentioned other people who were involved in or present during her conversation with Raslan. Knappmann said when asked about this, the witness denied, however, described that when Raslan sat at his desk, an employee entered the room and spoke with him. He was an elder officer who brought several documents. Knappmann said he also asked the witness about the content of the conversation between Raslan and this officer. The witness recalled that this was when she had to wait on the sofa because the elder officer brought several papers for Raslan. Raslan then asked the officer when ‘this’ happened. The officer answered ‘today, dear sir’. Raslan in turn replied that they should ‘hand him [the corpse] out on Saturday, because of the Friday prayers tomorrow’. According to the witness, Raslan further asked the officer ‘what idiot did this’. The witness came to the conclusion that they were talking about a detainee who died in custody, and that Raslan was signing papers to hand over the corpse.

Wiedner cited from the BKA’s transcript, according to which the witness said that Raslan signed a document and told the officer not to ‘hand him out today, because of the Friday prayers tomorrow’. The witness said she did not know what the conversation was about, but she put everything in context and concluded that Raslan just signed a death certificate. Knappmann confirmed, adding that the witness said that she was scared in this situation. She further said that Raslan was silent for a while after the officer left. He then asked her whether she was scared. According to the witness, she denied, saying that she was sad. Raslan replied that in ‘such chaotic times, the good ones as well as the bad ones die.’

Wiedner asked about another situation when a third person entered Raslan’s office [during his conversation with the witness]. Knappmann said there was indeed another instance when a young officer with rolled up sleeves entered the room. The witness described that he was out of breath and told Raslan ‘mission accomplished, dear sir.’ Knappmann said the witness remembered that Raslan thanked him. She further said that the young officer looked like he just tortured someone.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness mentioned anything about her memory. Knappmann affirmed, explaining that the witness sometimes mentioned that certain situations were burnt in her memory. In these situations, she was able to remember many details.

Wiedner cited from the BKA’s transcript, indicating that Knappmann and his colleague asked the witness to provide more detail about how she identified the person as Anwar Raslan and how she knew his name. Knappmann said they indeed asked her how she knew that this person was called Anwar Raslan. She replied that she cannot say for sure when she found out his name, however, she was sure that she knew his name when she was still in Syria. She was not sure whether she got to know his name during their conversation and provided Knappmann and his colleague three options for how she got to know his name. He either introduced himself or there was a sign with his name on the door or desk. A third option would be that the person who called her might have mentioned Raslan’s name when he told her to come to Al-Khatib. The witness also remembered that Raslan gave her his number at the end of their conversation. She therefore must have known his name at this point.

Wiedner cited from the BKA’s transcript confirming what Knappmann just said. Wiedner then asked him whether this passage was also re-translated to the witness. Knappmann affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether the witness was in contact with Raslan at a later point as well. Knappmann recalled the witness telling him that she got to know about Raslan's defection at the end of 2012. He then contacted her via Facebook messenger in 2015. She first thought it would be a fake profile, but he mentioned their conversation [they had in Al-Khatib]. However, the witness did not react to his messages and at the time the BKA interviewed her, she could not remember the content of Raslan's messages.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Knappmann also asked the witness to identify the person whom she had the conversation with, in Al-Khatib. Knappmann explained that he and his colleague showed her the already mentioned photos a second time, explicitly asking her to identify the person with whom she had the conversation, without connecting it to a certain name. The witness again identified the person in the second picture [Raslan], explaining that he was a bit thicker and his skin a bit brighter back then. She also said that he was a bit taller than her, however, not much.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened after this identification. Knappmann said they then asked the witness about Eyad Al-Gharib.

Wiedner asked about the external circumstances of the witness's conversation with Raslan at Al-Khatib Branch. Knappmann explained that when asked about when and where the conversation took place, the witness said it happened between ten and fifteen days after the demonstration and took around three hours.

Wiedner concluded that it was in April 2012. Knappmann confirmed, adding that it was after her first arrest.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness followed the news about Raslan. Knappmann said the witness did not follow up on Raslan's fate, nor did she hear any news about him, as she told the BKA.

Wiedner said that for the purpose of the present trial, the section of the witness's interview that dealt with Al-Gharib does not have to be assessed in court. He instead asked Knappmann whether he and his colleague asked the witness additional questions about Raslan towards the end of their interview. Knappmann said that as usual at the end of a witness interview, they asked the witness whether there was anything else that she would like to talk about and that they did not yet ask her. She told them that she was under the impression that Raslan somehow tried to help her by mentioning all the places where she could not find her car. However, she immediately added that she is sure he participated in the crimes committed in the Branch by virtue of his position.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge recalled that the witness described Raslan's height. He asked Knappmann how tall the witness said Raslan was. Knappmann said they did not ask her to provide a number. He recalled that the witness said that Raslan was a bit taller than her. Knappmann further explained that the witness was neither particularly small nor tall. If he was to tell a number, it could be 10cm too much or too small. The only thing he could say is that the witness was smaller than himself, he noted that when they were talking during a break. He would be 1.85m.

Klinge asked whether the witness said anything about her ethnicity. Knappmann said she told them she was Alawite, however living a rather secular life.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled the witness saying that Raslan gave her his number. Fratzky said that this would be rather unusual. He assumed that Knappmann did not give the witness his number after their interview. Fratzky wanted to know whether Knappmann therefore asked the witness about the purpose of Raslan giving her his number. Knappmann explained that according to the witness, Raslan told her that she should contact him. She felt like he wanted to help her in some way.

Fratzky asked whether Knappmann and his colleague did not ask the witness further questions about her feeling that Raslan tried to help her. Knappmann denied.

Defense Counsel Böcker said his colleague's questions actually led to another question on his side. Referring to the witness's feeling that Raslan tried to help her, Böcker asked Knappmann whether the witness was able to tell what Knappmann and his colleague intended with their questions and whether she was able to follow them. Knappmann said this would be a very general question. The witness was always able to follow and answer their questions. However, he was not under the impression that she had special skills in telling the purpose of specific questions. Knappmann said he does not know what Böcker actually wanted to know from him.

Böcker replied by saying that he himself did not exactly know that. He recalled again that the witness felt like Raslan wanted to help her. Böcker said this would be a subjective assumption and asked Knappmann whether there were any objective indicators to allow for such a conclusion. Knappmann said he could only recall what the witness told the BKA. He did not ask further questions about this matter. However, as soon as she mentioned that she felt like Raslan wanted to help her, she also added that she was sure he participated in the crimes in Al-Khatib. Knappmann added that the BKA knew from other witnesses that Raslan apparently "had a foible" for artists. However, the witness did not mention anything in this direction.

Böcker wanted to know whether the witness actually found her car at the Air Force Intelligence. Knappmann said they did not talk about her car in detail. When asked about the fate of her friend [who drove her car] she said that he was detained at the Air Force Intelligence.

Defense counsel Fratzky recalled that the witness who told the BKA about his friend did not know about the details of her conversation with Raslan. Knappmann affirmed, adding that he could not say anything concrete about it.

Prosecutor Klinge referred to Knappmann's statement about Raslan's foible for artists and wanted to know whether the BKA spoke with other witnesses (artists) that were contacted by Raslan. Knappmann affirmed, adding that they however did not prepare any specific questions for them. He recalled a witness telling the BKA that he received privileged treatment [at Branch 251] and that Raslan contacted him to ask about his well-being. This witness literally said that he 'received a five-star-treatment'.

None of the Plaintiff Counsels had any questions for Knappmann.

Knappmann was dismissed for the day.

The proceedings adjourned at 10:40 AM.

Next hearings will take place on April 7, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 32

Hearing Dates: April 7 and 8, 2021

Trial Day 67 – April 7, 2021

P31 [name redacted], a 34-year-old Syrian journalist testified that a person whom he later identified as Anwar Raslan, slapped him in the face on an open street when security forces were preventing a demonstration in February 2011. According to the witness, this person was also observing the funeral of a prominent movie director and activist, together with subordinate members of the security forces. When the witness was detained and interrogated in Branch 251, the person he identified as Anwar Raslan was present at one of the interrogations, beating the witness with his fist. The witness further told the court about constant torture and bad detention conditions at the Branch which already existed in March 2011.

Trial Day 68 – April 8, 2021

After the witness answered questions from the prosecutors, Raslan's defense submitted a request to take additional evidence. The defense argued that it would be necessary to hear five new witnesses in order to prove that Raslan was never involved in any "repressive activities" against the opposition outside Branch 251, nor would he have ever beaten an alleged member of the opposition. A response to this submission by the judges will be issued within the next weeks.

Day 67 of Trial – April 7, 2021

The hearing began at 9:35 am with five spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Kroker and Bahns were not present. René Kleyer was replacement for attorney Khubaib-Ali Mohammed.

Before Presiding Judge Kerber called the witness, she informed the parties that another witness prefers not to testify in court. She added that the judges would be in contact with the witness regarding protective measures, travel arrangements etc., however, one of the following sessions might be cancelled.

Testimony of P31

P31 was accompanied by his witness counsel, Antonia von der Behrens. Before Judge Kerber turned to the witness, she asked von der Behrens whether her client would be comfortable saying his name. Von der Behrens affirmed. Judge Kerber turned to P31, explaining that he is free to adjust the volume of his headphones and make himself comfortable before the questioning starts. Kerber thanked P31 for his willingness to testify in court and read out instructions. P31, a 34-year-old Syrian journalist denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber first asked P31 to provide an overview of how he got in conflict with the 'regime', adding that the court already knew that P31 participated in the movement against the regime, and wanted to know more about P31's work and activities. P31 explained that before the start of the revolution, he was working as a journalist in Syria. After the start of the revolution in Tunisia, he participated in demonstrations in front of the Tunisian, Egyptian, and Libyan embassies in Damascus. He said that at this point in time, "it was hard, even crazy to demonstrate", because Damascus was under the control of the security authorities. He said that only a few participated in demonstrations before 2011, although there were some demonstrations. He always hoped to participate in this [demonstrations] and participate in a revolution in Syria. P31 worked for Al-Hayat, a London-based newspaper and later for An-Nahar, a Beirut-based newspaper, that was later banned in Syria. P31 explained that the Syrian regime used to ban certain newspapers, so that either both [Al-Hayat and An-Nahar] or one of them was banned. During his work as a journalist, he received many summonses from the Syrian security agencies. He explained that the agencies often turned to his family when he was still living with them. All summonses were related to his work and he was always questioned about his work.

P31 recalled that there was a call for demonstrations in front of the parliament in February 2011. He was there [in front of the parliament] together with a group of people, however, as there were many members of the security forces, he and the group decided to pretend that they were walking by the parliament, although they actually wanted to demonstrate. P31 explained that they were close to the parliament building, when some of them were stopped by security forces who asked for their IDs and personal information. Two of his friends did not have their IDs with them and when they were stopped by the security forces, they were pulled aside. P31 approached the security forces to ask them why they stopped his friends. He explained that at this time [early February 2011] there were not many demonstrations yet, so people had no experience in dealing with security forces. The security officers beat him and told him to leave. P31 further described that sometime after this incident, he went to the funeral of a prominent movie director to take pictures and videos. He explained that the deceased person was a friend of his and "important for the people in Syria who thought differently."

At the funeral he recognized some of the security officers who beat him at the previous incident. He then decided to film them from further away. P31 said Anwar Raslan was there and he [P31] took a picture of him and saved it on his laptop. According to P31, Raslan was there [near the parliament] when P31 was beaten by Raslan's officers. P31 said he cannot say why, but the picture of Raslan was somehow important to him, so he decided to save it on his laptop. A lot happened in Damascus after the funeral in terms of demonstrations. P31 said in mid-March he was also on TV. On March [information redacted] 2011, security forces entered his home in Damascus.

P31 recalled that he was in shock and thought his life was about to end. Security forces beat him, insulted him, and searched his home. The beatings were very harsh and lasted until the security forces had searched his entire place. After 1, 2 or 3 hours (P31 could not remember exactly) he was bused to Al-Khatib Branch. When he arrived at Al-Khatib Branch he was taken to a “covered” [roofed] yard<sup>2</sup> where he had to wait. The security officers who searched his place carried many bags, as they took all his belongings: CDs, DVDs, documents, books, as well as his laptop. P31 said that at this point, he did not know what he was accused of. He considered himself a journalist who appeared on TV from time to time. While he had to wait, he tried to imagine what the officers possibly want from him. P31 said he felt like this might help him during an interrogation later on. He was 29 years old at this time and it was his first experience of being at a detention facility.

P31 said he had to wait in the yard for quite some time before he was taken inside where his clothes were stripped, and he was asked questions about things that were taken from his home. P31 explained that they found many banknotes in his home because he and his flat mate collected foreign banknotes as a hobby. The security officers beat him and wanted to know the country of origin for every single banknote. However, he did not know that for every banknote, so he started to just say any country. The officers continued to beat him again and again, until he was taken back to the yard where he had to stand and wait for hours. P31 explained that young Iraqi men who were arrested at a park also had to stand and wait in this yard. Overall, a lot of people arrived at this yard while P31 had to wait there. P31 said it was a longish yard where every new arrival had to wait before one was taken to a cell.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether P31 meant that the yard was “covered” with people or with a roof. P31 said the yard had a corrugated iron roof. There were also windows facing the yard. One could hear screams coming from the direction of the windows. P31 assumed that people were being tortured in the rooms behind the windows. He guessed that these rooms were interrogation rooms. P31 recalled that this situation [waiting in the yard, hearing screams of torture] was the “beginning of the horrors.” He said that one could hear many different screams of torture, one man shouted, ‘Why did you rape my wife?’. After he waited in the yard for one hour, P31 was taken to a solitary cell, measuring 1.5x2 meters. Although solitary cells would usually be used for one person only, P31 said that there was an elderly man inside the cell when P31 arrived. He asked the man how long he had been in the cell and when the man answered ‘15’, P31 got scared because he assumed that he was talking years. However, the elderly man said he had been there for “only” 15 days.

P31 recalled that the first interrogation started the same night after he arrived. His hands were tied behind his back and he was blindfolded. P31 had to lie on the floor with his face and belly facing the floor. P31 was told that he would be in control of how much beating he had to endure, because he would be beaten whenever he was lying. The first questions were about his name, family, and job. He was also asked whether he received money from abroad to organize demonstrations. P31 identified different groups of questions: personal information, family, and activities regarding demonstrations. After that, he was tortured and beaten. According to P31, around three people were present, beating him all over his back and head using a cable. He was then taken back to his cell. One day later, the officers had inspected P31’s laptop and asked him questions about his postings and texts.

P31 said they [employees at Branch 251] wanted to know whether P31 was working with ‘hostile’ media outlets or other agencies that would be hostile towards the regime. P31 told them that everything he had written, was published in newspapers, and he was not hiding anything. P31 recalled that he was also questioned about the reasons why he published certain pieces in certain newspapers and why he wrote them in the first place. P31 told the court that there were separate sessions [interrogations] dealing with certain things on his laptop. The interrogators went through all the documents on his computer step by step. He was heavily tortured during these interrogations. P31 described how he was put in a “torture seat”, lying on the floor with his hands tied and eyes blindfolded when he was beaten with whips all over his body. P31 said this was particularly heavy because the beating lasted for a long time. He assumed that he was beaten by several people, whom he asked to stop many times. However, he was told to stand up, which he was unable to do. He was then told to crawl outside and eventually kicked out and taken back to his cell. Judge Kerber wanted to know where P31’s hands were when they were tied. P31 said they were tied behind his back.

Kerber asked how exactly P31 got back to his cell, since he was unable to walk. P31 said he could not remember exactly how he got back to his cell. He remembered that he was kicked out of the room and a guard was called to take him back to his cell. This guard had to make sure that P31 was blindfolded and lowered his head on his way to the cell. P31 explained that the guard took his blindfolds, since P31 was unable to walk. He was so exhausted, he had to crawl all the way back to the cell. P31 remembered a group of guards sitting in a room mid-way on the way back to his cell. The guards were laughing at ‘a journalist who is unable to walk.’

Kerber recalled that P31 was not blindfolded on the way back and asked him whether his hands were still tied behind his back, and how exactly he crawled back to his cell. P31 said his hands were untied on the way back to the cell. He was then left alone for a couple of days before he was interrogated again. This time, the interrogation officers wanted to know how and with whom P31 was working. They wanted information about his colleagues. P31 recalled that during one of the following interrogations he was standing in the interrogation room when the person whom he had filmed was present as well. P31’s blindfolds were taken off. P31 explained that when the picture [he took of one of the security officers at the funeral] was found on his computer, he was interrogated about it. His blindfolds were taken off and Anwar Raslan was there. P31 said Raslan called him a ‘son of a bitch’ and started to beat him.

Kerber asked whether it was Anwar Raslan in the photo on P31’s laptop. P31 affirmed, adding that when he was asked during the interrogation [at Branch 251] why he took the picture and whether he wanted to hurt the person, he answered that this person beat him [near the parliament building]. P31 told the court that he took the picture because he hoped that one day the person would be held accountable for that. P31 explained he said during the interrogation that he did not know who this person was and that he was working at the Branch. He only recognized him at the funeral standing with other security officers around him and he seemed to be an important person, P31 said he was shocked when he found out that this person was working at the Branch where he was detained. He was afraid of revenge. P31 said he had to endure several interrogations at the Branch. After they [interrogation officers at Branch 251] questioned him about general things, they then wanted to know how exactly P31 was working [as a journalist].

P31 said a couple days later he was taken out of his cell at night and transferred to Kafar Souseh, the State Security Branch. One of the guards there told P31 that he could have become a journalist, but he ruined his own career. The guard then started beating him. P31 added that he was transferred to Kafar Souseh by car. He was alone in the car [only detainee], blindfolded, and his hands were tied behind his back.<sup>3</sup> P31 went on to explain that on his arrival at Kafar Souseh, his personal items that were also transferred from Al-Khatib Branch, were registered before he was taken to an underground cell. He said this place was dirty and scary, and the guards there were more brutal than the ones before [at Branch 251]. According to P31, one could hear people screaming from torture all the time. He saw many people coming to the cell who were brutally tortured before. Many of them were arrested at demonstrations in Duma and Damascus. They were injured and covered in blood.

P31 said that even minors, children around the age of 12 to 13 years, were in his cell in Al-Khatib Branch. When P31 arrived at Kafar Souseh, a 16-year-old teenager arrived the same night. P31 said they were both heavily beaten. The guards simply wanted to hear them scream. P31 said the guards hit them with black sticks on their heads and bodies. P31 further recalled that in Kafar Souseh he was beaten on his way from the cell to the toilet, while in Al-Khatib [Branch] he was never beaten on the way to the toilet. In Kafar Souseh, however, guards came into the cell every hour, beating the detainees with batons. Sometimes, they [detainees] were told to stand up, facing the walls. They had to stay in this position for hours. P31 told the court that he was interrogated twice at Kafar Souseh. The interrogators wanted to check his statements from Al-Khatib [Branch]. P31 described that there was “no actual torture” during interrogations at Kafar Souseh. The people there simply wanted to check what he already said in Al-Khatib. Nonetheless, in Kafar Souseh he was beaten in his cell every day, every hour. P31 said it was very scary and he never felt so afraid like in this place [Kafar Souseh]. P31 recalled that one night he and other detainees were taken to a yard, where they all had to stand. There were many people, around 100 persons. They were called traitors and criminals [by the guards] and told that the president issued an amnesty, so all of them were free to leave. P31 said they were supposed to be transported with buses, many people did use the buses, however, P31 decided to take a taxi to one of his friend’s places. He added that ever since he did not return to his flat.

Judge Kerber explained to P31 that she has no further general questions at the moment, however, Judge Wiedner would now ask more detailed questions.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked when P31 first published articles as a journalist. P31 said he studied at Damascus University before he started working as a journalist in [information redacted]. Around [information redacted] he started working for [information redacted] and in [information redacted].

Wiedner asked whether P31's pieces were political from the beginning or only after the beginning of the uprising in Syria. P31 explained his pieces were not political at all. At the beginning of his career, he rather published articles about the arts and the relationship between the arts and society, using the arts as a way of describing society. His work related to corruption and how artists portrayed corruption, and how artists addressed political topics in general.

Wiedner recalled P31 telling the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) that he published many political contributions after 2010. P31 said this [political contributions] would be a more complicated description, he explained that one could not address political issues directly. Instead, one could only talk about the arts and society. In Syria, one could not directly write about politics. P31 recalled that at university he was told that Annhar, the newspaper he was working for, was a prohibited newspaper, a hostile opposition newspaper.

Wiedner asked what P31 got to know about the security force's reaction to demonstrations when he documented and participated in demonstrations in spring 2011. P31 explained that he participated in demonstrations in Damascus; mostly vigils in public spaces or in front of the Egyptian or Libyan embassies. After March 15, 2011, family members of detainees organized a demonstration in Damascus. Shabiha came and started beating demonstrators. Everyone, including P31, had to flee. P31 said he gave several interviews on TV around this time in March 2011. He reported about the demonstrations, amongst others on Al-Jazeera and Al-Arabia. He sometimes used his real name and sometimes used a fake name instead.

Wiedner wanted to know whether one can say that P31 was a prominent person in Syria. P31 said that many TV stations published his name when he was arrested and spoke about his arrest. P31 concluded that he was well known amongst a certain group of people.

Wiedner recalled that P31 connected Anwar Raslan's name to the events he just described and asked whether P31 knew this name already in March 2011. P31 denied, explaining that he saw this person on a public square together with other officers, however, he did not know his name. P31 added that the number of people who participated in demonstrations at that time was relatively small. Demonstrations were peaceful and short. Members of the security forces only picked out a few people from time to time.

Wiedner clarified that he wanted to know whether P31 knew the name Anwar Raslan or the person. P31 said he did not know the person's name.

Wiedner recalled P31 saying that the person he saw at the demonstration was Anwar Raslan. Wiedner asked P31 how he identified this person as Anwar Raslan. P31 explained that there were always security officers or other members of the security forces watching people at this kind of activities [demonstrations, vigils]. P31 had no experience with detention at that time [March 2011] so he did not know any names, he only knew the faces of the security officers. When he filmed and took pictures of this person [later identified as Anwar Raslan] he did not know his name. P31 concluded that this was one of the craziest things that ever happened to him. After he was released from detention, he spoke to his friends about the events. They mentioned the name Anwar Raslan and described his appearance. P31 said in this moment [in court], when he sees this person, he knows it is Anwar Raslan who was there [at the demonstration, funeral and as interrogator at Branch 251].

Wiedner asked whether this person whom P31 identified as Anwar Raslan would be present in the courtroom. P31 affirmed. Wiedner asked P31 who exactly it would be. P31 pointed at the defendant's bench where Anwar Raslan was sitting.

Wiedner wanted to know when and where P31 saw this person for the first time. P31 said it was on February [information redacted], 2011, at a demonstration in front of the parliament building. The demonstration actually never happened due to the presence of many security forces. The group of people instead walked by the parliament to Az-Zahra' Cinema where two of his friends were arrested.

Wiedner asked whether this was the first time P31 saw the person he identified as Anwar Raslan, or if he already saw him before this event. P31 explained that the first time he memorized Raslan's face was at an event where Raslan was standing with a group of employees. P31 and his friends saw Raslan and the group, and they saw P31 and his friends. P31 stressed that this was when he memorized Raslan's face. Later at the funeral he recognized this person and wanted to take a video of him. That was when P31 knew that this person was the reason why his friends were arrested.

Wiedner wanted to know how Raslan was the reason for the arrest of P31's friends and what led P31 to this assumption. P31 recalled that he and a group of people wanted to demonstrate in front of the parliament but instead decided to walk by. They were stopped by security officers and asked for their IDs and personal information. When their data was documented, they were allowed to go home. However, two of his friends did not have their IDs with them, so they were taken to the entrance of a building nearby. There the security officers started beating P31's friend. P31 said they also took the young woman who was with his friend to this entrance. P31 saw this and approached an officer who was not involved in the beating but standing next to the group. P31 stood on the pavement next to the entrance of the building, while his friends were beaten inside the entrance [hallway]. P31 told the officer to not harm his friends and let them go.

Wiedner asked whom exactly P31 approached. P31 said he approached the security officers, Anwar Raslan and another officer who was standing next to Raslan. One of them hit P31 on open street and told him to go away.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P31 spoke to the person he identified as Anwar Raslan. P31 affirmed, explaining that he remembers well that this person was wearing a brown leather jacket.

Wiedner asked what this person told P31. P31 said he told him 'get lost!'

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly this person [whom P31 identified as Raslan] was doing; whether he gave orders or was just standing by. Wiedner asked P31 how he identified this person's rank and function. P31 explained it was obvious that this person had a higher rank, because usually at demonstrations or vigils, officers were standing behind regular security forces who had a different function. At this time [early 2011], officers were usually wearing civilian clothes because all embassies in Damascus were still open. The regime did not want to show violence because they were under surveillance [by foreign diplomats and personnel in the embassies]. P31 recalled that there were dozens of security employees at every demonstration. They always told the protestors to leave the scene. Some demonstrations took longer. For example, there was a demonstration in front of the Libyan embassy where people were standing for around two hours, calling for freedom and justice. P31 added that, however, none of the demonstrations were specifically directed against Bashar al-Assad.

Wiedner asked whether the person whom P31 identified as Anwar Raslan did not wear a uniform at the incident near the parliament. P31 denied, explaining it was normal that members of the security forces wore civilian clothes even inside the detention facilities.

Wiedner asked whether P31 knew the name of this person. P31 denied.

Wiedner asked whether it was correct that P31 saw this person again at the funeral, only a few days after the incident near the parliament. P31 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know at which point P31 identified this person as Anwar Raslan. P31 said he contacted the people who participated in demonstrations before March 2011 because he wanted to know the name of this person. These people then told him his name was Anwar Raslan.

Judge Wiedner summarized that P31 knew the person's name from other people. P31 affirmed.

Wiedner cited the transcript of P31's questioning with the BKA where P31 stated that members of the security forces were present at every demonstration or vigil connected to the Arab spring. 'He' [person identified as Raslan] was there as well. Other members of the security forces addressed him as 'Colonel', whereas the group of demonstrators called him 'Raslan'. Wiedner asked P31 whether he could remember this statement. P31 denied, explaining that at the time [of the demonstrations] people called this person "the evil one", and only after he was released, P31 learned the person's name.

Wiedner wanted to know when exactly P31 learned the name of the person, after his detention or earlier during a talk with his friends. P31 said he heard the name from friends. He never witnessed how this person was called by his name. In detention, P31 only saw the person's face, but did not know his name yet.

Wiedner cited the BKA's transcript, saying that P31 saw the person he identified as Anwar Raslan already before the demonstration near the parliament. However, the first interaction with this person was at this attempted demonstration near the parliament. Wiedner asked P31 whether P31 consequently saw Raslan before his detention. P31 said this [situation described in the BKA's transcript] was the situation he was referring to earlier when talking about a vigil in Damascus. He saw this person for the first time at this occasion. The first close direct contact then happened at the [attempted] demonstration and the second contact was in detention.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether it was always the same people participating in demonstrations and vigils. P31 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know about the connection between these people, whether they all had the same job or if there was any other connection or commonalities. P31 said they were all activists, adding that there were only a few of them in Damascus.

Judge Wiedner asked whether P31 had direct contact with the person [identified as Raslan] at the funeral. P31 denied, explaining that he only saw him from a distance.

Wiedner mentioned that the BKA showed P31 several photos and asked P31 whether he recognized anyone from these photos. P31 said he recognized the same person from the photos that he was just talking about in court.

Wiedner asked whether this would be the same person that is also present in the courtroom. P31 affirmed.

Wiedner recalled that after P31's flat was stripped and he was arrested, he was taken to Al-Khatib [Branch]. Wiedner asked P31 how he knew that this place was Al-Khatib [Branch]. P31 explained he did not know right away, because he was blindfolded on the way to the Branch. He only learned from "detainees who were taken there" after him. P31 added that the Branch has a number, however, he did not remember. Some people were summoned by the Branch before they were detained, so they knew where they were and could tell P31.

Wiedner asked P31 to clarify what he meant by "detainees who were taken there." P31 said he called the people fellow detainees because some of them were summoned to the Branch before they were arrested, and others were arrested at demonstrations and recognized the Branch from the way there.

Wiedner asked P31 to describe his arrival at the Branch. P31 explained how he was taken from his flat to the Branch in a bus. He was first taken to a yard before he was taken to a room. The yard had a corrugated iron roof, and he was taken from this yard to the place where he was frisked. He was taken to some kind of kitchen, a room where a lot of bread was stored and with a sink in the middle of the room. He was frisked in this room and had to sign that the personal items he had to hand out belonged to him.

Wiedner asked P31 whether he had to undress. P31 affirmed, adding he was only allowed to leave on his underwear. He then had to squat twice, a typical move that was used by the guards to ensure that a person did not hide any items.

Wiedner wanted to know if P31 was immediately interrogated or first taken to a cell. P31 explained he first had to go back to the longish yard where he had to wait for hours. More and more people arrived there while he had to wait, up to a point where there were dozens of people in the yard. He was then taken to a cell. P31 added that all detainees were photographed in the yard.

Wiedner asked where P31's cell was located: in the basement, ground floor [first floor] or upstairs. P31 described that the yard and the cells were on the same level, the ground floor. There were a few steps leading inside the building, however, one did not go upstairs to another floor. P31 added that there were collective cells in Al-Khatib [Branch] with a hallway in front, leading to solitary cells. P31 recalled that when he was detained in one of the solitary cells and he had to use the toilet, he was taken outside the cell to a room opposite of the solitary cells.

Wiedner wanted to know where the interrogations took place, whether P31 had to go upstairs or downstairs. P31 explained that the interrogation room were located on the same floor. Coming from his solitary cell he had to walk down the hallway, passing the guards' room, and coming to some kind of yard where the interrogation room were located. Sometimes, he had to go upstairs where more interrogation rooms were located. P31 said the moment one is taken from his cell, one cannot feel anything. Right in front of the cell's door, one is being blindfolded and the hands are tied behind one's back. One then had to go to the interrogation room like that [blindfolded and with hands tied behind the back]. P31 added that the blindfolds only allowed one to recognize the way one had to walk, that was the reason why P31 could describe the way. He added that once, when he was tortured so badly that he was unable to walk, his blindfolds were taken off, so he could see the interrogation room and parts of the way between interrogation room and cell.

Wiedner asked if P31 had to walk upstairs or downstairs on the way back to his cell after an interrogation. P31 said it was usually on the same floor, however, sometimes he had to go to a different floor.

Wiedner asked whether the interrogation at which Anwar Raslan was present was also on the same floor as the cells or whether it was somewhere else. P31 said as far as he remembered, he had to use stairs. The interrogation was in a different room than usual.

Wiedner asked P31 to describe the room [where the interrogation with Raslan happened]. P31 said he could only remember that there was a desk. He was so exhausted at that time that he was not able to memorize more details. He assumed that there was a window, and the desk was wooden and there were chairs as well.

Wiedner wanted to know how many people were present at this interrogation in addition to P31. P31 said he was the only detainee at this interrogation and at least three guards were present, one of them had accompanied P31 to the room.

Wiedner asked P31 to describe the situation and how the person he identified as Anwar Raslan was behaving. P31 said he was taken to a room where he had to stand. Usually, he had to kneel or lie on his belly during interrogations. Shortly after P31 entered the room, someone asked him whose picture P31 had saved on his laptop. When P31 said he did not know, his blindfolds were taken off and someone hit him with his fist.

Wiedner wanted to know who hit P31. P31 said it was the same person, Anwar Raslan. P31 then had to kneel.

Wiedner asked where P31 was hit. P31 said he was hit in his face. He was then questioned why he took the picture and other things related to the photo. P31 said in this moment, he felt as if his life was in danger, because the person from the photo was sitting right in front of him and was free to do whatever he wanted to do. P31 said this person wanted to know everything about the photo. He was questioned again about the photo the following day, however, by a different interrogator.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker intervened, saying he had a question regarding who exactly was the one hitting P31 with his fist, and who took off P31's blindfolds. Judge Wiender said that this would actually not be the time for Böcker to ask questions, however, Wiedner was about to ask similar questions anyway. Wiedner asked P31 who took off his blindfolds. P31 said it was the same person who hit him with his fist. This person first asked whose photo P31 saved on his computer, then took off his blindfolds and hit him in the face. Wiedner asked whether it was Anwar Raslan. P31 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether there was more beating during this interrogation. P31 affirmed, explaining that several people started beating him when he was blindfolded again and told to kneel. In this interrogation session, P31 was told not to lie. P31 added that usually, he was simply severely tortured during interrogations and threaten to be killed or cut into pieces.

Wiedner asked whether P31 was threatened during this interrogation as well. P31 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P31 recognized the rank of the person he identified as Anwar Raslan, compared to the other people present at this interrogation. P31 said the other people addressed Raslan as "Sidi" [dear Sir], so it was obvious that Raslan was higher-ranking, because this term is only used between different ranks.

Wiedner asked whether Raslan gave orders. P31 could not remember, adding that he sat or knelt on the floor while he was beaten by several people from several directions. That was why he could not tell who said what.

Wiedner recalled that P31 told the BKA about another person whom he could not pigeonhole. P31 said there was the interrogation officer, whose voice P31 still remembers well. There were also one or two people who usually carried whips. P31 said he was sitting or even lying on the floor and could hear steps and people whispering, because they did not want P31 to hear what they were talking about.

Wiedner cited the BKA's transcript, saying that P31's video [from the funeral] showed another person who was in the room [interrogation] as well. This person was between forty and fifty years old, had dark hair, a mustache, and a brown leather jacket. P31 told the BKA that he did not know this person's name. P31 confirmed this to the court.

Wiedner asked if and what this person did during the interrogation. P31 explained that this was the same person who took off P31's blindfolds and hit him in the face. P31 clarified he was referring to the person that he took a picture of, and who then hit him.

Wiedner recalled that P31 told the BKA that Raslan was the person who hit him in the face and that there were one or two other people in the video who were also in the interrogation room with P31. P31 explained that he meant there was more than one person in the interrogation room: One who hit him, two carrying whips and one guard who accompanied P31 to the room.

Wiedner said he understood from P31's previous descriptions that the video P31 made at the funeral showed one person whom he identified as Raslan and met again during the interrogation, and that there was another person in this video who was also present at the interrogation. P31 said the interrogation was about his work, postings, and activities during the revolution. He was also questioned about the video and photos.

Wiedner recalled P31 telling the BKA that Raslan was very angry. Wiedner wanted to know what exactly Raslan did, and if he raised his voice. P31 said he hit him in the face. According to P31, this would be enough to describe such a person.

Wiedner said P31 previously described that he continuously heard other people screaming from torture, and asked P31 whether he could also hear these screams in the interrogation rooms. P31 said one could always hear these screams, even inside the cells. However, during interrogations he focused on himself, trying to find ways to reduce beatings. P31 said he could still hear voices of people being tortured, something that was audible everywhere.

Judge Wiedner said he wanted to know more about the general detention condition in Al-Khatib Branch and had some brief questions about condition in Kafar Souseh at a later point. Wiedner's first question was about the cells in Al-Khatib and how many people were in the same cell as P31. P31 said at the beginning there was one other person, an elderly man. P31 was later transferred to another cell.

Wiedner recalled P31 telling the BKA that there were three people, including P31, in one cell. P31 clarified that on his first day, there was one other person, an elderly man. The third person came on the second day. When P31 was transferred to another cell, he shared the cell with many other people. P31 said there was a lot of movement regarding new arrivals and transfers. Depending on how many new detainees were taken to the same cell, others were transferred.

P31 said he did not stay in the collective cell for a long time. Overall, he did not stay there for years or months, and due to many changing images, he could not remember all the details. P31 concluded he remembered certain things better than others.

Wiedner asked how long P31 stayed in Al-Khatib before he was transferred. P31 said he stayed there for around twelve to thirteen days. He was arrested on March 28, however, he did not remember the exact date he was released. He explained he knew that he was transferred after 12 days, although he lost his sense of time.

Wiedner said P31 told the BKA that he stayed in Al-Khatib from [information redacted], and asked P31 to confirm. P31 explained that he lost his sense of time. He was able to tell night and day, however, he lost his general sense of time, so he assumes that the timeframe he gave the BKA was calculated. P31 confirmed when Judge Wiedner asked whether he was talking about the year 2011.

Wiedner asked how big the collective cell was and how many people were there. P31 said he was in more than one cell. The number of people varied. Sometimes there were twenty people, sometimes thirty, before some of them were transferred. P31 said people were “piled up” in these cells. They had to sleep in shifts. However, the exact number of people was depending on the day.

Wiedner wanted to know if they were woken up at night. P31 said a lot happened inside the cells. Sometimes the detainees were not allowed to sleep. They had to stand in line, facing the wall. P31 described this as mental torture.

Wiedner clarified that all his questions relate to Al-Khatib Branch, referring to P31’s statements with the BKA, according to which people were often woken up at night and forced to face the wall, so that it was impossible to get enough sleep. P31 confirmed, adding that this is what he meant when talking about physical and mental torture.

Wiedner asked if the food was sufficient. P31 said food was not good but they got three meals per day, in the morning, at noon and in the evening. In the evening, they were given eggs, lentil soup and bread. They also got food at noon. P31 said the food was enough but disgusting. He further described that the amount of food was dependent on the cell. In collective cells, they got one portion for all detainees, so one person often did not get a lot of food, while in solitary cells every detainee got his own portion, so the amount was sufficient.

Regarding hygienic conditions at the Branch, Wiedner asked P31 whether there were sanitary facilities at all, if they were clean, and if people were allowed to use them. P31 said one was allowed to use the toilet, however, you only had one minute to go there and leave it again. If one took longer, the guards opened the door and screamed at the person to leave. There was no option to take a shower or bath. P31 did not remember whether there was soap at all. He was allowed to use the toilet up to three times per day, but the smell there was horrible. P31 explained that there were a lot of people, none of them could wash themselves, so that there was a strong smell. P31 said that this disgusting smell of people who did not wash for days, burnt into his memory.

Wiedner asked whether there was medical treatment at Al-Khatib Branch. P31 said some detainees received pills and medicine. He heard such stories relating to diabetes. He also heard people asking the guards for medicine. P31 himself did not need any pills or medicine, so he never asked for it.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P31 saw injured or sick detainees who would have been in need of medical treatment. P31 said there were different groups of sick people: high blood pressure, diabetes, and heart-related issues. These people asked for specific pills, however, P31 did not notice whether they received them or not. P31 also saw people, mainly from Duma and Damascus suburbs, who suffered fractures. Some wore bandages. P31 added that they were covered in blood and bleeding from their heads as well. They apparently had to endure severe beating.

Wiedner asked whether these people received medical treatment or were just left alone. P31 said they wore bandages. However, they were in pain. He added that people with chronic sickness asked for medicine. P31 said he does not know whether the bandages qualified as proper medical treatment. He further witnessed people who obviously “went crazy.” They were screaming they had hard issues when guards came and started beating them. However, P31 could not tell whether these people were actually sick or not. He also did not see any doctors. P31 concluded that although he saw some people receiving pills and others wearing bandages, he did not see a doctor at Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know if P31 witnessed other detainees being tortured and what torture methods were applied at the Branch. P31 described how he saw detainees returning to the cell after an interrogation with hematomas all over their bodies. They were beaten with cables and their entire bodies were red. P31 recalled a fellow detainee from Jordan. He had darker skin than P31 and was heavily beaten. The guards told this person that he could bear a lot. P31 recalled other “crazy situations” when people from Duma arrived at the cell, who obviously had to endure severe beating before that. P31 said he and other detainees “tried to put them back on their feet.” P31 further explained that he himself witnessed on his way to the toilet how detainees were handcuffed to their cell doors, so they could not sit down. P31 concluded that the aim was to mentally break people.

Wiedner asked whether this was in Al-Khatib. P31 affirmed, explaining that later in Kafar Souseh one of the people he shared a cell with was tortured like that [handcuffed to the cell’s door] in Al-Khatib. When P31 was in Al-Khatib he saw himself how people were handcuffed to the doors of their solitary cells.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly was done to these people. P31 explained that the iron doors of the solitary cells had small windows that were used by the guards to watch the detainees from outside or to let some air inside the cell. These windows were barred, and the detainees’ handcuffs were attached to the bars. This was done so that people could not sit down. P31 said he later understood that this was used as punishment. However, when he was still in Al-Khatib no fellow detainee in his cell was tortured like that, so he could not ask anyone and only found out later.

Wiedner asked at what height the people were handcuffed to the window bars, whether they had to stand up. P31 said the windows were at eye level. In his solitary cell, one had to stand up to look through the window. P31 guessed the windows were at a height of 160 to 170 centimeters. He added that the function of these windows was for guards to open them and watch the detainees.

Wiedner wanted to know if P31 knew about other torture methods like electroshocks or Doulab. P31 affirmed that electroshocks and Doulab were applied and used to threaten people. P31 said he witnessed people being whipped and tortured with the Flying Carpet. P31 explained he was once put in a Doulab and beaten. Another time he was threatened that electroshocks would be applied to certain parts of his body so he would “no longer be able to have children.” On Judge Wiedner’s request, P31 affirmed that this happened in Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner asked P31 to describe the situation when he was tortured using Doulab. P31 explained that this happened during the interrogation after which he was unable to stand or walk. He was put in a Doulab [tire] and beaten twice or three times. However, this would not have been as intense as the regular use of these methods. P31 said he was sometimes also threatened that two metal sticks would be attached to his body to impose electroshocks.

Wiedner asked whether P31's family was informed about his whereabouts. P31 denied.

Wiedner further wanted to know if P31 was beaten on the way to interrogations. P31 said he was beaten on the way in Al-Khatib. One could not say that these beatings were systematic. One was [arbitrarily] beaten against his head with sticks or one's head was smashed against the wall. P31 said this was not as intense as the torture and beatings that followed later [in Kafar Souseh]. P31 said the way from his cell to the toilet was very long in Kafar Souseh and one was massively beaten on the way.

Regarding Al-Khatib Branch, Wiedner wanted to know if P31 could say anything about the hierarchy between guards and interrogators. P31 said as a detainee in this Branch he would be beaten by the guards on a daily basis. They were the only people that the detainees had contact with either on the way to the toilet or when they got food. According to P31 there were also people working in human resources or at the exhibit department where the detainee's personal items were registered and stored. The latter asked P31 about his father and other relatives. P31 added that there were also interrogators and transcript writers.

Wiedner wanted to know whether people acted in a certain way so P31 was able to tell if there was some kind of hierarchy. P31 said he was not familiar with ranks. However, some people addressed others with "sidi" [dear sir]. P31 explained that as a detainee his only contacts were with the guards.

Wiedner recalled P31 telling the BKA that the interrogators were in charge of ordering interrogations or deciding that nothing would happen to the detainee. P31 further told the BKA that it seemed like the treatment was already agreed on before and the aim the interrogators had in mind decided about the detainee's fate. P31 told the court that this is what he meant when describing that the guards addressed the interrogation officers with "sidi" [dear sir]. The guard who accompanied the detainees from the cells to the interrogation rooms had a lower rank than the interrogation officers.

Wiedner said P31 further told the BKA about hierarchies that higher ranking people used a harsh note towards lower ranking personnel; they exercised their power verbally. P31 told the judges that he was referring to this when talking about the term "sidi". He only used this term to make conclusions about the ranks of people.

Wiedner said the court was particularly interested in P31's experiences in Al-Khatib Branch and asked him to tell whether Al-Khatib was worst or if other intelligence branches were worse. P31 said that each experience [Branch] was bad. He said he was beaten most and had to endure the greatest pain in his life when he was in Al-Khatib Branch. Later in Kafar Souseh, he was also beaten and insulted by guards, however, "that was part of it." P31 explained that at his second arrest months later, he was taken to Branch 215. His hand was injured and a doctor was called to put on bandages. He had to stay at this Branch for 60 days.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P31 if he needed a break. P31 said he had a headache and a hard time remembering things, so he would like to have a break.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker intervened, saying that he and his colleague would not have any questions for the witness, because they needed to talk to their client first.

Since the prosecutors indicated that they only had a few questions, Judge Kerber ordered a short break before the session would be closed after the prosecutors' questions.

Presiding Judge Kerber said P31's counsel told her that P31's headache got worse. Kerber therefore decided to close the session for the day and continue with the prosecutors' and the defense's questions the following day.

Proceedings adjourned at 2:15PM.

Day 68 of Trial – April 8, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 am with six spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Kroker and Mohammed were not present.

Presiding Judge Kerber read out instructions to P31 again before she handed over to the Prosecutors.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge referred to demonstrations and vigils in early 2011 and asked P31 whether it was known that certain people there belonged to the security forces. P31 affirmed, explaining that one could tell that they were members of the security forces because they were always on the phone. He added that "one knew how they were acting." P31 said that some of the activists participating in these demonstrations were already summoned by the Intelligence Services, so they knew some of the people. A common term for these summons and general questionings would be "to get a cup of coffee."

Klinge asked if it was also known to which agencies they belonged: General Intelligence, Military Intelligence, Air Force Intelligence or Political Security. P31 said he wanted to talk about his personal story: he had already been [in early 2011] invited [summoned] by the Political Security and Palestine Branches. He therefore knew some of the people there. Friends of his were also summoned and knew some of the Intelligence employees as well. In addition, one had to bear in mind that the security forces in Syria are not hiding. Their approach would be to control everything. That was why P31 and his friends were afraid.

Klinge referred to the [attempted] demonstration on February [information redacted], 2011 and asked P31 whether he knew to which Intelligence Agency the people belonged. P31 explained that on this day, a group of people wanted to gather in front of the parliament building in Damascus. Around twenty to thirty people therefore met at [information redacted]. A person came into the café and took P31 outside, asked for P31's ID, documented his data and sent him back inside.

P31 did not know to which agency this person belonged, he did not wear a batch or anything else to identify him. After P31 and the group left the café, some of P31's friends were stopped and asked for their personal data as well. Many buses were waiting outside the café on both sides of the street. P31 said he and his friends knew that the young men in the buses were Shabiha. The café is close to the parliament, around 30 meters down the road. However, P31 and the group were so scared due to all the buses and officers, that they decided to keep walking and not do the demonstration as planned. Some of the security forces asked people for their IDs and data, others were waiting in the buses. The group kept walking until they reached Az Zahra' Cinema, around 100 meters further down the road. They checked whether they could do their demonstration there but decided not to do so. P31 explained that they were not walking as one big group but in pairs or small groups of three people. Two of his friends were stopped at the corner of the street and taken to the entrance of a nearby building. P31 went in their direction. P31 said there were so many people dressed in civilian clothes, it was impossible to identify to which Branch they belonged, unless one was summoned by that Branch before and therefore knew some of the faces.

Klinge asked about the name of the movie director at who's funeral P31 took pictures and made a video. P31 said his name was [information redacted].

Klinge further wanted to know whether P31 saved video or picture files on his computer and with which device he took the pictures/videos. P31 said at the funeral he filmed with a Sony video camera, a so-called hand camera. He filmed the funeral procession carrying the coffin and people walking behind it. P31 said many people attended the funeral: artists, politicians, as well as security forces. He shot a video of the events and while he was filming, he recognized the person who beat him on an open street before. He therefore took a picture of this person. Later, when P31 was at home, he saved the picture file on his computer. He told the court that he was afraid and nervous in this moment because his mere presence at the funeral was problematic. In addition, he also filmed security forces, something that was not easy in Syria.

Klinge asked if P31 consequently took a screenshot of this particular person from the video file. P31 denied, explaining that he used his camera to zoom in on the person. He stopped the video and took a picture. P31 added that the camera allowed to shoot a video and take pictures at the same time.

Klinge wanted to know whether P31 zoomed in and took the picture at the funeral. P31 affirmed.

Klinge asked if Anwar Raslan was clearly visible. P31 affirmed.

Klinge further wanted to know whether P31 was standing aside or amongst the crowd. P31 said he was in the crowd, adding that the previous day - after his testimony in court - he tried to find the picture file somewhere in his emails. However, his computer was confiscated when he was arrested in 2011. However, he did not find the file. P31 further explained that back then in Syria, it was dangerous to save any files because at every arrest one was questioned about social media accounts and passwords for all devices and accounts. P31 said he did not get his computer back after he was released, adding that he would have preferred to find the file as it would have explained a lot.

Klinge said P31 just answered his next question and went on to ask P31 where in the hierarchy at Al-Khatib he would rank Anwar Raslan. P31 said he had the feeling that this person [Anwar Raslan] was higher-ranking. The office where he was interrogated when this person was present was not the usual interrogation room. It was obvious to P31 that the person had a higher rank than the interrogation officers and guards. P31 explained that this also became obvious to him when he saw the person outside the Branch; standing there surrounded by security officers, and from the way this person interacted with them.

Klinge wanted to know if P31 noticed any orders coming from this person [Anwar Raslan]. P31 said he already described different situations inside the Branch when Raslan was addressed as “sidi”. However, P31 was so afraid that he did not notice if Raslan gave any orders.

Klinge asked whether a higher-ranking person gave orders to the person P31 identified as Raslan. P31 explained that during the interrogation there was only an interrogator and one or two guards present. They all addressed Raslan as “sidi”.

Klinge wanted to clarify whether all three people at the interrogation had lower ranks than Raslan. P31 affirmed.

Klinge asked P31 if he would be a witness or victim of sexual violence at Al-Khatib Branch. P31 denied, adding that he saw how detainees were forced to undress, and witnessed threats that one would be sterilized by electroshocks.

Klinge recalled that P31’s detention in Al-Khatib Branch was at a relatively early point in time, asking if P31 witnessed people dying inside the Branch or saw corpses there. P31 denied.

Klinge last wanted to know if P31 suffered from any physical or mental consequences of his detentions. P31 denied.

Neither defense nor plaintiff counsels had any questions.

P31 was dismissed as a witness.

Presiding Judge Kerber was about to close the session when defense counsel Böcker requested to read out a request to take additional evidence. He explained that the request was just submitted to the court in writing. Kerber permitted Böcker to continue. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer mentioned that none of the parties to the case knew about Böcker’s request, nor did they get a copy beforehand. Böcker apologized, explaining that due to limited resources, the defense was not able to send a copy to all parties before the trial day, however, everyone should have received a relevant email by now.

[The following is recreation of the defense’s request, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court when the request was read out.]

Following P31’s testimony in court, the defense requests the court to take additional evidence in the form of five witness testimonies and the visual inspection of two diagrams.

- 1) The defense requests to hear two employees of the German Intelligence Agency (BND) as experts, and to visually inspect two diagrams that were attached as annexes to an agency-report that the two witnesses drafted.*

To be heard as experts:

- [name redacted]*
- [name redacted]*

To be visually inspected:

- Diagram dated June 16, 2016, visualizing the structure of the Syrian General Intelligence Service.*
- Additional annexes of the relevant report drafted by the BND.*

II) The defense requests the court to summon and hear three additional witnesses.

- [name redacted], currently based in Turkey
- [name redacted], currently based in Turkey
- Witness “Z080421” who wishes to remain anonymous

Reasoning:

I) [name redacted] who works at the department for self-protection measures at the BND drafted an agency-report detailing the structures of the Syrian Intelligence Services. This report was sent to [now] Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing at the BKA. [name redacted], was involved in drafting this report as a clerk.

The report details the structures of the Syrian Intelligence Services and assigned Division 40 as a sub-division of Branch 271. It also details that Division 40 was tasked to surveil demonstrations, hostile movements, and members of the movements who were opposing the regime. This mandate was also confirmed by several witnesses during the present trial: CCI Deußing testified on April 24, 2020 that Division 40 was a decentralized subdivision of the General Intelligence; Anwar Al-Bunni testified on June 4, 2020 that Division 40 was acting in Damascus only; P5 testified on July 2, 2020 how Division 40 went to demonstrations to surveil and quell them.

The defense deems it necessary to hear the abovementioned experts and read out the relevant annexes of the abovementioned report because P31 testified on April 7, 2021 how he allegedly met Anwar Raslan – employee of Branch 251 - at a demonstration in front of the Parliament in Damascus and later at a funeral. P31’s testimony in court also showed several inconsistencies in relation to his previous statements with the BKA dated [information redacted]. It is impossible that P31 saw Anwar Raslan at a demonstration, due to a lack of competency on Raslan’s side in this regard. The present request to take evidence is therefor of immense value as P31 could not have seen Raslan at the demonstration and later recognized him.

II) [name redacted] worked as a prison guard at Branch 251 from at least February 2011 until April 2011. He will be able to testify that Raslan – neither before nor after this time – was ever outside the Branch, nor present at any demonstrations. He can further testify that Raslan was serving indoor service solely and never participated in any state-led repressive activities or similar activities against demonstrators outside the Branch.

He can further testify that Raslan was serving indoor service solely and never participated in any state-led repressive activities or similar activities against demonstrators outside the Branch.*

The defense points out that P31 falsely identified Anwar Raslan and was unable to recognize his face. The interrogation situation that P31 described on April 7, 2021, is incompatible with Raslan’s character and his opinion towards the opposition.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the defense if “Z080421” would be present in Germany or abroad. Böcker explained this person would be present in the middle east, however, neither Turkey nor Syria. Böcker added that the judges can find further information about this in the emails that the defense just sent the court.

Proceedings adjourned at 10:15AM.

The next session will be on April 14, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 33

Hearing Dates: April 14 & 15, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Trial Day 69 – April 14, 2021

P32, a 28-year-old Syrian woman testified about a meeting she and her family had with Raslan while searching for P32's sisters who were detained in Al-Khatib Branch. P32 also testified about her own detention at the Branch, detailing torture and incidents of sexual violence she endured. She further spoke about another meeting she had with Raslan while she was detained, claiming he refused her request to be transferred out of solitary confinement so that she would not lose her mind.

Raslan's defense read out a statement from Raslan, providing his view on the meetings he had with P32. When asked by the Prosecutors, P32 reacted to Raslan's statement by saying she had to defend herself against a criminal's accusations and he was denying everything she told the Court.

The Judges read out a notice to the parties to inform them that previous plaintiff testimonies gave rise to the possibility of charging certain crimes that these plaintiffs were victims of as ordinary crimes under domestic German criminal law. The Judges will further request an expertise on Syrian law relating to the alleged crimes. The Prosecutors read their statement reacting to the defense's request to take additional evidence allegedly debunking Raslan's alleged involvement in activities outside of Branch 251. The Prosecutors said they do not support this request as the proposed witnesses would not be suitable to testify in this regard, nor would their testimonies provide new information. Another witness scheduled for one of the following sessions preferred not to testify in court due to concerns about his family's safety, despite protective measures proposed by the Court. One of the plaintiffs requested to no longer be a plaintiff in the trial.

The hearing began at 9:30 am with ten spectators and six members of the press in the audience. One accredited journalist requested access to the Arabic interpretation. P30 and a court illustrator were among the spectators. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Testimony of P32<sup>2</sup>

P32 was accompanied by her witness Counsel, Dr. Kroker, and informed about her rights and duties as a witness. P32 said that she was 28 years old, living in Switzerland and was not related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber started her questioning by recalling that P32 was previously interviewed by the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) and asked P32 to describe her arrest in Syria, the events leading to her arrest and how she got in conflict with the Syrian regime. P32 explained that her sister [sister 1] was detained on March 15, 2011. P32 said she wanted to mention this detail before describing her own experience. She continued by explaining that on May 25, 2012, the Al-Houla الحولة massacre was committed in Homs, causing the death of 50 children. P32 further recalled that May 25, 2012, was a Friday and on Sunday, May 27, 2012, a sit-in was organized as condemnation of the massacre. The sit-in coincided with the anniversary of the death of a child named [REDACTED]. P23 and others therefore participated in a sit-in in Al-Talyani الطلياني in Damascus. The protestors held banners and [REDACTED] picture. The slogans on the banners condemned the Al-Houla massacre. P32 was holding a sign saying "The children of Al-Houla are no terrorists" which was discrediting the regime's narrative that the revolution consisted only of terrorists and armed people.

P32 recalled that after only a few minutes, shots were fired. The protestors did not scream, they were simply standing, holding their banners. P32 said they later found out that the regime knew that the sit-in would take place, the shots that were fired were proof of that knowledge. When the first shots were fired, the protestors ran away. P32 said she went to Al-Rawda الروضة, a district close to Al-Talyani. There were only a few people. Two security officers on a motorcycle stopped her and asked what she was doing there. P32 told them that she was at the market (the area was known to be a shopping area). The officers then asked P32 for her ID and when they read her name, they said "Ah! You are [sister 1's] sister" and menacingly added: "you came to us with your own legs." P32 told the Court she was wearing glasses that day. When one of the officers slapped her face, her glasses broke, and her nose started bleeding. P23 further described [using her hands] that there was a street and to her right was a real-estate office. The two security officers forcefully evacuated the real-estate employees, pulled P32 inside and forced her to sit on a chair. P32 said one of the security officers called a van to pick her up, the other one pointed a rifle at her, holding it close to her face. P32 sat on the chair when one of the officers who was standing told her "I swear to god, if it was up to me to decide your faith, I would [he made a noise like pulling a trigger, indicating he would kill her]".

P32 further explained that her mother was at the sit-in as well. However, not to demonstrate but because she was worried about P32. Before P32 was approached by the two security officers, she tried to call her mother but could not reach her. P32 recalled that once the security van came, she saw her mother inside, when she was pulled in as well. Her mother's hands were behind her back and she was looking down. The bus was full of male and female detainees and the seat next to her mother was free. For a short moment, P32 thought her case might be bigger and she did not want the officers to know that this was her mother, so she would not get involved. However, P32 approached her mother, asking if she could sit next to her. They looked at each other and cried. P32 said the van drove for a few minutes to Al-Jisir Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض. It was known that there was Hafez Makhoul's branch [Division 40]. P32 recalled that when they arrived at the division and got off the van, they had to go upstairs.

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P23 was very emotional during the entire testimony. She also sometimes corrected the interpreter by making him aware that he did not translate the end of her sentence.

There was a member of the security forces standing on every other step. These members of the security forces were young. They were heavily beating the people [detainees] passing by, until the detainees reached a small corridor at the end of the staircase. P32 said after this procedure, all detainees had to face the wall and cover their eyes with their hands, so they could not see what was going on around them.

P32 said this was when the Division's IT officer approached her, holding many papers and documents. He told her all the papers would be for P32, as if he wanted to tell her that she was wanted and now came to the Division by herself. He pulled sheets of paper, reading out one of P32's Facebook posts in which she said that all pro-regime people would be slaves. The IT officer shouted at her "Are we slaves, you bitch?". P32 apologized for using this word in a courtroom, adding that she assumes everyone in the courtroom would know that this was one of the less bad words used at the intelligence branches. P32 went on to explain, that men and women were separated. The girls were taken to a room where they had to stay for 10 hours. P32 described how she asked to use the toilet before her interrogation. She then saw a man who she thought was a policeman and asked him for a phone. She said she was in hysterics because she urgently wanted to talk to her father or sister. When the policeman asked P32 what she would give him in return, she told him she would give him 'whatever he wanted.' He allowed her to make a call and P32 returned to the room from where she came.<sup>3</sup>

P32 said she was interrogated by the "hacker" [IT-person, see context above]. She entered his office where he was waiting with another person. He then requested access to her Facebook account through her email address and password. The person also told P32 that she tried to bribe a police officer, which would be a serious crime leading to imprisonment. P32 explained to the Court that because she was participating in demonstrations, she had contact with a person living abroad who specialized in IT and knew whenever she wanted to demonstrate. P32 said the procedure was that whenever the intelligence services arrested a person, this person would immediately switch off his/her phone. This was a signal to others [like P32's friend living abroad] to inform them that this person had been arrested so the friends could delete the person's Facebook account. P32 described that she therefore told the IT person at the Branch her email address and the password for her Facebook account. He was unable to access her Facebook account, however, he could still open her regular email account.

P32 recalled that in one of the folders there was an email she had sent to Al-Muhajreen المهاجرين coordination committee. The coordination committee was responsible for organizing demonstrations. P32 wrote to the committee about a person who was an assistant lecturer at the faculty of [REDACTED] at her university. His name was [REDACTED]. P32 attached his photo in the email. In the email, P32 informed the committee that this person participated in demonstrations to turn people over to the security forces. According to P32, she further detailed that this person pretended to be a demonstrator and that there would be many victims because he pretended to be one of the demonstrators. P32 told the committee "if you see this person, then stop the demonstration". P32 told the court that the interrogator considered this email as an incitement against security forces. However, according to P32 everyone knows that since the beginning of the revolution there had been neither weapons nor the Free Syrian Army [FSA] in Damascus until this very day [meaning that the alleged incitement was obviously ineffective and could not have been considered incitement at all]. P32 returned to the other detainees afterwards. P32 told the Court that a lot of things happened during the interrogation, but she could not remember most of them. She explained that interrogations were over at around 12:00AM and all detainees who participated in the sit-in were taken. The nine women were separated from the men (P32 did not remember how many men were there).

They were all taken in a van and driven to Al-Khatib. When they arrived, they had to go downstairs. P32 said she does not know how to describe the Branch, however, one could say it was like an animals' barn at most.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P32 whether she was blindfolded or able to see what happened around her. P32 remembered she was able to see. P32 described the smell of blood, urine, and toilets when she entered the Branch, adding that there was no ventilation. P32 further described how the detainees had to go downstairs and turn right to the place where the Branch's doctor was. There were two female nurses from the Red Crescent as well. They frisked one detainee after the other until it was P32's turn. P32 said all female detainees had to gather at the doctor's office and the female nurses came to take one at a time to frisk them. P32 remembered the frisking felt very humiliating because she had to strip naked, and her sensitive areas were frisked in a way that was close to being a violation [sexual assault]. After being frisked, the detainees had to leave this room and go to the left.

Judge Kerber wanted to know if the doctor or the female nurse did the frisking. P32 said the two nurses searched every detainee. She added that the female detainees were afterwards put in a collective cell. P32 said that they were nine detainees (who just arrived) and a total of seventeen detainees in the female collective cell. P32 said the cell had walls, a floor, blankets, and it was full of insects, particularly lice that were nesting in the blankets. The place was too small, so they split in three groups to allow every group to sleep for seven hours. [Judge Kerber told P32 that she can drink water at any time if needed. P32 thanked Kerber and continued] P32 recalled that there were not only political prisoners in the collective cell, but detainees with all kinds of backgrounds: including girls who were there because of prostitution charges. The atmosphere was not comfortable enough for them to talk to each other, because someone from the regime could have been among them.

P32 told the Court that everything she just described was one thing, but the fact that she was there with her mother was another thing. P32 said she was constantly worried about her mother. P32 told her mother she would confess anything to keep her out of trouble. However, P32's mother told her that staying there and being able to see P32 right in front of her was better than being outside and not knowing anything about P32 [P32 got emotional]. P32 said it was her birthday night when one of the prison guards brought a plate of olives that were picked right off the tree [particularly bitter]. Her fellow detainees sang her Happy Birthday and P32 got very emotional. P32 explained that all detainees in the collective cell who were arrested at the sit-in had been interrogated on the first day after their arrival, except for P32 who had not been interrogated after six days. P32 therefore asked the prison guard when she would be interrogated. He told her that her interrogator was an important person and would come the following day.

P32 was indeed interrogated the following day. Her interrogator was different from the one who interrogated the other detainees. P32 explained that her hands were tied behind her back with a plastic strip. She was not blindfolded (P32 was not entirely sure about this aspect). P32 said she was interrogated by a person who was not Anwar [Raslan]. The person who interrogated her started mentioning Shadi Al-Jalabi شادي الجلابي. P32 told the Court that this would be the reason why she mentioned her sister's arrest as well and went on to explain that her sister was arrested at a demonstration by a person called Shadi. P32 added that the demonstration at which her sister was arrested became very well-known at the beginning of the revolution, so did her sister. There would even exist a video of this demonstration that is still online. One could see Shadi appeared in the video. It was therefore known that this person detained [sister 1]. The Free Syrian Army in Darayya داريا [western Ghouta] declared that they "killed Shadi for [sister 1's] sake". P32 explained that [sister 1] was abroad and P32's family had no contact with the Free Syrian Army at all, but [sister 1's] name became a symbol of the first demonstration. According to P32, her family did not know about these activities by the "group that calls itself Free Syrian Army".

Nonetheless, the security forces decided to detain P32 and accuse her of inciting the killing of their comrade Shadi. P32 said that apparently, Shadi was important to the other security officers and they were looking for a scapegoat, a role that P32 had to fill. P32 further described how the interrogator told her that inciting the killing of his colleague would lead to at least ten years imprisonment, and how he used some very bad terms that would be known to everyone in the courtroom.

Kerber asked if the interrogator threatened P32. P32 affirmed, explaining that there were five sheets of paper she had to sign. She was told that if she does not sign them, she would be tortured, and they would “hunt her down” for Shadi’s death.

Kerber recalled P32 previously telling the police that she was threatened to be tortured in the Basement. P32 confirmed, adding that - as she just said- he threatened her with torture.

Kerber asked P32 whether she was threatened with rape as well. P32 denied, saying “there was only verbal rape.”

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking whether it would be correct that P32 was threatened to be detained for a long time. P32 confirmed, saying this was “100% correct”. She went on to describe how she was taken downstairs to the basement and tortured with Shabh [hanging]. Someone had tea or some other hot drink with the person who tortured her and threw it at her. P32 said she still has the scar on her stomach. P32 further explained that while she was hanged from her wrists, she was beaten. She then had to lie on some kind of wooden plank. She was tied to the plank and beaten on her feet. P32 said she remembers previously telling the police that she was tortured with electricity, however, she could not remember it in the very moment in court. P32 added that she also forgot if she was taken upstairs to the interrogator or back to the collective cell once the torture ended. P32 said that when she went back to the collective cell, she showed many signs of beating. She stayed there for six days before the prison guard called for her mother. P32 said it felt strange because she was happy her mother would be released but felt sad at the same time.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking how exactly P32 was hanged: e.g. on a wall, from the ceiling or door. P32 said she had to hang from the ceiling.

Kerber asked how P32 was hanged: e.g. using hooks. P32 did not remember, saying the image was distorted.

Kerber recalled P32 mentioning that she did not remember the electricity situation and asked P32 to describe the situation with the wooden plank. P32 said the plank was curved at one end. Her legs were tied to this high end of the plank.

Kerber asked if it was correct that P32 was beaten in this position. P32 affirmed, explain she was beaten on her feet.

Kerber wanted to know if this instance happened before or after the sexual assault. P32 said it happened before.

Kerber asked if P32 was beaten while she was hanged. P32 affirmed, explaining that she was hit on her stomach and hot liquid was splashed at her.

Kerber wanted to know if P32 “was touched” in this situation. P32 denied, saying there were ‘only’ many insults and humiliation.

Kerber asked whether P32 remembered the prison guard’s name. P32 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know the name. P32 said the guards did not have real names, but nicknames like Abu Ghadab أبو غضب, Abu Aita أبو عيطة and Abu Shamleh. There were more guards according to P32, but she only remembered those names.

Kerber asked which guards were present when P32 was tortured. P32 said Abu Ghadab was the only one.

Kerber wanted to know if Abu Ghadab was the one who “touched” her during the sexual assault. P32 denied.

Kerber asked who it was. P32 explained that this [sexual assault] happened with another guard, Abu Shamleh. It did not happen while she was tortured.

Kerber wanted to know what happened after P32’s mother was called. P32 said a few minutes after her mother was called, she was called as well and taken out of the collective cell. [P32 used her hands to describe where she had to go] P32 had to leave the collective cell, got to the right and then left to where the solitary cells were. She was taken inside one of the solitary cells. P32 recalled that when the guard took her to the cell, she did not want to be alone [P32 got emotional]. She broke down and did not know what to do, so she asked to go to the toilet. On her way to the toilet, P32 thought the women in the collective cell should know that she had not been released, so they could inform others about her whereabouts if one of them was released. P32 described how she decided to do a little charade on her way to the toilet [P32 again used her hands to describe the spatial situation]. Her idea was the following: On the way from P32’s solitary cell to the toilet, she had to walk by the women’s collective cell. When she was in front of the collective cell, P32 pretended to lose consciousness and fell on the floor. The prison guards started laughing at her and said, “Leave her to stand up alone”, prodding her. P32 then said in a very high voice, “For God’s sake! Don’t put me in the solitary cell”, to let the women in the collective cell know that she was in the solitary cell. P32 told the Court that she executed this idea and then went to the toilet and back to her solitary cell.

P32 requested a break. Presiding Judge Kerber asked if P32 she preferred 15 or 30 minutes. P32 said that she prefers 30 minutes.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P32 to describe what happened after she was taken back to the solitary cell. P32 explained it was summer – July 2012 – and very hot inside her cell. The time she had to spend alone in the solitary cell was very difficult, if not to say the most difficult time of her life. P32 said she still suffered from the psychological consequences of this detention. P32 went on to explain that one never knew whether it was day or night, and one could not breathe because there was no ventilation. There was a yellow light, P32 assumed it was put there to torture people, as it was never switched off. The size of the solitary cell was 175 x 75cm. The only item inside the cell was a brown blanket full of lice. Detainees were allowed to use the toilet every 12 hours, after they got food. P32 said for dinner they were served olives and “what they [personnel at the Branch] considered to be Halawa” (it was sesame and sugar). Because P32 had difficulties telling what time it was, she used to hide an olive pit to know that one day has passed. P32 further explained the Court that while she was in this solitary cell, she made the most difficult experience in Al-Khatib Branch: A prison guard, Abu Shamleh, opened the small hatch at the cell’s door to watch her. P32 said this is how it started.

He then told her to take off her jacket, asking her “don’t you feel hot?”.<sup>4</sup> P32 said that she was young, 20 years old, and there was no escape but the corner of her cell. One time, Abu Shamleh told her to show him her breast. Then one time (P32 did not know whether it was day or night) he opened the door and entered the cell. P32 said he opened her zipper [of her jacket], touched her breast, undressed, took his genitals out and put his hand on her mouth. P32 said it happened within a second, she did not know what was going on, and unable to keep him away. [P32 got emotional] Abu Shamleh was in control: one hand on P32’s breast and the other one on her mouth. P32 explained she could not do anything. She bit him and started to scream, so he got scared and went out. P32 concluded that this was what she had to endure.

In addition, one heard people groaning, screaming “please, Sidi [sir]”, and sounds of beating and whipping 24 hours a day. P32 described that during her time in the solitary cell, she had a mental breakdown, searching for ways to end her life. She added that there were lines carved in her cell’s wall [by former detainees] indicating the number of days and the fact that they were actually uncountable. P32 explained that this was also the time when she asked to see the interrogator Anwar Raslan, because she knew his name and face from the meeting they had during her sister’s detention. P32 said she only had one request: to go back to the collective cell, so she would not lose her mind. Because Raslan was the only person she knew [at the Branch], she asked the prison guards to take her to see him. P32 was urging the guards for 3 to 4 days, when a guard opened the door and took her to Anwar [Raslan].

P32 described the Court that she had to go upstairs and entered Raslan’s office. She was blindfolded. P32 added she remembered these moments and would be certain about what happened. According to P32, the blindfold covered 80% of her eyes. However, the people around her were not aware that she was able to see some things. P32 further recalled going upstairs to a small corridor with three or four offices. One was the office of colonel Anwar [Raslan]. “It” [P32 being able to see some things] was good because she now could be sure that she was taken to Anwar [Raslan]. The prison guard got P32 in and she read on the sign “Colonel Anwar Raslan” [she did not explain if the sign was on the door or on the desk]. Raslan addressed her as “عمو” [addressing her like she was his niece], and asked her why she participated in demonstrations rather than focusing on her studies. P32 said Raslan was not harsh and did not insult her. P32 went on to describe that she broke down crying, telling him to transfer her back to the collective cell because she could not stay alone. According to P32, the request to be taken back to the collective cell was like heaven for her at the time, adding that this was all she asked for and she knew he would not have lost anything by granting her request.

[P32 got emotional, and Presiding Judge Kerber announced a 2-minute-break for P32 to drink some water]

Kerber asked P32 if she preferred a longer break. P32 said she was fine to continue.

Kerber recalled P32 mentioning that she was able to see through her blindfold, asking P32 if she was able to see the face of the interrogator. P32 affirmed, saying the interrogator was Anwar [Raslan]. According to P32 she asked him many things...

Defense Counsel Böcker interrupted, recalling that P32 said she saw the face of the interrogator Anwar [Raslan] when being asked whether she saw the face of the interrogator. Böcker added it was unclear to him when exactly P32 saw his face.

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P32 got very emotional at this point. It did not become clear if the guard took off her jacket, made her do it by watching and talking to her, or if she took it off at all.

Kerber rephrased her previous question. P32 said that she did not understand.

Kerber recalled P32 asking the interrogator to be taken back to the collective cell when she saw a name plate with Raslan's name on it. Kerber wanted to know if P32 saw the interrogator's face in the same situation. P32 confirmed, adding this was 100% correct.

Kerber went on to ask P32 who the interrogator was. P32 said it was Anwar Raslan, she begged him to let her go back in the collective cell with the other females. According to P32, Raslan then told her: "Ok, alright عمو [see context above]. I told the prison guard to take you to the women's collective cell". P32 said this was when Raslan called a prison guard (P32 forgot his name) told him to take P32 to the collective cell instead of the solitary cell. P32 explained that she saw Raslan raising his eyebrows [usually meaning "no"] as if to give the guard a sign to do something else than what he just said. And indeed, the prison guard took P32 back to the solitary cell. P32 broke down, suffered bleeding in her stomach and her nose bled profusely. P32 said she did not know whether it was an attack of sadness. After all, she had still a soul fighting to get out of this place. P32 therefore "did a trick": she collected the blood coming from her nose and put it on her clothes and the walls until the entire place was covered with her blood. She then called a guard, telling him she did not know what happened when he asked her about all the blood in her cell. P32 explained to the Court that she was too broken at that time, so she could not remember whether this happened immediately after the situation with Raslan. However, P32 said she knew that she stayed in the solitary cell for days after her meeting with Anwar [Raslan]. One morning (P32 remembered she had had dinner and then slept) the guard opened her cell and told her to come with him. P32 went out of her solitary cell to the corridor. There was a collective cell, so P32 assumed she would be taken there, however, the guard opened the door of a second solitary cell. P32 was wondering why they wanted to transfer her to another solitary cell. When the guard opened the cell's door, P32 was surprised to see her mother was not released but was there in the solitary cell. [P32 got emotional] P32 recalled that her mother was sick, tired, her lips were pale, and insects eroded her body.

P32 requested a short break to recover. Presiding Judge Kerber announced a 15-minutes break.

***

Judge Kerber continued her questioning by asking P32 what happened after she was taken to her mother's cell. P32 said she entered the cell, adding she was not sure why Anwar [Raslan] or other interrogators did this. According to P32, they probably saw she was going to die and decided to transfer her to her mother. However, it would obviously be systematic torture to put P32 in one solitary cell and her mother in another one. P32 described she went inside her mother's cell and they sat together. P32 explained that the cell was actually not big enough for one person, not to say two people. P32 went on to describe that she later learned how her charade of falling on the floor in the hallway let her mother know that P32 was still there and alive. There was a small gap under her mother's cell door through which her mother saw how P32 fell. P32 further said that her mother told her how she always looked out for P32's shoes through the gap under her door, so she saw whenever P32 was going to the toilet. [P32 got emotional]

Days passed by without P32 or her mother being interrogated. They were just eating, going to toilet every 12 hours, and getting weaker as the insects eroded their bodies. The place was so small that P32 had to sleep on her side hugging her mother, otherwise P32 could not sleep. After a while (23 days in Al-Khatib in total) her mother's name was called, and she was released.

P32's name was called thirty minutes after that and a van took her to another branch, the Military Branch 285 in Kafar Souseh كفرسوسة. P32 said she had to stay at this Branch and in Al-Khatib for a total of around one and a half months. At the Military Branch, P32 was interrogated once, and her file was referred to the military judiciary, not to the Palace of Justice. P32 was detained for the following reasons: incitement to kill; possession of records and documents; major treason; participation in demonstrations; supporting the Free Syrian Army; and other "non authentic" [made up] charges. P32 was transferred to Adra prison where she was imprisoned for around 1.5 months before she was released on parole on [REDACTED], 2012.

Judge Kerber wanted to know which Branch, 251 or 285, was worse. P32 said Al-Khatib was definitely worse, adding that there would be no comparison.

Kerber asked if P32 was mistreated during the interrogation in Branch 285. P32 denied.

Kerber wanted to know if P32 still suffered from medical consequences of her detention. According to P32 some scars and injuries remained but not long-term. She only had an abdominal scar as previously mentioned, and a slipped disc.

Kerber asked P32 about the cause of the scar. P32 said it was caused by the hot water in the basement [see context re: interrogation in the basement above].

Kerber asked P32 to provide more details about the hot water she mentioned when drawing a sketch during her police questioning. P32 explained that her memory about the torture room was distorted, because she decided to abandon her memories. However, in the police questioning, she tried to remember some things.

Kerber recalled P32 drawing a sketch during her police questioning on [REDACTED] and asked P32 if she remembered. P32 confirmed.

[The following is a recreation of a sketch shown in court, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to see and hear in court.]

Kerber wanted to know who wrote the German words on the sketch. P32 said it was her.

Kerber wanted to know if P32 remembered sitting on an electric chair. P32 explained she would be in a psychological state that is preventing her from remembering everything.

Kerber asked P32 if she preferred to continue in the afternoon. P32 explained that before the trial, she tried to retrieve memories. However, she “decided to stay away from the Middle East” when she started over in Switzerland. P32 added that she consulted a psychosocial specialist to accept what had happened to her and move on. She still clearly remembered some stories like the attempted rape by a prison guard and the bodily harm she suffered. According to P32, these memories haunted her for too long and even affected her relationship with her daughter. Therefore, P32 decided to close this chapter.

Kerber explained she “unfortunately” had more questions regarding the room where P32 was tortured. Kerber added she would refresh P32’s recollection by quoting the transcript of P32’s police questioning. For each quote, P32 should tell the Court if she 1) remembered that this happened to her 2) remembered that she said that in the police questioning. Kerber started quoting from the transcript:

“P32 was tortured with a bed-like object to which she was tied.” P32 said she remembered that, however, would not be sure.

“There were tools to hang people, sometimes from their hands, sometimes from their feet. P32 heard that from other detainees.” P32 said she remembered saying this during the police questioning, adding that she was not familiar with other witnesses’ testimonies.

“P32 drew a sketch. She was asked what happened to her. She replied that Abu Ghadab hit her with his hand”. P32 said she remembered but was not sure.

“P32 sat on the chair”. P32 confirmed.

“P32’s feet were tied, and she was tortured with electricity”. P32 said she remembered saying that, but now forgot what happened.

“Keyword: amperage”. P32 said she did not remember, because she was in a [bad] psychological state. P32 said that she was in a state [during the torture], in which she was feeling pains.

Kerber said that it is alright and asked P32 if she could remember the following: “the amperage was increased whenever P32 did not mention a name. It [amperage] was intense”. P32 said that she remembers saying that in the [police] questioning.

“P32 was laid down on the floor”. P32 said she remembered saying that.

“P32 was beaten on her feet seven or ten times”. P32 said she remembered saying that.

“P32 was not able to stand up”. P32 said that she forgot that.

“P32 was not able to walk on her feet”. P32 said she was not sure [if this happened].

“Abu Ghadab sexually abused P32 and took off her clothes”. P32 said she forgot; maybe it did happen, maybe it did not. She added that she might have imagined it happened because she was terrified.

“He [Abu Ghadab] undressed P32 and touched her breast”. P32 said she remembered saying that. Regarding her breast, she was referring to the incident in the solitary cell.

Kerber asked whether P32 remembered if that [Abu Ghadab/a prison guard touching her breast] happened once or twice. P32 explained she only remembered that she was beaten and touched by someone in the torture room, in addition to the pain she felt. However, she did not know if the touching was intended as sexual abuse.

“P32 was traumatized by the abuse, broke down, and fell unconscious. Abu Ghadab then took her back to the interrogator”. P32 recalled she previously told the Court that she did not know whether she was taken back to the cell or to the interrogator. Regarding the sexual abuse, P32 explained that it affected her psychologically and her marriage for years. But the prison guard was Abu Shamleh [not Abu Ghadab as provided in the transcript].

Kerber wanted to know if P32 remembered being taken back to the interrogator’s office after she lost consciousness. P32 explained she was half conscious; therefore, she could not remember the circumstances of when she woke up.

“P32 sat on the same chair during the interrogation. Because of the beating and the sexual abuse, she was unfocused. P32 did not mention any names [during the interrogation] and was taken back to the women [collective] cell”. P32 said she remembered that this happened.

“P32 had her clothes on”. P32 said she remembered.

Kerber asked P32 whether she preferred to continue for another thirty minutes or have a longer break. P32 said that she preferred to have a break.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner wanted to know if it was correct to say that P32’s sister was politically active. P32 confirmed, adding that her family was known to the security authorities. In the beginning of the revolution – before March 15, 2011, there was no revolution yet – people were following the news of the revolutions starting in Tunisia, Egypt and Libya. At that time, the Syrian people had very little hope to start a revolution – as people know the Syrian regime is a dictatorship and people did not dare to go to the streets – nevertheless, people had hope to [at least] go out to the streets. P32 said she had no idea when on March 15, 2011, all of a sudden a demonstration was secretly organized, and her sister was one of the organizers. P32 described that the demonstration was very small, and her sister went to Al-Hariqa الحريقة in Damascus together with other people. P32’s sister was wrapped in a big Syrian flag, cheering along with others “Long live free Syria” After a few moments, security forces attacked P32’s sister and other protestors.

Wiedner asked P32 if her sister was active on the internet. P32 affirmed, adding that the demonstration she just described was the only demonstration that her sister participated in, and she was detained on this occasion. P32 went on to explain that her other sister [sister 2] was arrested at her workplace as well and detained in Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked P32 if she was politically active as well. P32 said that in March 2011 she was not active. After the detention of her sisters by the security forces at the beginning of the revolution and until her own detention, P32 did participate in demonstrations to document them.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32 was at the demonstration on March 15 [2011]. P32 denied.

Wiedner asked P32 which of her family members were detained. P32 said herself, her sisters [sister 1] and [sister 2] and her mother were detained.

Wiedner wanted to know if they were all arrested on March 15 [2011]. P32 explained that on March 15, 2011 only her sisters were arrested. However, in total all four of them were detained.

Wiedner asked other family members in addition to P32's sisters were arrested. P32 denied, adding that only her sisters [sister 1] and [sister 2] were arrested.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened to P32's sisters after they were arrested. P32 explained that [sister 2] was released three days after her arrest. [sister 1] was not released. P32 added that her family never knew what would happen to P32's sisters. No one knew what would happen to someone who entered a Syrian prison.

Wiedner asked how P32's family knew that her sister was in Al-Khatib. P32 said that they knew "according to initial information" that such practices were under the responsibility of Al-Khatib. They knew that this was the course of the events, but they were not sure.

Wiedner wanted to know if the family tried to help P32's sister. P32 said the family tried to contact people from the government by all means, to get information about her sister's whereabouts. P32 added that Rama was released after 3 days, so they knew that it [her other sister's place of detention] was Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked if the family paid money to facilitate the release of P32's sister. P32 denied.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened to P32's sister. P32 said the family was allowed to visit [sister 1] in the office of the interrogator Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner asked P32 about her experience [of this meeting] and asked P32 how the family got permission to visit Al-Khatib Branch. P32 said that she had no idea how they reached that point, but they were eventually able to go to Al-Khatib and meet her sister.

Wiedner wanted to know who went to this meeting. P32 said it was her, her mother, and her father. P32 did not remember whether [sister 1] went as well.

Wiedner asked P32 what she remembered from the visit. P32 said she remembered how they entered the Branch, there were of course many checkpoints on the way. At the entrance, there was a staircase leading to the basement where the cells were. Another staircase led to the offices. P32 said they entered the office of the interrogator Anwar [Raslan] who let a prison guard take [sister 1] to the office as well. She was wearing a Hijab that was full of blood. Her face was blue and full of bruises from the beating. P32's father was anxious and asked Anwar [Raslan] that he be allowed to take [sister 1] home. However, Anwar [Raslan] told them they would keep her a few days in order to "educate her." And indeed, the family was able to see [sister 1], but she had to stay at the Branch when they left. P32 recalled Raslan also told the family that he would keep [sister 1] for a few days and then send her home.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32 knew how her sister got the bruises and injuries. P32 assumed it was due to "the beating that happened downstairs."

Wiedner recalled P32 mentioning during her police questioning that something happened at the meeting and asked P32 if she remembered. P32 said she forgot. She apologized, saying she knew that she said something during the police questioning, however, forgot what she said as her mind was distorted. She only remembered that the family saw [sister 1] and then left.

Wiedner recalled P32 telling the police that it was Anwar Raslan's office, and asked P32 how she knew that. P32 referred to what she already told the Court when talking about her detention: there was a name plate. P32 added the person also introduced himself as Colonel Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner asked if this was at the first meeting after March 15, 2011. P32 said Raslan introduced himself, furthermore, she saw the sign.

Wiedner asked P32 if she was able to recognize Raslan in the courtroom. P32 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whom she identified as Raslan [in the courtroom]. P32 said he was sitting to her right side [defendant's bench].

Wiedner asked if this was the same person whom she saw during her detention. P32 affirmed.

Wiedner asked how Raslan reacted when he was asked to release P32's sister. P32 said he denied the request, saying he would keep her [at the Branch] "to educate her."

Wiedner quoted the transcript of P32's police questioning during which she said "We begged him [Raslan] to release her [P32's sister]. He said 'not now, later.' He did not ask for something". Wiedner asked P32 if she remembered. P32 affirmed, saying she would not contradict what she just said.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P32 knew if her parents paid money in her sister's case. P32 said if Wiedner meant whether they paid money to get her released, then the answer would be no.

Wiedner said he meant whether they paid money to go and see her sister. P32 said they did not have to go [to the Branch], because she was released after 3 days.

Wiedner recalled that regarding 'money' P32 told the police that "parents paid money in order to see her sister, but P32 did not know whom they paid." Wiedner asked if P32 remembered. P32 said of course she remembered. She added that their family was in contact with someone, because people in Syria know that the regime works that way [using contacts and bribery to facilitate things].

Wiedner asked P32 to describe the office where she saw Raslan at the meeting. P32 explained that the room was square, and the office was situated to the right of the entrance. There was a place for the table and the chair. That is what remained in P32's memory.

Wiedner wanted to know if the office was big. P32 denied, adding it was "normal".

Wiedner wanted to know more about the furniture. P32 said that it was neither simple nor luxurious, concluding that it was a normal office with neat furniture.

[The following is a recreation of a sketch shown in court, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to see and hear in court.]

Wiedner asked whether one had to go upstairs or downstairs to get to this room. P32 said they [P32 and her family, see context above] went upstairs.

Wiedner wanted to know who wrote the German words [there were German words in the sketch, detailing what was there]. P32 said it was her.

Wiedner asked P32 to explain her sketch. P32 said that the entrance was to the right and everything else was like she drew in the sketch.

Wiedner wanted to know if the object in the corner would be a display case. P32 said the object might have been behind him [Raslan].

Wiedner recalled P32 telling the police that “the office was maybe in the 3rd or 4th floor. It was luxurious. There was a sign with his name on it, written in a special Arabic font”. Wiedner wanted to know if P32 remembered. P32 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about ‘a picture’. P32 said that there was a picture of Bashar Al-Assad.

Wiedner asked if there was another picture. P32 did not remember if there was a picture of Hafez Al-Assad as well, because there would be pictures of Bashar and Hafez in every Branch.

Wiedner confirmed that P32 provided the BKA a similar description by quoting the transcript of the questioning.

Wiedner again quoted the transcript of P32’s police questioning during which P32 said “the office was 40 m<sup>2</sup> and there was a computer on the nightstand”. Wiedner asked if P32 remembered. P32 affirmed, adding she would not remember details. She explained to the Judges that both times [when she was in Raslan’s office] she was not in a state to concentrate, because [one time] her sister was detained and beaten and [the other time] P32 was detained. She therefore did not pay attention to details.

Wiedner said it would be alright, P32 only had to mention what she remembered.

Wiedner wanted to know what Raslan wore; a uniform or something else. P32 recalled he wore a uniform; however, it was not a military uniform but a normal suit with a tie.

Wiedner further wanted to know if Raslan wore the same outfit when P32 saw him during her detention. P32 affirmed, saying of course it was the same.

Wiedner asked if both meetings happened at the same office. P32 affirmed, explaining that the fact she went to the same office, helped her identify him when she met him the second time, because she had already seen him before.

Wiedner wanted to know how long the first meeting [P32 and her parents visiting the Branch] lasted. P32 said that it was only a few minutes.

Wiedner asked how P32 felt about Raslan, whether he was helpful and how she reacted to him. P32 said he would be “an apathetic human being without any feelings”.

Wiedner wanted to know why P32’s sister was released. P32 said she had no idea, maybe things were still at a preliminary stage, and they wanted to get rid of her to not cause a revolution. P32 added that “for the record,” her sister was detained a second time.

Wiedner asked when the second detention was. P32 did not remember precisely, saying it might have been at the end of 2011. Her sister was then smuggled abroad. P32 detailed that her sister was detained for seven days before she was released on an agreement with an officer who gave her a cell phone so she could turn people in, working undercover for the regime.

Wiedner asked if P32’s sister told her that her first detention was in Al-Khatib. P32 said her sister told her that she was detained with [REDACTED] and they were detained in the same women’s cell where P32 was detained as well [later].

Wiedner wanted to know if P32’s sister told her if she was abused or what happened to her. P32 explained that her sister said she was beaten and interrogated to get the name of those responsible for the demonstration [on March 15, 2011].

Wiedner asked if P32’s sister mentioned Raslan’s name as well. P32 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly P32’s sister told P32 about Raslan. P32 explained that she spoke with her sister about Raslan, because they shared similar experiences with Raslan. However, her sister was beaten by prison guards and P32 was not sure whether she was also beaten by Raslan.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32 told the police that her sister was beaten by prison guards and not by Raslan. P32 did not remember.

Wiedner again quoted the transcript of P32’s police questioning: when P32 was asked about what Raslan did to her sister, P32 said he interrogated her sister and hit her on the head. Her sister told the family when she was released, but she was not beaten by him”. P32 confirmed that this was what she told the police. P32 added that her sister was certainly interrogated by Anwar [Raslan], but P32 did not know if her sister was beaten during that interrogation. P32 concluded that this [beating by Raslan during an interrogation] did not happen to her.

Wiedner recalled that when P32 was arrested at a demonstration in May 2011, shots were fired. P32 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if people were injured or killed. P32 did not know.

Wiedner asked how P32 knew that she was transferred to Al-Khatib from Division 40. P32 referred to a previous answer to a question in court: Syrians knew that people who were arrested would be transferred to Al-Khatib in 90% of the cases, especially when arrested in areas like Al-Jisr Al-Abyad. P32 explained she was also able to identify the place because she went there previously when she visited her sister. P32 did not remember whether she was blindfolded on the bus ride from Division 40 to Al-Khatib, however, she recalled the image when the detainees entered the Branch.

Wiedner again quoted the transcript of P32's police questioning, saying that "P32 knew that it was Al-Khatib from visiting her sister, although she was blindfolded on the way to it". P32 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if P32 was beaten when she was taken up or downstairs. P32 said did not remember, adding she would only remember being beaten when she entered Division 40.

Wiedner recalled that P32 told the police she was not beaten and asked P32 if she said that. P32 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether P32 remembered in that very moment in court if she was not beaten. P32 recalled previously saying [in her police questioning] that she and other detainees were not beaten in the second branch.

Wiedner asked if P32 was beaten when she arrived at Al-Khatib. P32 said she did not remember.

Wiedner reassured P32 that it would be alright if she did not know. P32 said ok.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32 remembered how other detainees looked like when they returned from interrogations and whether she spoke with them. P32 said she forgot how the women looked like when they used to return from interrogations. P32 said she was focused on herself and avoided talking to others as she had absolutely no trust. Even when talking to her mother, P32 would whisper.

Wiedner asked whether it was possible for someone in the basement to hear what happened to other detainees. P32 said one could hear that "all the time."

Wiedner wanted to know if the noise and voices could be perceived to come from the same floor. P32 said 100%. The sounds were very close, coming from the corridors or sometimes at the door when a prisoner would bang his head against a cell door.

Wiedner asked whether P32 meant male or female voices. P32 said male.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32 saw corpses. P32 said that she saw "bodies" [أجساد], explaining that on her way to the toilet, she used to see men sitting on their knees facing the wall.

Wiedner asked if they showed signs of abuse or injuries. P32 said she saw injured and whipped people. Their backs were full of blood as a result of beating with certain objects.

Wiedner recalled P32 telling the police that she once saw someone on the floor whose feet were tied, and his back was full of blood. P32 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled the situation when P32 requested to meet him and asked to be relocated to the women's collective cell. Wiedner wanted to know if P32's nose bled before or after the meeting. P32 said it was after her meeting with Anwar [Raslan].

Wiedner said P32 said the opposite in the police questioning. P32 said this would be because she would not be sure whether it happened before or after.

Wiedner wanted to know how long P32 stayed in the solitary cell where she was abused. P32 said around 11 days.

Wiedner recalled P32 previously saying she had problems with her spine and asked P32 if these problems were due to her detention. P32 explained the problems with her spine were caused by a blow on her neck with a rifle stock. She added that she was not sure if this was the cause, however she was x-rayed after the blow. The x-ray showed she had a disc prolapse. P32 also suffered a gastric ulcer.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32's family was informed about her detention. P32 said that if Wiedner wanted to know if her family was notified, then "no."

Wiedner asked if it would be correct to say that P32 was threatened to be detained for a very long time, unless she would mention names. P32 confirmed, explaining that she was threatened with 10 years imprisonment. She was also told that the reason behind such a long imprisonment would be because she was directly or indirectly involved in the death of Shadi.

Wiedner quoted the transcript of P32's police questioning saying "He told P32 that she would be imprisoned for 10 years if she does not confess or mention other names". Wiedner asked if P32 actually confessed and mentioned names or if she was held accountable. P32 said that he [the interrogator] was talking with her in such a way, so that she gives him names, as like "if you give me names, I will help you to not serve/spend the whole period [in prison]". In any case, P32 had to sign papers and give fingerprints.

Wiedner wanted to know if P32's memory would be better on this very day in court than compared to the police questioning or if her memory was better back then or the same. P32 said she remembered better back then, because after the police questioning, she decided to forget everything because she got tired.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the parties how much time they needed for their questions. Defense Counsel Böcker said the defense needed some time to talk to their client in order to prepare a statement.

***

P32 said she preferred to pause her testimony for now, because it had been going since the morning and was very intensive for her.

Presiding Judge Kerber dismissed P32 for the day, explain that this would also provide enough time for the defense to talk to their client.

Proceedings adjourned at 3:00PM.

The trial will continue on April 15, 2021.

Day 70 of Trial – April 15, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with ten spectators and six members of the press in the audience. One of the accredited journalists was permitted access to the Arabic interpretation (same person as on trial day 30). A court illustrator was among the spectators. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Defense Counsel Fratzky said the defense had prepared a statement which he wanted to read out. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer suggested it could be delayed until the end of the session. Presiding Judge Kerber asked Fratzky about the importance of the statement for the course of the proceedings. Fratzky said it would be important.

Presiding Judge Kerber allowed the defense to read out the statement, explaining it would be read out loud once P32 had left the courtroom [P32 and her Counsel Dr. Kroker were preparing to leave the courtroom]. After P32 went outside, Kerber asked the interpreter to tell P32 that she was free to stay or leave. P32 went back inside and said she preferred to stay [Dr. Kroker discussed with P32 and they left again].

Presiding Judge Kerber noted that plaintiff P30 just entered the courtroom before Defense Counsel Fratzky started reading the statement:

[The following is a recreation of Raslan's statement based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

"[Raslan first recalled P32's testimony from the previous day regarding her arrest, detention, and meeting with Raslan]. I said in my previous defense statement that P32 was arrested along with [sister 1], however this was a mistake: it was rather [sister 1], [sister 2] and another girl from the [REDACTED] family. They were beaten and humiliated by the officers from Division 40, and I intervened to end the beating, although these officers were not under my command. This was, however, not the case with the second girl, she was not beaten. Tawfiq Younes demanded me to interrogate [sister 1], but I did not beat her. I searched her phone and Facebook account "The Damascene Rose" and found videos of demonstrations. I do not know if they paid money for the visit, but the parents visited the Branch on the same evening without P32. Her father threatened to light himself on fire in front of the Branch. Tawfiq Younes told me to come and bring [sister 1] along. In Younes' office, the father slapped his daughter so heavily that her headscarf was removed, and blood dripped on it. I asked the father to remain calm. Younes asked me to release [sister 2] and the girl from [REDACTED] family. I did interrogate [sister 1] three times. She was arrested again by Palestine Branch one week later, where she was released. I do not know why P32 slandered me on Facebook. She claimed to have asked me to be transferred to the collective cell, however, I do not remember that. Nonetheless, she would not have done that if she had heard bad things about me from her sister. In that case, she might as well have asked Abu Ghadab for help. The fact that she did approach me proves that her sister did not say anything bad about me. The mother was detained later. I met her around 40 to 45 days after having met her on March 15. The witnesses' mother was also arrested by Division 40".

Signed by Anwar Raslan

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Raslan if that would be his statement. Raslan shook his head [He appeared surprised].

Defense Counsel Fratzky asked for a break.

***

Presiding Judge Kerber repeated her question, asking Raslan if the statement was his. Raslan affirmed [in Arabic]. Kerber asked Raslan's interpreter, to translate what Raslan said. The interpreter clarified Raslan said "yes."

Prosecutor Klinge said the statement distorted the organizational flow of the day. Defense Counsel Böcker replied it would have been necessary and better than inviting P32 again at a later point. While one of the court officers distributed paper copies of the statement, Judge Kerber noted that P32 might want to consult her Counsel Dr. Kroker. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked to inform both that the break would be extended.

Testimony of P32<sup>5</sup>

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Polz recalled P32 saying that there was a doctor when she was transferred from Division 40 to Al-Khatib, asking P32 what the doctor was wearing. P32 said he was dressed like a doctor.

Polz asked if there was a sign on his clothes indicating that he belonged to the security forces or services. P32 denied.

Polz wanted to know if P32 heard from other detainees about sexual abuse of women or men. P32 denied.

Polz recalled P32 seeing detainees with blood and injuries on their backs, asking P32 if she also saw dead people or people being killed. P32 denied, adding she remembered the voices of the prison guards chatting when she was in the solitary cell. It seemed from their conversation that there was a corpse, they said something like "Look! This one died. Wrap him in a carpet and take him outside". P32 said they sounded like they were talking about a burlap bag or an animal.

Polz noted P32 using the pronoun "him" and asked if P32 meant that the dead person was male. P32 affirmed.

Polz wanted to know where P32 was during this conversation. P32 said she was in the solitary cell, alone.

Polz asked if it was day or night. P32 did not know, explaining there was no difference between day and night, and she had no sense of time.

Polz wanted to know if other detainees in Al-Khatib mentioned people dying. P32 said she did not remember talking about such things with other detainee.

Polz asked if P32 saw children while she was detained. P32 explained she would not know what Polz meant by "children", but P32 neither saw nor heard of children. However, there were people who belonged to the regime. P32 added that one might know the term "Corvée مُسْخَرَة [forced labor] meaning that they were forced to clean.

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: As on the previous day, P23 was very emotional during the entire testimony. She also sometimes corrected the interpreter by making him aware that he did not translate the end of her sentence.

Polz wanted to know whether P32 saw these people and how old they were. P32 said they were not allowed to have direct contact with the detainees, only with the prison guards. They were treated like slaves and were told “come here and go there.” For that reason, there was no visual contact with them, but they were young.

Polz asked if P32 consequently did not see them. P32 said she did not see them, as far as she knows, only prison guards had contact with them.

Polz wanted to know how P32 knew that. P32 described how the detainees always heard the voices of the forced laborers. The detainees heard the guards giving orders to the forced laborers in the hallways. P32 added the conversations between guards and forced laborers “were like radio,” the detainees could hear them.

Polz asked if P32 could confirm that they were children. P32 said she was certain that they were forced laborers: slaves. However, she would not be sure about the age at all, adding she didn’t know if they were detainees as well. P32 said one would know that they were seventeen or eighteen years old, and before they were taken to the army, they were used as forced laborers.

Polz wanted to know more about P32’s family, asking if she had other siblings than her sisters. P32 said that she has two sisters and a brother.

Polz asked if they all lived in Syria. P32 affirmed.

Polz wanted to know if all siblings are in contact with each other. P32 said that they had a normal family relationship.

Polz asked if P32’s family would openly address an issue if something went wrong. P32 explained she thinks “family” is derived from “unity”. P32 therefore assumed that if something would happen, the family members talked with each other.

Polz explained that Raslan had just submitted a statement [read out by his defense, see context above]. Polz would like to read it out loud. The statement might be long but Polz could repeat any part if P32 wanted:

“P32 claimed she met Raslan twice in his office: Once when she was detained along with her sister [sister 1] and their parents were visiting Raslan.” P32 said Raslan might be mistaken, it was just [sister 1] [who was detained at this meeting].

Polz asked if P32 had something to say about the statement. P32 explained that exclamation and question marks were popping in her head right from the start of the statement. However, now that Polz finished, P32 had many things to address. P32 said she just wanted to say that Koblenz is beautiful, but she had not come for tourism. She would be a witness, a plaintiff, and a victim. She would not be in the position to listen to someone whom she considers a criminal, and it felt strange to have to defend herself against a criminal.

Polz said P32 would be in court as a witness and Accused Raslan denied the statements she made in her testimony. [Polz read the statement again] P32 asked Polz to repeat her question. Polz explained P32 that the content of Accused Raslan’s statement differs from what P32 said the prior day. Polz asked P32 if she was present during the first meeting with Raslan. P32 said that if Polz would like to address the points one by one, then Polz could read aloud and P32 would stop her to address certain points.

P32 added that if Polz had questions, then she would answer them. If the question was, however, what her response is, then the answer would be that it feels weird because Raslan has done nothing but to deny.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked if he could ask a question. Presiding Judge Kerber denied. Böcker said ok, however, the prosecutor's question was not answered.

Polz wanted to know whether P32's parents visited Raslan by themselves regarding the matter of P32's sister. P32 denied, adding her parents would not have told her that.

Polz recalled P32 saying she was present during the meeting. P32 confirmed.

Polz asked if her father smacked her sister. P32 said that the narrative is "no".

Polz asked if the Facebook account named "The Damascene Rose" الوردة الدمشقية belonged to her sister [sister 1]. P32 said she had no idea, one should ask her sister about that.

Polz wanted to know if P32 remembered the name of her sister's Facebook account. P32 said she forgot. Out of fear, everyone used to create accounts with fake names. P32 said that now at this very moment, if one would search for Al-Warda Ash-Shamiyya الوردة الشامية (in Arabic), one would find dozens of accounts with this name.

Polz asked if P32 knew whether her sister was active on the internet. P32 explained that she knew that her sister was active online but did not know any details. Even on March 15, no one from the family knew about it. P32 said she had a small query: Raslan said the detention lasted forty to forty-five days. This made P32 wonder if there was a misunderstanding on Raslan's side regarding the time of detention of herself, her mother and her two sisters. P32 explained that it sounded like Raslan assumed all of them were detained around the same time, however, her sisters were detained in 2011 while P32 and her mother were detained in 2012. P32 added sarcastically that the difference here would "only" be one year.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking P32 in which year she was detained. P32 said in 2012.

Prosecutor Polz recalled Accused Raslan mentioning that P32's sister's hijab was white. Polz asked P32 if that was correct. P32 confirmed.

Polz asked if it would be correct that P32's father threatened to burn himself. P32 said this would be unthinkable, her father would not say such thing. P32 asked if she may address a point where there would a terrifying contradiction: it was strange that the trial had been going on for a year, and Raslan would still think that P32 was detained along with her sister [sister 1] (confused both sisters). At the same time, he allegedly remembered the situation in his office. P32 said it sounded strange to her: Raslan got confused with fundamental things yet remembered certain details. P32 concluded that she thinks Raslan could not remember who was detained, because there were thousands of detainees entering and leaving this prison.

Polz said that unfortunately she could not give an answer. P32 thanked Polz for giving her the opportunity to talk.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled P32 telling the Court that her sister was detained on March 15, 2011. Wiedner wanted to know how much time passed until her family met Raslan in his office. P32 said she did not remember how much time passed. However, P32 recalled that security forces raided their house on the same day. They were searching for papers relating to organizing demonstrations.

They took many documents because P32 studied [REDACTED], so the forces assumed that some of her study materials were flyers and related to demonstrations.

Wiedner asked how many days it took them to meet Raslan in his office. P32 did not remember an exact time, adding that [sister 2] was detained together with [sister 1] and [sister 2] was released after three days. The family consequently did not see Raslan earlier than three days after her sisters were arrested.

Wiedner recalled P32 telling the police that the meeting took place on March 20, asking P32 whether that sounded right to her. P32 affirmed, explaining that she assumed that [sister 2] was released three days “after the family knew.”

Defense’s Questioning

Defense Counsel Fratzky asked P32 about her father’s job was. P32 said he was a merchant.

Fratzky asked P32 how her father positioned himself towards the regime. P32 said that like 90% of the Syrians, he was against the oppression by the regime, but the family was afraid [of the regime] like everybody else.

Fratzky recalled P32 asking to see Raslan during her detention in 2012 and asked why she wanted to see him. P32 referred to one of her previous statements, saying she wanted to get out of the solitary cell, because she was close to a break down. P32 added that she did not ask to see Raslan because he was kind to her sisters, but because he was the only person whose name she knew.

Fratzky said P32 mentioned other names the prior day, asking why P32 did not ask them [to be transferred to another cell]. P32 asked Fratzky to clarify what names he was referring to. If he meant the prison guards, they did not have the competence to address her request.

Fratzky asked P32 how she knew that. [P32 got very upset] P32 said she knew because it would be general knowledge in Syria and everywhere else that prison guards do not have such far reaching competencies. They would only be competent to open and close doors.

Fratzky asked if P32 knew about any other detainees trying to petition Raslan. P32 did not know, adding she did not ask about it and did not care. P32 explained her only request was to get out of the solitary cell.

Fratzky stated that although P32 was a detainee she had the courage to make a request to Raslan, asking if she had hoped that Raslan would help her. P32 explained her survival instinct pushed her to do what she did. She added that Raslan was a person who was able to sign her execution papers. It was only the survival instinct who made her do what she did.

Fratzky wanted to know why P32 tried to ask Raslan, if she had to expect that the answer would be no. [P32 got upset] P32 explained that there were simply no lawyers or angels of mercy. The only option for the detainees was to talk to the criminal.

Fratzky said that P32 did not answer his question, however, thanking her.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked P32 if her sister was released after the meeting with Raslan. P32 did not understand the question. Böcker said he wanted to know whether her sister was released after she saw Raslan. P32 said that if she understood correctly, then his question would be weird, because her sister was present together with P32’s mother, father and P32. After her sister was released, she said that Raslan interrogated her.

Böcker asked P32 how much time it took after that meeting for her sister to be released. P32 said that as she said the previous day and during the police questioning: 11 days.

Böcker asked whether P32 knew anything about what happened to get her sister released after 11 days. P32 said she does not know anything about the subject.

Böcker wanted to know if P32's sister's release was related to the meeting with Raslan. P32 asked Böcker to repeat the question. Böcker said that P32's sister was released 11 days after meeting with Raslan, asking whether P32 can connect both events. P32 said she does not know if anyone understood the question, asking Böcker to clarify and adding that her sister was not released 11 days after meeting with Raslan. 11 days were the entire detention period. P32 asked which events Böcker wanted her to connect.

Böcker asked how long it took for her sister to be released after the meeting with Raslan. P32 said one of the judges already asked the same question, adding that it took around three to four days if she remembered correctly.

Böcker asked if P32 sees any connection between her sister being released and the family meeting Raslan in his office. P32 said that she does not have an idea if there was a connection.

Böcker asked P32 whether she thought about the possibility of a connection. P32 asked "connection to what?" Böcker explained that if he would have been in P32's place then he would have thought about... P32 interrupted saying she understood. She did not think about it, it was only important to her that her sister was released.

Böcker intervened, asking P32 to allow him to finish his question. He repeated that if he had a sister and she would be in the same situation as P32's sister, then he would have thought about a possible connection between her release and a conversation with the interrogator a few days earlier. P32 said that this might be what would have happened if Böcker were in her place, but he would not be. P32 added the only thing she cared about was that her sister was released.

Böcker again wanted to know if P32 thought about a connection of the two events, or whether she tried to ask about the reasons for her sister's detention in the Branch. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer intervened, saying Böcker should have said "the reasons of the release" not "detention". He told Böcker not to confuse the witness. Böcker said his colleague Scharmer was right. P32 replied she did not have an idea, nor did she want to know. Even if she wanted to know, she would have been arrested. P32 asked how she should have tried to find out about the reasons without being arrested herself.

Böcker recalled that P32 was arrested one year after her sister, still she asked to see Raslan. Böcker wanted to know why P32 asked to see Raslan. P32 said that as she mentioned before, she requested to see Raslan to get out of the solitary cell. He was the only person [in the Branch] she knew.

Defense Counsel Fratzky wanted to know how P32 and her parents visited Raslan in his office. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said the question was already answered on the previous day.

Fratzky asked if P32's parents told her what they were expecting from the meeting. P32 said they hoped to get her sister released.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer recalled P32 previously telling the Court how she was frisked by 2 nurses and mentioned that the situation was humiliating. Scharmer asked P32 to describe what exactly felt humiliating. P32 said she would only provide a brief answer, because she found [the situation back then] to be annoying. P32 explained that "in a humiliating manner" meant "they searched inside me".

Scharmer recalled P32 saying that when her sister was detained again, she was released and given a cell phone. He asked P32 if her sister worked with the regime. P32 said of course she did not work for the regime. However, her sister accepted the offer [to work for the regime] in order to be released and then leave the country.

The witness was dismissed. Kerber told P32 she was free to stay in the courtroom [P32 stayed].

***

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the previous court interpreter was officially released from his duties and another sworn-in interpreter [Al-Gharib's interpreter] would replace him.

Presiding Judge Kerber read out a ruling from the Judges, detailing that certain charges considering ordinary crimes under German law could be added to the indictment, since they were committed against some of the plaintiffs.

[The following is a recreation of the Judges' statement based on what the court monitor was able to hear in court]

- I) Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the limitation of a trial to the alleged crimes detailed in the indictment does not apply to cases where certain crimes were committed against plaintiffs. The Judges therefore informed the parties that bodily injury, severe bodily injury, sexual assault, and deprivation of liberty as provided by German law are to be added to the charges.

Kerber found that the detention conditions in Al-Khatib Branch – overcrowded cells, lack of oxygen, deprivation of sleep, lack of hygiene, lack of medical treatment, constantly audible abuse of fellow detainees, and malnutrition – qualify as bodily injury under German law. Beatings that the witnesses described would further qualify as severe bodily injury.

- II. Referring to the testimonies of the plaintiff so far, Judge Kerber said that all of them were affected in their bodily well-being which would qualify as causing bodily injury under German law:

- 1) P1 was beaten with cables and batons to make him provide information about his life, his movie materials, and alleged cooperation with foreign powers. He was further told that he would have to stay in detention if he did not cooperate. In addition, a stick was inserted in his anus. Kerber concluded that these descriptions are indicators of crimes of severe sexual assault/rape §§ 177 (1) Nos 1 and 2 StGB, 177(2) s. 2 No. 1 StGB, 177 (4) No. 1 StGB [version valid until 2016], sexual abuse of detainees § 174a (1) StGB, bodily harm §223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm §224 (1) No. 2 StGB, unlawful imprisonment §239 (3) No. 1 StGB, hostage taking §239b StGB.

- 2) P11 was told to provide names of members of the opposition and beaten on the soles of his feet using cables and tubes. Kerber concluded these descriptions were indicators of crimes of bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm §224 (1) No. 2 StGB.
  - 3) P12 was beaten with cables and threatened with torture. He was further told to provide names of opposition members. Kerber concluded these descriptions are indicators of crimes of bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm §224 (1) No. 2 StGB, unlawful imprisonment §239 (3) No. 1 StGB.
  - 4) P19 was beaten and touched on her breasts by a prison guard. Kerber concluded these descriptions were indicators of crimes of sexual assault/rape § 177 (1) Nos. 1 and 3 StGB [version valid until 2016], sexual abuse of detainees § 174a (1), bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm § 224 (1) No. 2 StGB, unlawful imprisonment § 239 (3) No. 1 StGB.
  - 5) P25 was beaten with an object similar to a tube. Kerber concluded this description was an indicator of crimes of bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm §224 (1) No. 2 StGB.
  - 6) P27 was beaten with a cable. Kerber concluded this would be an indicator of crimes of bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm § 224 (1) No. 2 StGB.
  - 7) P28 was beaten with several different objects. Kerber concluded this description was an indicator of crimes of bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm § 224 (1) No. 2 StGB, unlawful imprisonment § 239 (3) No. 1 StGB.
  - 8) P30 was beaten with the open end of a cable. Kerber concluded this would be an indicator of crimes of bodily harm § 223 StGB, dangerous bodily harm § 224 (1) No. 2 StGB, unlawful imprisonment § 239 (3) No. 1 StGB.
- III) Referring to the testimonies of P1 and P19, Kerber found that their description are also indicators of sexual assault as crimes against humanity as provided in § 7 (1) No. 6 var. 1 VStGB.
- IV) Referring to the testimonies of P17 and P18 regarding the death of their brother/cousin Kerber found that these are indicators of crimes of murder § 211 StGB and manslaughter § 212 StGB. However, Judge Kerber added that one must take into account that the body of the allegedly dead person was never found and both witnesses mentioned it might be possible that the person was still alive.
- V) Judge Kerber explained that the Judges will request an expert opinion on the above-mentioned criminal offences and their evaluation in Syrian law at the time the relevant acts were committed.

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to read out an email that the Court received from [REDACTED] [listed as a plaintiff on trial day 1]. [REDACTED] thanked the Judges for offering her protective measures and support and explained that she was not only worried about her family, but has other concerns as well and would therefore prefer not to testify in court.

Plaintiff Counsel Kroker said his client [REDACTED] would no longer participate in the trial as plaintiff and also not testify in court.

Judge Kerber announced that the trial days schedules for April 28 and 29, 2021 would be canceled since the witness will not testify in court. She added that the Court was informed by [REDACTED] via email that he preferred not to testify in court.

Defense Counsel Böcker requested to be informed about such emails and decisions on time, since his office has to arrange the schedule accordingly.

Prosecutor Polz read out the Prosecutors' statement regarding the defense's request to take additional evidence in the form of five witness testimonies.

- 1) The Prosecutors objected to the defense's request to hear [REDACTED] from the German intelligence service (BND) as expert to testify on the competencies of Division 40 of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate. The Prosecutors argued that the two proposed witnesses would be unable to testify on something they directly experienced, therefore their testimony would be either irrelevant or unsuitable: If the proposed witnesses were to testify that Division 40 was only in charge of demonstrations that took place in Damascus, their testimony would be irrelevant because the work of Division 40 is not relevant to the trial against Anwar Raslan. If the proposed witnesses were to testify that Division 40 was the only division/branch in charge of demonstrations in Damascus, their testimony would be unsuitable as the exclusive mandate of Division 40 was not part of the BND's expert report. The BND's report rather states that tasks and mandates of the different intelligence agencies in Syria were overlapping, and it was often unclear who was in charge of a particular situation. According to the prosecutors, the report also states that all intelligence agencies were involved in fighting the opposition. The prosecutors referred to Eyad Al-Gharib's statement with the BKA, saying that members of Division 40, members of other sub-divisions of Branch 251, members of the Ministry of Interior, and members of the Air Force Intelligence were present at protests in Duma. The prosecutors concluded that in case there would be any open questions about the competencies and mandate of different Syrian intelligence agencies, Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing from the BKA could be summoned as a witness once more.
- 2) The prosecutors objected to the summons of [REDACTED] and two other people as witnesses, due to a lack of connectivity. The prosecutors explained that it would be unclear how the proposed witnesses would be able to know that Accused Raslan was neither present at a protest nor at the funeral of a Syrian movie director. [REDACTED] worked downstairs in the prison of Branch 251 while Accused Raslan had his office on the first floor of the building. [REDACTED] would therefore not be able to confirm that Raslan was not present at the above-mentioned events as claimed by the defense, since he and Raslan were not together all the time. The prosecutors stated that the same would be the case for the two other proposed witnesses. According to the prosecutors, the defense's submission requesting to summon these people as witnesses would not indicate how these witnesses would be able to testify about Raslan's behavior. In any event their testimony regarding Raslan's behavior would be a mere subjective impression rather than a fact.

All plaintiff counsels announced that they would join the Prosecutors' statement. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer added that it would nevertheless be interesting to hear [REDACTED] as a witness, however, for different reasons than those put forward by the defense.

Proceedings were adjourned at 12:10PM

The next trial day is scheduled for April 21, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 71 – April 21, 2021

P33, a 57-year-old Syrian woman, testified regarding her own detention in Al-Khatib Branch, as well as her daughters' detention at the same branch. Although she was not subjected to torture herself, she witnessed other detainees being tortured at the Branch, including women. She further described the extremely unhygienic conditions. During the search for her daughters who were detained in Al-Khatib Branch, she also met Anwar Raslan in an office at the Branch and identified him as a higher-ranking employee. Raslan's defense as well as the prosecutors flagged several contradictions between P33's and P32's testimony regarding a meeting with Raslan. P33 confirmed that her testimony would represent the event how she remembered it. P33 and two other persons requested to join the trial as plaintiffs.

Day 71 of Trial – April 21, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 am with five spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Bier substituted for Dr. Oehmichen.

Testimony of P33

P31 was accompanied by her witness counsel, Dr. Kroker, and informed about her rights and duties as a witness. P33 detailed that she was 57 years old, had four children and was not related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that P33's daughter testified the previous week. Based on her testimony, the judges would like to ask questions regarding three different topics: arrest and detention of P33's 1st daughter [daughter 1]; arrest and detention of P33's 2nd daughter daughter 2, [P32], and P33's own arrest and detention. Kerber asked P33 to first describe to the court what happened to her and her family in 2011. P33 explained that it all started on March 15, 2011. Her oldest daughter [daughter 1] studied at the college and was supposed to come home after her classes.

However, relatives called P33 and told her that [daughter 1] was demonstrating at Al-Hamidiyah Souq, holding a Syrian flag and shouting. P33 said she got very afraid because she knew how the regime would deal “with such things.” P33 therefore visited her 3rd daughter [daughter 3] at her work. When the two were talking, an SUV appeared and four people who got out of the car told her daughter that they wanted to talk to her and ask her questions. P33 wanted to accompany her daughter, but she was not allowed. P33 described that the men eventually took her daughter, and she was unable to do anything against that. When P33 returned home to inform her husband, their flat was packed with security officers who searched the entire flat. The officers also asked questions about P33’s daughters and told P33 that she would have her daughters back in two hours. P33 recalled that this happened around 3PM, however, when she did not get her daughters back at night, she decided to do something dangerous the following day.

P33 went to the presidential office where she loudly requested to talk to the president to ask about her daughters. P33 said she was laughed at and given a phone number of a man, whom she was told to call. However, she was unsuccessful in her attempts to reach someone. She then went home and drove from [intelligence] Branch to [intelligence] Branch with her car, searching for her daughters. P33 said she was at the Political Branch, the National Security Branch, at Kafar Souseh, at Palestine Branch, and the Military Security Branch. She was laughed at and sent away from all these Branches. The criminal police could not help her either. P33 recalled that she felt bad when she returned home. She did not get any information about her daughters the following day. On the third day [after her daughters were arrested] a young man (P33 did not know how he got her phone number) called her at around 5PM to tell her that there was a sit-in in front of the palace of justice. P33 went there together with her husband and son. P33 said there were many people participating, waiting for their loved ones who were being held at the palace of justice. She assumed that her daughters would be held there as well, however, their names did not appear on a list that was shown there. A man who introduced himself as [REDACTED], a human rights advocate, approached P33 and told her that she would be right and should keep asking for her daughters as loud as she could.

P33 said that everything was silent, except for P33, her husband and son, who were shouting for their daughters. The prosecutor of Damascus looked out of his window, down on the protesters and ordered to bring the three screaming people to him. P33 further recalled that when entering his office, she asked if her daughters would be “down there” as well. However, the prosecutor told them they were not. During their conversation, a tall man who was talking on the phone entered the room. He said that P33’s family would be an honorable and respectable family. They were told that their daughter would be with Colonel Khalid from Political Security, and that they would be taken there to see their daughter. P33 said she and her husband (her son was not allowed to accompany them) were directly taken to Al-Khatib Branch by car. According to P33, she was looking everywhere for her daughters, but never imagined that they could be at Al-Khatib.

P33 said that it was silent when they entered the building; she was afraid. She further described that people were working at their computers in their offices. P33 and her husband had to wait for 30 minutes or longer before they were taken to another office. P33 described it as a big office with one man sitting behind a desk and two other people being present as well. She said it was obvious that the person behind the desk was important, as the two others “were sitting respectfully.” P33 explained that she and her husband did not know anyone at this point. Later, they found out that one of the people was Anwar Raslan.

P33 went on to describe that both their daughters were eventually taken to the office as well. [daughter 3] was in very bad condition, because she had spent three days in a solitary cell, not knowing what she was accused of. [daughter 1] was there as well. She was also exhausted, however, in a better condition than her sister. P33 said [daughter 1's] hijab was covered in blood, she had blue and red marks in her face. To downplay the situation, P33's husband immediately asked [daughter 1] why she participated in the demonstration. P33 recalled that she sat next to [daughter 1], however, she told P33 to not touch her, as her entire body was hurting. P33 and her husband apologized and assured that their daughter would never again participate in a demonstration. [daughter 3] was then released. Regarding [daughter 1], P33 explained that the person behind the desk left the room to come back and tell the family that he spoke to the president [Bashar Al-Assad] on the phone. The president denied that [daughter 1] would be released.

Judge Kerber apologized for interrupting P33 and asked who the man behind the desk was. P33 said she and her family did not know any names back then. Later, they recognized the person in a photo, identifying him as Jamil Hassan.

Kerber wanted to know if Jamil Hassan spoke to President Bashar Al-Assad in this situation. P33 affirmed, adding that he at least told them so.

Kerber asked P33 to continue with her general description. P33 went on to explain that they were allowed to take [daughter 3] home, along with many items that were confiscated from their flat. [daughter 1] was not allowed to come with them. P33 said they had to wait for ten days. On the 11th day, there was an amnesty from the president, regarding protesters. P33 said she was very happy and immediately went to Al-Khatib Branch together with her family to take [daughter 1] home. P33 recalled how they met Anwar Raslan at this occasion. They were all sitting in Raslan's office, talking to him. P33, her husband and their children were all allowed to talk to [daughter 1], however, she was not yet released. P33 said allegedly they had to deal with certain things before [daughter 1] could be released. P33 further recalled that Lieutenant-Colonel Abdel Hassan was there as well. He was nice and helped P33 and her family to get [daughter 1] back. [daughter 1] returned home sometime after that.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked if it would be correct to summarize that P33 searched for her daughters at different Branches after their arrest. She then went to the palace of justice together with her husband from where she was driven to Al-Khatib Branch. P33 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P33 and her family hired intermediaries to get information about their daughters before they eventually met at Al-Khatib Branch. P33 said to be honest, they did not know anyone who worked for the government and did not have any relationship with "such people." They tried to contact a lawyer (friend of the family) but no one dared to get involved. P33 explained she was afraid that her husband or son would be arrested when asking about her daughters, she therefore decided to search for them herself.

Wiedner asked if they paid money [to release their daughters]. P33 said they did not pay money the first time.

Wiedner wanted to know if that means that they paid money at a later point. P33 affirmed, explaining that they paid money when [daughter 2] was detained at the Military Security, to secure her freedom on certain conditions.

Wiedner concluded the family did not pay money in March 2011. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner asked how many days after her daughters' arrest the family was taken to Al-Khatib. P33 said it was around three days later, however, they only got one daughter out.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P33 knew the place [Al-Khatib Branch]. P33 explained that the Branch had a very bad reputation, everyone in Damascus knew that. She recognized the Branch due to its proximity to the Red Crescent Hospital.

Wiedner asked who exactly was present at the first meeting in Al-Khatib Branch. P33 explained that she did not know any names at the time, they only found out their names at a later point. She added that Jamil Hassan was sitting behind the desk. Raslan was sitting on a sofa on the right, P33's husband sat next to him. On the left sat a person named Khaled, who took them [P33 and her husband] to the office.

Wiedner wanted to know if [daughter 2] was present as well. P33 denied.

Wiedner asked if P33 recognized any of the people from the office in the courtroom. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whom she recognized. P33 said she recognized Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner recalled that P33 did not know the names Jamil Hassan and Anwar Raslan initially and asked her how she got to know the names. P33 explained that when she was at the Branch to pick up her daughter, there was a nameplate on the desk.

Wiedner wanted to know if that happened later or on the same day. P33 said it did not happen on the same day.

Wiedner recalled that at the first meeting, both of P33's daughters were in a bad condition, especially [daughter 1]. Wiedner asked which daughter was hurt. P33 described that one of her daughters had red and blue marks in her face and her hijab was covered in blood. When P33 tried to hug her daughter to comfort her, she denied, because her entire body was hurting.

Wiedner wanted to know if [daughter 1] was beaten by anyone in the office. P33 said she was not beaten when P33 was present.

Wiedner recalled that P33 was at the Branch a second time, asking her when and why this happened. P33 said she went to the Branch as soon as media reports about a presidential amnesty for protestors started spreading. She went to the Branch together with her family to meet [daughter 1]. Anwar Raslan received them in his office and Abdel Hassan told them that they could wait there.

Wiedner wanted to know which family members were present. P33 said it was her husband, son, [daughter 2], [daughter 3] and herself.

Wiedner asked how the meeting went. P33 explained that they were welcomed with the request to assure that their daughter would not participate in demonstrations again. P33's husband assured that none of his daughters would participate in demonstrations again. They were then told that "such thing cannot happen and cause serious consequences."

Wiedner wanted to know who said that. P33 explained that Anwar Raslan sat down for a bit and told them things like that. Abdel Hassan was present as well.

Wiedner asked P33 if she could tell the court anything about Raslan's rank; whether he was giving orders, was helpful, or dismissive. P33 described that during their first meeting, Raslan was sitting respectfully before another person who was sitting behind the desk. It was apparent that he treated this person with respect. P33 added that in this situation she was only worried about getting her daughters back. This was at their first meeting, when the family was allowed to take [daughter 3] home. At their second meeting, when they got to know Raslan, they realized that he was the head, controlling everything.

Wiedner wanted to know if both meetings took place in the same office. P33 denied, explaining that it was the same building, however, different offices.

Wiedner further wanted to know whether Raslan was wearing a uniform or civilian clothes. P33 said he wore a civilian suit.

Wiedner read out Raslan's statement regarding his meeting with the family [Raslan's defense submitted the statement the previous week]:

On the same day (when the daughters were arrested) their father and mother came [to Al-Khatib Branch]. The father threatened to light himself afire. I [Anwar Raslan] do not know anything about money that has been paid. [daughter 1]'s parents were taken to Tawfiq Younes, I [Raslan] went there as well. [daughter 1] was beaten by Division 40 and therefore had a swollen face. When the family was with Tawfiq Younes, the father hit his daughter. I [Raslan] told him that he should keep calm.

P33 said this statement would be entirely wrong. She explained that the family only learned about the whereabouts of their daughters on the third day. Her husband never said he would burn himself; they were only yelling in front of the palace of justice. A person called Khaled took them to Al-Khatib. Her daughter was not beaten in the office. P33 concluded that they were only at Al-Khatib Branch on the third day [after her daughters were arrested].

Wiedner said he had a more general question, asking if P33's daughters were part of the opposition and regularly participating in demonstrations. P33 said before March 15, 2011, no one had a clue about demonstrations. Everyone was surprised that something like that would be possible in Syria. [daughter 1] protested in front of the Libyan embassy, however, the family did not know about that. After this date, [daughter 1] continued her activities [protesting against the government].

Wiedner asked whether P33's daughter published anything on the internet. P33 asked what Wiedner was referring to. Wiedner explained that he wanted to know if her daughter published anything against the regime, like critical articles. P33 denied, adding that her daughter did not post anything on Facebook, because she was too afraid. However, she participated in demonstrations in the city [Damascus].

Wiedner wanted to know if [daughter 1] told P33 anything about her detention after she was released. P33 denied, explaining that [daughter 1] did not want to talk about it. All that P33 wanted to know from [daughter 1] was if she was bodily or sexually hurt, since that would be considered as particularly bad by society.

Wiedner asked if they spoke about obvious injuries. P33 affirmed, adding that [daughter 1], however, did not want to talk about it. It was a bad experience for [daughter 1] and she preferred not to talk about it. P33 said the most important thing for the family was that [daughter 1] was released.

Wiedner wanted to know if [daughter 1] mentioned that she was interrogated by Anwar Raslan. P33 explained that her daughter was interrogated several times. However, she was always blindfolded and could not see any details. P33 added her daughter suffered physical and well as mental harm.

Wiedner asked whether [daughter 1] did not tell P33 who had interrogated her. P33 recalled her daughter saying that Raslan beat her and another person interrogated and beat her.

Regarding Raslan beating [daughter 1], Wiedner asked P33 how this interrogation went. P33 explained that her daughter did not feel well and did not want to tell P33 any details. She only said that the interrogation officer was evil and treated her badly. However, she did not provide further details as to the kind of beatings. P33 said [daughter 1]'s reaction was to continue demonstrating.

Wiedner asked how [daughter 1] knew it was Raslan who beat her. P33 explained that when the family came to his office to get [daughter 1], Raslan's name was on the nameplate on the desk, and he was there.

Wiedner asked if P33 was referring to the second meeting. P33 confirmed.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether P33's daughter said she was interrogated by two people. P33 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know which interrogator was the evil one. P33 said they were both evil.

***

Judge Wiedner wanted to know how the second meeting was arranged; whether the family made an appointment or simply went to the Branch. P33 said they simply went there as soon as they heard about the amnesty.

Wiedner asked if [daughter 1] was beaten at the second meeting. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner further asked if the bloodstains that were visibly at the first meeting were also visible at the second meeting. P33 affirmed, adding that her daughter kept the hijab until this very day, as keepsake.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Polz wanted to know if P33's family spoke about the first meeting at home. P33 asked for clarification. Polz specified she wanted to know if the family spoke about the meeting with [daughter 2]. P33 said of course they spoke about the first meeting.

Polz asked where [daughter 2] was during the first meeting. P33 said [daughter 2] was at home.

Polz wanted to know whether the family told [daughter 2] what they were up to, that they were planning to go to Al-Khatib Branch. P33 explained that when they left the flat, they did not know they would end up at Al-Khatib. They only planned to participate in the sit-in.

Polz asked P33 why they did not take [daughter 2] with them. P33 said they were afraid, explaining they were living in a society that was always worried about their daughters.

Polz further recalled that [daughter 2] told the court the previous week that she was present during the first meeting [with Raslan]. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer intervened, saying that [daughter 2] did not say that. She rather said she was present during one meeting. Polz asked P33 why [daughter 2] said she was present at a meeting [P33 previously said [daughter 2] was not present at the first meeting.]. P33 said [daughter 2] was present during the second meeting.

Polz recalled [daughter 2] saying that [daughter 3] was present during the meeting that [daughter 2] was present as well. P33 affirmed, explaining that [daughter 3] was present at the second meeting, because she had already been released.

Polz said [daughter 2] told the court that [daughter 3] was still detained at the meeting at which [daughter 2] was present. Polz asked P33 how it comes that [daughter 2] remembers the meeting like that. P33 said she does not have an explanation for that. Maybe there was a misunderstanding when they talked about it. P33 explained that [daughter 1] and [daughter 3] were arrested. [daughter 3] was released on the third day. [daughter 2] accompanied the family when they went to pick up [daughter 1] at a later point.

Defense Counsel Fratzky complained he did not understand the interpretation. P33 repeated her statement: Both daughters, [daughter 1] and [daughter 3], were arrested. P33 did not know where they were for three days. When P33 went to the sit-in she was taken to Al-Khatib where she found out that both daughters were at this Branch. P33 said this would be the first meeting which she attended only together with her husband.

Regarding the second meeting, Polz asked P33 about Raslan's behavior. She wanted to know if Raslan was understanding or authoritative. P33 said since Raslan saw that she and her husband did not agree with their daughters' behavior [protesting], Raslan was "normal". He was neither mad nor upset.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Böcker wanted to know how Raslan saw that P33 and her husband did not agree with their daughters' behavior. P33 explained that Raslan demanded that the family takes care that their daughters would not participate in demonstrations again. P33 said her "husband did so."

Böcker asked if P33 and her husband consequently made some kind of declaration [regarding their daughters' future behavior]. P33 denied, adding that they simply wanted to do anything to leave the Branch as soon as possible. They simply agreed [with what Raslan demanded].

Böcker wanted to know if it was correct that the first meeting took place three days after P33's daughters were arrested, and the second meeting took place 11 days after the arrest. P33 confirmed.

Böcker further recalled that the arrest was on March 15, 2011. P33 confirmed again.

Böcker wanted to know how P33 could still remember this exact date, although it was a long time ago. He added that it would not be the first time that the court heard this date. P33 said she could never forget this date since it marks the beginning of the Syrian revolution. It was the start of peaceful demonstrations in Damascus.

Böcker asked if P33 was 100% sure about the 3-day time frame [for the first meeting]. P33 confirmed.

Böcker asked if P33 would be sure about the 11-days time frame to the same degree. P33 confirmed.

Böcker recalled that P33 and her family did not know anyone at the first meeting. They only learned their names at a later stage. P33 affirmed, adding that she did not know any names on the meeting three days after the arrest, but she could remember the faces.

Böcker concluded that there were no name plates at the first meeting. P33 confirmed.

Böcker further concluded that P33 recognized Raslan at a later stage. P33 confirmed.

Böcker asked if P33 recognizes Raslan today [in court] as well. P33 affirmed.

Böcker wanted to know if P33 saw Raslan in the media. P33 denied, adding that she saw him when she herself was detained in his [Raslan's] Branch [Al-Khatib].

Böcker recalled P33 mentioning an important person who was present at the first meeting, and that P33 mentioned several names in this context. Böcker said he was confused as P33 said that one person was important, however, another person was in charge. P33 explained that this person came and said he would take over the matter regarding P33's daughters. This person was not the leading person in the building; however, he had a certain rank. P33 added her daughters were the first women who were detained at this Branch [Al-Khatib]. Her family would be a very conservative Damascene family. And they wanted to get rid of the whole issue.

Böcker concluded that this person [high rank but not in charge of the Branch] was a person who was treated with respect. Böcker further wanted to know if it was correct to say that this person was in charge on the first meeting and leading the conversation, three days after the arrest. P33 said one can describe the situation like that. She added that ten days later, when they came to pick up [daughter 1], they found out that Anwar Raslan was the person in charge.

Böcker wanted to know how P33 came to the conclusion that Raslan was in charge and the reason she describes Raslan like that today [in court]. P33 explained that at the second meeting when they went to pick up [daughter 1], P33 saw that Raslan was treated with respect and addressed as "sidi" [dear sir]. He also gave orders.

Böcker concluded that at the second meeting, Raslan acted like the other person did at the first meeting. P33 confirmed.

Böcker recalled that Raslan's statement on the meeting was just read out again when P33 said it was all wrong. According to Böcker however, there were several commonalities between Raslan's statement and P33's description of the meetings.

What is different between the two descriptions is first the identity of the important person at the first meeting. Second, the condition of P33's daughter's hijab. Third, P33 spontaneously described in court that at the first meeting, P33's husband immediately asked their daughters about the demonstrations [why they participated]. Böcker asked P33, as far as she remembered, to describe her husband's reaction in this situation. P33 explained that her husband said that [why they protested] to their daughters to pick up the anger of the other people who were present. He also said that their daughters would not protest again.

Böcker wanted to know where the anger that P33 describes came from, if she actually felt it or simply assumed it. P33 explained that she did not expect such anger. However, everyone knew how the regime reacted and struck back [to demonstrations]. That was why her husband tried to explain that their daughters participated in demonstrations only once and would never do that again.

Böcker wanted to know if P33 and her husband had a strategy for this meeting, if he agreed beforehand to try calm everyone down by explaining their daughter's participation in demonstrations was a one-time event. P33 explained that when she, her husband and son went to the sit-in in front of the palace of justice, they did not have any plan. They did not know they would be taken somewhere, so they did not talk about a strategy before.

Böcker asked if P33's daughter reacted to her father's declaration about her participation in demonstrations. P33 said she did not react. Her entire body was shaking, P33 tried to calm her down.

Böcker wanted to know who said that P33's daughter would be released. He wanted to know if P33 knew who ordered the release or only knew about the final result. P33 referred to her previous statements about a person leaving the room and coming back to say he spoke with the President. P33 said she does not know whether it was true that the person spoke to the President on the phone or whether it was just acting. However, this person said the President decided that [daughter 3] shall be released and [daughter 1] shall "be educated."

Böcker recalled P33 saying [daughter 3] was not beaten while P33 was present. P33 affirmed, adding that no one was beaten.

Böcker asked if P33 was present at the meeting all the time. P33 affirmed, adding that she was always together with her husband.

Böcker further asked if P33 and her husband entered and left the room at the same time. P33 affirmed.

Böcker recalled P33 saying the second meeting took place ten days after the first meeting, but another time also saying that the second meeting took place 11 days after the arrest. P33 explained the second meeting took place ten days after the first meeting and 11 days after the arrest.

Böcker wanted to know how long the family had to wait after the second meeting until their daughter was released. P33 said they had to wait for around two days.

Böcker asked if P33 and her family ever found out why the daughter was released two days after the second meeting. P33 said there was a presidential amnesty for all protesters.

Böcker wanted to know if it would also be possible that P33's daughter was released because the family spoke to Raslan who tried to help them and initiated the daughter's release. P33 said if this would have been the case, their daughter would have been released earlier.

Böcker asked if this would be the only reason why P33 believed that it would be impossible that Raslan helped them. P33 said there would be bureaucracy and a lot of paperwork and documents.

Böcker wanted to know why P33 thinks it was not Raslan who released her daughter. P33 said this hypothetical question would raise even more questions.

Plaintiff counsel Bahns intervened, objecting to the defense's hypotheses. Defense counsel Böcker asked plaintiff counsel Scharmer to stay silent and not interrupt him. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer clarified that he did not object to anything, it was Bahns who objected Böcker's question.

Defense counsel Böcker continued his questioning by asking P33 why she assumes that her daughter's release was not ordered by Anwar Raslan. P33 said she and her family heard about the presidential amnesty and their daughter was released two days after that.

Böcker said there was only one general presidential amnesty, which was declared on May 31, 2011. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer intervened, asking for Böcker's source of information. Böcker said one can read that on the internet. Scharmer said this would be a criminal trial, internet sources would be insufficient. Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, asking defense counsel Böcker to come up with a proper question for the witness.

Böcker asked P33 if she was sure that the amnesty was declared on March 26, 2011 as she mentioned earlier. P33 said she does not remember the exact date, all she remembered was that her daughter was released because of that [presidential amnesty], adding that these events happened ten years ago.

Böcker said he only knows about one presidential amnesty, which was declared on May 31, 2011. He asked P33 if she wanted to change her testimony since Böcker was of the opinion that there was no amnesty on the date that P33 mentioned. P33 said the amnesty she referred to was declared "in an attempt to control the anger of the street." This amnesty was not issued by the parliament. P33 recalled, that she was told the President issued a general amnesty, so P33 and her family went to Al-Khatib Branch to get her daughter back. P33 added that her family knows another person who was arrested on March 18, 2011 and released almost the same day as her daughter.

Böcker wanted to know if P33 spoke to [daughter 2] after [daughter 2]'s testimony. P33 affirmed, explaining that she asked her daughter about how she was doing, however, they did not talk about any details of [daughter 2]'s testimony. P33 said she only wanted to know how her daughter was doing mentally, because her daughter was in a bad condition.

Böcker concluded his questioning by telling plaintiff counsel Scharmer that Scharmer's "sham objections" would be disruptive and often superfluous. Böcker said he wanted to clarify an important aspect [when Scharmer allegedly interrupted him].

Presiding Judge Kerber asked plaintiff counsel Scharmer if he wanted to reply. Scharmer said the first objection was made by plaintiff counsel Bahns, adding that Böcker should use headphones to keep track of what is said in court by whom.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked if Scharmer or another plaintiff counsel had any questions for the witness.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said the German newspaper "Zeit" wrote in June 2014 that President Bashar Al-Assad issued several amnesties. P33 confirmed, explaining that there were several presidential decrees. Many young men were arrested [in the context of demonstrations], the decrees and amnesties were attempts to control the anger of the street.

Scharmer recalled that [daughter 1] was a woman who was arrested right at the beginning of the demonstrations. He asked P33 if [daughter 1] was therefore known in Syria. P33 affirmed, saying that [daughter 1] was the first woman to loudly demonstrate in Damascus. Her daughter showed great bravery.

Scharmer said that P33 spoke to [daughter 1] [about [daughter 1]'s detention], however, they did not talk about any details. Scharmer wanted to know if it was normal for P33's culture that people would not talk about "such things" [experience in detention, especially sexual violence] openly in their families. P33 said it was a new experience for them [Syrian society]: Young women who were detained. P33 added it was most important for the families that their daughters were not sexually abused. [P33 started crying, the interpreter gave her a tissue] P33 said as a mother, she wanted to know what her daughters had to endure. Maybe she did not ask with enough emphasis, but as a mother she wanted to know.

Presiding Judge Kerber suggested a break, since the next complex of questions would be bigger, and a break would give everyone the chance to calm down. She added that if P33, however, wanted to get over and done with the questions, they could continue as well. P33 said she preferred to have a break.

Presiding Judge Kerber reopened the session by saying that the judges used the break to do some research. They came across a German newspaper article detailing presidential amnesties in Syria. Copies of the article would be handed over to the parties and the court interpreter would provide a simultaneous interpretation for the Accused. Kerber read out the article dated March 25, 2011.

Defense counsel Böcker said this press-article would be contradictory to other articles. However, it would be clear in any event that these presidential amnesties were never executed. He said the defense might submit a declaration in this regard at a later point if necessary. Defense counsel Fratzky added an article from the German news magazine "Der Spiegel" dated May 31, 2011, details the presidential general amnesty that his colleague Böcker was referring to earlier.

Böcker added that the article which Judge Kerber just read out would certainly not be the ultimate truth. Presiding Judge Kerber said the defense would be free to submit a formal statement in this regard.

Defense counsel Fratzky mentioned that his client's statement regarding the events described by [daughter 2] and P33 were read out to P33 several times now. Fratzky said the defense requests that photos of Tawfiq Younes and Jamil Hassan would be presented to P33. Judge Kerber asked Fratzky to tell the court where to find these photos on the case file. Defense counsel Böcker said if anyone knows where to find these photos on the casefile, the defense wanted them to be presented to P33.

Judge Kerber said P33 had to wait for a long time now. Judge Wiedner would now begin his questioning regarding the second thematic complex [[daughter 2]'s and P33's arrest and detention].

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner explained he now wants to know more about [daughter 2]'s and P33's arrest and detention, and asked P33 to describe the context, time frame and details of how this happened. P33 described that "the regime started to react strongly." There was a massacre in Al-Houla where 50 children and babies were "butchered" with knives. P33 said this event left its marks on the Syrian society. Young people and the opposition reacted to it and many people were arrested all across the country. P33 said she was very worried about [daughter 2] because she was active [demonstrating] as well.

Wiedner wanted to know when this happened. P33 said it was in May 2012. [daughter 2] and her friends decided to participate in a sit-in. P33 therefore decided to be there [at the sit-in] as well to protect [daughter 2]. P33 said she was always close to [daughter 2], but the Mukhabarat somehow found out that the sit-in was supposed to take place. P33 recalled that demonstrators had banners with sayings against the Al-Houla massacre and against the killing of children and babies. Suddenly many members of the security forces appeared and first fired warning shots in the air. People started fleeing to the side alleys. P33 said she was in great fear and hysterical because she could no longer see [daughter 2]. Security forces noticed P33's behavior and knew that she participated in the demonstration as well. P33 said she was pulled inside a van that was standing at the entrance of a small side alley. After 5 minutes, P33 saw how [daughter 2] was pulled inside the van as well. [daughter 2]'s glasses were broken, and her nose was bleeding. P33 recalled that [daughter 2] was surprised to see her mother in the van and asked the security officers if she could sit next to this woman [her mother P33] when she saw her. P33 said the security officers told them how to sit and everyone was silent. There were around 18 to 20 people in the van. P33 further described to the court how the van drove to Division 40, which would be in Jisr al-Abyad and belonged to Makhlof. P33 said they were beaten when they got out of the van. When they had to walk up the stairs, there was one security officer standing on each step, beating the detainees who had to take the stairs. P33 said she and the other detainees were then told to face the wall and fold their hands. They were later taken to big room where they had to wait. The officers asked everyone for their names, but only took [daughter 2] with them. [daughter 2] was then taken back to the room and taken out a second time. P33 said the guard who took [daughter 2] back to the room the second time yelled at her and accused her of being responsible for his friend's, Jalabi's, death. He tried to attack [daughter 2] but his colleagues held him back. P33 said [daughter 2] later told her that she was already beaten before she was taken inside the van. That was why her glasses were broken and her nose was bleeding.

P33 further described that when they had to wait in the big room, some officers looked at her, saying “she is the mother of the two denigrators and will now be held accountable.” P33 said she was quiet and later, at night, taken downstairs to the same van and taken to Al-Khatib Branch. P33 added that since she had already been there before, she knew it was Al-Khatib Branch. A new episode started there, said P33.

Wiedner asked if P33 was able to see the way to Al-Khatib or if she was blindfolded. P33 said she was not blindfolded but had to lower her head during the ride.

Wiedner wanted to know if P33 was also interrogated at Division 40. P33 said only [daughter 2] was interrogated there. They [interrogators] logged in to her Facebook account and wanted to see her posts. However, one of [daughter 2]’s friends deleted her account immediately after she was arrested.

Wiedner asked how P33 knew that. P33 said she found out later.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened to P33 in Al-Khatib Branch. P33 said all detainees were immediately taken to the basement, where their personal belongings were confiscated. Two women frisked them before they were taken to a collective cell, measuring 3x3 meters. The cell was very small and had no windows as it was in the underground and had a broken toilet. P33 said she was in shock and no one talked to them [new detainees] for two days. P33 said she could not recognize any of the faces there.

Wiedner asked whether P33’s daughter was still with her at that time. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner asked how many people were inside the 3x3 meters cell. P33 said there were 18 to 20 people, maybe more.

Wiedner asked if there were only women. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P33 to continue. P33 described that due to her high blood pressure, she always had to take pills. When she was without her pills for two days, her blood pressure was so high that she suddenly screamed before falling unconscious. Her daughter was so afraid, she knocked against the iron door of the cell, screaming for help. P33 said a guard opened the door and saw P33 lying on the floor. He closed the door to talk to his boss. P33 said they [she and her daughter] were allowed to go to the room next door, around 30 minutes after the guard first opened the door. A doctor and two nurses were waiting in this room. The doctor gave P33 pills to lower her blood pressure and painkillers. P33 said she tried to give the doctor her phone number, so he could call her family to let them know about her and [daughter 2]’s situation. However, the doctor was too afraid and declined. P33 said she and her daughter were then taken back to the collective cell where [daughter 2] was called for interrogation four days after. When [daughter 2] was taken back to the cell after her interrogation, she did not react to P33’s questions. P33 described that everyone in the cell was interrogated separately by calling their names and taking them to interrogation. P33 described that the interrogators at her own interrogation told her they would be nice to her, however, they had to be harsh to her daughter. P33 had to sign blank sheets of paper and the interrogators told her to be nice, otherwise the blank sheets would be filled with whatever they wanted.

Wiedner wanted to know where P33’s interrogation took place. P33 said she had to go to the ground floor [first floor] and back after her interrogation.

Wiedner asked whether P33 could see her interrogator or if her eyes were covered. P33 said she was not blindfolded.

Wiedner asked if she consequently was able to identify her interrogator. P33 denied.

Wiedner concluded that P33 was not interrogated by Anwar Raslan. P33 confirmed.

Wiedner further asked if the interrogator asked P33 any specific questions. P33 denied, saying that the questions were rather general. The interrogator wanted to know why she was at the Branch and why she had been arrested. P33 said after she signed the blank sheets, she was taken back downstairs [to the collective cell], before [daughter 2] was called for interrogation. P33 recalled that when [daughter 2] came back to the cell after this interrogation, she told P33 that she was exhausted. When P33 asked her if she was beaten [P33 started crying] [daughter 2] denied, saying she was just tired. P33 described that [daughter 2] was lying in her mother's lap for around 15 minutes before P33's name was called. [daughter 2] told her to not be afraid, adding that she would be released for sure. P33 told the court that there were four or five solitary cells opposite to the collective cell where she was first detained. When P33's name was called, she was taken directly to one of the solitary cells and the door was closed behind her. P33 said the cell was 1.5 meters wide. The iron door had a small window and a 3 to 4 centimeters gap to the floor. P33 said she was shocked when she heard that [daughter 2] was called. She heard her screaming, asking where she would be taken. P33 said she then heard a loud bang and could see through the gap below her cell's door how [daughter 2] fell on the floor and was then pulled away. P33 said she was alone in the solitary cell for four days. She was allowed to use the toilet every 12 hours. Detainees were called one after the other to use the toilet. P33 said she was always relieved when she could see [daughter 2]'s shoes through the gap below her cell's door. That meant [daughter 2] was still able to walk. P33 said she sometimes wanted to knock on her door to let her daughter know she was there.

Defense counsel Böcker interrupted saying that since P33 was crying and sobbing, they should take a break. P33 replied she would be fine and want to continue her testimony. P33 then described that she never dared to knock on the door because she was too afraid that something would happen to [daughter 2] if she did. On the fourth day, the door of P33's cell was opened, however not at the usual toilet time. P33 saw how [daughter 2], covered in blood, entered her cell. P33 said she was very relieved to be with her daughter. [daughter 2] cried a lot and apologized to P33 for putting her in this position. P33 said [daughter 2] thought her mother had been released. They had to stay in the cell together for around 18 days before P33 was released.

Judge Wiedner assured P33 she could ask for a break at any time if needed. P33 thanked Wiedner, saying that she would be able to continue without a break. Wiedner then concluded that P33 was detained in a solitary cell together with her daughter and asked how big this cell was. P33 said the cell was 1.5 meters long and 0.75 meters wide.

Wiedner asked if P33's daughter told her what happened to her. P33 said when the door was opened to use the toilet, her daughter mentioned to the guards several times that she knew Anwar Raslan and requested to talk to him. According to P33, her daughter was in pain due to the interrogations, one time her nose started bleeding and she did not know what to do. Her clothes were covered in blood and when [daughter 2] saw the blood, she collected it with her clothes and threw it at the walls of the cell. When a guard opened the door after [daughter 2] knocked on the door, he thought [daughter 2] would die. P33 said she assumes that in this situation, the guard thought it would be best if [daughter 2] would be with her mother, so she was taken to P33's cell.

Wiedner asked if [daughter 2] told P33 anything about abuse, mistreatment, or sexual assaults. P33 said there were no sexual assaults but harassment. Someone tried to touch [daughter 2] and asked her if she was a virgin, which [daughter 2] affirmed. P33 said there were no assaults, however.

Wiedner further wanted to know if [daughter 2] mentioned any injuries or if P33 saw injuries on [daughter 2]. P33 described that [daughter 2] was in a very bad condition, she was lying in her mother's arms all the time. Someone poured hot tea or boiling water over [daughter 2], as her skin was burnt on the right side of her torso. P33 further explained that one was only allowed to use the toilet twice a day and one bottle of water, which was not bigger than around 0.5 liters had to be used by [daughter 2] and her and could only be refilled every 12 hours. Ever since this detention, P33 has issues with her kidneys because she was only able to use the toilet twice a day and did not get enough water. What increased the suffering, according to P33, was the fact that, especially in her solitary cell, she heard voices screaming of torture all the time. She always thought that [daughter 2] could be one of them. P33 added that she could hear everything through the iron door of her solitary cell. She was also able to hear when young men arrived as new detainees and were forced to strip naked and bend down. P33 said she once heard a man saying 'I am an old man. I could be your father. I am a lawyer and the fact that I have to get undressed is outrageous.' P33 said the man still had to get undressed. He was insulted and the guards started insulting his god as well. P33 said she further saw blood on the floor and walls on her way to the toilet.

Wiedner asked if [daughter 2] mentioned whether she had contact with Raslan during her detention. P33 denied, saying they did not talk about that. P33 added this, however, happened during the four days she was alone. P33 recalled that she was called by a guard and taken outside her cell. The guard asked P33 if anything happened to her and if she got her medicine. P33 said she denied, and the guard told her that she would soon be allowed to take her medicine. P33 said after she was released, she found out why the guard was so nice to her: [daughter 1] gave an interview for Al-Arabiya during which she said that her mother was detained and sick, and if anything would happen to her mother, the regime would be responsible for it. [P33's counsel Dr. Kroker had a short consultation with P33]

Presiding Judge Kerber concluded that P33 was only interrogated once. P33 confirmed.

Kerber asked again if the witness was only asked general questions and told to sign blank sheets of paper. P33 confirmed.

Kerber wanted to know if P33 was told to influence her daughters. P33 said she was told that when she was about to be released. She told the guards she had been detained for 23 days, asking for the reason for her arrests and detention. The guards replied that P33 had to learn that she raised her children to hatred.

Kerber asked if P33 saw dead or injured people at the Branch. P33 denied.

Kerber asked if P33's orifices were inspected. P33 denied, explaining she was thoroughly frisked, but not inside her orifices.

Kerber further wanted to know if P33 had to endure sexual assault or if she was threatened that she or her daughters would have to suffer sexual assaults. P33 denied.

Judge Wiedner asked how long P33 was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. P33 said she was there for 23 days.

Wiedner asked the same question regarding [daughter 2]. P33 explained that [daughter 2] was released one or two hours after P33 and transferred to the Military Intelligence Branch. Wiedner concluded that [daughter 2] was consequently not released but transferred, asking P33 when [daughter 2] was eventually released. P33 said she was detained for a total of three months, however, P33 did not remember the exact date of [daughter 2]'s release.

Wiedner wanted to know how exactly P33 was threatened, insulted, or mistreated in Al-Khatib Branch. P33 explained that on the way to the toilet she was always hounded and had to endure bad insults. In general, guards insulted her and her god.

Wiedner asked if P33 was beaten during detention. P33 denied.

Wiedner wanted to know if P33 met Anwar Raslan during her detention. P33 explained that on her release she was taken upstairs where Raslan told her he had nothing against her, and she would be released. When P33 asked about her daughter, Raslan told her not to worry, and said P33 was allowed to go.

Wiedner concluded that P33 was in Raslan's office. P33 confirmed.

Wiedner said this would be a difficult question to answer, nonetheless he would like to know if P33 recognized the office from before. P33 said she assumed it was Raslan's office. It as a luxurious room with many files. The room was not longer than 5 meters.

Wiedner asked if P33 was alone with Raslan. P33 said there was one other man who took her to the office and then received the order to release her.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan interrogated P33 in this situation or why she was in his office. P33 said she was there so Raslan could tell her that he allowed her to be released.

Wiedner asked if Raslan consequently gave the order to release her. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner asked if she was released immediately after that. P33 affirmed, adding it was around 10PM at night.

Wiedner asked P33 if she wanted to have a short break. P33 affirmed.

Wiedner recalled P33 telling the court that one of the most terrible things about her detention in Al-Khatib Branch was the constant screams of torture that she heard. He asked her how often she heard them "downstairs" [in her cell]. P33 said she heard them most of the time, adding she did not hear them always, but most of the time.

Wiedner asked if she also heard these screams when she was "upstairs" [interrogation room and offices]. P33 affirmed.

Regarding detention conditions, Wiedner asked P33 to describe the food supplies at the Branch. P33 explained that she had to sleep on a very thin blanket. There were lice everywhere, and P33 "even got an allergy." She further described that her skin was itching all the time, as did her daughter's skin.

She said they had to endure these conditions “on top of the overall detention conditions” and went on to say that they were only allowed to fill their 1-liter water bottle every 12 hours when they were using the toilet. The 1-liter bottle then had to be used by two people for 12 hours. P33 further described that they got food twice a day. After they got the food, they could use the toilet. Regarding the food, P33 said they got a flat bread with either rice or bulgur around noon and a flat bread with some yoghurt as their second meal.

Wiedner wanted to know if the food was enough. P33 said if one actually ate the food, it was enough. However, she did not want to eat and lost 9 kilos during the 23 days of detention.

Wiedner asked about the air inside the very small cell that P33 shared with her daughter. P33 laughed, saying that there was no air conditioning. She explained that fresh air only got inside the cell through a small, barred window above the 2-meter-high cell door. P33 added they could not sleep at the same time and had to take turns sleeping.

Wiedner wanted to know why they were unable to sleep at the same time, asking if it was because they were detained in May/June. P33 said it was very hot inside the cell. They moistened their lips to get at least some liquid to their bodies. They could not take off their clothes because the guards constantly opened the small window to check what was going on inside the cell.

Wiedner recalled that P33 told the court the cells were located in the basement, asking her if there was daylight or if they could tell day from night because for example, the lights were switched on and off accordingly. P33 said there were no lights inside the cell, the only light in the cell shone through the small, barred window from the hallways in front of the cell.

Wiedner asked if P33’s relatives were informed about her and her daughter’s whereabouts. P33 explained that the news about her and her daughters arrest spread in the media and on the internet. The doctor who treated her in the Branch, [REDACTED], saw their pictures on the internet and was able to tell P33’s husband that she and her daughter were at Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know if P33’s family was officially informed by officers at Al-Khatib or the General Intelligence Directorate. P33 denied, adding that an activist posted photos of her and her daughter on Facebook. This activist was also arrested. P33 assumed that the doctor saw these pictures on Facebook, recognized her and her daughter, and felt sorry for them.

Wiedner asked if P33 saw children or juveniles in Al-Khatib Branch. P33 denied.

Wiedner recalled P33 explaining how [daughter 2] was taken to P33’s solitary cell by using her own blood to get out of her previous cell. Wiedner then asked P33 if [daughter 2] told her any details about how she tried to get out of her previous cell. P33 said [daughter 2] did that [using her own blood] just to get out of the cell she was detained. According to P33, [daughter 2] did not know that P33 was still at the Branch.

Wiedner further recalled P33 telling the court that [daughter 2] approached one of the guards in an attempt to get out of the cell. P33 confirmed, adding that every time [daughter 2] was allowed to use the toilet, she begged to talk to Raslan because she knew him from the time her sister was detained.

Wiedner asked if her begging was successful, if [daughter 2] met Raslan. P33 denied.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, asking if [daughter 2] did not tell P33 about it or if [daughter 2] did not meet Raslan. P33 said she tried to find out, but [daughter 2] did not want to talk about it. All that P33 cared about was that [daughter 2] had not been sexually abused.

Judge Wiedner asked if what P33 just described was her only detention. P33 affirmed.

The Judges had a short discussion after which Presiding Judge Kerber said she would now hand over to the prosecutors and maybe intervene if the judges had any more questions arising from the prosecutors' questioning.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge asked P33 to describe the condition the detainees were in after returning from interrogations. P33 said she saw how a Palestinian woman, around the same age as P33, returned to the cell in a horrible condition. It was obvious that this woman was beaten. P33 recalled a young woman who was taken for interrogation, which lasted ten minutes. After she returned to the cell, she was again called for interrogation. When she returned from the second interrogation, she said she experienced horrible things. However, P33 did not ask about any details. P33 said the young woman sat in a corner, crying for the entire night. One could see bruises on her face, throat, and chest. P33 described that the detainees in the cell tried to comfort the ones who returned from interrogation. However, they never asked for their names, as this "was best for everyone" [to stay anonymous].

Klinge wanted to know if any detainee's clothes were ripped. P33 affirmed, saying the young woman's clothes were ripped.

Klinge further asked if P33 saw blood or bruises on other detainees. P33 affirmed.

Klinge asked about [daughter 2]'s mental and physical condition during detention. P33 was said [daughter 2] was in constant shock, she cried and was on the ropes.

Klinge wanted to know if P33 believed [daughter 2] when she told P33 after an interrogation that nothing happened to her. P33 said she only asked [daughter 2] whether she was sexually harassed or abused and believed that [daughter 2] told her the truth about that.

Klinge asked if P33 saw bruises on [daughter 2] or noticed something when [daughter 2] was walking. P33 said there was no option to walk, so she did not notice that [daughter 2] was hobbling. However, [daughter 2] had hematomas all over her body.

Klinge wanted to know if P33 saw malnourished detainees. P33 denied, explaining that she was in the shared cell for only four days.

Klinge asked if P33 was able to shower or wash herself. P33 laughed and denied. Klinge asked if she never had the chance [to shower]. P33 denied, saying her skin got inflamed due to the bad hygienic condition.

Klinge wanted to know if P33 knew the names of individual guards at the Branch. P33 said she only knew nicknames. One of the guards was called Abu Ghadab, another one was called Abu Shamleh.

Klinge asked P33 to describe Abu Ghadab. P33 said he was brutal; his nickname would already indicate that: he was the "father of anger".

Klinge wanted to know if P33 learned anything about the hierarchy at Al-Khatib while she was detained there. P33 said there was a hierarchy: some people gave orders, others followed orders.

Klinge asked if Anwar Raslan had an important position at the Branch, recalling that P33 described earlier how Raslan gave orders to others when P33 was released. P33 said the guard in this situation [when she was released] was afraid of Raslan.

Klinge wanted to know if P33 suffered any long-term consequences from her detention. P33 said she still had issues with her kidneys.

Klinge asked if she also suffered psychological long-term consequences. P33 affirmed, adding that they occurred recently. P33 said she though she was done with these issues, however, they reoccurred.

Klinge wanted to know if P33 received psychosocial treatment. P33 denied.

Klinge said he had one last question for P33 if she felt comfortable answering it. He wanted to know about the worst part of P33's detention. P33 started crying and explained that the worst part for her was, that her daughter was in a different cell and she was unable to help her daughter, although she was so close to her. P33 said she was constantly worried that something would happen to her daughter.

***

Judge Wiedner explained he used one of the previous breaks to contact the BKA and ask for photos. Presiding Judge Kerber added the court would now visually inspect two photos that CCI Deußing sent the judges via email. Kerber asked P33 to identify the people shown in the photos.

P33 said she thinks this is the same person than in the first photo.

Presiding Judge Kerber said these answers would be sufficient. Judge Wiedner explained that he asked CCI Deußing for Photos of Jamil Hassan and Tawfiq Younes. The two photos that were just shown in court were photos of Jamil Hassan, as there would be no photo of Tawfiq Younes on the casefile as Deußing told him.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer asked P33 if she was able to talk to [daughter 2] without being disturbed once [daughter 2] and P33 were in the same solitary cell. P33 denied, explaining that they were in a cell right next to the guards. The guards would knock on the door at the lowest noise.

Scharmer wanted to know if P33 spoke to [daughter 2] about details of [daughter 2]'s detention once they were both released. P33 denied, saying that [daughter 2] did not want to talk about it.

Plaintiff counsel Reiger wanted to know if P33 and her family had to pay money to get [daughter 2] released. P33 said to be totally honest, they had to pay money to the Military Intelligence to get her daughter free. She asked if Reiger wanted to know more details. Reiger said her answer would be sufficient for him.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Fratzky wanted to know if [daughter 2] mentioned why she wanted to talk to Raslan when she was detained. P33 said [daughter 2] wanted to tell Raslan that he knew the family and that she was innocent.

Fratzky asked why [daughter 2] wanted to talk to Raslan in particular and not to someone else. P33 said this was because Raslan was the head of the Division.

Defense counsel Böcker asked where exactly P33's family had to pay money and which daughter was released because of that money. P33 described that [daughter 2] was transferred from the Military Intelligence Branch to Adra prison. The papers for her release were supposed to be signed by the Military Intelligence. P33 and her family approached the relevant judges many times, however, they did not want to release [daughter 2]. The family therefore paid a bribe.

Böcker wanted to know when they paid the bribe. P33 said it was at the end of [daughter 2]'s detention, around July 18, [2012].

Böcker concluded that the bribe was paid a long time after [daughter 2] was detained in Al-Khatib or the Military Intelligence Branch. P33 affirmed, adding that [daughter 2] was detained in Al-Khatib Branch for 23 days, before being transferred to the Military Intelligence and then to Adra prison. However, [daughter 2]'s file stayed with the Military Intelligence who was in charge of releasing [daughter 2].

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked P33, she was dismissed as witness. P33 thanked Judge Kerber, adding in German: "You [2nd person singular] are a very nice person." Judge Kerber thanked P33 for the compliment and thanked her saying "Shukran".

Judge Kerber explained to the parties she would hand out copies of the legal reference and the relevant Arabic translation. She added the prosecutors would now have time to issue their formal statement until April 25, 2021. Kerber further explained that the court received a letter from attorney Scharmer, requesting the inclusion of P33 as plaintiff. Kerber asked if any of the parties had objections to this, defense, prosecutors and other plaintiff counsels said they had no objections, agreeing that the judges could now make a decision on this matter in a timely manner. Judge Kerber went on to say that the judges further received two requests to include two other people as plaintiffs as well. Both people were not yet interviewed. Kerber said the BKA asked the Berlin State Criminal Police Office (LKA) for the interviews of both people, however up to this very moment, CCI Deußing sent the judges a transcript of the interview of one of them, however, without attachments. Kerber considered the transcript to be sufficient, nonetheless. The second person had not been interviewed yet, the judges told the relevant counsel to agree on a date until April 27, 2021. If counsel would not cooperate in finding a date within the given time frame, the police would be free to set any date. Defense counsel Böcker asked who the relevant counsel was. Kerber said her name was Otto-Hanschmann.

Proceedings adjourned at 3:05PM.

The next session will be on May 5, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 35

Hearing Date: May 5, 2021

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

On day 72 of trial, the Court heard the testimony of Fayeze Sarah, a 70-year-old Syrian journalist, author, and politician who resides in London. He discussed his background as an opposition leader going back to the 1970s and his involvement with the national coalition. Fayeze Sarah also described his three experiences in detention. During his last detention in 2011, he was briefly taken to Branch 251 where he was insulted by a group of intelligence personnel before his interrogation with someone whom he could not see. He later learned that Anwar Raslan was the person who conducted the interrogation. Fayeze Sarah emphasized that this trial is beyond Raslan; it is about holding accountable the Syrian regime, under which Raslan was also a victim.

Day 72 of Trial – May 05, 2020

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were eight spectators and three members of the press in the audience, including a court illustrator.

Klinge and Polz represented the prosecution. Plaintiff's Counsel Kroker was not present.

Counselor Mohammad was permitted not to wear his cloak by Judge Kerber who said that the honour of the court would not be damaged.

Judge Kerber confirmed that Fayeze Sarah arrived to Germany the prior day. She also announced that the session would start at 10:30AM on May 19, 2021. A witness who was invited for the sessions on May 19-20 may or may not be able to attend – there was a 50/50 chance. Even if the witness does not attend, court will still be in session.

***

***

Fayeze Sarah arrived at 10:05AM. Instructions were read and Fayeze Sarah was informed of his rights as a witness.

Testimony of Fayeze Sarah

Judge Kerber asked Fayeze Sarah if he is related to the accused by blood or marriage. Fayeze Sarah said no. This was the first time he saw the accused, and he did not know the accused.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Before giving his testimony, Fayeze Sarah thanked Judge Kerber and expressed his honour to be in a court that serves Syrians who were treated unjustly. He then told his story. Fayeze Sarah was detained for the first time on March 29, 1978 because of his involvement in pro-opposition activities. He was released on February 10, 1980. During that detention, he was held in Branch 251. Fayeze Sarah was detained a second time in Branch 251 on January 3, 2008 for being an opposition leader involved with the Damascus Declaration. He had a court hearing alongside 12 of his colleagues and was sentenced to 30 months in prison. He was released eight months before the March 2011 revolution.

When the revolution started, Fayeze Sarah immediately said that he was pro-revolution. Then on April 30, 2011 a patrol from the Internal Security Services stormed Fayeze Sarah's office, arrested him (in front of his wife), and took him to Al-Khatib Branch where he was looked at with disdain from the moment he entered. This period of detention was far worse for Fayeze Sarah than his previous interactions with the intelligence services. When he first arrived, his hands were cuffed behind his back and he was blindfolded. He entered a room where he was met by a group of personnel. They insulted him using language that was not normally said to "special detainees" who were highly revered, then they took him to a nearby room. He could not see (because he was blindfolded), but he heard someone say, "bring a chair for Mr. Fayeze Sarah." Fayeze Sarah felt slightly more secure after he was referenced as "mister." The reference meant that he was known to the interrogator, unlike the people in the previous room who clearly did not know him based on the fact that they insulted him.

The interrogator asked Fayeze Sarah if he organized demonstrations at Mohammad Mosque in Masaken Barzeh مَسَاكِن بَرْزَة. Fayeze Sarah denied the accusation and mentioned that he did not know of a neighbourhood named Masaken Barzeh or Mohammad Mosque. He did not even pray. The interrogator asked why Fayeze Sarah appeared on Al-Jazeera and attacked the Syrian media. Fayeze Sarah confirmed that he spoke to Al-Jazeera and that he criticised the Syrian media. This interrogation was essentially a recapitulation of the Al-Jazeera situation which happened three days prior to his arrest. [He noted that he and Raslan were now smiling as they heard a story from ten years ago.] After the interrogation, he was transferred to Branch 285 – Kafar Souseh كَفْرَسُوسَة, along with George Sabra جورج صبرا (who became the head of the council of the opposition). Then they were both transferred to Adra عَدْرَا prison where they stayed for a month before being released on May 11, 2011. One of Fayeze Sarah's friends was a lawyer, and he paid Fayeze Sarah's 5000 Lira (100 USD) bail.

Judge Wiedner noted that Fayeze Sarah was politically active. He asked Fayeze Sarah to describe his position in the opposition and his activities before he was detained. Fayeze Sarah explained that he was in the leftist opposition to Hafez Al-Assad in the 1970s. The regime imprisoned all of its opponents at this time. Fayeze Sarah was detained without a court hearing for this reason. He was charged with establishing an unofficial organization against the government ("or something like that"), and his detention lasted a little over a month.

Wiedner asked why Fayeze Sarah was detained for a second time in 2008. Fayeze Sarah explained that, after the Damascus Declaration (around November 30, 2007), an intelligence officer called Fayeze Sarah and asked to speak with him in person. Although the officer said that the matter was urgent, Fayeze Sarah declined. The officer kept calling and Fayeze Sarah ignored him. Fayeze Sarah was detained on January 3, 2008 from his office. This was the first time that he was told "you are under arrest" when he was being detained, which reminded Fayeze Sarah of an Egyptian drama. He was then taken to Branch 251 where he received papers (he stayed in the car outside of Branch 251 – the officers got them). Then he was taken to Branch 285.

Wiedner asked if Faye Sarah was convicted of a charge in 2008? Faye Sarah said that he was transferred to the second criminal court in Damascus. There were court sessions and lawyers. He was charged with weakening national sentiment, undermining the national will, and establishing an opposition organization. These charges could be applied to anyone.

Wiedner recalled Faye Sarah's statement that he was released eight months before the revolution started in 2011. Wiedner asked if Faye Sarah was an active opposition member at this time and, if so, what were his activities. Faye Sarah explained that he took six or seven months to take stock of his situation after he was released from prison. But he was interested in what was happening in Syria. He anticipated a revolution and he thought the regime had too. In February 2011, Brigadier General Tawfiq Younes (the head of Branch 251) requested to speak with Faye Sarah. Faye Sarah noted that he was not active at this time. There were no [opposition groups] aside from the Damascus Declaration and Faye Sarah was not involved.

Wiedner asked if Faye Sarah participated in demonstrations. Faye Sarah confirmed.

Wiedner asked Faye Sarah about the situation in April 2011, if there were demonstrations at this time, and how the regime reacted. Faye Sarah explained that [the regime] tried to tell people that nothing would happen in Syria, and if something did happen, then the regime would solve the problem. Regardless, people expressed their concern over a potential revolution on social media and in shadow chat rooms. In the two months before the revolution started, young people held events outside the embassies of other countries where revolutions were happening, like Egypt, Libya, and Tunisia. Faye Sarah knew a lot of these people, among whom were former members of civil society and former politicians. These events were attended by only a few dozen people. People lit candles, cheered, sang, and discussed.

Wiedner asked if the regime reacted violently to demonstrations in April 2011. Faye Sarah confirmed. He noted that the regime uses violence, but not as a habit: [the underlying issue] was that [the regime] does not know how to interact with people. During the Damascus Spring, the protestors made an effort to ask the regime how they should communicate with it. They did not want to be secretive or bring about change violently. Rather, they wanted to [have open dialogue] and be peaceful. But even the protestors who said they wanted peace were beaten and detained. So, the simple answer is yes [the regime reacted violently] beginning in Dar'a درعا on March 18, 2011.

Wiedner asked if the reason why Faye Sarah was detained was because he participated in demonstrations and organized them. Faye Sarah clarified that he was only accused of organizing demonstrations at Mohammad Mosque in Masaken Barzeh. He had told the interrogator that he didn't even know of a neighborhood called Masaken Barzeh, and if he wanted to organize a demonstration, then he would have done it near his office because it was close to Al-Hasan Mosque [a famous mosque in the Al-Midan neighborhood where demonstrations often started]. He participated in demonstrations.

Wiedner asked Faye Sarah if there could have been another reason for his detention. Faye Sarah thought the reason could have been the Al-Jazeera debate or an official meeting he attended with Samira Al-Masalma سميرة المسالمة, a regime defector and the editor-in-chief of Tishreen تشرين newspaper which was linked to the presidential palace, as well as General Manaf Tlas مناف طلاس (close to Bashar [Al-Assad] and the son of Mostafa Tlas مصطفى طلاس) and Omran Az-Zo'bi عمران الزعبي (who became the Minister of Information in the government of Riyad Hijab رياض حجاب soon thereafter).

Kerber clarified that the official reason for Fayeze Sarah's detention was that he organized demonstrations. She asked Fayeze Sarah if there were other reasons, such as if someone reported him to the intelligence services. Fayeze Sarah did not think that the reason for his detention was that he was reported. He had been reported many times before [and was not detained]. So, either they wanted to detain him any way they could, or there was a misunderstanding.

Kerber asked if the authorities knew about Fayeze Sarah's meeting with Al-Jazeera. Fayeze Sarah confirmed.

Wiedner recalled Fayeze Sarah's statement that he had never seen Raslan before, but Fayeze Sarah told the police that Raslan interrogated him. Wiedner asked how Fayeze Sarah knew that he was interrogated by Raslan. Fayeze Sarah explained that he was in Istanbul as a member of the coalition three years after he was interrogated in Branch 251. The coalition's representative, [Mohammad Al-Morawweh] told Fayeze Sarah that he spoke with Raslan about Fayeze Sarah. [Fayeze Sarah originally said that the representative's name was Mohammad Al-Matroud محمد المطرو , but he clarified the name after the break.] During that conversation, Raslan told [Al-Morawweh] that he interrogated Fayeze Sarah and asked [Al-Morawweh] for Fayeze Sarah's phone number. This was when Fayeze Sarah learned that Raslan interrogated him and why he said [at the beginning of the hearing] that this was the first time he had seen Raslan (he was blindfolded during the actual interrogation).

Wiedner asked if Fayeze Sarah had personal contact with Raslan after he learned that Raslan interrogated him. Fayeze Sarah said no. Al-Morawweh gave Raslan Fayeze Sarah's phone number, but then nothing happened.

Wiedner asked if Fayeze Sarah knew about Raslan when Fayeze Sarah was still in Syria. Fayeze Sarah said that he knew about Raslan generally. There was talk of Raslan, but Fayeze Sarah knew that a lot of the gossip in Syria was not necessarily accurate.

Wiedner asked Fayeze Sarah what people said about Raslan. Fayeze Sarah explained that no one thought Raslan [was a saint]. They said he was an officer with the intelligence services and the head of the interrogation division, and that "his body fits clothes." The same way an employer would fire someone who did not do his job, the intelligence services would fire an officer who had no value to them.

Wiedner asked Fayeze Sarah about his personal experiences with Raslan and how Raslan treated him in 2011. Fayeze Sarah explained that he could not separate his [good treatment] by Raslan from how he was insulted and threatened by the other personnel. This was the first time he felt goaded into responding in a manner that would warrant his punishment or death. He felt that the treatment was interconnected because the personnel would not have done something of which Raslan would not approve. He did not believe that Raslan was good, and only the people who surrounded him were vulgar (which is what some pro-government people said about Al-Assad and the people who surrounded him).

Wiedner quoted Raslan: "[Fayeze Sarah] was treated and received hospitably. He was offered drinks and the interrogation lasted for an hour." Fayeze Sarah clarified that Raslan asked his staff to bring Fayeze Sarah a chair. But Fayeze Sarah speculated that Raslan remembered how Fayeze Sarah refused to sit and was not offered a drink, nor would Fayeze Sarah have asked for a drink. Fayeze Sarah knew dozens of people who were summoned for coffee and remained in prison for twenty years.

Wiedner asked about Branch 251's reputation. Faye Sarah said that Branch 251 was involved with everything. It was founded in the beginning of the 1970s to be a local branch in Damascus. Captain Farid An-Noqri فريد النقيب became the head of the Branch. He was later detained and tortured in Branch 251 because he worked for the Iraqi Ba'th Party. Mohammad Kheirbek محمد خيربك [who was known as Abu Wa'el أبو وائل] became the new head of the branch and served for twenty years. He was an influential general in the intelligence services. He changed the Branch's policies to reflect political situations, like the relationship with the Iraqi Shiite and Lebanese political forces, and profile of the people in the Syrian government and businesses. He was one of the few officers who were directly connected to Hafez Al-Assad.

Wiedner recalled that Faye Sarah was detained multiple times in Branch 251. He asked if Faye Sarah noticed any changes in detention conditions before and after 2011. Faye Sarah said that he was just passing through the branch during his last two detentions, so he did not see anything because he was taken directly to the interrogator and then left. When he was detained in 1978, Faye Sarah was interrogated, tortured, saw other prisoners, and saw prison guards. Criminal methods were used then. However, he did not personally experience [any criminal methods] in 2008 or 2011, except for the group of personnel [Faye Sarah called them scumbags, the interpreter used the term "young bad people" throughout the testimony.] in the room nearby where he was interrogated.

Wiedner asked if Faye Sarah was subjected to abuse in 2011 other than what he already described. Faye Sarah explained that the situation he described only lasted for 15-30 minutes. Also, he and George Sabra were put in a cell the size of a table in front of him [2x1m] with a height slightly above Faye Sarah's head [he was 185cm]. After about 30 minutes, a third person was who was three times bigger than Faye Sarah was brought to the cell. This man was from Al-Mo'addamiyyeh المعصمية, a town adjacent to Damascus and the Al-Mazzeħ المزة neighborhood where the most heinous crimes were committed. Faye Sarah thought this was a "top" [said in English] [situation of] torture and there was nothing worse than that. He recalled how Judge Kerber called for a break because the air in the courtroom was bad. "Imagine the air there and how much the contempt of human beings was." This is an example of torture applied to prisoners.

Wiedner asked Faye Sarah to confirm that he did not experience physical violence. Faye Sarah confirmed.

Wiedner asked why Faye Sarah thought he was not beaten or subjected to physical violence. Faye Sarah said that the people who were beaten and tortured during the revolution were young and did not have files with the intelligence services. People like Faye Sarah who had big files were not beaten because the intelligence services already knew everything about them. When someone goes to the intelligence service, the person is given paper and a pen, then told to write everything about himself since he was born until the current moment. Faye Sarah had to do that many times. He used to tell the intelligence services that "it is not enough. Take more paper." Now the intelligence services wanted to know about the new detainees, especially the young ones, so they beat and coerced the detainees to get information. Faye Sarah heard of many confirmed stories where people could not leave [detention] until they wrote a statement that they were members of armed groups and that they killed people from security forces and the army. They did not need to torture Faye Sarah because they already had information on him.

Wiedner recalled Faye Sarah's statement during police questioning that detainees got treated differently depending on their age, health, position, and media coverage of their cases. Wiedner asked if those factors were among the reasons why Faye Sarah was treated relatively well. Faye Sarah confirmed.

The Prosecution did not have questions.

Questioning by Defence Counsel Böcker and Fratzky

Defence Counsel Böcker noted that Faye Sarah was detained on April 20, 2011. He asked if the interrogation took place on the same day. Faye Sarah confirmed.

Böcker asked Faye Sarah how long he was [in Branch 251] before he departed. Faye Sarah clarified that he was not allowed to wear his watch while he was detained, but he estimated that he spent 30 minutes between the group of personnel and [Raslan]. There were procedures, like handing over jewellery and money. He and Sabra were taken to Branch 285 on the same day. This all took maybe four or five hours.

Böcker recalled that Faye Sarah heard pages turning [during the interrogation]. He asked if Faye Sarah saw or heard anything else. Faye Sarah clarified that he heard, not saw, the pages turning because he was blindfolded. He could see slightly from the bottom of the blindfold, but not in front of him.

Böcker asked if Faye Sarah heard anyone else in the room. Faye Sarah did not know if there was anyone else. He only heard the voice of his interrogator.

Böcker asked if Faye Sarah knew that he was being interrogated about the content of the papers. Faye Sarah did not know. He only knew that there were voices and questions. He added that he was released from Adra with two other people: George Sabra, and Kamal Sheikhو كمال شيخو...

Böcker interjected and asked if the papers had anything to do with the interrogation. Faye Sarah said no. He asked if Böcker wanted to know the contents of the papers (which he learned after the interrogation). Böcker said no, his question was already answered.

Defence Council Fratzky asked if Faye Sarah knew Ahmad Al-Jabra أحمد الجبرا . Faye Sarah said that Al-Jabra was his friend and they worked together at the National [Syrian] Coalition.

Fratzky asked if Faye Sarah met Al-Jarba at his home. Faye Sarah said that he met with Al-Jarba hundreds of times, so Fratzky should clarify if he was referring to a specific occasion.

Fratzky asked about Istanbul, Ataköy. Faye Sarah said that Ataköy was where [Al-Jarba] lived.

Fratzky asked if there was a meeting with Al-Jarba and Aqbeq أقبيق. Faye Sarah said that they worked together.

Fratzky asked if they met Raslan. Faye Sarah did not [think so], unless there was a meeting at which Raslan was unknown.

Fratzky said that this was theoretically possible. Faye Sarah added “and practically.”

Böcker asked if Faye Sarah knew Robert Ford. Faye Sarah said yes, the American ambassador.

Böcker asked if Ford spoke about Raslan in the meeting with Al-Jarba. Faye Sarah said that it is important to clarify that he did not know Raslan before the story with Mohammad Al-Morawweh. He reiterated that today was the first time he saw Raslan.

Böcker did not have further questions.

Judge Wiedner asked if Faye Sarah knew anything about Raslan's pro-opposition activities. Faye Sarah explained that he never liked being at the Geneva Conference, even though he was an advocate for negotiations and for finding a solution for Syria. He was not told that Raslan would be in Geneva. He learned this later and thought it was arranged by Al-Jarba. It was normal for the president to bring whoever he wanted without telling others. Faye Sarah did not oppose the presence of people like Raslan, as long as they said that they were with the coalition. For Faye Sarah, [the trial] is not about Raslan. It is about convicting the regime in some way. "Even Anwar Raslan is a victim of the regime like the rest of the Syrians." Whether Raslan's role was good or bad, he was [subjected to] the regime's intimidation or the fake beliefs of those people. Ten years later, Faye Sarah still cannot understand how people could be pro-regime while children suffered from hunger, died, and lived [like animals]. Faye Sarah added that it is not beyond the eyes of the court to see that the conviction of the regime is more important than the conviction of individuals forced to act by the regime. He thanked the Court and wished it success in its attempt to deliver justice.

Judge Kerber dismissed the witness. Faye Sarah thanked the Court again, as well as the interpreter for bearing with his mistakes.

Kerber announced that the following day was cancelled. The session on May 19th would start at 10:30AM. There was a 50-50 chance that the witness scheduled for May 19 and 20 would participate.

The proceedings were adjourned at 1:55PM.

The next trial will be May 19, 2021 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 36

Hearing Dates: May 19 and 20, 2021

Trial Day 73 – May 19, 2021

The witness initially summoned for the day declined to testify in open court. The judges announced they will summon the police investigator who previously questioned the witness to testify in court on a later date. Two other witnesses also preferred not to testify in Koblenz. Transcripts and summaries of their prior statements were read out in court instead. Following a request from the defense, the judges also read out the German translation of a Facebook chat between P17, his brother and “Abu Karam”. The latter was allegedly detained with their brother and told them about his death.

Trial Day 74 – May 20, 2021

Before the judges continued to read out the German translation of the above-mentioned Facebook chat, a Scientific Analyst from the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) testified on detention conditions and torture in Branch 251 based on information from more than 50 witnesses interviewed by the office.

Day 73 of Trial – May 19, 2021

The hearing began at 10:35AM with four spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Bahns was not present.

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that the judges did not hear back from the witness, [name redacted], who was summoned for the day. She asked one of the court officers to see if the witness, contrary to expectations, decided to come. In the meantime, she explained that the judges received a response from the Max Planck Institute regarding the criminal liability of certain acts under Syrian law.

Since the witness did not appear, Judge Kerber explained to the parties that the witness was initially summoned for January 6 and 7, 2021. After the summons, Judge Wiedner contacted the witness, followed by an email conversation between the witness and Judge Wiedner. Judge Kerber summarized the conversation:

After the witness received the summons, Judge Wiedner wrote an email to the witness on November 30, 2020, explaining to him in English how the court can help him with travel arrangements and what documents are needed for his testimony. The witness replied on December 8, 2020, thanking Judge Wiedner, and explaining that he already told the BKA after his questioning that he would not be willing to testify in court for personal reasons. Judge Wiedner replied the following day, asking if the witness would not be willing to testify at all, or might be available at a later date. The witness wrote on December 14, 2020, that he might be able available to testify sometime in July. Judge Wiedner replied on December 17, 2020, if the witness would also be willing to testify at the end of May. The witness affirmed on the same day and was officially summoned. Wiedner wrote a follow-up email on December 28, 2020 to offer the witness support regarding travel arrangements. As the witness did not reply, Wiedner wrote another email on May 3, 2021. The witness replied in French on the same day. He explained the reasons why he though the trial would not make a difference and said he felt sorry for Raslan's family. Wiedner again contacted the witness via email on May 11, 2021 and Prosecutor Klinge also wrote an email in French on May 12, 2021 stressing the importance of the trial and the witness' in-court testimony. However, the witness did not reply.

Kerber said that the court will most likely summon Inspector Knappmann to testify on his questioning of the witness. Kerber further explained that two other witnesses declined to testify in court as well. Witness [name redacted] and NW15 will not appear in court. However, [name redacted] agreed that the transcript of his previous questioning would be read out in court. None of the parties made any statements regarding the read-out of [name redacted] transcript.

Regarding NW15, Kerber explained that he was initially summoned for December 9, 2020 via the Norwegian police. Following the official summons, Judge Wiedner again started to follow up. On October 30, 2020 the Norwegian police emailed Judge Wiedner to tell him that they contacted NW15 who declined to testify. The Norwegian police agreed that NW15 was allowed to stay anonymous. He agreed that an anonymized summary of his police questioning can be shared with other European investigation authorities. This is how the summary made its way to the German BKA. However, NW15 said from the beginning that he is not willing to testify in a German court. Wiedner asked the Norwegian police on November 3, 2020, if NW15 would be willing to testify via video link. The police replied the following day that NW15 is not willing to testify in a German court, under any circumstances.

Judge Kerber explained regarding [name redacted] that he was summoned for March 11, 2021. He is residing in France. The court received confirmation that he received the summons, so Judge Wiedner again started to follow up via email. Wiedner wrote the first email on February 17, 2021 offering the witness to support him regarding travel arrangements. The witness replied three days later, using a code name, however, his real name became clear from his email address. He told Judge Wiedner that he would not testify in Koblenz. Judge Wiedner asked him on February 24, 2021, if he would be able to testify on another date. Kerber said the court has so far not received any reply from the witness.

Kerber added that both witnesses already indicated during the investigation phase that they would not be willing to testify in a German court. Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing explained in a note on the case file dated August 14, 2019, that the French Police contacted [name redacted] who told them that he would not be willing to testify in a German proceeding.

Regarding NW15, Deußing noted on August 12, 2019, that it would not be possible for the BKA to question NW15 who was previously summoned by the Norwegian Police in week 12. NW15 did not provide a personal statement to the German authorities, however, he was generally willing to testify at a later point. The Norwegian Police contacted him again when NW15 told them that he would not be willing to testify in a German proceeding.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the judges would now read out the respective transcripts of the initial police interviews of [name redacted] and NW15 according to the following chamber decisions:

The transcript of the questioning of [name redacted] by the French Police dated November 2015, will be read out in court according to §251(1) Nr.3 StPO. The witness cannot be heard in court. He said during the investigation that he would not be willing to testify in a German proceeding. After the summons by the court, he was contacted by the judges several times. He first provided a very short answer and then did not reply at all. The court therefore assumes that the witness will not come to testify in court.

The summary of NW15's police questioning including sketches he drew during the questioning will be read out and shown in court according to §251(1) Nr.3 StPO. NW15 was questioned by the Norwegian Police on October 17 and 25, 2018 and December 19, 2019. NW15 said during the investigation that he will under no circumstances testify in a German proceeding. Based on this and the follow-up information provided by the Norwegian Police, the court assumes that NW15 will not appear pursuant to the summons.

Judge Kerber handed over copies of the transcripts to the court interpreters so that it was easier for them to simultaneously translate it as they would be read out in court.

Police Questioning [name redacted] [FR17]

FR17 was questioned by the French Police on [information redacted]. The questioning started at 10:17AM.

FR17 provided his personal details (born [information redacted] 1978 in Damascus) to the French Police and was introduced to the translator. P17 was informed about his rights, and the context of the questioning, as the French Police had already conducted pre-investigations into crimes committed in Syria and received copies of the Caesar Files in 2015.

The investigator asked when FR17 came to France. FR17 said he came to France via Jordan in February 2015 after he was questioned by French authorities in Jordan.

When asked about his work, FR17 said he is a chef.

The investigator wanted to know if FR17 had already testified on another occasion. FR17 explained this questioning was the first time he testified with the police. However, he previously told the OFPRA [French Refugee Office] that he was detained three times between 2011 and 2013.

FR17 was asked when he left Syria. He said he left Syria in March or April 2012 together with his wife and son after he was released.

They went to Jordan where they lived in Irbid for three years. He had a job and a flat and applied for refugee status with the UNHCR. He was told by UNHCR to go to France and learned in August 2014 that he was supposed to go to France. FR17 added that he was questioned by the OFPRA at the end of 2014 when he also got his ID card.

The investigator asked where FR17 lived in Syria. FR17 said he had been living in [information redacted] in Damascus since 2008.

FR17 was asked about his ethnicity and where his parents came from. He explained that he was Muslim, a Sunni. His father was a tailor.

The investigator further wanted to know if FR17 attended university and asked him to describe his career. FR17 explained he did not attend university. He finished his education after primary school and started working at his father's shop in 1987. He worked there for 10 years until he started working in a clothing store in [information redacted] in Damsacus. He worked there until 2007 before he opened a grocery store that he ran until he left Syria.

When asked about affiliation with or membership of political parties, FR17 denied.

The Investigator further wanted to know if FR17 was related to a member of the Syrian government or had any connections to the government. FR17 denied.

FR17 further denied being affiliated with armed groups, security forces or militias. He explained that he officially served mandatory military service, however, he paid an officer, so he did not actually serve in the military. FR17 said he did not even attend the basic military training.

When asked why he left Syria, FR17 explained that after demonstrations in Syria, an armed conflict escalated turning into a civil war. He said he did not want to get arrested again after he was detained for the second or third time.

The investigator asked if FR17 was put on trial after his third arrest. FR17 denied, adding that he was never put on trial, however, he was interrogated many times in Al-Khatib Branch.

FR17 was then asked to describe what changed for him after March 2011. He said that he participated in demonstrations in Damascus, [information redacted], his hometown, because he knew all the escape routes. FR17 explained that he wanted to change his situation, but the protestors were treated like a sect. According to FR17 the protestors were showing banners, shouting slogans, and protesting peacefully but security forces started beating them, using live ammunition and tear gas. He said they were soldiers in uniforms. FR17 said he witnessed several times how security forces tried to arrest everyone they could get ahold of. He also filmed these incidents and sent the material to Al-Jazeera or posted it on Facebook. However, he did not have the memory card anymore. He further explained that he tried to get some distance in June 2011 and moved to Turkey, trying to start a new life. However, it did not work out and FR17 lost $20,000. Back in Syria, he was arrested in his shop two weeks after his return. FR17 described how twenty members of the security forces entered his shop. He said they were members of Division 40, the division led by Hafez Makhlof. FR17 said they pulled him in a pick-up where other people [detainees] were already waiting. They were taken to Division 40.

FR17 was there for the first time, but he knew that Hafez Makhlouf was the head of the division. When the detainees arrived at the division, they were blindfolded and beaten. Someone hit FR17 with the elbow on his back, FR17 suffered a slipped disk from it.

FR17 went on to describe that he and the other detainees were taken to Al-Khatib Branch the following day. At Al-Khatib he was beaten with fists and cables on his feet. During interrogations he was asked why he participated in demonstrations and if Turkey supported the demonstrations. FR17 said he was interrogated and beaten in the basement again and again for one week. He shared a tiny cell with 50 other detainees. They were unable to sit down, and it was hot inside the cell. They only received some bread, but no water. FR17 explained that since there was no toilet inside the cell, detainees had to wet themselves. Other detainees were tortured as well, as FR17 could see from the signs on their backs and feet. Detainees were only wearing trousers, because they used their shirts as band aid. FR17 described that some detainees had already been at the Branch for several months. He did not see dead bodies. FR17 added that he was interrogated in the hallway. He was blindfolded but could hear people calling the person who interrogated him "Mimati". He was interrogated again ten days after that, but his family paid the interrogator. He had to sign documents to assure that he would not demonstrate again. He was then released after five days in Kafar Souseh.

FR17 said he went home to a friend when he was released. He was in pain but did not want to go to a hospital, so he was treated by a friend who was a doctor. He was arrested again two weeks later, at the end of 2011. According to FR17, a cousin of his wife denounced him, claiming he was collaborating with the Free Syrian Army (FSA) and contacted them when he was in Turkey. FR17 explained that the circumstances of this arrest were the same as before: He was arrested by Hafez Makhlouf's division and then transferred to Division 40 and Al-Khatib. However, this time FR17's family reacted quickly. They paid $20,000 to a General who was sympathizing with the rebels. FR17 was again questioned about the opposition and the FSA for two days. He said he denied everything and was taken to Kafar Souseh three days later. He had to stay there for another twenty-five days but did not experience violence or interrogations.

FR17 described that after he was released, he thought about leaving Syria. In January 2012 he was again arrested, this time in his flat. He described how two officers came to him with an arrest warrant, stole $300 from the register at his shop, but did not use any violence against him. FR17 was again taken to Hafez Makhlouf's division and transferred to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to stay for two days. On the first day, he was beaten and on the second day, he was interrogated. FR17 said that he was asked the same questions as during his previous detention: about Turkey and his connection to the FSA. His family again bribed someone, paying $20,000. FR17 explained that his father, although he was a tailor, was rich because he had his own shop and owned some real estate. After two days [in Al-Khatib Branch] FR17 was transferred to Kafar Souseh where he had to stay for thirty-two days without having to endure violence. FR17 said his family paid $2 per day, so that he did not have to suffer violence.

FR17 went on to describe his second arrest in 2012. He was detained in a collective cell in the basement, together with twenty other detainees who were all waiting for their release. According to FR17, the only "problematic" thing in this cell was the humidity because there was no sun. They also got food in this cell. FR17 was released in March or April 2012.

He went home and seven days later, he went to Jordan. He explained that his parents followed him and three of his brothers and two sisters were already living abroad.

The investigator wanted to know whose decision it was to arrest FR17. FR17 assumed it was Hafez Makhoul, as he was arrested within his purview, however, FR17 never asked whose decision it was.

The investigator further asked if FR17's relatives were informed about his arrests and whereabouts. His family only learned about his arrest through third parties, his employees. FR17 added that it was known in his neighborhood that Quasbi, a police Lieutenant was strolling around in the area.

When asked about names of officers at Al-Khatib Branch, Division 40 or Kafar Souseh, FR17 said he did not know any names. The people there were nameless, he was always blindfold.

FR17 was further asked if he knew the names of people who tortured him and used violence. FR17 again denied, adding that he was always blindfolded and unable to see anything.

The investigator asked FR17 if torture was a regular practice. FR17 affirmed, explaining that it was used systematically. Everyone was tortured. FR17 said he talked about it with others. Jamal Halabi could provide more information about torture practices.

When asked if he saw dead bodies, murderers, or executions, FR17 denied. He said he only saw dead bodies at demonstrations.

The investigator asked if FR17 identified people from the Caesar Files. FR17 denied, saying he did not know anyone from the Caesar Files.

When asked about French detainees in Syrian detention facilities, FR17 denied having seen any French detainees.

The investigator further wanted to know if FR17 knew any bi-national French detainees and could provide names. FR17 denied.

FR17 was asked if he knew people responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity who were present in the EU. FR17 denied.

The investigator wanted to know whether other victims of detentions etc. were present in France. FR17 explained he did not have much contact with others, he knew no one.

The investigator asked if FR17 wanted to add anything he was not yet asked about. FR17 denied, saying he is in a rush because he needs to take his child to the hospital.

The witness questioning ended at 1:30PM and the transcript was re-translated to FR17.

Judge Kerber explained that the judges initially wanted to read out the German translation of a Facebook chat as requested by the defense on the following day after hearing the witness summoned for that day. However, they might start reading out the translation on this day already.

Judge Wiedner started reading out the German translation of the summary of NW15's questioning with the Norwegian police:

Police Questioning NW15

NW15, born in 1990 in Syria, was questioned by the War Crimes Unit of the Norwegian Police on three afternoons. The summary was created afterwards, based on the transcripts, and is divided into thematic areas that the witness covered during the interviews which took place on August 17 and 25, 2018 and December 19, 2018. The witness read through the transcripts after the last hearing and made amendments that were respectively highlighted. Although an interpreter was present at every interview, the witness mainly testified in Norwegian, verifying with the interpreter on only a few occasions. The witness agreed that the anonymized summary can be shared with other investigation authorities in the EU. If his testimony was to be shared in a different format, he requested to specifically consent to this. Name and personal details of NW15 are therefore redacted throughout the summary. The witness was informed about his rights according to the Norwegian code of criminal procedure.

NW15 is from Syria but lived in Beirut. He had to return to Syria to extend his residency permit for Lebanon. Since the revolution in March 2011, he participated in the revolution in Lebanon and had contacts with media agencies. NW15 was arrested at the Syrian border on April [information redacted] 2012 and detained in different facilities until November [information redacted] 2012. His detention periods were the following:

Day after arrest	Duration	Detention Facility
1-4	3 days	Division 40
4-33	30 days	Al-Khatib/Branch 251
33-65	32 days	Branch 248, solitary cell
65-110	45 days	Branch 248, collective cell
110-150	40 days	Al-Qaboun Military Prison
151-217	66 days	Adra Prison

NW15 explained that he had to go back to every facility to "check-out" as a detainee. By the time he was in detention, he did not know that he was in Branches 251 and 248, he only learned that afterwards during the check-out.

When he was released from Adra Prison, he had to go to the military police to check if there were any other pending charges against him. When he was at the border [to Lebanon], he was told to go to Branch 255. NW15 said he was allowed to drive there on his own.

Branch 255 was the main office for documentation, close to the Damascus fire brigade. NW15 went to Branch 255 on November [information redacted] 2012 and showed them a document saying that he was arrested on April [information redacted] 2012 because he tried to leave the country, and should now be checked-out from Branch 255. He was however told that he was never detained in Branch 255 and should go to Division 40 in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad.

Arrest and Division 40

NW15 told the Norwegian Police that he went to Syria by Taxi on April [information redacted] 2012 to get a stamp for his residence permit in Lebanon. In Syria, he had to queue at the border when his name was called and he raised his hand. A person wearing a uniform approached NW15 and told him to come with him. NW15 was beaten on the back of his head and fell unconscious. When he woke up, he was somewhere else, at Division 40. He said he was taken there from the border. NW15 said he had to stay there for three days in a small cell upstairs. The cell was around 3 m<sup>2</sup> big and 1 m high. It was situated under a staircase. NW15 said he was always alone in this cell. That was also where he woke up [after being hit on the back of his head] and had to lie for a long time until someone came.

He was interrogated three times. On one occasion, he got the order to stand up and face the wall. Although he was wearing a blindfold, he could see the arm of another detainee, showing signs of beatings with a plastic tube. NW15 was also able to see the floor, which had black and white tiles, like a chessboard. He was taken two stairs down to the interrogation room which was probably in the basement. NW15 explained that he was unable to see anything during the interrogation, as he was blindfolded. He had to kneel and was questioned about his job and allegedly financing the opposition. He was further accused of activities opposing the regime and called a nickname because he was detained once when he was younger.

NW15 described that he was detained for four days when he was still in school because he was politically active. During the interrogation [in Division 40] NW15 was supposed to sign a paper to be released. However, NW15 refused to do so and was consequently beaten on his back and neck. He also had to suffer electroshocks that were attached to his fingertips. NW15 explained that because he was studying law at the time, he asked for his right to contact a lawyer. The people at the Division replied, "here is your lawyer" and started beating him. NW15 further explained that he was once interrogated in a different room where there was a computer. He was told to log in to his Facebook account and the guard wrote down his password. NW15 said during the three days he had to stay at Division 40, he was detained alone and interrogated three times. He got food once a day and was allowed to use the toilet once a day. NW15 described that there was a mirror in the toilet, so he could see the bruises on his face and the blood that ran out of his right ear. NW15 said that he suffered a hole in his eardrum. NW15 did not see any guards. Only when he was alone in his cell, was he not blindfolded. NW15 said that this division was led by Hafez Makhoul and provided a sketch of the facilities to the Norwegian police.

[Due to the very limited time that the sketch was shown and read out in court, the Trial Monitor was unable to recreate the sketch in detail. This is the case for all other sketches drawn by NW15. The sketches will therefore not be included in this report.]

NW15 further described that he was taken to a car on the fourth day of his detention in Division 40. He was alone during the transport, accompanied by guards who were sitting next to him, holding his arms, and pushing his neck and head down. NW15 was blindfolded on the way.

Al-Khatib Branch

NW15 said the same guard who accompanied him to the car in Division 40 was now accompanying him on his way inside Al-Khatib Branch. NW15 was still blindfolded but could see that the guard was carrying a file and a bag with several items in it. The guard said that all items belonged to NW15. NW15 had to provide his fingerprint to confirm that the items belonged to him, although no one checked if any of the items were his. NW15 explained to the Norwegian police that the guards were celebrating a welcome party for every new detainee who arrived at the Branch. The celebration included beating and kicking the detainees. According to NW15, there was a competition amongst the guards for who could beat the hardest. NW15 arrived alone. He was taken to cell No. 2 which was 1x2m and around 4m high. There was a small light on the ceiling and a gap under the door through which he received food. NW15 said he had to stay in this cell for 30 days. He received food twice a day and was allowed to use the toilet once per day. NW15 said it was “psychological torture” that he could constantly hear screams of torture. NW15 was not sure whether the screams were real, or a tape was played.

He was taken for interrogation for the first time after three days. NW15 said he was tortured during interrogations, including Doulab and the German Chair. He was interrogated several times and had to endure Doulab around 19-20 times. NW15 explained that he did not know how long the interrogations lasted, as he fell unconscious many times and was woken up with a bucket of water. He was often tortured with a combination of Doulab and the German Chair and asked the same questions as in Division 40. NW15 further described that he was interrogated many times, sometimes the interrogators were “friendly” and he was merely told to sign a paper. Other times, he was tortured.

According to NW15 he was not blindfolded in his cell in Al-Khatib. It was not allowed to look in the eyes of the guards. However, sometimes he was able to see them from the side and recognize faces and voices. NW15 told the Norwegian police about two guards in particular. One was very violent. He counted to ten or thirty when NW15 was using the toilet and started to beat him immediately afterwards. The other guard was friendlier and even helped [name redacted/fellow detainee] to write an SMS.

NW15 said he was alone in his cell except for one day. On day fifteen or sixteen a person called [name redacted] was taken to his cell. He would now [time of the interview] be in Germany. He also participated in a documentary by [name redacted] where he showed the shivers in his body. He got these shivers because his house was bombed. NW15 said that [name redacted] and others got arrested and four of them were taken to Al-Khatib. [name redacted] came to NW15’s cell but he could not hear much, as he was deaf from the explosion. NW15 said [name redacted] was arrested on April [information redacted] 2012 and stayed in NW15’s cell for one day. NW15 further explained that [name redacted] who should now be in Sweden, was detained in Al-Khatib as well. He also lived in Lebanon. He was allegedly involved in the same situation as NW15. NW15 described that he was in an interrogation room where [name redacted] was waiting. NW15 was told to confirm that he knew [name redacted], but he denied. NW15 said he and [name redacted] were separated in Al-Qaboun when NW15 was transferred to Adra Prison. [name redacted] was first detained in a solitary cell in Al-Khatib and later in a collective cell. He was then transferred to Branch 285 and Branch 275 before he came to Al-Qaboun. NW15 said he knew that because after [name redacted] was released in October 2012, they were in contact.

NW15 further told the Norwegian Police that he did not see dead bodies in Al-Khatib. However, there would be a YouTube video showing a room full of corpses. According to NW15, the video was released by a defector.

NW15 said when he was transferred to Branch 248 from Branch 251, he had to take two stairs up and go outside. A car was waiting outside, smaller than the vehicle with which he was taken to Branch 251. He was the only detainee in that car and not informed about the destination. NW15 said this happened on May [information redacted]2012.

Branch 248 – Military Security, solitary cell

NW15 described that when he left the car, he saw a red and brown building, indicating that it was a public building. He could also see spruces and cypresses. When he was taken inside, there was a brown paper bag with several items inside. NW15 was stamped and taken downstairs [two stairs]. When he entered the room, he had to perform a “safety-move” to check that he was not hiding anything. NW15 said he had to strip naked. After that, he again received a “welcome party” before he was taken to his cell. NW15 said there were six cells per “box”. He had to stay in this cell for 56-58 days. During this time, he was beaten with a military belt and beaten on his feet, so-called Falaqua. NW15 said he received severe punishment, adding that there is a saying that if one did not suffer Falaqua, he was never detained. According to NW15, Falaqua and Doulab were the two most common torture methods. NW15 further said he was asked the same questions as before.

NW15 said he did not always get something to eat. He rather had to endure Shabeh, meaning he was hanged from the ceiling at his wrists, only touching the floor with his toes. He was only taken down to eat. Two dead people were hanging next to him. NW15 said he had to hang there until day 65 when he asked to see an officer. Every time he was taken down to eat, he was beaten after he ate and hanged again. He was also beaten again and again while he was hanging. NW15 summarized that he was simply beaten all the time. When he was taken down to eat, it was almost impossible to move his arms as they were shaking. One time, he was taken down and put on the floor. As he was shaking, one of the officers laughed at him, telling him to eat and then sign a paper.

NW15 was lying on the floor for hours before he got some water and food. When the officer returned, he was smoking a ‘Alhamra’ cigarette. NW15 asked for a cigarette and remembered the bad smell of the officer when he came closer to light NW15’s cigarette. After this incident, NW15 was taken to an interrogation during which he was asked about a person called [name redacted]. NW15 told the Norwegian police that he was asked about this person before. When the officers told him that this person had a shop in [information redacted], NW15 realized that they were talking about his uncle. When he said this person was his uncle, he was beaten, because he denied knowing this person before. He was then told by the officers to write everything down. NW15 was accused of instigating resistance and obstruction of state authority. NW15 was supposed to be transferred to a collective cell afterwards.

Branch 248 – Military Security, collective cell

After the interrogation, NW15 was pulled to the collective cell, which was situated next to the staircase. NW15 said he was pulled downstairs by his legs, so his blindfold fell off, and he was able to see some things around him.

NW15 said the collective cell was so crowded, that the guard who took him there was unable to open the door. The guard started yelling “sons of a bitch”, so the detainees got up, moved away from the door, and the guard was able to open the door to take NW15 inside. NW15 explained that the ceiling of the cell was three or four meters high. However, above the toilet it was only two meters high. There were tubes above the toilet and detainees put blankets on the tubes, so others could sleep on it. One could see some light through the ventilation gap, and the detainees were able to tell day from night. NW15 said there was a Shawish among the detainees. He was responsible for organizing the group. According to NW15, the detainees were divided into groups. There were around eight to eleven groups with ten to thirteen detainees each. Each group had a leader who had a plastic plate. Every group leader got a bread which he had to divide between the detainees in his group. NW15 said they had two small plastic buckets in the cell which they could use to scoop water from the toilet. NW15 said [name redacted] and [name redacted], were the Shawishs in the cell.

NW15 described that he was no longer tortured in the collective cell. However, the guards came and took people to beat them when there was noise inside the cell. NW15 said he was never taken to be beaten. According to NW15 one person died inside the collective cell. When he returned from the interrogation, he was “branded” and had slime around his mouth. When he fell asleep, he never woke up. NW15 said other detainees were tortured with Falaqua but he did not know any of their names.

On day 110 of NW15’s detention, it was the beginning of Ramadan or July 21 or 22, one of the guards opened the hatch in the cell door. He said that Bashar Al-Assad had a gift for the detainees because Ramadan would start the next day. NW15 said the guard then gave an apple for each prisoner through the hatch. Sometime later, one of the guards called NW15’s name. NW15 added that it was normal that detainees were called and taken out of a cell to whatever place. If they were military prisoners, they bribed corrupt guards to get clothes. This time, NW15 was called and taken to a room, the same room as when he arrived at the Branch, where he had to wait alone.

Military Court

NW15 said that he was taken to the court that was behind Kafar Souseh Branch the following morning. One detainee after the other was called to be presented to the judge. NW15 described the inside of the building as bright, it was tiled. The detainees were neither blindfolded nor were their hands tied. NW15 said the guards left and the court guards were corrupt. NW15 had to wait in the court building until 3PM when the court closed and NW15 was taken back to Branch 248. NW15 said he was taken to court again the next morning. He explained that there were three courts, he had to go to the court that had jurisdiction over the North of Syria, because he was from Idlib (Aleppo court).

Al-Qaboun – Military Police Prison

NW15 described how he was put in a van together with other detainees. It was very hot, as it was July. It was during Ramadan. NW15 said the detainees were tied to each other with a chain. When they arrived, they were told how and where to walk, as they were blindfolded. The blindfold was taken off inside. NW15 said that he was in one of three collective cells.

NW15 further explained to the Norwegian Police that the prison in Al-Qaboun was horrible if one was a civilian detainee. Most of the detainees were members of the military and looked down on the civilian detainees. The detainees inside the collective cell were divided in two groups: civilians and members of the military. Many detainees got mange and lice.

They got an awful smelling creme against the mange. According to NW15, the food for the detainees was served by officers as disciplinary punishment. One could recognize some of them later working as guards. NW15 described that detainees in Al-Qaboun prison were treated differently. They were only waiting to be transferred to a court. The guards were not allowed to beat the detainees.

NW15 said he was waiting to be transferred to Aleppo via Al-Mezzeh, however, there were difficulties. He started banging his head against the cell door out of frustration. Others felt similarly, so the detainees eventually started fighting and riots developed in their cell. NW15 said this was on day 130. His face was bleeding from a fight he got into. One of the guards was worried when he saw NW15's bleeding face, because NW15 was a civilian. The guard called a doctor to check on NW15. NW15 was told by the guard that there were more than 5,000 detainees in this prison, so the guards did not want to risk any disturbances. He told NW15 to take care that the detainees in his cell would calm down. NW15 said they already calmed down when he got back from the doctor.

The following day, the detainees were allowed to go to the roof top in smaller groups to get some fresh air. NW15 wanted to buy a fan on this occasion. He explained that there were sandbags in front of the window, so there was no fresh air in the cell. NW15 and a guard agreed that NW15 was allowed to buy a fan. The guard told NW15 that the prison existed for over 40 years and NW15 was the first to demand a fan. NW15 paid 5,000 Syrian Lira for two fans. He said he had a better status among the detainees afterwards and they even got better food. Detainees were allowed to smoke, buy soap or chat with the guards. NW15 asked the officer whom he contacted first, if they could now be transferred to court since it would be Eid. However, the situation was still difficult. NW15 demanded to write a letter to the Ministry of Justice, so he got paper and a pen. However, he did not receive an answer until Eid. Some days after Eid, NW15 told one of the guards that the judges should simply come to Al-Qaboun instead. Indeed, it was announced via loudspeakers that the judges from Aleppo and Homs would come to the prison. This was on day 148 or 149 of NW15's detention. The name of the officer with whom NW15 spoke at the prison was Ali. NW15 did not know his surname or names of other guards.

NW15 described that three judges came. They were placed in three different rooms and the detainees were called one after the other. According to NW15, military detainees were sent to either Sednaya, Homs, or Palmyra. The civilian detainees were either released or sent to Adra Prison. NW15 was presented to a judge who asked him if NW15 was armed or told someone to take up arms. NW15 denied and was sent to a civil judge in Al-Hamidiya. He was transferred to Al-Hamidiya on day 150 of his detention. The guards told the detainees that all of them would be released. However, NW15's name was not called by 4:30PM. All detainees whose names were not called by that time were either transferred to their home districts or to Adra Prison.

Judge Kerber thanked the court interpreters for their work and ordered a break before reading the rest of NW15's summary.

Judge Kerber announced that the judges would finish reading out NW15's summary and start reading out the translation of the Facebook chat until the trial day would end at around 3:15PM.

Judge Wiedner continued reading out NW15's summary:

Adra Prison

On a document that NW15 handed over to the Norwegian police, it says that he arrived at Adra prison on [information redacted]. As a detainee from the northern district, he was handed over to the Welfare Association of Prisoners and their Relatives. NW15 said his hair was cut, he was cleaned, and received new clothes, as the clothes of the new detainees were covered with lice. There was a gym at the prison, one could buy pizza and kebab. NW15 said the prison was clean.

NW15 further explained that there were bunk beds on each side of the cell. However, there were more detainees than beds, so some of the detainees had to sleep on mattresses on the floor between the bunk beds. The cell also had a kitchen and two bathrooms. There were no beds for the thirteen new detainees, who consequently had to sleep on the mattresses on the floor. NW15 had to borrow a mattress from another detainee. The Shawish ensured that everything was in order, and was in charge of the remote control for the TV that was above the door. The detainees received lunch and dinner. After the dinner, they were allowed to make phone calls. NW15 said this time of the day was always very chaotic. New detainees were the last ones to make their calls. NW15 was only able to reach his grandmother [father's mother] at 4AM and then talk to his father. Because the calls were wiretapped, his father only asked NW15 quickly about his wellbeing and promised to get him out. NW15's father hired a lawyer who met with NW15 in the lobby of the prison and gave him some money, 500 Lira, so NW15 could buy items at the prison shop. The lawyer also wanted to arrange for a judge from Damascus to be transferred to Adra Prison for questioning [with NW15].

NW15 explained to the Norwegian police that he was transferred from division 4 to division 10. NW15 stayed at division 4 for two to three weeks. Division 10, the division where smugglers were detained, was the "5* division". The detainees there had money, were able to bribe the officers, and buy anything. With the help of some connections, NW15 was transferred to this division and not to division 6, where the murderers were detained. NW15 further explained that Adra Prison was led by the civilian police. The detainees were not interrogated, and the guards were friendly. NW15 heard that 10,500 people were detained in Adra Prison. The guards therefore wanted to prevent any riots. The officer even took off their shoes when they entered the cells. NW15 said he did not know any names of guards at Adra Prison, however, he was never blindfolded. There were other divisions as well, for example the Islamist and murder division. When the detainees were allowed to go to the yard, they also met detainees from other divisions. NW15 did not know about division 9 or a division for executions. He described division 10 as a long corridor with multiple cells.

Release

NW15 was told on [information redacted] 2012, that he was supposed to be presented to a judge. He was taken to Al-Hamidiya the following day where he also met his lawyer. However, NW15's name was not called by the time the court closed at 3PM. He was therefore taken back to the prison and supposed to be taken to court again the following day. NW15 said he was released the following day at 5PM. His lawyer prepared him for the judge's questioning. the judge asked NW15 if he knew [name redacted]/a prominent actor who was involved in demonstrations in Lebanon. NW15 replied he knew his name because he was famous, but he preferred another actor. NW15 was also asked if he impeded authorities. NW15 denied. The judge then explained that NW15 was accused of obstruction of authorities, instigation to disobedience, as he confessed in Branch 248. NW15 said that at this point, he was no longer afraid as he had already seen the worst.

He said that he was just a student and had to confess under torture. His lawyer got upset, as they rehearsed what NW15 was supposed to tell the judge. Nonetheless, NW15 was released. Before he was allowed to go, he had to check-out at Adra Prison. He was taken back to the prison to get his belongings from the cell. However, when he had to wait in the waiting area to check his register with the criminal police, there was a power outage and NW15 had to go back to the cell. He was then taken to the building of the criminal police the following day, since the register could not be checked electronically.

Criminal Police

NW15 said he was transferred to the criminal police in Bab Musalla on November [information redacted] 2012, together with a bigger group of detainees. They were called one after the other. When it was NW15's turn, he had to go upstairs in an office where his lawyer and the chief of the police were waiting. His uncle joined as well. NW15 took care of everything, so he was released quickly. After he got his belongings back, he went to his uncle's place. NW15 and his uncle agreed that NW15 would return to Lebanon, so he took a Taxi to the border.

The father's search for his son

NW15's family learned about his arrest by chance. [name redacted], a neighbor of NW15's brother in Lebanon was working as a spy for the Syrian government. When he gave his phone for repair, he received a message which the person in the repair shop read. The message said that NW15 was "with us" [government side] because this spy previously informed the Syrian government officers that NW15 was on his way to Syria. The person in the repair shop understood the message and showed it to NW15's brother who informed their father. NW15 told the Norwegian Police that this happened five days after his father went to Syria. He travelled to Saraqib on March/April when it was liberated. NW15's father contacted an officer in Damascus whom he then visited. He then found out that NW15 was at Division 40, because he was allegedly involved in something big. When NW15's father went to Division 40, he met an officer called Amar who told him that he was too late, NW15 would be in Al-Khatib Branch. NW15's father therefore contacted [brother of NW15's mother] and they went to Al-Khatib Branch together. There they were approached by someone from the supply service who offered to contact someone. However, he also said that NW15's father and uncle should forget about NW15 because he was involved in an assassination attempt against Bashar Al-Assad. They did not learn that NW15 was transferred to Branch 248. NW15's uncle learned that NW15 was there and supposed to be presented to a judge. NW15 said that this was how his father learned about his whereabouts. His uncle helped his father. A fellow detainee from Branch 248 also contacted NW15's family after his release to let them know that NW15 was still alive.

After the release

When NW15 was at Branch 255, he found out that he was first detained at Division 40. He went to Division 40 on November [information redacted] 2012 and asked about Amar, as he previously provided information to NW15's father. Amar came and offered NW15 coffee. NW15 had to wait for thirty minutes until he got the documents he needed. These documents said that he was detained at Division 40 from [information redacted], before he was transferred to Al-Khatib. NW15 consequently went to Al-Khatib and Branch 248, as officers from these Branches had to sign the document as well. When NW15 was at Al-Khatib, he was in a different building than where he was detained. It was rather an external office, outside the building complex. NW15 told the Norwegian Police he did not know if he still had the document.

Caesar Files

NW15 told the Norwegian Police that he knew the Caesar Files, however, he did not recognize anyone in the photos. He explained that relatives of his died in detention, but they were not among the Caesar Files. NW15 further explained that the Syrian regime would now publish lists with persons who died in detention. His cousin allegedly died in detention in 2013, but he might have been arrested in 2012.

NW15 provided several documents to the Norwegian Police, including sketches of Branches 251 and 248, his visa application and the document he was handed over by the judge at the end of his detention.

The transcripts of NW15's interviews with the Norwegian Police were retranslated and approved by NW15.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the judges would now start reading out the Facebook chat while the interpreters would simultaneously check the translation. She told the defense that they should let her know when they think that their request to read the chat in court would be fulfilled. Defense counsel Böcker confirmed. Judge Kerber explicitly asked the Accused Raslan if he understood. He affirmed.

Kerber handed the German translation over to the interpreters, so they could check its correctness.

***

Judge Kerber started reading the Facebook chat between P17, Abu Karam [a nickname], and P17's brother.

12/17/21 – 2:09AM	P17's brother	Hello
12/17/21 – 2:09AM	Abu Karam	Hello, brother.
12/17/21 – 2:09AM	P17's brother	All Hail.
12/17/21 – 2:09AM	Abu Karam	I was busy on December 7.
12/17/21 – 2:09AM	P17's brother	How are you?
12/17/21 – 2:09AM	P17	All Hail.
12/17/21 – 2:09AM	P17's brother	Keep talking.
12/17/21 – 2:10AM	Abu Karam	I was in a collective cell [This was initially translated as "parlor" but corrected by the court translators and respectively amended throughout the chat.] No. 29 in Al-Khatib until [information redacted]. On day four or three came a new detainee. I cannot remember exactly, but he was around 180cm tall, had dark hair and a white beard.
12/17/21 – 2:11AM	P17	I'm all ears.
12/17/21 – 2:11AM	Abu Karam	I approached him. I could see that he was gentle. He said he was a cardiologist in a field hospital in [information redacted]. His name was [name redacted].

12/17/21 – 2:13AM	P17	I asked him about his punishment. He said he got three months [imprisonment] because of regime henchmen.
12/17/21 – 2:13AM	Abu Karam	Yes.
		Another detainee hit him, saying that doctors were thieves. I tried to calm him [person who was beaten] down. When it was time for breakfast, he did not wake up. He died two days after his arrest. He was wearing a black pullover and 'Lagos' trousers. When he died, I took his clothes. I was told to sign that he died a natural death. He was an award-winning doctor.
12/17/21 – 2:16AM	P17's brother	Really
12/17/21 – 2:16AM	P17	Did you see him before his death?
12/17/21 – 2:16AM	P17's brother	Keep talking.
12/17/21 – 2:17AM	Abu Karam	He said you are seven siblings, all doctors. Is that right?
12/17/21 – 2:17AM	P17's brother	Four siblings.
12/17/21 – 2:17AM	P17	That's true, but we're not seven.
12/17/21 – 2:17AM	Abu Karam	There are some gaps in my memory. But one of you is in Darayya, right?
12/17/21 – 2:1AM	P17	Bassem is here to ask about the condition of our little brother.
		Our cousin is in Al-Zabadani.
12/17/21 – 2:19AM	Abu Karam	So, he [person he was talking about] is your brother?
		Did you bribe someone?
12/17/21 – 2:19AM	P17	Yes, brother.
12/17/21 – 2:19AM	Abu Karam	400? [Syrian Pounds]
12/17/21 – 2:19AM	P17	That's wrong.
		We did not pay any money.
12/17/21 – 2:19AM	Abu Karam	Or 500,000?
12/17/21 – 2:20AM	P17	We did not pay anything.
12/17/21 – 2:20AM	Abu Karam	The nurse who knows your cousin said someone else was a witness [of the situation regarding their cousin/brother] as well. I told him that maybe your brother was not dead but just not moving. But he said that he was dead because he had foam at his mouth.
12/17/21 – 2:22AM	P17's brother	Keep talking, I'll ask you afterwards.
12/17/21 – 2:22AM	Abu Karam	The detainees who carried him [P17's brother] said he was stiff, so he must have been dead for two to three hours.
12/17/21 – 2:24AM	P17	Good. Who beat our cousin?
12/17/21 – 2:24AM	Abu Karam	His kidneys stopped working, he was breathing heavily, and his temperature was rising. Sleep did not help him. [name redacted]. I don't know if he's released or not. [name redacted]?
12/17/21 – 2:26AM	P17	From the family Al-Azzi.
12/17/21 – 2:26AM	Abu Karam	Was he [cousin/brother] still alive?
12/17/21 – 2:27AM	P17	He was unconscious.
12/17/21 – 2:27AM	Abu Karam

12/17/21 – 2:28AM	P17's brother	What did you sign?
12/17/21 – 2:28AM	Abu Karam	They approached me. They thought I'm Christian but actually, I'm Muslim. The First Sergeant told me to come up with a legal formulation, saying he [cousin/brother] was healthy, everything was fine, and he suddenly died.
12/17/21 – 2:31AM	P17's brother	Did you see our cousin in [...]?
12/17/21 – 2:31AM	Abu Karam	No, just the nurse.
12/17/21 – 2:32AM	P17's brother	Which Sergeant told you to write those papers?
12/17/21 – 2:32AM	Abu Karam	He said, they would inform [the victim's] family. His name was Abu Shakrem, he was an Alawite. The head of Al-Khatib was present as well.
12/17/21 – 2:33AM	P17's brother	What is his name?
12/17/21 – 2:33AM	Abu Karam	They provided a fan.
		I don't know his name.
12/17/21 – 2:34AM	P17's brother	How many people were in the collective cell?
12/17/21 – 2:34AM	Abu Karam	Around 200.
12/17/21 – 2:34AM	P17's brother	How big was it?
12/17/21 – 2:34AM	Abu Karam	4x7meters. Seven people died besides [name redacted]. Some went crazy.
12/17/21 – 2:35AM	P17's brother	Were you able to drink water?
12/17/21 – 2:36AM	Abu Karam	Yes, there was a tap in the bathroom of the collective cell. There was nothing good, but the water. Just like al-Fijeh water.
12/17/21 – 2:36AM	P17's brother	What about the food?
12/17/21 – 2:36AM	Abu Karam	We got Bulgur, potatoes, tomatoes, and olives
12/17/21 – 2:36AM	P17	How much food did you get? Was it enough?
12/17/21 – 2:37AM	Abu Karam	We got one bowl per ten people and pears for digestion. We were served two meals, one at 3PM and one at 3AM.
12/17/21 – 2:38AM	P17	Did [name redacted] eat something?
12/17/21 – 2:38AM	Abu Karam	Yes, but I cannot remember exactly.
12/17/21 – 2:39AM	P17	Who told you that we were given a corpse after three months?
12/17/21 – 2:39AM	Abu Karam	The nurse.
12/17/21 – 2:40AM	P17	Good. How many hours were between the beating and when you recognized that he was dead.
12/17/21 – 2:40AM	Abu Karam	Around two hours.
12/17/21 – 2:40AM	P17's brother	Did you see the foam at his mouth?
12/17/21 – 2:40AM	Abu Karam	No. My friend said he was dead because there was foam.
12/17/21 – 2:41AM	P17's brother	What color was the foam?
12/17/21 – 2:41AM	Abu Karam	My friend said it was blue.
12/17/21 – 2:42AM	P17's brother	What about [name redacted] clothes?
12/17/21 – 2:43AM	Abu Karam	He was naked to his underwear because he put his clothes up to dry.

12/17/21 – 2:44AM	P17's brother	What happen to his clothes?
12/17/21 – 2:44AM	Abu Karam	I wore them when I returned home. I feel so sorry about it.
12/17/21 – 2:45AM	P17's brother	So, the clothes are with you?
12/17/21 – 2:45AM	Abu Karam	I do not have them anymore. Maybe they got lost with my home.
12/17/21 – 2:46AM	P17's brother	What about the friend whom [name redacted] saw?
12/17/21 – 2:47AM	Abu Karam	That is difficult. I don't know where he is. We have been displaced.
12/17/21 – 2:47AM	P17's brother	God bless you.
12/17/21 – 2:47AM	Abu Karam	He is from Harasta. I don't know anything about his current whereabouts.
		May God bless you! I regret it [taking the clothes] so much.
12/17/21 – 2:48AM	P17's brother	Do you know any other names?
12/17/21 – 2:48AM	Abu Karam	I know [name redacted]. Why?
12/17/21 – 2:50AM	P17's brother	Be assured that I and everyone will be cautious about your safety.
12/17/21 – 2:50AM	Abu Karam	I will tell you but
12/17/21 – 2:50AM	P17's brother	I will not take any actions now.
12/17/21 – 2:50AM	Abu Karam	Good. Once it is quiet in Harasta and we're all back.
12/17/21 – 2:51AM	P17's brother	Apologies for asking so many questions. If someone loses a loved one, they just want to know every detail
12/17/21 – 2:51AM	Abu Karam	I will take you to a person who can tell you what happened to him [brother/cousin]
12/17/21 – 2:51AM	P17	Did someone render first aid? What did the guards do?
12/17/21 – 2:51AM	P17's brother	Did they take him to the hospital?
12/17/21 – 2:51AM	Abu Karam	They left him in front of the door of the collective cell.
12/17/21 – 2:52AM	P17	So, he was not taken to a clinic?
12/17/21 – 2:52AM	Abu Karam	He was taken away; I don't know where. My friend, what did they tell you?
12/17/21 – 2:53AM	P17's brother	Nothing. They would not give us the corpse. How is that possible? We were later told to get a corpse.
12/17/21 – 2:54AM	Abu Karam	Corpses are stored in Harasta for more than a year now.
12/17/21 – 2:56AM	P17's brother	How do you know he [cousin/brother] is dead?
12/17/21 – 2:59AM	Abu Karam	Apologies, I did not have reception.
12/17/21 – 2:59AM	P17's brother	Don't worry, that's fine.
12/17/21 – 2:59AM	Abu Karam	[...]
12/17/21 – 2:59AM	P17's brother	We are lucky that the reception is good today.
12/17/21 – 2:59AM	Abu Karam	There are so many detainees piled up in Harasta.
12/17/21 – 3:00AM	P17's brother	We are brothers.
12/17/21 – 3:00AM	Abu Karam	Harasta was always deep into the uprising. Do you know what I was accused of?
12/17/21 – 3:01AM	P17	What?
12/17/21 – 3:01AM	Abu Karam	Rendering first aid for demonstrators pulling them from the streets.

12/17/21 – 3:02AM	P17's brother	Did [name redacted] say that he was a field doctor?
12/17/21 – 3:02AM	Abu Karam	And that he was beaten.
12/17/21 – 3:02AM	P17's brother	Are you sure that he said it like that?
12/17/21 – 3:03AM	Abu Karam	That he is from [information redacted]. He told me he had bad luck and
12/17/21 – 3:03AM	P17's brother	What exactly did he say?
12/17/21 – 3:03AM	Abu Karam	That he will be transferred to either Sednaya or [...] prison. I asked him why he would be transferred there and about his punishment. He said he would get three months [imprisonment] due to a report from the head of the hospital, because a trap was set for him.
12/17/21 – 3:06AM	P17's brother	Did he not say anything else?
12/17/21 – 3:06AM	Abu Karam	He said he hoped everything will be fine, he sat together with Shadi and said all his siblings were doctors.
12/17/21 – 3:09AM	P17's brother	Did he say that he had a fight with a colleague?
12/17/21 – 3:09AM	Abu Karam	[...] his colleague was Alawite and affiliated with the regime.
12/17/21 – 3:10AM	P17's brother	Please, try to remember.
12/17/21 – 3:11AM	Abu Karam	He started complaining about Alawites. A trap was set for him and someone said he allegedly defected.
12/17/21 – 3:12AM	P17's brother	This is what happened. He was no field doctor. He did not know anyone. He had a fight with his colleague.
12/17/21 – 3:14AM	Abu Karam	He said he wanted to kill his colleague for revenge after his release. My colleague told him to calm down. I think this is what happened.
12/17/21 – 3:14AM	P17's brother	He was no [...]
12/17/21 – 3:14AM	Abu Karam	I don't know. He told me he did not trust anyone. I told him to not dishonor his sister. He said the Ishmaelites would support the revolution.
12/17/21 – 3:17AM	P17's brother	What else?
12/17/21 – 3:20AM	Abu Karam	Friends, what I told him was that I'm an author writing short stories.
12/17/21 – 3:21AM	P17's brother	We might have overtaxed you- Please, try to focus. When did he come to the collective cell? At what time?
12/17/21 – 3:23AM	Abu Karam	He told me I found fat prey. I told him
12/17/21 – 3:24AM	P17's brother	Go on
12/17/21 – 3:24AM	Abu Karam	It was more than a breakfast.
12/17/21 – 3:25AM	P17's brother	Did he come to the collective cell for breakfast? When did he come to the cell?
12/17/21 – 3:29AM	Abu Karam	We had no sense of time.
12/17/21 – 3:29AM	P17's brother	Good.
12/17/21 – 3:29AM	Abu Karam	We could not tell day from night for sure. We only got two meals. I was guessing the time.
12/17/21 – 3:30AM	P17's brother	Intention is what is important, not what you do.
12/17/21 – 3:30AM	Abu Karam	This is...

12/17/21 – 3:30AM	P17's brother	Can you explain how [name redacted] beat him? The number of hits and kicks?
12/17/21 – 3:30AM	Abu Karam	...everything.
12/17/21 – 3:30AM	P17's brother	How much time after he came to the cell did [name redacted] beat him?
12/17/21 – 3:31AM	Abu Karam	Two days. He kicked him on his kidney and [...] beat him on his back
12/17/21 – 3:31AM	P17's brother	Is that all? Was he not hit in his face?
	Abu Karam	No. The people from Harasta came for his rescue. They dragged him away, away from [name redacted]. One of the people from Harasta got into a fight. We told [name redacted] he should not beat anyone again because 'we from Harsata would eat him and defecate.'

Presiding Judge Kerber said being mindful of the court officers' working hours, the judges would stop reading the chat for now and continue the following day.

Proceedings adjourned at 3:15PM.

Day 74 of Trial – May 20, 2021

The hearing began at 9:35 am with four spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Before starting the session, presiding Judge Kerber apologized to Raslan, as he had to wait for a long time to be taken back to the prison after the session on the previous day. She said that this would not be ideal, however, the prison was currently busy doing many prisoner transfers, so some had to wait a bit longer.

Kerber further explained that [name redacted], who previously requested to join the proceedings as plaintiff, had been questioned by the police and the transcript of the questioning including annexes would now be on the case file.

Testimony of Scientific Analyst Strell

Instructions were read out to Kai Strell, a 37-year old Scientific Analyst with the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA).

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to know how the BKA obtained the Facebook chat. Strell explained that his colleague, Criminal High Commissioner Okotutsch, questioned P17 as a witness in [information redacted] on [information redacted]. During the questioning, P17 said that his brother [name redacted] was arrested in [information redacted] on [information redacted] and taken to Al-Khatib Branch. [name redacted/Abu Karam] later contacted P17 and told him that he was detained with P17's brother who died in detention. P17 handed an Arabic transcript of a chat over to the BKA. The chat took place in December 2012 and was between P17, one of his brothers, and [name redacted].

CCI Deußing told Strell after the questioning to analyze the German translation of the chat. Strell therefore checked the descriptions of detention conditions with testimonies from other witnesses.

Kerber asked who [name redacted] was. Strell said he used the name Abu Karam in the chat.

Kerber wanted to know how Strell concluded that Abu Karam's real name was [name redacted]. Strell explained that it became clear from the context and content of the conversation in the chat. P17 also mentioned the name during his questioning with the BKA.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer asked Strell to speak slower, so that Scharmer and his colleagues would be able to take notes.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled Strell saying that he compared the content of the chat with other information that was already known to the BKA. He asked Strell if the descriptions of detention conditions and other things in the chat matched with existing information. Strell explained that the main topic of the chat was [name redacted]. There were only a few descriptions about general detention conditions. According to Abu Karam, the cell in Al-Khatib Branch was 4x7meters. Strell said this matches with testimonies from other witnesses. One witness who was detained at Al-Khatib Branch twice told the BKA that there were different areas: one bigger hall and a smaller cell with around 150 detainees. This description aligns with Abu Karam's statement that there were around 200 people in the collective cell. Strell further recalled that another witness told the BKA that there was a cell measuring 5x5meters with around 30 detainees. Other testimonies mentioned cells that were 5x5 meters or 3x5 meters big. Abu Karam also said in the chat that the food was insufficient. Strell explained that this description as well as the kind of food (Bulgur, Potatoes, and tomatoes) that Abu Karam described, would be in line with the descriptions of other witnesses. According to Strell, others told the BKA that they got olives, eggs, and potatoes, most of them adding that it was insufficient.

Wiedner mentioned that in his written analysis, Strell made a comment about 200 people being detained in a cell measuring 4x7 meters. Strell said he found it hard to imagine so many people in such a small room. However, others confirmed it, talking about up to 400 people being detained in a cell measuring 5x5 meters.

Wiedner asked about a responsible person in each cell. Strell said that Abu Karam mentioned a "Kapo". However, the conversation was mostly focusing on [name redacted]. Strell added that the term "Kapo" was used to describe so-called "prisoners functionary" in Nazi concentration camps. These prisoners were tasked to watch and supervise other prisoners in exchange for certain privileges in detention. According to Strell, other witnesses also told the BKA that there were certain prisoners in Al-Khatib who were responsible for taking care that it was quiet in the cells. A witness told the BKA that one time, the responsible detainee was not able to keep his fellow detainees quiet. He was consequently taken out of the cell. The other prisoners heard him scream in the hallway. When he returned to the cell, his hair and beard were removed. Strell added that Garance Le Caisne also described in her book that the detention facilities in Syria were overcrowded since March 2011. Therefore, detainees were used as "Kapos", so-called called sergeants or forced laborers.

Wiedner wanted to know if deaths from detention conditions were also discussed in the Facebook chat. Strell explained that [Abu Karam] described that the cells were very small with up to 200 people detained in one cell. Abu Karam at one point mentioned that their elbows were against the heads of others. Strell further explained that it was very hot inside the cells.

According to Abu Karam, seven people suffocated, and a fan was placed inside the cell afterwards. Strell added that it was hard for him to imagine that so many people were detained in such a small room, however, it was clear that it was hot inside the cell and detainees at least had trouble breathing. He added that they were talking about July 2011, the hottest month in Syria with average temperatures of around 37.5°C Judge Wiedner corrected from the case file that the average temperature was 35.8°C].

Wiedner asked Strell to examine the credibility of Abu Karam's descriptions based on the overall context of the BKA's investigations. Strell said that if compared to other witness testimonies and assessed in light of the overall context, Abu Karam's descriptions would be credible. Strell recalled that Abu Karam provided much detailed information about [name redacted]. Information, that one could only know if he knew the person. Abu Karam's descriptions of the detention conditions, food, and overcrowded cells were in line with what other witnesses said. They also mentioned that there was a water tap inside the cell.

The prosecutors had no questions for Strell.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Böcker said Strell received a document from a colleague which would be a letter from [name redacted] dated [information redacted]. Böcker wanted to know if Strell knew the content of the letter. Strell denied.

According to Böcker, the letter detailed that [name redacted] was arrested, and the family did not receive any official information about his whereabouts. Böcker added that Strell's colleague noted that he sent this document to Strell. Böcker asked if Strell contacted this colleague regarding the letter. Strell denied.

Presiding Judge Kerber added that CHC Okotutsch would be summoned for August, and could then be questioned accordingly.

There were no questions from the plaintiff counsels.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner mentioned that Strell created many reports during the investigations. Wiedner asked Strell if, based on the overall context, he could identify certain red threads. Strell explained that regarding Al-Khatib Branch, he created notes based on witness testimonies about torture during interrogations, as part of the overall detention, and about the general detention conditions.

Regarding torture in the general context of detention, Strell detailed that several witnesses described a so-called "welcome party" where detainees were arbitrarily beaten when they entered the Branch. According to Strell, around 19 witnesses provided these descriptions. Others did not mention the term "welcoming party" but told the BKA that they were arbitrarily beaten with tools, a green tube, and kicked upon their arrival at the Branch. Strell added that based on the witness testimonies, one got the impression that detainees at the Branch had to expect to be beaten at any time: When they were allowed to use the toilet, they were beaten on the way there, and afterwards, if they did not finish within 10 seconds; guards also came inside the cells to beat the detainees if they were talking, or without any reason.

Regarding torture as part of the detention, Strell explained that detainees were beaten during interrogations while the interrogation officers were present. They were beaten with or without tools, kicked, electroshocked, tortured with Falaqa, Doulab or Shabeh.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know more about a note that Strell wrote on the “flying carpet”. Strell affirmed he wrote the note, adding that the flying carpet was a torture method where people would be tied to a plank which is then folded in a way that the person’s spine is stretched.

Wiedner went on to ask about sexual violence in Al-Khatib Branch. Strell recalled that one witness told the BKA about torture during an interrogation which included sexualized violence.

Wiedner wanted to know what time frame the BKA was investigating. Strell said they were investigating incidents between January 2011 and December 2012.

Wiedner wanted to know if Strell identified a certain pattern in the general detention conditions and interrogations, asking if the instances were isolated or rather part of a general treatment. Strell said he was under the impression that the treatment of detainees was systematic. He added that an insider witness also told the BKA that the “welcome party” was routine. According to this insider, it was normal that new detainees were treated like that, there were no specific orders. Strell further explained that the witness testimonies were very similar regarding the questions that were asked during interrogations at Al-Khatib and the mistreatment during interrogations. He concluded that based on the testimonies, one could identify a repeating pattern that occurred throughout the entire period from January 2011 until December 2012. According to Strell, many different witnesses provided similar descriptions to the BKA.

Wiedner wanted to know more about a hierarchy and orders in Al-Khatib Branch. Strell said he analyzed around 29 testimonies regarding orders and practice of informing relatives of detainees. He detailed that the term “Sidi” [sir] was used by the detainees to address all employees at the Branch. The guards used the term to address the interrogation officers. The other way around, guards were often insulted by interrogation officers. According to Strell, the prison guards therefore had a lower rank than the interrogation officers. Witnesses further told the BKA that there were two kinds of guards at the Branch: the one who would take detainees to the interrogation, and the ones who would be present during interrogations. However, there was no obvious hierarchy between them.

Defense’s Questioning

Defense Counsel Böcker wanted to know whether Strell would call himself an expert [Sachverständiger] for torture techniques and hierarchies within foreign state powers. Strell said that based on how people addressed each other, one could indeed conclude that there was a hierarchy between them.

Böcker again asked if Strell would call himself an expert [Sachverständiger]. Strell said he would not know the legal definition of this term.

Böcker wanted to know if Strell was trained to document torture methods or published about torture and hierarchies. Strell denied.

Böcker said he now wanted to mention specific witness testimonies to ask Strell further questions. However, he would be worried to mention names of witnesses who were anonymized. Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen intervened, saying that it would strongly depend on who Böcker would refer to. Presiding Judge Kerber said Böcker was only allowed to mention names if there would be no connection to a testimony. Böcker explained that he wanted to mention specific names and ask Strell a question about the name. Judge Kerber wanted to know what exactly Böcker envisioned to achieve with his questions and what exactly he wanted to know from Strell. Böcker said he wanted to know if Strell questioned each of the witnesses he was about to name. Judge Kerber said Böcker could get this information by asking a more general question, and without risking to mention the names of anonymized witnesses.

Böcker clarified that he was referring to a specific note that Strell wrote and wanted to know if Strell personally questioned any of the witnesses cited in this note or if he was rather quoting from transcripts.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking Strell if he was present during interviews by the BKA. Strell affirmed, adding that he started working with the BKA in 2019. He was present at several interviews, around seven.

Böcker said that Strell could have a look at the note, which was 77 pages long, and see if he remembered any of the names. Strell said some names would certainly sound familiar to him.

Prosecutor Klinge intervened, saying that by identifying certain names that sound familiar to Strell, the issue of anonymization would still exist. Klinge therefore requested a short break to identify the names that Böcker was referring to and check if the witnesses were anonymized or not.

Böcker replied that anonymization would not be an issue here. He just wanted to know which parts of the note were based on Strell's own experience and which parts he simply "copied" [from transcripts of witness questionings].

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Strell how many witness testimonies he used for the note in total. Strell said he used information from around 50 witness interviews. He received the transcripts of the interviews from CCI Deußing. He then read all of them from beginning to end and scanned them for detention in the above-mentioned time frame [January 2011 – December 2012]. If there were indicators that a witness was detained in this time frame, he started scanning the transcripts for specific torture methods, detention conditions etc. Strell said he proceeded like that with every transcript, including those where he was present during the interview. He always worked with the transcripts. Strell added that whenever he was present at an interview, he was in charge of transcribing, since he would not be a police officer. He only focused on transcribing every detail during the interviews. Later, he received all interviews in the form of transcripts.

Böcker concluded that Strell "copied" his note based on the existing files. Strell affirmed, explaining that he read and analyzed every single transcript.

Böcker wanted to know if the note should therefore read like "I read that witness xyz said that..." rather than "witness xyz said...". He added that it would be more of a 'statement of a statement'. Strell affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if the defense's questions had been answered now. Defense counsel Fratzky said he had a few more questions.

Fratzky wanted to know if Strell added any information to his note for interviews during which he was present. Strell denied, saying he only relied on the wording of the transcript.

Fratzky asked if he stuck to the wording even if he realized that the witness said or did anything which was not included in the transcript. Strell denied, explaining that when he was present during interviews, he was only focusing on providing an accurate transcript.

Fratzky asked Strell if he did not add or change anything in cases where the transcript for example said "apple" but Strell remembered that the witness said "pear". Strell denied, repeating that he was only focusing on providing a proper transcript during the interviews and based his notes solely on what one could double-check.

Judge Kerber asked if Strell ever noted discrepancies between the transcript and his memory. Strell denied, adding that whenever he identified discrepancies within one testimony, he highlighted that.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge asked Strell about the form/appearance of his notes. Strell said he wrote status reports [Sachstandsberichte], but they called them notes [Vermerke].

Klinge wanted to know if Strell was familiar with the term evaluation note [Auswertungsvermerk]. Strell said they usually used the abbreviation "note".

Scientific Analyst Strell was dismissed as a witness.

The judges continued to read out the second half of the Facebook chat.

[The following is a recreation of the chat based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

12/17/21 – 3:31AM	P17's brother	Good. Did [name redacted] tell you about an interrogation he had before he was taken to the collective cell?
12/17/21 – 3:34AM	Abu Karam	No, he was not interrogated.
12/17/21 – 3:34AM	P17	What did [name redacted] tell you after he was beaten? What did he do?
12/17/21 – 3:34AM	Abu Karam	He thanked Abu Khaled. We considered the issue to be solved. He slept and did not wake up.
12/17/21 – 3:35AM	P17's brother	Was he in pain from the beating?
12/17/21 – 3:35AM	Abu Karam	Yes, but he was upset and despondent. He did not suffer a lot of pain, I swear.
12/17/21 – 3:36AM	P17's brother	Did any of the responsible people [at the Branch] order [name redacted] to beat [name redacted] [correction/continuation of sentence, see below]?
12/17/21 – 3:37AM	Abu Karam	Yes,
12/17/21 – 3:37AM	P17's brother	[name redacted] [see above]
12/17/21 – 3:37AM	Abu Karam	They were whispering and [name redacted] was pointing at him
12/17/21 – 3:37AM	P17's brother	Did he beat him right after that or later?
12/17/21 – 3:38AM	Abu Karam	He waited. I think he beat him later. I don't know what they said or ordered.
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	P17's brother	Why was [name redacted] detained?
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	Abu Karam	Yes because...
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	P17's brother	Why did they arrest him?
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	Abu Karam	...he said he seceded the government. He allegedly came to an agreement.
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	P17's brother	So, you don't know why he was arrested?
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	Abu Karam	He approached the authorities on his own. He turned himself in. His brother is an investigator.

12/17/21 – 3:39AM	P17's brother	And did he listen to your conversations?
12/17/21 – 3:39AM	Abu Karam	Yes, amongst others. I did not know because he was not sitting close.
12/17/21 – 3:40AM	P17's brother	Did he hear everything [name redacted] said?
12/17/21 – 3:40AM	Abu Karam	Because we are from Harasta, we showed him his boundaries.
12/17/21 – 3:40AM		I don't think so. He was far away, and it was loud.
12/17/21 – 3:40AM	Abu Karam	You said seven people died. Did they all die in the collective cell or in different cells?
12/17/21 – 3:41AM	P17	No, they all died in our collective cell.
12/17/21 – 3:41AM	Abu Karam	And all of them [died] while you were there?
		One of them was from the [name redacted] family. [name redacted] from [information redacted], yes. And one from [information redacted] quarter. [name redacted] and one from [information redacted] was affected as well. Two more did as well. They took pills when they were arrested. When they arrived at the cell, they were hallucinating. One of them died immediately, the other one died the following day.
12/17/21 – 3:43AM	P17's brother	How old is [name redacted]?
12/17/21 – 3:44AM	Abu Karam	He was 34.
12/17/21 – 3:44AM	P17's brother	Is he from Rukneddine?
12/17/21 – 3:45AM	Abu Karam	No, he is from [information redacted]. He lived opposite of the bakery.
12/17/21 – 3:45AM	P17's brother	Did he beat anyone else except from [name redacted]?
12/17/21 – 3:45AM	Abu Karam	Yes, [he beat] many. But he did not beat me. I did not acquiesce to it. I "kicked him in his balls" and the people from Harasta attacked him. He was rescued by the security guards.
12/17/21 – 3:46AM	P17's brother	[...]
12/17/21 – 3:46AM	Abu Karam	He wrapped a pullover around a piece of soap and used it like a slingshot.
12/17/21 – 3:48AM	P17's brother	Did he beat two times or more often?
12/17/21 – 3:48AM	P17's brother	And [name redacted] did not [...]
12/17/21 – 3:48AM	Abu Karam	No. [name redacted] hit [name redacted] and then the people from Harasta started beating him. He hit me later.
12/17/21 – 3:50AM	P17's brother	How were you able to sleep in such a cramped cell?
12/17/21 – 3:51AM	Abu Karam	Head [at] elbows, and knees.
12/17/21 – 3:51AM	P17's brother	Go on.
12/17/21 – 3:52AM	Abu Karam	I am an activist since the beginning. After I was released I got even more radical, as I'm no longer afraid of anything.
12/17/21 – 3:52AM	P17's brother	May God bless you.
12/17/21 – 3:52AM	Abu Karam	Yes.

12/17/21 – 3:53AM	P17's brother	If God pleases, we will be brothers for eternity. Maybe we can meet soon. You were the last person to be in contact with [name redacted].
12/17/21 – 3:53AM	Abu Karam	May you live long, doctor. I'm afraid [...]
12/17/21 – 3:54AM	P17's brother	That's enough to be one of us.
12/17/21 – 3:55AM	Abu Karam	That's comforting me. I'm so happy.
12/17/21 – 3:55AM	P17's brother	My apologies.
12/17/21 – 3:55AM	Abu Karam	Why?
12/17/21 – 3:55AM	P17's brother	Apologies for bothering you and taking your sleep today. And for asking you more questions. If a loved one dies, one just wants to know everything. [name redacted] was raised by us. I'm 15 years older than him. He was like a son to me.
12/17/21 – 3:58AM	Abu Karam	You're right.
12/17/21 – 3:58AM	P17's brother	I hope you understand.
12/17/21 – 3:58AM	Abu Karam	I'm sorry for being a witness of such evil.
12/17/21 – 3:58AM	P17's brother	Apologies for being so stubborn.
12/17/21 – 3:59AM	Abu Karam	Apologies.
12/17/21 – 3:59AM	P17's brother	No, quite the contrary.
12/17/21 – 3:59AM	Abu Karam	We're brothers for eternity.
12/17/21 – 3:59AM	P17's brother	You are such a benefactor. Without you, we would never learn anything [about their brother's death]
12/17/21 – 3:59AM	Abu Karam	I consider you brothers.
12/17/21 – 3:59AM	P17's brother	As God pleases.
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	Abu Karam	God...
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	P17's brother	We as well [consider you a brother]
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	Abu Karam	...was the one who brought us together.
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	P17's brother	You got to know [name redacted] and made your personal picture.
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	Abu Karam	He was a good person.
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	P17's brother	You have the same core.
12/17/21 – 4:00AM	Abu Karam	He was human. May God [...]
12/17/21 – 4:01AM	P17's brother	If you want, we can get to know each other better. [...]
12/17/21 – 4:01AM	Abu Karam	I'm praying for it.
12/17/21 – 4:01AM	P17's brother	I want to add something.
12/17/21 – 4:01AM	Abu Karam	Rosy times will come.
12/17/21 – 4:02AM	P17's brother	Something that might please you.
12/17/21 – 4:02AM	Abu Karam	Yes, say it.
12/17/21 – 4:02AM	P17's brother	We are hopeful that [name redacted] is still alive.
12/17/21 – 4:02AM	Abu Karam	As God pleases. I pray for it.
12/17/21 – 4:02AM	P17's brother	We're hopeful that he was not dead when you saw him.
12/17/21 – 4:02AM	Abu Karam	God [...]
12/17/21 – 4:03AM	P17's brother	Maybe he received first aid. But we're not sure.
12/17/21 – 4:03AM	Abu Karam	I pray for it.
12/17/21 – 4:03AM	P17's brother	There are indications.
12/17/21 – 4:03AM	Abu Karam	To that ...

12/17/21 – 4:03AM	P17's brother	But it is not confirmed.
12/17/21 – 4:03AM	Abu Karam	...your instinct is not wrong.
12/17/21 – 4:03AM	P17's brother	That's how people hold on to hope.
12/17/21 – 4:04AM	Abu Karam	Yes, of course!
12/17/21 – 4:04AM	P17's brother	That is why you are our new brother.
12/17/21 – 4:04AM	Abu Karam	Doctor.
12/17/21 – 4:04AM	P17's brother	We want you to be one of us and [...] Don't tell anyone a word about it.
12/17/21 – 4:04AM	Abu Karam	We will, as God pleases. I swear. Your wish is my demand.
12/17/21 – 4:05AM	P17's brother	If he is alive, it [talking about it] could endanger him.
12/17/21 – 4:05AM	Abu Karam	You're right. I did not know...
12/17/21 – 4:05AM	P17's brother	You think that he is dead.
12/17/21 – 4:05AM	Abu Karam	...that [name redacted] would publish it immediately.
12/17/21 – 4:05AM	P17's brother	You're thinking that for a reason.
12/17/21 – 4:06AM	Abu Karam	Exactly.
12/17/21 – 4:06AM	P17's brother	We're not reproaching you, quite the contrary. This is how we could communicate.
12/17/21 – 4:06AM	Abu Karam	After I was released, I saw [name redacted]. Yes.
12/17/21 – 4:06AM	P17's brother	It was important he spread the word.
12/17/21 – 4:06AM	Abu Karam	Right.
12/17/21 – 4:07AM	P17's brother	You cannot imagine how grateful we are.
12/17/21 – 4:07AM	P17	What did [name redacted] say after you were released?
12/17/21 – 4:07AM	Abu Karam	I said 'are you sure that [name redacted] was totally exhausted?' He said he wiped foam off his mouth. I said I didn't see any foam. This is why until today I am not a 100% convinced of his death. There are still 10% doubts.
12/17/21 – 4:09AM	P17's brother	What was his temperature when he would not wake up?
12/17/21 – 4:10AM	Abu Karam	Average.
12/17/21 – 4:10AM	P17	You said it [body temperature] increased after the beating. Did you touch him?
12/17/21 – 4:12AM	Abu Karam	It did increase after the beating. When I woke up, I saw how [name redacted] wetted his pullover and put it on [name redacted] body.
12/17/21 – 4:13AM	P17's brother	Did he have bruises on his back?
12/17/21 – 4:13AM	Abu Karam	Not there [back]. He had red signs. When I put my ear on his heart, I could not hear a heartbeat. Maybe it was because it was loud and I'm not an expert.
12/17/21 – 4:15AM	P17	But you signed the piece of paper?
12/17/21 – 4:15AM	Abu Karam	Yes
12/17/21 – 4:15AM	P17's brother	When [did you sign the paper] after he was taken away?
12/17/21 – 4:15AM	Abu Karam	I had to write that he was OK.
12/17/21 – 4:16AM	P17's brother	After two or three hours Did someone say that he died?

12/17/21 – 4:17AM	Abu Karam	No. I asked what happened and they told me it was none of my business. I was told to write that I saw him, that he was not hurt, and that he did not wake up.
12/17/21 – 4:17AM	P17's brother	How exactly did you formulate it?
12/17/21 – 4:17AM	Abu Karam	Yes, I signed it.
12/17/21 – 4:18AM	P17's brother	Could you repeat the exact wording?
12/17/21 – 4:20AM	Abu Karam	I confirmed that the above-mentioned detainee died. I confirmed that I saw him. He did not suffer, he was not hurt. Everything was fine until he fell asleep. He slept until he started to feel sick, his condition worsened. We informed the relevant authority. That's what was written on the paper. I did not [...]
12/17/21 – 4:21AM	P17's brother	No officer said he was dead?
12/17/21 – 4:21AM	Abu Karam	We did not discuss such things [...]
12/17/21 – 4:24AM	P17	Thank you, brother. Maybe we could stay in touch and set a date for tomorrow to [...]
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	Abu Karam	Whenever you want.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	P17	Good night.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	P17's brother	Thank you.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	Abu Karam	You're welcome.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	P17's brother	Good night.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	Abu Karam	Doctor, I want to ask a favor.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	P17	It depends on the electricity.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	Abu Karam	Please. Yes.
12/17/21 – 4:25AM	P17's brother	Go on.
12/17/21 – 4:26AM	Abu Karam	Doctor [name redacted], I suffer from drumstick fingers, and I don't have medicine. Could you help me?
12/17/21 – 4:26AM	P17's brother	[...] it is normal when you [...]
12/17/21 – 4:27AM	Abu Karam	I swear.
12/17/21 – 4:27AM	P17's brother	It is no sickness.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the Accused and the defense counsels whether they would now consider their relevant request to take additional evidence as fulfilled. All three affirmed.

Kerber announced that she would now read out a decision of the chamber regarding a further request from the defense to take additional evidence [trial day 68]. She added that copies of the decision would be handed over to the court interpreters to ease simultaneous interpretation.

[The following is a recreation of the chamber's decision, based on what the trial monitor was able to hear in court.]

1) On April 8, 2021, defense counsels Böcker and Fratzky requested to take additional evidence in the form of: visually inspecting diagrams from the German Intelligence Service (BND) detailing the structure of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate, and reading the relevant notes on the structure.

The diagrams as well as the notes were already read out and visually inspected on November 4, 2020. The right to repeat the inspection and read out is not given. The counsels did not demonstrate any reasons for a repetition, nor are such reasons apparent.

2) On April 8, 2021, defense counsels Böcker and Fratzky requested to take additional evidence in the form of: hearing [name redacted] and [name redacted] from the BND as witnesses. This request was rejected.

a) One could only conclude that P31's testimony needs to be excluded because he did not tell the truth, if the above-mentioned witnesses could confirm that it was the sole responsibility of Division 40 to batter demonstrations. They would need to confirm that no Division or Branch other than Division 40 was involved in quelling demonstrations.

b) The present request cannot be considered a request to take additional evidence according to §244 (3) s.1 StPO, as it is lacking connectivity.

Both witnesses are BND officers who are responsible for the report on the Syrian Intelligence Services provided by the office. This report states that the general mandate for all intelligence services was the "fight against terrorism". There were overlaps of authority and it was often not possible to identify an individual service which was in charge. However, the report also states that certain focuses of work were visual. Anwar Raslan was involved in investigations at Branch 251 of the General Intelligence Service. This Branch was generally responsible for fighting terrorism, equipped with certain executive functions, and supported by Division 40, the so-called "quick reaction force". The BND report also states that all services were involved in the fight against terrorism. There was not a division of mandates, solely certain areas of focus, including many overlaps in authority.

- c) The court already fulfilled its obligation to establish the truth (§244 (2) StPO) by reading out the BND report and visually inspecting the attached diagrams. There are no indications that the state of knowledge changed.*
- d) If one was to treat the present request as a request to take additional evidence, it would be void (§ 244 (3) s. 2 StPO). The conclusion that Anwar Raslan was not present at the demonstration and the funeral, and that P31 consequently did not tell the truth is mere circumstantial evidence and not relevant for the judgments.*

Even if Division 40 was formally speaking the only division tasked to quell demonstrations, reality does not exclude that tasks were exercised differently. Such a constellation seems extremely likely due to the limited availability of intelligence staff during the time in question. This was also confirmed by the experts Thurmann and Al-Bunni who testified that several intelligence services worked together. Eyad Al-Gharib also told the BKA that at a demonstration in September or October 2011, members of General Intelligence Branch 251 were present. Experts Engels, Al-Bunni, Darwish, and Thurmann further added that the Syrian regime was collecting information about critics prior to and after the Arab Spring. It is therefore plausible that higher-ranking officers were involved in field operations as well.

3) The request to hear [name redacted] and two other witnesses was rejected.

- a) All three witnesses are present abroad, two of them in Turkey and one in Saudi Arabia. In determining the request, the court needs to consider this fact, according to applicable law.*
- b) The hearing of these witnesses residing abroad is consequently to be denied. All of them are former employees of Branch 251. [name redacted] was a prison guard. However, the position of the other two witnesses is unknown. According to the defense, all three witnesses are supposed to testify that Anwar Raslan was never outside of Branch 251, was solely working an office job, and that beating a person would be against his character.*
  - aa) In hearing the above-mentioned three witnesses, the defense seeks to confirm that Anwar Raslan was not present at the demonstration and to shatter the credibility of P31's testimony [Kerber quickly recalled that P31 said Raslan was present at a demonstration, at a funeral, and slapped his face during an interrogation at Branch 251]. The request insofar relates to the behavior of the Accused which P31 described in his testimony.*
  - bb) The value of P31's testimony [regarding Raslan's character] is low but not essential. Many other witnesses also told the court about interrogations or conversations with Raslan. They described his position and location, which was also confirmed by insider witnesses. P31 only described one single punch resulting from enragement. If his testimony would be omitted a lead indicating that the violent treatment of detainees was not foreign to Raslan himself would get lost.*

Evidence so far confirmed that Raslan was mainly serving an office job inside the Branch. However, it would also be possible that he was working outside as well in his capacity as a Colonel. There is a considerably marginal possibility that any of the requested witnesses would testify something else. To do so, they would need to exclude that Raslan was not outside the Branch for half a day only. However, this is very unlikely. The defense's request is lacking connectivity here.

Almost every previous witness testified that Raslan's office was upstairs. Based on the evidence so far, [name redacted] was, however, working downstairs in the basement, as he was working as a prison guard. He was therefore two levels apart from Raslan. The position of the other two requested witnesses is unclear, however, it is not apparent that they worked closely with Raslan.

- cc) The same reasoning applies with regards to Raslan's character and his attitude towards the opposition. There is no averment and a connection to how the witnesses would know about Raslan's character does not become apparent from the request. P31 merely described an impulse.*
- dd) In its overall determination, the chamber further must consider that all three witnesses would have to provide extensive – possibly self-incriminating – information. All three would have the right to refuse testimony and to consult a witness counsel. They would most likely make use of their right to refuse testimony. All three witnesses are further present outside of the EU. A relevant request for legal assistance would take around four months until the witnesses could be questioned via video. This would prolong the trial.*

Overall, it is not necessary to hear the three proposed witnesses. Further clarification of facts is not to be expected from their testimonies.

- c) The present request cannot be considered as a request to take additional evidence according to §244 (3) s.1 StPO as it does not become apparent how the proposed witnesses should have a certain knowledge. There is consequently no need to hear these witnesses in light of §244 (2) StPO.*

Before closing the session, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that one of the court interpreters [he previously worked for Eyad Al-Gharib] requested to be released from his duties at the court. Kerber said the court now found an adequate replacement and thanked the interpreter for his services.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:00 AM.

The next session will be on June 16, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 37

P34, a 34-year-old Syrian man and plaintiff in the trial, testified regarding his own detention in Al-Khatib Branch, as well as his brother's detention at the same Branch. P34 described the generally bad detention conditions at the Branch and said he heard people being tortured with electroshocks every day. He further explained to the court that his sister told him that their brother who was detained in Al-Khatib Branch, was interrogated by Anwar Raslan who threatened him to arrest and rape his sister if he did not confess. P34 also showed the court a picture from the Caesar Files that shows his brother-in-law who allegedly died at Al-Khatib Branch.

Trial Day 76 – June 17, 2021

P35, a former Syrian athlete testified on his detentions at Al-Khatib Branch as well as the physical and psychosocial consequences of his 13 detentions in Syria. The judges acknowledged that it was difficult for P35 to testify in court and remember details due to the psychosocial trauma that was caused by multiple detentions and torture. P35 identified Raslan as head of interrogations at Branch 251 with far reaching competencies and influence.

Day 75 of Trial – June 16, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 am with six spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker was not present. Plaintiff counsel Kleyer substituted for Khubaib Ali Mohammed.

A new court interpreter was sworn in and informed about his duties as a linguistic expert in the trial.

Presiding Judge Kerber said Plaintiff counsel Bahns who accompanied P34 recently sent a picture to the court and asked Bahns to explain this to all parties. Bahns said his client spoke about his brother-in-law [note for the translator: his sister's husband] during his questioning with the police [BKA]. When Bahns spoke to P34 some time after the questioning, P34 told him that his family identified his brother-in-law in one of the pictures from the Caesar Files. P34 sent the picture to Bahns who thought he had sent it to the BKA, but apparently did not. He therefore sent the picture directly to the judges, so it could be included in the casefile and made available for all parties. Presiding Judge Kerber handed out color-copies of the picture to all parties to the case.

P34 was accompanied by his plaintiff counsel and informed about his rights and duties as a witness. P34 detailed that he was 34-years-old and working as a care worker at a school for disabled children.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that P34 would need to repeat in court what he already told the police during his questioning at the end of last year. She asked P34 to describe why and how he was arrested in Syria. She added that Judge Wiedner would then ask additional questions if needed. P34 asked if he should tell how he was arrested or provide general descriptions. Judge Kerber said he should tell the court how he was arrested and what happened after his arrest.

P34 explained that demonstrations started to take place in March 2011. His brother, his uncle and others participated in these demonstrations. There were demonstrations in the old town of Damascus and in Al-Hamidiyah. P34 said his brother and his uncle were arrested at a demonstration and the family found out that they were taken to Al-Khatib Branch, where they were detained for one month. When they were released, one could see signs of torture and mistreatment. After their release, P34's brother started organizing demonstrations against Bashar Al-Assad which spread all over the country. P34 said he participated in demonstrations in [information redacted]. P34's brother organized demonstrations on a large scale. This was the reason why P34's brother's name eventually appeared on a list. He was strongly suspected and urgently searched for.<sup>2</sup> P34 explained that he and his other brothers were also demonstrating, so their names appeared on the list as well. At the end of July 2011, members of the military stormed the family's house. P34 said these people were members of the army/military carrying Kalashnikovs. They destroyed the door and stormed the house. P34 said he and two of his brothers were taken away. They were taken to a Branch and downstairs. P34 explained that he was able to see that there were three vans that were accompanied by Jeeps ahead and behind the convoy.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, saying she noticed a gesture from P34 that might indicate that there were weapons. She asked P34 if the people in the Jeeps were carrying weapons. P34 said there was one pick-up that carried a big weapon. He asked whether he should explain all details. Kerber affirmed.

P34 went on to describe that his and his brothers' mobile phones and purses were taken. P34 only wore a vest/undershirt and shorts. He was barefoot, his hands were tied behind his back, and he was blindfolded. P34 said he was grabbed by his neck, taken downstairs, and put inside one of the buses. Members of the military were waiting inside the bus, one of them carried a weapon. P34 explained that because he was barefoot, one of the people wearing military boots stepped on his feet. Every time that he or one of his brother's raised their heads, they were beaten. P34 said they arrived at their destination after around one hour. He was only able to see that they were taken downstairs. They were placed inside a queue at a hallway. P34 said there were cells in this basement. He further told the court that he and his brothers had to take off their shorts and lie on the floor.

The guards then searched their anuses to check whether they were carrying anything. P34 said if someone carried anything with them, it was taken away.

After this, P34 and his brothers were taken inside a collective cell. The cell was already crowded and completely packed, when P34 and his brothers arrived. Then two people carrying big batons entered the cell and started beating everyone standing in the front rows. Once the door was closed, one could hear that people were tortured with electroshocks, said P34. He and his brothers were waiting for their turn to be interrogated. P34 added that when they entered the cell, some people were immediately accused of having owned bombs and weapons. He went on to describe that they got food twice a day, however, the food “was nothing.” He said they were constantly hungry and only got a tomato or flatbread. New detainees arrived at the cell every two or three days. P34 said there were around 125 in this small cell. On his first day in the cell, he saw a child, who was around eight or nine years old. He also saw an elderly man, around 80-years-old. P34 told the court that detainees were taken for interrogation, others returned to the cell after interrogations. There was no water inside the cell and they had to drink water from the toilet. According to P34, the detainees had to sleep while standing as there was simply no space.

P34 said he was in this cell for around five days, maybe longer. During this time, he constantly heard people screaming. After a few days, he was taken to the hallway. His hands were tied behind his back and he was blindfolded. He had to stand in the hallway where he could hear screams from torture. He was then taken to a room. There was a person behind him in this room who carried a baton. P34 said he could not see much of what was happening in front of him but he could see that there was a person sitting behind a desk. P34 had to kneel and was asked questions about whether he participated in demonstrations or if he planned anything against the government. He denied everything and received a hit from behind for every denial. He was also asked if he ran a website opposing the regime. He denied and every time he denied, he was beaten. P34 said he was taken to a hallway after the interrogation. He had to stand there with his head down. Every time he raised his head, he was beaten. He was then taken to another hallway where he had to sit on the floor for around two hours before he was taken back to the same cell from where he was taken. He was then told that he and his brothers would be released in two or three days.

He and his brothers were taken to a hallway. They had to take some steps downstairs to get there. P34 explained he assumed they would be released but they were transferred to a smaller cell. P34 and one of his brothers shared a cell while his other brother was taken to a different cell. P34 described that around 35 or 36 people were detained in the small cell. They had to stay there for a couple days. P34 recalled that he met two older men there. One of them had been in this cell for nine years, another one had been there for twelve years. Both were there without any indictment and had never seen a judge. P34 described another person who was detained in the same cell. He was from Douma and one could see signs of torture all over his body. P34 added that this person’s body was blue and green. According to P34, this person was unable to eat or drink but did not receive any medication. P34 said if one looked at this person, one could tell that he must be taken to a hospital, or he would die. P34 said this person was already in the same cell than P34 before and they were transferred together.

P34 said he was detained at the Branch for eleven days in total. They were taken out of their cell and told that they could go home. P34 added that the person with severe signs of torture was taken out of the cell every two days and returned “with even more suffering.” When P34 and his brothers were released, this person was still in detention. P34 assumed he died there because he did not receive any medical treatment.

P34 told the court that [when they were about to be released] they had to go upstairs [from where the cell was] where they were gathered. Their hands were tied with cable ties. P34 explained that the person who told them they were allowed to go home, smiled while he said that. However, they were put in buses and blindfolded. P34 described that he was able to see some of the way. The situation was similar to the previous one [when they were taken to the Branch from their home]: military vehicles were accompanied by additional vehicles. A person was waiting at the entry of the bus. He was carrying a weapon and wearing a uniform. P34 said he was surprised when they were taken to the State Security Branch.

P34 explained that this Branch was a city for itself. After they entered through the big entrance gate, they took the street to the left and were let off the bus. They had to assemble at a yard when guards came and started beating some of the detainees. P34 said they had to wait there for two to four hours before the guards started taking them downstairs. The cells were located at an even lower level and the detainees were allocated to different cells. P34 added that the cells were around 2x1 meters big with 25 people inside. They all had to stand as there was not enough space. P34 further added that guards constantly came and beat detainees using a baton. One day, their hair was cropped. P34 said that was around Ramadan.

He further explained that they got food twice a day. However, the food was bad, dirty, and not enough. He said he lost 20kg in 20 days. P34 said the rules at the Branch were very strict. They were only allowed to use the toilet twice a day, maybe even only once. He said that every time they wanted to use the toilet, they had to stand in line with guards carrying batons standing next to them. The guards then beat the detainees on their way to the toilet and back. P34 added that one had five or six seconds to use the toilet. If one took more time, a guard came and started beating the person. P34 said they were also beaten on their way back to the cell.

P34 further described that one of the guards was particularly beastly. This guard started beating everyone when he was in a bad mood. P34 recalled that one time a detainee wrote the word "Allah" on the wall of the cell. P34 said if he remembered correctly, the person used blood to write on the wall. When the particularly beastly guard saw the writing, he started beating all detainees and said "there is no God, just Bashar Al-Assad." P34 further recalled that after he was in this cell for a couple days, he was blindfolded and taken to a corridor in the basement. P34 added that he thinks they were taken to another building through a tunnel. They then had to go upstairs to the first or second floor until they arrived at an office where a guard was standing next to the door. P34 was then taken inside the office where he had to stand. He was asked if he participated in demonstrations or organized activities against the regime. P34 said the interrogator had P34's brother's phone and was asking him about names from the contacts. P34 first thought it was his own phone but then found out that it was his brother's. P34 denied all questions. He told the court he did not care. According to P34 he was lucky that the interrogator was in a good mood. He was watching TV during the interrogation and zapping through the channels. After the interrogation, P34 was taken back to his cell. P34 explained that he was detained in Al-Khatib Branch for eleven days and nine days in this branch.

P34 described that he sat in his cell until guards came with a list of names and were calling people's names. P34 and his older brother were detained in the same cell while their younger brother was detained in a different cell. Nonetheless, their younger brother's name was called. P34's name was called as well. He was surprised that he would be released. P34 described that everyone whose names were called, were blindfolded and their hands were tied behind their backs.

They were taken upstairs and some people, around eight or ten, had to wait in a yard. P34 said that two officers and other members of the military were standing in the yard as well. They told the detainees that they were chosen to be released. However, they should make sure to never be arrested again. If they would be arrested again, ‘they’ would already know what to do with them. P34 said the officers also told them to be on the side of the “fatherland”. The detainees were then put inside a small van that had no seats. Their hands were untied, and the blindfolds were taken off. P34 said this happened at night. The van then drove for around 500 meters. They drove outside the Branch to a street when the van suddenly stopped and the detainees were kicked out. P34 explained that this was a strange situation because he was just wearing shorts and a shirt – what he wore when he was arrested. He was barefoot and no taxi driver was willing to stop to take him home. P34 said everyone ran away in different directions. At some point, a taxi stopped and took P34 home. He added that when they were kicked out of the van, he could see that they were in Al-Baramkeh neighborhood in Damascus.

P34 told the court, that when he came home, his parents had not heard anything about the whereabouts of their sons. They hugged each other and P34’s parents started to cry. P34 further recalled that his brother (who had not been home since P34 and his brothers had been arrested) also came home. P34 said he was the only one who was released, his two other brothers were transferred to a third branch. According to their descriptions, they were transferred to a military branch close to Damascus airport. P34 said that the treatment of detainees was very bad there. They were put in a hole and doused with dirty water. P34’s brothers were released twenty days after he was released. He recalled that after his release, he was able to regenerate a bit. He had lost a lot of weight during his detention. P34 added that he was afraid to sleep at his home. He was in constant fear and worried all the time. P34 further said that he had some money in his purse when he was arrested – around €100 – but he only got back his empty purse when he was released.

Judge Kerber thanked P34 for his descriptions and asked about the date of his release. P34 said it was in mid-August 2011, during Ramadan.

Kerber wanted to know how P34 knew that the first Branch he was detained at was Al-Khatib. P34 said he knew from people who were detained with him. They recognized the streets. Some people who were already in the cell when P34 arrived also told him and his brother that they would be at Al-Khatib Branch. P34 added that after he was released, he was also told that he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch as this Branch was in charge of the area he lived in.

Kerber recalled that other witnesses mentioned names of guards and asked P34 if he knew any names as well. P34 said he does not remember very well, but one guard got a nickname: Mimat. [The translator added that this would mean pigeon breeder in German].

Kerber asked if the nickname derived from a TV series. P34 affirmed, adding that he was not entirely sure because this happened ten years ago.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner said he had a few more detailed questions for P34, starting with a question about the time before his detention when he participated in demonstrations. Wiedner wanted to know how the Syrian security forces reacted to the demonstrations. P34 said he participated in demonstrations, particularly in [information redacted]. Security forces and police fired shots at the protestors using Kalashnikovs at every demonstration. There were big buses with members of the military carrying batons and weapons at every demonstration. Streets were blocked in addition and vehicles with heavy ordnance were present as well. P34 added that some people were killed, others were arrested. If one was killed, the many protestors participated in the funeral, chanting slogans against Bashar Al-Assad. According to P34, security forces were present at the funerals as well, shooting at people.

Wiedner asked if P34 participated in such a funeral himself. P34 denied, adding that he participated in demonstrations where shots were fired.

Wiedner wanted to know when and where these demonstrations happened. P34 explained the demonstrations took place in Al-Midan and Al-Qadam. He recalled that at one demonstration in Al-Midan, people were gathering after Friday prayers, close to the Al-Hasan Mosque, and shouting parols against Bahar Al-Assad. Security forces came and started shooting at protesters in a "hysteric manner". P34 said he was very afraid at this incident. He further recalled another demonstration in Al-Midan that took place on a Friday as well. According to P34 security forces fired smoke-bombs at the protesters.

Wiedner wanted to know if these incidents happened before P34's arrest. P34 affirmed, adding that it was in May or June [2011]. His uncle was killed by a sniper at a demonstration in Al-Qadam. His funeral turned into a demonstration and security forces started beating people.

Wiedner asked when this happened. P34 said it was summer 2011, however, he could not remember the exact date.

Wiedner went on to ask P34 if he was directly taken to Al-Khatib Branch at his arrest or if he was taken to another place before. P34 said it was early morning when he and his brothers were taken to the buses and directly taken to Al-Khatib.

Wiedner recalled P34 telling the German police that he might have been at Jisr Al-Abyad after his arrest. P34 explained that he assumed that Al-Khatib Branch was located in Jisr Al-Abyad. However, he asked someone who used to demonstrate with his brothers and who was detained in Al-Khatib as well according to his descriptions of the cells. This person then told P34 that Al-Khatib Branch was not located in Jisr Al-Abyad but close to the Red Crescent Hospital. P34 added that he did not know Al-Khatib Branch because there are just so many branches in Damascus. According to P34 the person who told him about the location of Al-Khatib also told him about Anwar Raslan and that he and P34's brother were interrogated by Raslan.

Wiedner wanted to know if P34 met Raslan during his detention. P34 denied, adding that he could not see due to the blindfolds.

Wiedner went on to ask about the detention conditions. He recalled that P34 said that around 125 people were detained in one cell and asked P34 about the size of this cell. P34 said it was around 6 or 7 meters long and around 1 to 2 meters wide.

Everyone had to stand all the time, and one could not lie down to sleep. P34 said it was very crowded and he had to lie on the side when he wanted to sleep and could not move.

Wiedner asked about the air inside the cell, considering that it was in the middle of summer. P34 said there simply was no air. He got a skin rash and the situation inside the cell was very bad. It was very hot and while some people slept, others used their shirts to wave some air. P34 concluded that the situation was unbearable.

Wiedner wanted to know if there was daylight in the cell. P34 denied.

Wiedner asked if the light was switched off at night. P34 denied, saying it was burning all the time.

Wiedner wanted to know why P34 got a skin rash. P34 explained that there was no water, the cell was full of dirt and there was no soap to wash.

Wiedner asked if P34 heard other detainees being mistreated, and if so, how many times he heard it. P34 said he heard people screaming from torture with electric shocks every day. He also saw a person from Douma who showed signs of torture. His entire body was green and blue. P34 recalled that a person who came from the same town that P34 tried to flee [on his arrest]. He was then thrown from the balcony, broke his foot, and was detained. P34 said the one person in his cell who was tortured the most would have needed medical treatment.

Wiedner wanted to know what this person had to suffer and if he was injured. P34 explained that this person's body was covered with bruises. He could barely breath and was unable to eat or drink. He was lying on his back and the others thought he was about to die any time.

Wiedner asked if someone told the guards and if they were aware of the situation. P34 said of course someone told the guards, they already knew this person and knew about his situation.

Wiedner wanted to know if P34 spoke with others about interrogations. P34 said that people from Douma explained what happened to them. According to P34 the focus was on people from Douma. One of them carried fireworks and was therefore suspected to have stored bombs. P34 was questioned whether he participated in demonstrations against Bashar Al-Assad or organized them. He was also questioned if there was a link between him and his brothers and Al-Jazeera, if they filmed demonstrations and sent the material to Al-Jazeera. P34 concluded that the interrogations had various aspects and varied from one detainee to another. Some were tortured more than others.

Wiedner recalled P34 telling the German police that information about detainees was written somewhere. P34 said he remembered that one detainee had been detained for nine years, another one for twelve years.

Wiedner said P34 told the police that some detainees had information written on their arms. P34 said that some people told him about this.

Wiedner wanted to know if fellow detainees told P34 about specific torture methods. P34 asked if Wiedner was referring to Al-Khatib Branch. Wiedner affirmed. P34 described that most people were tortured with electric shocks and massively beaten. He also heard people saying that they were hanged at a wall upside-down.

Wiedner asked if there were elderly people or children at the Branch and if P34 saw them himself. P34 said on one day he saw a child and elderly people.

Wiedner wanted to know where he saw them and how long they were at the Branch. P34 explained that when he was taken to the big cell in the morning, there was a child as well. He could not remember exactly but assumed that the child was taken from the cell the same day.

Wiedner asked if it was a teenager or rather a child, recalling that P34 once mentioned the child was around eight or nine-years-old. P34 affirmed the latter. He explained that if a house was stormed, security forces simply took everyone with them. This was particularly the case with families living in Douma and also depended on the family: if several people from one family were wanted, they took everyone from the family to create pressure.

Wiedner wanted to know if P34 saw women being detained in Al-Khatib Branch. P34 denied.

Wiedner asked how many times P34 was interrogated. P34 said he was interrogated once in Al-Khatib Branch and once at the State Security Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know where the interrogation room in Al-Khatib Branch was located: if it was within the cell area or somewhere else. P34 said he could not remember very well but thinks that the room was located in the cell area, maybe upstairs. He added that it was close to the cells. P34 explained that if he remembered correctly, the interrogation rooms were on the same floor as the cells; starting from his cell, he had to go left. P34 added that he was able to see the ceiling through his blindfold and that the ceiling was low.

Wiedner asked if the ceiling was as low as it was in the basement where P34 usually was. P34 affirmed, saying it was the same height as the ceiling in his cell.

Wiedner further wanted to know where the screams that P34 heard came from: the prison area or somewhere else. P34 said they came from the prison. In his first cell, there was some kind of window, a bricked window in the wall. One could hear screams coming from this direction. The screams were very close. They were screams from electric shocks and he was able to hear the sound of the electric shocks.

Wiedner asked how many people were present during P34's interrogation based on the voices he could hear considering that he was blindfolded. P34 said one person was standing behind him and another person was behind the desk. He added that the person behind him was a guard and carried a baton. P34 assumed that the person behind the desk was an officer, he asked the questions.

Wiedner wanted to know if the guard received orders to beat P34. P34 said he could not remember very well but he thinks that they communicated with their eyes.

Wiedner asked where P34 was beaten. P34 explained that he had to kneel and remembered being beaten on his back.

Wiedner asked how long the interrogation lasted. P34 said it lasted around ten minutes.

Wiedner recalled P34 telling the German police about the faith of his brother-in-law and wanted to know what he could tell the court about that. P34 explained that the area where his family lived was firmly controlled by revolutionaries. The air force carried out airstrikes on the area and it was bombed. P34 said the gunfire came from a military area close by. Many people who lived in the area decided to leave their homes. P34's sister and her husband lived close by but P34's brother-in-law did not want to leave. The area was eventually surrounded and targeted by airstrikes.

Wiedner asked when this happened. P34 said it was in early 2012. He explained that his brother-in-law lived in a house where he also had his own lock smithery. He was still working at the time and had to deliver things, so he was driving around a lot. P34 added that due to the situation his brother-in-law was of course not working as he did before. Although P34 was at home at the time, he did not have much contact with his brother-in-law. However, one day his brother-in-law did not return home with his business van. His sister was then alone with their two toddlers. P34 said his brother-in-law stayed away for one to four months. Everyone knew that he was arrested because there was a checkpoint outside the area they lived. Everyone was arrested at this checkpoint. The family therefore assumed that he was arrested there as well. P34 explained that his brother-in-law did not participate in demonstrations, but members of his family who had the same last name demonstrated. P34 told the court that if one who has the same last name as a wanted person gets checked at one of the check points, he gets arrested.

P34's family then arranged for his sister and their daughters (two and six years old) to leave their home. P34's parents already lived somewhere else as did his entire family. P34's father was killed in Darayya when the fourth Division invaded. His sister moved to his family who lived in a suburb of Aleppo shortly after their father died. Two or three years later, the Caesar Files were published, and the family found a picture of P34's brother-in-law amongst the Caesar Files.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the court would now visually inspect the picture that P34's counsel Bahns recently sent the court.

P34 said the picture shows his brother-in-law.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know where P34's family found the picture. P34 said that relatives of his found it on the internet. He explained that there was a website for people demonstrating in Syria. This website published things like the Caesar Files. Amongst the pictures from the Caesar Files that were published by this website was the picture of P34's brother-in-law that relatives spotted.

Wiedner asked if P34's relatives were informed when he was arrested and informed about his place of detention. P34 denied, adding that no one was allowed to ask about it. P34 explained that 'not being allowed' means that people were afraid to ask because they feared that they would be arrested themselves. P34 recalled that one of his brothers was detained for one month. His mother decided to go to the Palestine Branch and asked about her son. She thought that no one would harm an elderly lady. However, she was sent away at the entrance and told that if she would not go away, she would be taken inside. P34 concluded that no one could ask about their whereabouts.

Wiedner wanted to know what the worst thing for P34 about his detention was. P34 said it was simply being there. The cell was tiny, there was no food, air, or sun. P34 said his detention at the State Security Branch was very hard because the cell felt like a grave. The cell was so tiny, one could not even lie down as he was able to do in Al-Khatib Branch.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked whether P34 needed a break or if the prosecutors could ask their questions. P34 said he was good to continue.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge recalled that P34 was transferred to another cell during his detention in Al-Khatib Branch. He wanted to know more about the cell regarding size, number of detainees, windows, and heat. P34 said one could say that it was hot everywhere. It was unbearable. P34 said the cell was tiny but around 36 people were detained there. There was a toilet inside the cell, but it was merely a hole in the floor. There was no water. P34 said he was not sure but there might have been a tap or a tube and a can. The cell as well as the toilet was very dirty. There was no window, just a small hatch above the toilet. If one looked through this hatch, one could see big buildings. P34 therefore assumed that the Branch was located in the middle of Damascus.

Klinge asked about the air inside the cell. P34 said there was no air. There was only a small hatch but a lot of people.

Klinge wanted to know about skin rashes, scabies, and lice. P34 said he assumes there were lice and people suffering scabies. He added that many people were suffering from skin conditions because they were detained in such a cell.

Klinge asked if P34 saw corpses at Al-Khatib Branch. P34 denied.

Klinge recalled P34 telling the court that his brother and an acquaintance were interrogated and asked P34 what he knew about these interrogations. P34 said the person with whom he spoke about this would currently live in Turkey. P34 did not know this person, he only got to know him after he was arrested together with P34's brother in March [2011]. This person was arrested together with P34's brother and P34's uncle. The person said that he saw Anwar Raslan and was interrogated by him. When P34 spoke with this person about the interrogation, P34 realized that the interrogation room which the person described was the same room where P34 was interrogated as well. The person further told P34 that P34's brother was also interrogated by Anwar Raslan. P34 asked Klinge what else he wanted to know.

Klinge asked how the interrogation was, what happened, and how the treatment was. P34 asked if Klinge was referring to P34's interrogation. Klinge said he was talking about P34's brother's and the other person's interrogation by Anwar Raslan. P34 said he first did not know that his brother was at Al-Khatib. This person told him and P34's sister confirmed. She told the family that the interrogator was very strict and that their brother and uncle were tortured and had to sign something before they were released. [P34 consulted his counsel. He continued his testimony in German but immediately switched back to Arabic]. P34 explained that he got this information from his sisters, not from his relatives. After his questioning with the German police in Bonn, his sister told him that their brother had to sign something. He first refused to sign but Raslan threatened to arrest and rape his sister. His brother then signed and was released together with [name redacted] who was arrested together with P34's brother in March.

Defense counsel Fratzky intervened, saying he did not understand the last part of P34's answer. P34 said that his brother signed something that could be considered a confession and was released afterwards. Defense counsel Böcker intervened, saying he did not get the part where P34 was talking about a third person. Plaintiff counsel Bahns intervened, saying Böcker should use headphones like everyone else. He would constantly ask for clarification because he never uses headphones.

Böcker replied that no one could force him to wear earphones, he just wants clarification regarding what P34 just said. Presiding Judge Kerber said everyone should calm down and repeated what P34 just told the court. P34 nodded.

Klinge wanted to know how P34's sister knew about the threats. P34 said his brother told his sister and their relatives about it. P34 was working a lot at that time and only returned home at night, so he did not know everything that was going on at home.

Klinge asked when the interrogation by Anwar Raslan took place. P34 said his brother was arrested in March 2011.

Klinge asked when P34's brother was released. P34 said he was released around one month later. He added that the demonstration where his brother was arrested happened in mid-March and his brother was released around mid-April.

Klinge wanted to know if P34 was a victim or witness of sexual violence at Al-Khatib Branch. P34 denied.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Böcker recalled P34 mentioning that he heard from his sister after his questioning with the German police in Bonn. Böcker asked if P34 was questioned by the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA). P34 affirmed.

Böcker asked if this happened in Bonn or Meckenheim. P34 said it was in Bonn.

Böcker wanted to know if the questioning took place in Winter 2020. P34 said it might have been in Meckenheim, but he arrived at the main station in Bonn.

Böcker asked if the questioning took place in December 2020. P34 said he thinks so, adding that it was cold and the questioning lasted from morning until evening.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the plaintiff counsels if anyone had questions. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer nodded, saying that he would however prefer to have a break before.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer recalled P34 telling the court that right at the beginning of his detention at Al-Khatib Branch, he had to undress, lie on the floor, and his anus was searched. Scharmer apologized for the question, adding that it would, however, be important, and asked P34 if he was touched in this situation. P34 said he can remember this instance very well. After they had to undress, they had to lie down on the floor. They also had to squat and were insulted by the guards at the same time. P34 added that no acts of a sexual nature were performed on him, the situation was rather humiliating.

Scharmer wanted to know more about the physical and psychological condition of the children that P34 saw during his detention. P34 explained that he could not talk to them. It was his first day at the Branch and everyone was shocked and in fear. There were so many people in the cell and P34 did not talk to many of them.

Scharmer recalled P34 mentioning that his brother-in-law might have been arrested at a checkpoint. Scharmer asked P34 where this checkpoint was. P34 said he cannot say which checkpoint it was because there were checkpoints on all sides [of the area where P34's sister and brother-in-law lived]. Coming from the city, there were two ways leading to P34's brother-in-law's home from al-Qadam and two ways from Sbeneh. One was the "Street of the Adara Factory" or "Factory Street" but P34 did not remember the official name of the street. He added that he did not know where his brother-in-law was and what exactly he did, so he could not say at which checkpoint he was arrested.

Scharmer asked who was in charge of the checkpoints. P34 said he did not know, but he was told by others that Al-Khatib Branch was in charge of the area where P34 and his family lived. But other intelligence services were involved as well. According to P34, the air force intelligence had its own checkpoints as well because people were also arrested by the air force.

Scharmer wanted to know if P34 later heard where his brother-in-law was detained or where he died. P34 said he and his family would not know for sure. They only saw the picture.

Scharmer asked if P34 and his family were informed about the whereabouts and death of his brother-in-law. P34 denied, adding that if someone was arrested, he disappeared.

P34 was dismissed as a witness.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the prosecutors were able to secure another witness and organized his questioning. This witness was summoned for June 23. Copies of the transcript of the witness's questioning were handed over to the parties. Kerber explained that the summons for June 23 would provide enough time for everyone to prepare. She added that the court had difficulties arranging the appearance of the witness who was scheduled for the following day, however, they were able to solve these difficulties and the witness will testify in court as scheduled. Kerber further explained that the court summoned a witness from abroad for July 1 and 2, however, the witness did not yet react to Judge Wiedner's attempts to contact him. The court therefore also summoned the relevant BKA officer in case the witness cannot come. Kerber added that there would be more witnesses who prefer not to testify in court, but the judges would try their best to arrange for them to testify in court.

Defense counsel Böcker said he just scanned through the transcript that was handed out and realized that there are many redactions. To ease preparation, he wanted to know why there were redactions. Prosecutor Klinge explained that the witness was forwarded to the Prosecutor General by the German Migration and Refugee Authority (BAMF). The witness mentioned names of other people who could be in danger. He was also questioned about other possible suspects. Therefore, parts of his testimony had to be redacted for the purpose of this trial. Klinge said that the reasons for redactions would also become apparent from the transcript.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:05PM.

The hearing began at 9:40 am with seven spectators and two members of the press in the audience. A three-person camera team was allowed to film inside the court room before the start of the trial day. The team also filmed outside the court room when people were leaving and returning to the courtroom during breaks. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed was not present.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Plaintiff Counsel Kroker to explain the events leading up to the witness's testimony in court this day. Dr. Kroker explained that the witness's initial counsel was attorney von der Behrens, however, she unexpectedly fell sick. Kroker therefore substitutes von der Behrens and acts as witness counsel for this witness.

Plaintiff Counsel Böcker mentioned that the names of different attorneys appear on the case file in relation to this witness: Kaleck, von der Behrens, Hackmack. He asked on what basis Kroker would now act as witness counsel. Judge Kerber explained that von der Behrens was admitted as witness counsel but fell unexpectedly sick, and Kroker now had the power of attorney.

[The witness was called and entered through a side door]

Testimony of P35

Before Presiding Judge Kerber asked the P35 about his personal details and informed him about his rights and duties as a witness, P35 started sobbing. Kerber said that the witness can ask for a break at any time and can always consult his counsel Kroker in case he has any questions. P35, a 40-year-old Syrian now living in [information redacted] where he [information redacted], was informed about his rights and denied being related to the Accused by blood or marriage. Judge Kerber explained that the court needs to hear the information which P35 already provided the German police during his questioning. She handed over to Judge Wiedner. The witness was emotional throughout his testimony and had difficulty composing himself.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner first asked P35 to provide an overview of his background, how he got in conflict with the regime, and when and where his several detentions happened. P35 said he was a [information redacted] and was part of the Syrian national team. His family worked as merchants and was well-known in Syria, as was P35. He explained that starting in 2001, he and his family voiced their political opinion. They were very surprised the regime was passed on from father to son. P35 therefore had a certain political opinion and was eventually excluded from the national team, although he was the Arab champion. He explained that he was relatively young at the time and the regime started persecuting him due to his political opinion. He was detained in Branch 251 in 2007 and met Anwar Raslan on his first day at the Branch in Raslan's office.

Wiedner said this would be a good opportunity to ask a small question. He wanted to know if P35 was detained before his detention in 2007. P35 said before 2007, he was detained by the Military Security.

Wiedner wanted to know when this happened, if P35 was still part of the national team at that time. P35 explained that he was excluded from the team in 2011 and had to endure massive torture in 2011 and 2012. He therefore had gaps in his memory and had been receiving medical care for this reason.

Wiedner said it would be OK and asked P35 to continue with the events that happened in 2007. P35 said there [Branch 251] were two people who supervised torture. Anwar Raslan was the head of investigations at the Branch. P35 said he received electric shocks. One could still see the scars; he showed them to the German police. He was tortured with Shabeh as well. P35 described that his hands were tied and he was hanged. He added that he has to take medicine because of these experiences.

Wiedner wanted to know if that happened in Branch 251. P35 affirmed, saying it happened in Al-Khatib, also known as Branch 251.

Wiedner asked about the year. P35 said it was in 2007 if he remembered correctly.

Wiedner wanted to know why P35 was arrested. P35 explained that he was accused of being an oppositionist and spying for foreign countries.

Wiedner asked how P35's was arrested: if he was summoned or taken from somewhere. P35 said that patrolling security forces came to his place. They blindfolded him, put him in a car and took him with them. P35 added that he was arrested 13 times, so he might get confused a bit.

Wiedner asked P35 to try and remember. He wanted to know how P35 knew that he was in Al-Khatib Branch. P35 said there was a gathering place where other detainees told him that it was Branch 251.

Wiedner wanted to know what the place looked like. P35 described that the situation there was very bad. There were screams, torture, and humiliation.

Wiedner asked where P35 was taken after he was arrested. He asked if he was taken to a prison. P35 said he was taken to the place he just described. Wiedner asked what the building and the detention rooms looked like. P35 explained that the cell had an iron door with a small hatch. He asked if he should describe the prison as well. Wiedner affirmed. P35 said this happened 14 years ago and he forgot many things.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the prison was upstairs or downstairs. P35 said it was downstairs. His [Raslan's] office was upstairs, but the cells were downstairs.

Wiedner asked about the size of the cells. P35 explained that he was first detained in a bigger collective cell and then transferred to a solitary cell.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were other detainees as well. P35 affirmed, adding that there were many.

Wiedner wanted to know what P35 was able to remember from his interrogation. P35 said he remembered that he met him [Raslan] at the Branch. P35 was asked why he was trying to ruin the country and what side he belonged to.

P35 said he was told to confess, if not, it would be clear what treatment he received. P35 said he denied everything, and the guards took him away and tortured him.

Wiedner asked where the office was and where P35 was taken after the interrogation. P35 explained that he was blindfolded. He was taken upstairs, and his hands were tied behind his back. P35 concluded that his [Raslan's] office was upstairs.

Wiedner wanted to know which floor it was on. P35 said it was above the prison. He did not know which level exactly but said that it was upstairs and big.

Wiedner asked what P35 was able to see of the office through his blindfold. P35 explained that the blindfold slightly got out of place, and he was later asked to remove it. He could see a phone and walkie talkies on the desk.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the furniture and items in the office. P35 said the office was big, long, and wide. There was furniture, but he could not remember.

Wiedner asked if he saw chairs or a sofa. P35 said he forgot.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 was standing, sitting, or kneeling. P35 said he was standing, adding that his hands were tied at first, but then removed.

Wiedner asked how many people were in the room. P35 said one person took him to the room, however, he did not know whether this person stayed.

Wiedner recalled P35 saying that Anwar Raslan was in the office and asked P35 how he identified Raslan and knew it was him. P35 explained that he did not know Raslan personally. However, when P35 worked as a merchant, he learned that Raslan was the head of an investigation office. P35 added that there was one guard who helped him and told him that the interrogation Officer was Raslan.

Wiedner asked if P35 recognized someone in the courtroom as the person who interrogated him. P35 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whom P35 recognizes. P35 said he recognizes Anwar Raslan from his birthmark, adding that Raslan, however, looked a bit differently back then.

Wiedner asked P35 to describe the meeting: how it went, what he was asked, and how Raslan acted. P35 said he got nervous, the guards told him they would take him with them.

Wiedner asked what the interrogation officer wanted to know. P35 said he was asked why he was in the opposition, on which side he was on, and with whom he was collaborating in foreign countries.

Wiedner wanted to know what P35 answered. P35 told the court that he replied that he had no reason to destroy the fatherland, it would nevertheless be his home country.

Wiedner asked if P35 confessed. P35 said one is forced to confess.

Wiedner wanted to know if this happened to P35 during the interrogation as well. P35 said he did not do anything wrong, so he saw no reason to confess. He [Raslan] said the guards knew how to treat P35. According to P35, Raslan rang a bell, and the guards came. Raslan told them to treat P35. He was then taken to be tortured.

Wiedner asked about the atmosphere during the conversation and wanted to know whether Raslan was friendly or threatening. P35 explained that the regime would act according to the motto “carrot and stick”, the end of the conversation was the stick.

Wiedner wanted to know what the carrot would be then. P35 said Raslan smiled, he had a yellow smile. P35 added that he was told to stand.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the German police how the interrogation went. Wiedner cited from the transcript of the police questioning: ‘Around 7PM I was taken upstairs with my eyes blindfolded. There I met Anwar Raslan. He told me he wanted to help, but I would have to tell everything I did. We then discussed.’ P35 affirmed, adding that the smile he just mentioned meant that he could only get help if he confessed.

Wiedner recalled that P35 was asked during the interrogation if he collaborated with European or American agencies. According to Wiedner, P35 denied and said he was only fighting for his rights. Wiedner asked P35 if he remembers the situation, particularly in context of “travel ban.” P35 said he was under travel ban and only allowed to leave the country with the permission of a branch.

Wiedner further recalled P35 telling the German police that he told Raslan that he thinks the travel ban by the intelligence services was unjust and that he had to make an application every time he wanted to leave the country. Raslan then asked P35 if he wanted to confess but P35 denied. Raslan then rang a bell and Abu Muhammed came and took P35 to the basement. P35 confirmed, saying that Raslan rang a bell and he was then taken to the basement.

Wiedner again cited from the transcript of P35’s police questioning: “He [Anwar Raslan] asked me to whom I want to sell the country. I said I am fighting for my rights and reforms. Raslan asked me who I am to request such things. My hands were untied, and we started discussing. However, I was still blindfolded. He took off my blindfold and we discussed eye to eye.” P35 explained that his blindfold first slightly moved and was then taken off.

Wiedner continued citing from the police transcript: “In 2006 and 2007 many people requested reforms. I told him [Raslan] that I do, too. We started discussing. He then asked me if I wanted to confess. I denied. He rang a bell and called Abu Muhammed. He [Raslan] told him to do whatever he [Abu Muhammed] thinks is right. The latter confirmed with a salute and knew what he had to do”. P35 explained to the court that it was a code to order torture. Because he [Raslan] was the head of investigations no one could do anything without his approval. It was known/set that he gave the orders.

Wiedner wanted to know how long P35 was at Al-Khatib Branch before he was interrogated. P35 said he does not know.

Wiedner asked if it happened rather immediately or if some time passed. P35 said he thinks that he was there for a couple days already.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 was beaten or tortured before the interrogation. P35 affirmed, saying he was beaten several times before.

Wiedner asked if he was beaten before the interrogation. P35 said he was beaten before the interrogation but the actual torture started afterwards.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened after the interrogation. P35 said he was massively tortured. This scene repeated every day.

Wiedner asked what exactly happened to P35. P35 said he had to endure everything: Shabeh, electric shocks at his feet, the chair. [P35 showed signs of torture at his wrists]

Wiedner asked if P35 was hanged. P35 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know where that happened. P35 said it happened in the basement.

Wiedner asked if P35 was beaten while he was hanged. P35 affirmed, adding that he was constantly beaten. The guards said "take that, you [information redacted]."

Wiedner wanted to know where P35 was beaten. P35 said he was beaten on his stomach, back, and everywhere else.

Wiedner asked if P35 was beaten on his feet. P35 said he had to undergo surgery in [information redacted] for that reason. The signs would still be visible, and he had medical certificates.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that he was in solitary confinement for nine days. His feet were bleeding for eight days. He therefore needed a new blanket every day. P35 said he cannot remember. He remembered that there was blood, but not details.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 was tortured in Branch 251 with other methods as well. P35 said he was tortured with Doulab, beatings, and many other things.

Wiedner asked P35 to describe Doulab. P35 explained it means tire. Wiedner asked how P35 was tortured with this. P35 said he was squeezed inside the tire and then beaten.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that he was tortured with a chair. He asked P35 to describe this method. P35 explained that the chair has a hole where one would usually sit. One is squeezed in this one. P35 added it was called German Chair.

Wiedner wanted to know how long P35 was detained at the Branch and how many times he was mistreated. P35 said he was there for eight months and tortured many times, he could not remember the exact number.

Wiedner asked if P35 was tortured immediately after the interrogation with Raslan. P35 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if other detainees were tortured as well and in what condition they were. P35 said it is impossible that someone would be detained in this Branch without being tortured. Others were tortured even more, they were destroyed. P35 added that one person died from torture.

Wiedner asked what happened to this person. P35 said this person was tortured. P35 was then told that he had blood in his brain and died of a brain attack.

Wiedner asked if P35 saw that. P35 said he saw the person lying on the floor.

Wiedner asked if the person was dead. P35 confirmed, saying he was taken away by the guards.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the general detention conditions relating to food and hygiene. P35 said the food was not clean and not good. It was full of lice and due to the amount of people, one was always sweating. It was dirty.

Wiedner cited from the police transcript saying that P35 said they got seven olives and something else for breakfast, bulgur and soup for lunch and some bread and egg for dinner and sometimes a bit of rice. However, the food was never enough, and most people were severely underweight. P35 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P35 about the size of the cell he was detained in. P35 said he forgot. The solitary cell was very small, but he did not know how big the collective cell was.

Wiedner wanted to know how small the cell was and if he was the only detainee there. P35 said he was alone in the solitary cell. There were many detainees in the collective cell.

Wiedner cited from the transcript of P35's police questioning during which he said that the solitary cell was 1x1.5 meters big and 2 meters high. One could not lie down. It was always dark and there was only a small hatch that was only opened when the guards called him. P35 confirmed the statement, saying that the cell was that tiny.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 ever fell unconscious due to torture. P35 affirmed, saying he was then wrapped in a blanket.

Wiedner asked how he was tortured when he fell unconscious. P35 said he received electric shocks and a lot of beating.

Wiedner again cited from P35's police questioning during which he said that that four or five people in the torture room tortured and kicked him. Abu Muhammed and Ali beat him and tortured him with electric shocks until he could not feel his leg anymore. P35 then fell unconscious and was wrapped inside the blanket and taken back to his cell. He was tortured again the next day. P35 confirmed, adding that he was tortured every day.

Wiedner further cited P35 telling the police that he had to sit on a chair and was beaten. They wanted him to confess, and he was beaten on his legs, feet, and back, using cables. When he fell unconscious, they poured water over him and hanged him at an iron stick for five or six hours. He was tortured with electric shocks for seven or eight days. Ali then increased the power, but Abu Muhammed told him to slow down to not kill P35. P35 confirmed, adding that Ali was the one who tortured the most.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 was blindfolded during the mistreatment. P35 explained that he usually had to wear a blindfold. However, due to the beating the blindfold moved and he was able to see people. This was why he saw Ali and Abu Muhammed. [P35 showed the court how the blindfold moved].

Wiedner asked if P35 met Raslan again at the Branch. P35 said he met him before he was released.

Wiedner wanted to know how the meeting was. P35 said he forgot. He had to wear the blindfold and sign a paper and leave his fingerprint.

Wiedner asked if one could see at this meeting that P35 had been tortured. P35 confirmed, saying that one could see the signs all over his body.

Wiedner wanted to know what P35 was wearing. P35 said he does not know, he was wearing the shirt he wore when he was arrested.

Wiedner wanted to know the reason for P35's release. P35 said he was released due to bribery.

Wiedner asked how exactly the bribery took place. P35 said he does not know because his relatives arranged everything.

Wiedner asked if someone told P35 about it. P35 said he was told that everyone was asking for him and trying to get information. P35 added he does not know any details as it happened 14 years ago.

Wiedner mentioned P35's brother and asked what his job was. P35 said his brother was the general director of [information redacted] that also delivered to the palace.

Wiedner asked if P35 was told that money was paid. P35 explained that he was told that money was paid. He then received better treatment and was even able to shower.

Wiedner cited from P35's police questioning during which he said that his family did not know where he was. They were searching for five or six months. His brother was a merchant and had contacts with the [name redacted] family who was in contact with Anwar Raslan. P35's brother paid 15,000 Syrian Lira for P35's release and P35 was tortured significantly less. The investigator told P35 that he was very lucky. He had to sign a paper. He was then told that his documents were with the court and that he would be released soon. P35 confirmed, adding that he could remember some things, others not.

Wiedner wanted to know what P35 could remember from this instance. P35 said he knows that his brother intervened, he was treated better and signed something. That was what he could remember.

Wiedner asked how long after his arrest P35 met Raslan for the second time. P35 said he does not know.

Wiedner asked if it was five months. P35 said he does not know.

Wiedner wanted to know if the second meeting was different, if it was an interrogation, and how the atmosphere was. P35 said it was better.

Wiedner asked if he was interrogated. P35 said he does not know. He would only know that the circumstances were better.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 could remember anything about the medical treatment of his feet. P35 said he needed medical care for his feet. They were then treated in a hospital.

Wiedner cited from P35's police questioning: When P35 was asked whether he met Raslan again at the Branch, he explained that when the merchants intervened, he met Raslan again in his office after around five months. Raslan offered him tea. The meeting was different than the first one. Raslan said he wanted to help P35 who told Raslan that his feet were inflamed. Raslan said he would receive treatment the following day. Before P35's feet were treated, he was told that his papers were sent away and with the court. P35 explained to the court that this treatment was not sufficient. He only received Aspirin and tranquilizers. The actual medical treatment did not happen at this occasion. He only received painkillers because he could not sleep.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened after that, how P35 was released. P35 said he went to the court where he was released.

Wiedner asked if P35 was able to remember how Raslan was dressed. P35 said he once knew but could not remember in this moment.

Wiedner asked if he wore a uniform. P35 said he could not remember, adding that it happened 14 years ago.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the German police that Raslan had a high position at the Branch, which one could also see from his clothes. Wiedner asked if P35 was able to better remember things when he was questioned by the police in 2019. P35 affirmed, explaining that he is being treated. He added that he was detained in 2012 and the torture left its scars. He forgot a lot of things within two years. P35 added that he was telling the truth.

Presiding Judge Kerber said that after one hour of testimony, the first chapter of P35's testimony would be over and the judges would continue with their questions after a short break.

***

Judge Kerber said she hopes that P35 was able to recover a bit during the break.

Judge Wiedner continued his questioning by recalling that P35 told the German police that he was detained in Branch 251 a second time. Wiedner asked when this happened. P35 explained that he was detained thirteen times. This would be a problem because he sometimes gets confused with the different detentions. P35 said he tried hard to remember, but it would not always be easy. He said that when Wiedner cited from the transcript, he could remember certain things, while he forgot others.

All of this happened thirteen times: the torture, beatings, and detentions. According to P35, the doctors in [information redacted] told him that due to the torture he would have normally “lost his brain” and not only have gaps in his memory. P35 said he receives medical treatment for 6.5 years. It would be some kind of rehabilitation so he could live a normal life. P35 said he tries everything to move on. When he saw that Germany arrested Anwar Raslan, P35 thought he had to come to court because Raslan was the supervising person at the time P35 was detained. P35 added that he would be honest by saying that he forgot certain things.

Judge Wiedner said it would be OK, the judges would be the last to criticize him for that. Wiedner said P35 should just try to remember. He went on to ask P35 when he was arrested at Branch 251 for the second time, whether it was before the inner Syrian conflict. P35 said it was before that. He owned stocks of an opposition newspaper [the translator did not mention the Arabic name of the newspaper but translated it to German].

Wiedner asked if P35 wrote articles for the newspaper as well. P35 explained he was arrested because he wrote an article titled “[information redacted]” and Ali Mamlouk therefore detained him at Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that he was arrested in 2010 and asked P35 if that was correct. P35 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if his arrest was related to the newspaper. P35 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P35 was arrested or summoned. P35 said he remembered being summoned to come to a branch.

Wiedner wanted to know which branch it was. P35 said he remembers it was Branch 251.

Wiedner asked if P35 went there voluntarily. P35 said he went there because he did not do anything wrong. He did not see any reason to not go there.

Wiedner asked how long he was detained. P35 said it was days.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that he was detained for eight days. P35 confirmed, saying it was around eight or nine days.

Wiedner asked if P35 could remember how this detention was compared to 2007. P35 said one could not compare them. The torture in 2007 was massive.

Wiedner asked how it was in 2010. P35 repeated that it was not comparable.

Wiedner wanted to know if 2010 was better or worse. P35 said 2007 was a lot worse.

Wiedner asked if P35 was detained in a solitary or collective cell in 2010. P35 said he forgot.

Wiedner cited from the transcript of P35’s police questioning during which P35 said that he was again detained in a collective cell. However, it was a lot better this time: the cell was 40m<sup>2</sup> big with 20 detainees inside. There was a toilet in the corner of the cell. The food was the same as in 2007 and the hygienic condition was as bad as in 2007. P35 told the court he could not remember exactly but the second time was better.

Wiedner further recalled P35 telling the police that the guards were better the second time as well. P35 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 also met Raslan during his second detention at Branch 251. P35 could not remember, Wiedner asked if he remembered anything. P35 said he tries to remember but could not.

Wiedner said he can provide P35 more context by recalling that P35 told the police that he met Raslan again and told him that the country developed in a bad way. P35 confirmed that he asked Raslan if he remembered their meeting in 2007 and told him that the country would now [2010] be in a worse shape. P35 added that he was able to remember now.

Wiedner asked if Raslan interrogated or questioned P35. P35 recalled Raslan telling him that 'they' would be under a lot of pressure from the US and internationally. They would try to reform the country. P35 said that is all he remembered.

Wiedner asked if P35 was blindfolded when he met Raslan, adding that P35 can let the court know if he cannot remember. P35 said he thinks he was blindfolded but would not be sure.

Wiedner asked if P35 heard Raslan's voice. P35 said he was not sure but thinks that he heard him talking on the telephone or walkie talkie.

Wiedner cited from P35's police questioning. When asked if he was tortured while Raslan was present, P35 affirmed to the police. He explained that he heard his voice while he was tortured. According to P35 he was blindfolded and beaten with cables in 2010. Raslan twice said "more". P35 heard his voice twice in 15 to 20 minutes. Raslan once asked him if he wanted to confess. P35 said he did not hear him after one hour of torture when he was taken back to his cell. P35 told the court that this did not happen in Raslan's office but downstairs.

Wiedner concluded that P35 would now be able to remember. P35 said he could remember parts. He was blindfolded and could hear voices. He could also remember that Ali was the one torturing him again.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 was somehow able to see Raslan. P35 said he heard his voice. He could not remember if he saw him but usually the guards only tortured someone when Raslan ordered it.

Wiedner asked if P35 heard orders. P35 denied.

Wiedner asked if there were other people present who were tortured as well or whether P35 was alone with the people/voices he described. P35 said people were being tortured next to him. He heard their screams.

Wiedner wanted to know whether they were in the same room or somewhere else. P35 said they were not far away, very close to him.

Wiedner asked what happened to P35 and the others. P35 said he does not know how the others were beaten but he could hear them screaming.

Wiedner asked about the beatings. P35 said there were beatings with cables.

Wiedner wanted to know how P35 was released. P35 said he forgot and could not remember.

Wiedner asked if bribery again played a role. P35 did not know.

Wiedner again cited from P35's police questioning: When asked about how he was released, P35 told the police that a colleague from the newspaper knew a former employee of Branch 251. This person was bribed and P35 released. There was an order from Anwar Raslan. According to P35 nothing happened without Raslan ordering it. Raslan would order arrests and releases. P35 did not meet Raslan again. He was released and took a taxi home. P35 told the court he knows that someone intervened, and he was only detained for a short time.

Wiedner wanted to know what physically happened to P35 during the detention, how he was tortured and mistreated. P35 explained that he had 21 surgeries in [information redacted]. He was tortured often and 11 surgeries were because of the torture. P35 added that he is receiving medical and psychosocial treatment for 6.5 years. He was tortured with horrible methods at every branch. According to P35 an officer gets promoted the more he tortures. P35 explained that this branch [Branch 251] was founded by Hafez Al-Assad and later led by his nephew Bashar Suleiman. The latter brought Anwar Raslan to the Branch. P35 said that Raslan was “artistic” in torturing people. He smiled and ordered torture at the same time. P35 said one might not make this comparison, but without the Presiding Judge, nothing can happen. This might be an inappropriate comparison, but Raslan was the head of the Branch, he was in control.

Wiedner asked how P35 knew that Raslan was creative in torturing people. P35 explained that one of his friends worked for Ali Mamlouk. This friend told him that without Anwar Raslan, no one could even touch him. He also told P35 that no one could make a decision without Raslan’s approval.

Wiedner asked about Ali Mamlouk’s position. P35 said he was the head of the General Intelligence Directorate.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 remembers any reactions regarding his detention in Branch 251 and other detainees who felt particularly bad. P35 said that many detainees were in a bad condition. He heard that people died.

Wiedner asked if P35 saw dead people. P35 denied, adding it would only be hearsay.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police about dead people during his detention in Branch 251 in 2010. P35 said he saw one person lying on the floor but was not sure whether it was 2007 or 2010.

Wiedner asked whether P35 remembers a resuscitation attempt. P35 denied.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the German police that he did not see dead people in 2007. However, in 2010 three people died in the collective cell. One was hit on his head and taken back to the cell where he died. P35 performed CPR. P35 confirmed to the court that he tried CPR. The person was hit on his head and had internal bleeding. The CPR was unsuccessful and he died. According to P35 the person was taken away. P35 added he would not know more details.

Wiedner asked about the person’s name. P35 said his name was [name redacted] but he would not be sure and did not want to say anything wrong.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that the detainees called for a doctor who arrived after two hours. They took the corpse outside the cell. His name was [name redacted]. P35 said he could not remember.

Wiedner asked if more people died from mistreatment. P35 said he only saw this one person but heard about others.

Wiedner wanted to know what he heard. P35 said he heard that people died because the color of the prison was red. It was covered with bloodstains because of the torture.

Wiedner asked if P35 was talking about specific rooms. P35 said it was mainly in the corridor. This was where people were tortured with Shabeh. Therefore, there were many bloodstains.

Wiedner concluded that people were hanged there and asked P35 what exactly happened there. P35 described that there was an iron stick at the wall. People were hanged there with handcuffs. They were hanged 20cm above the floor for four or five hours.

Wiedner asked if they were beaten while hanged. P35 confirmed, explaining that they were beaten with cables all over their bodies.

Wiedner asked if P35 saw this happening to others. P35 said it happened to him and he saw others when his blindfold slightly moved, and he was able to hear voices.

Regarding dead people, Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that when the detainees got food, P35 heard Ali telling Abu Muhammed to get the boss because two people died. P35 said he could not remember, but he heard it.

Wiedner recalled P35 suffering consequences from his first detention at Branch 251 in 2007 regarding his feet. P35 said one could still see the scars, he could show the court.

Wiedner asked P35 to describe it instead. P35 said he received electric shocks at his feet and was beaten on his feet. He therefore had three surgeries in [information redacted]. P35 added that at the time blood accumulated in his feet.

Wiedner recalled P35 telling the police that immediately after his release in 2007 he needed medical treatment because his feet were inflamed. He received a skin transplant and the treatment lasted until 2010. P35 confirmed, explaining that he constantly had to be treated and one could still see the signs.

Wiedner asked P35 about his experiences at the beginning of the internal conflict in Syria in 2011. P35 did not know what Wiedner was referring to. Wiedner asked P35 to describe how he experienced the conflict and his arrests. P35 explained that he participated in demonstrations and had certain influence. He was arrested in 2011 and 2012: Amongst others he was detained at the Palestine Branch for one month. Once he was released after a couple of days. P35 said he was arrested three times and Kofi Annan from the UN delegation intervened and arranged for him to be released. P35 said he met the UN delegation on their visit to Syria. They told him to leave the country otherwise he would be arrested again.

Wiedner wanted to know if P35 was also tortured at the Palestine Branch. P35 said the worst torture he experienced was at Palestine Branch.

Wiedner asked whether it was in 2012. P35 said most of it.

Wiedner asked what exactly P35 had to endure. P35 described he received electric shocks every day. He was mentally and physically exhausted.

Wiedner asked if all detainees were treated like that at this Branch [Palestine]. P35 said everyone was tortured but he and others were the leaders of the revolution.

Wiedner concluded that he was treated particularly bad. P35 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P35 mentioning that he was a leader of the revolution. He asked P35 if he had particular tasks within the opposition. P35 said he was an activist. He led demonstrations, printed and wrote flyers, and coordinated demonstrations. P35 said that "they" were therefore angry with him. Every time "they" [security forces] did anything against the activists, P35 and others had to adapt.

Wiedner asked about the time when these demonstrations happened. P35 said it was from 2011 to 2012.

Wiedner asked when the demonstration started. P35 said they started on March 15 [2011].

Wiedner asked about the regime's reaction: P35 explained that the reaction was hysteric as they did not expect people to demonstrate, it was a dictatorship, nevertheless. P35 said the demonstrations were a shock for the regime.

Wiedner asked for concrete examples. P35 said they started shooting at protesters.

Wiedner wanted to know when exactly the shootings started. P35 said they started shooting from March 18 [2011] on.

Wiedner asked where the shootings happened. P35 said it was in Al-Midan, Darayya, Damascus, and Damascus suburbs. P35 was also present at such demonstrations.

Wiedner asked if P35 – as an activist – knew about the founding of a focal coordination point to deal with demonstrations. P35 affirmed, explaining that Ali Mamlouk, and Ministers Turkmani and Assef Shawkat formed a council. P35 said he does not know what happened behind the scenes because he was not there, but they gave orders.

Wiedner asked when this council was formed. P35 said it was immediately after the first demonstrations. It then gave orders regarding arrests and shootings.

Wiedner wanted to know the name of the council/focal point. P35 said it was called "cell". Wiedner asked if it was the CCMC, the Central Crisis Management Cell. P35 said it was the Crisis Cell. [One of the court interpreters intervened, saying that the abbreviation "crisis cell" that P35 just used was the common abbreviation for CCMC]

Wiedner recalled that P35 was a professional athlete and asked him about the physical consequences of his detentions. P35 said his body transformed drastically. He initially weighed 140kgs but lost a lot of weight.

Wiedner recalled P34 mentioning to the police that he weighed 66kg after his last detention. P35 said he weighed 140kgs due to the cortisone he had to take for his surgeries. He had to undergo a stomach stapling surgery.

The prosecutors had no questions for P35.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Böcker said the defense had only a few questions. He started by recalling that P35 told the BKA about his detention in Al-Khatib in 2010. Böcker wanted to know if P35 also told the BKA who ordered his release. P35 could not remember.

Böcker wanted to cite from the BKA's transcript but Presiding Judge Kerber intervened that this passage was already cited by Judge Wiedner. Böcker said he might have missed that because he left the court room for some time during the session. He added that he still wanted to ask P35 how he knew who ordered his release. Böcker asked if P35 remembered his police questioning at all. Judge Kerber nodded. Böcker asked P35 how he knew that Raslan ordered his release. P35 said he could not remember.

Böcker cited from the transcript of P35's police questioning: When P35 was asked about his encounter with Raslan, P35 explained that he did not know his name at the time. He was the head of the Branch and had a lot of influence in the country. He was very important in the country. P35 did not understand. Böcker explained that he cited from the BKA's transcript of P35's police questioning and wanted to know whether it was correct that P35 said that or whether he could not remember.

Böcker repeated the citation, telling P35 that he wanted to know if P35 remembered saying that. P35 said he did not remember.

Böcker recalled P35 further telling the BKA that even ministers could not defy Raslan. P35 explained that in Syria, the security forces controlled the country.

Böcker asked if P35 said this striking sentence. P35 said he did not remember, but the security forces controlled Syria.

Böcker repeated the sentence and asked P35 if he could say something about the content of the sentence and if he knew about that [ministers not being able to defy Raslan]. P35 said he knew that security forces were in control of entire Syria. Raslan was stronger than the Prime Minister because the intelligence services were in control.

Böcker referred to the medical certificates that P35 mentioned earlier, saying that he would like to have a look at them, particularly in relation to P35's gaps in memory. Böcker asked witness counsel Kroker if the court could have a look at the certificates. P35 said he can hand them over to the court.

Defense counsel Fratzky recalled P35 mentioning Ali Mamlouk as the head of the General Intelligence Directorate and that one of P35's friend worked for him. P35 confirmed.

Fratzky wanted to know more about P35's friend. P35 explained that his friend was killed because he warned P35 of an arrest after 'he' [P35 pointed at Anwar Raslan] and Hafez Makhoulf ordered P35's liquidation.

Böcker wanted to know how P35 knew that. P35 said he was called by a friend who told him that Anwar Raslan and Hafez Makhoulf arrested his friend [name redacted].

Fratzky asked since when P35 knew. P35 said he knows since 2012.

Fratzky asked where he got the information from. P35 said his friend called him to warn him. His friend's brother told him about the arrest and was murdered.

Fratzky asked P35 if he forgot about that because he did not tell the BKA. P35 said he did tell the BKA; it should be in the transcript.

Fratzky wanted to know when P35 learned about the order to liquidate him. P35 said it was in June [information redacted] 2012. He was released from Palestine Branch and his home was stormed two hours later. P35 added he told the police about that.

Judge Kerber said the court would now take P35's medical certificates and read them out. Defense counsel Böcker asked which language they would be in. Witness counsel Kroker explained the certificates were written by hand and in French. He and his client would have a look at them first to make a selection before handing them over.

Judge Kerber said that in this case, P35's questions in court would be over. Defense counsel Böcker intervened saying he would be fine with a pre-selection of the certificates. However, he would like this to happen in quiet moment and would like written translation of the documents.

P35 was dismissed as a witness.

Judge Kerber acknowledged that the court saw that P35 was having a hard time testifying in court. She appreciates that he came, nevertheless. Kerber thanked the witness in Arabic.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:50 AM.

The next session will be on June 23, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Hearing Dates: June 23 & 24, 2021

P36, a 36-year-old Syrian male was summoned as an expert physician. He worked for the Red Crescent, located directly opposite Al-Khatib Branch, from February 2012 to the end of 2013. During this time, he provided medical support to detainees at the Branch and at the Red Crescent's hospital almost daily, including to a female detainee, and claimed to have seen approximately 50 people die at Al-Khatib. He was the first witness to describe consistent provision of medical care at the Branch, and he was the first witness to identify a different building as Al-Khatib. His testimony was marred by linguistic challenges because he spoke German despite knowing limited German vocabulary relevant to his testimony.

Day 78 – June 24, 2021

P37, a 69-year-old retiree who served as Major General in the Syrian police testified about his relationship with Raslan, with whom he regularly met at a café in Berlin with friends. He described how he first met Raslan decades earlier when Raslan was a soon-to-be law school graduate. After Raslan graduated and changed departments, the two men did not cross paths again until P37's son met Raslan at a language course in Germany. The witness also spoke about his ability to use good moral judgment as a high-ranking police official, in contrast to Raslan who was an intelligence official.

Day 77 of Trial – June 23, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were three spectators and two members of the press in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Ritscher and Polz.

P36 was informed of his rights and duties as a witness.

Testimony of P36

Judge Kerber asked P36 if he is related to the accused by blood or marriage. P36 said no.

Kerber reminded P36 that he could testify in Arabic. P36 said that he would testify in German. He would ask the interpreter for help if needed.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Kerber asked P36 what he did in Syria and why he went to Al-Khatib Branch. P36 said that he studied medicine in Syria at Aleppo University. He learned German in order to [practice medicine] in Germany, but his plans did not work out because he was busy with his specialty. He specialized in pediatrics. He began [working for the Red Crescent] on February 14, 2012. He was in his second year with the Red Crescent [when he first went to Al-Khatib].

Kerber asked how P36 came into contact with Al-Khatib Branch. P36 said that Al-Khatib consists of a group of buildings located opposite the Red Crescent's building. The Red Crescent was asked to provide first-aid to prisoners. [On P36's first visit to the Branch], the staff at Al-Khatib discussed with the Red Crescent's administration whether the doctors should go inside the Branch or if the detainees should be brought outside [to the hospital or elsewhere].

Kerber asked when was P36's first experience at Al-Khatib. P36 said that his first experience was in mid-August [during the second year that he worked at the Red Crescent].

Defence Counsel Böcker asked if P36 was certain of this date and if he recalls what he said during the BKA questioning. P36 said that the date he provided was not very accurate [when he was initially asked]. But after a few months in [REDACTED], he thought thoroughly about it and verified it because the incident was certainly during Ramadan.

Böcker asked if P36 told the police while he was questioned in Dresden that the incident could have occurred in July, August, or September. P36 confirmed.

Kerber asked P36 what happened at Al-Khatib Branch. P36 said that everyone knew Al-Khatib was under the administration of the Air Force Intelligence and they saw [the detention conditions]. The first time P36 went down to the basement to treat detainees, he was with other doctors. He was shocked. He and the doctors stayed there for two or three hours and saw around 100 detainees.

Kerber asked P36 how many doctors were with him. P36 clarified that there were three doctors.

Kerber asked how many detainees were there for treatment. P36 said more than 100.

Kerber asked what injuries and diseases the detainees had. P36 said that the detainees mostly had abscesses and swellings. Rarely, some of them had chronic diseases like diabetes, issues with blood pressure, asthma or other prison diseases.

Kerber asked P36 what were [prison diseases]. P36 said that prison diseases were caused by being in prison. They are things like swellings and abscesses, for example.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner reminded P36 that he could speak Arabic. He then asked if P36 recalled how he was called into Al-Khatib Branch. Did someone go to P36 and ask him to go to Al-Khatib? P36 explained that armed staff from Al-Khatib in their uniforms went to the Red Crescent to coordinate routine care for the detainees. P36 and the other doctors were then informed that they would go to Al-Khatib every other afternoon after they finished caring for their regular patients in the morning.

Wiedner asked when [they usually went to Al-Khatib]. P36 explained that they usually went to the Branch when they had time in the afternoons, around 2:00PM-4:00PM.

Wiedner asked P36 how he and the doctors went to Al-Khatib Branch. P36 said that staff from Al-Khatib came [to the Red Crescent] and escorted them to the Branch. Al-Khatib consists of multiple buildings with a spacious yard and parking lot. They were always taken to a basement in a specific building. To reach it, they had to enter two doors. Once downstairs, tasks were distributed and the doctors were told what to do. They were told to not be scared, not to speak with patients beyond their [medical issues], and not to provide anything beyond medical treatment. If a patient said that he was abused, he was [beaten].

Wiedner asked [what patients said regarding their abuse]. P36 explained that if he asked a detainee [what caused a medical issue and the detainee cited torture], then the detainee would be smacked on the face.

Wiedner asked if the detainees were beaten with anything other than hands. P36 said that [the staff] did not beat the patients in front of doctors unless the detainees did not obey orders [in which case they were smacked on the face].

Wiedner asked P36 what he spoke about with the patients. P36 said that they spoke about illnesses and about where injuries were located, rather than what caused them.

Wiedner asked P36 to describe what injuries and diseases he saw and how P36 assessed them as a physician. P36 said that the injuries and the diseases were diverse. Some were small, like abscesses on arms and legs. Others were bigger, like extremely swollen arms or toes.

Wiedner asked where the patients were from. P36 explained that the detainees were in Al-Khatib. He knew this because some of the detainees told the doctors that they had been helped before. On one occasion, P36 asked a detainee who told him to take a specific medication. The detainee said that he was told by another doctor who visited the Branch but never returned. Most of the injured were young people which caused the doctors to wonder why young people were imprisoned. The basement did not have windows or air, and the rooms were small. The detainees said that they were abused.

Wiedner asked if P36 saw any trauma. P36 confirmed that he saw trauma and bruises. Detainees explained that their condition was due to mistreatment and they sometimes suffered from infections.

Wiedner asked P36 how injuries were treated. P36 said that pus was drained. One time, he saw a detainee whose arm was so swollen that it was five times larger than normal. P36 and the other doctors filled a bucket with ten liters of pus after they drained the wound, disinfected it, sutured it, and gave antibiotics.

Wiedner asked if patients were admitted to the hospital. P36 said yes. The doctors could admit whoever they determined needed to be taken to the ICU or needed an operation. The [Branch] staff also brought several emergency cases [to the hospital], like a comatose patient and someone shot.

Wiedner asked P36 whether he had discretion on how to treat patients or if he was restricted. P36 explained that he was neither free nor restricted. When the doctors wanted to give patient antibiotics, [the Branch staff] said “no, give him only a tablet.” Sometimes, if the doctors said that a detainee had a fracture, [the Branch staff] said to leave the detainee and that they would take him to the hospital later.

Wiedner recalled P36’s statement during police questioning: “They gave us instructions. They told us not to send patients to the hospital. We were told not to give whole packets of medicine. There were instructions on how I should act as a doctor.”

Böcker interrupted and said that he wanted to ask P36 a question. Kerber denied the request.

Kerber asked P36 [if his statement during questioning was correct]. P36 clarified that he was not instructed on what to do [in terms of treatment], but he was told where to go and what to say.

Widener asked what else P36 observed. P36 said that, as he already [told the police], he saw [conditions] like those in the Caesar photos. The patients were yellowish. Their clothes were torn. Every patient had abscesses, especially their face. All of them were thin. Their diet was not nutritious.

Wiedner asked if doctors were taken to the cells and how the conditions were there. P36 said that treatment was mostly administered in the basement. However, they went inside the cells sometimes when a detainee was unconscious. P36 entered many rooms “like this space” with 30 – 50 detainees inside, if not more. [P36 referred to the space between the judges panel, the witness table, the prosecution, and the defense. It measures approximately 2-3 x 5-7m.]

Wiedner asked about hygiene. P36 said that conditions were unhygienic.

Wiedner quoted P36’s statement during police questioning: “there was no light, only an artificial one. There was no air or windows. The toilet was dirty. The detainees sat directly on the floor without a mattress.” Wiedner asked P36 if that statement was correct. P36 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P36 about the ramifications of these conditions. P36 explained that the conditions led to bad health, like cardiac and renal insufficiency.

Wiedner asked P36 if he reached that conclusion through medical tests. P36 confirmed. The doctors transferred patients to the ICU after doing medical tests which showed acute renal insufficiency without pre-existing conditions. This could happen because of dehydration or alimentation, for example. Several people died in front of P36.

Wiedner asked if people died inside of Al-Khatib or after they were referred to the hospital. P36 said both.

Wiedner asked for the estimated number of deaths that P36 witnessed. P36 saw around 50 people die [over the time he worked at Al-Khatib].

Wiedner asked P36 about the causes of death. P36 said that illnesses were the cause, such as cardiac or renal insufficiency, due to bad conditions. He knew this because some people died of diseases without having pre-existing conditions, which is abnormal. Such diseases developed suddenly. When someone was dehydrated, the doctors knew based on wrinkles on his skin.

Wiedner asked if there were cases of sepsis. P36 confirmed. Sepsis occurred when toxins from abscesses went into the blood stream.

Wiedner recalled P36’s statement that he saw injury-related deaths, then asked if P36 saw abuse-related deaths. P36 explained that some people had gunshot wounds and were brought to the hospital where they died. There were many cases of abuse, but the abuse was not the immediate cause of death. Beatings often resulted in swelling, abscesses, and fractures.

Wiedner asked about the percentage of people who were admitted to the hospital and died. P36 said approximately 50%.

Kerber recalled P36’s statement during police questioning that he saw corpses [in the context of abuse]: “Yes, I did [see corpses]. They escorted me to the corpses and I confirmed death.” [P36 asked the interpreter how to say “forensic doctor” in German. The interpreter told him it is “Gerichtsmediziner.”] P36 noted that the doctors’ role was to provide treatment, not to attest death – they were not forensic doctors.

Kerber asked if P36 nonetheless indicated whether someone died. P36 confirmed.

Kerber asked if P36 could say that some people died from abuse. P36 said that most corpses showed signs of abuse, but he could not say whether abuse was the cause of deaths.

Kerber asked if there were any deaths caused by beating to the head. P36 said no.

Kerber asked if P36 saw corpses with signs of abuse. P36 said that he saw a few cases where people were brought [to the hospital] with signs of punches and beating.

Kerber asked if the signs were caused by beatings with objects. P36 said yes. Objects likely included sticks, hoses, and electric cables.

Kerber asked if P36 said that he saw signs that detainees were hung. P36 said no.

Wiedner asked if P36 saw signs on the body that could have been caused by hanging [hematoma]. P36 did not see these signs of hanging, but there were signs on hands, wrists, and backs.

Wiedner asked if detainees were blindfolded while they received treatment. P36 said that some detainees were blindfolded.

Wiedner asked if P36 heard screams from abuse. P36 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P36 to describe what he heard and where the noise came from. P36 described a case in which hot water was poured on a young man. There were signs on his skin, but they were unclear. The doctors overheard [interrogations]. There were certain rooms from which the doctors heard sounds of abuse, but they were not allowed to go there.

Wiedner asked if P36 consistently heard these sounds. P36 confirmed.

Kerber said that the judges found online that Ramadan 2012 was between July 19 and August 18.

Wiedner reminded P36 that he may testify in Arabic. Wiedner then asked for the time period during which P36 worked at the Red Crescent. P36 said between February 14, 2012 to the end of 2013.

Böcker wanted to quote from the police transcript regarding different dates referenced by P36. Kerber said that he could do that later during the defense's questioning.

P36 said that he estimated the dates when he spoke with the police. However, in [REDACTED], he wrote down when he became a member of the medical association and connected that date to the time period when he worked at the Red Crescent.

Wiedner recalled that P36 began working on February 14, 2012. He then asked P36 about the situation at Al-Khatib Branch around this time. P36 clarified that he did not go to Al-Khatib immediately. He worked for the Red Crescent for a few months before the doctors were requested, which was around Ramadan because he remembered that some of the doctors were fasting.

Wiedner noted that Ramadan 2012 was between July 19 and August 18. He asked P36 if that period corresponded to the dates provided by P36.

P36 said that he initially had difficulty remembering because he worked at the Red Crescent for years and met many patients. He was eventually able to narrow the timeframe. He was certain that he treated detainees during Ramadan. But he did not remember if he started seeing them before or during Ramadan.

Wiedner asked about the arrangements to go to Al-Khatib Branch. P36 explained that [Branch personnel] came to the [hospital] administration who then informed the head of the Emergency Department, Yousef Hammad يوسف حماد, that a group of doctors and nurses were responsible for treating the detainees. The doctors and nurses took medicine, bandages, and [scalpels]. They stayed there for more than two hours and sometimes up to five hours. This was the first time they saw such cases outside of the hospital.

Wiedner asked how many critical cases he saw during his first visit. P36 said two cases.

Wiedner asked if P36 was referring to his first visit to the Branch which was in Ramadan. P36 said that the cases were all the same thing. Detainees were either unconscious, sick, or dead. He saw corpses all the time [at Al-Khatib] and sometimes at [the hospital].

Wiedner asked if P36 could estimate how many deaths there were between July 19 and August 18, 2012. P36 asked if Wiedner meant “in general” or “in front of me.”

Wiedner wanted to know about the cases P36 personally saw. P36 clarified that he likely saw ten cases [in the month of Ramadan], but [this was a guess].

Wiedner asked whether “in front of me” referenced the combined deaths in Al-Khatib and the hospital. P36 said yes. He did not go to Al-Khatib every day or even every other day because the doctors were divided [into groups], so he did not see everything.

Wiedner asked if P36 remembered a special case. P36 said that every patient is a special case to him. There were deaths and gunshot cases. Some people died in the hospital after receiving medicine and treatment due to acute renal insufficiency or abscesses.

Wiedner quoted from the police transcript dated May 19, 2021 when P36 was asked about death during Ramadan: “Three death cases or more. At least three. In the hospital department and in Al-Khatib there were special cases.” P36 said that he was talking about a patient who died in the ICU of acute renal insufficiency. Staff from Al-Khatib called the Red Crescent and said that the doctors were needed because a detainee died. He did not have a pulse. Another detainee died in the [hospital]. A member of the Al-Khatib staff told P36, “this patient is in a coma. Help him. He is not talking.” The detainee was examined in the hospital and was pronounced dead. Most cases were like this.

Wiedner recalled P36’s statement during police questioning that “in the cell on the floor were two dead people and a third person died in the department. Maybe more than three died. He was in the operating room and died due to a lack of medicine and wounds.” P36 confirmed his statement and said that this happened around noon. The doctors could not help the detainee because he was dead. The second person died of renal insufficiency in the ICU. The third person died in the department after a while. The doctors did blood tests, but he unfortunately died.

Wiedner asked P36 if the detainees died of acute or chronic diseases. P36 said that most of them died of acute diseases. If patients had a pre-existing condition, they would have told the doctors about it. Individuals with chronic illnesses died if they remained [in detention] for a long time, including males with hypertension or females with hypotension. Hypotension was a consequence of low liquid intake. Hypotension [hypovolemia] affected the heart, liver, lungs, spleen, etc.

Wiedner asked if the detainees who died were males. P36 confirmed that the dead were usually young men. Rarely was the person elderly. One time, there was a female detainee who was treated by a [female] nurse. Her case was famous because [the doctors wondered why] a female was detained in the basement.

Wiedner wanted to know about the first detainee death. P36 explained that the first dead detainee was a man who laid on his back and did not eat or move. This happened several times.

Wiedner recalled P36's statement during police questioning that "in Ramadan, I saw the first dead person. There were dead people near the stairs and other ones inside the cell." P36 confirmed and noted that treatment was generally administered in the space [outside the cells], but sometimes detainees died in their cell.

Wiedner asked about the circumstances of the dead detainees inside the cells. P36 said that when a detainee did not move, a staff-member from Al-Khatib called the doctors [to examine the detainee]. The doctors and nurses examined the detainee's heart, lungs, and pulse. Usually, the corpse was skinny and pale. It was not the doctors' task to determine the cause of death. P36 was unsure of what happened to the corpses after they were examined.

Wiedner recalled P36's statement during police questioning: "the condition of the corpse: skinny and pale. There was no pulse or breathing. [We] could not verify the cause of death." P36 confirmed his statement and reiterated that the doctors could not indicate why the person died. When they finished their work, the doctors were thanked by the Branch's staff.

Wiedner asked if P36 knew what happened to the corpses. P36 did not know and they were not allowed to ask.

Wiedner asked if P36 knew what happened to the bodies of people who died in the hospital. P36 explained that normally corpses are kept in the refrigerator until families collect them. But the corpses of detainees were immediately taken and were not kept in the refrigerator. P36 did not know what happened to them. Some people said that the corpses were taken to military hospitals. He did not think the corpses were given to families, but he did not know for certain.

Wiedner asked P36 about the hospital procedures for when a detainee died in the hospital. P36 explained that the doctors wrote down what happened to the person and what diseases they carried. The therapy procedures were documented, but names were anonymous. There was an incident in January 2013 when the head of the department signed that the detainee died with chest pain and nausea.

Wiedner asked P36 if unconscious patients were brought to the hospital from Al-Khatib Branch. P36 confirmed and said that they were brought to the emergency department.

Wiedner mentioned the keyword "unconsciousness" and asked P36 whether that was at Al-Khatib Branch or the hospital. P36 said that happened both at Al-Khatib and [the hospital]. [When the doctors first started treating detainees], unconscious detainees were treated in cells. But as time passed, more patients were brought to the hospital than were treated in the Branch. The doctors noticed that the detainees had hypotension, bad [health] conditions, and had cardiac and renal insufficiency.

Wiedner asked about the hygienic conditions facing detainees. P36 said that the detainees were not allowed to shave [so their beards were unkept]. The detainees also smelled, their skin was unclean, and their clothes were old and worn out.

Wiedner asked about the food and water situation. P36 did not know because no one was offered water in front of him and [he knew that] the nutrition was bad. The detainees looked like they lacked liquids, food, and hygiene. These were the main causes of death.

Wiedner mentioned the keyword "naked." P36 explained that [detainees] were forced to get naked, perhaps because of mistreatment or because they were newcomers.

Kerber asked P36 what he meant by "naked." P36 replied, "completely naked."

Kerber asked if the detainees did not wear underwear as well. P36 confirmed.

Wiedner asked where the offices were and whether P36 visited them. P36 said that there were offices in the basement, but most of the officers' offices were upstairs. [The doctors] were summoned there a few times, such as when there was a special case, the officers wanted to know what happened with a specific detainee in the doctors' care, or the officers wanted to ask about medication prescriptions.

Wiedner asked P36 if he knew the rank of the officer to whom the doctors were summoned. [P36 said something, then Wiedner asked him to say the word to the interpreter in Arabic.] P36 said عميد ["ameed" Brigadier General]. The interpreter explained that the word has two meanings: (1) a dean (in the context of a university) or (2) Brigadier General (in the military context).

Wiedner asked P36 to describe the officers' offices. P36 said that the offices upstairs were better, as if you were in another world with luxurious furniture, windows, and pictures.

Wiedner asked P36 if he heard screams while he was upstairs. P36 said no.

Wiedner asked if P36 heard about detainees from the officers, like information about the fate of detainees or dead people. P36 said sometimes the officers asked the doctors about deaths [that happened in the hospital] since the officers did not come to the hospital.

Wiedner asked P36 if he saw Raslan at the Branch. P36 said that the name [Raslan] was unclear to him. P36's colleagues told him that they knew the name, but P36 did not know it. He did not know [Raslan]. Maybe he unknowingly met Raslan [at the branch].

Wiedner asked if P36 could say whether he saw Raslan. P36 thought that most of the officers were younger [than Raslan].

Wiedner asked if P36 could determine whether the personnel who accompanied the patients and the doctors were officers or guards. P36 said that the people who accompanied the patients were normal personnel who the doctors saw every day. The guards who accompanied the doctors downstairs were normal, low-ranking personnel.

Wiedner asked whether P36 saw high-ranking officers in [areas of] the branch other than their offices. P36 said that the doctors saw various ranking officers in the basement, but the high-ranking officers did not usually go to the basement.

Wiedner asked whether P36 met a high-ranking officer downstairs in the basement. P36 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if he met that high-ranking officer in Ramadan or afterward. P36 did not remember.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Polz recalled P36's statement during police questioning. When asked if he saw dead bodies, P36 said "yes, [my] duty was to tell whether the person was dead. Some people were mistreated and some people had pre-existing conditions." Polz then asked if P36 could tell the cause of death of the patients. P36 said that the corpses were divided into groups: (1) those with signs of mistreatment, and (2) those with diseases. Not all diseases [inevitably] caused death. For example, people with diabetes, asthma, or renal disease could live with these conditions or die of them.

Polz asked if P36 meant that patients died of diseases like renal insufficiency. P36 confirmed.

Polz asked if P36 could estimate the number of detainees who died in the hospital during Ramadan. P36 did not know, but the number was documented by the hospital. He guessed five people, but it could have been ten.

Polz asked how many patients P36 treated at Al-Khatib Branch [from July-September 2012]. P36 said that sometimes he treated the same patient several times. There were approximately 200 – 300 patients and more than 1,000 therapy sessions. [There were more therapy sessions than patients.] The patients were mostly the same, but sometimes there were new patients.

Polz recalled that P36 said that 50% of the people who were admitted to the hospital from Al-Khatib Branch died there. Polz asked whether P36 could estimate the number of detainees who died in the hospital during July, August, and September 2012. P36 said approximately 100 people.

Polz asked if it was correct that 200 people were brought from Al-Khatib to the hospital, of whom 100 died. P36 said yes, but that number was an estimate.

Ritscher asked P36 if the corpses were taken back to Al-Khatib. P36 said yes.

Ritscher asked if any of the corpses were handed to their families. P36 said no. They were all given back to the Branch.

Ritscher asked again if all of the corpses were taken back to Al-Khatib. P36 said yes.

Ritscher asked whether P36 knew the causes of death. P36 said that the doctors knew how the hospitalized detainees died.

Ritscher asked why cardiac insufficiency occurred. P36 said this occurred because of the [detention] circumstances.

Ritscher asked if P36 issued death certificates. P36 said that the doctors only wrote certificates when the patient died in the hospital.

Ritscher asked P36 what he wrote. P36 said that he wrote about the diseases, conditions, etc. of the corpse and the cause of death.

Ritscher asked if P36 documented the nutritional state of corpses. P36 said that the doctors documented why detainees were brought to the hospital and the causes of death. They did not document the nutritional state.

Ritscher asked whether the patients were anonymous. P36 said yes. However, on occasion, they knew names.

Ritscher asked if numbers were assigned to the anonymous patients who died in the hospital. P36 said no. The doctors wrote either “from Al-Khatib branch” or “anonymous.” The officers asked later what happened to [the patient].

Ritscher asked where P36 got the names. P36 said from the personnel.

Ritscher asked if P36 was referring to personnel from Al-Khatib. P36 said yes. “They told us to write this or that.”

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Böcker said that P36 was asked during police questioning when he started and finished working for the Red Crescent. He asked the same question to P36 now. P36 said approximately from 2012 to the end of 2013.

Böcker confirmed that P36 provided the same answer. Böcker then noted that P36 was asked about Tawfiq Younes, and P36 answered that he did not know Younes. Finally, Böcker said that P36 was asked when he first saw a corpse at Al-Khatib. P36 said that he first saw a corpse in July or August.

Böcker said that P36 answered during the police questioning: “certainly in 2012. Between June and December.” P36 confirmed his statement.

Böcker said that P36 was asked whether he recalled another death case and that P36 mentioned a person who laid on his back in the cell. P36 confirmed.

Böcker asked P36 how he responded to the police when they asked him to specify when [he saw the person on his back in the cell]. P36 thought that he said August, but maybe it was “between June and December, but in Ramadan.”

Böcker said that P36 stated during police questioning: “[I can] hardly specify that case, but it was in summer, because of deficiency of fluids.” P36 confirmed his statement.

Fratzky recalled P36’s statement that he and his colleagues worked at the Red Crescent and were sent to Al-Khatib Branch. Fratzky asked how far the hospital was from the Branch. P36 said that the hospital was opposite Al-Khatib, less than 100 meters.

Fratzky asked P36 if there were other security branches close to the hospital. P36 said that there were others, but he did not know them.

Fratzky asked if there was a chance that the security branch that he went to was not Al-Khatib. P36 explained that, even before [he started to care for detainees from Al-Khatib], he knew that [the building was Al-Khatib]. He lived ten-minutes away and his friend was detained there for five months even though he was a blacksmith who did nothing wrong.

Fratzky asked P36 if he could say for certain that the Branch was Al-Khatib. P36 said yes, one can see it on Google Maps.

Böcker recalled P36’s statement at the beginning of this session that Al-Khatib Branch belongs to the Air Force Intelligence. P36 did not know the word in German, but he said in Arabic “جوية [jawwiyyeh]”. [The interpreter confirmed and said “Luftwaffe [Air Force]” in German.]

Böcker recalled P36’s statement that he and the other doctors went from the hospital to Al-Khatib where they stayed for two to five hours. Böcker noted that P36 was the only witness to mention that such medical treatment was provided in Al-Khatib. He then asked if P36 maintains his statements. P36 said that he wanted to clarify that many of his colleagues are too afraid [for their names to be publicized] and they say that [the situation was different].

Kerber said that P36 was shown a satellite image of Al-Khatib Branch during the police questioning on May 19, 2021. Kerber asked P36 to point to Al-Khatib and the Red Crescent Hospital.

P36 said that the image was zoomed out too much. Kerber suggested that she point to a structure, then P36 could identify it. Kerber pointed at [*]. P36 said that this is Al-Abbasiyyeen Stadium. Kerber pointed at [!]. P36 said that this could be Al-Khatib's garden.

Kerber asked P36 to go to the projector and look closely [she did not want to move the image because the labels on the map provided by P36 during police questioning were covered].

P36 identified Al-Khatib's garden. He said that the doctors used to go to the building [#] opposite of the Red Crescent. He did not know if [?] belonged to the Branch. He showed the old [O] and the new [N] Red Crescent buildings.

Kerber asked if P36 wrote the labels himself. P36 confirmed.

Kerber showed the labels and said that they were as P36 described.

P36 explained that the blue [~] was the roof of the parking lot for cars at the Branch. [C] was the ceiling of the yard in front of the branch.

Kerber asked about X. P36 said that it was Al-Khatib Branch, in addition to the building opposite of the Red Crescent.

Oehmichen said that P36 was asked during police questioning on May 19, 2021: “what happened when the Branch’s opinion conflicted with [your] medical opinions?” Oehmichen asked P36 if he remembers his answer. P36 said that the Branch went with [its own] opinion.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Kroker said that P36 was asked about “nudity” and mentioned a certain case. Kroker asked if P36 recalled that case. P36 said that there were several cases and it was a drop in the ocean.

Kroker asked P36 to describe that incident. P36 said that there was a situation when detainees were in garden and they were ordered to take off their clothes.

Kroker noted a case in the basement. P36 said yes, the naked [detainees] were gathered there several times. He did not know why.

Kroker quoted P36’s statement during police questioning: “in the basement yard, the detainees were ordered to get naked. The detainees asked the guards to stop, but they refused. There was mistreatment and they went on to the cells.” P36 confirmed his statement.

Reiger asked if P36 saw injured genitalia. P36 said that the doctors only saw genitalia to insert urine catheters.

Reiger asked if P36 saw injuries in the vertebral column. P36 said that the doctors saw injuries to the skin, but not deep ones nor fractures.

Scharmer asked P36 in which branch the patients were treated. P36 said in Al-Khatib Branch.

Kroker said that the detainees tried to communicate with the doctors sometimes. Kroker asked if they attempted to ask if P36 could contact the patient’s family. P36 said that the patients sometimes tried to say something to the doctors, but they would immediately receive a blow.

Questioning by the Defence Counsels

Böcker asked how P36’s career looked to the regime. P36 said that he was alright at the Red Crescent. But the doctors saw the injustices facing patients in the basement of Al-Khatib daily. “[Syrians] have been in the same situation for 40 years and we cannot do anything. Everyone is afraid. [The other doctors and I] tried to help the patients, but [we did not] contact their families because our situation was difficult and we were under surveillance. We spoke with our colleagues [and decided to] treat patients in the hospital, but we could not help the people in the basement.” P36 went on to say that Syrians lived without rights for 40 years. A friend of his from the Red Crescent died of COVID-19 because people in Syria do not believe in the virus. [P36 spoke in a low, sad voice.] The head of the clinical hospital was detained for a week. He tried to resist, but he could not. P36 asked [the Court] “Do you have any idea for us?” [what could we do?].

Böcker said [unfortunately] no. He asked P36 if he treated injured people who were not from Al-Khatib and who came from somewhere else, like demonstrations. P36 said yes, there were four people who were beaten in front of the [hospital] and who were brought inside.

Böcker asked if P36 attempted to help [these people]. P36 said that [a doctor's] duty is like [a soldier's] duty; it is compulsory. But they did not have much capacity. There was stress on the doctors.

Böcker asked if someone could simply resign or say that he did not want to work. P36 said that, one time, an emergency doctor said that he could not work and wanted to resign, but "they" refused and told him that he had to work.

Böcker asked if there were people who refused to work because they did not want to [deal with patients in the branch]. P36 said [that people did this indirectly]. For example, someone might say that he needs a break after dealing with the detainees the day before.

Böcker asked if someone could directly say that he did not want to work. P36 said no, because they took an oath. If someone said no, then he would be transferred to a village, so they were scared.

Fratzky asked P36 if he knew the names of Branch personnel who accompanied patients to the hospital. P36 only knew "Abu Nidal" أبو نضال about whom he told the police.

[The witness was dismissed.]

Scharmer stated that P36's testimony was important because 50% of the patients [admitted to the Red Crescent died]. P36 worked in Al-Khatib between June and September 2012 approximately, and many witnesses who testified in court were detained at a different period of time.

Böcker asked if a plaintiff [REDACTED] was still planning to testify. Kerber confirmed that he was scheduled for June 30.

The proceedings were adjourned at 3:50PM.

The next trial day will be on June 24, 2021 at 9:30AM.

Trial Day 78 – June 24, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with four spectators and two members of the press in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Ritscher and Polz.

Judge Kerber said that the Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) sent [the Court] a transcript of the witness's interrogation regarding [REDACTED]. Copies of the transcript would be distributed to the parties once they were prepared. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said that the witness was not told that he was going to be questioned [at this Court session] about that specific interrogation, and the witness should have been informed.

P37 was informed of his rights and duties as a witness.

Testimony of P37

Judge Kerber asked P37 if he is related to the accused by blood or marriage. P37 said no.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Kerber noted that P37 was questioned by the BKA several times and that the court had two of those transcripts: one about P37's opposition to the Syrian government and a second about Raslan.

Kerber asked P37 to tell the Court about himself. P37 explained that he joined the police college when he finished law school. He gradually rose up the ranks. He was promoted to [REDACTED]. When the “incidents” [uprising] began, P37 was the head of the [REDACTED] Police Department. He refused [to commit acts of] violence and tried to enforce the law regarding demonstrations. The regime dismissed him from his job after they asked him to use violence and he refused. He went to Egypt with his family for around a year. He was followed to Egypt by “groups” from the regime who tried to provoke him. Eventually, he went to the German embassy and applied for Asylum on behalf of himself and his family. They then immigrated to Germany in mid-September 2013. They tried to integrate into “the beautiful German social life” and live a dignified life. P27 had three children who study in Germany. His wife died three years ago. He retired four years ago. He always wanted to be “a witness against the unwanted figures [in Germany],” so he applied to work in counter-terrorism. But his fluency in German was insufficient and he was too old. He was ready for any service that benefits the country where he lives and [the country] that dignified him.

Kerber stated that P37 knew Raslan in Syria. She asked P37 to speak about this. P37 explained that he and Raslan became acquainted when P37 was an officer at the Immigration and Passport Department. At the time, Raslan worked in one of the divisions as a First-Class Warrant Officer and was studying law. Raslan needed vacation days to travel from Aleppo to Damascus to take his law exams. Raslan thought P37 would be tolerant and issue the vacation time, so he approached P37.

P37 continued. He explained that he granted Raslan’s request. The situation was around 30 years ago around 1988-1990. When Raslan graduated from law school, he joined the Damascus Police Department, which was his dream. Raslan distributed sweets to [P37’s department] to celebrate [his accomplishments]. P37 never saw Raslan again because they were in different departments. P37 learned this information five or six years ago when Raslan attended a language institute in Berlin with P37’s son. Raslan told P37’s son that he knew P37 and that P37 did him a favour [by issuing his vacation days]. P37 then met Raslan in a café in Berlin. There, Raslan told P37 the story of his defection from the regime. He told the story with discretion, as was his nature.

Kerber asked if P37 knew the circumstances surrounding Raslan’s defection. P37 said that Raslan resided in Al-Houla الحولة. Most people from Al-Houla defected from the regime. It appeared that Raslan sided with the majority of his family and people.

Kerber asked P37 if Raslan told him about the Al-Houla massacre. P37 said that he heard about it even before speaking with Raslan. P37 was under house arrest around the time of the revolution, so he heard about Al-Houla and the tanks. But, of course, P37 did not personally see anything.

Kerber asked P37 if Raslan cited [the massacre] as one of his reasons for defecting. P37 thought so.

***

[35-minute break to distribute and review copies of a transcript.]

***

Kerber reaffirmed P37 of his rights as a witness.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Wiedner recalled P37’s statement that he was “dismissed” from his job in Syria. Wiedner asked P37 what happened and what he meant by “dismissed.” P37 explained that his department was asked to suppress demonstrations, purportedly without using weapons. But the oral instructions were to suppress the demonstration by any means necessary without the outside world knowing. He tried to deal with the demonstrators in a civilized way through understanding, dialogue, and water [cannons used to control riots]. Apparently, the regime knew that he dealt with the demonstrators according to the law, and [the regime] did not like that. P37 wanted to clarify something that he said earlier. He said that he was transferred to Damascus and was under house arrest. In fact, he went to the “Studies Office” where officers who did not execute their orders were referred to for an [investigation and a decision on the matter]. The Office accused him of dealing with the demonstrators. They then decided to dismiss P37, put him under house arrest in Damascus, and ordered him to retire early. He was also banned from travel, and a case was filed against him at the military courts. P37 could leave Syria through the Aleppo airport with the help of some friends. When he sought refuge in Germany, [he was put on the Syrian wanted list by the Syrian government].

Wiedner asked P37 when he left Syria for Egypt. P37 said that he went to Egypt in mid-2012.

Wiedner asked P37 if he knew other officers in [REDACTED] who went through a similar situation. P37 said that all of his assistant officers were transferred to insignificant positions, then were [dismissed]. One of them was [REDACTED].

Wiedner asked P37 what happened with [his assistant officers] after they were removed from the police service. P37 said that they were fired from their job.

Wiedner asked if they were detained. P37 could not remember.

Wiedner asked if P37 first met Raslan around 1988/1989. P37 thought so based on Raslan’s age, and when Raslan graduated from the police [college] and was promoted to colonel.

Wiedner asked where Raslan was at that time. P37 [assumed that] Raslan was in Aleppo visiting his family in Al-Houla [the customary practice around the holiday]. [P37 was never told this by Raslan.]

Wiedner asked P37 if he knew Raslan when the latter was still studying. P37 said that [Raslan] was a First-Class Warrant Officer who worked on travel visas and passports. He was ambitious and his dream was to rise up the ranks. After Raslan distributed sweets, P37 never saw him again.

Wiedner asked P37 if Raslan worked while studying law. P37 confirmed. He noted that, in Syria, people did not need to attend class every day to graduate; they just needed to take the final exam. Also, a police officer cannot be promoted unless he graduates from law school.

Wiedner asked P37 if he knows what Raslan did after leaving Syria. P37 said no. He did not see Raslan or hear about him. P37 thought that Raslan went to another department, other than the police.

Wiedner asked P37 if he and Raslan talked about the circumstances surrounding Raslan’s defection when they met in Berlin. P37 said that they met every month or so at a café in Tegel [a district in Berlin] for an hour or two. Other people also joined them, including “our friends from back in Syria.” They tried not to talk about their careers [for security reasons]. Raslan was reserved [because of his career] and because he was afraid to be followed. Once, Raslan told the group that he was followed by a car [for the purpose of abducting him] on his way to the dentist. P37 told Raslan to go to the police, but P37 did not know what happened after that. Raslan spoke about the future and his children. Raslan knew that the regime was pursuing him and [expressed his concerns to P37]. He told P37 how he defected, went to Jordan, then worked with the [opposition] coalition. Through a connection from the coalition to the German embassy, Raslan and his family went to Germany.

Wiedner asked P37 if they talked about Raslan’s work in Syria. P37 said that he was well-known because of his position, so Raslan probably knew of him. But as an officer at the intelligence services, Raslan was unknown.

Wiedner asked P37 if Raslan told him about his work in Syria. P37 said no, but he heard that Raslan was an officer at a security branch in Damascus who was one of the top graduates of the police college and was chosen for the intelligence services. One time, Raslan slipped his tongue and said, “I wish I was wearing a police uniform.”

Wiedner quoted from the transcript of P37’s questioning by the police in 2019: “did Raslan talk about the conflict in Syria? You answered: I was a higher rank than him. He was embellishing things and acknowledged that there was death.” Wiedner asked P37 if the statement was correct. P37 asked if the question could be broken down and repeated.

Wiedner repeated “I was a higher ranked than him. He was embellishing and acknowledged that there was death.” P37 clarified that Raslan did not embellish. The first part was correct, but P37 did not think the second part was correct. P37 and Raslan talked about the regime’s crimes, and of course P37 is against any Syrian who supports criminality, killing, and violence – whether Raslan or someone else.

Wiedner asked P37 about his impression of Raslan when Raslan was working for the regime. Was Raslan pro-regime or opposition? P37 said that Raslan would not have defected if he was content with the regime. Rather, he would have carried on [in his position of power] with cars and high social status. But this was just P37’s [assumption] because he did not know the circumstances surrounding Raslan’s defection. P37 noted that Raslan had a video of his defection statement.

Wiedner asked P37 if they talked about the reason for Raslan’s defection. P37 said that [because he swore an oath to tell the truth before the Court], [he will admit] that there was talk that Raslan defected because of the pressure on Al-Houla and violence against Raslan’s family. But there could be other reasons that P37 did not know.

Wiedner asked if Raslan told P37 any information about what he did after he defected, such as that Raslan joined the opposition. P37 confirmed but added that he did not remember all the details. Members of the Free Syrian Army helped Raslan flee from Damascus to an area near the Jordanian border where he stayed for a day or two. Then Raslan entered Jordan, declared himself an oppositionist, and helped the coalition. Raslan told P37 that he was unhappy with the “unfortunate acts of the coalition (in Raslan’s words).” That is why Raslan sought refuge in [Germany] for the future of his children. P37 did not know when Raslan arrived to Germany. P37’s son met Raslan at a German language course.

Wiedner quoted from the transcript of P37’s questioning by the police in 2019: “Raslan became a political activist after his defection. [I] knew that Raslan was in Turkey for 4-5 months.” P37 said that Raslan went from Jordan to Turkey, and then from Turkey to Germany after he defected.

Wiedner quoted again from the transcript of P37’s questioning by the police: “there was an opposition figure, Riyadh Saif, to whom Raslan sent documents to help him go to Germany.” P37 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P37 if Raslan told him about the subject-matter of the documents. P37 said no.

Wiedner recalled P37’s statement that Raslan worked in security [in Germany]. P37 said that Raslan passed a security course in Berlin. Then he was assigned as a security guard. [Raslan’s] work was difficult, so P37 did not see him again.

Wiedner asked P37 if Raslan talked about his work. P37 said that Raslan told him that he became a security guard for a company and he had 12-hour-long shifts. One time, Raslan was at work when he had an attack [either diabetes or blood pressure, but P37 did not specify]. P37 asked the court to excuse him because he did not care much about [Raslan]; he was just trying to recall information for the court.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Polz asked if P37 ever entered the prison as [REDACTED]. P37 said that he was a member of the security committee in [REDACTED], which consisted of the [REDACTED]. As [REDACTED], P37 was distanced [from the security branches]; he only saw civilians or criminals convicted of murder, tax evasion, etc. One day, a demonstrator was detained and referred to the judiciary, so P37 went to the Military Security Branch [regarding the matter]. “There was nothing that pleases [at the Branch].” P37 did not see anything when he met with the Branch’s head, but his driver saw “unsatisfactory” sights.

Polz asked P37 if he was imprisoned after 2011. P37 said no, never.

Polz asked P37 if he remembers being questioned by the police in 2014. P37 recalled saying that torture was performed in prisons and that the Syrian regime is dictatorial and totalitarian which is known to all Syrians and, unfortunately, the whole world.

Polz quoted from the transcript of P37’s questioning by the police in 2014: “regarding the situation in the Intelligence Services, the conditions are difficult. When one enters, one sees hundreds of detainees, dead people, and mistreatment. The detainees were beaten with sticks and their limbs became swollen for days.” P37 said that he heard all these things and they were correct. He noted that he never entered a prison of a security branch. But he did see “solitary prisons” from outside. There is a Political Security Branch in almost every city that has a police service. The head of the Branch overrides the police, even though he has a lower rank [than P37 had]. But the Branch is with the regime and implements the regime’s policies which sometimes deviate from the law. P37 visited that branch and spoke about the problem. [It was unclear as to which problem P37 was referring.]

Polz asked P37 if he was talking about the Political Security Branch or the intelligence services generally. P37 said that all branches worked this way. However, one could find both a lenient officer and difficult officer [in the same branch]. [Officers with good morals were lenient.] The [problem is when someone acts on their morality and is then blamed for their leniency], which happened to P37 when he refused orders. To tell the truth to the world, the Syrian regime is dictatorial and violent.

Polz asked P37 if officers had the chance [not to execute orders based on their] morals. Böcker expanded on Polz’s question and asked P37 if going to Germany with one’s family is an example [of getting the chance not to execute orders]. P37 said that he could [gauge whether] high-ranking officials had the same morals as he did because of his connections, rank, and [communication] with the higher-ups. [For example], P37 plays piano and writes poetry, and officers in Syria know that Major General Mahmoud is an artist. P37 explained the three types of officers in the Immigration and Passports Department: (1) the officer who is moral and is open to citizens, (2) the officer who requires bribes, (3) the officer who enjoys being harsh and making people cry. All three officers work within the one chaotic [system]. These same types of officers [operate] the Political Intelligence Branch which summoned P37 and told him that he must stop playing music and writing poetry or else he would be dismissed. There was: (1) an officer who preferred using psychological pressure over torture, (2) an officer who was distressed by his wife and let steam off on people, and (3) an officer who was silent and only hit. “It is a state of chaos! The most important thing [to people] is that they stay in power.”

Polz clarified that her question was whether an officer could leave or relocate after 2011. P37 said maybe [before] 2012. He was fired before 2012. But he thought that, after 2012, if an officer did not execute an order, then he would have had a field trial and been executed.

Polz asked P37 if Raslan could do what he did [and work with people who had similar morals] or could leave his job. P37 said that he wanted to give some [hypothetical] examples of how someone might try to evade [immoral] orders. [Let's say that] someone faked [having a heart problem] and coordinated with his cardiologist friend [who agreed to say that the person had a heart problem so he could be excused from work], but then the Intelligence Services might summon the doctor and interrogate him to verify that the person was actually sick and not simply trying to escape his job. Or imagine that an officer vocalized that he could not complete his mission ("is there anything more beautiful than honesty?"), and was consequently punished, imprisoned, or terminated. How could anyone tell [officials] that he does not want to work for them? P37 recalled his own situation. In July 2011, the American ambassador in France came to Syria. The Syrian Minister of Interior instructed P37 to prevent the ambassador from [witnessing the demonstrations] and to confiscate the ambassador's passport. P37 knew that these orders were illegal, so he demanded that the minister send him a warrant. He knew that the minister would never do that though because the world's eye was watching [Syria]. [By taking this approach,] P37 was able to protect the ambassador, which was his job. Perhaps someone else in the same position would not have done the same thing. [The point is that,] when it comes to [carrying out] orders, much depends on [an officer's] morals. Likewise, an officer deals with a prisoner based on the officer's morals.

Questioning by the Defence Counsels

Böcker asked P37 if Raslan did the same thing that he did [and acted according to his morals]. P37 pointed out that there is a difference between police and intelligence. Intelligence officers cannot afford to be [as moral as police officers] because they have to [follow orders more closely when quelling demonstrations].

Böcker asked P37 about the difference between what he and Raslan did. P37 said that he did not want to compare situations.

Böcker asked P37 if an intelligence officer could behave the way P37 did. P37 said that "police officer" [must be distinguished] from "intelligence officer." Police [do not execute political orders – they implement the law]. [On the other hand,] the intelligence services execute political orders. Police officers hide behind the law, while intelligence officers dedicate their lives to their careers. Police officers have a hundred ways to run away and can even submit a resignation. They were not required to quell demonstrations [until later, at which point Syrian law said that demonstrators could be released on bail for twenty Syrian Lira]. If demonstrators were detained by the intelligence services, then [there would be a] "problem." [P37 said "problem" in English.]

Böcker asked if [the transcripts that were distributed earlier] were about [REDACTED]. P37 confirmed.

Böcker said that P37 was asked during police questioning if Raslan talked about methods of torture, and P37 answered that Raslan interrogated people and they talked good about him. Böcker asked P37 who said that about Raslan [when P37 never met anyone who was interrogated by Raslan] and if P37 could share their names and addresses. [P37 paused.]

Böcker asked if he should repeat the question. P37 said no. He understood the question, but paused because he had to go back 20 years in his memory. Sometimes, civilians had problems with the intelligence services and Raslan helped them. P37 heard this from civilians [but he never kept track of who they were because he had no idea that he would testify in the future]. P37 heard from Riyad Saif that he was detained at Raslan's [branch] and was treated well by Raslan. "Maybe you can ask Riyad. Even Riyad helped [Raslan] later."

Böcker said that Saif was asked if Raslan [treated people well], but he denied this, which is why he wanted to ask P37 now. [P37 appeared irritated.] P37 said, "Do not say 'I asked you.' Instead say, 'I asked.'"

Böcker asked what was said about Riyad Said. P37 explained that, when Raslan came to Germany five years ago, "we" asked him how he came to Germany. P37 recalled that Raslan (or another member of their friend group) said that Riyad Saif helped Raslan. Raslan said that Saif was detained at Al-Khatib and that Raslan paid respect to Saif because of Saif's illness. Saif reciprocated by being good to Raslan.

Fratzky recalled P37's statement that he and Raslan used to meet at a café in Tegel. Fratzky asked who else met with them. P37 thought that Fratzky knew one of them: [REDACTED]. P37 previously provided [REDACTED] phone number to the police and told them to summon [REDACTED] to testify. P37 told [REDACTED] that he made this suggestion and [REDACTED] said that he did not have a problem with this.

Fratzky asked if other people met at the café with them. P37 said no, just four or five people who had insignificant roles, namely elderly people who had been in Germany for around 20 years and [who forgot anything said at the table]. P37 was the youngest person among them.

Fratzky asked P37 what he could tell the court about Hafez Makhlof. حافظ مخلوف [P37 paused, then he said,] "a war criminal."

Fratzky asked P37 to elaborate and explain where Makhlof works. P37 said that Makhlof interferes in all Syrian [affairs]. He is a member of the ruling family and the maternal cousin of the president ابن خال الرئيس.

Fratzky asked P37 where Makhlof works and his rank. P37 said that they [some officers/family members] take ranks just like that [i.e. some ranks were formalities, not the source of actual power].

Fratzky asked about Makhlof's rank. P37 said that Makhlof was maybe a Colonel عقيد. But when P37 does not like a person, he does not care about him. [All of] Syria hates [Makhlof] and even he hates himself.

Fratzky asked P37 why. P37 said that Makhlof ordered the governor and every human being in his area to use violence, murder, and loot. The talk about him does not end.

Fratzky asked P37 if he knows where Makhlof works. P37 thought that Makhlof works in Dar'a درعا.

Fratzky asked P37 if he knows about Division 40. P37 replied, "what is Division 40?" There are dozens of branches in Syria—a branch every 100 meters.

Fratzky asked P37 if he could tell the court about Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس. P37 said that [Younes] is no different than Hafez Makhlof.

Fratzky asked P37 where Younes works. P37 thought that [Younes] was a Brigadier General in 2010 and was responsible for one of the state security branches in Damascus.

Fratzky asked P37 if he knows Abduljabbar Al-Aqeydi عبد الجبار العكدي. P37 asked if he could ask a question. Fratzky said no. P37 asked, "are you a judge or an attorney? [Only] the judge can ask me this question."

Judge Kerber explained that the defence has the right to ask questions, however, P37 does not have to answer. P37 said that the letter he received [from the Court] was regarding Raslan, not others. He only wanted to be asked about this case.

[Böcker uttered inaudible words and was visibly upset.]

Kerber asked the defence to relate their question to the case and to tell the court why he asked about this figure.

Fratzky said that this person worked with Raslan, so he wanted to know what P37 could tell [the Court] about him. P37 said that Al-Aqeydi was an officer in the Syrian Army and declared his defection in a video. Al-Aqeydi criticized some of Turkey's policies regarding the armed opposition. After that, he was outraged by the rebels [pro-opposition], because he became a peace-dove swaying to the right and the left according to his interests, like all those who played with the fate of the people.

Fratzky asked P37 if he knows Al-Aqeydi. P37 said no.

Fratzky asked P37 if he [knows if] Al-Aqeydi lives in Germany. P37 said no.

Fratzky asked if P37 knows [REDACTED]. P37 said yes.

Fratzky asked P37 what he could tell the court about him. P37 said [addressing the judges] "[why] does [Fratzky] want [to know about] him? He should specify to me what he wants [to know about]. Whether he prefers men or women?" [the last sentence was not translated.]

Fratzky asked about [REDACTED] job. P37 said that he knew a person named [REDACTED] (perhaps their names were just similar). He was a Lieutenant Colonel at the police. Before he [was transferred] to P37 in [REDACTED], he was an [intelligence officer] officer in prison.

Fratzky asked P37 if he knows in which intelligence branch [REDACTED] worked. P37 said State Security, but was not certain.

Fratzky asked P37 when [REDACTED] came to the police. P37 did not know. These were difficult questions and Fratzky was supposed to respect P37's age and the oppression [that he endured].

Fratzky said that he respects P37, then asked him to remember as much as he can. [P37 was silent for a moment.] He said that he needs time to remember.

Kerber asked P37 if he needed a break. [P37 paused.] He said in 2010.

Fratzky asked if P37 still has contact with [REDACTED]. P37 said that 4-5 years ago, [REDACTED] called P37 from a small European country next to Germany [P37 was trying to remember which country].

Fratzky asked if it was [REDACTED]. P37 said maybe. [REDACTED] thanked P37 for his good treatment, his work, and his position in regards to the regime. P37 thought that [REDACTED] visited him 5-6 years ago to send his condolences because P37's wife was ill.

Fratzky asked if P37 has [REDACTED] phone number. P37 said that he needs to check his mobile phone.

Fratzky asked P37 if he could share [REDACTED] phone number and address privately with the Court. P37 said that he would if he was requested to do so.

Kerber said that P37 gave the court the phone number. P37 said that judging by the phone number, [REDACTED] is not in Germany. Kerber said that the court has [REDACTED] number now and could contact him.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsels

Schulz recalled P37's statement that he watched a video in which Raslan defected. P37 said that he did not watch it, but [he knew about it from Raslan and his acquaintances]. [Raslan shook his head].

Schulz said that P37 was questioned as a witness in 2014 and 2019. He asked P37 if [he was questioned any other time]. P37 thought that [this was classified information] for security [reasons]. Some of the security departments were the ones who [requested that he] testify regarding a number of personae non grata. That was P37's duty because he is lives "here." However, P37 could not say that he testified about so-and-so.

Schulz asked P37 if he met or talked with President Al-Assad. P37 replied, "I talked with Al-Assad?!"

Schulz noted that the police transcript said [that P37 spoke to President Al-Assad]. P37 said that Al-Assad used to send "us" letters and talk to "us" through instructions notices.

P37 wanted to know [who Schulz represents]. Kerber clarified that Schulz represents the plaintiffs.

Schulz recalled P37's statement during police questioning: "the Shabiha said 'Al-Assad or we burn the country.' If I am in [REDACTED], then I do not want Shabiha to come in. I told that personally to Al-Assad." P37 said he did not mean that he told this statement to Al-Assad personally. P37 sent a written note to the Ministry of Interior, to the Presidential Palace. [The note] said that, but P37 did not say that directly to Al-Assad.

Oehmichen recalled P37's statement during police questioning in 2019 regarding the intelligence services: "the one who enters is missing and the one who comes out is born." P37 confirmed.

Oehmichen asked if P37 could explain what that means. P37 did not want to explain.

Kerber asked P37 if he could explain what he meant in a few sentences. P37 said that it explains itself.

Kerber said that [the fact that the statement explains itself might only be true for someone who has enough background].

Oehmichen said "thanks" [in Arabic]. P37 clarified what he meant by the statement. When a place is bad, anyone who enters it goes missing. If he comes out from it safely, it is as if he was reborn.

Kerber asked Oehmichen if P37's answer was sufficient. Oehmichen said yes, "thanks" [in Arabic].

[The witness was dismissed.]

P37 thanked the court and the attorneys, and he apologized if he was harsh with them.

Böcker asked Wiedner if he knew anything about Deußing's statement in 2014. Wiedner said yes. He talked with the BKA.

Kerber said that the witness scheduled for July 2 could not come to Court, therefore that day of trial is cancelled.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:00PM.

The next trial will be June 30, 2021 at 10:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 39

Hearing Dates: June 30 & July 1, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Trial Day 79 – June 30, 2021

P38, a 59-year-old medical technician testified about his arrest by Syrian security forces and his detention in Al-Khatib Branch. He was able to explain in detail to the court how he was arrested close to his farm and how the motorcade of armed vehicles, jeeps and vans arrested other people on their way to Branch 251. One of the arrests happened at another farm where a 15-year-old boy was apparently killed, and his organs were ripped out by the security forces who then arrested his three younger siblings.

Trial Day 80 – July 1, 2021

The judges first summarized their conversation with a witness they had summoned but who eventually told them he would not be available for an in-court testimony in this trial. The court then heard the testimony of Christian Knappmann, the BKA officer who previously questioned this witness. Knappmann explained to the court that the witness was apparently traumatized by witnessing the death of a person whose dead body hung next to the witness for several hours. Since the witness was also questioned by the French Police's War Crimes Unit, the German translation of the transcript was also read out in court.

Day 79 of Trial – June 30, 2021

The hearing began at 10:35AM with seven spectators and two members of the press in the audience. No accredited journalist requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Kroker and Bahns were not present. Plaintiff counsel Dr. Oehmichen joined late, so did one of Raslan's Defense Counsels, Böcker.

Testimony of P38

P38 was accompanied by his counsel Sebastian Scharmer. P38 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to Anwar Raslan by blood or marriage.

Presiding Judge Kerber handed over to Judge Wiedner to ask P38 questions.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner first explained that although P38 was already questioned by the BKA in 2019, what would be of importance was his in-court testimony. He added that the court would be particularly interested in the circumstances surrounding P38's arrest and detention. Wiedner asked P38 to describe how he was arrested and what happened after that, how he was transferred to which Branch. P38 explained that he went to work every morning at 7:30AM. He also went to work at 7:30AM on [information redacted], 2012, [information redacted]. He lived in a neighborhood outside the city [Damascus] [information redacted]. P38 said there were searches in his neighborhood on this day. Around 300 meters from his home, he was stopped. He told the court that he remembered this distance because it was the distance between the road and his house. P38 described that there was one armored vehicle and in front of his car was a four-wheel drive jeep with a double cabin and a machine gun on the truck bed. There was also a man behind this machine gun. P38 was forced to leave his car and taken to the jeep by several men. He had to sit at the back on the middle seat. There was a young, masked man sitting to his right and another one to his left. P38 told the court that he was arrested due to a note, he recognized the man to his right. He was a well-known spy from a Branch. The column then drove to [information redacted].

P38 explained to the court that they did not have blindfolds when he was arrested so they pulled his undershirt over his head. P38 was therefore able to see what happened to the left and right of him. He told the court that the column stopped at one of the Shabiha's yards where many members of the military and many other people were waiting. There were also four green military buses. P38 had to enter one of these empty buses. He was sitting in the last row on an elevated seat. Although his vest was pulled over his face, he could see the faces right and left of him. When P38 entered the bus, he was beaten with the end of a rifle butt by an officer with a certain rank. He asked P38: "Field hospitals?" P38 explained to the court that he concluded from the officer's statements that he was accused of having equipped big field hospitals. P38 said he had to wait in the bus for one hour. He was alone with the driver and two armed persons who guarded the bus.

After one hour, the bus started driving east. P38 said it was some kind of patrol with other buses. He explained that the patrol was led by an armored vehicle, followed by a jeep and the bus where P38 was in, was third in line. P38 added that he was not watched very thoroughly because he was sitting higher than the people next to him. He could lift his shirt and see where they were driving. P38 said the bus drove from [information redacted] to [information redacted], a very near town. The patrol then turned left for around two kilometers until they reached a crossroad where they went on for one kilometer until they reached a T-formed crossroad where they stopped. P38 added that he knew the locations because he was from this area. The buses then stopped at the right side of the street to allow other cars to pass. P38 added that there were only a few people in his bus. It was only him, one other person, and soldiers. P38 went on to describe that several persons left the buses and only two armed persons remained in his bus. The persons who left the buses went to [information redacted]. P38 added that he knew the area very well because he lived [information redacted]. P38 said he heard shooting thirty minutes after the buses stopped. There was a confrontation for around ten minutes and the shooting lasted for around thirty minutes. P38 described that he could not hear any more shots after thirty minutes. However, he noticed that some vehicles came very close to the right side of the buses (as seen from his position). P38 identified one of the vehicles as a Russian make of the type BMP.

P38 told the court that in this situation, he witnessed something that would give one shivers, and that he was unable to forget until the present day. A child of around 15 years was in front of a vehicle, leaned against the vehicle without his feet touching the ground. The inner organs of the child were outside the body, his entire body was torn open, there was blood everywhere. P38 said “one could see everything.” He added that although the face of the child was covered in blood, P38 was able to tell that this person was not older than sixteen years. P38 said that shortly after, three children were put inside the bus. The youngest of them was not older than five years and the oldest was around ten years. According to P38, all of them cried and were shaking with fear. P38 said the children were sitting next to him. He put his hand on the head of the five-year-old who was sitting right next to him. All of them were afraid and when P38 asked them why they cried, they told him that their brother had been killed. P38 said the bus then went to Damascus. He added that the place where all this happened was at [information redacted] where you can go to [information redacted] and [information redacted]. P38 said he could never forget this event.

P38 added that the court would examine the crimes committed in Al-Khatib Branch. However, there would be crimes committed in the streets in Syria that no one would know of. He said that east of Douma, there were two hospitals. One was a psychiatric clinic and the other one was a dermatology clinic. The latter one also housed a state security branch where detainees were taken before being transferred to the state security branch in Douma. P38 said he stayed at this hospital for one hour before he was taken to the state security branch in Douma. He added that he knew the area very well. P38 explained to the court that he was able to read what was written on the garbage containers at the roadside. Based on that, he was able to tell where they were driving. According to P38 he and other detainees had to stay at the state security branch in Douma until 11PM. They then had to enter a red bus which had space for 24 people. Their hands were tied behind their back with plastic straps.

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking whether P38 meant cable straps [The translator was hesitant to translate the term when P38 used it for the first time and seemed unsure about the correct German terminology]. P38 affirmed, explaining that he was talking about the straps that are available in different colors such as red and white. These cable strips could not be opened again, once they are tied. One could only loosen them using 100 newtons. P38 went on to explain that the bus arrived at Al-Khatib Branch in Damascus after around 20 minutes. He added that he knew the area very well. They drove for around 14 kilometers and entered the Branch from the back.

Judge Wiedner asked P38 whether he could tell that it was Al-Khatib Branch when they arrived or if his eyes were blindfolded. P38 said his eyes were only covered with his shirt. He added that fourteen or fifteen other people were in the same bus. He met them at Douma branch where they introduced themselves, that was how they got to know each other. P38 told the court that he knew the city very well because as a medical technician, he often had to work at the Red Crescent Hospital. He also had to work at [information redacted] which was close to Al-Khatib Branch. According to P38, he was not completely blind as he was able to see through his shirt and knew the area very well.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened after they arrived at the Branch. P38 said the bus entered the Branch and stopped at a parking lot where several vehicles were parked. P38 sat at the very back of the bus in the last row with around fourteen people in front of him. He said he was well aware that everyone would be beaten. However, he received less beating as he was the last one to leave the bus. P38 described that when they left the bus, their hands were tied behind their backs. As soon as P38 put one foot on the ground, he received beatings on his back and ‘rolled on the floor like a ball.’ As he was the last one to leave the bus, he bumped into a friend [walking in front of him]. P38 said he faced the tires of the bus. The detainees then had to sit on the floor with their heads down. According to P38, many people celebrated a ‘welcoming party’. They all received sticks to beat people.

P38 remembered that it was pouring rain on that day. The parking lot where they arrived was covered and the rain fell on the roof. P38 said this [welcoming party] lasted for around one hour, maybe less. They were beaten with all kinds of tools, kicked with military boots, beaten with bare hands and maybe some kind of cable. After one hour they were taken inside the building, to the basement that was around five or six steps downstairs. P38 described how they arrived at a room from where one could go to other rooms. He was taken to a 9 m<sup>2</sup> big room next to a staircase that was around one meter wide. When they were taken to the cells, they were around fourteen or fifteen people. P38 described that a cell door was right in front of him. There was a 15 cm gap between the door and the floor. P38 recalled that he was not blindfolded on this occasion. All detainees had to sit in front of this door. The door was right in front of P38, and he could tell that there were detainees behind the door because he could see their feet. P38 said that guards were standing behind the detainees [who had to wait in front of the door], beating them for around thirty minutes.

P38 recalled that he was sitting right next to the door with one person next to him to his right side and a guard standing behind him. When P38 saw the feet of the people behind the door, he tried to tickle them, so people would start laughing and he would be able to hear them. According to P38, the beating lasted for around thirty minutes before one detainee had to stand in front of a desk on the left. A man was sitting behind the desk. He had thick [the translator was confused about P38’s choice of words, see explanation below] rather white hair and a mainly white beard that was not longer than 1 cm. The man was wearing thick glasses and another person next to him was taking notes. P38 further described that a soldier who was standing in front of the desk searched the detainees. They had to come to the desk one after the other. P38 said they got their documents back which they had to hand-in in Douma. The people behind the desk were apparently writing down the detainee’s personal information. P38 was the last detainee to come to the desk. P38 described that whoever was called to the desk had to undress until naked and squat three times.

P38 struggled to continue, so Presiding Judge Kerber offered him to take a break and encouraged him to drink some water that was standing in front of him.

***

The translator explained to the court that P38 was talking in Standard Arabic and his choice of words was therefore sometimes surprising. He added that when he translated “thick hair”, P38 meant “thick, full hair”.

Judge Wiedner continued his questioning by asking P38 where exactly he was taken after his arrival at the Branch, and how the basement and the cells looked like. P38 described that after they had to wait for thirty minutes and every detainee’s information had been noted, they were split to different cells. He explained to the court that when he had to provide his information [at the desk] there was a group cell on his right side, on his left, as well as behind him. There was a hallway behind the desk but P38 did not know where it led to. He went on to describe that he had to take off his clothes, provide personal information, and his cash was confiscated and registered. P38 carried USD with him, and was therefore slapped in his face by the person who took the notes. This person told P38 that the amount of cash he carried would be more than his annual salary.

Wiedner intervened, asking if P38 carried a lot of cash with him. P38 said he had around $3,155 and 850 Syrian Pounds.

Wiedner wanted to know if he got the money back on his release. P38 affirmed, adding he got it back just like it was when he had to hand it in.

P38 continued to describe how he was taken to the cell behind him where he was unable to stand, and where it was hot and had a strong smell. The cell was not bigger than 25 m<sup>2</sup> with more than 100 people inside. P38 said the cell had a high temperature as well as high humidity. One could only squat but not lie down or anything. There was only one toilet inside the cell and the water was always running. One had to queue to use the toilet. P38 further said there were many injured and sick people in the cell. He said that this is what he experienced during his first night there. Regarding food, P38 explained that they were only given one flatbread that was two or three days old and therefore inedible. Alongside the bread, they got around 4 kilograms of Bulgur in one big vessel. When they had to split it between the detainees in the cell, everyone only got one spoon of Bulgur. P38 said if he remembered correctly, the food was allocated in the afternoon and a second time around five or six hours later. According to P38, the second round of food included half a flatbread and one to four olives. The olives were however green and very bitter. P38 concluded that this would be everything he could say about the food. He added that there was no medical care. There were diabetic and many injured people in his cell. According to P38, however, one did not have to spend much time in this cell. People were soon divided between different Branches according to what they were accused of.

Wiedner wanted to know more about sick and injured people that P38 saw in his cell. P38 described to the court that a detainee who sat next to him, [name redacted] from [information redacted] who worked as a civil engineer was diabetic and asked the guards for pills. P38 said this person's toes were rotten. P38 therefore took off his undershirt and ripped it. The inmate put his feet on P38's legs and P38 cleaned his toes. P38 said he was detained with this person for 18 days before he was transferred somewhere else. P38 went on to explain that there was another sick person. He was 20 years-old and from [information redacted]. He was taken to the cell at night, and one could see from his fingers that they were broken by military boots. His fingers were blue, and he was injured on his upper arm. P38 said the inmates asked this person how he was arrested. He told them that his home was searched, and he wanted to escape. He was later caught and arrested.

Wiedner asked if P38 remembered a paralyzed person. P38 recalled that there was a young man, around the same age as P38. He was working as a [information redacted]. P38 recalled the other detainee, [name redacted], he brought this detainee to the cell and introduced him, saying his name and that he was from [information redacted]. P38 recalled that this detainee lost his mind. He was urinating and shitting [the translator was confused about P38's choice of words here] at the same spot. He could not stand on his own feet. P38 said this person was paralyzed and went crazy due to the torture. Fellow detainees had to carry him to the toilet several times and clean him. P38 added that as soon as they got food, this person was able to eat all of it, he was never filled.

Wiedner wanted to know if P38 was interrogated, how he was interrogated, and what happened during the interrogations. P38 said he was interrogated on six days. The first interrogation was on the second day after he arrived. He was interrogated ten times in total with short breaks in between. P38 added that he was interrogated for four and for six days. He was arrested because somebody said something about him. P38 explained to the court that he was working in a team that was equipping hospitals in Damascus and all over Syria. There were engineers and doctors in the team. One of the doctors, an orthopedist called [name redacted], was also detained at Al-Khatib Branch. P38 added that he would however not be able to come to Germany to testify.

Wiedner asked what happened to P38 during his interrogations. P38 replied that he just wanted to talk for another thirty seconds, saying that his friend was detained in Al-Khatib Branch and tortured by Anwar Raslan himself. This person, a doctor, was slapped by Anwar Raslan during an interrogation.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, asking how P38 knew about that. P38 said this person is his friend and they would be in constant contact.

Kerber explained that the court would be more interested in P38's own experiences. What he heard from others would only be of secondary importance. Kerber added she knows that it is horrible to remember such thing but asked P38 to try and remember nevertheless because it would be important for the court. P38 said he only mentioned this because he wanted to remind the Accused of this situation. According to P38, Raslan said "you traitor now you recognized me" when P38's friend's blindfold fell off after he was slapped. [P38's counsel spoke to him for a minute]

Judge Wiedner wanted to know if P38 himself saw Raslan during his detention in Al-Khatib Branch. P38 said he did not see Anwar Raslan in Al-Khatib or any other Branch. He added that when one was taken for interrogation, he was blindfolded and only able to see his feet when going upstairs.

Wiedner wanted to know about P38's interrogation, about the questions he was asked, and whether he was mistreated. He said he wanted to know more about how the interrogation was conducted. P38 said one interrogation took place on the same floor [as the cells]. He was taken out of his cell, had to turn right and go upstairs a few steps. He was only wearing shorts and had to kneel on the floor when the interrogation started. He said that the interrogator obviously had nothing against him except for the written note. P38 was asked about his work and how many ER's he had equipped. He denied everything and was beaten from behind every time he denied something. P38 added that one's back was constantly beaten/tortured during an interrogation. He had to kneel on the floor. The floor was covered with water. He was asked questions about hospitals and armament of revolutionists. P38 said he had nothing to do with that. His work was only related to medical aid.

Wiedner asked if the interrogator gave orders to beat P38. P38 explained that he was interrogated over ten days in total. On six days he was interrogated twice per day, and on four days he was interrogated once per day. P38 said he thinks that several interrogations took place in different locations. One time, when he was interrogated on one of the upper floors, the interrogator told him to cooperate and provide information about what was happening in his hometown. P38 always said he had nothing to do with these people and that he would be on neither side. When he was offered to cooperate, he refused. The interrogator then told the person behind P38 "Take this animal and explain to him what the matter is and how he is supposed to cooperate." P38 said he was then kicked in his genitals and fell on the floor due to the pain. P38 explained that he did not know who kicked him, however, he was kicked after the interrogator gave the instruction he just recalled. P38 recalled that he was beaten at every interrogation but did not know by whom. After 18 days he was transferred to another Branch.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the German police that the interrogation officer sometimes gave coded instructions to torture. For example, he said 'it seems like he does not want to cooperate'. P38 explained to the police that he was beaten immediately after that. It was not a direct order but an invitation to torture. P38 affirmed, adding that the time he was tortured most, was when the interrogation officer said the sentence he just repeated in court.

Wiedner recalled P38 mentioning that the floor was covered in water and asked him to explain what happened. P38 said that he had to kneel during interrogations. He felt that the floor was wet and sometimes he felt his body was shaking.

Wiedner asked where that came from. P38 said it came from the floor.

Wiedner asked if P38 received electroshocks or whether it was something else. P38 said it might have been electroshocks. However, they were relatively weak and conducted via the water.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the police that the floor was connected to electricity which then went to his body. P38 confirmed, adding that the power was however not high.

Wiedner wanted to know if P38 was mistreated in Al-Khatib by other means as well. P38 explained that in Al-Khatib Branch, one would mainly be beaten on his back with cables or beaten with plastic tubes. He added that the slaps in his face and on his ear were the worst.

Wiedner asked if there was something special about the cables. P38 said the cables were a torture tool. He described them as electric cables from KKM with a one-centimeter diameter. The cables were coated with plastic, metal, and another layer of plastic. P38 added that he was beaten with these cables several times.

Wiedner asked if the metal part projected from the coating. P38 said he did not know.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were other means of mistreatment such as hanging. P38 said detainees were usually hanged inside the cell.

Asked by Judge Wiedner, P38 described that if there was for example a tumult inside the cell, guards would enter the cell and pick one of the detainees. The guards then stood opposite of this person, tied his hands and put them up at the door. P38 said there was a small metal hatch at the door where people were hanged on their hands, with their wrists tied with plastic cable strips. The feet of this person would barely touch the floor. P38 said that detainees were left in this position for a longer time until the door was opened again. He added that the door was opened to the outside and every time it was opened, the person hanging there would bump into the wall.

Wiedner asked how many times this happened to P38. P38 said it happened many times, often. [The court interpreter intervened, saying he correctly translated that the question as referring to P38 himself, but it seems as if P38 did not understand.]

Wiedner asked how many times P38 himself was hanged. P38 said it was maybe one time.

Wiedner asked how many times this happened to other detainees. P38 said it was on a daily basis.

Wiedner recalled that P38 told the BKA about Doulab and asked him to describe what is meant by that and if it happened to him. P38 said he would not remember.

P38's counsel spoke to him and requested a short break.

***

Presiding Judge Kerber said the judges would only have a few additional questions before the lunch break.

Judge Wiedner asked when P38 was detained. P38 said he was arrested on [information redacted], 2012.

Wiedner said he had a question about the detention conditions, recalling that P38 mentioned that more than 100 people were detained in one cell. Wiedner asked P38 how big this cell was. P38 said it was not bigger than 25 or 30 m<sup>2</sup>.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the police that the cell measured 5x10 meters, asking if that would be possible. P38 said he could barely estimate, however, he does not think that it was ten meters. He explained that the door was on the wider side, and he was opposite of the door. Around four people sat to his right and seven to eight people sat to his left. P38 concluded that the cell was therefore only six meters wide.

Wiedner wanted to know how people were drinking inside the cell. P38 said they had four or five bottles or plastic cans with around 1.5 liters volume. They filled these with water from the tab at the toilet. He added that there was a tab at the toilet with a hose where the water was running nonstop. That was the water they drank in the cell.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the BKA that they got water from a tab using a big bottle, and that there was only one bottle in the cell. P38 told the court that he could not remember the exact number, but there were many detainees. P38 said he personally drank water from the tab when he used the toilet.

Wiedner wanted to know more about heat and other conditions in the cell, recalling that P38 told the BKA that it was hot inside the cell due to the sewage pipe and the pipe for hot water. He described that it was 35 degrees Celsius inside the cell, and condensation water was dripping from the ceiling. P38 confirmed to the court that there were two different pipes: one was the heating pipe just above the floor and the other pipe was at the ceiling but did not carry heat. P38 added that the humidity inside the cell was unbearable.

Wiedner asked about bugs and skin diseases. P38 affirmed that there were bugs in the cell. He was not wearing his glasses in the cell as they were confiscated. He held the bugs on his body with his fingers and handed them to fellow detainees to kill them. P38 added that lice were everywhere.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the BKA that many detainees suffered scabies. P38 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P38 saying that he was interrogated multiple times, asking whether all interrogations took place upstairs as P38 previously mentioned, or if some happened in the basement area where the cells were. P38 said he had to go upstairs for interrogations, around four times. But there were also interrogations downstairs: he had to leave the cell, take some steps upstairs, then five or six steps up, and turn right. P38 said he assumes this room was very small because he could hear feedback from the walls.

Wiedner asked if P38 could hear other people being tortured while he was detained in the cell. P38 said he could hear that daily. It was a normal thing. There were so many people [detainees], interrogations never ended.

Wiedner said he quickly wanted to talk about consequences of mistreatment for P38. He cited from the BKA's transcript according to which P38 described that due to the welcoming party, his face was swollen so much, he could barely open his eyes because the guards grabbed him by his hair and slapped him in the face. P38 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if P38 suffered any other physical consequences from being mistreated in Al-Khatib Branch. P38 explained that the detention was nine years ago, and the visible signs disappeared. He might still have a scar on his upper leg. He added that due to being kicked in his genitals, he had difficulties to urinate due to injuries in that area. P38 described that for days after he was kicked in his genitals, he urinated blood. He added that he could not describe the torture: One could feel the first beat, and the second one. However, after that one would not feel anything. P38 said he felt paralyzed afterwards and could not remember details.

Wiedner said it would be OK, asking P38 whether he lost weight right after his detention due to being detained. P38 said it would be normal that one loses weight after only getting one flatbread to eat for one month. One simply had to lose weight in this situation. P38 added that if there was a Guinness World Record for losing weight, the Syrian prisons would win.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the BKA that he lost so much weight after 18 days, he ripped his shorts and used them as a belt. P38 recalled telling the court that he ripped his undershirt to clean a fellow detainee's toes. He then took parts of the undershirt to use it as a belt. P38 added he used his undershirt, not his shorts.

Wiedner went on to ask what P38 was able to perceive at the hospitals. He asked P38 whether he saw people being mistreated, adding he wanted to know what P38 witnessed himself and if so, when that was. P38 said it was in 2012 as this was when he worked as medical technician. He had contacts at different hospitals. He fixed things and equipped state-owned hospitals. He was at hospitals in the southern part of Damascus.

Wiedner wanted to know what the hospital was called. P38 said it was called [information redacted]. He was called to the hospital several times. P38 described the hospital had a section where postmortem examinations were carried out. This section had a separate entry. P38 said he was called there several times to fix certain devices. One time, he was told to fix the lightning at the ER. When he came, he saw a corpse that had been examined. He did not know who this was or why he was there. P38 said he quickly finished reparations, adding that this was all he could see there.

Wiedner asked if P38 noticed any specifics about the corpse. P38 said he assumed the inner organs were missing. He later heard that organ trafficking was very common. He added that he would, however, not be an expert to say the organs were missing for sure.

Wiedner recalled P38 telling the BKA that the corpse's face was injured, as to why he assumed that the person might have been arrested. P38 affirmed.

Wiedner asked if P38 witnessed detainees being taken to hospitals. P38 said he witnessed the transfer of detainees to a hospital in Damascus. According to P38, one could not say that this hospital was made for civilians but rather was an emergency unit. There were more armed people than civilians. P38 said one would only be allowed to look, but not to talk. P38 said he and others knew that injured people were taken there after demonstrations and then disappeared.

Wiedner wanted to know if P38 saw that or heard from others. P38 explained he knows one person whom he took there. He first took the person to a private doctor and then to Al-Mojtahed. The person was missing ever since. P38 added he knew this person and his parents.

Wiedner asked if P38 personally witnessed mistreatment at hospitals. P38 explained that the hospitals would be transformed into some kind of intelligence Branch. If one leaves an intelligence Branch, he is blindfolded and if something happens there, one gets beaten.

Wiedner wanted to know if P38 saw something like that. P38 said he personally saw people being beaten by security forces at hospitals.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the judges had no further questions. Witness/plaintiff counsel Scharmer asked if other parties had questions for his client. Prosecutor Polz said they only had a few questions, approximately ten minutes. Defense counsel Böcker said he must talk to his colleague first, but assumes they also had only a few questions.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Polz thanked P38 for coming to court and asked him whether he was a victim of sexualized violence during his detention. P38 denied.

Polz asked if he heard about others being victims of sexualized violence. P38 denied.

Polz went on to ask whether P38 saw dead people during his detention or people who were so severely injured that one could assume they would die due to the lack of medical care. P38 said he saw injured people but did not know what happened to them afterwards.

Polz asked if he saw dead people. P38 denied.

Prosecutor Klinge recalled P38 mentioning an emergency/crisis meeting of the Syrian government after the beginning of the revolution and asked P38 to describe this in more detail. P38 did not understand the question. Klinge explained that P38 told the BKA about an emergency/crisis meeting, and asked him to describe this in more detail: whether it was a permanent institution or rather a one-time meeting. P38 explained that the actual name would be 'crisis cell'. It was a group of leading officials from the ministry of defense who formed this council to deal with the country's issues at that time. P38 specified that he did not mean the country's issues in general but the protests. He said there was an explosion at one of their meetings where several members, officers were killed. P38 added that this would be all he knows. [The court interpreter in charge of simultaneous interpretation for the Accused intervened, explaining that the term 'crisis cell' would be the common abbreviation for the so-called Central Crisis Management Cell (CCM).]

Klinge wanted to know who the members were. P38 said the members were known. Amongst others the Minister of Interior, the Minister of Defense. P38 said the government reported about this. The state-owned media covered the explosion. There was information in the media.

Klinge asked if P38 got all information from the media. P38 affirmed, adding that every Syrian would know that.

Klinge recalled P38 telling the police that he demonstrated at an early stage, asking P38 about the reactions to protests by the Syrian government. P38 explained that he did not participate in these demonstrations, adding that the translation at the police might be wrong. He personally saw and experienced demonstrations and people being killed. However, he did not participate.

Klinge wanted to know where these demonstrations took place, how and where people were killed. P38 described that ‘all that’ did not start in the form of demonstrations but as a strike in Al-Harira after a merchant was beaten by the police. Then the issue with the kids in Dara’a happened. P38 said the kids’ nails were ripped off because they painted slogans on a wall.

Klinge asked when the incident with the kids in Dara’a happened. P38 said it was at the beginning of the demonstrations in spring 2011. Most of the demonstrations took place in Al-Midan in Damascus. P38 said he saw these demonstrations when he was working at the [information redacted] hospital as a medical technician. According to P38, the hospital was situated on a higher point, and he was working at one of the upper levels, so he could see the demonstrations.

P38 explained that the incident where he witnessed people being killed happened in [information redacted]. He could not remember the exact date, but it was a special occasion for Christians, Good Friday. P38 was on his way to his family driving his car, when he reached a checkpoint in the middle of the street leading to the farm. This was right opposite of a demonstration that was happening not in a city, but rather on a field. P38 had to leave his car when he saw people shooting at demonstrators. P38 said the shots were fired from a vehicle aiming at the demonstrators. He saw how people fell on the floor around 300 or 400 meters from where he was. P38 described that he had to lie down on his stomach when he left his car. When he turned, he saw another person lying next to him. This person was dressed in white; it was [name redacted]. He was [information redacted]. P38 said he spoke to him, and he told P38 that he was prohibited from going to the other side where an ambulance was waiting. P38 concluded that people were being shot but the ambulance was not allowed to go there and help them. He later learned that eight people were killed and many injured because the people were not taken to a state-owned hospital but to field hospitals that were set up in [information redacted]. P38 said that all injured people were from this town and had no weapons. They received medical treatment for a long time. P38 said he supervised the medical care and sent doctors. Some of the injured people had to undergo surgery. This was done by [name redacted] who now lives in Iraq. P38 said that this was when he personally saw demonstrators being shot. He also witnessed demonstrations in Damascus, Al-Midan, however, no one was shot there.

Presiding Judge Kerber said Good Friday was on April 22, 2011.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P38 in which year this happened. P38 said it was in 2012.

Klinge asked if it was 2012 or 2011. P38 said it was 2012, explaining that there was no shooting at the beginning in 2011. The demonstrations started in spring and Good Friday was at springtime. It therefore had to be Good Friday in 2012.

Klinge recalled that P38 did not see Raslan in Al-Khatib Branch, asking when he learned about Raslan’s existence. P38 said he heard about him when he was in Syria but did not see him. P38 recalled that when he was interrogated upstairs, he could hear the interrogator talking. The interrogator and the guard had a conversation when the interrogator said “teach the animal”. P38 said he thinks that is what he heard and the words “make his night dark”. [The court interpreter said this would translate to German as ‘make life hell’]. P38 explained that kids in Syria would learn Standard Arabic in school but there would be many different dialects. He could tell from the dialect used for the word ‘dark’ that the person was from the middle of Syria. P38 added that he only saw Raslan in court.

Klinge wanted to know when P38 first heard about Raslan: before or after his arrest on [information redacted], 2012. P38 said it was known that Raslan was working at this Branch because one knows where each officer would work. P38 said he knew Raslan's name before his detention.

Klinge asked if P38 also knew Raslan's position. P38 denied.

Klinge wanted to know if P38 knew at which Branch Raslan was working. P38 affirmed, adding he knew before his interrogation that Raslan was working at Al-Khatib Branch.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Defense counsel Fratzky recalled that P38 knew about Raslan before his interrogation and asked if P38 also told the police about other different people at the Branch. P38 affirmed, saying that there would be a certain hierarchy at different Branches. But people in Syria often knew about specific officers.

Fratzky recalled P38 telling the police that Tawfiq Younes was the head of Al-Khatib Branch, but he would say that Hafez Makhoulf was actually leading the Branch because of his Branch in Jisr al-Abyad and being a cousin to Bashar Al-Assad. P38 confirmed, saying that Hafez Makhoulf played a very important role as cousin of the president. He is well known in Syria and was in charge, according to P38.

Fratzky asked P38 to be more concrete regarding Hafez Makhoulf's power at Al-Khatib Branch. P38 said he does not know because he could not know as he was not an employee of the Branch.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

P38's counsel Scharmer recalled P38 telling the police that he received electroshock at his earlobes and nipples, when asked about torture methods he had to endure himself. P38 affirmed, adding that he was arrested more than once and detained at Al-Khatib Branch and the Air Force Intelligence.

Scharmer said P38 told the police that this happened at Al-Khatib, asking whether that was correct. P38 said he could not remember exactly but he was tortured like that. There was a small device with electroshocks exiting at the front of the device. The device was then put on his ear or nipples. P38 added that in Al-Khatib Branch there was water on the floor through which electroshocks were given.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked where P38 received electroshocks on his ear and nipples. She added that if P38 did not remember, he could tell the court. P38 said he did not remember whether that happened in Al-Khatib Branch or at the Air Force Intelligence.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked P38 for his testimony and told him that he was free to go or stay in the court room.

P38's counsel said he would reserve to make a comment on ground §257 II StPO.

P38 was dismissed as a witness. He thanked the court for its attention, adding that he hopes all Syrian war criminals will get their just penalty. He took a seat in the public audience.

Administrative Matters

Judge Kerber continued to explain administrative issues. She said that a person who previously requested to join as a plaintiff had now been questioned by the BKA and the BKA sent the transcript of the questioning without Annexes. She told the parties they could make relevant statements until July 6, also including statement on the admission of a counsel if applicable.

Judge Kerber went on to explain that the court initially summoned a different witness for this day and the following day. This witness told the judges in May that he would not come to testify in court. However, the witness recently approached the judges asking for a phone call. Judge Wiedner with the help of one of the court interpreters spoke to the witness on the phone. The witness then said he would be willing to testify. Kerber said the witness will shortly receive summons for September 2 & 3. Kerber went on to describe that BKA officer Knappmann who was summoned for the following day was initially summoned to testify on his questioning of the above-mentioned witness. As this would now be redundant, Knappmann would instead testify regarding his questioning of witness [name redacted/FR18] who had also been questioned by the French Police. However, the relevant officer would not be willing to testify in court. Kerber added that the court would provide a summary of the relevant communication and proceedings, intending to read out the German translation of the transcript of the questioning by the French Police.

Kerber handed over to defense counsel Böcker who recently informed the court about an amendment to his request. Böcker explained that after having submitted his request to inspect certain files, he noticed on his way home that these files would not be with the court. He therefore amended his request to include that the files had to be transferred from the Federal Prosecutor General.

Judge Kerber asked if any of the parties wanted to provide a statement on this amendment. Prosecutor Klinge explained that one could only inspect files that were not relevant to the present case if there was justified interest, and asked Böcker to specify his request in this regard. Klinge went on to describe that the office of the Federal Prosecutor General had been conducting a structural investigation regarding the Syrian conflict since 2011. He assured Böcker that the prosecutors would forward all incriminating as well as exculpatory evidence from these files. If this would not be sufficient for Böcker, he should specify his request. Klinge concluded that more than 100 witnesses were heard, open-source information was gathered, and mutual legal assistance requests were issued. Inspecting the file of an entire structural investigation would simply be impossible.

Böcker said he had no doubts that the prosecutors would act like that and forward all relevant information. However, last week's witness testimony showed that there is a possibility of certain testimonies not being considered. According to Böcker, some testimonies might still be somewhere on this file. He added that he would leave his request as it was for now, as he will be on vacation for the next four weeks. He hoped that the court would grant his request, if not, he would make relevant amendments.

Klinge replied that Böcker needs to make a sufficient claim that there was a justified interest for him to inspect the entire case file of the structural investigation. There would be nothing of interest on this case file from the prosecutors' point of view and nothing of relevance to the present case happened. He offered to let someone go through everything to double-check and see whether there would be additional witnesses.

Böcker added that the court already heard many things that were not directly relevant to the case, for example testimonies regarding events in 2007. He would prefer to go through the case file himself.

Klinge added that it would simply be impossible for Böcker to go through the entire structural investigation.

Böcker asked what he had to expect from the file regarding amount/size. Klinge said Böcker would not be the only person interested in the Federal Prosecutor General's case file on the structural investigation, there would be a huge interest from others as well.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:55PM.

The trial will continue on July 01, 2021.

Day 80 of Trial – July 1, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:50AM with five spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists requested access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff counsels Bahns and Dr. Kroker were not present.

Presiding Judge Kerber opened the session by recalling that witness [name redacted] [FR18] was questioned by the German and French Police. She added that the judges already summarized their email conversation with FR18 on a previous trial day [May 19]. FR18 eventually informed the court in writing on May 11, 2021, that he would not come to testify in court. The judges therefore summoned the respective officer who led the questioning on behalf of the BKA.

Testimony of Christian Knappmann

Knappmann was informed about his rights and duties as a witness, and his personal information as again confirmed.

Judge Kerber first asked Knappmann to tell the court about his questioning of FR18. Knappmann explained that FR18 was questioned by him and a colleague on [information redacted]. FR18 was previously questioned by the French police in 2017. At that time, he said that he was detained thrice as he was an activist. During his third detention, he was in Al-Khatib Branch and Division 40 for a couple days. The German Federal Prosecutor General therefore tasked the BKA to question FR18 again. According to Knappmann, FR18 would now be 33 years-old and stated at his first questioning that he studied law in Syria and France. Knappmann explained that he and his colleague quickly doublechecked FR18's personal information, he added to their questioning that he was working for an organization [information redacted]. Knappmann said they did not plan to ask all the same questions as their French colleague already did. FR18 further told them at the beginning of their interview, at 10AM, that he would only be available until 2:30PM. Knappmann and his colleague therefore did not ask all questions as initially planned. The questioning was started by presenting FR18 the BKA's selection of photos that they regularly used for people to identify Anwar Raslan. Knappmann said FR18 did not recognize anyone in the pictures and did not identify Anwar Raslan in any of the pictures. FR18 only knew Raslan's name from the media.

Knappmann described how FR18 provided his view on the BKA's investigations in this case on his own initiative. He told Knappmann and his colleague that he was unsatisfied with the arrests of Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib because they would send a wrong signal to the Syrian opposition, and be demotivating for possible defectors. According to FR18, Germany and France would be accomplices of the Syrian regime. Knappmann said FR18 explained three times that he accused Raslan of certain crimes, but thought his arrest was wrong. He also mentioned a list of alternative suspects who should be arrested, because they would still be on the side of the Syrian regime. Knappmann told the court he explained to FR18 that the BKA would need sufficient evidence to make any arrests, and if he was in possession of such evidence, he could send it to them. Knappmann said he explained the legal situation to FR18, however, FR18 never got back to them regarding any evidence.

Knappmann recalled he then presented FR18 the BKA's selection of photos for Eyad Al-Gharib. FR18 did not recognize anyone, and told the BKA that he only heard Al-Gharib's name for the first time after he was arrested in Germany. FR18 further explained that he was working with contacts at the Syrian Intelligence Services, some of them at Al-Khatib Branch. This cooperation was unveiled and FR18 heard from friends that [name redacted] was arrested and died in detention.

Judge Kerber intervened saying the judges had an additional question. Judge Wiedner said regarding FR18's remarks, he wanted to know whether FR18 said anything about Raslan providing information to German authorities. Knappmann said FR18 told him Raslan forwarded information to German, French, and US authorities. He was granted asylum in Germany in return.

Wiedner asked if FR18 said how he knew that. Knappmann denied.

Wiedner further wanted to know whether FR18 said anything about his family in Syria. Knappmann explained that in context of his remarks on why he was unsatisfied with Raslan's arrest, FR18 told the BKA that he was concerned about the safety of his family who was still in Syria and the opposition activities.

Judge Kerber asked Knappmann to describe how FR18 was arrested. Knappmann recalled FR18 telling the French Police that he was arrested for the third time on [information redacted] 2012, and taken to Division 40 where he was tortured nonstop for two days. Knappmann explained that the BKA wanted to talk about Al-Khatib Branch. FR18 told them that he was transferred to Al-Khatib where he had to stay for four days before he was transferred to the headquarters of the Syrian General Intelligence Service in Kafar Souseh. Knappmann said that before that he and his colleague showed FR18 a picture of the building the BKA had identified as the headquarters of the General Intelligence Services (GID). FR18 identified the building as Al-Midan Branch which would be the headquarters of the GID.

Knappmann and his colleague then asked FR18 how he knew that he was at Division 40 and Al-Khatib. Regarding Division 40, FR18 explained that it was only three minutes from the demonstration. He was able to retrace the way there and knew the location. Regarding Al-Khatib, FR18 described that it happened at night, and it was dark. He had to put his head down and was beaten with a rifle butt. FR18 added that it would be normal that one was transferred from Division 40 to Al-Khatib, he said it would be tradition. He further explained that it was known that people would be arrested and detained like that. He already guessed at his arrest that he would end up in Al-Khatib Branch. This was then confirmed when he arrived at the cell there where he met two friends who told him that they were at Al-Khatib Branch.

Judge Kerber asked whether FR18 did not mention any names. Knappmann denied and went on to describe that FR18 did not know how many times he was interrogated but told the BKA that it happened many times when they asked him. When asked about what happened at interrogations, FR18 described that he was taken from the cell, blindfolded, and his hands were tied, and he was taken to a room. In this room, FR18 had to stand with his head down, wearing blindfolds and with his hand tied. A person was standing in front of him, asking questions. Two other people, FR18 could not locate them in the room, always beat him at every answer he gave. Regarding torture methods, FR18 said he was beaten with bare hands, fists, and sticks. He was beaten by the interrogation officer as well and received electric shock, particularly on his genitals and neck. Further, his hands were tied above his head, and he was hung by his wrists. FR18 called this method Shabeh, the Arabic term for ghost. Knappmann said FR18 told the BKA he had to hang for several hours. FR18 said he once refused to drink water. He was therefore forced to drink a lot of water and his penis was tied with a rubber band.

According to Knappmann, FR18 told the French police that this was horrible for him, and he was afraid to die.

Kerber asked about nicknames for guards. Knappmann said FR18 told the police that one guard was called 'Mimati', he was particularly brutal. That was everything FR18 said about nicknames, according to Knappmann.

Kerber wanted to know what FR18 told the BKA regarding dead people. Knappmann affirmed that FR18 said he saw dead people at Al-Khatib. FR18 had told the French police that he witnessed how a person had to endure Shabeh, was tortured and beaten, and died. Knappmann said when he asked FR18 what exactly happened, FR18 broke down and was apparently nervous. FR18 then explained that he received psychosocial treatment for two years. He did not want to talk about this event and skipped the question. Knappmann told him he could of course not force him but offered that the two could talk without Knappmann's female colleague being present and without the translator, in English. Knappmann further told FR18 that it would be possible that he will be asked about this event again, even in court. FR18 then requested a break and went straight to the toilet. Knappmann was under the impression that FR18 threw up based on physical signs such as FR18 shaking. He therefore decided to not ask any further questions about this incident. After five minutes, FR18 said he can confirm what he already told the French police about the incident: The person died of torture and was definitely dead. Knappmann said he then did not ask any more questions about this. They also had to end the questioning as they ran out of time.

Judger Kerber asked if FR18 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. Knappmann said of course.

Kerber asked if there were any issues with the translator. Knappmann explained that the witness wanted to testify in French. The BKA's translator spoke French and assisted accordingly. FR18 told Knappmann that he did not want to speak Arabic anymore and wished to move on from these experiences.

Kerber referred to FR18 mentioning before the questioning that he had an important appointment and asked Knappmann if this was the reason for the end of the questioning. Knappmann affirmed, adding that they started the re-translation but were not able to finish until 2:30PM. However, FR18 still wanted to go. They therefore agreed to complete the re-translation the next morning.

Kerber concluded that everything had been re-translated to FR18. Knappmann confirmed.

Kerber said FR18 told the French Police about two people who died. Knappmann affirmed that FR18 mentioned two people who possibly died. However, FR18 provided more specific information in the BKA's questioning: FR18 saw the second person at "Midan Branch", the GID headquarters. Knappmann added that there would be several Branches in this building, for example Branch 285. FR18 told the BKA that the person there was older. He was tortured and fell on the floor when he was beaten with the butt of a rifle. FR18 said he probably died.

Wiedner wanted to know when FR18's third arrest happened. Knappmann said it was on [REDACTED]

Wiedner referred to the end of the BKA's questioning where the transcript would be relatively short after the question about the dead people. Wiedner wanted to know whether Knappmann was under the impression that FR18 would not answer any further questions on that day or if they were simply running out of time. Knappmann explained that it was more important for him to continue the questioning at this point, however, they were simply running out of time. He added that this was all he would hear from FR18. FR18 refused to answer even after Knappmann stressed the great importance of his testimony. This [dead person at Al-Khatib Branch] was the one thing FR18 did not want to talk about.

Wiedner concluded that the end of the questioning was for two reasons. Knappmann affirmed, saying that if he felt that FR18 would have been willing to provide more information, he would have continued the questioning. As this was not the case, he started the re-translation.

Wiedner recalled Knappmann asking FR18 to describe how the person in Al-Khatib died and asked Knappmann what FR18 answered. Knappmann said FR18 told him the person died of torture.

Wiedner further wanted to know what FR18 replied when asked about whether he was sure that the person was dead. Knappmann said FR18 was absolutely sure. Knappmann added that FR18 previously told the French Police that the person was still hanging next to him when he was already dead. Knappmann said he therefore did not ask any further questions about that.

Wiedner recalled that FR18 wanted to return for the re-translation and asked Knappmann when this happened. Knappmann said they agreed that FR18 would come at 9:30, but he could not remember whether FR18 was on time. Nonetheless, the re-translation was completed by 10:37AM.

Wiedner asked if Knappmann tried to ask FR18 further questions when he returned for re-translation. Knappmann denied. Wiedner wanted to know why. Knappmann explained that he and his colleague initially had scheduled another questioning at that time which they had to move to a later time. A questioning could easily get very extensive. He therefore completed the re-translation and started the other questioning.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the atmosphere during the questioning, whether FR18 was nervous and if he answered spontaneously and authentic. Knappmann said he could not remember that FR18 was not credible at any time. FR18 was very clear in his opinion and criticized the German authorities for their investigations. Knappmann therefore did not have doubts about the incriminating statements that FR18 made.

Wiedner said he noticed from the transcript that FR18 extensively spoke about his own opinion and the arrests at the beginning, but then provided shorter answers before the questioning ended. Wiedner asked Knappmann how he felt about that. Knappmann explained that the death of FR18's fellow detainee was initially the most important aspect of the questioning for the BKA. Knappmann said he was very surprised that FR18 described his own torture and blocked when they wanted to talk about another person and even showed physical signs. Knappmann said he was surprised but it was obvious that FR18 would not answer any more questions.

Wiedner wanted to know if Knappmann believed FR18 [his refusal and physical reaction]. Knappmann affirmed.

Wiedner asked if FR18 showed any reaction when Knappmann explained to him that this would be relevant for a trial in court. Knappmann recalled that after he offered FR18 to talk about the matter without his female colleague and translator, FR18 did not show any reaction to Knappmann explaining to him the importance of his testimony for a trial in court. According to Knappmann, FR18 did not say that he did not want to come and testify in court, it was not clear that FR18 did not want to come.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the BKA tried to question FR18 again. Knappmann said he is not aware of any efforts in this regard. He added that although he does not have access to all files, he was sure that if the BKA would have tried to question FR18 again, he would have been involved.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Schulz said he had a ‘yes-or-no’ question regarding one of Knappmann’s notes to a file. Judge Kerber allowed Schulz to ask his question. Schulz recalled that Knappmann also questioned [name redacted]. Judge Kerber intervened, saying that the court would most likely get the chance to hear this witness personally. Schulz said he only wants to know about a relevant audio file, whether that would be available. Judge Kerber permitted Schulz to ask his question. Schulz said there would be a WhatsApp audio file including [name redacted] and Anwar Raslan. Knappmann explained he saved the file on a CD. The German translation would be available on Paper while the Arabic version [original] was saved on the CD. Knappmann said the CD and written translation should be on the case file.

Knappmann was dismissed as a witness.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to explain that because FR18 refused to testify in court, the judges wanted to summon the relevant French officer who questioned him. However, this was not possible. Kerber said she would now summarize the judges’ efforts to summon the French officer. Judge Wiedner added that he called an inspector from the BKA to contact their French colleagues and arrange a contact to the French officer.

Kerber said that on June 7, 2020 the BKA officer explained in an email to Judge Wiedner that he called his colleagues from the French War Crimes Unit and spoke about the questioning of FR18. The relevant colleague who led the questioning was no longer working for the French Police, but they assured they would try to contact him.

Kerber further said that Judge Wiedner received another email from the BKA officer on June 9, 2020, in which he explained that his French colleague told him that the relevant officer retired. She called him to ask if he was willing to testify in court, but he refused. The French colleague assured the BKA officer to look for another officer who was present at the questioning.

Kerber explained that Weidner received an email from the BKA officer on the same day, saying that the French colleague checked the transcript of the questioning and learned that there was only one officer present. If there would have been a second officer, it would be noted in the transcript. The BKA officer told Wiedner that the French colleagues would be unable to fix this issue.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the Judges therefore prepared to read out the German translation of the transcript of the French questioning. Prosecutor Klinge and Defense counsel Böcker agreed to it.

Court Decision on French Transcript Evidence

Judge Kerber read out the following court decision:

[The following section is based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court and does not represent a full or accurate copy of the decision.]

The Judges decided to read out the German translation of the French transcript of [FR18] questioning by the French Police on [information redacted] 2017, for the following reasons:

- 1) The witness cannot be questioned in court (§ 251 I (3) StPO). He was summoned twice and did not appear twice on January 6 & 7, 2021 and May 19 & 20, 2021.

Regarding his decision not to come in January, the witness explained that it would be mentally impossible for him to testify in court. He requested more time. The judges and the witness therefore agreed on a date in May. The witness was contacted via email multiple times. He eventually answered in May, saying that he would definitely not testify in court, and provided several reasons for his decision. He did not reply to further efforts to contact him and did not appear in court on the scheduled date.

- 2) A testimony of the French officer who had questioned the witness is not possible.

There was only one officer present at the questioning. This person now retired and did not agree to testify in court.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that one of the court interpreters is also a sworn in interpreter for French language. He had a copy of the French transcript as well as the written German translation in front of him to check the correctness of the German translation.

Reading of French Investigative Interview

[The following section is a recreation of the German translation of the French transcript, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

[FR18] was questioned by the War Crimes Unit of the French Police on [information redacted]. The witness provided his personal information (born on [information redacted]).

The interpreter was sworn in.

It was explained to FR18 that he was questioned due to investigations by French authorities that started after The French Foreign Minister received the so-called Caesar Files on [information redacted], 2015.

When asked about when he came to France, FR18 explained he entered France as a refugee via Jordan on [information redacted] 2012.

FR18 said he studies [information redacted].

He was asked whether he previously testified about the event in Syria. FR18 denied.

The French Police wanted to know when FR18 left Syria. FR18 said he left on April [information redacted], 2012.

He was further asked where in Syria he lived. FR18 explained he lived in Damascus, around 15 minutes north of the city center in a flat that belonged to his parents. He lived there alone.

When asked about his own and his parents' religion/ethnicity and his parents' jobs, FR18 said he is an atheist. His parents are Muslim Kurds and his father moved from [information redacted] to Damascus. FR18 further said that his father worked as a lawyer for the Minister of Health and would be in [information redacted] at the time of the questioning, just like two of FR18's brother and his sister.

The French Police wanted to know if FR18 went to university. FR18 affirmed, saying he studied [information redacted] in Syria but had to pause his studies due to the revolution and would now continue his studies in France.

FR18 was asked to explain his career path. FR18 said he worked for an organization [information redacted]. The organization worked to [information redacted]. FR18 led some workshops for this organization. He studied law from 2010 to 2011 when 'the events started'.

The French Police asked if FR18 was member of a political party in Syria. FR18, denied, explaining that it was mandatory for every person in Syria starting in 8th grade to be a member of the Ba'ath party. He explained that people were for example not allowed to take exams if they were not members of the party. FR18 therefore was a member of the party but rather opposed it. He supported the Declaration of the Damascene Youth. FR18 said he sympathized with that and participated in secret meetings regarding democracy. [information redacted] was one of the signatories of the Damascus Declaration in 2006.

When asked about relationships or being related to members of the [Syrian] government, FR18 denied.

FR18 was asked the same about security forces and militias; he again denied.

The French Police further wanted to know why FR18 left Syria. FR18 explained he was arrested thrice and afraid of another arrest. He said he was threatened to be eliminated the next time he would be arrested because he was a militant opposition member [Plaintiff counsel Scharmer intervened, saying the French term should be translated as activist rather than militant opposition member. The court interpreter confirmed.].

FR18 was further asked what happened to him when the protests started in 2011. FR18 explained that the protests started even earlier in Tunisia. He therefore gathered with around 15 friends in front of the Tunisian embassy, but they were chased away by the Intelligence Service. They did another gathering in front of the Egyptian embassy with around 100 protestors. FR18 recalled that a General told them he would chase the barbarians after them when they were singing revolutionist songs. They therefore had to leave the scenery. FR18 explained that someone in the US posted things on Facebook about arrests in Libya. He said that this was before the revolution and that there were more demonstrations once the revolution started.

The first was on March 15, 2011, and lasted around 25 minutes during which people shouted slogans. People were arrested at this demonstration, but there was another one the following day. FR18 said two people died at a demonstration in Dara'a and more demonstrations took place in Damascus. Security forces quelled a demonstration in front of the Umayyad Mosque. The same happened in Douma with two people dying. FR18 explained that the funerals on the following days turned into organized demonstrations. More people were arrested the following week, according to FR18. He said that demonstrations happened at every square in Damascus, and in front of mosques. FR18 said he was tasked to film the protests in Al-Midan. He was arrested at the end of April 2011. 40 other people were also arrested by Intelligence Services. They beat the people, registered their personal information and to them to a Branch in Midan close to the Al-Mojtahed Hospital.

FR18 further described that he was put in a cell, and was tortured, amongst others with electro shocks on a daily basis. He said he was not interrogated but denied having participated in the demonstration. Detainees were beaten with Kalashnikovs on their way to the toilet. A detainee next to FR18 fell on the floor from the beatings and might have died [for clarification see conversation at the end.]. According to FR18, one was beaten without a reason, and they did not get food. FR18 said that he only passed by the demonstration and was therefore released after three days. FR18 said he continued participating in demonstrations when a friend of him was arrested by security forces. FR18 went to his family to tell them about it.

FR18 explained to the French Police that he never stayed at the same place for more than two days. He founded a group to organize and film demonstrations and participated in secret meetings with the group's leaders in Aleppo, Damascus, Raqqa, and Deir ez-Zor. FR18 said they were afraid of a conflict.

He was arrested a second time on [information redacted] 2011, at a café in Damascus together with eleven friends due to a spy. FR18 said they were taken to a Branch close to the Central Bank where he was interrogated for two months. He was tortured with Falaga and electric shocks for the first two days and resisted for eight days before he started a hunger strike. FR18 recalled that the detainees were able to arrange the release of two women who then informed everybody about everything that had happened. FR18 further explained that he could take his blindfolds off. He was interrogated by a person named Tarek for the first eleven times. The person in charge was Colonel Wisam Ismander. FR18 was taken from his cell by Wisam on the 29th day, beaten with cables and tortured with electro shocks, because they found out that the two women were militant activists. FR18 said torture was used as a penalty. He recalled being arrested together with his friends and that he was tortured for one hour to provide information about his friends. When he refused, he was tortured. FR18 said he was detained in a solitary cell for 40 days before he pretended to be crazy, so he would be transferred to a collective cell. The number of detainees in the collective cell varied, depending on whether there were big arrests. It was sometimes empty when people were taken somewhere else and sometimes overcrowded after big arrests, however, the amount of food was sufficient. FR18 added that it was different after 2012 when the food was less and the detention conditions worse.

He said he was transferred to Adra prison after he was presented to a judge. He was transferred there together with [information redacted]. FR18 described the prison as 5* prison. He added that he was released, presumably after a presidential amnesty. He told the French Police that he assumed his friends were released for the same reason. FR18 went to Damascus after his release. He said the FSA at the time bombed cities. He met the FSA in Al-Zabadani and reported about them. He liked what they were doing and accompanied them as foreign journalist, a war reporter, in Homs and Idlib. FR18 said there was heavy military in Damascus, and he stayed in Al-Zabadani for one month. The government retook the city in February 2012. The FSA stayed but FR18 went to Damascus during the fighting. In Damascus, he organized demonstrations on the occasion of the first anniversary of the revolution.

FR18 told the French Police that he was arrested the third time on March [information redacted], 2012. He was arrested by Hafez Makhoul's Division 40 in Jisr al-Abyad close to the French or Italian hospital. He was tortured there nonstop for two days. FR18 described that he was tortured with electro shocks, he was blindfolded and beaten and fell unconscious. He was then woken up with water. He said there was simply no break. He further explained to the French police that he had taken a dead soldier's identity some time before that. The people at Division 40 tried to force him to confess that he was actually [name redacted], but FR18 kept denying. He was then transferred to Al-Khatib. FR18 explained to the French Police that this was the usual procedure [being transferred from Division 40 to Al-Khatib]. He stayed at Al-Khatib for 4 days and was tortured as well. He was detained in a collective cell together with 150 other detainees. FR18 recalled being tortured with Shabeh for around one day. He said he was also forced to drink water before his penis was tied. FR18 said he thought he would die at this moment, but he did not say anything. On the fourth day, he was transferred to Midan Branch and the Al-Mojtahed Hospital where he was tortured for six days. FR18 said his fingernails were ripped off but he kept denying everything. He then decided to have lost his mind: He kept smiling while receiving electric shocks. The people there wanted to take a picture of him, but he was always smiling. He was therefore beaten. FR18 said he stayed in a solitary cell and was released at the end of March 2012. He then went to Jordan.

The French Police asked FR18 who decided about his arrests. FR18 said he did not know, adding that Branches of the intelligence services were working against demonstrations. They carried out big arrests. FR18 recalled being arrested together with eleven friends at a café. He said they were questioned by Colonel Wisam, who allegedly died by the time of the French police questioning. FR18 further explained that he did not see a rightful judge when he was detained at the security branches. He only saw a judge when he was transferred to Adra prison.

FR18 was asked whether his relatives were informed about his whereabouts. FR18 denied, adding that no one would be informed about such things. The detainees themselves would not know where they are.

The French Police wanted to know names of officers or soldiers. FR18 said he only knows the names Tarak and Wisam. He added he would not know any other names because he was blindfolded.

FR18 was asked if he witnessed killings during his detention. FR18 affirmed, saying that an elderly person died from Shabeh at Al-Khatib Branch. His body was kept hanging before he was eventually taken away. Another person most likely died because he was beaten with a Kalashnikov on the way to the toilet. FR18 said he did not witness any execution, people rather died due to mistreatment. He added that there were horrible means of torture such as drilling people's feet. FR18 said his blindfolds were sometimes taken off to show him tortured detainees as a warning.

When asked about French detainees at the Branch, FR18 denied knowing of any.

The French Police further mentioned the names of several binational French citizens, asking FR18 whether he knows anything about them. FR18 denied.

FR18 was further asked if he knew people being present in France or the EU who were responsible for committing war crimes. FR18 denied.

He was then asked if he knew people in France who witnessed such crimes. FR18 affirmed, saying he would contact them and ask if they were willing to testify.

When asked whether he wanted to add anything, FR18 said he hopes his testimony would be useful for holding criminals accountable.

FR18 confirmed the correctness of the transcript after the re-translation on the same day.

Prosecutor Klinge asked whether the French term translated to German as "militant activist" should rather be translated as activist. The court interpreter confirmed Klinge's suggestion.

Klinge further asked about the term translated as intelligence service. The translator said the correct translation would be state security.

The translator further added that it was translated a person 'might have died' however the correct translation would be he dies for sure. The translator also explained that the name 'Tarak' was spelled incorrectly and the name of FR18's father would be wrong as well.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said he would be ready to make his statement as mentioned yesterday [see context end of previous trial day]. Scharmer said it would be obvious that traumatized witnesses and survivors had a limited ability to memorize things. This would have been shown by yesterday's witness. He was able to remember many details such as the writing on garbage containers but could not remember certain details about his own torture. Scharmer said this would be a clear consequence of traumatization as the human mind would then suppress certain memories. Scharmer concluded that this would be an important aspect when evaluating the evidence and asked the judges to keep that in mind.

Proceedings were adjourned at 11:05PM

The next trial day is scheduled for July 7, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 40
Hearing Date: July 07, 2021

Day 81 – July 07, 2021

P39, a plaintiff in the trial, testified about his detention at Al-Khatib. He was detained at a women’s demonstration demanding the end of the siege of Dara’a and had to endure torture in Al-Khatib, using electroshocks, amongst others. To this day, he suffers from the consequences of his detention but now is receiving psychosocial support. He also described one instance, when he met a young boy of about 15-years-old, who had been raped with a wooden broom stick by an interrogation officer.

Day 81 of Trial – July 07, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with seven spectators and three members of the press in the audience, including P12 and a court illustrator. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Defense counsel Ziorovski substituted for Böcker.

Judge Kerber announced that the trial session on July 22 would start at 10:00AM.

Testimony of P39

P39, a 62-years-old Syrian was accompanied by his plaintiff counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker. P39 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber explained that the court knows that P39 had also been detained in other branches but that the court was more interested in Al-Khatib Branch. Kerber asked P39 to tell the court about himself and how he came to be in conflict with the regime.

P39 repeated his name and age, then explained that he used to own a company for hair-cream and gel. He graduated from Damascus university –faculty of economics and commerce.

P39 described how he was detained for the first time on May 02, 2011. The reason for this detention was that his wife is from Dar’a درعا where the revolution first started. The regime had besieged Dar’a for three months.

The family of his wife was in Dar'a where the people of Dar'a [including his wife's family] had no milk nor bread and she [the wife] was upset. She heard an announcement for a demonstration in Arnous square ساحة عرنوس demanding the end of the siege on Dar'a. P39's wife and two daughters went to the demonstration carrying signs demanding that milk and bread must be brought to Dar'a. P39 joined them only to film/take photos<sup>2</sup> as a souvenir. P39 took 12 to 15 photos and within a few minutes security forces were in the square. "We" saw the security forces coming, therefore left the demonstration and went 100m away. One of the staff [security forces] pointed at the group that P39 was taking photos of.

At that time, 6 to 10 people from the staff came and detained P39 in front of his wife and children using severe beating on all of his body. P39 was taken to a car in which there were already detainees inside whom P39 did not know. They were taken to Division 40<sup>3</sup> which is approximately 100m away from the square. They entered the branch and went upstairs, maybe to the second floor.

There was a big corridor with detainees who were already there before [P39 and the group of detainees] arrived and P39 did not know them either. There were 3 to 4 girls among them. P39 was blindfolded and his hands were tied behind his back with a plastic strap. P39 asked the court whether he should go into more details. Judge Kerber said that P39's narration was detailed enough.

P39 continued explaining that they waited around 1 or 1.5 hours. Guards were taking every person to an officer. P39 went inside a room to an officer who was bad and had a foul mouth.

Judge Kerber asked P39 to describe where he had been. P39 said in Division 40.

Judge Kerber asked P39 to describe the shape of the building etc. P39 replied that the building was made of stone, and it had 2 to 4 floors. The group of detainees was brought in from a side entrance, not through the main one, and they were taken to the second floor where they were blindfolded and P39 could not see [around] anymore. P39 explained that he knew the building because his uncle's house is [information redacted] away from Division 40.

Judge Kerber asked if P39 knows what street the division is in, or which landmarks there were. P39 explained that it was a side road from Al-Jisr Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض street. As P39 had to walk down the stairs to Division 40, there was a wide set of stairs (about 50 steps), then a backdoor entrance to the branch. At the door, there was a big guard point. [information redacted] lies his uncle's house in [information redacted]. It was the only branch in that residential area [no other security buildings in that area]. The buildings were old-fashioned, build in the 1950s in a French style.

Judge Kerber wanted to know what happened next. P39 went on to describe how he arrived to the officer who accused P39 of being an agent for the US, Israel, and Saudi Arabia. P39 noted that he forgot to mention a small detail: when he was detained in the car [at the square], his mobile phone, ID card, and wallet were taken so P39 had nothing on him when he went to the officer. The interrogator/officer asked P39 why he had been filming/taking photos. P39 answered that it was just a women's demonstration. The interrogator asked P39 about his religion and P39 said that he was a Muslim. He further asked P39 whether he was a member of a [political] party, which P39 denied. A person from the staff was called in and took P39 outside the room. P39 waited outside for more than an hour.

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The witness sometimes referred to Division 40 as Branch 40. Throughout the report it will be referred to as Division 40 for consistency purposes.

“We” [P and other detainees] were then taken downstairs and outside through the side entrance, blindfolded and tied [handcuffed], to a small bus that fits 20 to 25 people and that had curtains all around (it was very dark [inside]). P39 tried to move the blindfold a bit, but [one of the staff] hit P39 and put it back on.

The bus moved for less than an hour (about 40 minutes). During the course of the bus ride, P39 knew where he was heading; it was his route that he walked in [often/everyday]. When the bus arrived at Al-Khatib [Branch], P39 knew that this is where he was. P39 knew it when the bus entered the square/yard of the branch. The house of P39’s family is in the same area, about [information redacted] away. P39 added that he lived there for 30 years and spent his childhood there. There is a park opposite Al-Khatib which he knows. P39 said he knows every stone [dent] there [it was unclear whether he meant in the park or the area].

When they got off the bus, the distance to the branch’s door was 50 to 60m and on the way there were staff of the branch holding sticks and electroshock[stun] batons. They started to beat the detainees until they arrived at the branch’s internal door; they [guards] call it a “Welcome Party”.

When P39 arrived near the branch, one of the staff hit him with an electroshock[stun] baton on his shoulder and it was painful. The group of detainees went down the stairs (10 to 12 steps) to the underground basement. The security personnel removed the blindfolds but kept the detainees handcuffed. They went to the right, passing through a long corridor (10 to 15m). P39 entered a big room (50 – 60m<sup>2</sup>)<sup>4</sup>. Inside there were detainees whom P39 did not know. At the entrance of the room, there were four people from the staff who asked the new detainees to take off their clothes, which they did while being beaten with a cable. The guards searched the clothes and gave them back to the detainees to put them back on, but the guards took away their metal belongings [belts and keys]. Their treatment was very bad.

The security personnel told the detainees to enter the room and sit in the back of it, if P39 recalled correctly. In the room there were two windows that looked into the interrogation room, which P39 noticed during his interrogation. From these two windows, P39 heard sounds of torture; disturbing sounds, which “we” heard over four hours of waiting in the room. After four hours, P39’s name was called. He again passed through the [same] corridor that they went through upon entrance, which lead to a hall with multiple doors. P39 entered a room where Anwar Raslan was along with another officer, Khedr Khaddour. خضر خضور P39 knew their names from the “ones which were put on the desk” [from the name plates on the desk]. P39 read the other name as Khedr Khaddour, however, read the first name of the second name plate as “Anwar” or “Muneer”, but he was positive that he read “Raslan”.

Judge Kerber asked P39 whether he was blindfolded which P39 denied. In the first “interview” [interrogation], he was not blindfolded.

Judge Kerber asked P39 to confirm that the names on the plates were the first- and surnames, which P39 did. However, P39 did not look for too long, because he [one of the two officers] was giving P39 looks, but P said he remembered the names.

Judge Kerber wanted to know how many desks and people were there in the office. P39 said three tables; two at the back and one to the right. Judge Kerber asked if there was a person behind each desk. P said yes, Khedr [Khaddour] and Anwar [Raslan].

Judge Kerber asked if the ranks were included on the name plates. According to P39, they were: Captain النقيب Khedr [Khaddour] and Colonel العقيد Anwar [Raslan].

Kerber asked what happened next. P39 described that [the interrogator, most probably Raslan] started to ask P39 about his name, age, work, and why P39 was brought there. P39 told him that he was filming/taking photos of a women's demonstration for Dar'a and his wife and daughters [who were participating]. [The interrogator] wanted to know if P39 knew Shukri Al-Quwatli, the former president of Syria during the time of the independence of Syria. P39 told him that Shukri Al-Quwatli would be "our" [P39's/his family's] great-grandfather, namely the grandfather of P39's father. The interrogator asked P39 if he knew someone from Homs حمص so P39 told him that his cousins are from "Raslan" family as well. P39 explained to the court that he does not know if they [P's cousins and Anwar Raslan] are related).

The officer asked P39 about [names redacted]. At that point, P39 felt that the interrogator was interacting with him kindly. P39 asked him why he [P39] was there and what his charges were, but the interrogator told him "Later".

P39 asked him what he [P39] was doing in Al-Khatib Branch. The interrogator got upset/annoyed and P39 could see the rage in his face, and his [the interrogator's] treatment with P39 changed 180 degrees; he [the interrogator] denied and said that it was not Al-Khatib. P39 replied "Yes, it is. I know the whole area". The interrogator denied again and P39 replied in the same way. The interrogator called a person from the staff and told him to get P39 off outside and keep him there.

Kerber asked if P39 remembered the clothes the interrogator was wearing. P39 said that Raslan was wearing a gray-colored track suit. It caught his eye that it was [from the brand] Adidas.

Kerber asked P39 whether he recognized that person among the people in the courtroom. P39 affirmed, it was the one to his right [i.e. Raslan], but he had more weight back then.

Kerber asked P39 to describe what happened next. P39 explained that he returned to the 60m<sup>2</sup>-room and waited there for around an hour. Then, one of the staff came with a list of names and called 10 to 15 names, including P39's name. The guards took [those whose names were called] to a room with 7 or 8 people already inside. That room was less than 3m<sup>2</sup> and had an exposed toilet that stank.

P39 entered the room and started getting to know the people ("Where are you from? What have you done?"). The people answered that some were there for 10 days, some for 20 days, or one month, one of them was there for a year. The room was dark and there was one light only. They did not know whether it was day or night. They stayed in the room for 3 to 4 days. The food was very bad and inedible. P39 decided not to eat it and did not eat for 2 or 3 days. The one who was there for a year prior to P39's arrival told P39 - P39 was the oldest among them - "Uncle, eat! You might stay for a year. You should strengthen yourself!". During the three days, P39 asked for medicine as he suffers from cardiac and blood pressure disease, but they did not respond and cursed him. After 3 to 4 days (P39 did not remember) his name was called and he was taken to the interrogation room. Guards took off all of P39's clothes, blindfolded him, tied his hands, and put him inside the interrogation room. Captain Khaddour was there along with Raslan. P39 identified Raslan from his Homs dialect, and Khaddour from his coastal dialect.

Kerber interrupted reminding that many people speak these dialects and wanted to know how P39 identified these two specific people. P39 replied that maybe at his age, he had interacted with many people and during the interview [interrogation] he could identify them.

Kerber asked if there was something in Raslan's dialect that distinguished it from the dialect of other people from Homs. P39 denied, saying almost all people in Homs talk like that. Kerber asked P39 how he then was able to identify Raslan. P39 said from his Homs dialect.

Kerber told P39 to go on explaining what happened to him next. P39 described how he entered the room and Khaddour asked him why he had been taking photos and for what. He [Khaddour] told P39 that [P39] was being charged with selling photos to Al-Jazeera in Qatar and Future [TV] in Lebanon. P39 denied the allegations and said that the photos were meant to be a souvenir for his wife and children which can be proven because they were included in all photos. The interrogator told P39 "Ok!".

P39 sat on a chair. The interrogator [Khaddour] lifted P39's blindfold and told him to cast his sight downwards. He [Khaddour] had printed out pictures. He showed P39 the photos and asked who the people on them were. P39 identified his wife, his older and younger daughters, but P39 did not know the rest except for his wife's [female] friend. Khaddour showed P39 a photo of him taking photos (P39 did not know where he [Khaddour] got that from) and told him that this photo convicts him of having taken photos. P39 asked if it was prohibited in Syria to take photos/film and that he saw foreigners doing the same, and told Khaddour that it was not prohibited by the Syrian law. He [Khaddour] accused P39 of selling photos to Al-Jazeera, pulled a gun, loaded it, put it to P39's head and started hitting P39<sup>5</sup> and telling him that he would make P39 confess that the photos were for Al-Jazeera.

He [Khaddour] called in 3 to 4 people from the staff. P39 was sitting, and he [Khaddour] raised his foot and kicked P39 on the floor and told them "See your work" [word for word translation; the expression could mean colloquially: "mind your own business" or "do your work/business"]. P39 heard whispering between Raslan and Khaddour, but he did not understand anything.

They [the staff] began to beat P39 with electric cables for about 10 minutes or a bit more. P39 screamed as he had never done before in his life, because when P39 was in the room [the shared cell], one of the people told him that when they interrogate him, he should do either of two things: either bite his hand and do not emit any sound at all, or scream loudly to satisfy his torturer's drive, which was indeed what P39 was doing, screaming loudly. P39 was broken-down and tired.

Kerber asked P39 to reaffirm who showed him the photos. It was Captain Khaddour. Kerber asked P39 who kicked him. It was Captain Khaddour, too, but P39 believed that it was upon Raslan's orders. Judge Kerber asked where he was kicked. It happened in the same room as the interrogation. Judge Kerber asked whether P39 was blindfolded, which P39 affirmed. Kerber wondered how P39 could see the photos. P39 explained how when he looked at the photos, he had to keep his sight downwards but [Khaddour] briefly lifted the blindfold to show P39 the photos.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner wanted to know if the interrogation room just described was the same room where P39 was interrogated the first time, which P39 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether the interrogation room was on the same floor as was the cell. According to P39, both were on the same (ground) floor. P39 did not have to use stairs. He explained, that by "ground floor", he technically meant the basement, he went 10 steps downstairs.

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P39 did not specify if it was light hitting or rather strong blows, but from the context it could be understood as slight taps with the gun against P39's head.

Wiedner asked if P39 saw the interrogator when the blindfold was lifted. P39 said he could only see his feet/legs and the floor tiles. P39 added that the colour of [the interrogator's] desk was wooden. Wiedner asked if the desk was the same as the first time P39 was in the room, which P39 affirmed. Asked, whether he saw the feet of one or two people, P39 replied he saw one person. Wiedner asked P39 if he remembered what that person was wearing but P39 did not.

Wiedner asked P39 if he could hear screams coming from the room where he was interrogated the first or the second time. P39 said that regarding screaming, they always came from this and from other rooms. P39 added that he did not know where these room were.

Wiedner reminded P39 to point out whenever he wants a break.

Wiedner asked P39 to continue to describe what happened, chronologically, after the interrogation. P39 explained that after the interrogation and when "they" finished the beating, [the interrogator] called the staff and told them to get P39 outside. They dragged P39 from his leg/foot to the "room" [his cell]. "He" [maybe one of the staff who dragged him] removed the blindfold and untied P's hands, told P39 to take his clothes, and "they" put him in the room where he had been taken from. When P39 entered the room, the detainees started to put cold water on the cable marks [injuries] on his back and arms.

Wiedner asked P39 if he got wounds and at which sites. P39 told the court that most of the beating was on his back and legs/feet. When they were beating P39, his abdomen and face were on the floor, and his hands and legs/feet were tied. Mostly, they [injuries] were on the back, shoulders, thighs, and legs/feet.

Wiedner asked P39 if he was beaten on the soles of the feet. P39 said he was hit underneath the legs/feet.<sup>6</sup> Wiedner asked P39 if he meant the feet to which P39 replied yes.

Wiedner asked P39 to continue. P39 told how he entered the room and the detainees put cold water on him. P39 was not able to sleep the whole night due to the pain and aches in his body. After 3 to 4 days, his name was called and he was put in a solitary cell. There were 10 to 12 doors [in the corridor/space outside the solitary cells] and P39's cell number was 2 or 3, as far as he remembered. They put P39 inside [the cell], which measured 1 x 1.5 or 1.75m, most probably 1.5, because when P lied down, he could not stretch his legs.

The cell was very bad and stank. There were 2 or 3 blankets that were bad. According to P39, even animals would not live there. P39 explained he got upset and started to hit his head and feet/legs against the wall. It was the first time P39 entered such a place. P39's psyche got ill. He could not tell day from night. The only time P39 could tell was when there was Athan [call for prayer]; there was a mosque nearby where P39 used to pray. By the sound of the call for prayer, P39 was able to tell that it was noon, afternoon etc. 3 to 4 days later, the [cell] door was opened suddenly.

P39 added that they [detainees in solitary cells] were taken to WC at 07:00AM and PM. Wiedner asked if that was always the case during detention. According to P39 it was like that only in the solitary cell and it was usually around 7 –8 AM and PM.

P39 continued his narration saying that one day, the door was opened suddenly, and he saw three of the personnel coming with Raslan behind them who told them "Take off his clothes" which they did. P39 saw they had a device with them, 70x30cm, that had electric cables.

They blindfolded P39 and tied his hands with a handcuff (but not “a conventional one”, but rather a metal one) [meaning proper handcuffs instead of plastic stripes/cable ties]. His hands were behind his back and he was facing the wall. P39 felt that one of the staff connected the cable to the handcuff. After some time, a minute or two, P39 felt something striking in his hands and going up to his head as electricity. Its intensity was increasing and decreasing. After 4 – 6 shocks, P39 felt that they splashed him with a large amount of water and then electricity ran into him with high electric shock that made him feel that he would die. P39 started to beg them and told Anwar [Raslan] he would confess anything they wanted. One of the staff or Anwar [Raslan] (P39 did not know) told P39 that he had to forget that this was Al-Khatib Branch and that he [the talking person] would be bringing P39’s wife, daughters and son to the branch and make the staff rape them, until P39 admits that it [taking the photos] was for Al-Jazeera. P39 told him that he would admit/confess whatever he [the talking person] wanted. Within 10-20 minutes, P39 was shocked about 15 times, and water was poured over him twice. They removed the electricity [device/cables], the handcuff from his hands, and the blindfold. P39 looked at his hands and saw blood coming out as he saw it for the first time in his life [he saw his hands bleeding profusely].

Kerber asked P39 if he wanted a break. P39 said yes.

***

Wiedner recalled that, before the break, P39 was telling how Raslan came along with other staff, P39 was tortured with electric shocks and was screaming. Wiedner asked P39 to summarize who was there. According to P39 when he was in the solitary cell, 3 to 4 guards came and Raslan was behind them. They tied P39 and the electric shocks occurred [started].

Wiedner reaffirmed if it was correct that P39 was initially not blindfolded in the cell. P39 repeated they blindfolded him when they opened the door and P39 saw the device. The one [guard] who handcuffed P39, also blindfolded him.

Wiedner asked P39 what the person did whom P39 identified as Raslan. P39 replied that he [Raslan] did nothing, he was behind the staff.

Wiedner told P39 to describe what he saw before he was blindfolded. P39 said he saw the door being opened suddenly. P39 was on the floor and stood up. He then saw 3 – 4 of the staff and Raslan behind them. When asked about it, P39 stated that Raslan did not say anything. Wiedner explained that he was asking that because P39 explained during the police questioning how “on the third day, a guard came, blindfolded, and handcuffed P39. P39 could not see much in the room, but felt that the device was connected to him”. Wiedner pointed out that P39 mentioned multiple guards now [in the trial session]. P39 said that one of the guards was the one who opened the door and entered inside, but they were 3 – 4 outside the cell door.

Wiedner asked about how many people were there after P39 was blindfolded, to which P39 replied 3 – 4, as he said. He could determine that, because he saw them. Wiedner asked whether he could see them after he was blindfolded. P39 said he saw nobody [after he was blindfolded], it was all black, however, he saw these people when the door was opened.

Wiedner asked P39 if he heard verbal instructions but P39 explained he could not hear anything when he was shouting and screaming.

Kerber recalled that P39 said that he could not see and there was no light inside the cell. P39 said that there was a small, dim light bulb and air-suction. Kerber asked if he could see the floor or the corridor. P39 said that the light was bright enough for one to see.

Wiedner refreshed P39's recollection quoting from the police questioning transcript "There were two people talking but it was not Khaddour". P39 said that two people were talking, but there were more than two. P39 could not understand them because he was screaming.

Wiedner asked P39 to continue his narration. P39 went on telling the court that they removed the handcuffs. He then looked at his hands and saw blood and his fingernails were hurting. The most pain was in his shoulders and the back of the head. At that moment, P39 collapsed on the floor.

P39 stayed in the solitary cell for the following day and in the morning (P39 thinks it was daytime). When he realized that he was shocked [tortured with electric shocks] and beaten, P39 thought to himself that they were not human beings and came to believe that they were monsters, although he never believed in monsters. In the solitary cell, there were insects and small cockroaches and P39 started talking to them; telling them that they pass by him and do nothing to harm him, whereas the monsters outside tortured him. P39 said he held a cockroach with his hands, and it did not harm him but he started talking to it. P39 told him, that he believed that they outside were the monsters and "you" were a pet. Addressed to the court, P39 explained that he has a cat that he always treats it with sympathy and kindness and does not torture her ["does not torture her" was not translated].

Wiedner asked P39 if he was interrogated after that. P39 said that after 1 or 2 days, they took him back in the group cell. At that time, he heard sounds of a person being tortured who sounded like his son; disturbing sounds that knock and buzz. P39 thought that they brought his family. His psyche collapsed and he did not comprehend what was happening outside. P39 stayed in the group cell for 5 to 6 days and was not summoned for an interrogation.

Wiedner recalled P39 stating during his police questioning that after the electric shocks, he was interrogated again but P39 replied no, he does not remember that.

Wiedner asked P39 if the keywords "Signing" and "Money" meant something. P39 asked if the question could be repeated.

Wiedner mentioned the keywords "Signing" and "Money", asking what P39 remembered having said about them in the police questioning. P39 explained that after 4 days staying in that room, one of the staff came holding a paper and called out 10 to 12 names [of detainees, amongst which was P39's]. They were taken outside to the corridor between the "rooms" [P39 sometimes used the term "rooms" when talking about the cells] where there were more people, that had been taken outside [of their cells]. The detainees were summoned one by one into the interrogation room. P39 did not recall who made him sign (whether it was Raslan or someone else), but it was the same [interrogation] room [as before]. [The interrogator] lifted the blindfold and told P39 to keep his head on the desk [keep his sight down] and told him that he had to sign his confessions. When P39 wanted to sign, he saw around 5 papers with nothing written on them. P39 told the interrogator that the papers were blank and asked what he should sign. At that instance, P39 signed blank papers and was taken outside. After that "we" went to a bus outside of the branch, blindfolded. They took "us" to the General Intelligence Services Branch in Kafar Souseh كفر سوسة.

Wiedner wanted to know more about P39's last interrogation in Al-Khatib, if P39 identified someone there. P39 denied, in the interrogation room, he did not. However, when "we" were gathered in the corridor, "they" removed the blindfolds and gave each one a small [plastic] bag with the watch etc. inside [they gave each detainee his personal belongings].

P39 added that on the way to the bus, he noticed Anwar [Raslan] at the side of the corridor. That was the third time P39 saw Raslan. According to P39, that indicates that Raslan was supervising everything in the branch.

Wiedner quoted from the police questioning transcript to refresh P39's memory: "We stayed for around an hour in the room. Khaddour told us that we had to confess and what we should say". P39 said that was not how he remembered, after the electric shocks, he told them that he would confess/admit anything. P39 does not remember that instance with Khaddour.

Wiedner quoted "Khaddour told me that I have to confess and spoke about money". P39 said that was correct, that was how he remembered, but that was in the first interrogation, not in the second one.

Wiedner quoted "Khaddour told me that I have to confess that I was getting money from prince Bandar بندر in Saudi Arabia and from Al-Hariri الحريري in Lebanon". P39 confirmed, and asked Wiedner if he should elaborate on that.

Wiedner affirmed, and asked P39 to put that in a timeframe. P39 said he does not remember if it was in the first or the third interrogation but he does recall the incident; after [Khaddour] claimed that P39 was sending [information/photos] to Al-Jazeera or the Future [TV], [Khaddour] said that they found a piece of paper in P39's pocket or wallet, and alleged that P39 received an amount of 1.2 - 1.5 million [Syrian Pound] as financing from Saudi Arabia – prince Bander, or Abdelhaleem Khaddam عبد الحليم خدام, or from Future [TV] - Al-Hariri. P39 replied that he did not know them and only heard about them in the news. P39 recalls telling [Khaddour] that Khaddam was their beloved one and the vice president; Al-Hariri was in Syria 6 months ago and the president [Bashar] kissed him [friendly cheek kissing like some politicians do]; Bander was their brother-in-law – how would they finance P39? P39 explained [to Khaddour] that he had a warehouse; a factory which he sold to buy a new house. P39 was installing floor tiles and painting the house, and registered that he gave money to the painters, tilers and plumbers. [Khaddour] claimed that these were fictitious names to cover up himself. P39 asked [Khaddour] [ironically] if he saw these amounts of money and did not see the electricity bill that P39 did not pay for 6 months because he was not at home [P39 meant to say that Khaddour "picked and chose" and ignored that P39 had a bill to pay; pointing out to the fact that he had no money, and refuting the argument that P39 received money from these figures]. P39 repeated that he [Khaddour] saw these [payments] but not this [bill].

Wiedner asked P39 if he could tell during which of the interrogations that included beatings Raslan was present. P39 answered that during the second interrogation Raslan was there, because he was whispering with his Homs dialect.

Wiedner asked P39 if he saw Raslan after he was transferred to Kafar Souseh. P39 said he saw him in the corridor. Wiedner replied that when P39 was asked during the police questioning whether he saw Raslan again after the first interrogation he denied. P39 explained that after he was transferred from Al-Khatib, he never saw Raslan again.

Wiedner asked P39 who conducted the first interrogation when he saw Raslan and the tables in the room. P39 checked if Wiedner meant the first interrogation, then said it was Anwar [Raslan].

Wiedner asked if the first interrogation was "a real one"; if they wanted to know specific information and how long it lasted. P39 said it lasted 10 to 15 minutes, until he [the interrogator] got annoyed/mad when P39 mentioned "Al-Khatib" and he ended the talk at that instance.

Wiedner wanted to know about the interaction between Raslan and Khaddour but P39 said he did not remember, except that both were 4 – 5m apart from another.

Wiedner said that P39 was asked in the police questioning whether there were orders/instructions when the two men talked with each other. P39 denied, it was a normal talk not an order.

Wiedner recalled that according to P39 Khaddour said “Sidi [Master/Sir]” and spoke as if he was taking orders, but Raslan did not talk much. P39 said he could not remember. Wiedner asked what P39 answered when asked in the police questioning about orders or instructions from Raslan to Khaddour or if Raslan mentioned Khaddour’s rank when talking to Khaddour. P39 said that he said he told the police that the rank was not mentioned, as it would be uncommon to mention the name if two officers were talking to each other, it was uncommon.

Wiedner asked if there were other people with P39 when he was brought to the first interrogation. P39 explained that there was another detainee who entered the room with him, but was brought back outside immediately; he [the other detainee] was only asked about his name and his [home] town. P39 explained that this happened, however, at the door. But when P39 was inside the room, he was alone. Wiedner checked if only one person went outside when P39 came in. P39 said that when he entered, they were two of them who entered the room [P39 and that person]. Then [that person] was asked about his name and town and was brought outside again. Wiedner asked if P39 stayed there. P39 confirmed. Wiedner asked P39 if he remembers which person asked the questions [interrogated the other detainee]. P39 said that he did not remember.

Wiedner wanted P39 to talk about the condition of the other detainees. Wiedner recalled that P39 was detained in various cells; one measuring 50m<sup>2</sup>; another one 3x3m. Wiedner asked how many detainees were in the cells. P39 answered that it was between 25 – 30 in the one that measured 3x3m; the number was not fixed, [when] 5 – 6 [detainees] entered, 3 – 4 were taken out. In the big cell, which was 60m<sup>2</sup>, the number of detainees was higher than 60 – 70. “We” [detainees] were not able to stand and the breathing was difficult.

Wiedner wanted to know about health condition and the injuries. P39 said that in the room where he was, detainees did not have injuries because they were newcomers [were just detained]. However, on a daily basis, 3 – 4 of them went to interrogations and came back in a bad condition. Most of them were in a bad condition due to beating with cables.

Wiedner asked P39 to describe the injuries. P39 said that their [the detainee’s] condition was similar to his, but they were younger. The signs of cables on their back were clear. P39 saw on their body what he saw on his own [they were treated similarly]. 2 - 3 people were bleeding from their feet/legs. These were the people in the room.

Wiedner asked if P39 talked with other detainees and asked them what happened to them during interrogations. P39 explained that all of them talked about cables [mentioned cables as the method of torture] and one of them said that he was hanged from the ceiling. Wiedner wanted to know if P39 remembered what that detainee said but P39 did not remember.

Wiedner asked if some detainees had life-threatening conditions. P39 denied, there were none, because it was at the beginning of the revolution and they [security forces] did not yet have that [amount of] violence. P39 stressed that this was what he saw, but he does not know about other rooms.

Wiedner recalled that P39 said that the food was bad, and asked if water was available. P39 explained that [they were given] a bag of bread; 10 pieces of pita bread for 30 people to eat. One time they brought mouldy or bad bread [stale]. In the morning, they used to bring hard cheese or not-bad olives. At noon [they brought] boiled potatoes covered with dirt. Over 8 days, once they brought a boiled chicken for 30 people. P39 could not eat and only dipped bread in the broth.

At night, they used to bring cheese and bad cucumber, full of dirt. Sometimes “we” [P39 and the detainees] wiped it using the blankets or washed it at the toilet. [Concerning] Water, P39 said, they never brought some. “We” used to drink from the toilet. Wiedner asked what he meant by that and if there were cups to drink with but P39 said no, there were none. They used to hold their hands under the tap.

Wiedner asked P39 if he lost weight. P39 said he weighed 95[kg] before detention and lost 12[kg]. [He weighed] approximately 83[kg] when he was transferred from Al-Khatib to Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner asked P39 if he heard screams of other detainees and if yes, then how often. P39 replied that screaming and torturing were constant, but they decreased at night.

Wiedner recalled that P39 said he was transferred to Kafar Souseh. Wiedner wanted to know how he was released and how he would compare the condition in Al-Khatib to Kafar Souseh Branch. P39 wanted to note what happened in Kafar Souseh: when they [detainees] were transferred there from Al-Khatib, there was a child, under 15-years-old, among them. He was put in the room where P39 and 30 other people were in. P39 asked him about his name which was [name redacted] from [information redacted], close to Damascus. The first two days, he could not and did not want to speak with anyone. P39 attempted to speak with him to know what he was accused of, and told him to consider P39 as his father, but the boy refused to speak. 4 or 5 days later, he came by himself to P39 who asked him what happened to him and about the blood that was on the front and the back of his pants; it was fully covered with blood. He [the child] hesitated to speak [at first], but then told P39 “Uncle, I beg you to not tell anyone. It is between us”. P39 asked him what he was accused of. He said that he broke Hafez’s [Al-Assad] statue in [information redacted] and they [security staff] showed him a photo of him breaking it. He explained that they tortured him in Al-Khatib and inserted a wooden broom stick in his “inferior [part]” [translated to “anus”]. P39 added that they raped the boy and this is something sad and unimaginable. P39 tried to solace him and to tell him something nice. P39 also told him to not tell anyone except for the close ones. P39 explained to the court that the customs in “our” [Syrian] society are that they [the society] look not well on the one who endures such situation [sexual abuse]. P39 pointed out that he found the cursing and the beating he endured trivial, when he heard the story of that child.

Wiedner asked where that child was detained. P39 said in Al-Khatib Branch and they took him with “us” [P and others] to Kafar Souseh, but he was in a different room.

Wiedner asked if P39 had the impression that sexual abuse could have happened with other detainees. P39 said that he does not know, but this [situation with the child] happened in front of him. P39 told the boy to wash his clothes, and asked if [he would let] P39 help him wash them, but he refused.

Wiedner asked, generally, whether there was communication between the guards. P39 explained that the detainees would not know. They did not see anything in the room, and if they heard [something], they would not know who was talking; an officer or a member of the staff.

Wiedner asked about medical care in Al-Khatib Branch. P39 replied, in Al-Khatib there was none, P39 asked for medicine for his blood pressure and they did not bring any. In Kafar Souseh, they gave P39 only six pills and he used to break them into two parts to take half instead of a whole pill.

Wiedner asked P39 how he was released and how he would compare Al-Khatib to Kafar Souseh Branch. P39 said Kafar Souseh was somehow good; they tortured him only once, asked him the same questions and showed him the same photos, which P39 denied again [the questions and accusations]. P39 stayed in Kafar Souseh for 12 to 13 days, then was transferred to Adra عذرا prison. When he got off there, he felt like he were in heaven, compared to what he was in before, because there [in Adra] one could deal with policemen with money or bring food from outside.

After 1 or 2 days in Adra, P39 was transferred to Douma. The detainees were presented to a judge one by one. P39 explained how he entered and the judge asked him about the accusations concerning Al-Jazeera and P39 denied them. The judge told him that he would issue an acquittal. P39 asked the judge who would serve him justice for his torture and his back [injuries]. The judge replied to P39 that he should thank God that he was released. P39 added that the judge was kind and said that P39 would be released out of consideration of his age. P39 went home and saw his older brother who was a networks and computer programmer and was doing general maintenance for the General Intelligence in Kafar Souseh. P39 said that when he was detained, his wife called his brother who went to the officer and told him that his brother, [name redacted], was detained from Arnous. The officer called several branches and then told P39's brother that P39 was detained in Al-Khatib Branch with Colonel Anwar Raslan (that was when P39 confirmed that the name he saw [read] was Anwar Raslan). The officer told P39's brother that there were instructions from "above" in the Intelligence Services administration or the presidency to forbid asking about any detainee, "Try not to ask. There is no hope".

Wiedner asked if his family was informed about his detention, which P39 denied, they were not.

Wiedner recalled that P39 said that he was detained from the demonstration supporting Dar'a and asked P39 when that was. P39 said that the siege of Dar'a occurred at the end of March or April [2011]. All the people [in Dar'a] were asking to send them bread and milk, and said that their supplies at their home were running out. People [in Syria] said that they should do something for Dar'a. A demonstration was organized and P39's wife participated in it.

Wiedner recalled that P39 mentioned Hafez Makhoul حافظ مخلوف in the police questioning and asked P39 to describe who that was. P39 said that due to the fact that his uncle's house was close to Division 40, he knew that "they say" Hafez Makhoul is the head of the branch.

Wiedner asked P39 to confirm that he was talking about Division 40. P39 said yes, Branch 40<sup>7</sup>, whereas Al-Khatib Branch's head was Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس, because after P39 was released from detention, he visited his friend [information redacted]. P39 mentioned to him [his friend] that he was detained there, and his friend told him "Come, hear the sounds of torture [information redacted]". P39 said he wondered whether his friend might have heard him screaming from torture.

Wiedner recalled that P39 said in the police questioning that the head of Al-Khatib Branch was Hafez Makhoul. P39 explained that he did the military service in the political administration and has an idea of the military hierarchy. P39 added that he was a university graduate who served as a First Lieutenant: Al-Khatib Branch belongs to Division 40 whose head is Hafez Makhoul, but Al-Khatib is responsible for the security of its area. [Speaking to the judges, P39 asserted], "Am I not living in the area?". It [Al-Khatib] is called the Inner Branch, but is located in Al-Khatib area [neighbourhood] and the majority of people call it after that [after the area; Al-Khatib]. However, P39 is a resident of the area and knows that it is the Inner Branch.

Wiedner asked which buildings Al-Khatib Branch consists of. P39 explained that Al-Khatib consists of two buildings; a big and a small one. The big one did not belong to Al-Khatib 20 years ago, it was called "the military commissary/provision branch". When that branch was moved to another place, Al-Khatib took that building. P39 clarified that he knew that information, because he was a resident of that area for 30 years.

P39 wanted to make a note regarding his psychological condition and asked if could speak about it. [The judges signalled P39 to go on]. P39 said that he has been going to a psychotherapist for psychological treatment and P39 mentioned the reasons to his attorney. P39 indicated that he is having nightmares every week about security forces chasing him. Moreover, every sound P39 hears in the streets makes him turns around. It made him very upset and thus he stayed at home and it made him introverted/antisocial. When P39 gave his statements 2 years ago, it was the beginning of his bad condition. Currently, P39 did 12 therapy sessions and the therapist asked for 30 sessions over 2 years. During the recent sessions, P39 improved a bit and he visited a neurologist 10 days ago and told him about his story, and the neurologist told him that the electric shocks affected his brain. 7 – 10 days ago, P39 did an MRI of his brain and had an appointment the following Friday for the results. P39 handed the Job Centre a report that he is going through therapy and they told him that he could not work until he finishes therapy, and that was what happened lately.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Polz recalled that P39 was detained relatively early; in May 2011. Polz asked whether there were other female demonstrators besides his wife and daughters. P39 answered that it was a women's demonstration demanding bread and milk. There were about 25 – 30 women.

Polz asked P39 how he perceived the security forces' treatment of the women when they arrived at the demonstration. P39 said that in the beginning of the demonstration, there were no security forces, but rather 1 – 2 general security staff members at the square. Within 4 – 5 minutes, the security forces started to flow in with cars. They got off [the vehicles] with their sticks and electroshock[stun] batons. When "we" saw the security forces, P39 took his wife and his daughter and backed off, but there were girls who were beaten with sticks. They took the banners/signs that the demonstrators wrote. P39 further saw a girl being detained (she came [to the court as a witness]); [P16] (P39 did not see her until they were transferred from Kafar Souseh to Adra). That was the girl in the demonstration whom P39 saw.

Polz asked if more women were detained. P39 said that there were many female detainees, maybe three or four, but he did not know them.

Polz asked if P39's wife and/or daughters experienced violence themselves. P39 said that there was violence; his daughter was hit with a stick on her shoulder. When she took the blow, they [P39 and his family] fell back. Asked about it, P39 said that neither his wife nor daughters were detained.

Polz asked if P39 saw more women later in Division 40, who were detained from the demonstration. P39 said he saw absolutely no women, he thinks that they were separated. He did, however, hear women ['s screams] once or twice [in Al-Khatib]. P39 also heard a child begging the interrogator [to release him], because he had senior high school exams in two weeks. P39 explained to the court that a senior high school student is around 17-years-old). Polz asked P39 if he heard other children. P said only that [student] and the child of Kafar Souseh.

Polz asked if the child from Kafar Souseh said who did that to him. P39 said that he [the child] told him that they were the staff members who tortured detainees, but he [the child] did not know who [exactly]. Polz asked if the child maybe described their appearance, dialects, clothes etc. P39 said that [the child] could not [see them], because he was on a chair blindfolded.

To refresh P39's recollections, Polz quoted from the police questioning transcript "A 16-year-old detainee who was detained along with us in Al-Khatib told me that the one who tortured him was wearing a track suit; he inserted a wooden broom stick in his anus and the one who did it was wearing a track suit". Polz asked P39 if he recalls having said that but P39 said, he did not remember, but also, when P39 saw staff members, most of them were wearing track suits. P39 said by that he was differentiating the staff member, wearing a normal track suit, from the officers, wearing a branded track suit; e.g., Adidas; a neat track suit.

Polz asked P39 whether the child said that Raslan did that. P39 said no, he does not remember that. He [the child] mentioned that it was a staff member, but maybe he did not know because he was blindfolded.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Fratzky recalled that P39 said that in the first interrogation in Al-Khatib Branch, there were tables in the room and asked how many tables there were. P39 said that in the first interrogation, there were 2 tables; one to the right and one to the left and they were about 1 – 1.5m apart. There was another empty table [P39 said "to the right", then corrected himself] to the left of the room. To make sure, Fratzky asked again if they were 2 or 3 tables in the interrogation office and P39 said they were 3; 2 in the back of the room and one to the left.

Fratzky asked if the interrogator whom P39 identified as Raslan was kind. P39 said that was correct, the interrogation was about P39's name, age etc. He [the interrogator] was normal and acted kindly.

Fratzky recalled that P39 was blindfolded all the time during the second interrogation and identified Raslan through his Homs dialect. During the police questioning, P39 said "someone blindfolded me and tied my hands behind my back. I identified Khaddour through his dialect". Fratzky asked P39 if he remembered having said that. P39 said he recalls that they were two people in the room; Khaddour with his coastal dialect and Raslan was giving him orders and his dialect was from Homs. P39 stated that he knows the Homs dialect, because his cousins are from Homs and he used to visit them all the time.

Fratzky recalled that according to P39 Khaddour and Raslan were whispering and P39 did not understand them. P39 affirmed. Fratzky wondered how P39 could differentiate the dialect if he did not understand them. P39 said he could not hear whole sentences, however, he heard words and understood them.

Fratzky asked P39 what differentiated the Homs dialect. P39 said that people from Homs use a different pronunciation for specific endings of certain words. P39 described a typical characteristic of the Homs dialect for explanation: كبة pronounced Kobbi instead of Kebbeh [another example was P39 pronouncing a phrase in Homs dialect without further explanation] P39 pointed out that the Homs dialect is likeable in Syria and the people from Homs are likeable because they have a sense of humour.

Fratzky recalled that in the second interrogation, the blindfold was removed and Khaddour showed P39 photos. Fratzky asked P39 if he was blindfolded again. P39 explained that they asked him to sit on his knees. Khaddour made P39 to look down at the floor. He [Khaddour] was opposite to P39, lifted the blindfold with his hand and had a few pages of pictures; the first one showed P39's wife. Khaddour then asked P39 who she was and P39 said that she was his wife. The second page showed P39's daughter and the third one his other daughter. The following page showed a general scene of the demonstration. According to P39, Khaddour then started to insult P39 saying things like: "How do you allow your bitch wife to participate in a demonstration". P39 said that it would be impossible for him to forget that. Khaddour then kicked P39 on his shoulders and P39 gurled through the air for about 1.5 meters. After that, Khaddour called other employees who started beating P39.

Fratzky asked if P39 was blindfolded again. P39 said yes, because after [showing] the photos, he [Khaddour] blindfolded him again. Fratzky asked when P39 was blindfolded again. Scharmer interjected and pointed out that P39 already answered that Fratzky might have not understood it. Kerber demonstrated to Fratzky how P39 explained that the blindfold was never completely removed; it was lifted [she pointed to her forehead] and then was lowered again [pointed to her eyes] after P39 was shown the photos.

Fratzky asked P39 when the interrogator lowered the blindfold again. P39 said that after he [Khaddour] finished [showing] the photos, he put it back; it was like this and became like this [P39 mimicked as Kerber did; pointing to the forehead then the eyes].

Fratzky asked if it was correct that P39's eyes were covered. P39 affirmed.

Fratzky asked if the blindfold was removed after the beating or after he was taken outside the room. P39 said that after they finished beating him, he [Khaddour] told them to take P39 outside. P39 was lying on his abdomen and they dragged him by his feet/legs to the corridor. At that instance, they untied the plastic strap from his hands and feet, removed the blindfold, told him to take his clothes and to go to the room [cell]. Fratzky asked if they removed the blindfold while he [Khaddour] was still in the room. P39 said no, he [Khaddour] told them to get P39 outside the room and they dragged him from his legs/feet outside.

Ziorovski asked P39 how long his therapy session lasts. P39 said around an hour, maybe 50 minutes.

Ziorovski asked what the subjects were that they talked about in the therapy sessions. P39 said that the therapist asked him about his childhood, youth and the like for two sessions. After that they went into the details of the detention, the cable, and the electric shocks [torture] sessions. They talked about what problems P39 had after he was released from detention. P39 indicated that he became a nervous, easily and quickly agitated person. P39 pointed out that he and his wife got divorced because of a dispute between them. He added that the regime destroyed his house with airstrikes and his factory as well. P39 said that he was psychologically broken to point zero.

Ziorovski asked P39 if he could estimate how long they talked about his detention experience. Scharmer interjected saying that he wanted to discuss with P39 whether he would like to speak about his therapy sessions.

***

Scharmer indicated that Ziorovski could ask questions specific to the case.

Ziorovski asked P39 if he could estimate how long they talked about his detention experience. P39 said that they talked about his detention for approximately two sessions, and in each session, when the detention topic was raised, he talked about it for around 10 minutes.

Ziorovski asked if P39 told his therapist about his appointment "today". P39 answered that he [the therapist] knew a week ago that P39 would come [to court]. However, after Ziorovski asked about it, the therapist does not know the subject of the trial session. The rest of the [therapy] sessions were about P39's nightmares and he [the therapist] gave P39 temporarily anti-depressive medicine.

Fratzky asked P39 about his response to the police asking him for the reason for seeking asylum in Germany. P39 said that in the police questioning at the time of [applying for] asylum, they asked him who tortured him and he said "Khedr Khaddour", since he was asked "Who tortured you?".

Fratzky asked if he said that Khaddour was the one who tortured and interrogated him. P39 said indeed he [Khaddour] tortured him, but “in the presence of whom? Raslan”.

Fratzky asked the interpreter to repeat the last part of the answer because he could not hear it. The interpreter repeated the answer.

Fratzky asked P39 if he heard orders from Raslan to torture him. P39 said he heard whispering. P39 added that he does not imagine [think] that a Colonel officer, like [Raslan], would torture by his own hands [by himself], and without orders, P39 does not think that any staff member would act [on his own].

Fratzky wanted to clarify whether that was P39’s assumption, but P39 said no, it is not an assumption; it is generally known.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsels

Scharmer asked P39 if other members of his family were detained in Al-Khatib Branch. P39 denied, adding that one member of his family was, however, detained at Palestine branch.

Scharmer said that Homs dialect is spoken by a number of people. Scharmer asked P39 to clarify whether he was able to identify Raslan by his voice as well and not only through the dialect. P39 said certainly. P39 explained that [if] he speaks with someone on the phone for 15 minutes and if that person calls the following day, he would be able to identify him even without seeing him.

P39 said that he wanted to thank the court and the German government and would like to affirm that he lives in Germany relieved.

Kerber announced that the following day was cancelled.

The proceedings were adjourned at 02:10PM.

The next trial session will be on July 14, 2021 at 09:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 41

Hearing Dates: July 14 &amp; 15, 2021

P40, a 28-year-old Syrian and one of the few witnesses who were detained at Branch 251 before March 2011 described detention conditions similar to those after March 2011, although not as bad. The witness further told the court that he was not blindfolded when he was interrogated by Anwar Raslan, whom he identified as head of investigations at the Branch. According to the witness, arrests in Syria were unlawful, even before 2011, as no one was informed about the charges or even where they were detained. Detainees were not presented to a rightful judge nor were their families informed about their fate.

Trial Day 83 – July 15, 2021

P41, a 43-year-old Syrian testified about his detention at Branch 251 in 2011. He described to the court the bad detention conditions, lack of medical care, and torture at the Branch. The witness further identified Anwar Raslan as the head of the Branch who was also present at one of P41's interrogations. P41 was able to see Raslan as he was not blindfolded during his interrogation. According to P41, Raslan ordered a guard to torture him. The witness further identified two people on screenshots of open-source videos and explained that both allegedly died of torture at Branch 251. P41 said he saw one of the people himself after his corpse was handed over to his family.

Day 82 of Trial – July 14, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30AM with four spectators and three members of the press in the audience. One non-accredited journalist was granted access to the Arabic interpretation. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Ritscher and Klinge. Plaintiff counsels Dr. Oehmichen and Mohammed were not present. Attorney Ziorovski appeared as substitute for Raslan's defense counsel Böcker.

P40 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. The 28-year-old Syrian currently living in [information redacted] denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage. P40 answered these first questions in German. Presiding Judge Kerber told him he could speak in Arabic, his mother tongue, as there were competent interpreters assisting the court.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that she would first ask the witness to provide an overview of what happened to him before Judge Wiedner might ask additional questions. Kerber further explained to P40 that the court was aware that he already provided this information to the police, however, according to German law he needed to repeat everything in court. Kerber first asked P40 how he came into conflict with the Syrian regime and how he was arrested. P40 said he was arrested at the end of 2010 together with his brother. They were arrested at 4AM in Damascus. P40 said he already told the police how he was arrested: he was taken to an unknown place. P40 asked Kerber what else she wanted to know.

Kerber asked him to tell the court everything he could remember. She added that the court knew what P40 told the police, however, he needed to repeat all that in court. P40 went on to explain that he was very young when he was arrested, he said that he and his brother were of course beaten several times. P40 added that he would describe everything in detail. They were arrested at 4AM. [The interpreter sitting next to P40 and translating his statements into German told P40 that he was free to speak Syrian dialect instead of Standard Arabic]. P40 recalled that people were knocking at his door at 4AM. He said it was very harsh and he was the first of his family to wake up. When he asked who was knocking, he was told by the people outside the door to open the door. As soon as P40 opened the door, he saw security forces carrying Kalashnikovs. P40 said he was told to lie on the floor and his hands were tied within seconds using cable strips. His vest was pulled over his head and his head was pushed down. P40 said he was passed on like that from one person to the other and beaten on his head and back. He was then taken inside a car which drove away after five to ten minutes.

P40 showed the court how he was pushed inside the car with his head down. He said he had to sit in this position which was very difficult and started hurting. Every time he tried to raise his head, he was beaten with a Kalashnikov. P40 explained to the court that it was horrible for him. He was very young at the time and it was the first time something like that happened to him. He added that the entire time he spent in detention felt like one single day.

P40 said the car drove for 45 to 60 minutes. He did not know that his brother was there as well. Since P40 was blindfolded and could not see what happened around him, he assumed he was alone. When they left the car, it was the same procedure than before: beatings. P40 said they had to walk quickly and he was beaten the same way as when he was arrested at home: on his head and back. He recognized that they were taken downstairs to a hallway. In the hallway, they were told to undress to their underpants.

Kerber intervened, asking P40 to not speak more than one sentence, so the interpreter could follow. She added that although this is a very emotional situation for P40, he should try to speak a bit slower. [The interpreter said that P40 was simply repeating every sentence three times.] P40 went on to describe that he was then taken to the office of an investigator. He was able to see that this person was Anwar Raslan. P40 added that he did not know it was Raslan at that very moment when it happened. P40 said when they entered the office, they were told to turn around. That was when he saw that his brother was there as well, something he did not know before. The investigator then gave orders to the employees, saying left or right. The security guards/employees then took people to the left or right. Once they were all separated, they were taken to different cells. After that, people came and called their names.

Kerber wanted to know whether P40 was blindfolded or had to wear his vest over his head when he was in the office of the investigator. P40 denied, saying he was wearing nothing but his shorts.

Kerber asked how many detainees were in this office. P40 said there were around twenty to thirty people in the hallway.

Kerber went on to ask P40 what happened in the cell. P40 described how names were called. He added that their personal data was registered before they were taken to the cells. When they were in the cell afterwards, their names were called. When P40's name was called, he was taken to Raslan's office.

Kerber wanted to know whether it was the same room as before or a different one. P40 did not understand the question. Kerber said she understood that P40 had been in Raslan's office before. P40 denied. Kerber asked him to explain. P40 repeated that he was taken downstairs, had to stand in the hallway, had to get undressed, and was then taken to the room of the investigator. He then had to turn around and the detainee was taken to the left or right.

Kerber wanted to know who the 'investigating person' was whom P40 just mentioned. P40 said he was not blindfolded. This person was Anwar Raslan.

Kerber recalled that the person in the office at this occasion was Anwar Raslan. She asked P40 if he was taken to the same room when he was called from the cell and taken to Anwar Raslan. P40 said it was the same room.

Kerber asked what happened next. P40 said one officer was standing behind him. When P40 entered the room, he was told to lower his head. The investigating officer was sitting or standing behind a desk. He was asking P40 questions. P40 told the court that he could still remember one of the questions: he was asked if he was a Kurd from [information redacted]. P40 explained that the investigator of course used the question to find out whether P40 was affiliated to Kurdish groups. P40 told the court he denied the question and replied he was from [information redacted], the Arabic name of the town. All the questions that P40 was asked dealt with Kurdish issues and were unrelated to P40. P40 said every time he denied a question about Kurdish people, the investigator gave a sign to the security officer who then beat P40. The beats were harsh and P40 was even kicked and fell on the floor while 'he' [Anwar Raslan] was present. When the round of questions and answers was over, the security officer was ordered to take P40 to the hallway. P40 said he did not understand what was meant by this order at that time. He explained to the court that in the hallway, he had to lie on the floor on his stomach with his hands tied behind his back, and was beaten with a four-wire cable. After the beating, he was taken back to the cell.

Kerber asked if P40 had to wear blindfolds in the room where he was interrogated. P40 denied.

Judges Kerber and Wiedner had a short discussion before Judge Kerber asked P40 to continue his descriptions. P40 said he was taken back to the cell after the beatings. When he was in the cell, names of other detainees were called, among them P40's brother. P40 added that he was the youngest in his cell.

Kerber wanted to know how old P40 was at the time. P40 said he was around 17-years-old. He wanted to graduate from high school and study law. He added that the arrest he and his brother were subjected to was against the law, it was illegal according to P40. He explained that he was a juvenile and there was no reason to arrest him. P40 asked the judges whether he could ask Raslan a question.

Judge Kerber told P40 he should rather not ask the question, but if he still wanted to add anything after his testimony, he would have the chance to do so later. Kerber quickly recalled what P40 told the court so far and asked him what happened next. P40 said his brother was called from the cell and beaten. He was accused of the same thing relating to Kurdish people as P40. P40 added that because he was a juvenile, he was beaten on his head and feet with a cable. His brother was however older and therefore had to endure Doulab and was beaten on his feet with a cable. P40 said he was released before his brother. But when his brother was released, one could see signs of electric shocks on his brother's body. According to P40, others were tortured the same way as his brother.

P40 went on to explain that there was one thing he could never forget: When he had to wait downstairs in the hallway right at the beginning of his detention, he saw an old man, around 75-years-old [P40 got emotional]. According to P40, this man was sitting in some kind of solitary cell in the corner. He told the court that he would never forget this scene and was still wondering about the reasons to detain such a man. The man was unable to walk. P40 went on to describe that there were all kinds of psychological and bodily torture the detainees had to endure. It was difficult to use the toilet because the security guards said they would count to ten and if the detainee was not done by then, they would open the door of the toilet and start beating him. The detainees therefore used a corner of their cell as a toilet. They used military blankets to create some kind of toilet. P40 further described that if they wanted to sleep at night, it was very difficult because there were too many people. They had to sleep back-to-back to use all the space.

Because P40 was detained for a long time he got scabies. He also got an acute tonsillitis. There was a doctor for the Branch whom P40 told that he needed medicine. The doctor told P40 to eat salt instead. P40 said this person was a doctor but he behaved like a security officer. P40 got salt every time the food was distributed. However, the salt caused his throat to bleed.

Kerber wanted to know how often the detainees got food. P40 said they got food twice a day consisting of one piece of bread, sometimes eggs and tomatoes, and sometimes only an egg.

Kerber asked if it was enough food. P40 said it was of course not enough. He added that the detainees were beaten, and the detention conditions were very difficult. According to P40, the detainees were exhausted due to the torture, and the guards insulted their families using words that P40 was ashamed to repeat in court.

Kerber asked him to just mention one term as an example so the court could understand how bad the insults were. P40 said the easiest and most common term was son of a bitch.

Kerber said that would be sufficient and explained to P40 that she wanted to know how long he was detained, how he was released, and where he was detained in the first place. P40 explained that he did not know where he was, he only found out after he was released. He added that it happened around twelve years ago at the end of 2010, so he could not remember how long exactly he was detained. However, he guessed it was more than one month.

P40 described how, before he was released, he was again taken to the office of the investigating officer together with other detainees. The officer gave them a lecture about loyalty towards the state. The officer also told them that their arrest was a mistake, but they would only serve the security of the state. They therefore had to arrest good and evil people to filter them. P40 said he and the other detainees could only thank the officer (it was their duty to thank him). They were then taken to another room where there were clothes.

The clothes were used and P40 assumed they belonged to previous detainees. He and the others were allowed to dress with these clothes as they were about to be released. P40 said he and the other detainees started counting the clothes and decided to only wear undershirts, so the other clothes could be used by the people still in detention. P40 added that they were naïve, because the clothes were never given to other detainees and only to be used by people who were released.

P40 said when he was released from the Branch, he realized he was on Baghdad Street close to the Red Crescent hospital. When P40's brother was released a couple months later, one could see signs of torture on his body. P40 explained that he himself had to endure relatively little torture, probably due to his young age. He described how he was tortured: lying on his stomach, hands tied behind his back, and beaten on his legs and feet. P40 said he was also hit with fists.

Kerber asked whether P40 knew the number of the Branch that was close to Baghdad Street and the Red Crescent hospital as he just described. P40 said he did not know the number, but learned later that it was Branch 251.

Kerber asked if it was possible that P40 spoke about the number of the Branch while he was still detained or might have seen a sign with the number on it. P40 remembered that there was a cupboard with a piece of paper, an announcement on it. The paper said it was Branch 251. P40 said he learned after his release that the person in charge of the Branch was Hafez Makhoul, a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad.

Kerber asked P40 whether he needed a break and told him to let the court know if he needed one.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled P40 saying he was detained for more than one month. According to Wiedner, P40 told the police he was detained for around 45 days. P40 affirmed.

Wiedner asked if P40 was released in 2011. P40 said he was arrested at the end of 2010 and released in early 2011. He added that when he was released, the revolution in Egypt started.

Wiedner recalled that P40 said he was interrogated by Anwar Raslan but did not know the name of this person at the time. Wiedner asked P40 how he knew the name by now and how he identified Raslan. P40 said the police showed him pictures and he recognized Raslan in one of them.

Wiedner asked P40 to describe how the identification procedure with the police happened, how and why P40 recognized a person from the pictures. P40 said he could only remember one person.

Wiedner said that according to the police transcript, P40 said he thought he knew the person in the first picture and mentioned some features of this person. P40 said he cannot remember the number of the person he recognized but he did recognize one of them. He recalled telling the police that the birthmark was not there in 2010 or at least that he could not remember it. P40 said he could remember other features.

Wiedner recalled P40 telling the police that he thinks he recognized the person in the first picture and added that he was however not sure since the person who interrogated him at Branch 251 had thicker hair, no beard, and a smaller birthmark. P40 confirmed, adding that he told the police that the birthmark was not as present back then as it would be now.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether there was a birthmark [for the person who interrogated him at the Branch]. P40 said to be honest, he cannot remember as it happened a long time ago.

Kerber said the court would now visually inspect pictures from the selection of pictures that the police showed P40. When the first picture was shown, P40 said he remembers this person. Kerber asked him if this was the person who interrogated him at the Branch. P40 affirmed

When the second picture was shown [The court monitor noted that this was a picture of the defendant] P40 said he remembers telling the police that the person in this picture had less hair and a different birthmark than the person who interrogated him.

Kerber asked if the person in picture 2 was the one who interrogated him in 2010. P40 said the person in the first picture looked more like the one who interrogated him. P40 did not recognize anyone from the following pictures.

Judge Wiedner told P40 to take a look around and asked him whether he could identify anyone in the court room as the officer who interrogated him. P40 said if he recognized someone, it would be Anwar Raslan [pointing at Raslan].

Wiedner asked when and where P40 saw a picture of Anwar Raslan on the media. P40 explained that one month after his police interview, he read on the internet that two people were arrested. He read that there would be a trial dealing with crimes against humanity committed by the Syrian regime. P40 added that he did not see a picture [of Anwar Raslan] before that.

Wiedner said he did not fully understand whether the person who interrogated P40 had a birthmark or not. P40 said he could barely remember. However, he recognized general features in the picture, so he told the police that he did not remember whether there was a birthmark or not.

Wiedner wanted to know how the interrogation officer was dressed. P40 was confused whether Wiedner meant the officer at Branch 251 or someone else. Wiedner explained he meant the officer at Branch 251 whom P40 identified, asking if he wore a uniform, casual clothes or a suit. P40 said he was wearing a suit without the jacket, but shirt, tie, trousers, and glasses.

Wiedner asked how many times P40 was interrogated in total. P40 said he could not remember the exact number but he was interrogated more than seven or eight times.

Wiedner wanted to know if he was always interrogated without wearing blindfolds. P40 affirmed.

Wiedner asked if it was always the same person and room for all interrogations. P40 said it was always the same office and most times the same interrogation officer.

Wiedner asked if he understood correctly that the office was in the same area as the cells, or if it was rather further away from the cells. P40 said it was in the basement but at a different hallway. He added that he drew a sketch during his police interview based on what he was able to remember.

Wiedner wanted to know what the interrogations were about. P40 said the topic was that he and his brothers are Kurds and allegedly tried to teach people Kurdish language. They were accused of being members of the Kurdish party and his brother was accused of “going to the mountains”, which meant he was accused of joining the PKK. P40 said he was told that the fact that he and his brother did not join the Syrian army was proof of their accusations. P40 explained to the court that his brother did not serve mandatory military service because he was the single earner in the family.

Wiedner asked if P40 was beaten during or after the interrogations. P40 described how he was beaten during interrogations every time the officer did not like P40’s answer and gave a sign to the guard who then hit P40’s neck. P40 said he was kicked and slapped on the back of his head. The interrogation officer then told the security officer to take P40 with him to the hallway. In the hallway, P40 had to lie on his stomach and was beaten on his feet with a four-wire cable. P40 said he himself was tortured by being beaten on his head and feet with the cable. His brother, however, had to endure different, massive torture just like other detainees.

Wiedner wanted to know if the interrogation continued after P40 was beaten on the floor or if he was taken back to the cell. P40 said he was taken back to the cell and it was somebody else’s turn.

Wiedner asked if P40 was mistreated using electric shocks. P40 said he himself did not receive electric shocks, however, one could see signs of electroshocks on his brother’s body.

Wiedner told P40 that if he wanted to, he could describe to the court what happened to his brother. P40 said he could only describe what he saw. Wiedner asked him to do so. P40 said his brother had to endure Doulab, beatings with the four-wire cable, electric shocks, and kicks all over his body. One could clearly see the signs on his body.

Wiedner wanted to know if P40 spoke to other detainees in his cell about what happened to them. P40 denied, explaining that they did not have the courage to do so because they were too afraid that there were spies amongst them. When someone returned to the cell, others could clearly see the signs on his body but did not have the courage to ask what happened.

Wiedner recalled P40 mentioning electric shocks and asked how he knew that others were tortured like that. P40 said one could tell from the obvious signs on their bodies. His brother also later told P40 about it. P40 added that his brother was also detained at another branch, as he was transferred to Najha.

Wiedner referred to signs of torture on the bodies of fellow detainees and asked P40 whether he saw severely wounded people. P40 said most had bruises due to the beatings with the cable, his brother had bruises as well.

Wiedner recalled P40 saying he was shocked by the old man and asked him if this man was injured. P40 denied, adding that he imagined that this man had been there for a long time. According to P40, he was wearing a clean pajama and was detained in a solitary cell. The security officers wanted to take him out of his cell, but the man could barely walk. P40 said he was shocked because the man was older than 75 years for sure and P40 did not understand why one would arrest such a person.

Wiedner asked P40 if he remembered the size of his own cell. P40 denied, adding that it was very tight.

Wiedner recalled P40 telling the police that the cell measured 5x5 meters. P40 said he could not remember, but there were twenty to thirty people inside the cell.

Wiedner asked about the furniture in the cell, whether there was something to sleep on. P40 said there were military blankets.

Wiedner asked if every detainee had a blanket. P40 affirmed, adding that the blankets were very rough.

Wiedner further recalled P40 telling the police that his head was shaved at the beginning of his detention. P40 affirmed, explaining that everyone had to shave their heads to prevent scabies, although they still got scabies. He remembered that one time, their entire cell was sterilized.

Wiedner asked if P40 was allowed to go outside and see the sun. P40 said one could see the sun from the hallway.

Wiedner recalled P40 telling the police that the detainees were once taken outside to see the sun. P40 clarified that they were not taken outside the building but to the hallway where there was a light shaft. One could see the sun through this shaft which was in the hallway between cells and toilet.

Wiedner concluded that the basement was in the underground. P40 affirmed.

Wiedner said P40 provided detailed descriptions to the police regarding the conditions of his fellow detainees, and asked P40 if he remembered. P40 said others were tortured differently and more massively because they were older than P40. He said others were beaten with the cable all over their bodies, while he was only beaten on his feet. Others also had to endure Doulab.

Wiedner asked if P40 saw other methods of torture, recognized signs of these methods or was told about it. P40 said he was not told about it, only by his brother after he was released. Others did not tell P40 about it, but he could see the signs.

Wiedner recalled that when P40 was asked by the police about the condition of other detainees, he described that they were tortured with electric shocks and their skin was ripped off with tongs. He asked P40 whether that would be correct. P40 said there must be a translation error as he told the police that people were pinched with tongs but not that their skin was ripped off.

Wiedner wanted to know how P40 knew about that. P40 said his brother told him.

Wiedner recalled P40 further telling the police that people were hanged from their feet, locked in a cupboard, and screamed. He further mentioned that one could hear screams and see blood and open wounds on other detainees. P40 told the court that the police asked him about Shabh, but he told them that he did not see that, although it might have been applied with other detainees. P40 said he also told the police that the methods of torture were less severe in 2010 compared to 2011. After the revolution started in Syria, torture got massive.

Wiedner asked P40 how he knew that. P40 said he knew from other detainees who were released later.

Wiedner again cited from the police transcript according to which P40 told the police that one could still see the signs of electric shocks on his brother's stomach until that very day. Another person also told P40 how he received electric shocks on his way to the interrogation. P40 told the court that he could not remember the situation with the guard [person receiving electric shocks on the way to the interrogation] but it would be true that one could still see the signs on his brother's body.

Wiedner asked P40 whether he lost weight during the detention. P40 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P40's relatives knew about his whereabouts. P40 denied, saying they did certainly not know. He explained that they were also unable to find out. P40 added that the police also wanted to know if he went to see a doctor after his release. He then explained that a person who got out of a branch does not have the courage to go anywhere. P40 added that Syrian society believed that people who were arrested by the intelligence services committed a crime. This would be the mentality of the Ba'ath party and their justification for arresting a lot of people.

Wiedner asked why P40 was arrested or what he was suspected of. P40 said the only reason would be that this state [Syria] is an arbitrary state, a security state [state run by security forces]. When the revolution in Syria started, the regime started to spoil it in several cities across the country.

Wiedner recalled P40 telling the police that in Syria, people would be writing reports about other people. Someone allegedly wrote a report about P40's brother teaching Kurdish language. P40 told the court that spies for the regime would be called "Fasfaseh" فاسفس [bug] in Syria. According to P40, the accusations against him and his brother came from these people. Another reason for their arrest was that his brother refused military service, so he was accused of having joined the PKK. P40 said that to be honest, the reason for that was the bad economic situation of his family, which was also the reason they moved to Damascus.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge said the prosecutors had only a few questions. The first would relate to the fact that P40 was one of the few witnesses who was detained at Branch 251 before the revolution started in 2011. Nonetheless, P40 called his arrest unlawful. Klinge wanted to know if P40 ever saw a lawyer or anyone like that. P40 denied, explaining that would never happen in Syria. Not even the police would enter the cells.

Klinge asked if there was an arrest warrant against P40 or if he was informed about the reasons for his arrest. P40 denied, saying it was arbitrary.

Klinge wanted to know if P40 ever saw a judge. P40 denied, adding he did not even see a judge upon his release.

Klinge asked if P40 heard screams in his cell. P40 affirmed.

Klinge wanted to know if this was the case every day, always or from time to time. P40 said it was mainly during the day.

Klinge wanted to know how many times it was the case. P40 said every few hours.

Klinge asked how long the interrogations and mistreatment usually lasted. P40 said he does not know exactly, sometimes around ten minutes. For him it was usually five minutes.

Klinge wanted to know if P40 saw women at the Branch. P40 denied.

Klinge asked if P40 was a victim of sexual violence or knows others who had to endure sexual violence. P40 denied.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Fratzky wanted to know if the person who interrogated P40 spoke some dialect. P40 said he spoke Arabic, his dialect was similar to the Damascene dialect.

Plaintiff Counsel's Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said that he saw how P40 was waiting at the witness stand alone before the session when Raslan was there as well. He asked P40 if Raslan said anything to him. P40 denied.

Plaintiff counsel Kroker recalled P40 saying that his family had no information about his whereabouts and that P40 mentioned a saying in this regard to the police. Kroker asked P40 whether he remembers this saying or if Kroker should read it to him from the police transcript. P40 asked Kroker to read it out.

Kroker said P40 told the police that “The one who is arrested is lost. The one who is released is newborn.” P40 told the court that this would be a common saying in Syria regarding the intelligence services. People say that whoever gets there [detention facilities] is lost, whoever gets released is newborn. It means that when you get released it would be like you were gifted a new life.

[Anwar Raslan handed a piece of paper to his translator who passed it on to defense counsel Fratzky.] Kerber asked if there would be any more questions. Defense counsel Fratzky denied.

P40 was dismissed as a witness. Judge Kerber thanked P40 and told him he was free to leave or stay in the court room. P40 said he would like to make a personal statement to the court. Kerber asked him to roughly tell her what it was about, so she could decide whether to grant his request or not.

P40 said he wanted to thank the court to also sentence Salafists and radical forces, particularly because the Kurdish population in Syria is suffering a lot due to them. He thanked the court.

Kerber thanked P40 and went on to explain that the court received the transcript of an interview of a person who requested to join the proceedings as plaintiff. Copies of the transcript were handed to the parties. Kerber said the person was permitted to join as plaintiff. She added that attorney Bahns requested to be admitted as plaintiff counsel for this person and none of the parties made any statements in this regard. Kerber went on to tell the parties that the office of the federal prosecutor general received an analysis regarding military hospitals in Syria which would now also be on the case file.

The Proceedings were adjourned at 11:27 AM.

Day 83 of Trial – July 15, 2021

The hearing began at 10:00AM [due to delays because of heavy rains] with four spectators and three members of the press in the audience. One non-accredited journalist was granted access to the Arabic interpretation [the same as the day before]. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Ritscher and Klinge. Plaintiff counsel Dr. Oehmichen was not present. Attorney Ziorovski appeared as substitute for Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker.

Testimony of P41

P41, a 43-year-old Syrian currently living in [information redacted] was accompanied by his plaintiff counsel Mohammed and informed about his rights and duties as a witness. P41 denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Judge Kerber’s Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that P41 had already been interviewed by the German police, however, he had to repeat all that in court for the public and all parties to the trial. She asked him to give the court an overview of how he came into conflict with the regime, if and how he was arrested. P40 explained that the security situation in Syria had been precarious for forty years. According to P41, it all started with Hafez Al-Assad and the Syrian society would be suppressed for forty years. P41 said the actual actor in Syria would be the Mukhabarat [security forces].

Although not every member of the Mukhabarat would be an officer, they would be free to do whatever they want, said P41. They conduct arbitrary arrests as part of the state of emergency and everyone who was arrested by the intelligence services is considered to be lost. Even the fates of the people who were arrested at the massacre would still be unknown, according to P41. He went on to explain how with the beginning of the Arab Spring, society started to stand up against Bashar Al-Assad. They were demanding reforms, social justice, equal rights, and restraints to the security apparatus. The reaction of the regime [to these demands] was excessive violence. According to P41, the security apparatus was instrumentalized for that [reaction]. They quelled demonstrations and arrested people for the first one and a half years after the start of the revolution. After that, there were liberated areas at first. These areas were under control of the opposition and the security forces had less competencies there. P41 said that the actual activities of the intelligence services during the first one and a half years [after the start of the revolution] were solely related to demonstrations.

He told the court that the regions in Syria were allocated amongst the intelligence services. Al-Khatib Branch was in charge of Ghouta and the surrounding area. P41 recalled that when he was protesting in Harasta, [members of] Al-Khatib Branch were patrolling and arresting people. P41 said he was arrested on a Friday in [information redacted] 2011, and taken to Al-Khatib in Damascus. That was where the phase of interrogations, investigations, and torture by the employees led by Colonel Anwar Raslan started. P41 said he was still suffering from the consequences of that until this very day. He was still receiving psychological and neurological care in [information redacted].

Judge Kerber asked P41 to be more precise and explain how he was arrested, where he was taken, how he was taken there, and how he was treated during detention. She added that he could tell the court any time he needed a break. P41 said he was on the street in front of [information redacted] mosque in [information redacted], 2011. They were demanding to change the regime, a coup. P41 explained that four months after the start of the revolution, there was massive violence and killings, so people changed their demands.

Kerber asked how the demonstrations were and where P41 was arrested. P41 said at the beginning [of the revolution] he participated in many demonstrations in Harasta. A group of young folks went to the streets, shouting slogans. At the beginning it was all about freedom and social justice. Later, they demanded the release of their friends. Due to the excessive reaction of the regime, they later demanded the downfall of the regime. According to P41, all demonstrations were peaceful, it was just people gathering on the streets.

Kerber asked P41 to describe precisely how the demonstration where he was arrested took place and how he was arrested. P41 described that on [information redacted], 2011, around fifty people started walking from the [information redacted] mosque. They were shouting slogans demanding the downfall of the regime. P41 carried a camera and filmed and photographed what was happening to post it on YouTube in order to show the world the truth. Then security forces started sieging the area and they had to leave the area and the demonstration. P41 tried to get home with the help of some friends. When they were close to [information redacted] mosque a security patrol suddenly appeared. P41 and his friends had to stop and were arrested. They were beaten with the butts of rifles, kicked, and pushed into a car. There they had to wait for a couple hours until the security forces arrested other people as well. They were then taken to Al-Bairouni hospital in Harasta which was used by the regime as a focal point for arrests. Once security forces gathered there, everyone was taken to Al-Khatib.

P41 recalled that when they arrived at Al-Khatib Branch, their hands were tied behind their backs using cable strips and their vests were pulled over their heads. They were taken off the bus and to a door leading to the basement. There they had to kneel and one detainee after the other was taken to the basement. P41 said while they were taken inside, they were insulted and beaten. They were all called traitors and spies. When they were inside, they had to hand over all their belongings, including clothes and money. P41 further described that they had to get undressed to their shorts, were frisked, and got their clothes back afterwards. The detainees were then allocated to different cells. P41 was taken to cell [information redacted] where he had to stay for four days. He was interrogated during that time but did not confess anything as he did not do anything, as P41 told the court. P41 told the interrogators that he was at the mosque and when he left, he was arrested just like that, but did not do anything. P41 explained that although thanks to spies, they [interrogators] knew that he was filming protests and demonstrating, they did not know his name. After four days he was transferred to the general administration of the intelligence services in Kafar Souseh.

The procedure there was similar to what happened at Al-Khatib: he was frisked and had to hand over his belongings. P41 said he had to stay at Kafar Souseh for six days. He was interrogated and beaten several times during this time. Nevertheless, P41 stuck to his initial story. P41 further told the court that during his time in Kafar Souseh, Al-Khatib Branch obtained a picture of him from which they knew that he was the person they were looking for. He was therefore re-transferred to Al-Khatib where the second phase of interrogations began. P41 recalled that his name was called at night when he was in his cell in Kafar Souseh. He said goodbye to his friends there as they all assumed that he would be released. P41 was then taken to a room where all his personal items were. His hands were tied again, and he was blindfolded. He was taken to a jeep and to Al-Khatib Branch.

When he arrived at Al-Khatib Branch, he had to endure the same procedures as before. He was again taken to the same cell, [information redacted]. After around one hour, he was called for interrogation. When the guard took him, he was blindfolded and taken to the interrogation officer. This person asked P41 several questions. P41 was asked for his name, he told it. He was asked whether he was married, P41 affirmed and said he had children. He was then asked about the name of his son and told that he would be Abu Hassan, the person they had been looking for. P41 recalled that he mentioned another name that his friends used for him, they called him Mimati. The interrogation officer then asked P41 whether he should call him Abu Hassan or Mimati. P41 said that this was the moment he realized they knew a lot about him. He first denied. The guard then got the order to take P41 to solitary cell [information redacted].

One hour later, P41 was interrogated again. The interrogation officer told P41 to take off his blindfolds and introduced himself as Lieutenant Colonel Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan. P41 realized that another person was sitting on the floor. P42 was asked whether he knew that person. He affirmed, saying he was his friend. P41 told the court that this person would currently live in [information redacted]. P41 said he was then confronted with this person, the fact that he was his friend, and information about P41. The guard was then ordered to take the other person back to the cell. The interrogation officer then said that since P41 would be an educated person, they should try to treat each other in a respectful manner. P41 was told they knew everything about him, nevertheless, he should tell everything himself: what he did against the Syrian state, who his friends and partners were with whom he conducted his acts against the state. He was given a pen and sheets of paper and told to go back to the cell and write everything down: starting with his birth until that very day.

The guard was told to take P41 to cell [information redacted] [solitary cell] where P42 started to write everything down starting with his birth, school education, beginning of demonstrations, and his participation in peaceful demonstrations. He then knocked on the door and told the guard he would be ready. The guard then took him to the interrogation room “the usual way”, P41 was blindfolded.

When he arrived at the interrogation room, P41 was told to take off the blindfolds. P41 saw a desk opposite the door. That was where Colonel Raslan was. Lieutenant Colonel Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan sat left of Raslan. He took the sheets of paper and started to read. P41 told the court that he was given seven empty sheets, however, he only used the first half page. The Lieutenant Colonel then passed the sheets to Colonel Anwar Raslan. Raslan also read it and threw the paper in P41's face. Raslan told the Lieutenant Colonel “I told you he would not understand!” P41 told the court that he could not blame the Lieutenant Colonel, as the two were playing a “good cop – bad cop” game. After Raslan threw the paper, he said “take him and teach him in a way he understands. Once he is ready cooked, bring him back.” P41 explained that this was an order to torture him. He was taken back to the solitary cell and first abused with sleep deprivation and not being allowed to sit down for three days. P41 said every time he fell down due to tiredness, the guard came in, beat him, and put him back on his feet. P41 asked the court for a break.

Judge Kerber asked P41 what happened during his first detention after he met Raslan. P41 said after he was taken back to the solitary cell where he was not allowed to sleep and sit for three days, he was done with his nerves. The guards again took him for interrogation. The interrogation officer was Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan who asked P41 who his friends were with whom he conspired. P41 told the court he only answered so far as to not get himself into trouble. He only mentioned names that were already known or from people where they only had pictures. P41 explained that he knew most people via skype where they used imaginary names.

Kerber wanted to know what P41's interrogations were like. P41 explained he had to kneel on the floor. The interrogation officer was sitting on the sofa next to him, smoking and asking questions. If he did not like one of P41's answers, he kicked him. The guard who was standing behind P41 beat him with a belt every time P41 answered too slowly. P41 further explained that he was interrogated daily for around one or two hours for four days in a row. He said he could tell from the questions what the [people at the Branch] knew and what they did not know. Based on that, he provided them only information that they already knew: that he filmed demonstrations and posted the videos on YouTube, Facebook and Al-Arabiya. The main accusations against him were: damaging the reputation of the state, contacts with the opposition, and distribution of fake news to foreign media. P41 said he only confirmed things they already knew.

Kerber asked if it was correct that P41 was interrogated for four days. P41 confirmed.

Kerber asked P41 to describe what happened next. P41 explained he was then confronted with the fact that the employees of the Branch wanted to storm the place where he and his friends slept. P41 told the court that he and his friend agreed to change their location in case one of them gets arrested. In the morning, P41 was put in a car with his eyes blindfolded. He was taken to the Lieutenant Colonel who told him that P41 would go to Harasta together with the employees of the Branch.

Kerber asked about the Lieutenant Colonel's name. P41 said it was Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan, the deputy head of the Branch who was in charge of interrogations. P41 added that tasks were split between the people working at the Branch and An-Na'saan was in charge of interrogations.

Kerber wanted to know what happened next after this person told P41 to go to the place where his friends slept. P41 said he was taken to a car and another car was driving behind them with a machine gun built on top. He was taken out of his cell without being blindfolded, only his hands were tied behind his back. He was taken through the door of the basement like that. The patrol then drove to Harasta and when they arrived, P41 was told to show them the way. When they arrived at the building, P41 was told to stay in the car. He told them the number of the floor and the flat. P41 told the court that they [employees of the Branch] went inside and came back after thirty to forty minutes. He was then taken back to the Branch. P41 added that after he was released, he found out that they smashed the door.

Kerber concluded that P41 was still in detention and asked him to continue. P41 said that when he was back at the Branch, he met Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan who told him that there was no one in the flat and asked P41 where these people would be now. P41 said he told him that his friends were there before he was arrested but he did not know what happened after that, since he was in detention ever since. P41 was taken to a different solitary cell, [information redacted] where he had to stay for 25 days.

P41 described that he was allowed to use the toilet twice a day; in the morning and in the evening. His cell was very small, around 1.6x0.8 meters without a toilet inside. The food was given to him through a gap under the door. He received two meals per day which usually consisted of eggs, bulgur, and flatbread. He was interrogated again after 25 days.

P41 said the interrogator told him that from their current knowledge, they knew that P41 was in charge of media issues and in possession of a recording device. P41 was told to hand the device in to be released. P41 told the court he knew they had no evidence against him but if he would have given them his camera, they would have been in possession of evidence. P41 further told the court that this device was in his car which he parked close to the mosque. But since he was arrested, no one knew where the device was. He wanted to let his friends know where the device would be so they could use it. P41 therefore tricked the Lieutenant Colonel and told him he would provide information about his devices. P41 requested to see the mayor of Harasta to talk to him. The following day, P41 was again taken to the Lieutenant Colonel. He told P41 that he would be taken to the office of the head of the Branch where the mayor would be waiting as well. Indeed the mayor, [name redacted], was there. He greeted P41 and asked about his well-being. P41 told the mayor he could find the keys to his car at one of P41's friends who also knew where the car was because they were together when P41 was arrested. P41 further told the mayor to hand the device to P41's father who would then give it to the Branch. P41 recalled that after a while he learned from the Lieutenant Colonel that P41's friends failed him and P41's device would be more important to them than P41's life. P41 said he was again interrogated a couple days later. The interrogation officer was very angry and told P41 he had a phone call with a leading figure in Harasta (P41 told the court this person sadly passed away). The interrogation officer said he learned from that call that Abu Hassan told his friends where his device was and they would now be in possession of the device. P41 said the head of the Branch was very angry because P41 used them and played games with them [people at the Branch]. He ordered beatings.

Kerber asked if the conversation with the mayor of Harasta took place in the office of the head of the Branch. P41 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know who else was present during this conversation. P41 said there was no one else. When he was taken to the room, the Lieutenant Colonel accompanied him.

Kerber asked if the head of the Branch was angry because of the recording device. P41 said this was what Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan told P41.

Kerber wanted to know who the head of the Branch was. P41 said it was Colonel Anwar Raslan and his deputy was the Lieutenant Colonel Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan.

Kerber asked if P41 personally saw Raslan and saw he was angry. P41 denied.

Kerber asked who ordered the beatings. P41 said Raslan ordered it the first time.

Kerber wanted to know who ordered the beatings in the situation regarding the recording device. P41 said it was Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan.

Kerber asked P41 to continue. P41 said he was beaten until he fell unconscious. A doctor came and a pill was put under P41's tongue to cure his heart issues. The doctor recommended that P41 take the pill every day but the people at Al-Khatib did not follow the recommendation. P41 recalled that when he was transferred to the general administration in Kafar Souseh, he received the pill every day.

Kerber quickly recapped that after the situation regarding P41's recording devices, he had heart issues, received a pill, was transferred to Kafar Souseh. She asked P41 what happened after he got the medicine. P41 said after that another person was taken to his solitary cell in Al-Khatib, together with him.

Kerber asked if P41 was talking about the 1.6x08. meter big solitary cell [information redacted]. P41 confirmed, saying that an injured person from [information redacted] was taken to his cell. This person slept on the floor, lying on his back. P41 therefore had to stand for hours. He recalled that this other person fell unconscious and every time he woke up, he was asking P41 who he was and who P41 was. This person relieved himself in his clothes. P41 therefore had to clean up. They stayed together in the solitary cell for a long time, around 87 days, until P41 was told there would be a trial in Kafar Souseh.

Kerber wanted to know if P41 had to stay in Kafar Souseh for a long time or was released immediately. P41 said he stayed there for a long time, he was only released thanks to the Arab League on January [information redacted], 2012.

Kerber asked if it would be correct that this date was shortly before P41's second arrest. P41 confirmed, saying he was arrested at home 25 days after his release. He recalled that someone knocked on the door in the morning and people from Al-Khatib Branch started searching the flat. P41's brother-in-law stayed with him that night. He was only 24 or 25-years-old when they were arrested together.

P41 said the arrest followed the same procedure as the first: Their hands were tied, and they were blindfolded. When they arrived at the Branch it was the same procedure again: they had to hand in all their personal items and undress. P41 said he was separated from his brother-in-law at the Branch. P41 was taken to a group cell, [information redacted], where he stayed for fifteen days before he was taken for interrogation. When P41 entered the interrogation room, Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan was there as well.

P41 explained to the court that although he was blindfolded, he recognized the Lieutenant Colonel's voice. He asked P41 "[P41's name], what's the matter? You're here with us again." P41 replied that he was only there because he was taken there and added that the entire country would be in the hands of Assad's gangs. P41 told the court that he was unable to walk. The Lieutenant Colonel told him they knew everything about him but had some questions regarding people who visited P41. These people were wanted and they [intelligence services] wanted to know more about P41's relation to them. P41 replied that these people only visited him to ask about his well-being and congratulate him on his release. P41 recalled that he was then told he would be released but should report everything to the Branch in the future, otherwise he would be taken there. When P41 was taken back to the cell, he asked if he had to stay there for long, the Lieutenant Colonel denied. P41 told the court that he had to stay at Al-Khatib for three more days before he was transferred to Kafar Souseh where he stayed for ten days until he was released.

Kerber said her last question would be how many times P41 met Anwar Raslan. P41 said he met him once.

Kerber asked P41 whether he needed a break or if the court could continue with questions. P41 said it would be alright for him to continue.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner said he wanted to clarify a few things regarding location and dates. He asked P41 if it was correct that he was arrested for the first time on [information redacted], 2011. P41 confirmed.

Wiedner asked whether it was correct that P41 was then released mid-January 2012, on January, [information redacted] 2012. P41 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the chronology of P41's first detention: when he was at Al-Khatib, when at Kafar Souseh, when he was back at Al-Khatib, and how many times he was at Al-Khatib respectively Kafar Souseh. P41 explained that at his first detention he was at Al-Khatib for four days before he was transferred to Kafar Souseh where he had to stay for six days. After that, he was transferred back to Al-Khatib where he stayed until he was again transferred to Kafar Souseh. P41 said he could not remember the exact date when he was again transferred to Kafar Souseh, but he estimated that he stayed at Al-Khatib around 100 days before he was transferred. At Kafar Souseh, he stayed fifteen days before he was released due to an initiative.

Wiedner asked if the time P41 was taken back to Al-Khatib he had to stay there for fourteen days or longer. P41 said he was there from early February until May.

Wiener summarized that during his first detention, P41 stayed four days at Al-Khatib, six days at Kafar Souseh and then asked how long P41 stayed at Al-Khatib after he was taken back there from Kafar Souseh. P41 said he was at Al-Khatib for four days, then six days at Kafar Souseh, and after that...[P41 took some time to think] he stayed at Al-Khatib from November/December on for around two months and ten days.

Wiedner wanted to know how P41 knew he was at Al-Khatib at his first detention. P41 said he could tell from the streets leading to the Branch. P41 explained that he knew the area and that it was common knowledge that everyone who gets arrested would be taken to Al-Khatib. P41 added that he was only certain after his release.

Wiedner recalled P41 telling the police that he learned from other detainees that he was at Al-Khatib. P41 affirmed, adding that he knew from the beginning but was only sure after his release when he met with the mayor.

Wiedner asked when P41 met Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan for the first time: during P41's first four days at Al-Khatib or after he returned from Kafar Souseh. P41 said it was after Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner asked how P41 knew the name and rank of this person. P41 said the person told him.

Wiedner asked P41 to describe his first meeting with this person: how he acted and what he wanted to know from P41. P41 said the person asked him about his personal information to make sure P41 was the person they were looking for. At their second meeting, he confirmed that information and confronted P41.

Wiedner mentioned the term 'offer to collaborate', adding that in case P41 could not remember, he could read out what P41 previously told the police in that regard. P41 told the court he could remember. He recalled being offered to collaborate with the Branch. They tried to win him over and get information from him.

Wiedner recalled P41 telling the police that at their first meeting, the Lieutenant Colonel introduced himself and told P41 that since he would be smart and not violent, he should cooperate. P41 explained that the translation [in the police transcript] was slightly wrong there. He was rather offered to provide information without torture. He was offered to provide information without being mistreated.

Wiedner asked if the following meeting was with Raslan. P41 said the third meeting was with Raslan. The second meeting was with An-Na'saan.

Wiedner summarized there was a first meeting, then a second during which P41 was confronted, and a third together with Raslan. P41 confirmed.

Wiedner asked how P41 could be certain that it was Anwar Raslan. P41 explained that Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan introduced Raslan with his name and rank. He told P41 to provide him the information he wrote down and give him the sheets of paper.

Wiedner asked if there was a sign with Raslan's name on it. P41 affirmed, adding that he could not read what was written on it. There was a sign with a name on it and a pencil cup, however, P41 was not able to decode what the sign said.

Wiedner asked P41 to take a look around and tell him whether he recognized Anwar Raslan in the room or someone who looked like that person back then. P41 said he recognized someone. Wiedner asked whom he recognized. P41 pointed at Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner went on to ask if the interrogation room was on the same floor as the cells or if there were stairs in between. P41 said it was the same floor.

Wiedner asked P41 to describe the furniture. P41 recalled that there was a door and a desk opposite of the door. Left of the desk was a sofa and a table. He said that was all he could remember, and that there was a picture of the president on the wall.

Wiedner wanted to know where Raslan was in that room. P41 said he [Raslan] was behind the desk. Left of him was Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan.

Wiedner asked if there was another person in the room as well. P41 said there was a guard. Wiedner asked where that guard was. P41 said he was behind him.

Wiedner further wanted to know where P41 was in the room and how his position was. P41 said he was one meter from the door.

Wiedner asked if there was a particular guard. P41 said it was Abu Ghadab.

Wiedner recalled P41 describing a situation where sheets of paper were thrown at him, and an order was issued. He asked P41 to describe this reaction that happened before he left the room. P41 said this reaction was due to the fact he did not write down the information they wanted from him. He wrote everything from his birth to the start of the revolution but only two sentences on the revolution. That was what triggered this reaction.

Wiedner wanted to know if both people that were present in the room reacted when P41 gave them the papers. P41 explained that the Lieutenant Colonel took the papers first, read them, and then handed them to Colonel Anwar Raslan, addressing him as "Sidi". Raslan took the papers, read them, and threw them at P41. P41 said Raslan was angry and told An-Na'saan "he doesn't understand words. Teach him in a way he understands."

Wiedner asked if there was a concrete order for torture. P41 denied.

Wiedner recalled P41 telling the police that Raslan turned to An-Na'saan, saying "it looks like he did not understand that language." He then ordered deprivation of sleep until P41 would be "well cooked and ready to eat." P41 affirmed, adding that this was coming from An-Na'saan. The guard then took P41 with him.

Wiedner wanted to know what Raslan said, if he gave any orders. P41 said Raslan gave orders, he said that P41 should only get back once he is well cooked and ready to eat. All other orders came from An-Na'saan. According to P41, he was the one who ordered the deprivation of sleep.

Wiedner asked if P41 could tell from the interactions between An-Na'saan and Raslan whether they had the same rank or sub-ordination. P41 said Raslan gave orders to An-Na'saan. The latter addressed Raslan as "Sidi" while Raslan addressed An-Na'saan by his name.

Wiedner wanted to know how Raslan was dressed. P41 could not remember.

Wiedner asked how P41 was dressed. P41 said he was wearing a suit and tie when he was arrested. After his arrest when he was beaten, his clothes were ripped, and he arrived at the Branch solely wearing a shirt and shorts. One of the detainees in the group cell was wearing long underwear that he gave to P41. P41 recalled that when the mayor saw him dressed like that in the middle of winter, he requested that P41's family could bring him clothes. However, P41 never got these clothes.

Wiedner asked if P41 consequently wore long trousers, and his body was naked during the interrogation. P41 said he also wore a vest.

Wiedner recalled telling the police regarding Raslan's clothes that he was wearing civilian clothes: jeans and a shirt. P41 further told the police that everyone at the Branch was wearing civilian clothes, even the guards in front of the door. P41 affirmed in court that everyone was dressed in civilian clothes. He could not exactly remember what they wore but added that all members of security branches were always wearing civilian clothes.

Wiedner asked if P41 noticed a particular dialect or language that Raslan spoke. P41 denied, explaining he could not tell from his dialect where he came from. He added that Raslan did not say much.

Wiedner asked if Raslan said anything else to P41, maybe insulted him. P41 said he could not remember.

Wiedner recalled that when P41 was asked by the police if Raslan insulted him, he affirmed, explaining that Raslan said 'you fucker, what about these demonstrations, don't you have a good life?' P41 clarified in court that Raslan did not say that. Raslan did not interrogate P41. These words rather came from Lieutenant Colonel An-Na'saan, not Raslan. According to P41, he only met Raslan once.

Wiedner wanted to know if P41 heard screams in the interrogation room. P41 affirmed, saying of course he heard screams. One could hear voices and screams of torture. One could hear them especially in cell [information redacted] which was opposite of the interrogation room. P41 concluded that detainees were taken there on purpose to torture them psychologically.

Wiedner asked P41 if he also heard screams during the interrogation with An-Na'saan and Raslan. P41 said that might have been the case. One could also hear people in the hallway who were called rats.

Wiedner recalled that P41 was taken out of the interrogation room and not allowed to sleep for three days after that. He asked P41 what else he had to endure, if he was beaten with a cable. P41 said he was beaten with a belt and his hands were tied. He said he had to endure that until he got difficulties with his nerves.

Wiedner recalled P41 telling the police that he had to lie on his stomach with his arms tied behind his back and his feet in the air. He was asked questions and whipped by Abu Ghadab. P41 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if it was correct that P41's knees started bleeding because they were pushed on the floor while his feet were beaten. P41 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P41 saw signs of torture on other detainees or if someone told him what they had to endure or if he witnessed others being tortured. P41 affirmed. Wiedner asked what exactly P41 saw or heard. P41 recalled that while he was in the solitary cell [information redacted] a person from [information redacted] was tortured right in front of the cell. His name was [FD1], his brother was [name redacted], a doctor. The latter treated injured people, so his brother was detained to put pressure on him. P41 said he could hear his screams, the ones who tortured him wanted information about his brother and accused his brother of being a terrorist. He kept saying that as a doctor at a hospital, his brother had to treat all patients. P41 said this person died of torture.

Wiedner asked P41 whether he only heard this scene or saw it, or if he heard that from someone else. P41 explained that before he was in the solitary cell, he was in a group cell where he constantly heard people [being tortured] and saw signs of torture on their backs. P41 remembered a person from [information redacted], he was an air-conditioner technician, relatively big and taller than P41. Once he was called for interrogation and when he returned, he was carried by three guards who threw him into the cell. He was covered in blood and unconscious. P41 said the other detainees made space and cleaned his wounds with tissues.

Wiedner asked if there was medical care at the Branch. P41 denied.

Wiedner recalled P41 mentioning screams he heard while he was in the solitary cell. He asked P41 how often and when he heard them. P41 said one could hear them most times. They were sometimes louder, sometime less loud.

Wiedner recalled P41 explaining to the police that he was taken to the solitary cell [information redacted] on purpose because it was right next to the interrogation rooms from where one could constantly hear screams. One could hear the beatings and the screams. There were many people and P41 was constantly afraid to be next. He said he could hear the detainees crying for mercy and the guards replying that there was no god, but them alone. P41 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the general condition in the cell; how big it was and how many people were in there. P41 said it was around 4x4 meters or 5x5 meters. There was a sink in the corner and a toilet. However, there was no door to separate the toilet from the rest of the room, just curtains.

Wiedner asked about the hygienic condition and the number of detainees in that cell. P41 said on one occasion they were more than eighty detainees in the cell. Then people from Al-Abadeh were arrested and they were more than 100 people in the cell. No one could sit down, they all had to stand. P41 said that after two or three days some people were taken out of the cell.

Wiedner asked how they managed to sleep. P41 said people had to stand. They sometimes leaned on to each other. Or tried to make space.

Wiedner asked if they got enough food in the group cell. P41 said they got food twice a day; in the morning and at noon. Food usually consisted of flatbread, sometimes potatoes or olives. The second meal was usually four or five bowls of bulgur that they had to distribute among them. Sometimes they got soup.

Wiedner asked if it was enough. P41 denied.

Wiedner wanted to know if the light was switched off at night. P41 explained the light was always the same. One could not tell day from night because it was in the underground. There was a fan in the cell so people could breathe. Behind the fan was a strong light which was never switched of. P41 said they were sometimes able to tell the time when they heard the call for prayers.

Wiedner asked if P41 saw injured people or was told by others in the cell about torture methods. P41 said that due to his work in documenting demonstrations, he saw several corpses from Al-Khatib. He documented all that, some of the material can be found on YouTube. P41 describe some people showed open wounds or fractures.

Wiedner said the court would only be interested in what P41 saw at Al-Khatib, not what he saw after that. P41 said he saw signs from beatings, injured people, and blood. He recalled a person whose feet were bleeding due to beatings, the feet were swollen and blue.

Wiedner asked if P41 remembered something relating to fingernails. P41 denied.

Wiedner recalled P41 telling the police that he saw blood due to ripped off fingernails. P41 said that might have been the case, however, he could not remember in this very moment. He added that every day someone returned from interrogations, he could therefore not remember everything. One person had the corners of his moth ripped because his mouth was splayed during an interrogation.

Wiedner asked if P41 saw dead people or people close to death at the Branch. P41 said he saw people who were close to death, but no dead people.

Wiedner asked P41 to describe the people who were close to death. P41 said there was a detainee who was unable to breathe. The other detainees were knocking on the door and told the guards what was happening. The guards in turn just said there was nothing they could do about it and that it would be OK for them if he would 'croak'. P41 said they told the guards that there were too many people in the cell, so this person had difficulties breathing. According to P41, this person never returned to the cell.

Wiedner asked if that happened during P41's first or second detention. P41 said it was during his first detention.

Judge Kerber said the judges had no more questions for the moment, so there would be a lunch break before others could ask questions.

***

***

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P41 if his headache was gone and he felt fit to continue. P41 affirmed.

The prosecutors had no questions for the moment.

Defense's Questioning

Defense counsel Fratzky recalled P41 telling the court that there was a name plate and a pencil cup on the desk. P41 affirmed, adding that he however could not read what was written on the name plate.

Fratzky said that when P41 was shown different pictures during his police interview, he hesitated when he saw picture No.2 before he said that he knew the person in the picture but could not remember a name. According to Fratzky, P41 did not hesitate to mention a name in court. He wanted to know if P41 between his police interview and the day in court...Plaintiff counsel Bahns intervened, saying that Fratzky cited the police transcript falsely: P41 did mention a name during the police interview. Judge Kerber said P41, however, did not mention a name right away, so Fratzky's citation would be fine. Fratzky finished his question, asking P41 if he saw a picture of Anwar Raslan between his police interview and his testimony in court. P41 denied, adding that he told the police the name Anwar Raslan.

Fratzky wanted to know when and how P41 learned about Raslan's arrest. P41 said he could not remember a date. He read on the internet that an official from the Syrian intelligence services was arrested. P41 then did some research and found out that this person was the head of Al-Khatib Branch.

Fratzky asked if P41 saw pictures of the person who was arrested during his research. P41 denied, adding that it was not clear to him at the beginning who the arrested person was. He had friends in Germany who then told him it was Anwar Raslan.

Fratzky wanted to know if P41 was only told about the identity of this person or researched it himself. P41 denied, explaining that a friend from [information redacted] told him that this person was the head of Al-Khatib Branch.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

P41's counsel Mohammed recalled P41 telling the court that he is receiving medical care due to his detention and asked what exact treatment he would receive. P41 explained that he had psychological issues since his detention and difficulties falling asleep. He can only fall asleep in the early morning.

P41 added that he often feels absent and isolated. He therefore went to a psychotherapist in [information redacted]. He also suffered physical damage as the nerves in his hand are damaged. P41 said he had to undergo many tests at a hospital in [information redacted], including MRI. He further received physiotherapy, and it was eventually found that the nerves in his hand are severely damaged and not located where they should be. P41 said he also had to take tranquilizers. The doctor at his workplace then said that P41 was only allowed to work for 16 hours a week and only do jobs where he does not have to lift heavy things.

Mohammed asked if his right or left hand was damaged. P41 said it was his right hand.

Mohammed further wanted to know if P41's dominant hand was right or left. P41 said it was his right hand.

Mohammed recalled P41 mentioning that he filmed and posted demonstrations and other things at the beginning of the revolution. He asked P41 whether he had his own channel. P41 explained that he handed certain pics to channels like Al-Jazeera and Al-Arabiya. He only shared recordings where one could not see the faces of people, so they would not be arrested. P41 said other videos were stored in a specific archive. He also shared recordings of martyrs on channels for torture and deaths.

Mohammed asked if the recordings were uploaded on YouTube. P41 affirmed.

Mohammed asked if P41 uploaded the videos himself. P41 affirmed, explaining that some videos were uploaded by him, others by friends.

Mohammed asked about the name of the YouTube channel. P41 said it is called [information redacted].

Mohammed wanted to know if the videos are still available or deleted. P41 explained that some videos were deleted by YouTube, some were rescued, and some were uploaded again.

Mohammed asked if he understood correctly that P41 uploaded videos on YouTube that showed detainees from Al-Khatib Branch. P41 confirmed.

Mohammed asked what exactly one could see there. P41 said one could see signs of beatings and open, deep wounds.

Mohammed wanted to know during what timeframe these videos were recorded. P41 said they were recorded between the beginning of the revolution and end of May 2012. He added that he was released in May and immediately left Syria.

Mohammed recalled P41 describing that people were crying for mercy while the guards told them, they were Allah. Mohammed asked if he understood that correctly. P41 confirmed.

Mohammed wanted to know if P41 prayed in detention. P41 said of course he did not pray. He was detained with many other people, all in one cell. He once prayed but the guards entered the cell and because he did not stand up, he was beaten.

Mohammed asked if the guard said or did anything. P41 described that the guard opened the door while P41 was sitting and praying. The guard then told him that P41 was not taken there to pray. P41 said it was horror, he was insulted for praying and called by the name of a revolutionist sheikh.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer wanted to ask P41 a question but Presiding Judge Kerber noted that the prosecutors had some questions first.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge referred to videos and pictures allegedly showing detainees from Branch 251 and asked P41 if one could see from that material that these people were actually from Branch 251. P41 said that when these people were arrested, they were taken to Branch 251. The mayor then told the families they could pick up their corpses at the hospital. P41 explained that the people were not buried immediately due to the cleaning rituals, so he photographed them.

Klinge asked if P41 knew these people were coming from Branch 251. P41 said everyone who gets arrested is taken to Al-Khatib Branch. He photographed the corpses a few days after they were handed to the families. P41 said it was a young man, [C1], and an elderly man, [C2].

Klinge wanted to know when the corpses were handed to the families. P41 said it was in 2011, definitely before 2012.

Klinge further wanted to know where the corpses were handed or picked up. P41 said the mayor sent one of his employees to the hospital in Tishreen.

Klinge asked what this person did at the hospital. P41 said he received the corpses and handed them to the families.

Klinge concluded that the corpses were picked up at Tishreen hospital. P41 confirmed.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said he had a question for the judges: he found out that P41's YouTube channels still exists, including videos of corpses showing signs of torture that were uploaded during the indictment period. He would like to inspect these videos together with P41 and ask him questions. Presiding Judge Kerber said OK. Scharmer asked how this should be done; if he tells the court the link and they would inspect the videos in court.

Judge Kerber said she does not see any necessity to conduct investigative work at that moment. She reminded Scharmer that there was already a first judgment and there were too many open questions about the videos to inspect them on this day.

Scharmer suggested to have a break to answer some questions, adding that what P41 said was of non-negligible interest. Judge Kerber said she understood that the witness filmed two people of whom he assumes they had been at Al-Khatib Branch. Both corpses were picked up at Tishreen hospital. Scharmer added that it would be possible that these two people had been in Al-Khatib.

Kerber said the judges would need to figure that out first. Scharmer replied that P41 would however be in court at that very moment and only a few videos were relevant. Kerber ordered a ten-minute-break to allow the plaintiff counsels to issue a relevant request which the judges would then make a decision on.

***

Presiding Judge Kerber turned to plaintiff counsel Scharmer to ask him about the request. Scharmer explained that his colleague Bahns would just be typing their request and asked how they should submit it to the court. Kerber said they should send it via email to the court's administration officer.

Plaintiff counsel Bahns intervened, saying he was disturbed by the court's proposed procedure. He said he is aware that this would be happening on very short notice, however he deemed the court's very narrow deadline to be inadequate. Judge Kerber replied that plaintiff counsel Scharmer just told the judges to inspect some videos in court, however, she would be aware that some plaintiff counsels already showed Judge Wiedner during the lunch break videos on their phones. Kerber added Bahns should do some introspection. Bahns replied he was just explaining his own perception of the situation, adding that he was well-aware how complicated the matter was. However, this only came up during the questioning.

Judge Kerber told the plaintiff counsels to send the request via email.

Plaintiff counsel Kroker added that the plaintiff counsels did not show Judge Wiedner any videos. They only told him that these videos existed. Judge Wiedner intervened, saying he was not shown videos but sources and screenshots.

Prosecutor Ritscher intervened, explaining that the prosecutors would be willing to task the BKA to have a look at the relevant YouTube channel and write a respective note on it. He added that all this still needs to be done properly. He suggested the BKA should first analyze the channel and assess whether the court needs to fulfil its duty of judicial enquiry. This way, there would already be a pre-selection and assessment of relevant videos.

Judge Kerber thanked the prosecutors, adding that this would however not relieve the judges from their obligation to make a decision on the relevant requests to inspect the videos in court.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said he and his colleagues did not want to delay the issue since P41 would now be present in court anyway. However, he would be open to have a break and resume if the judges would like to discuss first. Kerber said the analysis of this YouTube channel with thousands of videos would take more than one day. She added she would leave it up to Scharmer and his colleagues to file the request or not. If the prosecutors want to analyze the videos and add it to the case file, the court would of course inspect relevant videos. Kerber concluded that they would be talking about two corpses that were picked up at Tishreen hospital.

Scharmer said P41 said something else during the break, he and his colleagues therefore submitted their request to inspect some videos.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked if there would be further questions for P41 which can be asked until the request arrived via email. Scharmer said he had unfortunately no more questions at the moment but could read out the request in the meantime.

Attorneys Scharmer, Kroker and Bahns request to visually inspect the following video [URL was read out] which can be found on YouTube together with P41.

This will show the corpse of C2 who was detained at Al-Khatib Branch and whose corpse was handed to his parents. This person was detained at Al-Khatib Branch at the same time as P41, however, they never met there. The person's parents later said their son's corpse was handed to them by employees of Al-Khatib Branch.

Relevance: A dead person showing signs of torture who was detained at Al-Khatib Branch during the indictment period and died in custody due to violence.

The court's administrative officer said she received the relevant requests via email. She found them in the spam folder.<sup>3</sup>

P41's counsel Mohammed said he would join this request. Plaintiff counsel Bahns said he submitted another request which he could read out as well. Presiding Judge Kerber told him to do so. Before reading the request, Bahns said he wanted to clarify that he always felt the climate at the court would be good and constructive. He did not want to offend anyone and would therefore take back his earlier comment.

Attorneys Bahns, Kroker and Scharmer request to visually inspect the following video [URL was read out] which can be found on YouTube.

P41 said the video shows C1 who was arrested and detained at Al-Khatib Branch. The administration of Harsata was contacted by Al-Khatib Branch regarding the corpse. P41 took the video after the corpse was handed out.

The person in the video shows massive signs of torture and was arrested at Al-Khatib Branch during the indictment period.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the parties for statements.

After a short discussion with his colleague Ritscher, Prosecutor Klinge said he doubts the required connectivity of the request. He added that the request would therefore not be a proper request. He further questioned the evidentiary value of the video without analyzing the metadata.

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It is not clear if or why P41's counsel was not aware of the videos and did not prepare a relevant request prior to this hearing day. It is also noteworthy that P41 had to sit in the witness chair for more than one hour without being asked any questions and not fully comprehending the proceedings despite simultaneous interpretation.

Klinge proposed a calmer approach: to analyze the YouTube channel. Since P41 already joined the request, he would certainly be willing to return to court and be questioned about relevant videos.

Defense counsel Fratzky said he objected to the request for the same reasons that the prosecutor just mentioned. He added that it would be more like an exploration of certain things.

Plaintiff counsel Mohammed already joined Scharmer's request. None of the parties made additional statements regarding Bahn's request.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber said she had a few additional questions for P41 regarding C2, asking P41 what he could tell the court about this corpse. P41 explained that out of these two videos, he filmed one himself. On this video [which he filmed himself] one could see C1 and another person in September 2011. P41 took this video himself and saw the corpse himself. He could clearly see the signs of torture on the corpse. He published the video on his channel [name redacted] but other channels also released it.

Kerber concluded that P41 was the one who took the video showing C1. P41 confirmed.

Kerber wanted to know how this corpse got to the place where P41 took the video. P41 recalled that security people from Al-Khatib Branch contacted the mayor of Harasta and told him that there would be two corpses at Tishreen hospital which needed to be picked up. The mayor then contacted the families and sent his deputy to Tishreen hospital by car. This person then took the corpses with him. When the corpses were with the families, P41 was called and filmed it.

Kerber asked how P41 knew the story involving the mayor and how the corpses were handed to the families. P41 said he did not witness that himself, but the families told him about it when he was with them to film the corpses.

Kerber asked P41 how he knew that these people were actually dead. She apologized for the question, adding that it would be sufficient if P41 could say that they stopped breathing or something similar. P41 said he saw the corpses himself when they were cleaned and he took the videos. He touched the corpses and turned them around to film all aspects. He said that this was what happened with C1.

Kerber wanted to know more about C2. P41 said he was his friend and he was arrested when P41 was in detention. When P41 was released, he was surprised to hear that C2 and four other people, among them P41's cousin died of torture. They were arrested in Harasta and their corpses were handed over a couple days later. P41 said his cousin did not even participate in demonstrations, he simply slept at his home. P41 said his cousin's brother was shocked when he was arrested and his body handed over as a corpse.

Kerber asked if P41 was there when the corpse was handed to the family. P41 said he was in detention at that time and surprised when he found out that he died.

Kerber asked if P41 was present when C2 was handed over to his family as corpse. P41 said he was in detention.

Kerber wanted to know how P41 found out about all that. P42 said he asked about it when he was released. He was told that he died as a martyr. There were videos showing him.

Kerber asked if P41 made these videos himself. P41 denied, adding he only saw these videos. He took the video showing C1.

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking how P41 knew that C2 was detained at Al-Khatib. P41 explained that he found out after his own detention when his relatives and friend told him that C2 was arrested together with four others and their corpses were released on the same day.

P41 asked the judges if he could add something. Judge Kerber allowed him to do so. P41 said there would be another person who might contribute to this: during P41's detention at Al-Khatib he was detained in solitary cell [information redacted] where he could hear how a person was tortured right in front of his cell. P41 knew the person and heard everything. The person was FD1, he was arrested because his brother [name redacted], a doctor was wanted.

Kerber said P41 already told the court about that. P41 added that he took a video of this corpse which also showed signs of torture.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Ritscher concluded that the video showing C2 was not taken by P41 personally but uploaded on his YouTube channel [name redacted]. P41 confirmed, adding that he was in detention at that time.

Ritscher wanted to know who took the video. P41 said it was a friend of his who currently lived in [information redacted].

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer referred to the video showing C2 [P41 consulted his counsel]. Scharmer asked whether P41 was able to identify the person from this video. P41 affirmed, saying it was his neighbor.

Scharmer asked if the person's parents told P41 which branch gave them the corpse. P41 said all corpses were handed over at Tishreen hospital.

Scharmer recalled P41 mentioning that the person's parents said employees of Al-Khatib Branch gave them the corpse. P41 explained that the common procedure was the following: such corpses were first transferred to the military hospital, then the mayor was informed who in turn informed the family who then went to the hospital to get the corpse.

Scharmer said he understood from what P41 told him during the break that C2 died at Al-Khatib Branch. Scharmer wanted to know from P41 what he knew about that and how he knew that. P41 said it was not only C2 who was detained at Al-Khatib and died there.

Scharmer recalled P41 saying that the corpse was picked up at the hospital and asked P41 how he knew that the person did not die there which would also be a possibility. P41 said he had no information about that. He only knew that five corpses were handed over there [at the hospital] all of whom were previously detained at Al-Khatib Branch.

Plaintiff counsel Kroker said he had some questions regarding FD1, recalling that P41 previously mentioned him and a relevant video on YouTube. Kroker asked P41 what he could say about that. P41 explained the video would show how the corpse was handed to the family after he was detained at Al-Khatib. He was then buried. P41 added this person also knew one of P41's cousins. P41 said he personally knows that this person was detained and tortured at Al-Khatib.

Kroker recalled P41 identifying this person based on his screams, asking if there were other features that helped P41 identify the person. P41 said he recognized his voice because he was a friend. He also identified him based on the questions he was asked about his brother: where his brother went, where the field hospitals were located, and how his brother moved around. P41 said the answer to these questions was that the person's brother was a doctor from [information redacted] who had the duty to help all injured people. P41 added the doctor was eventually arrested and tortured with electric shocks. His kidneys stopped working and he would currently live in [information redacted].

Kroker wanted to know if P41 was involved in the making of the video showing how the corpse was given to the family, which can be found on P41's YouTube channel. P41 said he did not personally see FD1. However, he could confirm that he was at Al-Khatib and tortured there. P41 said he did not take the video himself as he was already outside Syria when the corpse was handed over.

Kroker wanted to know whether P41 knew the link to the relevant video and would be willing to share it. P41 affirmed, saying he was willing to share it with his counsel.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner wanted to know if it was correct that P41 had already left Syria when the corpse was handed to the family. P41 confirmed.

Wiedner asked when P41 left Syria. P41 said he left Syria at the end of May 2012.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer asked if he understood correctly that some videos were deleted by YouTube and then uploaded again. P41 confirmed that the video was still available. He added that some videos were not released and would be stored in an archive.

Scharmer concluded that the date the video was uploaded is not necessarily the date the video was created. P41 explained that for the public videos, the date they were uploaded would be the same date they were created. He added that they were timely back then.

Scharmer said he understood earlier that some videos were taken down and then uploaded again. P41 explained that the videos relating to FD1 and others would still be available on YouTube and were not taken down. They were released by different channels.

Plaintiff counsel Bahns asked P41 what else he knew about C1 regarding date of arrest and other things. P41 said this person was arrested in [information redacted] where he was hiding. His corpse was handed to his family like P41 already described. P41 added he was a friend of his.

Bahns wanted to know when this person was arrested. P41 said September 2011.

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled P41 telling the court that he left Syria in May 2012. The police transcript however said he left Syria in May 2013. Kerber wanted to know if P41 left Syria in 2012 or 2013. P41 said he left Syria in 2012. He joined the coalition in 2013.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said he and his colleagues had no further questions, however, they requested a break to discuss their request.

P41's counsel Mohammed asked if his client was dismissed as a witness. Judge Kerber denied. Scharmer added that although he wished P41 could be dismissed as a witness, the requests were no requests to take evidence, but to visually inspect items together with the witness. P41 would therefore be needed for further questions.

***

***

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said that some facts would be different after the questioning, in particular whether the people actually died at Al-Khatib Branch. He suggested to inspect screenshots of the videos in order for P41 to identify the people. This would also prevent P41 from having to come to court from abroad a second time.

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to know what this means in regard to the plaintiff counsels' requests. Scharmer said they would be redundant. After some confusion about how to display the relevant screenshots in court, Judge Kerber ordered to visually inspect the black and white printed pictures of the two documents that Scharmer just send the court via email.

When the first picture [showing the face of an apparently dead person with bruises and injuries] was shown, Scharmer asked P41 whether he knew that person and if so, who it would be. P41 said he knew this person, his name was C2, a friend of his.

When the second picture was shown [again showing the face of an apparently dead person with bruises and injuries] Scharmer asked P41 the same question than before. P41 again confirmed that he knew this person, saying his name was C1.

Plaintiff counsel Bahns said he would take back his request, Kroker and Scharmer said they would also take back their requests. Presiding Judge Kerber concluded that all requests were taken back.

P41 was dismissed as a witness.

Judge Kerber cancelled the trial day initially scheduled for the following day.

The Proceedings were adjourned at 3:10PM.

The next session will be on July 21, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN
Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 42
Hearing Dates: July 20 & 21, 2021

P42, a woman who worked for the EU delegation in Syria, testified as a plaintiff about her detention and interrogations in Al-Khatib Branch. P42 testified that she received special privileges due to her position and was permitted at times to return home at night. She would then have to return in the morning and was subjected to torture and beatings. She identified Raslan as being present during some of her interrogations, however, he never spoke directly to her. She stated that neither Raslan nor her interrogator ever beat her, however, the guards would often hit her or torture her as if it was a game. P42 testified that many of her friends shared stories of torture and sexual assault and she knew many people who disappeared and to this day remain missing.

Trial Day 85 – July 22, 2021

P43, Raslan's son-in-law, testified about his knowledge of Raslan's defection and when he decided to defect from the Intelligence Services. P43 stressed that Raslan was a peaceful individual who opposed violence on all sides. P43 testified that Raslan decided to defect in 2011 when he was under surveillance after he was suspected of helping detainees, but Raslan would not leave without his family. P43 shared that he, himself, was kidnapped by members of the Free Syrian Army for three days and questioned about Raslan, before being freed. The prosecution team noted that P43's information about Raslan's defection was different from Raslan's story, though P43 claimed that he did not know the details of Raslan's defection, only the plans that ultimately did not work out. Despite P43's verbal support of the opposition, it was also noted that he used terminology for the revolution that is often used by the Syrian government. P43 ended his testimony by sharing that a witness had said on social media Raslan's whole family should be killed. The witness' name was shared with the judges.

The proceedings began at 9:40AM with seven spectators and four members of the press in the audience, including a court illustrator. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Defense Counsel Böcker was not present. The plaintiff was represented by Dr. Patrick Kroker.

Testimony of P42

P42 noted that she would testify in German and that she did not need headphones for translation. Judge Kerber asked her to keep them just in case.

Instructions were read to P42 and she was informed of her rights and duties as a witness.

Judge Kerber asked P42 for her name, age, and profession. P42 answered that her name is [REDACTED] and she is 34 years old and in charge of an NGO.

Judge Kerber asked P42 if she is related to the accused by blood or marriage. P42 responded that she was not related in any way.

Judge Kerber asked P42 how she was detained in Al-Khatib Branch. P42 said that she used to live in Damascus and was involved in the revolution from the beginning and was detained in Al-Khatib, but she was not arrested directly at Al-Khatib Branch. She was traveling [REDACTED] kilometers away from Damascus and was detained at a checkpoint. She was taken to a security branch and her ID card, laptop, and other stuff were taken. That evening, she was sent home and was told that she had to appear at Al-Khatib the following day. The following day she did not go and hid for a couple of days because she did not want to go. She had heard that Al-Khatib was a very bad place, and she did not want to go there before she was prepared. She had to go eventually though, so, she asked where it was located and then went to Al-Khatib. The first day she only waited in a room where there was a small TV. It was more of an administrative branch. No one asked her any questions or talked to her. Someone gave her tea. In the afternoon someone came to her and said that the person who was responsible for her was not there and asked her to come again the next day. She went the following day and her [P42 asked the interpreter about the meaning of the word, and he responded "Ermittler" ("investigator" in English) [interrogator] was there. The investigator asked her about the city and the checkpoint where she was detained. She told him a fictitious story to avoid talking about the real story. The investigator was not convinced, but he continued the questioning. She did not tell the truth and did not mention names, so the investigator became unfriendly and took her to another room. She was tortured several times, but she did not tell the real story. She stayed in Al-Khatib for 50 days or two months. They did not return her belongings and told her that they did not have them. He told her that she always had to inform him when she wanted to travel abroad (She did that once when she traveled to Egypt but she did not have to do it again afterward, such as when she traveled to Germany).

Judge Kerber asked P42 when she was detained at the checkpoint. P42 said the checkpoint incident was on March [REDACTED] 2012. She went back home that day and was asked to go to Al-Khatib the following day.

Judge Kerber asked P42 if she spent the night in Al-Khatib and if yes then for how long. P42 said she did not spend the night there. She went home after the interrogation, but when she did stay there, it was approximately 7 – 10 days later.

Judge Kerber asked if it was in March or April. P42 said she thinks that it was April when she [first] stayed overnight, but she was not sure.

Judge Kerber recalled that P42 said that she was in charge of an NGO. Judge Kerber asked P42 what her work was. P42 said she was working on education for the EU delegation, of "Haya."

Judge Kerber asked if P42 told the interrogator about her work. P42 said yes, he knew about her work.

Judge Kerber recalled that P42 sometimes spent the night in Al-Khatib and sometimes did not. Judge Kerber asked P42 what happened when she did. P42 asked if Judge Kerber meant when she stayed overnight.

Judge Kerber confirmed. P42 said that she was taken to an office for the interrogation.

Judge Kerber asked where that office was. P42 said that she was not sure. It was on the ground floor or the first floor. There were other rooms as well. The first interrogation happened there [in that office]. She started with her fictitious story. The interrogator was not convinced, but he was kind and told her that he was not an interrogator but rather her helper. He offered her coffee and tried to earn her trust saying that he was not evil. P42 said that she was trying to refresh her memory [P42 asked the interpreter about the meaning of the word and the interpreter said “auffrischen” (“refresh” in English)]. P42 continued saying that they took her to another room and blindfolded her. She was taken down a set of stairs to the basement. The stairs were not far away [from the room]. There was a big room with a table, chairs, and a bucket of water inside. It had no windows. P42 sat on the chair and so did the interrogator. Two young people working for the Branch were there, but they did not torture her. Nor did the interrogator. P42 had to wait for a long time, which was a type of torture. Sometimes, she waited with her hands tied upwards. No one talked to her, and it was difficult. They always hit her on her head, and she did not know why – also on her face and neck. They attached electric cables to her knees and fingernails. It was strange because she did nothing. Whenever she asked/wondered what she had done, he hit her again. The electricity was like a “Toy / Playing around” [It was like a game]. Outside the room, he [the interrogator] was kind, but in that room, they were different. P42 could not differentiate day and night.

Judge Kerber reminded P42 that she could take a break and that she could use the interpretation headphones whenever she wanted. Judge Kerber continued, asking P42 if her torture with electricity had sexual connotations as well. Judge Kerber recalled that P42 mentioned that they used the electricity on her knees and fingernails. P42 said that it was not only on her fingernails and knees but also on her breast and shoulders.

Judge Kerber reiterated the other part of her question asking whether there were sexual connotations. P42 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked what kind. P42 said that one of the young men pulled her head down to his “lower part”, and the other person told him to stop.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner said he wanted to go back to her detention and asked if she was politically active and what she did. P42 asked if Judge Wiedner meant her political activity.

Judge Wiedner confirmed. P42 said she participated in the revolution, demonstrations, and different networks, but she did not have a certain activity/role.

Judge Wiedner asked whether the people in Al-Khatib knew that about her. P42 said she is not sure.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 said that her first detention on March [REDACTED] 2012 was in Az-Zabadani بالزبادي by Al-Khatib branch. Judge Wiedner asked her how she knew that it was Al-Khatib branch. P42 said that she was told in the small security branch that she had to go to Al-Khatib branch.

Additionally, it was known in Damascus, and it was named after the neighborhood [the branch name is derived from the name of the neighborhood].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was told to go to Al-Khatib ["So, they told you to go there"]. P42 said yes.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 what she had heard about Al-Khatib. P42 said that it was 2012, and since the beginning of the revolution in 2011, her friends had been detained there and talked about it and the whole intelligence services. It was dangerous.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P42's recollection quoting from the police questioning transcript: "I did not want to go there, because I knew that there was mistreatment and friends of mine died there." P42 replied yes, not only in Al-Khatib but in different branches as well.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she could elaborate. P42 said that three of her friends were detained and were not released yet. Their families were told to take the personal belongings of their detained family members. P42 indicated that this was how she formed that negative image of the branch.

Referencing the police questioning report, Judge Wiedner asked P42 to talk about the keyword "Money – Bribe." P42 said she tried to sort out her situation and tried to make arrangements so she would not have to go back to the branch. "That woman" told P42 to tell "them" [Intelligence Services] the fictitious narrative.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 knew what happened to the money. P42 said that it was supposed to be given to a person in the branch.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 knew who the person was. P42 replied no.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 could estimate how often she was allowed to go back home after the interrogation. P42 said it was five times a week in the first or the second month, but it was after her detention and before she got her personal belongings. It lasted from March to the end of June.

Judge Wiedner said that when P42 was asked in the police questioning about when she could first go back home, P42 replied that it was at the beginning of April and maybe on April 4. P42 said that she could not hear Judge Wiedner.

[Judge Wiedner repeated his question]. P42 said yes, she did not go back home immediately. It was either March or April.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was correct that P42 had to spend nights in Al-Khatib during her detention. P42 said yes, it was two to three consecutive days and like that [P42 meant that she was detained two to three days at a time, and then she was allowed to go back home. Then she was detained again and so on].

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 said in the police questioning that it was ten days or two weeks. P42 said yes, but they were interrupted/intermittent.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 where she used to sleep when she was detained. P42 said in a small room alone. P42 did not know if it was on the ground floor or underground. There were no windows, and it was dirty.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 about its size. P42 said it was approximately 3x2 meters.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if there was daylight or windows. P42 said no, there was no light.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were no windows as well. P42 replied no, there were no windows.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was dark/dim all the time. P42 said there was only a hatch in the door and some light in the corridor.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if there was a toilet inside her cell or whether she had to go outside the cell. P42 said that she did not hear Judge Wiedner's question.

[Judge Wiedner repeated his question]. P42 talked to the interpreter who said that the toilet was outside [the cell] and there was a bucket for such matters [P42 did not clarify if the bucket was used as a toilet seat, or was filled with water for cleaning. Nor did she clarify whether it was in the cell or the WC].

[Kroker said that he would try to give P42 the headphones that transmit the German speech and see whether P42 would hear better. After putting on the headphones, P42 stated that she could hear better].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she saw other detainees. P42 replied no.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she saw other detainees or cells when she went to the toilet. P42 said that there were three other cells, but she did not see other detainees. However, she heard other female detainees.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she heard sounds of mistreatment/torture. P42 confirmed that she heard women being beaten at night, but P42 was not sure whether they were in the corridor. P42 added that when she used to go to sleep, she heard crying and sometimes screams.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 where she was mistreated. P42 asked if Judge Wiedner was referring to her.

Judge Wiedner replied yes, she and others. P42 said that the room was slightly big. There was no furniture. In one corner there were some chairs and, in another corner, there was a water-filled bucket, cables, and wooden sticks.

Judge Wiedner stated that in the police questioning P42 said that there were traces of blood on the wall. P42 said yes, in other rooms as well.

Judge Wiedner asked which rooms. P42 said in her room [cell] as well.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 said in the police questioning that the chair was broken. P42 said yes, and her knees were tied to it once.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was hit with the chair. P42 said no, she was hit on her head. She added that she does not know how it happened, but she looked at her legs and saw blood, and she saw the chair broken.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 saw tires. P42 said she did not in that room.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 said that there was a blue hose. P42 confirmed that she remembers.

Judge Wiedner asked what methods were used during her mistreatment and what was used for beating. P42 said hands and legs. She does not remember everything, but mostly hands and legs.

Judge Wiedner stated that in the police questioning P42 said that she was hit with a hand on her head and was kicked as well. P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 said that she was sometimes whipped on her feet. P42 said yes, she remembers.

Judge Wiedner said that P42 stated that she was sometimes whipped on her feet when she was on the broken chair. P42 said yes, she does not know how [it happened], but she saw blood and saw the broken chair.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she remembers the whip. P42 said that she remembers the hose, but not much [about the whip].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if water was poured on her. P42 said maybe she washed her face. She is not sure.

Judge Wiedner said that P42 mentioned that she was hanged. Judge Wiedner asked P42 to describe how and where it took place. P42 said that it was at the wall that was opposite the table and sometimes it was when there was no interrogation. Her hands were up [she was hanged from her hands] and her feet almost touched the floor. P42 added that it [the hanging] happened only in the room.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 how she was hanged. P42 said at the wall.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a hook. P42 said that there was a chain on the wall, but she does not remember.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 was hanged several times. P42 said yes, approximately three times.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she stayed conscious. P42 said yes, all the time in the branch.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was interrogated during her mistreatment. P42 said yes, she was interrogated, and “they” wanted more information, such as whom she communicated with and where her abroad contacts were.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 whether that happened in the room. P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked how they [the interrogator/guards] reacted when she did not answer. P42 said that the interrogation started with threats. They asked her if she knew some people and who she had contacted. When there was no answer, one of the young people [staff members] slammed the table or would put his hand on her shoulder or neck when she did not answer. When she confronted them and asked them why they did that, they got angrier and hit more [It was unclear if she meant they would hit/slam the table or hit her more]. P42 added that “they” sometimes came alone with no interrogator and one day they used electric shocks.

Judge Kerber asked if the electric shocks were used in the absence of an interrogation. P42 said yes, she recalls that it was like “Playing around” and it was used only for their own amusement.

Judge Kerber asked how often the method was used. P42 replied, most of the time.

Judge Kerber asked if it was used in absence of an interrogator. P42 said that one day, the interrogator was absent.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 talked about how she was tortured in the presence of the interrogator. P42 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if the interrogator tortured her or if it was only the guards. P42 said only the guards.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 whether the interrogator said something or gave orders. P42 said yes, like "stop" or "leave it for later" and sometimes he said that P42 should cooperate.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if the interrogator who was upstairs was the same one during the interrogations underground. P42 said yes, in addition to other people.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was blindfolded. P42 said in the room, she was not.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 where she was blindfolded. P42 said on her way to the room [on the way between the cell and the interrogation room].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 when the blindfold was removed. P42 said when she got back [to her cell].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if there were insults/swearing. P42 replied yes, many.

Judge Wiedner asked what they were. P42 said "bitch/slut" and other words that she does not know in German. That and other sexual things.

Judge Wiedner asked what the "sexual things" were. P42 asked Judge Wiedner if he wanted to know what other sexual things were [P42 did not understand or hear the question properly].

Judge Wiedner said yes and asked P42 to tell the interpreter the words to translate. P42 said "shit/crap", "donkey/ass", "bitch/slut", "fucked one," and things like that.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 whether she saw the accused there in the branch. P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 to look around in the courtroom and say if she could recognize him again. P42 [looked at Raslan to her right] said yes, he was an interrogator in the interrogation room and she saw him on another occasion. There was another important person who wanted to see her. P42 was taken to a big office and there was furniture, windows, sofas, and the accused was sitting in the corner. P42 had looked at him [Raslan] in the interrogation room and he looked at her.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was blindfolded. P42 said no, not in that room. P42 added that she saw other people in the room. "He" [the important person, as explained in the next question] asked her how long she stayed there. The accused was sitting with other people drinking [tea, coffee...etc.].

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 mentioned that there was an important person. Judge Wiedner asked P42 whether she was questioned by the accused or that person. P42 said the other person [the important person].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 what she was asked. P42 said she was asked how long she stayed there and her name.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 whether she said anything else. P42 replied, no.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 what the accused was wearing. P42 said that he was wearing black.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if he was wearing a uniform or civilian clothes. P42 said civilian clothes.

Judge Wiedner asked which floor the office was on. P42 said it was above ground, but she was not sure. However, she looked at the window and it seemed that it could be the second floor.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P42's recollection quoting from the police transcript "the person identified himself as a colonel or a brigadier general." P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P42 mentioned that there were other people. Judge Wiedner asked if there were other detainees. P42 said she saw another person whom she thought was a detainee because he looked sick and did not look fresh. One could see that he was sick and was there for a long time. It seemed he was mistreated and had [P42 turned to the interpreter and asked him about the German equivalent for "bruises"].

Judge Wiedner asked [the interpreter] what the person [the detainee] had. The interpreter answered "bruises."

Judge Wiedner asked if he said something else. P42 asked if Judge Wiedner meant the young man [the detainee] or the important person.

Judge Wiedner said either one. P42 said that he [the important person] told her to go outside. P42 saw other people, but they did not talk with her much.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P42's recollection quoting from the police transcript, "They took me to the room with the important person. They removed the blindfold. I saw Raslan with other people. I was the only detainee. There was a man who wanted his son. There was also an old woman who was crying. I was wondering why I was mistreated. They took me back to the cell." P42 said that there were many people in the branch that day. A lot was going on.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 about the first situation when she saw Raslan. P42 said that he [Raslan] was in the interrogation room and had files with him. He sat there, did not speak directly to P42, and he did not do anything – he just sat there and talked with her interrogator. The interrogator [P42's] told her that he was on her side and mentioned that she was a Sunni and that she was lucky.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if Raslan introduced himself. P42 said no, he [P42's interrogator] just said that he [Raslan] was his colleague.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she talked with Raslan. P42 said no, he did not talk directly with her.

Judge Wiedner asked if her interrogator was the one who mentioned that she was a Sunni and lucky. P42 said yes, that was her interrogator.

Judge Wiedner asked whether P42 was mistreated upstairs or underground during Raslan's presence. P42 said underground. She did not see him upstairs [during an interrogation].

Judge Wiedner asked P42 whether she was mistreated in his [Raslan's] presence. P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 to describe how and when Raslan came into the interrogation room, and what he did. P42 said that he [Raslan] came with her interrogator and sometimes he came by himself after her interrogator was already there [in the interrogation room]. The situation proceeded as always; he was just sitting there. He did not do any specific task, nor did he participate in the interrogation. Her interrogator was the one who conducted the interrogation.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was mistreated when Raslan was there. P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked what type of mistreatment. P42 said she was hit on the head, and when she was not answering questions it was the same [she was hit on the head].

Judge Wiedner asked if that occurred often or just once. P42 said no, it was several times. P42 does not remember the situation well.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 to confirm that she was not interrogated by Raslan. P42 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she identified a certain dialect of the interrogators. P42 said she did not notice any. She is Palestinian-Syrian and cannot differentiate between dialects.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 when she connected the name "Raslan" with the person. P42 said that she did not understand.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 when she related/attributed the name "Raslan" to the accused. P42 said later, after the interrogation and his face was revealed.

Judge Wiedner asked if P42 meant after he revealed his face during her detention. P42 said no, after his pictures were published in the media.

Judge Kerber wanted to know if P42 meant that happened when she was in Germany. P42 said yes, in Germany.

Judge Wiedner stated that P42 was detained afterward, and asked P42 to describe when that was and what happened. P42 said she was still being summoned to Al-Khatib at that time. P42 had to see a person in a demonstration, but "we" [P42 did not explain if she meant herself and her friends, or detainees from the demonstration] were detained and were taken to Kafar Souseh. She had only her driving license with her, but not her ID card [as it was still confiscated in Al-Khatib]. P42 did not tell them that she was being detained in Al-Khatib. "We" were taken to interrogation rooms. There were other women and elderly men. She signed papers with claims that she worked for the opposition [P42 asked the interpreter to translate the following sentences. The interpreter translated the end of her answer]: That she was dealing with the opposition; undermining the psyche of the nation; participating in an illegal demonstration; and spreading fake news about Syria. She signed a pledge stating that she will not do such things again and was released the same day.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she was mistreated there. P42 said only verbally.

Judge Wiedner asked if she saw violence against other women. P42 said yes, the women told torture stories. One of them was pregnant and another one was old. The old woman was with her grandson and they were from south Damascus. The grandmother and the grandson were detained together for 8 months. One of the guards said “stop talking” and hit a woman.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if she got in contact with Branch 285 after that occasion. P42 said no, only that one.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 what happened at Al-Khatib branch after that incident in Kafar Souseh. P42 said she proceeded with Al-Khatib and told them that she was sick.

Judge Wiedner asked if Al-Khatib Branch knew about the detention in Kafar Souseh. P42 denied.

Judge Wiedner said that P42 mentioned in the police questioning that her interrogator called her at home. P42 said yes, he called her at home.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 what he [the interrogator] said. P42 said that he asked if she was alright and whether she needed help and told her when to come.

Judge Wiedner asked P42 if they wanted her to cooperate with the regime. P42 said yes, he told her to cooperate with the regime and give him contact information and names of people, and he told her to call him whenever there was a threat to the country.

Prosecutor’s Questioning

Prosecutor Polz asked P42 to describe the conditions during her detention: food, water, hygiene, medical care, injuries, etc. P42 said that she was allowed to go to the toilet, but taking a shower was prohibited. Food was a boiled egg or potatoes and olives. Generally, it was old. There was no medical care. According to what other friends had told her, P42’s situation was better than others.

Polz said that she did not understand the last part of the answer. P42 clarified that her friends told her that her situation was better than other detainees’.

Polz asked P42 if that means that the detention situation of other detainees was worse than hers. P42 confirmed.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled that P42 mentioned that she had to see an important person. P42 confirmed.

Fratzky asked P42 if that person was not Raslan. P42 denied.

Fratzky asked P42 to describe that person and what he was wearing. For example, was he was wearing a uniform? P42 said that he was not wearing a uniform, but rather a shirt. P42 stated that she does not have information about him and does not know his name. His hair was black and combed to the side. He had big shoulders. There is nothing much that P42 could say about him.

Fratzky asked P42 if there were commando units in the room. P42 confirmed.

Fratzky asked P42 whether she knows the purpose of taking her to that room and whether these people knew her. P42 said no, she thinks that it was a visit by that person. P42 does not know whether he was from the same branch or another one. He did not tell her that.

Fratzky asked P42 if she could estimate how long she stayed in the room. P42 said not too long; approximately 10 – 20 minutes and then she went back to her cell.

Fratzky asked P42 to describe her interrogator, such as whether he was wearing a uniform or civilian clothes, his dialect, etc. P42 said that he was not wearing a uniform and she could not differentiate his dialect, but it was not a strong dialect and he said that he was Sunni. He was wearing civilian clothes and the young men [guards] were wearing khaki, but not full uniforms.

Fratzky recalled that P42 said that she is Palestinian-Syrian. P42 said that she is Palestinian, but she lived her whole life in Syria and was born in Damascus.

Fratzky refreshed P42's recollection quoting from the police transcript, "Raslan said that he was a Sunni and he would help me." P42 said that she thinks that this was her interrogator, and he said that several times, not just when Raslan was there.

Fratzky asked P42 if she means that the person she talked about in the police questioning was her interrogator. P42 confirmed.

Fratzky refreshed P42's recollection quoting from the police transcript, "I could not identify Raslan's dialect, and I did not speak with him." P42 confirmed.

Fratzky said that Raslan did not say that he was a Sunni then. P42 said yes, it was the other interrogator.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer recalled that P42 said that before she went to Al-Khatib Branch, she mentioned that her friends were detained there and were not released. Scharmer asked P42 when and how long they were detained and if she could share their names if P42 does not have an issue with that. P42 said that regarding the names, she could not provide them, because she does not know if she is allowed to do so, and she does not know some of the names. Sometimes, P42 knows people without knowing their names. P42 explained that activists were detained starting in March 2011, but she knows people who were detained in ("let's say") October, November, and December 2011, and some of them died. One of her friends was released 17 days after she [the female friend] was detained and said this person died and that person died, and that is how P42 heard about them [the dead detainees]. Additionally, her neighbor's mother is Palestinian and was told that her son died. P42 knows more than 11 people who were detained between September and November and their whereabouts are unknown.

Scharmer asked P42 if that means that she does not know to this day whether they are alive. P42 confirmed.

Scharmer asked P42 how many of them were detained or died in Al-Khatib Branch. P42 said at least four are said to be dead [died in Al-Khatib].

Scharmer asked P42 if she was talking about the period between 2011 and 2012. P42 said no, only 2011.

Scharmer recalled that P42 was working for the EU delegation and asked her whether that gave her a special status. P42 said yes, she had a special status. She was detained alone [had her own cell] and was able to go back home. P42 heard from others who were detained in Al-Khatib about other torture methods and the large numbers of people [overcrowded cells]. There were diseases and there was no health care. P42 stated that she had a feeling when she went back home that she was granted special treatment. Therefore, P42 is thankful to be alive.

***

Judge Kerber read aloud a court order [Names have been redacted and replaced with SJAC's witness identification system. In case a witness did not testify in court, the trial day which details their previous police questioning is indicated]:

"1. The witness [P36] testified about deaths in Branch 251 during Ramadan 2012 when he was first ordered into the branch as a doctor. Ramadan was from July 19 - August 18. During his work, which lasted until 2013, he saw corpses as well as people who died later in the hospital. The causes of death were mostly prison conditions or abuse. He saw deaths almost every day and was able to remember three individual deaths; two in the branch and one in the hospital. He said he personally witnessed ten deaths during Ramadan and fifty during the whole period of his work. Altogether, there were probably 100, according to him, between July and September. Therefore, the crime of homicide for base motives could be considered according to §211 (2) StGB as well as crimes against humanity according to §7(1) No.1 VStGB in ten cases. The judges only take into account deaths which the witness witnessed himself.

2. As mentioned before on April 15, the prosecution is not prevented from adding charges where plaintiffs are joined to the case according to §395(5) StPO. Therefore, a conviction for the following crimes could be considered:

a) Plaintiff [P41] was detained from [REDACTED] 2011 to January [REDACTED] 2012. His hands were tied so tightly that he had lasting problems with his nerves. He was not allowed to sleep for 3 days and was beaten on his feet. This could amount to crimes under §223, 224(1) No.2, 239(3) No.1 StGB.

b) (The same for [P39])

c) (The same for [P38])

d) (The same for [P34])

e) Plaintiff [P33] was arrested for 23 days in Branch 251. She said she was not beaten but suffered with regard to the detention conditions, §223 StGB comes into question as well as §239(3) No.1 StGB due to the long duration of her detention.

f) ([P32] is mentioned, the abuse in addition to the sexual harassment, §223, 224(1) No.2, 239(3) No.1, 174a StGB, 177(1) No. 1 alt. 1 (old version) StGB – however, the judge's bench will take into consideration the inconsistent nature of her testimony)

g) (Same paragraphs as under (f) regarding plaintiff [P22])

3. The judges sees the conditions for the crimes of torture and severe deprivation of liberty met. Many witnesses have described the inhumane prison conditions, the mental pressure caused by other inmates' screams, the uncertainty about their own fate. This could amount to crimes under §7(1) No. 5 VStGB. It was the norm that detainees were subjected to arbitrary abuse, excessive violence, inhumane conditions, lack of legal reasons for detention, uncertainty about the duration of detention, lack of legal assistance, and that their families were not informed. This could amount to crimes under §7(1) No.9 VStGB. [P1], [P4], [P8], [P11], [P12], [P9], [P19], [P22], [P27], [P25], [trial day 59, TR#26], [P28], [P31], [P32], [P33], [FR18 on trial day 80, TR#39], [P38], [P39], [P41] [plus a few names not heard by trial monitor] as well as four anonymous witnesses described during the trial about such conditions.

4. Referring to the note based on §7(1) No.6 VStGB the judges point out that the following individual crimes could be considered: A stick was inserted into the anus of [P1]; the breasts of [P19] were groped; [P32] was harassed by the guard. Therefore, one case of rape and two cases of sexual coercion could be considered under §7(1) No.6 VStGB."

Judge Kerber distributed copies of the court order.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:05 PM.

The next trial session will be on July 22, 2021, at 9:30 AM.

Trial Day 85 – July 22, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with seven spectators and four members of the press in the audience, including P42 and a court illustrator. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Defense Counsel Böcker was not present.

Testimony of P43

P43 did not want to share his name initially, but Judge Kerber said that it was required.

P4, is a 38-year-old Syrian. P43 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He stated that he was related to the defendant and is the defendant's son-in-law [Throughout his testimony, he referred to Anwar Raslan as "my father-in-law"].

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked P43 what Raslan's job was in Syria when P43 first got to know Raslan. P43 said that by the virtue of their relationship, P43 knows him [Raslan] since P43 was four or five years old. He [Raslan] was working in Damascus and P43 was in Homs city. He used to visit "us" at home all the time and P43 also visited him all the time, because his [Raslan's] mother is P43's aunt [father's side]. During P43's military service in Damascus, P43 met Raslan several times, and when P43 finished it [the service], P43 proposed to marry his [Raslan's] daughter. P43 received approval and became his son-in-law and saw him all the time.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 where Raslan is from. P43 said from Homs, Al-Houla الحولة village, which is P43's village as well.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he knew what Raslan's job was, what his education was, and when and where he worked. P43 said that regarding "when," he [Raslan] started several years back, maybe 20 years [back], but he always told P43 what his [Raslan] job was and what he did. P43 indicated that he was not sure the exact number of the years, because Raslan was a Warrant Officer 3rd class مساعد in the beginning, then studied law, before he worked at the Intelligence Services.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 what other positions Raslan had. P43 said that his [Raslan's] first job was a policeman. Then he studied law and was among the top [students in his class] and thus, he was assigned to the Security Directorate.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P43 said that Raslan used to tell him what he did for work. Judge Wiedner asked P43 what Raslan said. P43 said that Raslan used to say that, for instance, when the European or Chinese delegations came [to Syria] he used to escort them and protect them. Also, as the inner branch, Al-Khatib was mostly responsible for the ministries' studies and state security. That was what he [Raslan] used to tell P43, in addition to the fact that the extremists sometimes attacked before the incidents. His [Raslan's] goal was to fight terrorism.

Judge Wiedner asked how many years earlier. P43 said from 2000 to 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked what else he was told. P43 said that the main task of the branch was security studies of the state.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 how he knew that. P43 said he was told all of that by him [Raslan].

Judge Wiedner recalled that P43 said "until before 2011." Judge Wiedner asked, "What about 2011?" P43 stated that he wrote some sentences for the court so that he does not forget. He asked the judges whether he was allowed to read from the notes.

Judge Kerber allowed P43 to use his notes. P43 read aloud from his notes [His language changed and he used more Standard Arabic. He was using some Standard Arabic words from the beginning of his testimony, but here, the use of Standard Arabic increased.]: Since the beginning of the revolution in Dara'a in 2011, then to Homs, Damascus, and to the rest of the provinces, and by the virtue of the relationship, he [Raslan] used to tell P43 matters that happened with him. In one of the demonstrations in Damascus, the head of Division 40, Hafez Makhoulf حافظ مخلوف detained a large number of detainees and then transferred them to Al-Khatib Branch. It was a big number. They were released by P43's father-in-law after they were interrogated and with an absence of evidence against them. After that incident and the release of the detainees, he [Raslan] was directly accused of helping detainees and sympathizing with them [P43 stopped reading directly from his notes at this point].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 how he knew that. P43 said that his father-in-law told him in Damascus. P43 and his [Raslan's] daughter used to visit him [Raslan].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 when that was. P43 said that his father-in-law told him at the beginning of the revolution. Maybe in April or May 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if that was when the incident happened or if P43 meant that he visited Raslan at that time. P43 said that they [P43 and his wife] were visiting him [Raslan] all the time so that he could see his daughter.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P43 said that the incident occurred at the beginning of the revolution. Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan told P43 about the incident directly after it happened or after a while. P43 said that he [Raslan] told him at the moment the incident occurred.

Judge Wiedner asked when that was exactly. P43 said after a week or two [of the incident], “we” [P43 and his wife] were visiting his father-in-law and Raslan’s wife, P43’s mother-in-law, told P43 [about the incident]. On the evening of the same day, P43 met him [Raslan] who also told P43 [about it].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 how often he was meeting Raslan. P43 asked if Judge Wiedner meant in 2011.

Judge Wiedner confirmed. P43 said “we” used to visit him every month in Damascus. Sometimes, P43’s wife used to stay [at Raslan’s house] for a week, and P43 would come to pick her up and stay for a day or two.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 what he could add about Raslan’s activities. P43 said that he [Raslan] told P43 that he started to be monitored in his private life, in addition to his mobile phone and contacts. He [Raslan] was considered a “sleeper cell.” Therefore, his work and authority were frozen. He [Raslan] told P43 about another incident in the branch as well. Raslan was summoned by Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس who told him [Raslan] about the demonstrations in Al-Houla. P43 said that Younes described the demonstrators as traitors. P43’s father-in-law realized that it was a direct threat to him, being a son of Al-Houla, which rebelled against the regime. After these two incidents... [Judge Wiedner interrupted].

Judge Wiedner asked whether Raslan was still working back then. P43 said that he [Raslan] continued to work, of course, but after these two incidents, he was thinking seriously to leave [his work] and defect. “It” [Possibly, “life” or “defection”] was very difficult, especially due to the constant surveillance of him and his family. He [Raslan] told P43 about his decision to defect and P43 was supportive of him and his decision. P43 met a person in Az-Zabadani الزبداني to arrange the defection of his father-in-law with [REDACTED] who was a policeman who had defected from the regime. He introduced P43 to two people from Az-Zabadani who would help his [P43’s] father-in-law defect and leave the country. They [the people from Az-Zabadani] welcomed the decision to defect, but the main problem was that they would help his father-in-law alone. P43’s father-in-law rejected that categorically because he knew what would happen to his family if he left [his work] and left the country. P43 explained that the attempt failed and he [It is unclear if this refers to P43 or to Raslan] started to look for other ways. Time passed and in September 2012, P43’s father-in-law said [told P43] that P43, his wife, and children had to leave the country as soon as possible because he [Raslan] secured a way to defect. P43 left for Lebanon. P43 noted that he [Raslan] did not exactly tell P43 who would help with the defection, but he said that they were trusted people from Eastern Ghouta الغوطة الشرقية.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P43 said that Raslan’s mobile phone was surveilled and that he was stripped of his authority. Judge Wiedner asked P43 what happened. P43 said that he [Raslan] did not take [or perhaps “use”] his phone as it was monitored.

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan’s landline phone was monitored as well. P43 said yes, all of his calls. P43 explained that all these talks [communications between P43 and Raslan] were not conducted over the phone, but he [Raslan] was communicating with P43 directly. P43 added that at the beginning of 2012 when P43 left Homs, P43 was living in Damascus and close to him [Raslan].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 about what Raslan said regarding the surveillance and the stripping of his authority. P43 said that after helping the detainees, eyes were on him [Raslan] and the fingers were pointed at him. Therefore, even when he [Raslan] used to come back home, some people used to come [follow Raslan] and watch downstairs [in the street/at the bottom of the building], as he was considered a “sleeper cell.” In other words, he could defect at any time.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if Raslan told him what tasks he could not do anymore at work. P43 said that he [Raslan] did not tell him such small details, but P43 knows that many people would vouch for him that he helped them, even before the revolution.

Judge Wiedner asked when Raslan did that. P43 said since 2006 when P43 married his [Raslan’s] daughter, P43 started to meet him [Raslan] often and he was always helping people according to his capacity. He refused to help in return for money or a bribe. He was very peaceful and had no hostility.

Judge Wiedner asked when was Raslan was stripped of his authority and when did the surveillance begin. P43 said that both incidents happened approximately at the same time. The first one was after releasing the detainees in Damascus, and the second one was after the start of the demonstrations in Al-Houla, P43’s village.

Judge Wiedner asked when that happened. P43 said approximately in April – May 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was correct that Raslan told P43 that he was being monitored in April or May 2011. P43 said no, that incident happened in these two months [sometime in that same time period], however, “we” visited him [Raslan] at the end of May and he told “us” [about it] then.

Judge Kerber recalled that P43 mentioned the incident with Tawfiq Younes, and asked P43 whether that occurred in April to May 2011 as well. P43 said it was during that time. P43 and his wife were visiting [Raslan], and P43 used to stay for a few days [at Raslan’s house]. He went back at the end of May. There was no specific day, but P43 recalls that it was at the end of April – May, at the beginning of the revolution.

Judge Wiedner pointed out that P43 said that he supported his father-in-law in his defection. Judge Wiedner asked P43 when that happened. P43 said in 2012 when P43 sought refuge from Homs to Damascus. During that time, P43 met that person [REDACTED] after March.

Judge Wiedner asked if P43 meant 2012. P43 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 how he was communicating with his father-in-law. P43 said because he was in the capital [Damascus], they were always meeting.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he met Raslan by himself. P43 said [yes,] the surveillance was very strict.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he [It was unclear if Judge Wiedner meant Raslan or P43] was surveilled in particular. P43 answered, “exactly.” P43 was living close to him [Raslan] and at one point, P43 lived in the same building [as Raslan] on the ground floor. Whenever when he [Raslan] came back home, there were armed security forces behind him [following and watching him].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 why they did that and whether they did that to make him [Raslan] leave his position. P43 said because they could not dismiss/discharge him [from his position/job].

Judge Wiedner said that he did not understand and wondered “why not?”. P43 said because his [Raslan’s] job had a legal duration [at which he should be dismissed/discharged] and he had to work until then.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he knows whether Raslan was relocated to other offices/bureaus. P43 said no, he does not know. P43 only knows that he [Raslan] was in Al-Khatib and defected from Al-Khatib. P43 added that before, he [Raslan] was in a different branch, Branch 285.

Judge Wiedner asked when. P43 said he does not know the details of his [Raslan’s] work timeline.

Judge Wiedner asked if P43 could estimate when and where. P43 said maybe before the incidents, but P43 did not know the dates and details.

Judge Wiedner said that he did not understand. P43 said he meant that he [Raslan] was moving [jumping] between Branch 285 and Al-Khatib, but P43 did not know the dates.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 how he moved from Homs to Damascus. P43 said he was living in Homs and moved to Damascus after the massacre of Karm Az-Zaytoun كرم الزيتون [a neighborhood in Homs].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he faced difficulties because of his father-in-law. P43 said there were some difficulties around 2011. P43 was a worker, a sport [physical education] teacher within the bounds of a state-official contract. Due to the incidents in 2011, there were no jobs and no contracts, and the people did not go to school. P43 owned a supermarket and allocated his time, along with his brother, to work [there] and left his teaching job.

Judge Wiedner clarified that he meant whether P43 encountered difficulties because of the nature of his father-in-law's job. P43 said that he was going to touch on that. In November or December 2011, P43 was subjected to a kidnapping when he was outside the supermarket. He was abducted for three days and “they” [the abductors] accused him of leaving work to spy on the Free Syrian Army [FSA] because that area was under the control of the FSA. After three days, they released P43 and apologized to him. They said that they had looked into him. P43 explained that the reason for abducting him was he was a relative of a security officer. P43 said that according to them, they asked about the subject matter and Raslan’s work, especially that he [Raslan] was in contact with the revolutionaries in Eastern Ghouta. They apologized to P43 and told him that his father-in-law was a good person and helped detainees.

Judge Wiedner asked if P43 was abducted even though Raslan had contact with the FSA and helped detainees. P43 said that they did not know about that at the time of the abduction. It was more like “that is a security officer and this is his relative.” It was not because the name was X or Y [P43 was trying to explain that he was not abducted because there was a bad officer with the family name “Raslan” and because P43 was a relative. Rather, he was abducted to be interrogated because they knew that P43’s relative was an officer in the security services].

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he applied for asylum. P43 replied saying, of course.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he recalls what he said about his abduction during the interview with the BAMF [Federal Office for Migration and Refugees]. P43 said yes, he could tell Judge Wiedner what he said.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P43's recollection quoting from the questioning transcript: "I was abducted for three days in a dark room where I could not see. They hit me and told me that I was leaking information about the FSA to my father-in-law. In the end, they found out that I was not in contact with him and I moved to Damascus." P43 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he said that he was released because they found out that there was no information that he was in contact with his father-in-law. P43 said he does not have information about the FSA, and asked rhetorically how he would know information about the FSA considering he was arranging the defection of his father-in-law [In other words, if P43 knew information about the FSA or was in contact with them, he would not have had any problem finding people to arrange Raslan's defection].

Judge Wiedner said that the transcript does not say that the FSA released P43 because he was not leaking information, but rather because there was no information about him being in contact with Raslan. P43 said that he mentioned that after three days, they made sure that he did not convey information to his father-in-law.

***

Judge Wiedner asked P43 when he left Syria. P43 said he left in 2012 at the end of September.

Judge Wiedner asked if P43 said 2012. P43 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he left Syria alone or with his family. P43 said with his wife and children.

Judge Wiedner asked how many children P43 had when he left Syria. P43 answered, three.

Judge Wiedner asked how P43 left. P43 said he rented a private car and crossed the border to Lebanon.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he was living in Damascus before that. P43 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 when he had prepared his notes. P43 said he had written them the previous day.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge asked P43 if he had said he left for Lebanon in March 2013 during the BAMF interview. P43 asked if Klinge said 2013.

Klinge confirmed. P43 said no, he did not say that.

Klinge asked P43 when his father-in-law said that he wanted to defect for the first time. P43 said that he [Raslan] was against the policy of injustice and when he witnessed that after the incidents. He was being watched and he was unable to offer help anymore because in Syria it is prohibited. It is very difficult for a person to choose only peace. One is forced to choose a particular side, either the regime or the FSA. P43 elaborated that he [Raslan] constantly said that he was against weapons and his decision to defect was to not get blood on his hands.

Klinge indicated that P43 did not answer his question and asked again when Raslan said that he wanted to defect for the first time. P43 said at the beginning of 2011 – in April or May. P43 noted that he answered that question and added that “we” [perhaps P43 and his wife] knew about it in May or June. He [Raslan] told P43 what happened in detail and since that moment, the idea [of defection] was there, but it was difficult because there would be devastating consequences if he defected and was caught.

Klinge recalled that there was a person who arranged for Raslan’s defection. Judge Wiedner had asked when that was. P43 said in 2012.

Klinge asked if P43 could be more specific. P43 said no, it is difficult, but it was after March.

Klinge said that he wanted to go back to the subject of Homs. Klinge asked when the Syrian army began to use weapons in Homs. P43 said it was after the first demonstration in Homs. The demonstrators gathered at Homs clock tower. “We” [either P43 or Syrians] watched that on TV and P43 heard a scuffle between law enforcement and the demonstrators. The demonstration was close to Homs police [station].

Klinge asked P43 when the violence against the Syrian forces started. P43 pointed out that he did not participate in demonstrations nor armed combat. Due to the demonstrations and the riot, P43 left his sport [physical education] contract and worked in the supermarket near his home.

Klinge asked when Homs came under control by the Syrian regime. P43 said that there were demonstrations every Friday and the regime established checkpoints outside the area which were armed. This forced the demonstrators to leave the demonstrations and take up arms, but not everybody. There was a peaceful segment and another segment that decided to take up arms.

Klinge asked P43 when he could say that Homs was controlled by the Syrian regime. P43 said that the neighborhood where he was living was under the control of the FSA since the beginning of the revolution. On February 13, 2012, it came under the control of the regime.

Klinge recalled that P43 was abducted by the FSA. Klinge asked P43 if he said that he sympathized with the revolution. P43 said that of course him being from the area, he sympathized with the revolution, but he supported the peaceful solution.

Klinge noted that P43 said that he was beaten during his abduction. Klinge asked P43 if he told the FSA that his father-in-law wanted to defect. P43 said no, they did not ask him [about that], but P43 said that when they abducted him, he received a few blows and was blindfolded all the time and could not see. P43 added that there were questions and an interrogation about his relationship with his father-in-law. P43 told them that it was a family relationship between a father-in-law and his son-in-law and that they [Raslan, P43, and their family] were with the revolution.

Klinge repeated his previous question. P43 said no, he did not mention that.

Klinge stated that P43 was beaten because his father-in-law worked at the Intelligence Services. If P43 told them that he [Raslan] wanted to defect, they would have not treated P43 in such a way. P43 said he told them that his father-in-law was with the revolution and helped detainees. They said that they would communicate with people in the capital [Damascus] to make sure that what P43 said about helping people was correct.

Klinge asked P43 if the FSA had contact with Damascus, why would he not tell them that his father-in-law wanted to defect. P43 said it was at the end of 2011 and later P43 went to Damascus and arranged the defection.

Klinge asked P43 why would he not tell them that his father-in-law wanted to defect. P43 said that when a human being is asked, he would answer. And when the place is dark and the person is blindfolded, the person has to answer the question. P43 explained that he was dealing with people whom he did not know, was fearful, and was taking blows. After they made sure [of P43's story], they released him three days later.

Klinge asked why P43 did not tell them after he was released. P43 said right, but that was something that P43 would not share with anybody because any place could be infiltrated and there could be a regime agent with the FSA. However, P43 could share that with a trusted person in the area. He [that trusted person] was living on the same street and was one of the shop's [P43's supermarket] customers. He was a friend of P43's brother and an employee at the customs. He defected and was a trusted person. P43 would tell such a person and he, in turn, would convey the [whole] picture in his own way. But P43 would not tell staff members [of the FSA]. P43 recalls an incident in Karm Az-Zaytoun where he was living: there were two brothers; one was a member of the FSA and the other one was supposedly a peaceful demonstrator. "They" [maybe FSA] found out that the peaceful one was collecting/gathering information about the demonstrators and the FSA, and that he told the regime about the meeting of the group [of FSA]. During their meeting, his brother [the informer] brought in food, including a small bomb. When he [the informer] got out and left, he detonated the bomb. A week later, the FSA was able to catch that person and his brother [the member of the FSA] was present. The brother tied him [the informer] to the car and dragged him in Karm Az-Zaytoun.

Klinge said that P43 went off on a tangent and that the question was about his abduction. P43 said he wanted to summarize his answer by saying that he could not trust any person - that could claim the lives of the whole family [put their life in danger].

Klinge asked P43 if Raslan told him about the contacts and the people who helped in his defection. P43 said that when he [Raslan] asked P43 to leave Syria in the last days, he told P43, in short, that his defection was secured by people in Ghouta.

Klinge asked P43 where he lived in Damascus. P43 said in Ain Tarma عين ترمّا.

Klinge asked P43 who was the owner of the flat. P43 said it belonged to his father-in-law.

Klinge asked P43 who was controlling that area. P43 said the FSA.

Klinge asked since when. P43 said since he arrived, it was under the control of the FSA. However, on the boundaries outside Ain Tarma, checkpoints searched whoever went inside or out.

Klinge asked P43 why he left Homs. P43 said he left because after the massacre in Karm Az-Zaytoun on February 13, 2012, "we" [P43 and his family] left and could not take anything, only the clothes they wore. The whole area was abandoned because there was tank shelling and all the people fled.

Klinge asked how the massacre started. P43 said he was not there when the shelling occurred. P43 took his wife and children and only a few people remained. After the shelling, the regime forces entered and P43 does not know what happened, but after two to three days, it came under the regime's control.

Klinge asked how the massacre happened. P43 said by the shelling of the regime's tanks and maybe there was resistance from the FSA. There was a clear path for the civilians.

Klinge asked P43 why he left Homs. P43 said because his home was destroyed and he was damaged. P43 asked rhetorically "what would I do in Homs?". P43 added that a month before he moved [to Damascus], his son was born in Damascus and had a disability in his leg and had [therapy] sessions in a hospital. The doctor said that he [the son] needed two operations. "They" said that Damascus was the best location for his son's treatment.

Klinge asked P43 where he lived when he moved to Damascus. P43 said that at first, [he lived/stayed] in Al-Yarmouk اليرموك [camp neighborhood], then Daff Ash-Shoak دف الشوك; the police [neighborhood], then to Al-Abbasiyyeen العباسيين in the same building where his father-in-law was living, then Ain Tarma.

Klinge asked P43 who controlled Al-Yarmouk in 2012. P43 asked if Klinge meant in 2012.

Klinge said yes. P43 said it was under the control of the Palestinians.

Klinge asked P43 if they were affiliated with the regime. P43 said he does not know their relation [affiliation]. P43 was just living quietly, but there were regime checkpoints outside the camp.

Klinge asked P43 if it would be correct to assume that they were with the opposition against the regime. P43 said he had nothing to do with demonstrators nor with armed people. P43 was only concerned about his son's situation. P43 used to hear shooting, but he did not know who attacked whom.

Klinge asked P43 if the brother of his wife was injured. P43 confirmed.

Klinge asked P43 to tell the court what happened. P43 said it was in Damascus, maybe in Jobar جوبر but not due to the name of the person [P43 brought up same argument he did earlier meaning that his brother-in-law was not attacked (by the opposition) because his family name was "Raslan."]. But it was rather that he was in a security car [a car that belongs to the security forces/intelligence] and had a driver with him. He wanted to visit his relatives. A checkpoint saw the car that had the driver from Darayya داريا along with P43's brother-in-law, [Raslan's son]. "When it happened" [when the shooting/attack happened], [Raslan's son] opened the door and escaped. He heard firing. The driver, Khaled خالد from Darayya, was taken with the car. A day or two later, he was released.

Klinge asked what, if P43 knows, happened to him [the driver]. P43 said he does not know.

Klinge asked P43 whose car was it. P43 said it belonged to the security [forces/intelligence] and was at their disposal.

Klinge said that regarding P43's abduction, P43's wife was asked in the questioning in 2016 why her father left Syria. She said that he was surveilled by the FSA because he was working for the regime, her brother was injured, and her husband was abducted and beaten, therefore, her father [Raslan] decided to defect. P43 said that the first part was as he mentioned before, but he does not know about the second part [Most likely, P43 meant it the other way around. He knew about the second part but did not know that his wife said that Raslan was being watched by the FSA].

Klinge asked P43 if his brother-in-law left Syria. P43 confirmed.

Klinge asked when was that. P43 said he does not know.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if his brother-in-law left Syria before or after Raslan. P43 said after his father-in-law's family [left].

Judge Wiedner refreshed P43's recollection quoting from the questioning transcript, "After my father-in-law escaped, they sabotaged/vandalized/damaged the flat. I do not know because I was not there." Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he was talking about his flat in Homs. P43 said that he left Syria two and a half months before his brother-in-law, followed by his father-in-law who left for Jordan at the beginning of 2013. P43 said that he mentioned that his flat in Homs was searched and destroyed entirely, and P43's friend, a taxi driver in Homs, filmed/took photos of it.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 if he said that he was in Damascus when that happened. P43 said no, he was in Lebanon.

Klinge asked P43 how the operation of Raslan's defection was arranged. P43 said that it happened in December 2012 [P43 said "twelve...2012." It's unclear if he meant "December," or if he said "twelve" as shorthand for "2012," before clarifying "2012"]. It was said that his [Raslan's] son needed an urgent operation in the hospital, and P43's mother-in-law called [Raslan] and said "you have to be with me at least [in the hospital]." P43 explained that this was arranged so they [the security forces who were supposedly monitoring the phone calls] could hear that he [Raslan] had to be at the hospital. P43 added that it was planned to seem as if it was normal, and Al-Abbasiyyeen is not far from Al-Ghouta. P43 said that he heard from his father-in-law that he met people. P43 indicated that it was risky because he [Raslan] could have been caught at a checkpoint.

Defense Counsel's Questioning

Defense Counsel Fratzky said that he needed 5 minutes.

***

***

Fratzky recalled that P43 mentioned a trusted person who worked at customs and defected, and [recalled that] P43 did not tell the abductors that Raslan wanted to defect. Fratzky asked P43 if that trusted person was the one who arranged Raslan's defection. P43 said no, that person was in Homs and was known as Abu Wa'el Al-Homsi. أبو وائل الحمصي. The other person was in rural Damascus in Az-Zabadani, [REDACTED].

Fratzky asked P43 if he talked with the trusted person about helping his father-in-law. P43 said no. P43 told him on the grounds that he was a family friend.

Fratzky asked if the trusted person is currently in Syria. P43 said that he was in Homs when "they" [P43 and his family] left, and P43 heard that he [the person] was seriously injured.

Fratzky asked about the other person from Az-Zabadani – whether P43 knows where he is and if P43 has his contact information. P43 denied.

Fratzky recalled that P43 left for Lebanon with his wife and children. Fratzky asked P43 what happened afterward. P43 said he stayed in Lebanon for two years and nine months and was subjected to bullying and persecution. P43 worked in a school where he was the director, worked as a volunteer for the UN, and voluntarily worked to help Syrians.

Fratzky asked P43 if at that time he was in contact with his father-in-law in Jordan or his wife. P43 said that his wife was with him.

Fratzky asked if P43 or his wife were in contact, for example online, with his father-in-law. P43 said, of course, they were communicating all the time via WhatsApp.

Fratzky asked P43 how he would describe Raslan's situation after his defection. P43 said he knows that his [Raslan's] situation in Jordan was very bad. He defected and did not join the FSA because he was against the use of weapons [armed resistance/opposition] from either side. Thus, his situation was difficult and his children were forced to leave school and work to help pay rent. He left Syria and had only one home/house in Ain Tarma.

Fratzky asked P43 how his father-in-law moved from Jordan to Germany. P43 said he knows that he [Raslan] applied for asylum at the German embassy in Jordan or something like that. There was a person in Germany who helped him and is called Riyad Saif. He did not tell them about his previous job and came to Germany in 2014.

Fratzky asked if Raslan gave information about the regime. P43 said he does not know.

Fratzky asked P43 what he knows about his father-in-law's participation at the Geneva Conference. P43 said that his father-in-law said that he wanted to go to the Geneva Conference of the opposition. The head was maybe Ahmad Al-Jarba أحمد الجربا and he [Raslan] was invited to the [National Syrian] coalition. P43's father-in-law was hoping to find a peaceful solution in Syria.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

[P42, the witness from the previous day, asked if she could ask P43 a question. Judge Kerber gave her permission.]

P42 stated that P43 was using the term "incidents" to describe the uprising, but then switched to "revolution" after he started reading from his notes. P42 asked P43 if that was noted in his notes. P43 said no, he did not write that down. P43 further explained that "the incidents" means the beginning of the Syrian revolution. There is no other meaning to "the incidents." Before the revolution started, there were no "incidents."

Kroker said that P43 used two different Arabic terms to describe the same thing: "incidents" and "revolution." It was also noted that P43 started to use the other term after he started reading from his notes. Kroker asked P43 if he could explain that. P43 said he even said, "the first incident" and "the second incident" with his father-in-law. "The incidents" are "the new things." If there was nothing in Syria and then the revolution started, then this would be the new incident.

Kroker asked if there is a politically different usage of the terms after 2011. P43 said he meant the Syrian revolution.

Reiger asked P43 if he knows a person called [REDACTED]. P43 denied. P43 added that he knows the family. They were neighbors in Karm Az-Zaytoun, but not a person with the name [REDACTED].

Reiger asked P43 if he knows that his father-in-law was relocated to other offices/bureaus. P43 said no, after Al-Khatib he [Raslan] defected and joined the opposition in Geneva, that is all.

Reiger told P43 that his father-in-law said "The surveillance in Branch 251 was strict, but after I was relocated, it was loose. I met [REDACTED] and he helped me." Reiger asked P43 if that was the person who helped his father-in-law or the person whom P43 mentioned because that contradicts what P43 said before in the testimony. P43 said that there is no contradiction. P43 tried to help his father-in-law with the person from Az-Zabadani, but he [Raslan] refused because he did not want to leave without his family. He also said that he mentioned that in September 2012, P43's father-in-law asked him to leave Syria because he had secured a way to defect, without mentioning details. That was the one [way] that he [[REDACTED] or Raslan] secured the way out and P43 did not know about it because he was securing his own way to leave. P43 added that he [Raslan] did not tell P43 through whom [Raslan arranged his own defection].

Reiger said that P43 said before that Raslan's defection was arranged by [REDACTED], but Raslan said that it was done by [REDACTED]. P43 said he did not say that.

Reiger asked if P43 met a person in Serbia from UNICEF on his way. P43 asked from where.

Reiger said from Lebanon to Germany. P43 said yes, he met an American journalist called Ashley Giberson/Gilbertson and the journalist Anita. They followed "us" [P43 and his family] to Macedonia and then Croatia and asked to do a press interview asking what "we" would do in Germany. They [the two journalists] used to visit "us" every six months in Berlin. They conducted interviews and published them.

Reiger asked P43 about the reason for escaping from Homs. P43 repeated that as he said a while ago, the situation was very bad. His house was destroyed, a part of it. His little son needed treatment and had two operations in Damascus. His area came under the control of the regime.

Judge Wiedner asked P43 when he left Lebanon with his family. P43 said at the end of September 2012.

Judge Wiedner clarified that he meant "left Lebanon to Germany." P43 said he meant that as leaving from Syria to Lebanon.

Judge Wiedner repeated that he meant from Lebanon to Germany. P43 said on November 28, 2015, by plane to Turkey where he stayed for three days. Then, by a rubber dinghy to Greece and traveled by train from Athens to Serbia, and arrived in Germany on December 5, 2015.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked P43 if he knows the rank of his father-in-law. P43 asked if Scharmer meant before he defected.

Scharmer replied that he certainly did not have a rank after his defection. P43 said, "Colonel."

Scharmer asked P43 if his father-in-law was content with his work up to 2011. P43 said that regarding before the incidents, P43 described what his [Raslan's] work was before 2011. It was security studies, the ministries, and protecting diplomats and the state institutions/enterprises.

P43 said that regarding “Colonel,” he [Scharmer] mentioned that after his [Raslan’s] defection he did not have a rank. P43 explained that after defection, the FSA promotes individuals one rank, i.e. to “Honorary Colonel.” In the opposition, he [Raslan] is a brigadier general, whereas to the regime a colonel.

Scharmer said that his question was whether P43 had the impression that his father-in-law was content with his work before 2011. P43 said that this was his answer for the previous question. P43 indicated that he said he [Raslan] was very modest, beloved by the people around him, had no hostility, and helps without accepting bribes. P43 pointed out that “we” [perhaps Syrians] know officers from the other sect, who have palaces and countless cars.

Judge Kerber asked Scharmer if his question was answered. Scharmer said no, but it was alright.

[The witness was dismissed at 12:25PM]

P43 said that he would like to add something and asked Judge Kerber if he may. Judge Kerber gave him permission.

P43 stated that “we” are in Germany, a state of law and justice. Some matters are going on; “we” are his [Raslan’s] family in Berlin and there are some calls on social media that his father-in-law should be killed along with his [Raslan’s] family, young and old. Additionally, he [Raslan] was named on social media “Anwar the Zionist” and the one who named him that was a witness “here.” The accused is innocent until proven guilty.

Judge Kerber thanked P43 and told him that the court would consider that and said that the internet could be problematic.

Fratzky asked Judge Kerber if he may ask P43 a question. Judge Kerber said that the witness was already dismissed, but proceeded to ask P43 whether he would allow Fratzky to ask him a question. P43 confirmed. Judge Kerber informed P43 about his rights and duties as a witness.

Fratzky asked P43 if P43 could share the name of the witness who stated that and was a witness in court. P43 said that his [that witness’s] name was written “here” [in P43’s notes].

Kroker asked if the witness’s name was published publicly, or whether he was anonymous.

Judge Kerber asked if the witness was in Germany. P43 said he was a witness.

Judge Kerber asked P43 if the name was written down on the paper [that P43 was holding]. P43 confirmed.

Judge Kerber said that the court would take that and would add it to the protocol.

[The witness was dismissed at 12:30PM. Judge Kerber told P43 that he has the right to stay in the courtroom or to leave. P43 left the courtroom].

P42 asked if she may add something. Judge Kerber gave her permission.

P42 said that she wanted to point out that when someone is pro-regime or when the Syrian president talks about the revolution, he uses the term “incidents,” and the opposition uses the term “revolution.” P42 just wanted to note [by her previous question to P43] that the witness was using the term “incidents” and it was translated to “revolution” in German.

***

A statement about a motion filed by ECCHR about “Enforced disappearances in the al-Khatib trial” was read aloud by plaintiffs’ representatives Bahns, Scharmer, and Kroker consecutively [from 1:30PM to 2:40PM].

The judges read a decision. “The motion for additional evidence filed on November 19, 2020, by the Plaintiffs Counsels (to translate and read several reports) is rejected. It was supposed to prove that sexual violence in Syria was part of the crimes against humanity by the Intelligence Services but is rejected because one of the reports has already been read and according to §244(3) Sentence 3 No. 3 StPO the hearing of evidence has already led the judges to understand that the Syrian regime approved the use of sexual violence. This can be deducted from the testimonies of P1, P32, P19, P42, and Z110321 [P29]. Others have provided further information based on hearsay, for example, P39 mentioned a 15-year-old boy who told him he had been raped with a broomstick; Anwar Al-Bunni mentioned helping women get abortions after they were raped in prison [and some other examples]. If the documents are supposed to prove further crimes, they are not relevant, because the court only cares about what happened in Branch 251, §244(3) Sentence 3 No. 2 StPO”.

Scharmer asked Judge Kerber if she was going to distribute copies of the decision to the parties [Judge Kerber had forgotten this]. [Copies were distributed].

The Proceedings were adjourned at 2:52PM.

The next session will be on August 18, 2021 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN
Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 43
Hearing Dates: August 18 & 19, 2021

Trial Day 86—August 18, 2021

The Court first heard the testimony of Mr. Okotutsch, a 26-year-old police inspector at the Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) who questioned P17 and P18. Mr. Okotutsch read the email he received from a family member of a missing doctor who was detained at Branch 251.

Next, the Court heard the testimony of P44, a Syrian man in his early thirties. He described how he was detained with his maternal uncle and cousin at a gas station along the Damascus-Homs Highway. He was taken to an unknown location for two days, then to Al-Khatib Branch for three days. On the bus at the gas station, P44 was able to use his hidden mobile phone to call his brother. As he ducked low to make the call without being seen, P44 glanced out the window and saw someone who he thought was Raslan. He never saw the man again.

Trial Day 87—August 19, 2021

P45 spoke to the Court in a face mask with his head partially covered out of fear for his family in Syria. He explained how he was awoken at 5:00AM in August 2012 by government forces. They rounded up around 100 members of his village who demonstrated against Al-Assad, and they sent the villagers to Al-Khatib Branch. Although P45 and the other villagers were beaten and insulted on their way to the Branch, they were spared from mistreatment upon their arrival to Al-Khatib, thanks to the intervention of two village dignitaries who had strong relationships with government officials and who secured their release after three days on the condition that the villagers support Al-Assad.

Day 86 of Trial—August 18, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were seven spectators and one member of the press in the audience, as well as a court illustrator. The prosecution was represented by Ritscher and Polz. Plaintiff counsels Bahns, Mohammad, and Reiger were not present.

Judge Kerber thanked the interpreter formerly working for Al-Gharib's defense team for substituting for one of the court interpreters.

The witness was informed of his rights and duties as a witness.

Testimony of Mr. Okotutsch

Judge Kerber stated that Mr. Okotutsch questioned [P17] and P18] and that he received a message from P17's brother. She asked Mr. Okotutsch if they gave him documents during questioning. Mr. Okotutsch confirmed and said that he also received an email on September [information redacted].

Kerber held a printed copy of the email, then showed it to Mr. Okotutsch and asked if it was the email he received. Mr. Okotutsch confirmed and said that he received it on September [information redacted].

Judge Wiedner asked Mr. Okotutsch if P17's brother sent the email to him. Mr. Okotutsch confirmed.

Wiedner asked Mr. Okotutsch what he did with the email. Mr. Okotutsch said that he printed it and sent it to the translator.

Wiedner asked Mr. Okotutsch if the BKA translated the message into German. Mr. Okotutsch confirmed.

The witness was dismissed at 9:38AM.

Kerber stated that the court received a copy of the translated email from P17's brother dated [information redacted].

[The following is a recreation of the email based on what the Trial Monitor could hear in court.]

To Whom It May Concern:

I am [name redacted], born in [information redacted]. I want to share that my brother, [name redacted], born in [information redacted], worked as a doctor in Al-Mojtahed Hospital in Damascus. He was detained by Branch 251 from the hospital. Until now, we (his family) do not have any information about his whereabouts. We have not received his corpse, his personal belongings, or a death certificate.

[name redacted]

[date redacted]

P44, a civil engineering student at [information redacted] in his early thirties was accompanied by his counsel Dr. Oehmichen. P44 was informed of his rights and duties as a witness. P44 was not related to the defendant by blood or marriage, and provided the address of his attorney.

Testimony of P44

Judge Kerber noted that the court knew that P44 was connected to Al-Khatib Branch based on P44's answers during police questioning. Kerber asked P44 to explain what happened to him. P44 explained how he was on his way to his village, [information redacted], from Damascus via the Damascus-Homs Highway in July. He stopped at a gas station to refuel. A patrol from Al-Khatib Branch was there (P44 did not know who they were at the time, but he later learned that they were from Al-Khatib). They detained him in a small room. P44 did not know the location of the room. Then they put him on a bus and took him to Al-Khatib Branch. He was detained with his maternal uncle and his cousin from another maternal uncle.

P44 only stayed there for three or four days before he was released onto the street. His cousin was released two weeks later, then his uncle was released two weeks after his cousin. P44 detailed that he lived in [information redacted], which is not far from Al-Khatib.

Kerber asked P44 if he could specify what day he was detained. P44 said July 2012.

Kerber asked if P44 knew which day specifically. P44 said that he was detained in Syria during the revolution. That Friday was called the “Damascus Volcano” and it was when Damascus was ruined. Fridays were given names based on the political situation.

Kerber asked P44 to detail his detention inside Al-Khatib. P44 explained that he [and others] were taken in a 24-person bus to the Branch. He was put in a cell that was 3x3m with a toilet and a place to shower. There were 20-24 people in the cell. On the second day, “they” knocked on the door and said that everybody should face the wall, then they provided food and left. No one interrogated P44. Eventually, his name was called and he was released.

Kerber asked P44 how long he was detained. P44 said a week.

Kerber recalled that P44 said that he was detained for three days. P44 said no. He stayed at Al-Khatib for three days and at another place whose location he did not know for two days.

Kerber asked P44 how he knew that he was at Al-Khatib Branch. P44 said that he knew he was at Al-Khatib when he saw the area after he was released. He lived nearby. He knew the street and walked through [the area] all the time when he was in college.

Kerber asked if P44 saw the accused in Syria. P44 said that he was not 100% sure. But when they put him on the bus, they told everybody to face the ground. The back part of the bus seats was high, so when he lowered his head, he could only see feet. [P44 demonstrated how he hid behind the high seats.] He had a mobile phone with him, called his brother, and told his brother that he was detained. [To make the call,] he lowered his head so no one could see him. [He sat near a window] and saw a person when he peeked out. When he was released, he was given a description of Raslan and he thought that the description matched the person he saw through the window.

Kerber asked P44 to repeat the situation and explain who described Raslan to him. P44 explained that he saw someone [when he looked out the window of the bus]. [P44’s cousin and uncle] described Raslan to P44 after they were released. P44 thought, “okay, then the person I saw through the window was Raslan.”

Kerber asked why P44 came to this conclusion. P44 said that [his cousin and uncle] described Raslan as being between the ages of 45 and 55 with little hair, no beard, and a mole on his cheek.

Kerber asked P44 [to describe the person he saw]. P44 said that [what he just described] was what he saw: a person with little hair, no beard, his face looked like he was between 45 and 55; and had a mole.

Kerber asked P44 which side of the person he saw. P44 said that he was sitting and the window was to his right.

Kerber asked which direction the person faced. [P44 demonstrated with his hands.] He said that the gas station was “here,” the bus station was “here,” and [the man] was talking with the soldiers at the back of the bus. “My right was to the man’s [right].”

***

[The sketch below was generated by the Trial Monitor to portray the scene P44 described.]

***

Kerber asked what the person wore. P44 said that the person wore civilian clothes.

Kerber asked if P44's brother answered when P44 called him. P44 said that his brother told him to speak with one of the people in the patrol. He told his brother that he tried, but was scolded. His brother told P44 that if he saw a person named Kifah (or Abu Kifah أبو كفاح), then P44 should tell the man that P44 is his brother. His brother knew someone at Al-Khatib, so he called the person. His brother was told that [P44 was detained by] a patrol that belonged to the State Security Branch and Kifah was part of the patrol. P44 did not see anyone and could not raise his head.

Kerber asked P44 if his brother knew where he was or just that the patrol belonged to State Security. P44 said that [his brother] knew that the patrol belonged to Al-Khatib, but did not know where P44 was taken, because P44 was not taken to Al-Khatib initially.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled that P44 saw a person who could have been Raslan at the gas station. He asked P44 whether he saw the person again inside the Branch. P44 said no.

Wiedner asked P44 if he saw the person again during his detention. P44 said no, only that glimpse. P44 went to his village [after his release] and then to Lebanon. He did not see the man again.

Wiedner pointed out that P44 was taken to Al-Khatib after he was detained. Wiedner asked if P44 knew that [he was at Al-Khatib] when he was on the phone with his brother. P44 said that his brother told him about Kifah but did not tell him about Al-Khatib. When P44 was released, he knew that he was at Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked P44 how he knew that the person [out the window worked at] Al-Khatib. P44 said that, when he was released, his brother told him that he was at Al-Khatib, however, P44 was not there at first. When his brother was sure that P44 was at Al-Khatib, he spoke with [Kifah] who explained that [the patrol] belonged to the Branch.

Wiedner asked if it was correct that P44 was detained in one place for a couple of days before he was transferred to Al-Khatib. P44 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if that place was in Damascus. P44 did not know, but [if it was not in Damascus, then] it was not far away.

Wiedner asked P44 if he was mistreated or insulted during the time from when he was detained until he arrived at Al-Khatib. P44 said that he was insulted on the bus and at the gas station. He was beaten at the gas station, but not on the bus. P44 later learned why he was detained. There was “fighting” [said in English] between the regime and the FSA. The patrol thought that he was part of the [FSA], so they took him.

Wiedner asked P44 who said that this was the reason for his detention. P44 said that, after they left the gas station, it was apparent that a clash had ensued and the gas station was damaged.

Wiedner asked if P44 was assuming [that this was the reason for his detention]. P44 said yes. Then later, his cousin and uncle confirmed this conclusion.

Wiedner recalled that P44 was taken to Al-Khatib. He asked P44 to describe the situation there. P44 said that, upon entry, [detainees were instructed to strip down to their boxers], searched, blindfolded, then sent to the basement.

Wiedner asked P44 if his clothes were returned. P44 said no. He had been wearing his “pajamas,” including slippers and sweatpants.

Wiedner asked P44 if he was interrogated. P44 said no.

Wiedner asked P44 if he was mistreated or beaten. P44 said that no one talked with him at Al-Khatib until his name was called for release.

Wiedner asked P44 if he heard from other detainees that they were mistreated. P44 said of course. He not only heard, but also saw that [people were mistreated]. He also heard about [mistreatment] from his cousin and uncle.

Wiedner asked P44 if he was with mistreated detainees in the cell. P44 said that all the people who were detained at the gas station were in the same [cell].

Wiedner asked if P44 saw mistreatment in the cell. P44 said no, he did not see or hear [about mistreatment] while he was there.

Wiedner asked if there were signs of mistreatment in the cell when he arrived there. P44 asked how he would have seen the signs if the room was empty [prior to him and the other detainees entering].

Wiedner asked if other detainees were called for a reason other than interrogation, such as for release. P44 said that only he was released.

Wiedner asked how long P44 stayed there. P44 said 3 days.

Wiedner recalled P44’s statement during police questioning that his relatives were tortured. Wiedner asked if P44 meant that his relatives were tortured while P44 was detained or after he was released. P44 said that, as he previously mentioned, nothing happened to him. [P44 told the interpreter that Wiedner might be talking about later.]

Wiedner recalled that P44 was detained during the summer when it was hot. He asked P44 to describe the cell’s condition and if P44 could sleep. P44 said that the cell [had two parts:] one part was 3x3m and the second part was 50x60cm for the toilet and shower. The parts were divided by a quarter wall. P44 could lay down if there was no one across from him.

But because there were 20 – 24 detainees in the cell, no one was able to lay down, except if the person [across from him] stood. If they all wanted to lay down, then they slept on their sides next to each other.

Wiedner asked about the air quality in the cell. P44 said that they were in a basement and [the ceiling had leaks from] the floor above them, so there was moisture in the air. There was no window because they were underground. When P44, his uncle, and his cousin were released, they had skin problems. They had scabs [not necessarily scabies] and were itchy. P44's cousin had lice.

Wiedner asked about light in the cell. P44 said that there was no electricity.

Wiedner asked if there was light in the cell or whether it was dark. P44 said that there was light in the corridor. The cell was dark. Its door had iron bars and a hatch that could be closed, though it was open most of the time. When the [detainees] talked to each other, someone yelled to "shut up."

Wiedner asked if P44 sensed what was happening [on the other side of the cell door]. P44 said that he did not hear anyone downstairs except for soldiers.

Wiedner asked about food and water. P44 said it was not adequate, but there was [food and water].

Wiedner asked P44 to elaborate. P44 said that they brought three 1.5-liter bottles of water. Breakfast was three olives and sometimes Halawa. For lunch, sometimes they had bulgur or freekeh.

Wiedner asked P44 if he was given an explanation for his release. P44 said that [he, his uncle, and his cousin] were released through connections. P44's brother called someone on P44's behalf. Someone else was the connection for P44's uncle and cousin. Another one of P44's uncles paid for the detained uncle and cousin.

Wiedner asked P44 if he paid anything. P44 said that his brother paid for his release.

Wiedner asked if P44 talked with his brother later to find out how he was able to secure P44's release. P44 said no. P44's brother had a car dealership in Damascus and connections through his clients. But P44 did not know [if that was how his brother knew the connection at Al-Khatib].

Wiedner recalled that P44 mentioned the name Anwar Raslan during police questioning. Wiedner asked P44 what he said about Raslan. P44 said that the officers and interrogators in the Air Force Intelligence Services and at Al-Khatib Branch were well-known. Air Force Intelligence Services and Al-Khatib Branch are the [branches] that detain people. For example, if P44's brother was detained and P44 wanted him released, then P44 would need to know officers through his connections. Also, former detainees knew the names of personnel, or at least their characteristics.

Wiedner asked P44 "and what about the name Anwar Raslan?" P44 did not understand.

Wiedner asked P44 if that name was known to him in Syria. P44 said that [Raslan's name] was well-known, but P44 only knew about Raslan after he was released from detention, not before. The names of people who worked at branches [were circulated.] [This last sentence of P44's answer was not completely translated.]

Prosecutors' Questioning

Polz recalled that P44 did not get his clothes back, but he had a pair of pants, slippers, etc. Polz asked P44 if he was wearing these items [while he was detained] or if he wore them before he was detained and did not get them back. P44 said that he was searched, then they took his clothes. He went downstairs without clothes. But of course, he got the clothes back when he [was released].

Polz asked P44 what he wore in the cell. P44 said boxers.

Polz asked whether the rest of the detainees wore boxers too. P44 said “yes and no.” It depended on the military person. If he liked the clothes, then he took them [P44 laughed slightly].

Polz recalled that P44 was detained in the basement and then was released. Polz asked P44 where he was taken and how he was released. P44 said that he was taken upstairs from the cell. He was told to sign (a document of which he did not know the contents) and to not look behind him. P44 was released and talked to his brother on the phone and told him that he was released. Then P44 took a taxi to his village.

Polz asked P44 if [he had to sign the document] in front of the cell. P44 said no. He went upstairs to someone who was similar to a secretary, then he signed. P44 did not know who the person was or if he was in an office because he was blindfolded.

Ritscher asked P44 how he was able to sign the document while blindfolded. P44 said that [a guard] grabbed his hand and told him “طج حافرك” [“slam your hoof”] [this colloquial Syrian phrase is a derogatory way to tell someone to sign].

Ritscher asked P44 if he knew what he signed. P44 said no.

Ritscher noted that P44 mentioned the term “Welcome Party” during police questioning. He asked what P44 meant by that. P44 said he talked with his attorney about this during the break. Whoever enters the Air Force Intelligence Services or Al-Khatib is beaten. That is the “Welcome [Party].”

Ritscher asked whether P44 was beaten. P44 said that he was insulted and beaten at the gas station, and was insulted on the bus.

Ritscher asked [if P44 was beaten at the unknown location to which he and the other detainees on the bus were taken before Al-Khatib.] P44 said that [they were beaten] as soon as they got off the bus.

Ritscher asked how [they were beaten]. P44 said that his uncle and cousin were not beaten. For every three people, one was [indiscriminately] beaten.

Ritscher asked if P44 was beaten when he went downstairs at Al-Khatib. P44 said no, only when he got off the bus. When he went downstairs to the basement, no one came close to them.

Ritscher noted that P44 mentioned food like olives and bulgur, and that P44 said during police questioning that the olives were spoiled. P44 did not remember if [the olives were preserved in water]. One would not eat [this food in another circumstance].

Ritscher said that P44 mentioned during police questioning that he was taken to the warden who was a Sergeant Major when he was released. Ritscher asked P44 how he knew that and whether that person told P44 [his rank]. P44 said that [the rank] was not mentioned. But it was known that a First-Class Warrant Officer مساعد أول or a Sergeant Major رقيب أول was in the warden's room. P44 did not know much about ranks or if he said “Sergeant Major” [during police questioning], but usually [the warden] was a First-Class Warrant Officer.

Ritscher asked P44 if [the person's rank as Warrant Officer or Sergeant Major] was an inference. P44 said 100%.

Ritscher said that when P44 described the cell during the police questioning, he mentioned that the toilet was at the back of the cell in a corner and that the wall by the toilet was low. P44 explained that he said [during police questioning] that the toilet was at the back corner [of the cell], and the wall [by the toilet] did not reach the ceiling. There was no door. The wall was 1.8 – 2m.

Wiedner asked P44 if he was beaten when he arrived to Al-Khatib. P44 said that he was just asked the same question. He asked whether he should answer again.

Kerber said that Wiedner was asking because he had a follow-up question. P44 asked if the question was whether they beat him at the gas station or on the bus.

Wiedner recalled that P44 was transferred from the gas station to Al-Khatib by bus. Wiedner wanted to know if P44 was beaten during the time between when he got off the bus and when he went to his cell. P44 said that everybody was beaten and insulted, including him. His uncle and cousin were not beaten [at the "welcome party"]. But they were beaten inside the cell, whereas P44 was not.

Wiedner asked P44 with what object he was beaten. P44 said he was beaten with a plastic water pipe that was filled with something. He did not know the object in the moment though (because he was blindfolded). He learned it later from YouTube.

Wiedner asked P44 to describe the situation and where he was hit. P44 said that his shoulder was hit. P44 did not know who hit him. The person was either from the Branch or was [one of the staff members who transferred the detainees by bus]. P44 could not speculate.

Wiedner asked if the beating resulted in injuries or wounds. P44 said not wounds, but bruises.

Defense Attorneys' Questioning

Fratzky recalled that P44 said that he was detained at the gas station. Fratzky asked if the gas station was known. P44 said yes. It is one of the most popular gas stations between Homs and Damascus.

Fratzky noted that P44 said that the station was damaged. Fratzky asked if P44 could explain what he meant. P44 said it was [damaged] on the side facing Homs. There was a supermarket that was almost razed to the ground.

Fratzky assumed that P44 went to that gas station because he knew that it was operating. P44 asked Fratzky [rhetorically], "do you think that I inspected it?"

Fratzky explained that he was asking because P44 said the station was totally damaged. He asked why P44 did not leave. P44 did not know, but when the bus came, [P44, his uncle, and his cousin] knew that they were entrapped.

Fratzky asked P44 why he went to the gas station if it was damaged and if he did not need to refuel. P44 asked [rhetorically] "who said that I did not want to refuel?" Oehmichen pointed out that P44 said that the supermarket was damaged. P44 explained [demonstrating with his hand] that (this is the supermarket, this is the gas station, and this is the highway). When they saw the buses coming to the gas station, P44's uncle said "خير" [may it be good].

Fratzky asked P44 if he went to the gas station to refuel. P44 confirmed.

Fratzky asked how many people [were in the patrol] at the gas station. P44 did not know because when [he, his uncle, and his cousin] entered the station, one person shouted and another person ran toward them and told them to face the wall. They were put in a hut-like structure nearby. He saw three or more people from the patrol.

Fratzky asked if the person P44 glimpsed was one of those three people. P44 did not know.

Fratzky said that if P44 “saw three people...” Kroker interjected and noted that P44 said “three or more people.” Scharmer pointed that the place where P44 saw the people was different from the place where the bus was.

Fratzky asked what these people wore. P44 said that the three people wore civilian clothes. One was wearing blue jeans. When his brother mentioned Kifah, he described Kifah’s physical appearance. That is why P44 thought that [the person in jeans] could have been Kifah.

Fratzky recalled that P44 said that he saw three people in civilian clothes, but that P44 also said that he saw soldiers. Fratzky asked P44 to explain. P44 said that members of the Intelligence Services do not wear uniforms. When P44 heard someone shouting, [he thought that the person] was either in the military or Shabiha, meaning that they worked for the state and wear civilian clothes.

Fratzky recalled that P44 said that someone talked to people behind the bus. P44 explained that the person who he glimpsed talked to people behind the bus.

Fratzky asked if the person was looking [at the soldiers behind the bus]. P44 demonstrated how he was talking on the phone with his head down. P44 raised his head every now and then, and looked to make sure that no one saw him. That was when the person turned.

Fratzky recalled that P44 said that the gas station was between Homs and Damascus. Fratzky asked P44 how far it was from Damascus. P44 asked why that was important to Fratzky.

Kerber said that P44 had to answer. P44 said that he does not know, but maybe 10 to 20 [km]. [Using his hands to demonstrate,] P44 said “this is Damascus. This is Harasta. This is Ad-Dahiya [Dahiyet Harasta], and after that comes the gas station.”

Fratzky noted that P44 said during police questioning that he was detained for a week, but in the hearing, he said that he was detained for three days. Oehmichen said that was incorrect. P44 explained that he said five days or a week. He was [held in one location for two days and detained at Al-Khatib] for three days.

Fratzky asked if it was correct that P44 was detained for two days at the unknown location and three days at Al-Khatib. P44 said yes, 100% correct.

Fratzky asked if P44 knew how much time it would take to drive from the gas station to the unknown location. P44 knew that it was not far because it did not take a long time [to reach it]. But he did not know exactly how long. He did not have a watch and could not look around.

Fratzky asked P44 to describe the first two days: whether he was beaten, put in a cell, offered food, etc. P44 said that when they took him to [the unknown location] and then to Al-Khatib, he assumed that [the people who detained him] were Shabiha because, if they were from Al-Khatib, they would have transported him directly to Al-Khatib. However, during the incidents, the Air Force Intelligence Services collaborated with the Shabiha to transport [detainees to their branches]. That is why P44 assumed that he went to the Shabiha headquarters first. P44 was beaten there, insulted, and was not given food. Then he was transferred to Al-Khatib.

Fratzky asked P44 when and where he first heard the name Anwar Raslan. P44 said that he heard the name at some point during the incidents, but he did not recall when exactly or by whom.

Fratzky asked if P44 talked with a third party about this hearing before coming to the session. P44 said no.

[The parties had no other questions. The witness was dismissed at 11:33AM.]

Dr. Oehmichen shared her mailing address with Kerber. Kerber informed P44 that the document says that he warrants Dr. Oehmichen to list her address as his official address. P44 agreed.

Kerber announced that the courtroom will be renovated, so it will be unavailable for the sessions on September 29 & 30, October 6 & 7, and October 13 & 14, which will instead be held at the big court room of the District Court.

Polz read aloud the prosecutors' statement regarding the motion filed by Bahns, Scharmer, and Kroker on July 22, 2021. The following is the Trial Monitor's summary of the statement:

The prosecutors detailed that they would not support the motion, arguing that §7(1) No. 7 VStGB would not be fulfilled. One of the reasons was that families of missing persons made sufficient enquiries about the whereabouts of their missing loved ones. Further, the prosecutors argued that none of the false information provided to the families could be attributed to the Accused or his direct subordinates. Most importantly, according to the prosecutors, there was no intention to remove these people from the protection of law, only to gain information about deserters.

The Proceedings were adjourned at 11:55AM.

The next session will be on August 19, 2021 at 9:30AM.

Day 87 of Trial—August 19, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:45AM. There were ten spectators and one member of the press in the audience, as well as a court illustrator. The prosecution was represented by Ritscher and Polz. Plaintiff counsels Mohammad and Reiger were not present.

Dr. Oehmichen, the witness's counsel said that the witness wanted to wear his face mask, partially cover his head, and did not want to give personal information because of his family in Syria. [Kroker gave Oehmichen his jacket for the witness to use the hood to pull it over his head.]

Judge Kerber said that there was a witness scheduled for September 1 and another one scheduled for September 2 and 3. But the second witness could only attend the September 2 session now, so the session on September 3 is canceled.

[The witness entered the courtroom at 9:57AM.]

P45 did not share his personal information, including his name or age. He was detained in Syria several times, including at Al-Khatib Branch.

Testimony of P45

Kerber asked P45 to tell the court why he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. P45 said that in August 2012, Assad's forces stormed his town at 5:00AM. P45 was with his wife and children. (Around seven) forces broke down the door and knocked him to the ground on his back.

They kicked his head and hit him with weapons. They put a weapon to his head and asked him about his neighbors. They put him in a 24-passenger bus. On the bus, someone was behind him and held a weapon to his head. They covered his head with his undershirt so he could not see. He was taken to a place outside his village. Approximately 100 detainees were gathered, then taken to Al-Khatib.

[A note from the Trial Monitor: at this point, P45's voice was unclear. The mic was away from his mouth and he deliberately altered his voice. Bahns requested a headset.]

Kerber asked P45 what happened in Al-Khatib and how long he stayed there. P45 said that they arrived at Al-Khatib blindfolded. It took two hours to get to the Branch, during which time they were beaten and kicked. When they arrived at the Branch's yard, [the forces] took [the detainees] off the bus, made them strip, then put them in a cell. P45's detention lasted three days. There were [government loyalists] in his village who swiftly intervened. The detainees had to sign a pledge that they would not demonstrate again, then they were released. During his detention, P45 was not tortured and only a small number of detainees were interrogated. P45 was not one of them.

Kerber asked P45 how long he stayed in detention. P45 said three days.

Kerber noted that the transcript of his questioning by the police said that P45 was detained for 20 days. P45 clarified that he was detained for 20 days in Al-Mantiqua – Branch 227. P45 said that there could have been an [interpretation] error.

[A note from the Trial Monitor: throughout the session, there were discrepancies between what P45 said during the hearing and what he said according to the police transcript. It was the impression of the Trial Monitor that the transcript reflected interpretation issues, as P45 suggested. For example, "Al-Mantiqua" ("the area") was interpreted to "Al-Khatib" during the questioning. This may have happened because the interpreter perceived "Al-Mantiqua" to mean "the area around Al-Khatib."]

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked P45 if he was detained in August 2012. P45 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P45's statement during police questioning that he was detained in Kafar Souseh in July or August. P45 said that [his detention at] Kafar Souseh happened in 2018. He was held at Al-Khatib in August 2012.

Wiedner asked if this happened in July or August 2012. P45 said August 2012.

Wiedner asked why his house was stormed and why he was detained. P45 said that he was detained because his town was among the first towns to demonstrate against Al-Assad.

Wiedner asked how P45 knew he was at Al-Khatib when he was blindfolded [on his way there]. P45 said that he was told by other detainees. Also, he recognized the area when he was released. He went to preparatory and secondary school in that area.

Wiedner asked if P45 recognized the building. P45 said exactly. He studied in that area for six years. The detainees told him that they were at Al-Khatib, and this was confirmed when he was released.

Wiedner recalled that P45 was mistreated on his way to the Branch. Wiedner asked P45 if he was also mistreated upon his arrival to the Branch. P45 said no. When they arrived to Al-Khatib, they got off [the bus], took off their clothes, and crouched down.

Wiedner asked if P45's clothes were returned. P45 said yes, after he crouched down and before he was taken to his cell.

Wiedner asked if all his clothes were returned to him. P45 said that he was detained in his undershirt, underpants, and pants with no shoes.

Wiedner asked if they were returned. P45 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P45 to describe what happened during detention. P45 said that they were blindfolded and taken downstairs (around 5 or 6 steps) to the basement. The cell was approximately 9m<sup>2</sup> or 3x3m. There were around 27 people in the cell. It had windows at the top of the wall which let in light. It was a dormitory [group cell] and had a toilet at the corner. They were offered one meal: boiled zucchini or potato.

Wiedner recalled P45's statement that 27 people were in a 3x3m cell, but noted that P45 said something else during police questioning. P45 said that the cell in Al-Mantiqa was 12x3m with 70 – 80 people. P45 assumed that there was confusion between Al-Khatib and Al-Mantiqa.

Wiedner asked [how Al-Mantiqa compared to Al-Khatib]. P45 said Al-Khatib was 3x3m for 27 people.

Wiedner asked how many detainees were from his village. P45 said around 100, more or less.

Wiedner recalled P45's statement during police questioning that 68 men [from his village] were detained. P45 said these 68 people were held in Al-Mantiqa Branch, approximately 100 or less. It was 10 years ago, so P45 did not remember much.

Wiedner asked P45 if the 27 people in the 3x3m cell were from his village. P45 said that everyone in the dormitory was from his village.

Wiedner asked how old they were. P45 thought their ages were probably between 16 and 45.

Wiedner recalled that P45 described how light came from outside. P45 said correct, there were windows at the top [of the wall]. In Syria, people call it "a basement with a mandaloun."

Wiedner asked if P45 could see outside. P45 said no, they could only hear sounds.

Wiedner quoted P45's statement from the transcript: "there was a lamp that was on 24-hours and we could not differentiate day from night." P45 noted that the interpreter considered "the area of Al-Khatib" instead of "Al-Mantiqa" during police questioning.

Wiedner asked if the information he quoted was from a different detention. P45 confirmed.

Wiedner asked how P45 slept and about the air quality inside the cell. P45 said that the cell had an iron door and the toilet was at the corner. It was impossible to lay down. The detainees stood or crouched most of the time. There was a person among them who had difficulty breathing. They called the prison guard and told him [about the person]. [The guard] came into the cell, kicked the person's chest, and said "is it better now?"

Wiedner asked P45 if he witnessed the incident. P45 said yes.

Wiedner asked P45 if he saw other detainees be mistreated inside Al-Khatib. P45 said that the guard hit [the person he just described] on the chest and asked him if it was better.

Wiedner asked if there were other cases. P45 said that was the only case during the three days. They were spoiled because of their village's connection to the regime.

Wiedner asked P45 if he could sleep, and if yes, then how. P45 slept in a crouching position. No one slept because they constantly thought about their fates. They stood most of the time.

Wiedner asked P45 if he was sleepless for three days or if he was in the crouching position. P45 said that sometimes five people were taken to interrogation. When they got out, they had [space] to extend their legs, but not to lay down.

Wiedner asked P45 if he was interrogated. P45 said no.

Wiedner asked if other detainees [told P45] what happened during interrogation. P45 said that people only told the highlights. They had to whisper to each other because [the guards] would bang at the door and say “no one speak.” Some of the questions that were asked to people were about their names, ages, participation in demonstrations, and acquaintances.

Wiedner asked if people mentioned that they were subjected to violence during interrogation. P45 said no [they were not subjected to violence] because high officials from their town would have a special [relationship] with the regime.

***

[10-minute-break was announced, but it lasted 25-minutes.]

***

Wiedner asked P45 if he was asked about other detainees in Al-Mantiqua – Branch 227 during his questioning by BAMF. P45 confirmed.

Wiedner said that P45 was asked about detainees’ ages. P45 said their ages ranged from 16 to 70.

Wiedner asked if that was in Al-Mantiqua Branch. P45 said that was in Branch 227

Wiedner said that P45 was asked about meals. P45 said that detainees were given two meals in Al-Mantiqua, one in the morning and one in the evening. There was only one meal in Al-Khatib.

Wiedner recalled P45’s statement that the cell at Al-Khatib was dirty and he could not sleep. Wiedner asked P45 what else he could describe about Al-Khatib. P45 said that the cell was tight. The walls were dirty. There was only one meal and it was inadequate. The detainees did not eat because of the situation, the psychological pressure, and because they thought about their fates.

Wiedner asked if there was only psychological pressure, not physical harm. P45 said that there was no physical harm to detainees [from their village] during his detention period because of the village’s connection to the regime. They were “spoiled.”

Wiedner asked P45 how he was released. P45 said that two of his village’s dignitaries quickly intervened on behalf of the detained villagers. One of them was a Major General اللواء in the army and the other was a member of the People’s Council. The detained villagers had a meeting with the dignitaries who spoke to them about patriotism and asked the detainees to pledge not to demonstrate, and to support Al-Assad. Then the detainees signed blank papers.

Wiedner asked P45 how he went home. P45 said that the dignitaries brought special 14-passenger buses to transport everyone back to their village.

Wiedner asked if P45 saw the faces of Al-Khatib’s staff. P45 said no. The staff made sure that the [detainees] did not see. Detainees were blindfolded when they entered and left the Branch. No staff members were with them when they met with the dignitaries.

Wiedner asked if the meeting [with the dignitaries] took place inside the cell. P45 said no, the meeting took place outside the cell in a hall, which is where they were released.

Wiedner recalled that P45 was asked if he knew about Al-Khatib's responsibilities. P45 said that he did not know about the responsibilities.

Wiedner recalled P45's statement that Al-Khatib was responsible for state security. P45 said that was in general. But he did not know the dynamics of the Branch. Al-Khatib's name is known by people, though P45 did not know about it.

[The parties had no further questions.]

[The witness was dismissed at 11:15AM.]

Judge Kerber distributed copies of the prosecutors' statement from the previous day. Fratzky also read aloud a statement.

The defense filed a request to invite [name redacted], as a witness. He worked at Division 40 before he defected from the regime. According to the defense, he can elaborate on how the fourth Division and Division 40 and its director Hafez Makhoulf intervened with the tasks and work of Al-Khatib Branch, and how much power and authority they had over the Branch. The defense further argued that he can also explain the influence of the Alawites at the Branch and the authority they got over other Sunni personnel.

The Proceedings were adjourned at 11:24AM.

The next session will be on August 25, 2021 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 44

Hearing Dates: August 25 & 26, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Day 88 – August 25, 2021

P46, a 30-year-old Syrian author and filmmaker testified about his detention at Al-Khatib Branch during which he also stayed at Harasta hospital for several days. He told the court about the bad detention conditions at the Branch and torture he endured during interrogations. He explained that although mere detention in a cell at Al-Khatib Branch was torture, the torture by medical professionals and guards at the hospital was even worse. The witness testified in German despite being offered simultaneous interpretation by the court interpreters who in turn had to translate the witness' testimony to Arabic for the Accused. The defense questioned P46's identification of Raslan as the decision-making officer at Al-Khatib Branch due to the witness's connection with Anwar Al-Bunni.

Day 89– August 26, 2021

P47, a 32-year-old Syrian male testified about his detention at Al-Khatib Branch which was relatively short due to bribes paid by his family. The witness told the court about the bad detention conditions at the Branch and the torture he and fellow detainees endured. He further described how he got a glimpse of some officers at the Branch when he was transferred to another branch. He told the court he was 60% sure that one of the officers who seemed to give orders was Anwar Raslan. The defense questioned the witness about his relationship with Anwar Al-Bunni, calling into question the witness's identification of Anwar Raslan. The witness told the court he was hesitant to speak about his own work and people he knows as people in Syria were threatened due to information discussed in court reaching the public.

Trial Day 88 – August 25, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with four spectators and one journalist in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Attorney Bier substituted for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen and Dr. Stolle substituted for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker. Plaintiff Counsels Reiger and Mohammed joined after the lunch break.

P46 was accompanied by his Counsel Dr. Stolle.

Testimony of P46

P46, a 30-year-old Syrian author, comedian, and filmmaker who joined the trial as plaintiff was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

P46, a native Arabic speaker, decided to testify in German language which created some confusion throughout his testimony. The Judges offered him to switch to Arabic and use the simultaneous Arabic language translation for their questions.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber said the court knew from P46's police questioning that he came into conflict with the Syrian regime and was arrested. She asked him to recall the events in court from what he remembered. P46 described that before 2011 he was arrested a couple times due to his activities and organizing demonstrations. He told the court that he guessed his first three arrests would not be of importance [to the trial] as he was detained somewhere else [not Al-Khatib Branch] though he was also tortured during these detentions. P46's last detention was connected to Al-Khatib Branch. He explained that on June 17, 2012 he was staying at a friend's place because his family home which was 20km from Damascus had been bombed. He therefore stayed at his friend's place in [REDACTED]. He recalled that after a couple hours two men dressed in civilian clothes knocked on the door and requested to see his ID card. P46 explained to the court that he told them that he actually lived somewhere else, but his activities were reason enough for them to monitor and arrest him. Six or seven soldiers came and put a plastic bag above P46's head before pulling his t-shirt over his head and taking him downstairs. P46 said his hands were tied with cable strips and he was taken inside a car. He was then taken to a new building that was still under construction. He was taken off the car on the street where he was beaten and filmed while he was beaten. P46 said he was told to say that Bashar is a god, that he himself would be a son of a whore and that "they" [soldiers] could rape his mother. P46 went on to describe how he was then taken inside the building where he was left alone for several hours. Since there was no toilet, P46 had to pee in his trousers. P46 then had to undress and was beaten with metal sticks and plastic tubes and cigarettes were stubbed out on his body. P46 said the soldiers had fun torturing him and wanted him to confess that he was planning bomb attacks in [REDACTED]. "They" also checked his camera and searched his phone and the contacts on his phone. According to P46, the torture then increased, and he was tortured in a sexual manner. They tried to insert a stick into his anus and threatened him from behind. P46 said they wanted him to confess that he was building a bomb. He explained to the court that his friend at whose place he was staying studied chemistry. The documents in his flat therefore looked like plans on how to build a bomb to people who did not know anything about chemicals.

[Another spectator took a seat in the public gallery.]

Presiding Judge Kerber told the witness that he should let the court know whenever he needed a break, the same would be the case for the court interpreters.

Kerber then asked how the soldiers were dressed. P46 said two of them did not look like soldiers,<sup>2</sup> and neither did the others. According to P46, however, they behaved like soldiers. P46 explained that in Syria something called "Shabiha" exists, a group that would not belong to the military but cooperate with them by arresting and persecuting people.

Kerber asked if this group would be a militia. P46 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know how the people who arrested P46 were dressed. P46 said the people at his door were dressed like civilians, three or four people who joined later were wearing military trousers. P46 explained that they were, however, no members of the military. They rather belonged to a group that was for example running its own check points but wearing clothes and carrying weapons from the military.

P46 went on to describe that [when he arrived at the construction site] there was a short conversation between two people. P46 knew one of them who told P46 to just tell “them” whatever they wanted to hear so he would get out as soon as possible. P46 said that after one day of torture the boss – whom he already saw the previous day in front of the door – told the others that they should kill P46 on the highway. P46 explained to the court that there was a big highway close by, leading to the airport. P46 was taken to a red Mercedes where he had to sit in the back with two men sitting next to him. These men told P46 to take them to his home so they could rape his mother and maybe kill her afterwards. P46 said they indicated similar things regarding his sister. P46 was so afraid, he could not handle the situation. When P46 was taken out of the car, he could hear cars driving on the highway. He did not know what “they” wanted to do to him, he just hoped that someone would find his ID so he could be identified later since they were at a very remote location. P46 said he had to kneel when he heard a shot. It took him a few seconds to realize that it was just a game. When P46 told the men that he wanted to die, they started laughing at him and told him he would not get out that easily. They then drove to Damascus which took around thirty minutes.

P46 described that when they arrived, there were no soldiers, they were wearing civilian clothes. P46 did not know where he was. He was taken towards a roof and had to hand in all his belongings. P46 could barely walk due to the torture, his entire body was blue and black. When P46 told the people there that he had not received any food for one and a half days, he was told that he first had to clean the roof before he would get food. P46 told the court that he asked this man where he was but he simply replied “Welcome to Switzerland” and hit P46 on his head. P46 said he cleaned the entire floor and was able to see the mountains surrounding Damascus. He therefore knew that he was at the intelligence service in Irbin. P46 added that he also knew the location from a food bag he saw in the kitchen when he too went there to throw away the dirt from the roof. The bag was from a restaurant he knew because he went to a school close by. After P46 finished cleaning the roof, he was put in a small room under the stairs. P46 said the room was very dirty and full of trash. However, he found some old food there which he ate. He described that the rice and yoghurt he later got was the best food in his life because he had not eaten for such a long time before that.

P46 continued to explain that a bus arrived in the evening. He and other detainees were taken to this small bus. Around ten to fifteen people were in the bus. When they arrived at their destination, they had to walk downstairs where other soldiers were waiting and the detainees were receiving a “welcome party”. P46 recalled that he was severely injured during this party as he was hit in the face with a rifle butt and even lost a tooth. After that, people at the Branch started recording everyone’s personal information. Detainees had to hand in all their belongings including watches and jewelry. The soldiers then told P46 that he was about to die, so he would stay at the Branch for one night before he would be taken to the hospital. P46 said he was taken to a small cell where he saw a dead person on his first day. The other detainees first thought the person was sleeping. When they realized that he was dead, they knocked on the door. The guards told the detainees that they should let the person die and only knock again when he was dead. The body was only taken from the cell when the person was dead. P46 said he did not know what happened to the corpse.

On the next day, P46 was taken to a taxi accompanied by two soldiers. P46 told the court he assumed that the taxi driver cooperated. He was taken to Harasta Hospital. P46 further recalled that there was another person with him. He was sitting behind P46, and he was at first not able to see this person as he was blindfolded and had to put his head between his legs. But when P46 left the car, he recognized that there was another person. When they arrived at the hospital, their personal information was again recorded and they were taken to the sixth floor. P46 told the court that there were multiple rooms on this floor, it seemed to him as if there was a room for every [intelligence] branch, one was for Al-Khatib Branch. There were two soldiers with the detainees in a room. It was the same in every room despite being different Branches, for example Air Force Intelligence.

Kerber wanted to know how P46 knew that. P46 said he overheard conversations between the soldiers. It was hard to talk at the hospitals, but sometimes one of the soldiers left his room and went to another one to talk to one of his colleagues. P46 further explained that every detainee was assigned a number. One was only allowed to use this number, no matter the question. [P46 provided some sample questions such as ‘what is our name?’, ‘where do you come from?’, always answering e.g. “No.36”]. According to P46, the detainees were tied to a bed and two of them were tied together by their feet so that two people had to share one bed.

Kerber asked how wide the bed was. P46 said it was around 1 meter wide with two or three people in it.

Kerber asked the interpreters if they wanted to have a break. [One of them had to simultaneously interpret P46’s testimony from German to Arabic for the Accused]. The interpreters said they were able to go on for a bit.

P46 continued to describe that he went to the toilet at the hospital the next morning. Detainees were allowed to use the toilet twice or three times a day, however, the soldiers decided when they were allowed to. When P46 used the toilet for the first time, he realized that there was a corpse of a child and another corpse in one of the stalls, so P46 had to use another one. When he went back from the toilet, he met another guy<sup>3</sup> who told him that all dead bodies would be thrown there. P46 first did not believe him but then realized that there were more and more corpses every day. P46 explained that they were all of different ages, some were still alive but nevertheless thrown there together with other corpses. P46 recalled that he stayed at the hospital for more than a week, around nine or ten days. He did not receive any medication during this time, but all nurses, doctors, and soldiers tortured him 24 hours a day. According to P46, the brother of one of the soldiers died in Hama so the soldier used the detainees to blow off steam. He beat them on their hands three hundred times, beat them on their injuries and stepped on their open wounds. P46 said the soldier enjoyed causing them pain.

Kerber wanted to know how P46 was beaten. P46 said there was a tube. P46 consulted the interpreter who explained that P46 was talking about a plastic tube typically used for sewage. P46 added that there was also a cable that consisted of multiple cables, so it was very thick, and the metal parts stood out. P46 said he was tortured with these tools. P46 said torture was different at the hospital and at the Branch. At the latter, “they” wanted to gain information, so torture got less whenever they got information. At the hospital, however, torture never decreased, it was just about torturing people.

Kerber wanted to know more about the nurses and doctors that P46 just mentioned. P46 explained that the nurses came to the rooms twice or three times a day. They smoked inside the rooms, pressed the cigarettes on the skin of the detainees and then said “oh, this doesn’t hurt at all.”

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P46 used the term „guy“ [German „Typ“] throughout his testimony to describe fellow detainees or people belonging to a certain group he just described.

There was only one doctor who visited P46. On some days he did not show up at all. Whenever the doctor came, he beat detainees and insulted them by saying they should all die. P46 said there was no humanity at the hospital and the people there viewed the detainees as enemies.

P46 recalled that one day one of the detainees in his room had heart issues and requested medication from the soldier. P46 explained that it was the soldier who started torturing everyone when his brother died. The person who requested medication did not receive any and around 23 hours later, he stopped moving. His body was cold and as soon as P46 realized that, he told the soldier. P46 added that they always had to wear blindfolds and were only allowed to take them off at the toilet. When he told the soldier about the cold body of his fellow detainees, P46 was told to get up in the bed but the person next to him who was tied to P46 did not move.

Kerber wanted to know what happened with P46's hands. P46 said his hands were tied behind his back and his feet were tied to the feet of the other person. He therefore had space to sit up in the bed. When he did that, the other person did not move. The soldier then came saying "are you dead or just pretending?" he beat the person with a cable, but the person did not move. The soldier then went to the telephone and called someone from the "cooling department." When they came, they first drank Paraguay tea together with the soldier and chatted with him for an hour. They then untied the person and pulled him to the floor and took him outside the room. P46 said this was the usual procedure: corpses were just pulled to the floor and not put on a stretcher. P46 further said he did not know whether this person was taken to the toilet or to the cooling room.

Kerber wanted to know how P46 got out of the hospital. P46 said after a few days he was taken back to Al-Khatib Branch.

Kerber asked if P46 was told a reason for his leave e.g. his condition improved. P46 affirmed [that his condition improved], saying that he was able to stand up and his injuries healed a bit. However, his open wounds healed themselves and were not treated in any manner. He was then taken back to Al-Khatib in a bus together with three or four other people. P46 requested a short break.

***

Kerber wanted to know how P46 knew that he was taken back to Al-Khatib when he left the hospital. P46 explained that all detainees knew where they were, except for the ones in solitary confinement, since they had no contact with other detainees.

P46 told the court he wanted to say something about the hospital: on his first day at Al-Khatib he met a guy [detainee] with severe injuries on his feet due to the torture method "Falaqa". P46 explained that when someone is tortured with this method, his feet are tied and beaten with a cable or tube. This particular person had severe injuries at his feet due to this torture method and the injuries got inflamed. He was also taken to the hospital when P46 was already there. P46 recognized the person when he came to the hospital because he knew him well since he had to help him go to the toilet when they were still detained at Al-Khatib together. P46 said this person was most likely an Assad supporter because he had a tattoo of Bashar Al-Assad's dead brother Bassel on his arm. The other detainees therefore called him Abu Bassel. P46 explained that it is common in Syria to call people "Abu" which means "father of..." P46 said he recognized that this person [who came to the hospital after him] was Abu Bassel. He was in a very bad condition and eventually died at the hospital after two or three days. According to P46, he died of gangrene.

Kerber asked if he died while P46 was still at the hospital. P46 affirmed, adding that he would know that the dead body of this person was left in the bed for some time before the corpse was taken away. P46 explained that corpses were always taken only after several hours and then taken to the toilet. He said it was a method to put pressure on the other people there, scaring them by showing them the corpses. P46 went on to say that this person [Abu Bassel] was not even an opponent of Al-Assad but arrested and severely tortured due to a confusion of names. When “they” later realized that they had the wrong guy, he received better treatment.

Kerber said the court previously heard of a person with a tattoo of a member of the Al-Assad family. She asked P46 if it was common in Syria to have such tattoos. P46 said it was not that common, however, there would be several people with such tattoos. He himself met three or four of them.

Judge Wiedner recalled Abu Bassel dying at the hospital and asked P46 where he got his injuries. According to P46, Abu Bassel was injured during interrogations at Al-Khatib. Abu Bassel told P46 that only after “they” realized that they got the wrong person, they apologized and gave him food. However, the person in charge ordered to send him to the hospital before releasing him to improve his condition first.

Judge Kerber encouraged P46 to continue. P46 went on to describe how he was taken back to Al-Khatib Branch [from the hospital] and taken to a so-called “open cell”. [The interpreter clarified that P46 was referring to a communal cell]. P46 described the cell as a “huge corridor” with a toilet at the end. This “huge hall” captured several hundred people, and no one was able to sit down. New detainees had to stand in the middle of the cell. Those who had been there for longer got a space in the corners of the cell. After a few weeks at the cell, P46 got a space next to the toilet where he could constantly hear screams of torture. P46 said that hearing these screams of torture was worse than the torture itself because one was constantly wondering when it would be his turn.

P46 further described that during his time at Al-Khatib Branch he was once taken to Division 40 by car. At the Division he was tortured and interrogated by two or three soldiers and an interrogation officer. P46 said all questions were about the photos from his camera, names and places related to the photos. P46 explained to the court that because he had been detained three times before this detention, he already knew how to deal with interrogations. Whenever he provided information, torture decreased. He only provided names that were already known [to the intelligence services] or names of dead people. P46 said he was interrogated twice and one time at Al-Khatib Branch.

Kerber asked if the two interrogations P46 just mentioned both happened at Division 40. P46 affirmed, saying that he was interrogated twice at Division 40 and once at Al-Khatib Branch. He added [regarding his interrogation at Al-Khatib Branch] that he was taken from his cell to the first floor where he had to wait in front of a room. Another guy was tortured inside this room before it was P46’s turn. P46 told the court that a plastic bag was pulled over the head of the person before him and then set on fire. The hot plastic then dropped on the person’s face. P46 said he had to listen to this person being tortured for thirty minutes before he himself was taken to the room. P46 described that in this moment, he was ready to tell them anything, however, they first started asking him about weapons. He explained to them that he did not own any weapons. He also tried to explain that he did not even do the mandatory military service, so he would not know how to use weapons. P46 was then beaten by several people. After that, he requested to get some water to drink. He was told to drink from a bottle which belonged to the air condition. P46 explained to the court that in Syria, air condition systems would consist of two machines, one inside the building and one outside. The one inside would excrete dirty water. P46 had to drink this dirty water. He was then beaten with cables and tubes until he would tell what “they” wanted to hear.

According to P46, they wanted him to confess that he shot a soldier. However, P46 did not want to incriminate himself, so he never confessed anything he did not do. He only spoke about his own activities. P46 conclude that these methods [torturing people until they would confess anything] probably worked very well with others.

Kerber wanted to know where the incident happened when P46 was taken upstairs, listening to the other person being tortured with a plastic bag and then beaten himself. She asked if it was at Division 40 or Al-Khatib Branch. P46 said it was Al-Khatib Branch.

Kerber asked if he was blindfolded. P46 affirmed, adding that he was able to see a bit.

Kerber asked if he was able to see the plastic bag incident. P46 explained that the person who was tortured with the plastic bag quickly told P46 about it on his way back to the cell. This person was later also taken to the hospital. P46 said "they [people at the interrogation] also "burned plastic to his ear" and the hot plastic dropped on his back and shoulders. P46 said they were singing an Arabic song about snow while doing that.

Kerber wanted to know what happened next, after he was taken to Division 40. P46 said after 27 days he was taken back to Al-Khatib. He was not interrogated anymore but told to come and pick up his belongings. P46 recalled that he had to go upstairs where around sixty detainees were kneeling in the sun. One or two buses came, and the detainees got their personal belongings. P46 said they thought they would be taken to court. This was also when P46 saw his friend at whose flat he stayed [when P46 was arrested]. His friend did not know where he was because he was in solitary confinement for twenty days. All detainees were taken to the buses. They were blindfolded and had to put their heads between their legs. They first thought they would be taken to court, but the bus drove further away, so it was clear that they would be taken somewhere else. P46 said they were taken to Kafar Souseh.

P46 told the court that he assumes that Kafar Souseh was the biggest Branch and higher [in the hierarchy of branches] than Al-Khatib. However, he was not sure as there were so many state security Branches. P46 went on to describe that they had to endure severe torture when they left the bus. They then had to go downstairs. They first had to sit directly in front of the door before they went downstairs to a desk where they had to hand in their personal belongings and were distributed to the different cells. P46 said he got his belongings back from Al-Khatib Branch, however, he did not get everything back. He therefore asked about the rest of his belongings and was severely tortured as a result. His hands were tied with cable strips and he was hanged at the toilet for a couple days while others used the toilet as usual. P46 said he was naked for the first three days. The skin on his hands ripped open because the weight of his body pulled him down. P46 said he was not alone. He was there with six or seven other people. He was taken down at night and taken back to the cell. P46 said he always had to wear cable strips and was either hanged or his hands were tied. He was always blindfolded and there were two cameras inside the cell. However, the detainees did not know whether the cameras were working or not.

P46 further described that from the cell, one could always hear welcoming parties whenever new detainees arrived and were greeted with torture. P46 was taken to interrogation at some point. He was taken upstairs where a long corridor was leading to a yard. After a couple hundred meters he had to go upstairs and entered a corridor which was leading around the house. He was interrogated in a room at the end of that corridor and was asked the same questions. P46 added that the aim of the questions he was asked at Al-Khatib was always to admit that he killed someone, organized demonstrations, or received money from abroad. P46 said he was supposed to admit these things for a judgment or anything like that. After a couple weeks – around one or two weeks after the interrogation – P46 was taken to court. The judge at this court saw P46's scars.

P46 added that he had just left the Branch when he was taken to court. He had been severely tortured, and one could see fresh injuries. His hands were tied with cable strips and severely beaten. P46 further described that it was very hot inside the cell because there were so many people. Detainees just wore underpants because it was so hot. To punish detainees, their hands were often tied outside the cell where it was cold, while they had to stand inside the cell where it was hot.

Kerber wanted to know where that happened. P46 said it happened at Kafar Souseh. He also saw it happening at Al-Khatib, but did not have to endure it there himself. P46 said one was able to see the injuries on his hands and back. He said some demonstrations increased because of the torture. P46 added that he was released from the court which was in charge of the surrounding area of Damascus.

Kerber asked whether P46 meant the Rif Dimashq court. P46 affirmed, adding that he saw many people standing in front of the court building with pictures of their loved ones. They asked others if they had seen their loved ones, because many of them did not know anything about the fate and whereabouts of their family members. P46 said his family did not know where he was either. He was not allowed to call them or contact them in any other manner. He once stole a piece of soap at the toilet and left the phone numbers of his family members on the soap. He then gave the soap to the first person who left the Branch to inform his family.

Kerber wanted to know if this person actually contacted P46's family. P46 affirmed, saying that his family then tried to contact him. They paid 10,000€ to get him free. P46 said he told his mother before he was arrested that she should never pay the full amount before he was released. He explained that many people in Syria took advantage of the situation and lawyers and employees of the intelligence services took bribes. One officer offered to help in exchange for money, but P46's family did not pay him.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know who offered P46 help. P46 said he does not know exactly, however, the guy who P46 gave the piece of soap offered to help.

Judge Kerber wanted to know if P46's family asked where he was. P46 affirmed, adding his family asked many times. He explained that he had leukemia as a child, so his mother went to his doctor to get his medical record. She then went to all intelligence branches, to Al-Khatib as well and tried to get him free. At Al-Khatib she was sent away at the door. "They" simply told her that P46 was not a detainee and not at the Branch.

Kerber wanted to know more about P46's leukemia. P46 said he had leukemia from when he was six to eleven years old. His mother tried to raise this with the branches to get him out.

Kerber asked if P46's leukemia just healed and disappeared like that. P46 said he received chemotherapy. His mother tried everything to get him free. She therefore went to the branches with his medical record hoping for compassion. However, it did not work out.

Kerber further wanted to know if one could still see the signs of cable strips on P46's hands. P46 said they almost completely disappeared; one could only see light signs on his hands.

Kerber asked if one could see any other signs. P46 said one could see scars on his shoulder because the cable that he was beaten with ripped off skin and flesh. One could also see signs on his feet.

When P46 pulled up the left sleeve of his shirt to show his scars, Judge Kerber said the court visually inspected the scars on P46's shoulder. P46 added that he would also have scars from when he was beaten with a rifle.

Judge Kerber asked if P46 noticed why he was transferred to the hospital. P46 explained that there was a person [at Al-Khatib Branch] who decided who gets medicine and who gets transferred to the hospital. Detainees were therefore taken to this person. It was in the basement where the cells were. One was taken from the cells to a person called “Abu Shameh” which means Abu Birthmark. P46 said every time they left the cell, their eyes were blindfolded, so P46 could not see this person’s face in detail. This person usually actively participated in torturing injured detainees by pressing on their injuries. P46 said he was transferred on the next day.

Kerber wanted to know if this procedure [checking and transferring sick and injured detainees] happened multiple times. P46 said this person was also in charge of distributing medicine. Detainees were sent to him at least twice a week and once or twice a week they were asked about medicine.

Kerber wanted to know more about the physical appearance of this person. She asked where he had the birthmark. P46 said the birthmark was on the person’s face, however, he did not know where exactly.

Kerber asked about the stature of the person. P46 said he was thin and slightly taller than P46. He was wearing a shirt and trousers, civilian clothes. He had grey hair. P46 added that on his first day [at the Branch] he was unable to stand, so he saw the person from below. He only looked him directly in his face once. P46 said he was full of fear in this situation.

Kerber wanted to know if the person said anything and had a particular dialect. P46 said the person tried to speak in Alawite dialect, which would mainly be used by almost all people in the North[west]. However, P46 recognized that this was not his actual dialect. P46 added that he went to school with people who spoke this dialect, so he was able to tell when people tried to fake it. According to P46, the person rather spoke a “white dialect”.

Kerber asked what P46 meant by “white dialect”. P46 said it would rather be spoken in Damascus and Homs, it would be easier to understand than the dialect used in the North or in the South. People in these areas would sometimes use words that others don’t even understand.

Kerber joked that it would be the same in Germany with people from Bavaria. Kerber asked if P46 recognized the defendant. P46 denied.

Kerber ordered a short break for the interpreters and in general.

Judge Kerber explained that the Judges had a few more questions and P46 should just let them know whenever he needed a break, the court would then have a longer lunch break.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner wanted to know how many times P46 saw the person who decided about the fate of sick and injured detainees. P46 replied this man examined him the first time. When P46 came back from the hospital he told the guards that he was in pain and requested to get medicine. P46 said he just wanted to get out of the cell. That was when he met the man for the second time, but P46 did not get any medicine. P46 explained that his intention was to get out of the cell, since he had not even left the cell to use the toilet because the toilet was inside the cell. P46 concluded that he saw this man twice. He further described to the court that detainees went there in groups.

Sometimes there was a doctor as well, but the other person was the one making decisions. The doctor only fixed open wounds which needed to be sewed immediately. However, P46 only heard that from others. P46 said when he saw the man for the second time, he did not see his face.

Wiedner said one needs to be careful about what he saw himself and what he heard from others. He asked P46 if he saw the doctor himself or heard about him. P46 said the second time [when P46 was presented to the person deciding about sick and wounded detainees] the person was accompanied by a doctor. The doctor was standing next to that person. However, the doctor did not talk to P46. He only spoke with people who were injured. P46 said he only spoke to “the guy”. When he asked P46 what he needed, P46 told him he had pain in his stomach and wanted medicine. The guy then hit P46 and told him not to act like a woman.

Wiedner asked if this happened in the basement. P46 affirmed, adding that he was taken from the cell a couple meters to a corridor.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were always several people. P46 explained that it was always a group of detainees who were taken from the cell. They were asked [by the guards] who had health issues. According to P46, many detainees wanted to go to the hospital because they thought it would be better. The guards already scanned who needed to go and who did not. Four to five detainees were then taken from the cell and had to queue. P46 said this procedure happened for every cell, one after the other.

Wiedner asked if this happened on more occasions than the two times when P46 was taken from the cell. P46 said “the guy” hit injured people on their injuries on purpose to cause them more pain.

Wiedner asked if it was always the same person. P46 said it was Abu Shameh. At the first time he did not beat, the second time he did. P46 said new detainees wanted to go to see him.

Wiedner recalled that P46 said he was blindfolded but able to see some things around him. He asked P46 to describe what he saw. P46 described that he was taken out of the cell and walked a couple meters in the corridor. A guy was standing there inspecting injured people. Some had inflammations, others were unable to walk because they were tortured with the German chair. P46 said that detainees who were unable to walk were accompanied by other detainees. People who were injured were beaten and only those who were half dead were sent to the hospital.

[Presiding Judge Kerber reminded a person in the audience that Covid masks were mandatory inside the building and told her to put the mask back on.]

Wiedner asked P46 to describe the body of the person who inspected the injured detainees. P46 said the person was thin, tall, had grey hair, his hair was coming off and he was bald. P46 said this was the only things he saw, he could not remember in detail, adding that it happened a long time ago and that he was unable to focus in that situation because he just focused on how to get out of there and not how the person looked like. He therefore could only tell the court what he was able to see.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P46 said he would not recognize the Accused and asked him whether it was because he could not remember or because he looked differently [than the person P46 described]. P46 said it was not only because of that but because it happened a long time ago, and he was not able to look the person in the eyes as he was wearing blindfolds. P46 said he knew the person had a birthmark because he was called Abu Shameh. He was also able to see that the person had grey hair.

Wiedner cited from the transcript of P46’s police questioning where he said that the person who decided whether people would go to the hospital or be treated by the doctor had a birthmark.

However, P46 did not know for sure as he was not allowed to look at the person. P46 explained that he had to face a wall and this person was standing to the left of him. In this situation, P46 was able to see the birthmark. He could only see the person from the side, that was how he remembered it. P46 recalled he was facing a wall and only able to see the left half of the person's face.

Wiedner again cited from the transcript of P46's police questioning during which he said that the person who made decisions about sick detainees was not entirely bald. He had grey hair on the sides. Wiedner said this would be what P46 just described to the court. He further recalled that when P46 was asked about a picture of Raslan, he told the police that he did not know Raslan before. P46 said he knew him through media but during his detention or after that he did not know him.

Wiedner asked if P46 saw pictures of Anwar Raslan before his police questioning in Germany. P46 affirmed, saying he saw pictures in the media but could not remember the face.

Wiedner wanted to know if P46 recognized a person in the pictures that the police showed him. P46 affirmed, saying he immediately recognized that it would probably be Anwar Raslan. However, he did not know the name before but recognized the face at the police questioning.

Wiedner asked if P46 was able to connect the picture to the person he saw in detention. P46 said he could not tell if it was the same person because he was not able to see him very well.

Wiedner recalled that when the police showed P46 picture No.2, P46 said he was not sure whether the person in the picture looked like the person he saw in detention, he would not recognize him. P46 told the court that he said that to the police because he was not able to exclude any possibility.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P46 was able to remember if the person who made decisions about sick detainees and who hit detainees wore glasses. P46 said the first time he saw the person when he was able to get a better look at him, P46 was very exhausted. When he saw the person the second time he was wearing glasses. P46 said he was sure about that.

Wiedner wanted to know how the person was treated by others. P46 said he was called "Sidi". According to P46, the soldier who took the detainees to the person always called him "Sidi".

Wiedner recalled that other detainees were taken to see this person as well, asking P46 how many times that happened. P46 said it was at least twice or three times a week. Sometimes he came on Wednesdays, sometimes he did not. P46 concluded that it happened twice or three times a week.

Wiedner wanted to know if P46 heard how decisions about other detainees were made. P46 said people were either sent to hospital or got medicine. There were many injured people, for them the decision was "Harasta."

Wiedner wanted to know the name of the hospital. P46 said it was only mentioned the name of the place which would also be the name of the hospital.

Wiedner asked if people were sent to other hospitals as well. P46 denied, saying they were only sent to this [Harasta] hospital, as far as P46 was concerned. P46 said at this hospital, detainees had to hand in their clothes which they did not get back at the end of their stay. At the hospital they only wore hospital gowns. One could therefore tell that people who wore hospital gowns came from the hospital.

Wiedner asked if they wore typical hospital gowns. P46 affirmed, adding that the gowns were white with blue or green dots. Although the name of the hospital was not written on the gowns, the people who wore them said they were at Harasta hospital.

Wiedner wanted to know how long P46 had approximately been at the hospital. P46 said he was there for around nine days, less than two weeks.

Wiedner confirmed that P46 told the police the same. He asked P46 whether it was correct that detainees at the hospital did not receive any treatment. P46 explained that the only thing he saw in this regard during his nine days there was how one person got paracetamol. Other than that, they were simply tortured as cigarettes were stubbed out on their skin or they were beaten on their injuries. P46 said this was done by nurses and soldiers (guards).

Wiedner asked whether P46 saw any meaning behind his stay at the hospital. P46 did not understand the question. Wiedner repeated his question asking whether P46 saw any reason for his stay at the hospital. P46 said maybe it was to put people in an actual bed so they could get better and that the air was better than the air inside the cells. However, at the hospital the torture was worse and pointless as there were no interrogations. P46 said they only wanted to try to scare people even more and show them dead bodies. It was a strategy to scare people so they would confess.

Wiedner recalled P46 mentioning that one of the dead bodies he saw at the toilet was the body of a child. He asked P46 how old the child was. P46 said the child was around twelve or fourteen years old. P46 said the corpses he saw after that were mostly old men who were just thrown there with their hospital gowns. He told the court that he avoided looking at the corpses. Only once when he realized that one of them was still alive, he tried to talk to him. He then called a guard who hit the person.

Wiedner wanted to know if P46 saw women at the hospital as well. P46 denied, saying he did not see women at the hospital, however, at Al-Khatib Branch he did see women, they were detained in special cells.

Wiedner recalled P46 telling the police that around 200 cigarettes were stubbed on his body during his stay at the hospital. P46 confirmed, adding that it might have been more. Between fifteen and twenty cigarettes were stubbed on him every day for nine days. P46 said he heard that it was also done to other detainees, the people at the hospital were always smoking. P46 explained that since he had to wear blindfolds even when he was in bed, he could never know what exactly was happening around him. 200 cigarettes would sound a lot but if one did the math, one would realize that it would be right. P46 said it was one hundred cigarettes or more, but it was also done to others and the guards were changing shifts every six hours.

Wiedner recalled P46 saying that he was tortured by nurses and guards. He asked P46 whether he was also tortured by doctors. P46 said that in nine days only one doctor spoke to him. At the end of their conversation, he stubbed out a cigarette on P46's foot. The doctor did not give him any medicine or diagnosis. P46 described that there were usually two nurses who insulted the detainees and said they should die. The guards were the ones torturing and the doctors never had time.

Wiedner asked P46 to explain how he realized that Abu Bassel died at Harasta hospital. P46 said he came to the hospital shortly after P46, around one or two days. P46 already knew him, so he recognized him. Two or three days after his arrival, he got a bad fever. That was what the person next to him [Abu Bassel] told the guard.

Wiedner concluded that Abu Bassel was in a different bed but same room as P46. P46 explained that there were eight to ten beds per room. The person in the same bed as Abu Bassel mentioned the fever and they did not hear anything else on that evening. The guard tried to wake him up with beatings and joked around that Abu Bassel was just pretending. He then made a call and told the people on the other end of the line that there would be a present for them and they should come upstairs to get it. They eventually came and again just pulled the body to the floor and outside the room.

Wiedner said he had some questions regarding chronology. He first wanted to know where and when P46 was detained before, since he mentioned that he had been arrested multiple times before his detention at Al-Khatib. P46 said one time he was detained at a demonstration in Damascus on September 11. He added that the date would be known to the world for a different reason, but in Syria it would be even worse as it was [Bashar] Al-Assad's birthday. P46 repeated that he was arrested at a demonstration on that day.

Wiedner concluded that it happened in 2011. P46 said he was at the 'political intelligence' for a couple weeks. At his second arrest, he was at a café together with a female friend who was wanted. When they wanted to leave, a soldier came and put a weapon at P46's back and took him. He was taken to the Air Force Intelligence in Harasta where he was detained for around two months and severely tortured. Shortly after his release he was arrested at a demonstration together with a journalist. The journalist was Swiss and they were both taken to Kafar Souseh. According to P46, the journalist was released after a couple of days while P46 had to spend several weeks at the Branch. P46 said it was a branch of the military security, he thinks it was Branch 215, however, he would not be sure about the number as there are so many branches.

Wiedner said it would be fine, he just wanted to get a rough overview from P46. P46 added that he was released mid-June before he was arrested for the fourth time.

Wiedner asked if it was correct that his fourth arrest was on June [REDACTED], 2012 and that he was taken to the construction site for two days before he was transferred. P46 said he spent one day at Al-Khatib Branch, then was at the hospital and transferred back to Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked P46 about Division 40. P46 said he did not spend a night there, he only had to clean the roof for five to eight hours before he was taken to a cell under the staircase and then transferred to Al-Khatib by bus.

Wiedner concluded that P46 was at Division 40 on [REDACTED] June. P46 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if it was correct that P46 stayed at Al-Khatib for one night before he was taken to the hospital where he stayed nine days. P46 confirmed, adding that he was then taken back to Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked when P46 was released and taken to Kafar Souseh. P46 said it might have been July [REDACTED].

Wiedner concluded that P46 returned to Al-Khatib. P46 confirmed, saying it was on July [REDACTED] [same date that he just mentioned].

Wiedner asked about the date of P46's release. P46 said it was a date in mid-August. He was there [Al-Khatib Branch] for around 27 days before he was transferred to another prison.

Wiedner said based on what P46 just said, it was early August. He recalled P46 telling the police that he stayed at Al-Khatib until around August [REDACTED] 2012 before he was taken to Kafar Souseh. P46 said it was mid-August, however, he could not remember the exact date right now.

Wiedner recalled P46 being taken to the construction site after his arrest where he was then severely mistreated. He asked P46 if the plastic bag that was put on fire happened later or at the construction site. P46 said the torture already started at the construction site, however, the fire incident happened at Al-Khatib shortly after he came back from the hospital.

Wiedner said he understood from P46's police questioning that the incident already happened at the construction site. P46 said it happened at the constructions site as well. However, there it was not like it was at Al-Khatib. He was not severely injured at the construction site.

There the plastic bag was just set on fire, but they only played with the fire to scare P46. According to P46 it was really bad later at Al-Khatib. He had to undress until naked and they tried to insert a water tube into him from behind. They threatened to do so.

Wiedner asked if P46 was completely naked or in his undershorts. P46 said he was completely naked.

Wiedner asked if the Shabiha tried to film P46. P46 confirmed that they filmed him with smartphones and showed him the clips. He was already filmed when he left the car on the street. P46 said he thought others would see him as well. It was like a show.

Wiedner asked if P46 was sexually harassed at Al-Khatib for example like he was harassed at the construction site. P46 recalled that he again had to undress upon his arrival and squat three or four times so he could be frisked. He was beaten from behind and front, nothing else. P46 added that someone else, however, told him that a bag full of liquid was tied to his penis so the penis would be dragged down. P46 said he would be sure that it happened like that because the person would not have told him that if it did not happen like that.

Wiedner asked P46 about other similar stories he heard. P46 said it just came to his mind that a man who was arrested at a check point together with his six- or seven-year-old son was detained in the same cell as P46. The child wanted to play in the middle of all the tortured people. P46 said the child saw everything. It was said that there were two kids in another cell. These kids were transferred from Al-Khatib to Kafar Souseh together with P46. They were fourteen and thirteen years old and had already been detained for seven or eight months. P46 said they told him their story. They were in the same cell in Kafar Souseh and P46 spoke with them. One of them had been in solitary confinement in Al-Khatib ever since his arrest before he was taken to Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner wanted to reassure that there was a 6-year-old child and asked P46 whether the child was released. P46 said the child was called together with his father, but P46 did not know what happened then. They were called after around ten days.

Regarding sexual abuse of other detainees, Wiedner recalled P46 telling the police that he heard people were beaten on their testicles with a rubber band and things were inserted to their anus. P46 confirmed, saying he heard such things but did not see it himself. If men would tell such stories they would not lie. According to P46, one would also see the consequences of such acts when people started crying because of it. P46 said he would then believe them. One would also not admit such things easily. But if one would tell such stories, you could believe them.

Wiedner recalled P46 saying that people were hanged. He wanted to know where that happened and if there were several people. P46 explained that when “they” would hang someone, it would be in a small corridor in front of the cell. According to P46, this is where soldiers and Al-Khatib employees were detained as well. He said that many soldiers came from revolutionary towns, so they would not be allowed to “leave the house”. Sometimes they would talk to each other through the door. These soldiers were detainees as well and people were hanged in this corridor whenever it was free.

Wiedner asked if P46 saw this himself. P46 affirmed, saying it happened directly in front of the cell’s door. He described that there was a small window in the door of the cell. Whenever this window was open, one could look outside. P46 said one could also see what was happening in front of the door through the gap between door and floor. According to P46, employees [of the intelligence services] were often detained because in 2012 many of them tried to defect. To prevent them from defecting, they were arrested. P46 further described that whenever these detained employees had to work, e.g. distributing food or cooking, people were hanged there [in the corridor in front of the cell]. P46 added he did not know where else they were hanged as well.

Wiedner wanted to know how people were hanged, if there was a device. P46 said there was something on the wall where people were hanged at. People's hands were tied with cable strips, and they were hanged on metal sticks that stood out of the wall. Above these sticks was a metal chain to pull people higher up.

Wiedner asked how many times that happened. P46 said it could be considered 'every-day-life'. It happened whenever 'they' [detainees at the corridor had to cook or distribute food. P46 said he did not know where the detainees came from. They were hanged for three or four hours per days whenever the detained employees had to work. The corridor was then empty and other detainees were hanged.

Wiedner asked if P46 was close to the cell's door so many times. P46 affirmed, saying he was there whenever the food arrived. He explained to the court that people who were in detention for a long time were chosen to distribute the food among detainees. P46 therefore went outside [the cell] and distributed the food. When he was in front of the door, he could see people hanging. After the food was finished and P46 handed back plates etc., the [detained] employees came back.

Wiedner wanted to know if P46 was hanged as well. P46 said he was not hanged at Al-Khatib but at Kafar Souseh. He added that at Al-Khatib he was only beaten and tortured.

Wiedner said P46 should not misunderstand and recalled that P46 was "only" beaten at Al-Khatib. P46 confirmed, adding that as he already told the court, he was beaten and had to drink the dirty water. Other torture [he experienced] happened somewhere else. P46 added that at Al-Khatib there was the so-called "German chair" which almost broke people's spines. According to P46, two people were unable to stand up because of that.

Wiedner wanted to know more about other methods P46 was told about. [P46 took a moment to think] P46 told the court about a guy who told him that "they" [guards] tried to insert a stick into his anus. This was all P46 said he could remember. P46 added that there was also something called "Falaqa" which he had already mentioned. He further said he considered the small amount of food they got as torture. According to P46 they got only one olive per detainee. In the afternoon they got one piece of bread, one potato, and one tomato for three to four detainees. According to P46, this was all they got per day. Sometimes they got food twice or three times a day but it was always very little. Most of the time, they only got two meals. P46 added that there was no hygiene at all. Not even an animal would live there [inside the cells].

Wiedner asked if P46 lost weight. P46 confirmed, saying he lost 30 kilos. He would remember that very well.

P46's Counsel spoke with P46 and then asked for a break.

Judge Wiedner recalled P46 telling the court about mistreatment of other detainees, e.g. Doulab. He asked P46 what he heard in this regard and from whom he heard it. P46 said he heard from other detainees it [Doulab] was applied together with Falaqua: People were squeezed in a tire and beaten on their feet. According to P46 it often happened during investigations. P46 further describe that he often saw on other detainees how their fingernails were split from their fingers or that there was a gap between nails and fingers which was caused by a piece of metal.

Wiedner asked if P46 saw the consequences of these methods. P46 said he saw their hands, not how it was done. The detainees then told him about it and P46 saw the victims and their hands.

Wiedner said it was not entirely clear to him where the incident where P46 himself was mistreated with the plastic bag happened and what consequences it had. P46 recalled that he told the court about when he was threatened by militias. A burning plastic bag was put on his body. This also happened during an interrogation on the first floor. There, the soldiers who beat him took the bag from the person before P46. P46 said he smelled it. He could not see it due to the blindfolds but tasted it. P46 felt the plastic on his back and smelled it.

Wiedner asked if P46 was injured because of that. P46 described that when one tries to rip the plastic off his body, he would also rip off the skin. However, these wounds healed with time. P46 said the plastic stuck to his body and he tried to peel it off. According to P46 the plastic was also put on his feet because he already had injuries there.

Regarding the person with the birthmark, Wiedner recalled P46 describing a person to the police. However, it was unclear to Wiedner whether this person was the person with the birthmark or the doctor. Wiedner therefore asked P46 to describe the doctor and his behavior to the court. P46 said he did not have direct contact with the doctor because he treated detainees. P46 could therefore not see him but recognized through conversations that he was a doctor. According to P46, the person with the birthmark gave orders. He was the one in charge, not the doctor.

Wiedner recalled P46 telling the police that, as he had mentioned before, the guy with the birthmark divided the detainees. The man who treated the detainees in detention was dressed in civilian clothes. P46 told the court that he was probably misunderstood [at the police questioning]. Detainees did not receive medical treatment; it did not exist. The person only had a look at them and gave orders to the doctor. In case of injuries or inflammations people were patched up or bandaged.

Wiedner wanted to know more about P46's injuries. P46 described that his back was open. He wanted to be stitched but the guy did not accept that although P46 was bleeding, the injury was inflamed and open. P46 did not receive medicine.

Wiedner asked where P46 got the injuries from. P46 said he was injured by a cable. The metal pieces of the cable ripped out parts of his flesh.

Wiedner further recalled P46 telling the police that the person had a stethoscope. [P46 consulted the court interpreter to understand the last word] P46 explained that he was talking about the doctor there, not "him" [person giving orders at the Branch].

Wiedner asked how the doctor was behaving, whether he was for example friendly. P46 said he was not friendly. One could tell that he had to do it [examine people]. He also deliberately beat at people's injuries. P46 said they did not receive proper medical treatment. "They" [people at the Branch/intelligence employees] simply wanted to keep detainees alive for a bit longer. They only received little help. Wounds were stitched, not properly treated.

Regarding the stethoscope, Wiedner recalled P46 telling the police that he was not sure whether this person was an actual doctor. He hit at open wounds and was only there once or twice. He bandaged people and was in charge for transfers to the hospital. P46 told the court that the police misunderstood him. There were two people. The doctor did beat people. But the other person was the only one in charge of transfers to the hospital.

Wiedner asked P46 if he saw dead people at Al-Khatib and if so, how many. P46 said he was sure that the person he saw on his first day [at the Branch] was dead. Later [he did not finish the sentence]

Wiedner concluded that P46 saw one dead person. He recalled P46 telling the court that soldiers entered the cell and took the person from the cell. P46 affirmed, adding that they came once the detainees knocked on the door because they recognized that the person stopped breathing.

Wiedner said "OK". P46 went on to describe that when he came back from the hospital many people had difficulties after they were tortured because there were so many people in one room. They had difficulties breathing and did not get enough oxygen. According to P46, it was difficult to breathe after one had been tortured. These people then either fell unconscious or simply fell on the floor. Others tried to put some water on their faces. Some survived. P46 added that when someone fell down, others tried to revive them, but there was no reaction. They were then taken outside the door. P46 said he did not know what happened to them next. P46 assumed that around fifteen to twenty people were taken outside like that. Only if they stopped breathing, they were taken outside the cell. None of them returned and their t-shirts stayed in the cell. P46 concluded that he guesses that fifteen to twenty people were dead for sure.

Wiedner wanted to know if P46 or others ever asked about what happened to these people or got any feedback that they died. P46 said for the detainees it was obvious that these people died. They did not receive an answer and could not ask anyone. P46 explained that when inside the cell, one did not know what time or day it was, nor could they tell day from night. Everything happened outside of time. They therefore did not know what happened outside the cell. According to P46, they did not know if people were revived or put on a corpse transport.

Wiedner asked if there were people who were not immediately taken outside the cell and were probably dead. P46 affirmed, saying there were three or four people who died at night. There were not as many guards at that time and the people probably stayed in the cell until the morning. P46 described that if someone died, other detainees prayed for him although guards immediately entered the cell when someone started praying and took the praying person outside for torture. P46 said he is not a religious person, but others were, and they always prayed together. P46 said it was "our" rebellion to pray no matter the consequences.

Wiedner asked if the bodies of these people [who were most likely dead] turned cold or if there were other signs that they died. P46 said they were cold and blue or white. The people who stayed inside the cell for longer were definitely dead. There were ten to fifteen other casualties almost every day. P46 said when he came to Germany in 2013, he immediately started a therapy to deal with these things because he had such burdensome nightmares. With every person [who died] P46 was wondering when it would be his turn. He tried to erase these thoughts for the future. He therefore could not think of a precise number [of people who died].

Wiedner thanked P46.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Regarding corpses, prosecutor Klinge asked P46 how many prayers for people who died he could remember. P46 said he could definitely remember one prayer at Al-Khatib. He added that the people at the hospital had been tortured at Al-Khatib. However, they died at the hospital because they were tortured at Division 40 or Al-Khatib Branch. According to P46, there were at least three or four such people. He further remembered one person at the intensive care unit but did not know what happened to him. P46 concluded that he remembered three or four prayers for dead people, but there were others who were also taken outside, at least more than ten people.

Klinge concluded that there were three Islamic prayers for dead people. P46 affirmed, saying that he was present at least at three or four such prayers.

Klinge recalled that two people died at the hospital: Abu Bassel and the person who shared a bed with P46. P46 confirmed, adding that they were definitely dead.

Klinge recalled P46 saying he received a so-called welcome party at other branches and asked him if he received one at Al-Khatib Branch as well. P46 denied, explaining that there was no welcome party for him because he was already in a very bad condition when he arrived. However, others were beaten. P46 said he was not properly beaten since he peed himself and the people at the Branch therefore did not want to touch him. According to P46, him being dirty was the only reason he was not tortured. He was told to wash and taken to the hospital the next day.

Klinge asked P46 to briefly describe the rooms at the Branch. P46 said he could only describe where he was himself. He had to go downstairs where there was a big hallway. There was another hallway at the left leading to the big cell. P46 said if he remembered correctly, he was detained at cell No.25 on his first day. If one entered, one could see a hallway to the right and two cells for women on the left. P46 was detained at cell No.25. This cell was around 5x5 meters with a toilet inside.

P46 added that downstairs on the right side was some kind of office with a big desk and a soldier standing behind it. That was where the detainees had to hand-in their belongings. On the left was a big group cell. P46 said this was all he could see. When he was at the first floor, he could not see anything. He was taken back downstairs and again taken right.

Referring to the 5x5 meter big cell where P46 had to spend the first night, Prosecutor Klinge wanted to know if it had a window, if there was light and enough oxygen. P46 said there was no window. The toilet was at the back of the cell. It was very small with only a bit of light. The walls were yellow and covered in blood. P46 said it was not hygienic and since there was not enough space, detainees had to sleep "head on feet". They had to lie on the side. The "shaweesh" who was the boss inside the cell organized how the detainees had to sleep and was in charge of distributing food. According to P46 there were at least sixty people inside this cell.

Klinge asked about the bigger group cell. P46 said this cell was around three or four times bigger than the other cell. It was smaller than the court room in Koblenz but still big. He remembered that one time he himself had to count the number of detainees. He counted 179 detainees. P46 told the court that sometimes there were more people if there were big arrests, but some of them only stayed for a couple days. Sometimes there were more than two hundred people and sometimes only one hundred. P46 said he slept directly next to the toilet. There was a toilet and a tab on the right side at the back of the cell. When the door was opened and they got food, he went to the front of the door. The cell also had a window which was covered with thick plastic. One could slightly see when it got dark or bright. P46 concluded that things were like that.

Klinge asked if there was more, or less space in the community cell. P46 said there was a bit more space, but it varied. When he came back from the hospital with bruises, others were understanding, and he was allowed to sit down and had more space. Other than that, there was almost no space and people only wore underpants because it was so warm and people were sweating a lot. P46 said it was hard for him to see that many lost their minds. One guy used his shoe as a telephone. When P46 sat next to the toilet, another detainee asked him to open the toilet, saying he had his wife and children with him and wanted to leave. Because there was no oxygen, people were tortured, and without any perspective, some lost their minds. According to P46, many lost their minds simply because of the conditions.

Klinge asked about diseases, scabies, and lice. P46 said almost everyone was sick. The blankets inside the cell were full of lice, one could almost see them. Detainees had to pick the lice from their clothes and underpants and kill them. P46 said they often had to massage each other because due to the lack of movement, they had no more muscles.

P46's Counsel quickly spoke to P46.

Klinge asked P46 to describe the general condition of the detainees. P46 said everyone had lice and was starving. They showed severe signs of torture, but many could not talk about it. P46 assumed that this was because they suffered "sexual crimes." Injures got inflamed due to a lack of hygiene. Many people therefore died or had to undergo amputations.

Klinge recalled P46 mentioning there was a cell for women. P46 said that one day when he was in his cell and they got food, the guards closed the window [in the door]. Others said it was closed so they could not see the women. P46 further often heard female voices when they handed in their belongings because his cell was next to the door, so he could hear what was happening there. A female friend of P46 was also detained at the Branch and put in a cell. It was a solitary cell. P46 said he did not see before that there were many solitary cells on the right. He was not sure whether there were seven or seventeen. They were not even one meter wide and had small doors. P46 said he was also told that sometimes women fell unconscious and were taken outside. One time one could here screams from another cell because a woman was beaten in the hallway. Others therefore started to make loud noises.

Klinge asked if P46 witnessed women being mistreated. P46 assumed "they" tried to do it somewhere else, he only witnessed it once. This woman screamed loudly and tried to defend herself. P46 heard that. It was the only time he witnessed something like that but he realized that "they" tried to do it [torture and mistreat women] somewhere far away. They also covered the door so no one could see what was happening.

Klinge wanted to know when and where P46 was interrogated at Al-Khatib and how the interrogation took place. P46 explained that after his stay at the hospital he was at Division 40 for one or two days. Two days after he returned to Al-Khatib, he was again "invited". He was taken from the collective cell, turned left, then right, upstairs, and then on the right at the first floor.

Klinge asked if it was on the first floor or ground floor. P46 said things would be a bit different in Syria: there was a basement and then the first floor. There were only a few steps between.

Klinge asked how P46 got there, whether he was blindfolded. P46 said his name was called, he was blindfolded, and his hands were tied. He was accompanied by someone and guided upstairs. He then had to kneel inside the room. That was when he heard the other person.

Klinge asked if P46 had to wait in front or inside a room. P46 said he had to wait in the hallway. When he went inside, he had to go to the left side. He was first asked a couple questions and if they did not like his answers, they said they would "refresh his memory". Three or four people did that. P46 could not tell whether the interrogation officer also participated.

Klinge wanted to know if P46 heard something when he had to wait. P46 affirmed, saying he heard the guy with the plastic bag on his face.

Klinge asked if P46 learned that later. P46 affirmed, saying the guy told him about it. P46 heard screams.

Klinge asked for how long P46 heard the other guy screaming. P46 said with blindfolds and other things it would be difficult to estimate the time. It might have been thirty minutes, but it was hard to tell. One minute felt like an hour.

Klinge said he knew it would be difficult to say, but he wanted to know how long P46's interrogation lasted. P46 said it was surely more than one hour. He was first asked questions, then people were called, and then he was beaten. After that he had to wait in the hallway for a short time and then was questioned again.

Klinge wanted to know how P46 was tortured. P46 requested a short break to consult his Counsel. [They had a short conversation at their seats with microphones switched off.] Upon P46's request, Klinge repeated his question. P46 said he was beaten with cables and tubes. The big green tube caused a lot of pain. P46 added that the cable was actually four cables tied together, this was how the cable was called, but P46 assumed that there were more than four cables tied together. P46 said he could not see everything due to the blindfolds but the bag was also set on fire.

Klinge asked how P46 got back to the cell. P46 said he was told to go back and one person guided him.

Klinge asked in what condition P46 was. P46 said he was almost running on empty because he was tortured by more than two people. He was barely able to walk because his feet were completely blue. One soldier pushed him and another one made a comment about P46's eyes. He was beaten on his head.

Klinge asked P46 if he still suffered from long-term effects. P46 did not understand the question. Klinge asked if P46 was receiving physical or psychological treatment. P46 said he would no longer receive treatment. He would still have nightmares despite the therapy, because it did not help with everything. His scars would always remind him of what happened to him and others. P46 concluded that, other than that, he would be fine.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Fratzky wanted to know whether P46 spoke about the topic of his testimony before he testified in court. P46 asked if Fratzky referred to public statements or P46 talking to friends.

Fratzky said he wanted to know in general. P46 said he publicly spoke about the torture he had to endure because he had public appearances in this regard.

Fratzky wanted to know if P46 spoke to particular people. P46 wanted to know whom Fratzky was referring to.

Fratzky asked if P46 spoke with Anwar Al-Bunni. P46 said he once met Al-Bunni at his office. He told P46 to tell everything to the police and his lawyers.

Fratzky wanted to know whether P46 got information from Al-Bunni that he did not have before. P46 denied, saying he only told the court about things he experienced himself.

[On P46's request, Fratzky took off his Covid mask so P46 could understand what he was saying]

Fratzky recalled P46 telling the court that he did not know the name of the man [Anwar Raslan] back in Syria. P46 confirmed. Fratzky wanted to know how P46 knew the name. P46 explained that detainees in prison would not know the names of people there but give them nicknames. “They” [intelligence employees] would know everything but detainees would know nothing. Most of the time they would not see the interrogation officer because they had to wear blindfolds. Detainees would neither be allowed to ask questions nor see the transcripts of interrogations. They would have to sign documents at the end of the interrogation without knowing what it was.

Fratzky asked when and from whom P46 then knew the name of the man. P46 said he learned from the media, not Al-Bunni. Arab social media and TV mentioned the name but when P46 went to the streets, he could not assign the name. P46 said the name was irrelevant to him. He only told the court what he experienced and did not talk about it with other people.

Fratzky recalled P46 telling the police that Al-Bunni told him the person in the picture worked at Al-Khatib Branch. P46 told the court he could not remember saying such a thing.

Fratzky recalled P46 mentioning Division 40 and asked him how many times he was interrogated there and how many times he was interrogated at Al-Khatib Branch. P46 said he was interrogated twice at Division 40. He was transferred there once. P46 said he was interrogated three times: once at Al-Khatib and twice at Division 40.

Fratzky asked if P46 was once transferred to Division 40 only for an interrogation. P46 said the first time, he was not interrogated there, he was only transported by militias.

Fratzky wanted to know what would be different at Division 40 and Al-Khatib Branch. P46 said he could not really say because he did not know the connections. However, it often happened that detainees were transferred to Division 40, interrogated there, and taken back to Al-Khatib. P46 could not say why this was done.

Fratzky asked if P46 knew at the time that the two were different Branches. P46 said for him it was all intelligence services and all of them cooperated with each other. He did not recognize differences. According to P46, one would be taken back and forth. Questions and violence would be the same but one would not learn about the differences. No one would know when he would be taken where and how.

Fratzky said he wanted to come back to the “Al-Bunni topic”, recalling that P46 told the police that before he saw Anwar Raslan’s picture in the media, he was in contact with attorney Al-Bunni. P46 said it was not him who was in contact with Al-Bunni but one of his fellow students made a movie about Al-Bunni and P46 edited it but was not in contact with Al-Bunni. He only met him when he wanted to testify about Al-Khatib.

Plaintiff Counsel Böcker said [Al-Bunni] is a Syrian lawyer and activist in Germany who collected testimonies. P46 confirmed.

Böcker asked if he also collected P46’s testimony. P46 said he knew about him [Al-Bunni] because it [Al-Bunni collecting testimonies] was known among the Syrian community. According to P46, everyone in the Syrian community in Germany would know the lawyers and organizations supporting Syrians. Al-Bunni is therefore known inside the Syrian community.

Böcker said he understood that P46 wanted to make a movie about Al-Bunni and in the course of that saw a picture of Anwar Raslan. P46, denied, saying he did not make the movie himself, he only cut the final version. The movie was about a different topic, about Al-Bunni’s family. However, Al-Bunni mentioned in the movie that he was arrested in 2006 and detained at Al-Khatib.

When the movie was ready and they showed it to Al-Bunni, P46 told him that he was detained at Al-Khatib as well and moved by Al-Bunni's work. P46 told Al-Bunni that he wanted to testify as well and Al-Bunni recommended P46 to meet with lawyers.

Böcker wanted to know more about the picture of the Accused. P46 said it was not in the movie. In May or April 2020 when the trial was covered by the media, P46 heard the name Anwar Raslan.

Böcker said he was not referring to the name but to the picture of the Accused. P46 said he did not see a picture of Anwar Raslan. He only met Al-Bunni at his office in September 2020. This was their first personal meeting and P46 did not see a picture, they only talked.

Böcker recalled P46 telling the police that Al-Bunni told him that the person in picture worked at Al-Khatib. Böcker concluded that everything had been falsely transcribed.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer intervened, saying he objects to what Böcker just said. P46 explained to the court for ten minutes which parts of the transcript were correct and which not.

Presiding Judge Kerber said she would only allow Böcker's statement if he would make it a question but nothing else.

Böcker agreed and cited from the transcript of P46's police questioning according to which P46 said that if one would ask him whether he knew the person in the picture from his detention or from Al-Bunni, he must say that he was blindfolded at the time and only able to see from below. P46 said he had no conversation about the trial with Al-Bunni. He was only an intermediary between P46 and his lawyers. They spoke about the movie when P46 told him that he wanted to say what he had seen. Al-Bunni then told him to contact a lawyer. P46 said no one told him what to say in court and what not to say. [P46's Counsel turned to him and they had a short conversation]

Defense Counsel Böcker said he would like to inspect a signature. Judge Kerber said the court would visually inspect initials on a page of a transcript and asked P46 whether this was his signature. P46 confirmed.

Böcker said there were handwritten corrections [in German language] on that page, asking P46 who wrote these corrections. P46 said it was him.

Böcker asked P46 to explain what happened after the police questioning and what P46 signed. P46 said the questioning took more than eight hours and they finished at 6PM. He was then given papers to read through. P46 said he read it but at some point, he did not understand every single sentence anymore. He did not ask about it, it would not be his mother tongue anyway. P46 said he was allowed to read everything and did his best. He mostly understood everything and signed.

Böcker said the questioning ended at 4PM. P46 said it could be the case.

Regarding attention while reading, Böcker wanted to talk about the third to last page of the questioning where a sentence was crossed out. He asked P46 whether he crossed out that sentence. [P46 and his Counsel were discussing while Böcker asked his question] P46 confirmed that he was the one who crossed out that sentence. He could still remember that they discussed the sentence, and he was probably misunderstood. P46 said he wanted to add something regarding the picture issue: When the police showed him the picture, P46 said he would recognize the person because he saw him in the media, not because he met him in person.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber said one sentence was missing from the defence's reference to the questioning transcript: P46 told the police that when he saw the picture it was immediately clear to him that he knew the person. Kerber said she would therefore read out the complete reference:

[The following are recreations of the reference based on what the trial monitor heard in court]

Q: Did you personally see Anwar Raslan back when you were in prison?

A: I am not sure. However, there was a person who examined sick detainees and made decisions about them. He had a birthmark on the left. I had to lower my eyes and could not look at him.

P46 said he could remember this.

Kerber continued the reference:

A: Before Anwar Raslan's picture was made public, I was in contact with attorney Al-Bunni. I made a movie about him. When I saw the picture, I realized I knew this person. Al-Bunni said he [the person] worked at Al-Khatib. I must say that I had to lower my eyes and that I was afraid.

P46 said he never said he saw a picture at Al-Bunni's or that Al-Bunni told him what to say.

Kerber asked if P46 spoke with Al-Bunni about the picture of Anwar Raslan. P46 said he never did. After the movie, they spoke about Al-Khatib. P46 said he does not know why it was documented in the transcript like that.

Kerber wanted to know more about the connection between the name Anwar Raslan and the person P46 saw while in detention. P46 said when he saw the picture in the media, he knew the person, not the name. He then realized that this was the person from his detention.

Kerber asked when P46 made the connection. P46 said it was in Germany. In Syria he did not see a picture.

Kerber concluded that P46 saw the picture in relation to the media coverage of the trial. P46 confirmed.

Kerber asked if the movie was in relation to this trial. P46 said the movie was about his [Al-Bunni's] family. It was shot at the beginning of 2020.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Fratzky asked whether it was correct that P46 did look at a picture of the Accused together with Al-Bunni or saw a picture of the Accused when he was with Al-Bunni. P46 said this would be correct. Al-Bunni was only mediating, they did not talk about Raslan or P46's experiences.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

P46's Counsel Dr. Stolle asked him whether he heard Raslan's name when he saw the picture. P46 said the name was probably mentioned in the article but he only heard the name in relation to the trial.

P46 was dismissed as a witness at 3:15PM.

Judge Kerber said the trial days scheduled for September 29 & 30 and October 6, 7, 13, & 14 would take place at the room where the trial was previously held.

Kerber added that the court had prepared a statement on the defense's request dated August 19, 2021. The court further had to decide on the request to be admitted a witness counsel issued by a lawyer who wants to represent an anonymous witness.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he would informally suggest summoning Criminal Chief Inspector Schmidt regarding the questioning of P46. Böcker added that in case the court would not consider his suggestion, he would issue a formal written request.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said he would reserve the right to make a statement on P46's testimony.

The proceedings were adjourned at 3:20PM.

The court will resume on August 26, 2021 at 9:30AM.

Trial Day 89 – August 26, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:37AM with nine spectators and one journalist in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Attorney Bier substituted for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen and Dr. Stolle substituted for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker. Plaintiff Counsels Reiger, Mohammed, Scharmer and Schulz were present as well.

Judge Kerber said the court considered Defense Counsel Böcker's suggestion to summon CCI Schmidt. The court summoned him for September 29 or 30.

P47 was accompanied by his Counsel Bahns.

Testimony of P47

P47, a 32-year-old Syrian man working for [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the Accused by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber told the witness that from his police questioning the court was already aware that he got in conflict with the regime and was arrested. However, he needed to repeat all that in court. Kerber asked P47 to describe when, how, and where he was arrested and then describe his detention. P47 said as everyone knew, demonstrations started in 2011 [P47 first said 2012 before correcting to 2011]. In June 2012, P47 sat in a park together with some friends. When they wanted to leave the place, suddenly there was a mobile check point. One inspector checked the IDs and told his boss whom he addressed as "sidi" that the ID was broken. P47 explained to the court that people were told at protests that they should break their ID cards in case they would be controlled or arrested. The inspector therefore noticed that P47 and his friends were connected to the protests. One of the other people at the check point then said they should take the group to the branch. P47 told them that he and his friends were students who did nothing wrong, they could check their criminal records. P47 told them to release him and his friends. The people at the check point then started insulting P47 and his friends. They were told to wait in a corner until the inspectors checked everything. Thirty minutes later they asked the group who of them would be [P47's first name]. P47 was told to come with them. He was put inside a vehicle that had a machine gun installed at the loading area. P47's friends were then told to come with them as well.

They should go with P47's car which was driven by a soldier. When they arrived at the Branch, they were told to wait and after fifteen minutes they [he did not finish the sentence]

Kerber asked which branch it was. P47 said it was Division 40.

Kerber asked how P47 knew that. P47 said it was not far away [from where they were arrested]. He knew it from the entrance gate. P47 further described that they arrived around midnight when there was a shift change. When P47 and the others had to leave the car, soldiers were standing left and right of them, beating them with rifle butts and insulting them by calling them traitors and agents. P47 said he was unable to see because his shirt was pulled over his head.

When they arrived inside, they had to hand-in their belongings. P47 had to wait for longer because he said that he studied at university. P47 told the court that he studied in Lebanon, and "they" were able to see from his travel documents that he often traveled between Lebanon and Syria. P47 told them that he would now study in Syria and showed his student ID card. The soldier accepted it and when P47 wanted to know where they were, he was told they would be at a hospital.

After P47 handed in his belongings, he had to go upstairs in a narrow staircase. When he arrived upstairs, he was beaten from all sides. He then had to wait in the hallway for around two hours. P47 then heard how one of his friends entered the hallway as well. P47 could hear his friend's voice from far away. He was discussing with an officer who asked P47's friend how it came that he was with such traitors who led a war against "them". P47's friend replied to the officer that P47 was a good friend of his who he knew well and not an oppositionist. The officer said during the interrogation [with P47's friend] that he was working with terrorists. P47 told the court that his friend wanted to make a phone call. According to P47, the people at the branch spoke to his friend because he was Alawite. The officer gave P47's friend a mobile phone. He told his parents that they should not worry about him, he would be free in two hours. P47 said he also heard how his friend said that others, meaning P47, would not be released. P47 said this happened in a room close to the hallway where P47 was. P47 was standing at a wall in the hallway. Others sat on the floor and got water. They were warned that if they would give P47 water, they would be punished. P47 said two of his friends were Alawites, he himself was therefore discriminated and taken to a room at around 4 or 5 AM. P47 said he could guess the time from the sunlight. P47 further explained to the court that he was blindfolded, however, not with blindfolds but his shirt was pulled over his head. He was therefore able to still see some things. According to P47, there was an officer in the room and another person who whispered to the officer. After they took P47's data, they started accusing him that he was coming and going from and to Lebanon. They said that P47 was bringing medical equipment for field hospitals. They said they were sure that P47 was participating in demonstrations and organizing demonstrations but only wanted to focus on the medical equipment and how P47 brought it to Syria. P47 mentioned that his brother was detained three times: once at the Air Force Intelligence and once at the State Security. P47 denied all accusations and said he was at the university in Lebanon most of the time and had nothing to do with any of the accusations. The man who had whispered before started asking P47 about where the medical equipment was taken. P46 told the court he did not admit anything and did not say that he went to a demonstration. At the beginning he was not beaten, but when he denied everything, one gave the order. P46 said it was a sign that he gave, he nodded. Then two people came, one to P47's left, one to his right and started beating him until P47 fell on the floor. P47 got two hits from each side and someone hit him on his knee.

Kerber recalled P47 having a shirt pulled over his head and asked him how he was able to see what happened. P47 explained that his shirt was very thin, and he was therefore able to see everything. He did not see the people who beat him, but he saw from where the beating was coming.

After that, one of them was told to take P47 away. He said “Sidi, I will make him confess everything and do it my way”. However, the officer said to do nothing since P47 would be transferred the next morning. P47 then had to wait in the hallway. Soldiers who walked pass by him hit P47. In the early morning a soldier came and asked why P47 was standing while his friend was sitting on a chair. He got upset, kicked away the chair on which P47’s friend was sitting and started yelling. Another man came from one of the rooms and explained everything. When the other person knew that P47’s friend was Alawite, he did not say anything. P47 described that he was standing between two doors in the hallway. The person who yelled then hit P47 in the face and he fell to the ground. P47 then had issues with his ear, he had tinnitus. The other soldier then told his colleague to not beat P47 this way. He took a flexible tool, some kind of cable and started beating P47. When P47 fell to the ground he saw that his feet were bleeding. He told the court that he later found out that his legs were bumping against the stairs at the hospital and therefore his feet were covered in blood. P47 said the beating stopped after one hour and he was transferred in a white van.

When P47 arrived at the other branch, he did not know whether it was Al-Khatib or not, but he knew the area. When he entered he did not know where he was. He had to hand-in his belongings and undress until naked. P47 was taken to a cell. The door was opened, and he was pushed inside so that he almost fell. The people inside the cell were shirtless and only wore underpants. P47 said there were many people, and the air was very bad.

Kerber asked if it was a big cell and how many people were inside. P47 said the cell was 20 square meter big [P47 first said “twenty meters” so the interpreter had to check with him whether the cell was 20 sq. m. or one side was 20 meters long]. According to P47 there were one hundred people inside when he arrived early morning. There was no space and people were standing very close to each other. They slept in shifts. P47 told the court that he knew many people in the cell from former times, around ten people. He asked them where he was, and they told him they were at Al-Khatib Branch. He also asked them about “measures”, next steps, and what would happen to him. They told him he would be taken for interrogation after two or three days and one should know what to say there. P47 said it happened like that: He was taken for interrogation three days later.

He was taken upstairs to the first floor to a kitchen, a big hall. He was wearing blindfolds and tried to remove them [P47 showed the court how he moved]. He was able to slightly remove the blindfolds and saw the sink inside the room.

Kerber asked P47 what exactly he did with the blindfolds, how he moved. P47 affirmed that he moved, saying he stood right in front of a wall.

Kerber asked if he tried to move the blindfolds up by using the wall. P47 confirmed.

P47 continued to explain to the court that he had to stay in the kitchen for around two hours. During this time, he realized that his Alawite friend was standing right behind him. P47 realized that because his friend asked for water. When P47 realized that his friend was there, they agreed on a story. However, P47 was not interrogated at this occasion, instead he was taken back downstairs.

P47 said one could hear many screams “there”. When the group arrived downstairs, P47 asked whether he could be in the same cell as his friend. The officer affirmed to P47, and he thought he was allowed to be in the same cell as his friend. Suddenly the officer started yelling and called P47 a donkey. He had a cable in his hand and started beating P47. There was a bigger space with a table and P47 tried to run away. P47 said he was 22 years old at the time. He called the soldier “sidi” and told him they were from the same town and that he would be from the [REDACTED] family.

The soldier asked P47 where he came from and when P47 told him he was from [REDACTED], the soldier got angrier and hit P47 harder. P47 said he was beaten until they arrived at the door of his cell. The soldier opened the door and pushed P47 inside. P47 said he was in a lot of pain and the people in the cell asked him whether he admitted anything. P47 told them he had not been interrogated. P47 described that the second time he was taken for interrogation, it was the same procedure: he had to wait in the kitchen. He was then taken to a room. The officer there told P47 he did not want a headache, so P47 should do the talking. He added he knew everything but wanted names. P47 replied to the officer he would not know what he was talking about.

P47 told the court that he learned afterwards that people were beaten next to him. Further, P47 was pushed to the floor, he had to lie on his stomach and was beaten. He was told they could kill him with one shot and no one would ask about him. P47 was told to provide names of doctors and journalists who were working at coordination points. P47 said he of course denied everything and was beaten with a rifle butt. The interrogation officer came – P47 recognized him from his voice. He was close to P47 who was lying on the floor. The officer kicked P47 at his head so P47's chin knocked against the floor and P47 fell unconscious.

Kerber wanted to know if the guard or the interrogation officer kicked P47. P47 said it was the interrogation officer, he knew him from his voice. P47 said after that he did not comprehend what was going on. One person asked if he should take P47 but he was told that P47 would get one chance. He was given a sheet of paper and a pen to write down names. P47 asked if he should write down fake names since he would not know anyone. He was told that he had ten minutes to write down names but P47 did not write anything. The officer realized that after ten minutes, pulled P47 up and slapped him in the face.

Kerber asked if the guard or the interrogation officer slapped P47. P47 explained that the prison guard was the one who took him inside the room and the officer came after ten minutes. The interrogation officer was also the one who gave P47 ten minutes. The same person came back after ten minutes and when he saw the blank sheet of paper, he slapped P47. The person himself slapped P47. He was opposite to P47 and talked and took notes.

Kerber asked who pulled P47 up: the guard or the interrogation officer. P47 said the interrogation officer kicked his head and when P47 sat on the chair he told him to write down the names. P47 asked if it was clear now.

Kerber recaptured that P47 was lying on the floor when the interrogation officer kicked his head. P47 was then given ten minutes to write down names and sat on a chair but did not write anything. Then, the interrogation officer left the room. P47 intervened, saying he did not know where the interrogation officer was.

Kerber continued, concluding that after ten minutes the interrogation officer came back, or P47 noticed he was there. P47 confirmed, saying the officer walked towards him and noticed that P47 had not written anything. P47 sat on a chair and the officer pulled him up and slapped him.

Kerber said she now understood everything. P47 continued to explain that "he" [guard] asked whether he should take P47 with him. The interrogation officer affirmed. P47 said this was when he thought that torture would start now but he was just taken back downstairs, and nothing happened. After two days he was transferred to another Branch.

Kerber wanted to know whether the interrogation officer had a certain dialect. P46 said he spoke in Alawite slang. P47 continued that after that he was taken to Najha branch. On his way to Najha branch, he was taken outside where green buses were waiting. Detainees were taken to the buses in groups.

P47 said this was when he recognized a person who was working at the Branch [Al-Khatib]. He was P47's neighbor. When he saw P47, he asked him why he was there. P47 asked him to inform his parents where he was, however, he told P47 he could not do anything for him and left. P47 told the court that he was not wearing blindfolds or anything like that on the way to the buses, however, he was told to lower his eyes.

P47 sat at the very back of the bus on a slightly higher position. He did not dare to look outside the window. P47 described to the court that, viewed from his position at the very back of the bus, the door was on the right side. With his left eye he could look to the side where he saw four people. P47 assumed one of them was Anwar Raslan. He was standing there together with two other people, the third one was P47's neighbor. P47 said he was then taken to Najha. He said it was at the time when the UN wanted to inspect Syrian prisons.

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, asking P47 where he was taken to. P47 said he was taken to Najha.

Kerber asked whether it was at the time when the UN sent observers and told P47 to describe what happened next. P47 said when they arrived [detainees arrived at Najha] they arrived in around ten buses. P47 could hear shots and the detainees were told to stand in lines. P47 told the court he could constantly hear shots. And when he arrived, he could hear the order "Load. Shoot". P47 said when it was his turn – everyone had to line up at a wall – and he heard the order "shoot" he thought he would die. He and the other detainees then realized that nothing happened and they were taken to their cells.

Kerber concluded that there was the order to shoot, and someone shot. She then asked P47 what happened next when he was in detention. P47 said he was not in a regular cell. There were around forty people in the cell and when the door was opened, one could only see shoes piled up in the cell. P47 was then taken to a different cell where apparently no one was detained. P47 was told to clean and remove the spider nets. He stayed at this cell for seven days and was not beaten. P47 said that detainees of course had many diseases. Some had issues with their eyes, others had skin conditions and scabies. P47 was then taken to Kafar Souseh and when he arrived he was told that he would not be tortured but that it would rather be a disciplinary measure. The detainees had to put their belongings in bags at the first divisions and hand them in at Kafar Souseh.

After three or four days at Kafar Souseh, P47 was taken for interrogation. According to P47, there were not as many people at Kafar Souseh than "there" [at Al-Khatib]. The interrogation officer told P47 he would be at the end now. P47 asked him what they wanted him to do; whether he should lie or tell the truth. He was told that the truth would be in writing down the names. P47 said there were no names and asked where he should take them from. The officer then told P47 that if he would not provide any names, he would not get out. If he would, however, provide names, nothing would happen to him and he would not be beaten. P47 said there were no names, and he was beaten. One person asked "Sidi, should I take him until he confessed?" but the officer denied, saying P47 would confess right where he was. When P47 did not confess, he was again beaten and taken to a bathroom where there was a small edge, and he was thrown in this tub. One person gave the order to attach power and when the electricity hit, P47 fell unconscious. P47 said he got an electric shock through the water.

Kerber asked if there was a hole in the floor around five centimeters which was filled with water and where P47 had to stand. She asked P47 if he was standing or lying. P47 said he sat at first and then lied on the side.

Kerber wanted to know whether P47 got the electric shock there. P47 affirmed, saying that when he heard someone saying “turn on the power” he did not expect that there was electricity for torture but regular power. He told the court that he did not know for how long he was lying there. He was then taken back to where he was before. The officer told P47 that what just happened would be nothing and that he wanted to help. The officer further told P47 to listen to him since once P47 would leave this place, he could no longer do anything for him. P47 told him that he did not have any names, and only knew one person who was at demonstrations and one of his cousins on his father’s side of the family participated in demonstrations. P47 explained to the court that one name that he mentioned was the name of a friend who indeed participated in demonstrations but was killed at a demonstration. His cousin was also killed when “they” [government forces] came to their region. P47’s cousin was tortured, and his face was mistreated. When “they” threw him away, the family identified his body, not his face.

Kerber asked P47 to describe how he left Kafar Souseh before the court would take a break. P47 recalled that there was an elderly man in his cell. He died because of diabetes and hypertension and did not get any medicine. He was already dead for one day before his corpse was taken away. He was arrested because “they” wanted to make his son turn himself in. P47 said he could see what was happening in the cell opposite to his. He could hear many screams from his cell and beatings. P47 further described that a 17-year-old boy from Latakia was detained in the same cell as well. He was arrested because he had no ID with him. P47 said it did not matter if people were juvenile or not.

P47 said after he mentioned two names he was taken back to his cell. He told the court he does not want to talk about torture of fellow detainees as this would be already known. P47’s name was called and he was told to prepare for release. He and six or seven other detainees packed their belongings. P47 was told that they were released on an amnesty from Bashar Al-Assad. He was further told that this would be his last time at the branch, things “would look differently” the next time. P47 said when he picked up his belongings, he realized that he was in a workshop/garage. There was some kind of crane. He thought he was at a workshop/garage because there were hooks and chains as well. P47 said people there received different kinds of beatings and it was obvious that the people working there drank alcohol. One person was hanged, another one was subjected to the German chair. P47 did not have to wear blindfolds at this place. P47 was sat on a table and beaten and tortured with Doulab. P47 said it was very loud and one could hear echoes from everywhere.

Kerber asked P47 what he meant by echoes, for her it would be what comes back if one shouts. P47 affirmed, saying that people were screaming and one could hear their echoes again and again.

Kerber concluded he was in a big garage. P47 affirmed, explaining that garage in Syria would rather mean a big place.

Kerber said it was more of a big hall then. P47 said he called it garage because of the cables which were typical for a workshop. P47 added that he forgot to explain earlier when he spoke about interrogations that he had to sign several blank sheets and leave his fingerprint. Since he was blindfolded, he was not able to see what he was signing. P47 said he was then released to the streets barefoot.

Kerber wanted to know how P47 got back home. P47 said he took a taxi. Friends of his were released as well. They waited for him, and they took a taxi to [REDACTED].

Judge Kerber announced a 15-minute-break.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner said he had a few follow-up questions for P47. He first wanted to get an overview of P47's time in detention and asked him to tell the dates and durations of his detentions. P47 assumed he was detained for around eight days.

Wiedner asked for the dates, adding that he wanted to know when P47 was arrested and when he was transferred from Division 40 to Branch 251. P47 said he thinks he was arrested on June [REDACTED] and taken to Division 40 where he spent one night before he was taken to Branch 251.

Wiedner asked when P47 was approximately taken to Najha by bus. P47 said the exact date would be June [REDACTED] but he was not entirely sure.

Wiedner recalled P47 telling the police that he was arrested on June [REDACTED], as he just said in court. P47 had further told the police that he was transferred [from Al-Khatib] on June [REDACTED] 2012. P47 told the court that he could not remember the exact dates, he was just doing the math: he was arrested on [REDACTED] June and spent around one week at Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked whether there was mistreatment in connection to P47's transfer to Al-Khatib from the moment he left the vehicle until he arrived at the cell. P47 asked whether Wiedner was talking about Najha.

Wiedner denied, explaining that that he was talking about the transfer from Division 40 to Branch 251. He added that the court heard from other witnesses about a reception, a so-called "welcome party". P47 said that he himself was not tortured "there" and that he was not tortured on the way.

Wiedner asked P47 to describe the premises when he first entered the Branch and handed in his belongings. Wiedner told P47 to describe his first impression of when he arrived at Al-Khatib prison. P47 said what he could remember is that he had to take a few steps downstairs and then turn right. There were cables and torture tools hanging on the wall to the right. Directly opposite was a desk and an officer whom P47 had to hand over his belongings.

Wiedner wanted to know what kind of torture tools P47 saw. P47 said he did not know exactly; they were hanging at a wall. There was duct tape on the wall, and cables were attached to the wall with a band. There were four or five items, cables and a stick. P47 said this was what he saw before he was taken to the cell. He first only knew the area on the right as this was the way to the community cells. According to P47, there was a room directly behind the desk. The room had an open door/no door. When P47 asked one of the guards about staying in the same cell as his friend, he was following his friend, and came to a corner with an iron door. There was a long corridor and P47 turned to the right. When the guard yelled at P47, he went back.

Wiedner asked if there was a physical examination or physical frisking at the beginning and if so, how it was conducted. P47 said of course, they had to strip naked and then squat and stand up several times and their stomachs were frisked.

Wiedner asked if the detainees were completely naked and did not wear underpants. P47 affirmed, saying they all had to undress together and everyone saw each other.

Wiedner wanted to know if there was some kind of sexual abuse, mistreatment or humiliation at Al-Khatib. P47 there was no such thing for him personally. However, he heard how someone said during an interrogation “let him sit on a bottle”

Wiedner asked what P47 thinks happened there. P47 said to him it sounded like coercion and rape.

Wiedner wanted to know if other detainees at Al-Khatib told P47 about torture methods and mistreatment. P47 said of course they exchanged experiences. Many people who came to the cell said they were undressed, and cigarettes were stubbed out on their ass. P47 said someone who would now live in [REDACTED] was detained together with him. According to P47, the wife of one detainee was taken to the Branch and had to undress in front of him.

Wiedner wanted to know about other torture methods, if someone told P47 about anything else than beatings. Wiedner further asked P47 if it was the same in Kafar Souseh. P47 said to be honest he did not see anything, but he heard the screams and beatings. Some people lost their minds. P47 remembered a person who cursed the soul of Hafez Al-Assad. He was taken and beaten, and blood was all over his body.

Wiedner asked if P47 heard screams without a break. P47 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if he also heard it when he was taken upstairs for interrogation. P47 affirmed that he also heard it upstairs.

Wiedner asked if P47 saw or heard people saying that they were hanged. P47 said he saw it in Kafar Souseh. He spoke about it with fellow detainees and saw it in Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner asked whether he did not see it at Al-Khatib. P47 denied, saying he was told about it when in the community cell.

Wiedner asked if that was at Al-Khatib. P47 confirmed, adding he saw it [people being hanged] at Kafar Souseh. In Al-Khatib he was told about it a lot. One person who came from Harasta was hanged so that his toes could barely touch the floor. This was told to P47. P47 said he knew the people from Harasta. Around ten of them came to Al-Khatib. P47 spoke with them because they knew each other. According to P47, they were accused of being terrorists.

Wiedner said he had a question regarding the general detention conditions at Al-Khatib, specifying he was referring to the cell alone. He told P47 that if he could not differentiate [between what happened at Al-Khatib and at other prisons] he should just tell the court. He asked P47 about the food; what they got and if it was sufficient. P47 said as he already told the court, there was a 20 square meter room with around one hundred people inside. Regarding food, there was one plate for eight people. The bread was old and bad, and one could barely swallow it. They also got olives and a small piece of Halwa. P47 said this was at Al-Khatib. He added that to be honest, he forgot most but this was what he could remember.

Wiedner said it would be sufficient and thanked P47. P47 added that detainees were only wearing underpants. There was no air [inside the cell] and people got scabies. It was very hot and detainees undressed voluntarily, they were not forced to.

Wiedner wanted to know if people were wearing shoes. P47 said there were shoes in the community cell, but no one was wearing them. They used them as pillows.

Wiedner asked how people slept. P47 described the sleeping position as either cowering or “T-form”. P47 said the latter would be how swords were stored to save space. In case of detainees it was sleeping feet at heads. P47 added that there was little space and many people slept at the toilet which was inside the collective cell. Everyone who wanted to use the toilet had to do so in front of the others.

Wiedner asked if there was light inside the cell or shining through a window. P47 affirmed that there was a window with bars at the door of the cell. Light was shining through this window.

Wiedner asked if the window was open to the outside or covered. P47 said at Al-Khatib there was an opening to the outside at the toilet. It was at the toilet but not showing to a street or something like that but to other buildings of Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner asked P47 about injured fellow detainees and whether they received medical treatment. P47 said to be honest, as he already told the court, people died inside the cell and no one came.

Wiedner said this was, however, not at Al-Khatib. P47 affirmed, saying it was at Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner said he only wanted to know about Al-Khatib, asking P47 about the health condition of his fellow detainees there. P47 said detainees at Al-Khatib often had open wounds or inflammations which one could clearly see. Whoever requested medical treatment was taken outside and punished. P47 said he and others noticed the ‘treatment’ happening outside.

Wiedner asked if a doctor came, and people could go to him. P47 denied, saying it did not happen at his cell.

Wiedner said he did not necessarily mean that it happened inside the cell but rather people could go to see the doctor. P47 said he did not hear about it. He said they used the saying “Die before you request medicine”. One would not have gained anything from it [requesting medicine]. People would instead be taken, beaten, and eventually died.

Wiedner asked about cases of death at Al-Khatib. P47 denied having seen any.

Wiedner wanted to know if people were able to wash; if they had soap or other supplies. P47 said he wanted to say something: One of the detainees smuggled a piece of soap inside the prison. P47 did not know how it happened, but the guards eventually found out. They knew that there was soap inside the collective cell and they knew who had it. However, they punished everyone inside the cell, only because of a piece of soap. P47 described how everyone had to stand in front of a wall and they all were all doused with water. This happened only because of a piece of soap. P47 said this happened in the morning hours at around 4AM. Even the elderly detainees were taken and one of them cried until the food came.

Wiedner told P47 he should tell the court whenever he needed a break. He went on to ask P47 how many times he was interrogated at Al-Khatib. P47 said he was taken two times and interrogated once.

Wiedner recaptured that the first time P47 was taken upstairs, had to wait, but nothing happened. The second time he was taken upstairs and interrogated. P47 confirmed, saying one time he was interrogated, one time he was not.

Wiedner recalled P47 being questioned by the German police in July which was also transcribed. According to this transcript, P47 did not provide information to the interrogation officer. The interrogation officer therefore said he would give P47 two days before he would be interrogated again. Wiedner asked P47 if this would be correct or not. P47 explained it did not happen at Al-Khatib. There he was once taken upstairs, not interrogated, and taken back downstairs. At the second occasion he was interrogated and given time to write down names. He did not have two days for that.

Wiedner concluded that he was given time during an interrogation. P47 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if P47's family tried to get him free by bribing people. P47 said of course they did.

Wiedner asked P47 what he would know about that, what he was told about it. P47 told the court that what happened was that when P47 was arrested, his family knew that he was at demonstrations, cooperated with coordination points, and took films, some of which were shown on Al-Jazeera. According to P47, there were two personalities who were relatively well known: Dib Zaitoun, head of Political Security at the time, and Mohamed Khalouf. P47 said his family knew these people through his father and brother who knew them well. They tried to contact them, hoping they could get P47 free. According to P47, his father was told that they could not help him to immediately release P47 but speed up the process. They said if there was nothing against P47, he would be released soon.

Wiedner asked if money was paid. P47 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P47 if he knew how much was paid. P47 said it was paid in installments. Installments one and two were paid and the third when he was released. P47 said there was an intermediary who was paid seven or eight million Syrian pounds.

Wiedner asked P47 if his family knew where he was and if they asked about his whereabouts. P47 said they asked but were not told anything. They were only told that if there was nothing against him, he would be released. They could only speed up the process, so no one would be hurt – meaning P47 would not be tortured. P47 said he noticed that since he was at four different Branches within one month. Others were not even interrogated in this time.

Wiedner wanted to know if P47 knew whether his family made enquiries at Al-Khatib Branch. P46 said they asked at all branches. They were always told he was not there. His family did not know where he was until he was released, even though his neighbor saw him.

Wiedner recalled that when P47 was transferred and left Al-Khatib Branch, he saw a person whom he connected to Anwar Raslan. Wiedner asked P47 to describe what this person looked like. P47 said he was tall, had a beard and wore a suit. P47 said he knows the name, he was his neighbor. He had "hair in the middle but was bald on the sides." He was dressed in black.

Wiedner asked if this was the same person whom P47 mentioned earlier in connection to this trial, the person who was standing together with a group. P47 said it was the same, the exact same person. He added that he knew the name but would not tell it publicly in court but that he could provide the name to the court.

Wiedner asked if P47 was talking about his neighbor. P47 affirmed, saying this person volunteered to work for the intelligence services, P47 only learned that after the revolution. He worked for the Air Force Intelligence.

Wiedner said he would try it differently: he recalled that P47 was questioned by the police who also showed him pictures. He asked P47 if he could remember. P47 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether P47 recognized a person on this occasion or recognized similarities. P47 said there were multiple persons. He recognized one person in one picture. When he said this picture would be similar to the scene on the bus and connected [P47 did not finish the sentence]

Wiedner asked P47 who this person was. If it was his neighbor or someone else. P47 asked who Wiedner was talking about. He said he previously spoke about his neighbor but the person in the picture was someone else.

Wiedner asked where P47 had seen this person before. P47 said he saw him when he was on the bus.

Wiedner asked P47 to describe this person and describe which characteristics he recognized. P47 said he could allocate the person due to the birthmark "at this spot" [The trial monitor could not see where on his face P47 was pointing at]. He was wearing black clothes. The person in the picture was also wearing black clothes.

Wiedner asked P47 to describe the situation and tell where the other people were. P47 said he would explain to the court [P47 was describing the scenery with his hands on the table in front of him. The trial monitor was unable to see where P47 was pointing]: The door of the branch was "there", the bus was "there", and the street was "there". Cars parked in "this" area from the door to "over there". "There" was a car and the officer was standing in front of it. "this" area was empty. "there" were a few employees and flowers. People left through the door, had to gather, and stand next to the flowers. This was where P47 saw his neighbor. P47 said this was what he observed from the bus and asked whether he should describe the person.

Wiedner said he remembered P47 mentioning a group of four officers and asked him how he was able to tell that they were officers. P47 said he did not hear anything but it looked like someone was giving orders and talking to the soldiers.

Wiedner asked whether the person from the picture was there as well. P47 confirmed, saying he was there, he would be 80% sure about that.

Wiedner asked P47 to turn right [to the defendant's bench] and say whether he recognized someone. P47 said he thinks the person would look a bit differently now.

Wiedner wanted to know what looked different now. P47 said the person had more hair and the face was thicker. He only saw the person for a short moment. P47 said he would not be sure whether this was the person he saw or not.

Wiedner asked whether P47 was consequently not sure. P47 affirmed, adding that the birthmark was, however, the decisive factor to make him say he knew the person.

Wiedner thanked P47. Kerber asked P47 whether he needed a break. P47 denied. When asked by Kerber whether they needed a break, the interpreters denied.

The Prosecutors had no questions for P47.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker said he wanted to make a reference to the transcript of P47's police questioning. The interpreter next to P47 said P47 just told him he needed a short break "to go somewhere".

***

[2-minute-break for P47 to use the toilet]

***

Böcker said he wanted to cite from the transcript of P47's police questioning when P47 spoke to the police about picture No.2, he said that he recognized the person in picture number two. He previously saw him when he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. He only saw him once. Böcker asked whether this would be correct. P47 said to be honest, it would be correct that he saw him at the Branch. However, he later saw a picture on the internet.

Böcker asked P47 if he saw the person another time before his testimony in court. P47 said he just saw the person right now.

Böcker recalled that when the police asked P47 how certain he was about his identification, P47 told them he was 60-70% sure that the person in picture No.2 is Anwar Raslan. Böcker asked if this was correct. P47 confirmed, saying if the police would note it like that, it had to be true. [Parties, Judges, and audience started laughing].

Böcker said at the bottom of the next page of the transcript it was noted that the police asked P47 what Anwar Raslan's profession was in Syria at that time. P47 the told the police that before his encounter with the trial in Koblenz, he did not know anything. He only knew that there was a head of the Al-Khatib Branch. P47 confirmed it to the court.

Böcker further recalled that when P47 was asked if the person in picture No.2 would be the head of the Branch, he said he did not know. P47 said this would of course be correct since he did not know anything about "him" [Raslan].

Böcker said that on the previous page of the transcript, P47 was asked what the name Anwar Raslan would mean to him. P47 then gave an answer which was not clear to Böcker: P47 said if they [police] would have asked him this question before, the person would not mean anything to him. However, now he would. Böcker added that he could make a more exhaustive reference if needed, in case P47 would be unable to remember from this short reference. P47's Counsel Bahns asked Böcker to make the complete reference.

Böcker said he would prefer to try it like that before he would make the long reference. Böcker repeated that P47 told the police that if he would have been asked that question before, the person would not have meant anything to him, but now he would. Böcker said he would like to know what P47 meant when saying 'now he means something to me.' Böcker further said he could provide more context to P47 if he could not remember. P47 asked the court what Böcker wanted to know from him; if he wanted to know what Raslan means to him.

Böcker said the sentence would be written in the transcript and P47 would be able to explain it. P47 said he can of course explain: he knew nothing about Anwar Raslan, therefore he did not mean anything to him. But if he had a function and P47 knew that in this capacity he was able to kill or release people, then he would have a problem not only with this person but others as well.

Böcker said OK, asking P47 if he was only referring to Raslan or in general when he would learn such a thing [that someone had certain competencies]. P47 explained that no matter if Raslan or others did that, "we" would all be children of Syria. If people knew that someone would do such things...Everyone in Syria would know that such an employee could make a difference. P47 said he was talking about the entire system as one entity. Raslan was a limb, a part of that system. P47 explained that he in general does not have issues with people he does not know. But if he knew that a person was "there" and did something, he would have a problem. P47 said he knew from a friend that "he" [Raslan] was the head of investigations. Many of P47's friends had to endure torture at Al-Khatib. P47 said he saw the situation himself. He therefore of course changed his mind when he learned that "he" [Raslan] was the person in charge of arrests.

Böcker said he wanted to come back to his question and recalled P47 telling the police that if they had asked him that question before, he would not have meant anything to P47, but now he would. Böcker said P47 provided a long answer in court and Böcker understood from that: before, I did not know anything about Raslan but when I heard things about him, things were different. P47's Counsel Bahns said this is exactly how one could understand his client's statement.

Bahns added he was there when P47 was questioned by the police and could confirm that it was all about the name. Böcker said he would not need further references now, things would be OK for him.

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled P47 telling the court at the beginning of his testimony that he is working for an organization and taking care of refugee children. Fratzky asked P47 if that would be correct. P47 said he would not work with children but Syrians, asking Fratzky what he meant by “children”.

Fratzky recalled that P47 was working two different jobs and asked him to provide details. P47 said he did not want to talk about that, asking why Fratzky wanted to know about that. [P47’s Counsel quickly spoke to him] P47 said he did not want to talk about that because he did not know that it would become public. He added that information from the trial would become public and people would then be threatened. P47 said he told the police what and where he worked but would not like to answer the [Defense] Counsel’s question because he knew what the aim of the question would be.

Judge Kerber told Defense Counsel Fratzky that if he wanted to ask about P47’s connection to a specific person, he should ask the question like that.

Fratzky asked P47 whether the name Al-Bunni was familiar to him. P47 said of course it was.

Fratzky asked P47 to explain whom he would connect to this name and if he was in contact with this person. P47 affirmed that he had contact with this person and that he was related to this person due to his own work. P47 said he already mentioned that he knew what Fratzky was suggesting with his question. He knew that he wanted to talk about Al-Bunni. P47 asked in how far it would be Al-Bunni’s fault that all persons who would come to the court were detained there [Al-Khatib].

Defense Counsel Böcker said this would not be question time going both directions, adding he would not like to be asked counter questions. P47’s Counsel Bahns told Böcker he would not appreciate such instructions and requested to talk to his client. Böcker replied this was not an instruction but a friendly address. Presiding Judge Kerber intervened saying that since everyone wanted the same thing, the court would have a five-minute break.

***

Kerber asked if there would be any unanswered questions.

Fratzky said he would have a few short questions to which he would also like to get short answers. Fratzky recalled P47 saying that he was connected to Al-Bunni and concluded that P47 was working for Al-Bunni. P47 said he would not work for him but with him.

Fratzky said the answer to his question would be “yes” then. P47’s Counsel denied. P47 added he works with Al-Bunni.

Fratzky wanted to know when P47 met or spoke with Al-Bunni the last time. P47 said it was the day before.

Fratzky asked if on the day before they also spoke about the topic that was discussed in court on this very day. P47’s Counsel Bahns intervened, saying there would be a client relationship between P47 and Al-Bunni.

Fratzky said he was not aware that Al-Bunni was admitted to practice as a lawyer in Germany. Bahns said an admission would be unnecessary for P47 to be represented by Al-Bunni in legal matters; P47 would also work with Al-Bunni.

Fratzky asked P47 if he saw a picture of Raslan, together with Al-Bunni or at Al-Bunni's. Bahns objected to the question. Fratzky said he upholds his question, requesting a decision on it. Bahns asked what exactly Fratzky's question would be. Fratzky asked whether P47 saw a picture of Raslan when he was together with Al-Bunni or when he was at Al-Bunni's place/office. P47 said he would answer: he would be in court on this very day to make his testimony and tell his story, far away from Al-Bunni. He did not tell his story to Anwar Al-Bunni. At the beginning, Al-Bunni did not know anything [about P47's story]. Regarding the picture, P47 said he did not see it anywhere, only once on the internet.

Defense Counsel Böcker recalled that when P47 did not want to answer a question he said that people were threatened because of information discussed in court. He asked P47 who would be threatened where and by whom. P47's Counsel Bahns said this would relate to the work his client was doing with Al-Bunni and through which he would be a person with access to confidential information.

Böcker said he would like to be dismissed as a Defense Counsel if he would have to work like that. He said he would ask his question in a more simple manner: he recalled P47 saying he had knowledge of people being threatened due to information discussed in court, and asked him if he knew that himself or heard from others. P47 said he actually does not want to talk about things that would be confidential. He could only say that indeed people in Syria would be threatened.

Böcker said P47 should have a better understanding for a constitutional trial. It would be an impertinence if one could not ask such questions in a trial like this. P47 said before Böcker would ask a question, he himself would like to answer a question. [P47's Counsel indicated he wanted to talk to him] Böcker denied P47's wish; Presiding Judge Kerber intervened saying that Bahns would already deal with the situation. [P47 and his Counsel Bahns had a short discussion.]

Böcker recalled P47 saying in court that he already knew that Fratzky wanted to talk about Al-Bunni. Böcker asked P47 how he knew that. P47 said there were many conversations among Syrians about the fact that many witnesses came [to the court/trial] through Anwar Al-Bunni. Everyone would know that.

Böcker said he would not have any more questions now.

P47 was dismissed as a witness. Kerber explained to him that he was free to leave, take a seat in the audience or stay on the witness stand while the court would discuss a few administrative matters.

Presiding Judge Kerber said regarding the analysis of the YouTube Channel [REDACTED] which Prosecutor Ritscher offered to conduct in one of the previous sessions: the court would now have the analysis. Kerber summarized that the BKA was not able to determine a connection [between the YouTube Channel] to Anwar Raslan or Al-Khatib Branch. Kerber said the analysis would be added to the case file and provided to the parties.

Kerber went on to announce that she would read out a Judges' Decision:

[The following is a recreation of the decision based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Defense Counsel Böcker's request dated June 24 & 30, 2021 to access the file of the structural investigation conducted by the Office of the German Prosecutor General is denied.

The Judges denied the request for the following reasons:

- 1) According to CCI Deußing (the lead in investigator at the BKA) and the German Federal Prosecutor General, the structural investigation is an investigation which was started in September 2011 in connection to the Syrian conflict. It is an investigation into possibly prosecutable offences. The investigation includes several hundred files, a three-digit number of witness testimonies, and analyses of open-source material.*
- 2) Accessing the file in accordance to § 244 (2) StPO is not advisable. There are no evident reasons to believe that it includes further findings relevant to the Accused in addition to the public indictment issued on October 18, 2019. Neither the testimonies of police inspectors nor the testimonies of other witnesses or any other circumstances provided reasons to believe that the file would include further relevant findings. All additional investigations relevant to this trial were added to the case file by the Office of the German Federal Prosecutor General and the Federal Criminal Police Office. Files requested by the Judges did not indicate any relevance to this case. The request does also not indicate any additional findings.*
- 3) Without accessing the file, an inspection of the files is not given.*

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:37PM.

The trial will resume on September 1, at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 45

Hearing Dates: September 1 & 2, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Day 90 – September 1, 2021

P48 was detained during a raid on his hometown and spent time in Al-Khatib and later Kafar Souseh. The witness was detained with many other people from his town and described the raid as indiscriminate, as individuals from both pro-regime and opposition families were detained with him in Al-Khatib. P48 detailed crowded cell conditions, how detainees were beaten once they arrived at the security branch, and being beaten on his feet with a four-strand electrical cable. The witness did not see Raslan in Al-Khatib as he was blindfolded during the interrogations. He only knew of Raslan after his detention and did not personally know him. P48 remains active in supporting the opposition through social media and Syrian contacts in Europe.

Day 91 – September 2, 2021

P49, an artist, testified about his three-day detention in Al-Khatib and his two meetings with Raslan. When he was detained, his wife was told that he would be back in an hour, however, he was later told that it was unknown when he would return home. P49 discussed his special treatment and how he was never tortured but could hear constant sounds of torture and screaming. P49 described his meetings with Raslan as being like a show where everyone was just pretending and lying to each other. The defense team questioned P49 on whether Raslan knew the witness' father and the witness' interactions with Raslan after his detention.

Trial Day 90 – September 1, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30 AM with four spectators and one member of the press in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff counsels Mohammad and Bahns were not present.

P48, a 35-year-old Syrian born on [REDACTED] from [REDACTED], recently graduated from law school and wants to get a master's degree. He was accompanied by his counsel Dr. Kroker and was informed of his rights and duties as a witness. P48 is not related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Testimony of P48

Judge Kerber noted that the court knew that P48 was interrogated twice by the police and that he was in trouble with the Syrian regime and got arrested. Kerber asked P48 to explain to the court what happened. P48 started by saying, "Peace to the souls of the martyrs of the Syrian revolution. We certainly hope to overthrow the dictator's regime." P48 explained that at the beginning of 2011, and at the same time as the beginning of the revolutionary movement in Syria, "we" started to plan for demonstrations against Al-Assad's regime. It was approximately April or May when activists in Az-Zabadani الزبداني with cooperation from activists in Damascus were planning protests on the national level via the internet, Facebook, and Skype. Around this same time, the regime conducted a military and security operation in Az-Zabadani. The town was completely besieged and the houses were raided. Approximately 100 to 150 people were arrested. All were civilians, but not all of them were activists. P48 was one of those people. P48's house was stormed and he was arrested, detained, and thrown in the bus that had other detainees from the same neighborhood where P48 lived. There was a portion [of the detainees] who were detained a few minutes earlier than "us" and they were [already] on buses that took them to a military area, "to the fourth division, the suicide division that belongs to Maher Al-Assad ماهر الأسد." "We" sarcastically called these people [the detainees who were taken to that division] "People of the [foot]print," because they were stepped on by Al-Assad's soldiers. After that, all of "us" were taken to Damascus. On the way [to Damascus] "we" were beaten, insulted, and their hands were tied to the back. P48's hands were tied to his back as well and his head was covered with his wool t-shirt. "We" arrived at Al-Khatib and were brought into the Branch in a humiliating way, because there is no "method" of Al-Assad regime that one could describe as not humiliating. The guards used beatings and insults to bring them into the detention facility. P48 noted that he was telling the story without mentioning details. He continued that the interrogation and torture of all detainees started, including P48 who was interrogated and tortured for the first time [P48 noted that it was his first interrogation in Al-Khatib because he was interrogated again, later]. Everyone was interrogated and tortured before all the detainees were put in a cell. P48 said that he does not remember how long he stayed in Al-Khatib Branch, because he was transferred to Kafar Souseh, and then he was released. In Al-Khatib Branch, he was interrogated another time, in particular, he was beaten and was asked about the reason for the demonstration as well as the names of the demonstrators and the friends who were organizing with him. A leaflet that P48 wrote and was distributed to other people was found [with his belongings when he was searched] as well. He was interrogated about the leaflet - how and when, etc. P48 pointed that this was the story in short.

Kerber recalled that P48 said that he was detained in late April or early May. Kerber asked if P48 knows the specific date. P48 said that he does not remember, but it was in April or May 2011.

Kerber asked if it could be on May 2, 2011. P48 answered, maybe.

Kerber asked P48 how he knew that it was Al-Khatib Branch. P48 said he saw a sign that read "Al-Khatib Laboratory for Medical Analysis مخبر الخطيب للتحاليل الطبية".

Kerber asked P48 where he saw it - whether he was still on the bus or if it was after getting off the bus. P48 said no, he was on the floor of the bus and was wearing a wool shirt. When it was flipped over his head, it became like a web. P48 explained that he saw it [the sign] by coincidence. He was leaning his back on the people behind him and was facing the bus's window, and at a certain point, he saw it.

Kerber asked how long it was between when P48 saw that sign and when he was brought into the branch. P48 said it was a few minutes between seeing the sign and being brought inside [the branch]. P48 indicated that this was the first point [of how he identified that it was Al-Khatib]. But there were also people [other detainees] with him and one of them was a former Islamist detainee, who P48 told that they were in Al-Khatib Branch because he saw a sign, and he [the former detainee] confirmed.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner said that he wanted to go back to the time of P48's arrest. He asked P48 to describe the raid. P48 said, "Please repeat the question" [There was confusion, as the German to Arabic court interpreter told the Arabic to German interpreter who was sitting next to P48 to instruct P48 to not tell the court interpreter to repeat the question, but rather to tell the judge that. The indirect interpreter appeared annoyed because P48 was missing the interpretation. However, P48 later explained that he was getting overlapping translation and had to lower the audio when he was speaking].

Wiedner again asked P48 to describe the raid on his village. P48 said that those are memories that he was trying to forget. P48 explained that it began at dawn. P48 heard shooting in the air. He was speaking on the phone with someone in Damascus, but the landlines were disconnected. P48 tried to call using his mobile phone, but there was no network connection. There was the distant sound of shooting in Az-Zabadani, P48 went outside to the balcony and saw security and army vehicles, soldiers, and snipers on the roofs of the buildings next to him and opposite him. P48 knew that there was a campaign on Az-Zabadani. P48's parents woke up to the sound of shooting as well. P48 woke up his two sisters and his young brother (he was young at that time). P48 started to wonder if he should escape or stay home. By the positioning of the snipers, P48 figured out the distribution and pattern of snipers and knew that there was a sniper [on top of] his house. P48 decided to stay and burned the leaflets. He had a small camera, so he broke it and hid it. He deleted a few things on his computer and prepared himself for being detained.

Wiedner recalled that P48 said "soldiers" and asked if that was correct. P48 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if they were wearing military uniforms. P48 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled that P48 said "fourth division," and asked how P48 knew that. P48 said no, he did not say that they came from the fourth division. He said they were from the army. P48 explained that he did not have the complete luxury to look at the writings on their clothes [to read the badges or see the insignia].

Wiedner asked P48 if the ones who transported him to Al-Khatib were from the military. P48 said that when he was taken from his home, there were many army personnel and soldiers on the roof. What P48 saw when he was taken to the bus in front of the house was that there were army soldiers. [However,] P48 did not know if they were security or army officers on the bus.

Wiedner asked if they identified themselves on the bus or whether P48 was able to identify their clothes. P48 said he does not remember much, but they were wearing military uniforms. If someone raised his head, he would get hit with a rifle. One had to deceive the officers that he was a polite [innocent] creature so that the officers did not harm him [P48 laughed lightly].

Wiedner noted that P48 could not look around when he was on the bus and asked if P48, nevertheless, could see if the staff members were wearing uniforms when he arrived at Al-Khatib.

P48 asked what Wiedner meant by “formal attire/outfit” [This is how interpreter interpreted “uniform” from German to Arabic] and asked Wiedner if he meant whether they were wearing military clothes.

Wiedner responded yes, “for example...”. P48 said that firstly, it was 11 to 12 years ago and he does not remember. P48 added that in Syria, the security forces, in general, wear civilian clothes, and the ones who welcomed them were wearing civilian clothes.

Wiedner asked if the raid on Az-Zabadani resulted in injuries or casualties. P48 said he did not know of dead people, but there were wounded people. When “we” arrived at the detention place (as there were people who were beaten in front of their families [in Az-Zabadani]) there was a person whose face had been smashed with a rifle.

Wiedner asked P48 to describe how he was taken to the cell. P48 said that they were brought inside the branch after they got off the buses and military people were standing on both sides. P48 does not know the distance [between the bus and the branch’s entrance], but they [the detainees] had to keep their heads down facing the ground. Their hands were tied to their backs and people were beating them until they reached the stairs [at the entrance of the branch leading to the basement]. P48 explained that they entered the branch with the people beating them [the detainees] - smacking, shoving, and trying to end the entry process quickly.

Wiedner asked if P48 could estimate how many detainees arrived at the branch with him. P48 said he did not understand. [P48 explained that he sometimes needed to turn down the volume of the headphones when he speaks so that he hears the direct interpreter, and when he turns up the volume again, the question is already over and he misses it]. [Plaintiff counsel Kroker suggested P48 remove the headphones instead of turning the volume up and down.].

[Wiedner repeated his last question about the estimate number of detainees]. P48 said approximately 100 to 150, but of course, that was an estimate he made after he was released from prison. But at their arrival, the numbers were big - one could see people in front and behind him. P48 added that they detained all the families of the town [P48 meant that there were detainees from each family], and there were even detainees between 70 to 75 years old. The younger detainees were between 17 and 18 years old.

Wiedner asked if there were women as well. P48 said no, he has no knowledge of that.

Wiedner asked what happened after they were brought inside the branch. P48 asked Wiedner, “What happened in which part?”

Wiedner clarified he meant until they entered the cell. For example, whether they were searched. P48 said that after they entered [the branch] and went downstairs and were beaten (P48 could not see that place), they were taken in a corridor and a person (or two) searched them. One had to take off all of his clothes and do the security move or “the squatting down” move. After that, they were taken to a small yard where each person had to hand over his belongings on a table to a security staff member. P48 had only simple things and the leaflet, which he handed over and it was brought in the interrogation.

Wiedner asked P48 to describe the cell. P48 said that after he was in the yard for a long time (after he finished the first interrogation), he was brought into the cell. It was big and crowded with people (all the people were from P48’s town).

There were two water taps and P48 thinks that there was a toilet to the left. There were military blankets on the floor, but not to the full extent [the whole floor was not covered with blankets] (no luxury). The cell was crowded with people and they heard sounds of torture. P48 noted that he was trying to recall as many details as possible. In general, that was the cell and they used to sleep next to each other.

Wiedner recalled that P48 said in the police questioning that the cell measured 5x10 meters. P48 said approximately, as an estimate.

Wiedner asked how many detainees were in the cell. P48 said he does not remember, but there were many. P48 pointed that if he gets enough time, he could recall names [of the detainees] and numbers as well.

Wiedner stated that P48 said in the police questioning that the number of detainees inside the cell was 25 to 30. P48 said maybe. That questioning was 2 or 3 years ago, and maybe the number was even higher than that. P48 could not assert and these were estimated numbers.

Wiedner noted that P48 should certainly answer only as much as he remembers. Wiedner asked if there was a window in the cell. P48 said he does not remember, but he does not think so.

Wiedner recalled that P48 said that he heard screams from other detainees. Wiedner asked where the screams came from. P48 said they came either from the door or they heard beating and banging from the [other] side of the wall.

Wiedner asked how often P48 heard the sounds and the screams. P48 said he could not assert, but he heard them intermittently.

Wiedner asked if P48 was interrogated after he was brought into the cell. P48 said that his first interrogation was immediately after his detention and the second one was one or two days later.

Wiedner asked if the interrogation was conducted on the same floor as the cell, or whether he had to go upstairs. P48 said that in Al-Khatib, it [the interrogation place] was to the right, directly after leaving the cell (that was the second interrogation). The first one was in the yard and after a long waiting, he was brought inside [perhaps "to the interrogation room" that was on the same floor] for the interrogation. There were interrogators and he was asked questions. He was beaten with a fourfold whip and he had to lie down on his abdomen and raise his feet. He was beaten, insulted, and told to confess, give names, and mention friends. He was also told to explain how he printed the leaflets and for whom. They wanted to get more information, especially because P48 had no problem talking about himself and his participation in demonstrations. The guard was beating as the questions were asked. That was the first interrogation.

Wiedner asked P48 which part of his body was hit. P48 said his feet, in addition to the other beating on the back and on any part. It was like they were beating an animal.

Wiedner asked if there were instructions or orders for beating. P48 said yes, he thinks so. They [the guard(s) and the interrogators(s)] could see each other, but P48 could not see them because he was blindfolded. When they put the blindfold on P48, there was still a two-millimeter gap through which P48 could attempt to look out.

Wiedner asked P48 if he was beaten only with the cable. P48 said he thinks it was a fourfold electricity cable. It comes wrapped [the four mini-cables are wrapped together to form the cable].

Wiedner asked P48 if he saw other tools or devices for torture. P48 said he did not have such specifics; he does not remember.

Wiedner asked if P48 was mistreated in all interrogations. P48 confirmed.

Wiedner asked how long the interrogation lasted. P48 said it was difficult to estimate.

Wiedner refreshed P48's recollection quoting from the police questioning transcript "The first interrogation lasted for one hour, but I lost the perception of time. My feet were swollen due to the beating." P48 said correct, that's probably right.

[Wiedner continued quoting] "I was beaten with an electric cable. It consisted of four cables wrapped together. I was able to see through the blindfold. I was sitting on my knees and could raise my head. I was beaten all the time; during the interrogation and the break. After the interrogation, they took me to the cell." P48 said that is correct.

Wiedner asked where the interrogation was conducted; whether it was in the basement or upstairs. P48 said no, not upstairs. P48 thinks that the yard was on the same floor and [...]and the interrogation was directly in the yard.

Wiedner asked P48 if he was injured. P48 said his feet were swollen, maybe his body was bruised, but P48 does not know. His biggest concern was to be released. When he was released, there were no signs on his body.

Wiedner said that he would quote the police questioning transcript, and asked P48 to tell him whether it is correct. "The interrogator told me that I did not convince him and told me to lie on the floor. Someone came, I do not know who, but maybe a guard, and there were orders. When the interrogator did not like the answer, the guard beat me." P48 said correct.

[Wiedner continued quoting] "I lay down on the floor and raised my feet. He started to beat me and my feet got swollen. I was being asked questions at the same time." P48 said correct.

[Wiedner continued quoting] "The guard stepped on me too, I do not know how many times." P48 said correct.

Wiedner asked P48 what he was wearing during the interrogation. P48 said [he was wearing] a wool shirt and jeans. P48 was wearing these at home.

Wiedner asked if P48 was wearing these during the interrogation as well. P48 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P48 if he was mistreated in other places. P48 said he does not remember well, he recalls those things [that he mentioned previously].

Wiedner asked if P48 recalls what other detainees told him about their interrogations and whether they were tortured, and if their bodies showed signs of beating.

P48 said no, honestly, he does not remember, but all [detainees] were beaten. There was a person, a father, and his son. The father was beaten in front of his son. In general, all [detainees] were beaten.

Wiedner said that when P48 was asked during the [German] police questioning about the physical condition of other detainees, he answered "Many of them could not walk. One of them said that he was offered a cigarette because his nose was broken and he cooperated with the regime. His family has good connections with the regime." P48 said correct.

Wiedner asked P48 if he assumed that this person's nose was broken or if he was told that. P48 said no, he heard it from the people there [in the cell; the other detainees] and even heard it from him [the person whose nose was broken]. "Now" he has solid relations with the regime and he is [lives] in Germany.

Wiedner said that when P48 was asked in the police questioning about other torturing methods, P48 answered, "There was always beating, Falaqa, stepping on people, beating with electric cables." P48 said maybe he does not remember [all the other methods that he did not mention].

Wiedner asked if P48 was subject to sexual mistreatment. P48 said, no.

Wiedner asked P48 whether he heard from other detainees if they endured sexual mistreatment. P48 said [that if Wiedner meant] in the same time as him [from other detainees who were detained at the same time with P48], then he does not remember.

Wiedner asked P48 if his family was informed about his detention or knew of his whereabouts. P48 said no, he does not think so.

Wiedner asked P48 if his family asked about him and tried to look for him. P48 said that after he was released, he knew that his father was trying [to look for/ask about him], but he did not know where P48 was. As far as P48 learned [later from] people in the town (as the campaign was on the whole town): individuals from pro-regime families as well as from families against the regime were detained. P48 noted that he used to hear some matters/issues, but he is not sure about them.

Wiedner asked if P48 saw dead people inside the branch. P48 denied.

Wiedner asked if P48 saw the accused during the time he was detained. P48 denied.

Wiedner asked P48 if he could look to his right and say whether he saw the accused during his detention. P48 said he does not like to look [at him].

Wiedner asked if P48, nevertheless, did not see him in the branch. P48 said no, because they could not see [because they were blindfolded].

Wiedner said that P48 was asked during the police questioning if he knew about Anwar Raslan. P48 said no, he had no knowledge.

Wiedner asked P48 if he knew about Raslan's activities with the opposition after his defection. P48 said he heard something like that - that he worked with the opposition. As an individual, P48 heard from others, but he did not know [himself]. P48 only knew through people P48 knows and who told him that he [Raslan] worked with the opposition.

Wiedner asked P48 what happened after Al-Khatib and how long he stayed there. P48 said he does not know and was not aware of it. He only knows that he stayed there for days, because he could not differentiate between day and night there.

Wiedner recalled that P48 said in the police questioning that he did not know how long he stayed in Al-Khatib, but maybe for three to five days. P48 said yes, that could be.

Wiedner asked P48 what happened after Al-Khatib and if he could tell the court, without much detail, how he was released. P48 said he was taken to Kafar Souseh (P48 did not know the branch's number) where he stayed for a while. P48 explained that of course when one is transferred from a branch to another branch, it is like one came directly from their homes. The person has to be searched again, etc., but in Kafar Souseh the yard was big and the detainees were without clothes and it was cold. They [the guards] were taking information and splashing the detainees with water. They were asking for information about all of a person's friends and relatives. At that point, the clothes were mixed up and P48 does not know what he wore - maybe pajamas. P48 noted that, like the regular welcoming, beatings were included as well [in the welcoming after a transfer to a new branch]. P48 entered the cell. It was smaller [than Al-Khatib's] and there were more people than could fit in the cell. It [the cell] was divided and had two toilets. It was a small room that was 2.5m<sup>2</sup>. One toilet was functioning, the other one was not, so, "we" put blankets there and it turned into a room. P48 got the "five-star" [room] and stayed there along with another person. The rest [of the detainees] were sleeping in a terrifying condition: the feet [of someone] on the face [of another one].

Wiedner asked P48 how he was released. P48 said he was interrogated more than once and there was a group interrogation [he was interrogated with other people at the same time]. After that, they were taken by buses to the civil court in Az-Zablatani الزبلطاني. They were cuffed to each other with chains. They went to the judge who told them, "No one made a connection to you [no one intervened/paid money for their release/worked as a mediator to release them, etc.]. Bashar, the leader, pardoned/spared you. You can leave." People were waiting [outside the court], because they knew [that people would be released]. There was a person who was waiting for his brothers who were detained with "us." P48 got in the car with him and he took them to Az-Zabadani. They were afraid of the military checkpoints [on their way back] but eventually got home.

Defense Attorneys' Questioning

Fratzky asked P48 if he talked with people who were questioned as witnesses in this case before him. P48 said, "No, in what way?".

Fratzky asked P48 if he was in contact with Syrians who were witnesses in this case. Kroker asked Fratzky to be more specific. Kerber said that the witness would not be able to answer if he did not understand the question.

Fratzky said that he just wanted to know if P48 was in contact or communicated with Syrians who were witnesses and testified in this court, or will be future witnesses and will testify later "here" in this case. P48 said there was no communication. If Fratzky was talking about people in the Syrian revolution, then in one way or another, "we" [P48 and others from the opposition] know each other on the internet or in person. Their common goal is to overthrow/bring down the regime.

Certainly, one could hear from people, but as for communicating regarding the court [trial] like “are you a witness...etc.,” then no, he did not communicate with anyone.

Fratzky asked P48 if he knows Anwar Al-Bunni. P48 said yes, he knows him.

Fratzky asked P48 if he communicated with him. P48 said no, they had little, normal [contact].

Fratzky asked what P48 meant by “a little, normal.” P48 said he knows that Fratzky was focusing on that point. There was no communication with Anwar [Al-Bunni]. P48 got to meet him in person in Oslo. He [Al-Bunni] knows P48 as well and knows P48’s name from their work in the revolution. He [AnwarAl-Bunni] is a lawyer, an activist, and on Facebook. P48 works in media and press; thus, they are together on Facebook [they have each other as friends]. However, there is no regular communication [between them]. That is what P48 meant by “normal”.

Fratzky asked P48 if they talked in Oslo or just got to know each other. P48 said no. P48 saw him, greeted him, asked “how are you?,” peace [bye].

Fratzky asked if P48 communicated with him [Al-Bunni] digitally, in writing, on the phone, etc. before the trial session. P48 denied.

Plaintiff Counsels’ Questioning

Scharmer recalled that P48 had to take off all his clothes in Al-Khatib. Scharmer asked P48 if other detainees had to do the same. P48 said of course, “we” were more than one person in that narrow corridor. P48 said he recalled something in that regard. There was someone who was wearing a necklace and tried to take it off in an atypical fashion [Perhaps they tried to rip or pull it off] and it broke as a result. Therefore, [according to the example P48 recalled] one had to take off everything.

[The witness was dismissed at 11:15 AM]

[The following are summaries of the statements read in court, based on what the trial monitor was able to recall.]

Polz read aloud a statement explaining the reasons the prosecution had for the objection to summoning [REDACTED] [FH] as a witness. FH is supposed to demonstrate that Raslan was not able to refuse the orders, which is irrelevant. FH allegedly worked in the same branch, but he did not defect at the same time, which does not affect the trial case. In his statement on May 18, 2020, Raslan mentioned the person’s name as [REDACTED], but the same person was mentioned by Chris Engels from CIJA as [REDACTED]. Additionally, Eyad Al-Gharib mentioned that FH defected before him, which suggests that there could be conflicts in the provided dates. Raslan alleges that Hafez Makhoul, head of Division 40, had the power to give orders at Branch 251. FH is supposed to testify to that, but it is unknown from where FH got such information, as explained in the prosecution’s statement on April 15, 2021. The same applies to the claim that the Presidential Guards and the Fourth Division had power in Branch 251. FH is supposed to demonstrate that other officers from Division 40 had power in Branch 251, but that does not exclude, and is irrelevant to, Raslan’s responsibility in Branch 251. [...]

Böcker said he had points to raise:

1) [Böcker had filed a petition earlier that he wanted access to the files of the structural investigation by the German Federal Prosecutor General Office. This was rejected. Today he rejected the rejection]. Böcker said he should be able to have access to all documents within the structural investigation about Syria.

2) On August 26, 2021, [P47] refused to answer questions regarding his relation with Al-Bunni. Böcker wanted to know what kind of relationship Al-Bunni and P47 have because P47 said that he works “with”, and not “for” him. Bahns said that Al-Bunni is some kind of lawyer to P47, but didn't explain further if Al-Bunni is accredited as a lawyer in Germany and in which specific way they are connected in this regard.

Klinge said that he had a quick response to Böcker: His request is rejected, as he did not ask for a specific file, but access to the entire structural investigation.

Kerber said that a witness, [REDACTED], would testify on September 18, and Oehmichen would be his witness counsel.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:45 AM.

The next session will be on September 2, 2021, at 9:30AM.

Trial Day 91 – September 2, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30 AM with five spectators and one member of the press in the audience. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Bahns said that his client does not want to share his personal information, because his family lives in regime-governed areas. Kerber agreed.

Kerber asked P49 to give his personal information to the extent he wanted. Bahns said he would use his address for P49's contact information, and said that P49 was an artist.

Kerber asked if P49 was related to the defendant by blood or marriage. P49 denied.

Testimony of P49

Kerber noted that the court knows that P49 met with the accused in Syria, and asked P49 to elaborate on that. P49 said that the first meeting that happened with him [Raslan] was when P49 was in Al-Khatib Branch - when P49 was detained and he [Raslan] was interrogating him. That was the first time they met.

Kerber asked P49 how he was detained and asked him to elaborate on that meeting. P49 said that two armed people wearing civilian clothes came to his house and entered the house directly without P48 telling them “welcome, come in.” P49 did not know who they were. P49's wife asked them to show their ID card that tells if they were from the security forces. One of them showed the ID card and hid it again and they [P49 and his wife] did not see anything. [P49 demonstrated how the staff member showed the ID swiftly]. P49 stated that they [the two staff members] did not treat him bad, namely, they did not use foul language or anything like that, but they lied to him. They told him that they wanted him for an hour to ask him a few questions and then let him go back home. P49's wife asked them if they were sure that it was only for one hour, and they confirmed. “We” went downstairs to the entrance of the building where a security car was parked. It had approximately four armed individuals inside. He [one of the two staff members] let P49 choose between taking his [P49's] own car or ride in the security car. P49 said if it is only one hour, then he would take his own car. P49 asked him if he could drive, and he said no, and he [the staff member] drove. P49 asked him where they were heading, and he said he could not say. P49 explained that he was too scared because he did not know where he was heading, nor who they were. He [the staff member] then spoke over his handheld transceiver (P49 did not know with whom) and said that the accused was with him in the car. P49 told him that he “was not putting anything on [i.e., was not blindfolded], so why you don’t say where are we heading?”. He replied that he could not say, then said that he wanted to tell P49 something. He said, “You will not stay for an hour. Perhaps you will stay for a long time.” He told P49 that he could smoke and tell his wife that he would not come back. P49 indicated that he refused to tell his wife and scare her. P49 did not know what was happening.

“We” arrived at Al-Khatib and went down the stairs, one floor underground. P49 was put in something like a reception office. He [the staff member who was with P49 in the car] left and P49 stayed alone with the man who was there [at the reception]. P49 tried to be nice and sit normally on the chair, but he [the man] was harsh and treated P49 like a criminal. He asked P49 to take off all his clothes, even his underwear, and to do the “security move” crouching down completely naked. He also did not agree that P49 put his clothes on the table, [and told P49 to put them] on the floor. There was no offensive language. Then he asked P49 to put his clothes back on but took the belt and the shoelaces. He asked P49 to stand facing the wall.

After a while, another staff member took P49 to the cell. P49 could see that it was 2.5 to 3 meters long and around 1.5 meters wide. There was a military blanket on the floor, and the metal door was as wide as the cell. He asked P49 to sit there still facing the wall. P49 waited there for a long or short time; he does not know; he had no perception of time. After a while, P49 heard sounds and they brought somebody else in. P49 recalls that he [the person] was an English teacher, maybe he was with his son. He [the English teacher] was tortured in the hall in front of the cell. The guard was holding him [the teacher] and was hitting his head or body against the cell door. P49 recalls that he [the teacher] lost consciousness two or three times, and they woke him up again until the torturing session ended. They summoned P49. A person approached and blindfolded him, and then took him to the room of Mr. Anwar [Raslan]. Of course, P49 did not know where he was heading. P49 heard Anwar’s voice asking P49 why he was afraid (his fear was apparent). P49 told him that he was in a scary place. Raslan asked P49 to relax and told him that there was nothing scary. He asked P49 if someone had treated P49 badly, and P49 asked him if he could sit down. He said yes, of course. P49 asked him how [how should he sit down]. He told P49 to get a chair. P49 asked him how, as he could not see. He instructed P49 to go to the left and after three steps there was a chair, “bring it and come over here.” P49 brought it, sat down, and the interrogation started. P49 asked [the judge] if that was enough.

Kerber asked P49 when he was detained. P49 said the date could be in December. His wife would remember better than him. He was released after three days, and it was the third part of December.

Kerber asked what year that was. P49 said 2011.

Kerber asked if P49 was alone in the cell. P49 confirmed.

Kerber asked if the interrogation room was on the same floor as the cell, or whether he had to go upstairs. P49 said no, it was on the same level.

Kerber recalled that P49 said that the interrogation started. Kerber asked P49 what he was asked. P49 said he does not remember in detail; for example what was the first question was and anything like that.

Kerber asked P49 to say whatever he remembers. Kerber asked P49 how he knew that it was Raslan. P49 said he knew him by the name and his appearance later (not in that session). On the day P49 was going to be released [the third day], he [Raslan] took him to the office upstairs. There, P49 knew his name and appearance.

Kerber asked P49 to elaborate more on the interrogation. P49 said the first session was about “Why did you do that?” and statements like, “You are a famous artist and you have several ways to present your point of view other than what you did.” He also told P49 that “the people [detainees] we are bringing are scum, and you are not like that. Why did you do that?”. P49 answered him why he did that [why he participated in the demonstration, as explained later]. P49 pointed out that [them] talking about the subject included no physical nor verbal violence at all. It was more like a conversation, but P49 was blindfolded. Slowly, P49 found out that there were two other people in the room, and P49 was afraid of being hit by either of them at any moment, but that did not happen. However, there was psychological violence from the start. From the first moment [he was detained] and until he was released, because he did not know anything about what could happen to him. He could have been released after an hour, after 20 years, or he might die. Anything could happen to his children, wife, or father. That was what was in P49’s head. In the second interrogation, Anwar [Raslan] was not there, but another person who was violent to some extent, but not physically. Of course, what was in P49’s mind was from his experience with interrogations [He was referring to his perceptions from Syrian dramas depicting what happens with intelligence services], as well as from what Syrians hear about what happens in Syria. There is always a good interrogator and an evil one, and that was literally what was there [what he experienced at Al-Khatib]. Anwar [Raslan] was a good officer and the other one was violent, but not physically, just verbally and psychologically.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Wiedner recalls that P49 said that he was detained in the last third of December. Wiedner said that P49 was asked about his detention during the police questioning and answered that it could have been on December 8, 2011, and that he met Raslan the second time on December 10, 2011. Wiedner asked if that could be correct. P49 said yes, maybe. “I’ve remembered now.” What was in P49’s mind was that New Year’s Eve happened [after he was released], but he remembered that an “artistic work” happened [P49 did not want to disclose what art industry he worked in. “Artistic work” refers to a job he had booked]. Maybe on December 8, because “frankly speaking,” P49 did not attempt to study [prepare] or do anything before his testimony. He was trying to depend on his memory.

Wiedner indicated that that was a good call [not to prepare anything before the testimony]. Wiedner asked P49 how long he stayed in Al-Khatib Branch. P49 said he stayed three days, of course, it is always “as far as I remember.”

Wiedner asked if P49 was told the reason for his detention. Wiedner recalled that P49 did something before he was detained and asked him what it was. P49 said they did not tell him a specific charge, but in his mind, one could be detained in Syria [even] for entering the toilet. However, the talking [conversation] was about his participation in a condolence/solace [gathering] in an area close to his house, which is [REDACTED], where 16 young men were killed. P49 was there to express his condolences and the condolence/solace [gathering] turned into a demonstration which was recorded and uploaded online. Based on that, he [the interrogator] asked him why he participated in it.

Wiedner recalled that P49 was taken to Al-Khatib Branch. Wiedner asked P49 how he knew that and if it was because he knew the area. P49 said “we” were in Damascus, and he was not blindfolded. P49 certainly knew the area - he knew everything [about it].

Wiedner asked P49 if he could recall and describe what happened when they arrived at Al-Khatib Branch. P49 said that even when they were interrogating him, he knew that it was the Al-Khatib area and that there was an Intelligence Services branch and he knew that they were not police because P49 knows the police uniform. The Intelligence Services [staff] wear civilian clothes. It is the most dangerous apparatus in Syria and all people fear it. P49 knew in general that there was an Intelligence Services branch, but it seems that “we” [Syrians] did not dare to look and observe it in [our daily] life [P49 meant that people knew that there was a security branch in the area because of the checkpoints, but they did not dare look at its location or the buildings, because that would be considered suspicious]. P49 would describe it [the building] as having a big metal door (gate) through which the car drove inside, and behind that there was the building’s entrance. This was where they entered when they got out of the car. P49 went downstairs to the basement and there was a metal door at the staircase. There was something like a small hall and in front of him, slightly to the left, there was the room where he was received.

Wiedner asked if there were orders or instructions for the driver at the gate. P49 said his appearance was known and he does not remember that there were instructions from anyone. The person who came to P49’s house went downstairs [to the basement] with P49, left him there, and then left.

Wiedner refreshed P49’s recollection quoting from the police questioning transcript, “When we arrived at the gate, it was black or beige, there were instructions that no one should talk to me [harm him]. When we got out of the car there was a person who was being beaten.” P49 said yes, maybe he remembers that. But that clip [scene] does not stick in his head all the time [he always forgets it]. What sticks in his mind is what happened inside the room.

Wiedner indicated that P49 met Raslan. Wiedner asked P49 how he knew Raslan: if he knew Raslan before his detention. P49 said no, he did not know him. Raslan introduced himself to P49 when P49 was released. At the time of the release, he [Raslan] told the guard to remove the blindfold and told P49 that he was going to be released that day. He said that P49’s father was there and would be brought to the head of the branch. P49, of course, wore his belt and shoelaces. “We” went upstairs to the office, had coffee, and waited until P49’s father came. At that time, P49 knew that it was Anwar [Raslan] because he introduced himself to P49.

Wiedner indicated that Raslan is in court as the Accused. Wiedner asked P49 if he could recognize him. [P49 looked at his right] P49 said yes, of course.

Wiedner asked how many times P49 was interrogated over these three days, knowing that the first interrogation was conducted by Raslan, he asked P49 what happened next. P49 answered that then he was with the other officer (maybe he was an interrogator but not an officer) who was the more violent one. P49 said he only had these two interrogation sessions. After that, a person came to P49 and told him to “write everything” and gave P49 a pen and papers (that happened with the violent interrogator). P49 signed a blank paper and [the interrogator] asked him “Do you know why we made you sign a blank paper?”. P49 said yes, of course. He [the interrogator] said, “No, not as you think. I am writing a draft so that we do not trouble you.”

After some time, they made P49 write something like an apology and why he did that [participated in the demonstration], and told him that this would be connected to whether he would be released or not.

Wiedner asked P49 if he saw Raslan again when he was released. P49 asked Wiedner if he meant after he was released.

Wiedner said no, after his second interrogation. P49 said yes, at first, it was Raslan, then the other interrogator, then Raslan when he introduced himself.

Wiedner wanted to go back to P49's first interrogation in the basement with Raslan. Wiedner asked if P49 recalls what Raslan was wearing. P49 said the first one [interrogation] was in his office, or so P49 thinks, but he does not remember what he was wearing, but it is always civilian clothes. P49 concluded that he was blindfolded after all [therefore unable to provide precise descriptions regarding clothes].

Wiedner asked if Raslan did not allow P49 to remove the blindfold. P49 said no, not in the first one [interrogation], in the second one.

Wiedner asked how many people, besides Raslan, were in the room. P49 said he thinks there were two [other people].

Wiedner asked how the interaction was between Raslan and these two people. P49 said he thinks it was [as between] a boss and subordinate; Raslan being the boss. He [Raslan] was leading the operation, namely, the interrogation.

Wiedner reminded P49 to inform the judges whenever he needed a break. Wiedner asked how long P49's interrogation lasted. P49 said he thinks it was around 1.5 to 2 hours.

Wiedner indicated that it was a long time and asked P49 if he recalls what they talked about. Wiedner asked if it was a conversation or question-and-answer. P49 said it was more like a query. P49 could say "right now" that he [Raslan] wanted to know about P49's point of view and his participation in the demonstration and opposing the regime. He wanted to tell P49 that the demonstrators are scum. P49 recalls that he [Raslan] brought one of the people [detainees] in to tell P49 that he [the detainee] participated in a demonstration for a kilo of bananas. [Raslan depicted it] As if the demonstration was an external conspiracy and he wanted to know whether P49 participated in armed activities against the regime.

Wiedner asked P49 to describe how that person was called and what happened with him. P49 said he thinks that it happened at the end of the [interrogation] session. After "we" talked about the reason P49 participated [in the demonstration], he [Raslan] called for someone to be brought in. Maybe at the end, he [Raslan] pulled [up or down] the blindfold to show P49 [the person]. P49 indicated that he does not remember if that happened at that session or at the second session (P49 meant on the day of his release).

Wiedner asked if P49 said that this situation happened in the first interrogation in the basement when he was blindfolded. P49 said he does not recall if it happened in the first office in the basement and at the end of the first session, or the beginning of the second session on the day of the release. P49 did not remember very well.

Wiedner asked what the person was asked or if something happened to him. P49 said maybe he was asked why he participated in the demonstration, and he replied that he was offered a kilo of bananas. It was a big play [show] and "we" were watching.

It was apparent that he knew what question he would be asked and P49 felt that he [the person] was prepared to say these few words. He was trying to say that he was a nice person [Perhaps P49 meant that Raslan was trying to say that he was a nice person with detainees].

Wiedner asked if Raslan asked him if the demonstration was armed. P49 said of course, and he asked P49 if he agreed with the killings that were happening. P49 told him that he certainly did not, because the ones who were dying were human beings in the end. P49 stated that he is against violence from all parties.

Wiedner asked what his impression was about what Raslan wanted to do. P49 said he thinks that the whole situation was an “ear scrub/rub” فرقة أذن [in Syria, this means to give a little punishment to send a warning; “slap on the wrist”. [P49 asked the interpreter “Do you know how to translate that?” The interpreter clarified the term]. P49 said that the point was that he was not political, was not dangerous, and was not inciting/instigating killing. It was more of a punishment than an interrogation, and more like showing off power and “we can bring [detain] you [here whenever we want].” They were showing P49 what they were capable of doing. P49 thinks that was the goal and what made him sure of that was that they brought his father on the last day (like in school).

Böcker said that he did not understand the term P49 used. [The interpreter clarified the meaning, but the indirect interpreter gave another meaning. This led to some confusion between the interpreters, however, the trial monitor could not hear the indirect interpreters’ explanation].

Wiedner asked if P49 felt that the interrogation in the basement was in a closed room. P49 said yes, it was a closed office which had a door. The second one [interrogation], however, was in the hall.

Wiedner asked if the second interrogation was conducted by the other interrogator. P49 confirmed.

Wiedner asked where that second interrogation was conducted. P49 said the second interrogation was in the open space.

Wiedner asked if both meetings with Raslan took place in the office in the basement. P49 said no, the first time was in his office [in the basement]. The second time was in his office but at the time of the release, he [Raslan] requested that P49’s belt and shoelaces be brought. Then P49 went along with him [Raslan] upstairs to his second office, which P49 thinks was on the first floor and it had a balcony. P49 stopped and asked if he could have a break.

Wiedner asked if P49 heard sounds of mistreatment from other detainees during his detention. P49 said yes, of course. He heard it most of the time. It was as if there were organized [torturing] sessions, between two and three per day, and there was a session for releasing demonstrators who were there [in detention], in addition to songs glorifying Bashar [Al-Assad].

Wiedner asked if anybody in the basement could hear the same sounds of mistreatment. P49 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if P49 could hear the screams and interrogation of other people later, when he went upstairs. P49 said that at the time he was released/went upstairs [he used a word that could mean either], there was no torturing [happening], and therefore, P49 could not tell whether he could hear [such sounds] upstairs.

Wiedner asked P49 if he met high-ranking officers before he was released. P49 said that on the day of his release, he met the head of the branch. P49's father was brought to him but P49 does not remember the head's name.

Wiedner asked if Tawfiq Younes rings a bell. P49 said most probably, he was 90% sure it was him.

Wiedner asked P49 what happened at the office; whether P49 talked with him [Younes] and if Raslan was there. P49 said no, P49 was in Anwar's [Raslan's] office and then he [Raslan] received a phone call saying "Ok" and that P49's father was upstairs. P49 thinks that he [Raslan] escorted him upstairs and his father was there with the head of the branch sitting on a chair nearby. P49 went to him on purpose and "greeted him" [P49 used a word that could mean "shook his hand"], although he [Younes] did not want to reciprocate because it was apparent that he was annoyed with P49 (it was as if P49 cornered him [put Younes into an awkward situation]). P49 had the feeling that they wanted to watch a scene of him apologizing and crying [begging for mercy], which did not happen. Thus, the head of the branch was disappointed. It was not a long meeting. He [Younes] said that he hoped that this was the last time P49 comes to them (not exactly like that, but with the same meaning). The meeting was over and P49 left with his father, and they gave him the car immediately.

Wiedner asked if the office of the head of the branch was in the same building where Raslan's office was. P49 said he thinks it was the same [building], but one floor up.

Wiedner asked P49 to describe Raslan's office that was upstairs. P49 said it was a spacious room and he recalls a big picture of Hafez Al-Assad. Maybe there was a balcony, but if it was not a balcony, then P49 recalls the office being fresh and bright. It was the total opposite of the office downstairs.

Wiedner asked P49 if they [P49 and Raslan] talked about Hafez's picture. P49 said he does not remember details, but he recalls that he [Raslan] did not agree with Bashar Al-Assad and P49 found it strange that he was telling him that. P49 explained to the court that this was of course his subjective impression. According to P49, and Raslan seemed to be more aligned with Hafez. What affirmed that to P49 was that the big picture of Hafez was different than the pictures that are in the offices, companies, and the streets.

Wiedner asked if P49 had contact with Raslan after he was released. P49 said first, he read on Facebook something like an apology from Raslan addressed to P49, as he did not have P49's contact information (P49 thinks it was after he [Raslan] defected from the Intelligence Services), as to why he [Raslan] had to detain P49. Later, his [Raslan's] assistant, who took [detained] P49 from his house, contacted P49 on Facebook and told P49 that Anwar [Raslan] was in Germany and would like to get to know him, if P49 did not mind. P49 was curious and communicated [did not specify whether it was with Raslan or his assistant] at first via WhatsApp sending voice messages. P49 was curious why and how the whole process happened, because P49 thought a lot about it, and was curious whether Raslan had actually defected.

Wiedner asked P49 what Raslan told him, or if he did not say anything. P49 said that they agreed to meet in Berlin (most messages were generally more like greetings etc.), but he [Raslan] was arrested before they met.

Wiedner asked P49 if Raslan told him why he defected. P49 said he does not think that they talked about such a topic. The discussion was more about how he [Raslan] knew P49's father and met him multiple times in the past, not anything more than that.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Klinge asked if one could hear screams and sounds of torture during the first interrogation. P49 asked Klinge if he meant "in the [interrogation] room".

Klinge said yes. P49 confirmed.

Klinge asked if one could hear that in Raslan's room. P49 said yes, certainly.

Klinge refreshed P49's recollection quoting from the police questioning transcript, "Certainly, Raslan knew that there was torture there. There is no doubt. One could hear that even in the street. Raslan knew what was happening there." [The trial monitor was unable to fully capture the quote]. Klinge asked if that was correct. P49 said he does not know what the reason was for his defection, but all the rest was correct. However, what is certain is that this was the general approach of the Intelligence Services, even before the revolution. Even the normal person [layman] knows that [in Syria].

Klinge recalled that P49's impression of the relationship between Raslan and the other two staff members who were in the interrogation room was boss- subordinate. Klinge asked P49 how he concluded that. P49 concluded that through several points. When he [Raslan] was in the office, they were in the back [behind P49]. Raslan was almost the only one talking and no one else was talking. It was only after a while that P49 discovered that there were two other people in the room. That was what gave P49 the impression that he was the boss.

Klinge asked P49 if he remembers how Raslan spoke with the staff members. P49 said he thinks that they were addressing him with a low tone saying "Sidi [My master/Sir]." Usually in Syria, one says it to someone who is more senior than him.

Klinge asked if there were instructions or orders given by Raslan. P49 said not to the ones in the room, but it was apparent that he gave orders. "His word cannot become two" [Roughly translated, this means that no one dares to question his word. He does not need to ask twice].

Klinge asked P49 how he was treated during his detention in comparison to other detainees. P49 said that from the start, it was obvious that he had a special treatment, based on the knowledge of all the Syrian people about the reception at the Intelligence Services. P49 added that there are exaggerations for sure, but in general (and P49 has friends [who were detained and told him about the conditions there]), usually one gets beaten the moment he enters [the branch] and it was systematic. But that did not occur to P49; they were only harsh. P49 assumes that they gave him very special treatment because of his "situation."

Klinge recalled that P49 said that he is an artist and Raslan got to know his father [the word Klinge and P49 used was "got to know/was acquainted with"].

Böcker asked Klinge if he meant "knew his father" rather than "got to know/was acquainted with."

Klinge said yes, he meant "was acquainted with." P49 said that Raslan was the one who mentioned that to P49, and P49's father is well-known. He [Raslan] told P49 that he got to know his father/was acquainted with his father, but that does not necessarily mean that he was a friend of his father's.

Maybe he [Raslan] got to know him [P49's father] when he [Raslan] was serving in a different place. That is how he knew him, but yes, there was special treatment.

Klinge asked if Raslan had respect for P49's work or the work of his father. P49 said he would not say "respect." P49 thinks that at the Intelligence Services there is no respect for any personality no matter how big it is. For example, a professor's value would be zero. P49 indicated that he saw an English teacher being tortured (did not see but rather heard [he corrected himself]).

Klinge asked if P49 had the impression that he got special treatment because Raslan valued artists. P49 said he might say that, but he would say that what happened with him was that he [Raslan] treated P49 "well" in comparison to the way others were treated. However, if P49 would talk about humanity, then it was not "good" at all. There was violence from the first moment and constant injustice, however, in the whole regime, not only [from] Raslan. Therefore, when P49 said "good," it was relative to what is happening in Syria, not to human standards.

Klinge asked P49 why he was treated differently in comparison to other detainees in his interrogations. Böcker interjected saying that the question was answered.

Kerber said that the question was not answered and that was why Klinge asked the question. P49 asked if the question could be repeated.

Klinge asked P49 how he would explain the reasons for being treated well in comparison to other detainees. P49 said that this is certainly not something he can 100% confirm. That is why he wanted to get to know Raslan. However, P49 could say, according to his personal opinion, that he received very special treatment because of his career and work, and maybe because of his "origin" [It's unclear if he meant his origin in the artistic industry or his ethnicity.]. P49 thinks that there must have been something specific to his situation, for Raslan to treat him that way.

Klinge asked if Younes had respect for P49's career or origin. P49 said they did not have "respect," but they wanted to make sure that he did not go against them publicly again. P49 noted he wanted to assert again that they do not have any respect for any personality. That is the nature of their work.

Polz recalled that P49 said that Raslan referred to the demonstrators during the interrogation as "scum." Polz asked if P49 had the impression that Raslan was pro-regime against the demonstrators. P49 said that frankly, he felt that the whole interrogation was a play [show]. P49 was not convinced about what he [Raslan] was saying, nor was he [nor was Raslan was convinced by P49's words]. They were playing roles to get it over safely. P49 even recalls that Anwar [Raslan] made a comment at some point and asked P49 whether they [Raslan and P49] should do a screenplay of "this thing" and whether they could be actors. P49 answered Raslan, "Deservedly."

Defense Attorneys' Questioning

Böcker recalled that the general prosecutor asked P49 whether he was treated well in comparison to other detainees. Böcker asked if that was related to Raslan or to Al-Khatib Branch, and how Raslan treated "others." P49 asked if his understanding of Böcker's question was correct that he was asking how Raslan treated others.

Böcker recalled that P49 said "one" and "others," and wanted to know what P49 meant by that. P49 said he does not know how Mr. Anwar [Raslan] treated others, only how Raslan treated him.

Böcker referred P49 to the topic of Raslan and P49's father and recalled that P49 said that maybe they got to know each other before Al-Khatib. Böcker asked P49 what he meant by "before Al-Khatib." Böcker asked P49 how he knows when they spoke to each other. P49 said he knew about all of this through Anwar [Raslan]. P49's father did not tell him that. He [Raslan] told P49 that he knew his father.

Böcker recalls that P49 said that Raslan got to know/was acquainted with P49's father. Böcker asked if, by that expression, P49 meant that they were friends. P49 said that as far as he remembers, they were not friends on a personal level. P49's father had a visit to the place where Anwar [Raslan] used to work before this place [i.e., before Al-Khatib]. Maybe he [Raslan] was living in the same place where P49's family was living. Maybe Raslan used to see his father in the street in front of P49's family house. P49 does not think that it was a personal relationship.

Böcker asked P49 how he knows Raslan's previous working place. P49 said no, it was not his working place. P49 thinks that Raslan was living close to P49's family and used to see his father by coincidence [they used to bump into each other] and would greet him. That was what P49 understood from Raslan. All of this is from Raslan [Raslan told P49 that].

Böcker said that this could be problematic for P49 or Bahns. Böcker recalled that P49 said that that he read a Facebook post by Raslan explaining that he had to detain P49. Böcker said that when he hears that, he would think that Raslan had to detain other people as well ["had to" in the sense of he "had no choice but to"]. P49 clarified that he would say, what was posted on Facebook, as far as he remembers, was saying that Raslan had to detain P49 due to information that the head of the branch received, saying that P49 was at home. He also said that P49's name was already on the wanted list for detention and that he [Raslan] was trying all the time to not detain P49.

Böcker indicated that P49 mentioned the name [REDACTED] [AS] and that it was mentioned in the post [on Facebook] that AS was the one who tried to not detain P49. Böcker asked if P49 was sure that Raslan was the one who said that. P49 said that AS is Anwar's [Raslan's] assistant who came to P49's house to detain him. P49 does not think that AS had the authority to detain him on his own, while Anwar Raslan could stop [the order of] his detention.

Böcker recalled that P49 said that Raslan wrote that Facebook post, while in fact, AS was the one who did that. P49 said that as far as he remembers, there was an apology from Raslan on the internet regarding P49, saying that he had to detain him but did not want to. P49 is not sure, but it could be a misunderstanding and, therefore, AS was the one who said that on the internet.

Böcker recalled that AS said that he had orders to detain P49. Böcker wondered if he [AS] had indirect contact with the head of the branch. Böcker asked P49 if it could be possible that the head of the branch was the one who ordered P49's detention.

Böcker said that P49 did not mention the name Tawfiq Younes in the police questioning, but "today" he referred to the head of the branch as Tawfiq Younes. Böcker asked if P49 knew Tawfiq Younes. P49 said that that became several questions.

Böcker asked if P49 met Younes before or after his detention. P49 said that regarding Younes, P49 met him only once at that time [during his detention and before his release].

Böcker asked if Younes shook P49's hand and greeted him. P49 said his feeling was that Younes was forced to greet P49 and that P49 surprised him [that he initiated the greeting] which Younes did not expect.

Böcker recalled that Younes was disappointed and was expecting an apology from P49. Böcker asked why Younes was disappointed. P49 said he thinks that Younes wanted “that” and to see P49 devastated during the scene of P49’s release... [P49 was interrupted by Böcker].

Böcker interrupted, “but that did not happen.” P49 replied, unfortunately.

Böcker asked what Younes was expecting. P49 said that Younes was expecting P49 to kneel on the floor, cry, say “Sorry,” and apologize to his father. He [Younes] wanted P49 to say that he was a fool and that the people fooled P49 into going to the condolence gathering and turning it into a demonstration.

Böcker asked how the interaction between Raslan and “the person who P49 was 90% sure was Younes” was and how long they stayed in the room. P49 said he does not think that Raslan was with them in the room. He only escorted P49 to the room. That is what P49 recalls: Raslan escorted him and then left. Maybe “we” [P49 and Raslan] met again when “we” [P49 and his father] were going downstairs [when they were released], but P49 does not remember.

Böcker asked if it was correct that P49 said that Raslan wanted to show him that the demonstrators were scum. Böcker asked P49 why Raslan said that and whether P49 perceived that meaning due to the surrounding circumstances. P49 said no, he [Raslan] said that and that was the point of view of the whole regime. Raslan said that “these are uneducated, poor [money-wise], and are ready to do anything and sabotage the country for money”. He mentioned many such examples and then brought the young man who mentioned the bananas and said that this guy agreed to demonstrate for bananas.

Böcker asked if the bananas person was injured. P49 said no, he had no wounds, but it was apparent that his psyche was shattered [devastated]. He acted too inferior [There was confusion interpreting the phrase. P49 meant that the person was acting as if he was worthless and saying “I am a fool and good for nothing, I deserve this” etc.].

Böcker recalled that P49 said in the police questioning regarding that person that he appeared as if he had been detained there for a long time. He could have been detained because he was armed. Then P49’s blindfold was removed to see him. Bahns said that the quotation was wrong.

Böcker asked P49 how Raslan reacted when P49 said that he did not agree to the violence of the regime. Böcker asked if P49 said during the interrogation with Raslan that there was violence from the regime side. P49 asked Böcker if his question was whether P49 asked Raslan if there was violence from the regime.

Böcker said no. He was asking whether P49 said that, not whether he asked that. P49 said if he remembers well, P49 told him [Raslan] that there was violence that was happening.

Böcker asked what Raslan’s response was. P49 said he thinks that his [Raslan’s] answer was that no, there was no violence, no torture.

Böcker asked if P49 got the impression that this was Raslan’s opinion or whether he [Raslan] was lying. It was apparent to Böcker that Raslan said that, but he wanted to know if P49 felt that Raslan was serious. P49 said he cannot judge, but he does not think that he [Raslan] was serious with his answer.

Böcker recalled that P49 said in the police questioning that Raslan brought a person into the interrogation who was detained because he participated in armed activities against the regime, and yet, he was not tortured. Böcker asked P49 if that was the bananas person.

P49 said no, maybe he [Raslan] brought in the armed person and P49 thought that he was the bananas person because it was [stuck] in his head. The armed person said that he shot at the police and was not tortured. P49 thinks that the person who was brought in was the person who fired [the armed shooting person].

Böcker asked P49 if the bananas person was brought in as well and if there were two people. P49 said the banana story exists, but maybe P49 put the bananas [story] on the armed one.

Böcker asked what about "the blindfold was removed at that point". P49 said this is what he is not recalling. It could have happened at the end of the first [session] or the second one when he was released.

Böcker asked if the removal of the blindfold coincided with bringing in the armed person. P49 said it [He may have meant "the blindfold," because he used the feminine "it" and the word used for blindfold is feminine in Arabic] has something to do with the matter, but maybe that young man was brought in the second time. "Let me say [phrase] it like this:" in the first interrogation session, P49 grabbed the chair without seeing; then, later during that session or in the second session, the blindfold was removed, and he [Raslan] showed P49 the person who fired/shot [at the police]. P49 does not remember if it was at the end of the first session or in the second one.

Böcker asked if Raslan received a phone call during the second session informing him that P49's father arrived. P49 said this happened during the second session, upstairs.

Böcker asked if Raslan received the phone call in the interrogation room or his office upstairs. P49 said no, when P49 went upstairs with Raslan, he received a phone call or [maybe] someone came in [the office] and told him [Raslan] that P49's father was there, and as a result, "we" [P49 and Raslan] went to the floor upstairs [to the upper floor, above Raslan's office to Younes's office].

Böcker said, "which is the office of the person who you are 90% sure is Tawfiq Younes." P49 confirmed.

Böcker summarized that P49 went one floor up, then another floor up. Böcker asked on which floor the blindfold was removed. P49 said that the blindfold was removed when he was downstairs, in the basement.

Böcker asked P49 about what his father and Younes spoke about in that room. P49 said that they called his father after three days of not knowing P49's whereabouts (P49's father called many people to ask where he was). P49's father did not know who called him but the person said that his son, [REDACTED], is in Al-Khatib. P49's father told them that he did not know where the branch was and that he cannot drive. He asked them if someone could come and take him. They sent a car and brought him [P49's father] to the branch.

Böcker asked how P49 knew about that. P49 said through his father.

Keber noted that the judges needed a break and asked Böcker how much time he still needed. Bahns suggested that because it was the day most were traveling home, maybe if there were not so many questions, then they can finish the session before the lunch break. Böcker said that he needed around 15 minutes. Only Reiger and Oehmichen had questions. Kerber said if it is only 15 minutes, then the proceedings would be resumed.

Böcker asked P49 if his father shared with him why he was brought to the branch. P49 said "they" told him "Come to take your son."

Böcker recalled that P49 said that there was a good interrogator and a bad one. Böcker asked if there is a relation between the interrogator being good and his rank(ing). P49 said of course there was a relation between them, because Raslan had a higher rank than the one who interrogated P49. That person's military rank was inferior to Raslan's.

Böcker asked P49 how he knew that. P49 said he [the second interrogator] did not have an office. It [the interrogation] was conducted in the hall. P49 could know that he [the second interrogator] had a lower rank.

Böcker asked if P49 got the impression that the good and the bad interrogators were working as one team, and how he would describe the relationship between them. P49 said it was like the idea of the carrot and the stick.

Böcker recalled that in the police questioning P49 said that one could tell from Raslan's voice that he was serious and he was not violent. Bahns said that Böcker should read the context as well because the witness would not know it.

Böcker repeated that when P49 was talking with Raslan during the interrogation, he felt that Raslan was serious and not violent. P49 asked if [the question was that] Anwar [Raslan] was serious and not violent.

Böcker said yes, "was he?". P49 said that he did not understand. [The interpreter explained to P49 the question]. P49 explained that by saying that he [Raslan] was not playing around/having fun, and "was not violent", he meant that there was no beating or insults. However, the whole situation was violent. P49 was in an Intelligence Services branch, someone was being beaten [the interpreter clarified that the word, literally translated as "killed" means "beaten" in colloquial Arabic] and then P49 went to the interrogation. [P49 was not beaten, but he meant that he was in the cell hearing sounds of beating and torturing others, then he was called for an interrogation].

Böcker emphasized that P49 meant that the situation was violent, but not Raslan. Böcker recalled that P49 said that Raslan introduced himself to P49, and asked if that was correct. P49 asked "where?".

Böcker recalled that P49 claimed that Raslan told P49 that he knows his father and his work and values his father when they [Raslan and P49] were in the main office. P49 said he does not remember, maybe it was during the second time.

Böcker asked if, during the second interrogation on December 10, 2011, P49 was blindfolded. P49 asked if Böcker meant during his interrogation by Anwar [Raslan] or by the other interrogator.

Böcker said by Raslan during the second interrogation. P49 said it was not an interrogation, it was a release. P49 was brought to him [to Raslan] and he said "remove the blindfold."

Böcker recalled that P49 said during the police questioning that Raslan asked the staff member why he put the blindfold [on P49]. P49 said Raslan said "remove the blindfold," but not to him [Raslan was addressing the guard].

Böcker recalled that P49 said that Hafez's picture was not ordinary. Böcker asked what was different about it and if there was a picture of Bashar as well. P49 said he does not remember, but he recalls that it was not a typical one. It was big. And certainly, there was a picture of Bashar. It is impossible that there was not.

Böcker said that his question was whether P49 recalls that there was a picture of Bashar, or if it was P49's logical conclusion. P49 said he does not remember. He recalls a big picture of Hafez, but automatically one knows that there was a picture of Bashar. "If it [Bashar's picture] is in the bakery, it is definitely at the Intelligence Services."

Böcker said that the situation "here" in Germany is different. Böcker recalled that P49 described that Raslan's office was nice and had a big picture of Hafez Al-Assad. According to Böcker, P49 said "There had to be a picture of Bashar." P49 asked what the question was.

Böcker said that P49 did not recall whether there was a picture of Bashar Al-Assad in the office. P49 said it was natural. It is impossible that there was no picture of Bashar. It is something official.

Böcker said that when P49 said "There had to be a picture of Bashar," Böcker concludes that P49 did not know if there was a picture of Bashar in the office. P49 asked [the interpreter] whether Böcker meant whether P49 said that, or if it was Böcker's conclusion. P49 said what stole his attention (with Hafez's picture) was the talk that Hafez was the intelligent, powerful, wise leader. P49 had the feeling that Anwar [Raslan] liked Hafez more than Bashar. The big picture of Hafez with Anwar's [Raslan's] idea was what made P49 think like that. [P49 addressed the interpreter] His [Böcker's] conclusion is wrong.

Böcker asked what Raslan said about Hafez Al-Assad. P49 said he does not remember. Maybe he [Raslan] told P49 that this picture was...[P49 paused]. P49 said he does not remember.

Böcker refreshed P49's recollection quoting the police questioning transcript, "[A] great man whose death was a great loss of the nation." P49 said yes, he thinks it was like that.

Böcker recalled that in the police question P49 said, "On the other hand, I know what it means to be at the Intelligence Services." Böcker asked P49 what he meant by that. P49 said it meant to him several things. One was that he [Raslan] made a decision to work at the Intelligence Services in Syria, and thus, he does not have a problem with torturing people because of... [P49 did not complete the sentence] P49 said he does not know what his [Raslan's] convictions are and whether they [the detainees] were guilty or not. It was a notion that he agrees on. Secondly, Raslan agrees to do very dangerous work that could lead to his death, and he agrees on that. Since he knows that, he has to bear the consequences.

Böcker asked if P49 knows since when Raslan was working at the Intelligence Services. P49 said he does not know, nor does he know him [Raslan] in person. P49 just knows that it was for a long time.

Böcker asked what a "long time" means in Arabic. "Does it mean since 2011?" P49 said no, before that, because he [Raslan] told P49 about his father. Maybe he was at the Intelligence Services in the 1990s at a different branch.

Böcker asked P49 if he would say that Raslan defected because he was against violence. P49 said he cannot say why he [Raslan] defected. That is a big question.

Böcker asked P49 what he would think of the reason, knowing that Raslan worked there since the 1990s. P49 said that to him working with the regime is for preserving/maintaining the regime, and it has nothing to do with patriotism. He [Raslan] might have thought of patriotic reasons, like defending the homeland. P49 said he does not know why one would work at the Intelligence Services.

Oehmichen said that she wanted to quote something from the police questioning: “Torturing is hard/difficult. I was tortured when I was a child by the police. If you decide to work there, then you know what is happening there. When I speak about Raslan, I cannot say that he is not good, but also cannot say that he did not commit crimes.” P49 said yes, he thinks that he said that. The translation/interpretation was not accurate at some points [during the police questioning]. P49 had to endure torture all the time when he was a child, and most of his friends had the same situation with the police for no reason. P49 said that he however did not understand [what Oehmichen wanted to ask]... [P49 was interrupted]. Oehmichen said that she just wanted to know if P49 said that. She then thanked him.

Reiger said that the accused said in his statement on May 18, 2020 “The detainee [REDACTED] was a demonstrator and knew that I have sympathy with detainees.” P49 said he cannot say that, as he only knows what happened with him. There is a lot of hearsay and P49 cannot confirm this.

Reiger asked if P49 got the impression that Raslan had sympathy with demonstrators. P49 asked if Reiger meant “during the interrogation.”

Reiger said yes. P49 said no, he did not believe anything during the interrogation, because he thought it was all [a lie/show].

Böcker asked how P49 knew that Raslan did not have sympathy with demonstrators. P49 said he did not say that Raslan did not have sympathy, but rather P49 said that he does not know if he [Raslan] had sympathy.

Böcker recalled that P49 said that he did not believe anything at all. Böcker asked P49 if that means that Raslan was not serious. P49 said he did not say that Raslan was not serious. He said that Raslan was serious but not violent. P49 felt that “we all were lying to each other.”

[The witness was dismissed at 12:50 PM]

Kerber announced that Inspector Knappmann will be invited to a future session.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:53 PM.

The next session will be on September 8, 2021, at 9:30 AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 46

Hearing Dates: September 8 & 9, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Day 92 – September 8, 2021

P50, a 45-year-old Syrian doctor [REDACTED] testified about his detention at Al-Khatib Branch where he was beaten. He told the court that the mental trauma caused by detention was more severe than the physical trauma. As a doctor, he also treated former detainees. P50 explained to the Court that detention could completely change a person's personality to the point where one becomes suicidal or violent towards their own family. He also elaborated on the social exclusion suffered by female detainees.

The Presiding Judge then read the judges' decision to reject the defense's request to summon an allegedly former guard at Al-Khatib Branch as a witness.

Three Plaintiff Counsels submitted a statement regarding the Prosecutors' statement about the counsels' previous notice to include enforced disappearances as crimes against humanity to the charges.

Day 93 – September 9, 2021

Criminal Chief Inspector Knappmann from the BKA testified about the questioning of a witness who did not want to testify in court in Koblenz. The witness was questioned twice by the French police before he was questioned by the BKA. Nonetheless, the witness told the BKA that he would not be willing to participate in judicial proceedings or in the trial in Germany. He also declined the Court's summons.

P51, a Syrian doctor, was allowed to disguise his face and conceal his personal information. P51 worked at the Red Crescent Hospital opposite of Al-Khatib Branch. He told the court about visits he and his colleagues made to the Branch where they saw detainees who were in bad physical condition. However, the doctors were not allowed to provide medication or treatment, other than stitching wounds or applying bandages to severe injuries. P51 further said that the hospital was used exclusively by the Branch because other patients were hindered from entering it. Also, detainees were transferred to the hospital as patients without correct medical files, and the mortuary was overcrowded solely with corpses from the Branch.

A Plaintiff Counsel submitted a statement regarding the request to add enforced disappearances to the charges. P50, who was admitted as plaintiff, also provided a short statement on the matter, detailing his and his family's experiences with detention and missing relatives.

The Defense submitted requests to hear three additional witnesses to provide information about the accuracy of previous witness testimonies, as well as Raslan's actual competences and character.

Trial Day 92 – September 8, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:35AM with eight spectators and one journalist in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Defense Counsels and Plaintiff Counsels were present as usual.

P50 was accompanied by Dr. Oehmichen. Presiding Judge Kerber noted that P50 was not summoned by the Court but called by Dr. Oehmichen who also submitted a request on P50's behalf for him to join the trial as a plaintiff and for Dr. Oehmichen to be admitted as his witness counsel. There were no statements on Dr. Oehmichen's request to be admitted as P50's witness counsel. Presiding Judge Kerber decided that Dr. Oehmichen would be admitted as P50's witness counsel for the duration of his testimony on this trial day since he was not able to exercise his rights without counsel.

Testimony of P50

Presiding Judge Kerber said that the Court would hear P50 to comply with its duty of judicial enquiry. P50, a 45-year-old Syrian doctor was informed of his rights and duties as a witness. He is unrelated to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber explained the Court already knew from Dr. Oehmichen that P50 came into conflict with the Syrian regime and was arrested. Kerber asked P50 to describe how he came into conflict with the regime and the timeframe of his detention. P50 said he would first like to thank the court and everyone involved in making this trial happen. He said when "we" started the revolution in Syria, their aim was to establish a state governed by the rule of law so that every accused had the right to remain silent, speak, "and things like that." The court "here" would therefore be important. P50 went on to explain his own story.

P50 had a medical practice near Damascus. One day, his parents received a call from a person who said he was sick. This way, the person got P50's mobile phone number. He eventually contacted P50 who gave him an appointment. P50 said when this person – a relatively small man with a round face – came to his office, he started telling P50 his story. After a few minutes, the man received a call and asked P50 whether it was okay to answer. P50 allowed him to answer. P50 told the court that, as a doctor, he has to be sensitive of the wishes of his patients. However, this time his sensitivity might have been a mistake. P50 went on to describe how the man told the caller that he would be done in thirty minutes and be "there." Five minutes later, several men dressed in civilian clothes rang the bell at P50's office. P50 opened the door and they entered. They immediately arrested P50 and put a gun to his neck. P50 said that he called for his sister who was at the office as well, but she did not hear him. He was then taken downstairs where a big car was waiting. P50's shirt was pulled over his head and he had to sit in the middle seat, with people left and right of him. They then drove for around ten minutes. P50 did not know where. He told the Court that he could not provide exact timeframes because he was in shock. He was then taken inside the premises, the location of which he did not know at the time.

P50 remembered that he had to take a few steps downstairs. On the left side was "some kind of lobby" where he was frisked. P50 said he had to undress, but he was not sure whether he also had to take off his underpants on this occasion or whether that happened another time.

His personal items were taken away and he was allowed to put on his clothes again. He was then taken to a community cell where dozens of people were already detained. He had to stay there for around fifteen minutes before he was taken to a different cell. P50 said he could not remember the number of the cell, but assumes it was No. 1. There was already another person in the cell from Douma. P50 said this person had many injuries on his face and his head and was wearing a bandage around his head. This person stayed in the cell for two days before he was taken somewhere else.

P50 went on to explain that he could not provide an exact time for when interrogations started. He could neither say whether it was day or night, nor on which floor the interrogation took place. P50 said “they” wanted information about his activities but at the beginning, he denied everything. He was then told to lay on his stomach on the floor and put his feet up. He was then beaten on his feet using an item before he was taken back to his cell. P50 said he was then taken again. “They” wanted to have information about P50 and confronted him with information about his colleagues. He was told that, if he did not confirm, he would be punished. P50 described how, one time, he was told “I will beat you twenty times and if I can hear your voice, I will increase the number of beatings.” P50 said this sort of interrogation was repeated around ten times. One time, he was beaten while he was standing. P50 was not sure whether he was beaten with hands or kicked, but the person who did that was standing opposite of him. P50 further explained that he was confronted by three people: P50 was standing in a room and [another detainee] was on the floor. P50 told the Court that he was always blindfolded. Whenever the [other detainee] said something, he was beaten.

Kerber wanted to know who exactly was beaten when the other detainee said something the interrogator did not like. P50 said the other detainee was beaten. He added that this person came to the prison after P50. According to P50, the intention was to confront this person with P50’s statements.

Kerber asked how P50 knew that the other detainees came to the Branch after him. P50 said he did not exactly know when [this person arrived]. However, when P50 arrived, this person was not there. P50 therefore concluded that he either came at the same time or after P50. In any event, P50 was there before this man. P50 added that he met “them” after they were released, and “they” told P50 that they were arrested later than him.

Kerber thanked P50 and told him to continue. P50 went on to describe that another detainee was kneeling in the room. He had to endure the same procedure: he was asked questions and beaten. P50 said he could not remember where the third person was, but he was probably standing opposite of P50. P50 added that he assumes he was in cell No. 1 for five days before he was taken to another cell. He told the court that the [cell] was “L” shaped. P50 was first detained at cell No. 1. His new cell was to the right of his old cell. He spent 25 days in the new cell. P50 added that nearby the second cell there was a TV in the corner and a room where the guards took a rest. [P50 described the layout of the area with his hands on the table in front of him.] He added that he was first in cell No. 1, then taken to the right where there was a hallway, and eventually taken to cell No. 2.

Kerber asked P50 to draw a sketch of the area. [P50 was given a sheet of paper and a pen.]

Kerber asked whether P50 was talking about a solitary cell or a communal cell when he referred to cell No.2. The interpreter explained that P50 was talking about a cell “Zinzana [زنزلة]” and not a solitary cell “Monfarida [مفردة]”.

Kerber said she would like to show P50’s sketch on the screens in court and visually inspect it.

[The following is a recreation of the sketch drawn by P50 based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear and see in Court.]

P50 explained that cell No. 1 was where he stayed for a couple of days. Cell No. 2 was where he stayed for 25 days and the TV and room for the guards was in the corner. The toilet at the bottom of his drawing was the toilet he used when he was detained in cell No. 1. P50 said he assumes that there was a community cell further down (to P50's sketch, not in terms of floors, as clarified in Judge Kerber's request.) P50 said there was a hallway leading to cell No.2 which he marked with an "X" in his sketch. When he was in this cell, he had to use the toilet in the middle. P50 said this was all he could remember.

Judge Wiedner asked if cell No. 1 was a solitary cell. P50 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know how big the cell was approximately. P50 said it was 2 meters long, 2 meters high, and 1 meter wide. They had two blankets.

Wiedner asked what kind of cell was cell No. 2. and how big it was approximately. P50 said all cells were around the same size.

Wiedner concluded that it was a solitary cell as well. P50 said it had the same size [as the first cell].

Wiedner asked if the TV and the guards' room was outside close to the cells and how P50 noticed that. P50 said one could hear the guards and there was a small window through which one could see what happened outside the cell. Whenever the guards were not there, one could look through this window and communicate with other detainees in the opposite cell.

Wiedner wanted to know if P50 was detained in a community cell during his detention at this prison, other than the one cell where he was detained with one other person. P50 said that in this prison – he later learned that it was Al-Khatib Branch – he was detained in a community cell together with other detainees for the first fifteen minutes. The remaining forty days, he was detained in a different kind of cell.

Judge Kerber asked if any of the parties had questions regarding the sketch.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked whether the labeling of the cells as No. 1 and No. 2 was P50's own way of counting or if there were numbers at the cells. P50 said he assumes that there were numbers and that people were called by the number of the cells, like 1 and 2. However, P50 was not sure about the numbers; it could also be the case that he labeled them in this way because he was first in cell No. 1 and then No. 2.

Judge Wiedner recalled P50 saying that he could not exactly remember the interrogations and was not able to see. Wiedner wanted to know if P50 remembered whether the interrogations took place in the same area where the cells were or if he was taken somewhere else, maybe upstairs. P50 said he assumes – but would not be sure – that it was the same building. He could not remember whether there were stairs. P50 added that he was in shock and could therefore not remember. One was blindfolded and focused on the questions, nothing else.

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying he might have missed something: P50 said he was in the first cell for five days and then 25 days in another cell, but then said he was detained for forty days in total. Böcker asked for how long P50 was detained and whether he could show the cells again on the sketch. P50 explained that he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch for forty days in total: five days in cell No. 1, 25 days in the cell “at the top” [of his sketch] and around ten days at a cell on the left.

Judge Kerber asked P50 to continue providing an overview, asking him what happened next after P50 was interrogated. P50 said the subjects of the interrogations were sometimes a bit strange: he was asked about his age and, when he said he was 36-years old, he was asked whether during his 36 years he was attacked by someone from the police, intelligence services, or government. When P50 said no, he was asked about the reasons for the revolution. [The interpreter had to think for a bit before he translated the following sentence. The accuracy of the translation was confirmed by the other interpreters] P50 was told that the fact that the State would not have harmed anyone should be a favor. P50 told the Court that this would show the different way of thinking of the regime and the people demanding freedom, democracy and the establishment of a state governed by the rule of law. It would not be enough to simply not harm the people.

According to P50, this would explain a lot of what happened in Syria: the revolution was started because of this mentality, and the people would not stop until they reached their goal. P50 said there would be another statement [by the interrogator at the Branch] which would indicate the difference in mentality. He explained to the court that there is a line in the Quran that reads “in hell are 19”. The number “19” was used to compare the room where P50 was detained and hell. Nineteen angels were tasked with punishing the criminals.

Judge Kerber noted that P50 also used the term “Kuffar” which was not translated and asked P50 whether he was also referring to disbelievers. P50 affirmed.

P50 went on to explain that the interrogator who made the reference to the Quran referred to the intelligence services when talking about the “19”. According to P50, this reference was an attack on the civil population and all mankind.

P50 told the court that he studied human medicine, was an active member of the student association, organized events, and partook in extracurricular activities. He wanted to help students continue their studies abroad, particularly in the US. The interrogators asked P50 about these issues but, according to P50, these activities happened eleven years before that interrogation. The interrogator wanted to know why P50 helped students to travel to the US and called him a traitor because he encouraged students to go abroad. P50 told the court that, funnily enough, Bashar Al-Assad was allowed to study abroad and even marry a woman with UK citizenship. Yet, other students were not allowed to study abroad. P50 wanted to provide these examples to show the mentality of the regime.

Kerber asked P50 what happened next, saying that if she was not mistaken, P50 was detained somewhere else as well. P50 said he would first describe what happened at [Branch 251].

Kerber said P50 could for now skip the details about what happened in detention and rather describe the general detention conditions, how the cell was, and how he was treated. Regarding food, P50 explained that sometimes the food was good and sometimes it was not. He lost 20kgs, so his trousers did not fit anymore and he had to tie them. The interrogator once told P50 that the weight loss was the best thing that could possibly happen to P50. However, as P50 told the court, the actual suffering was psychological when he was in the solitary cell. P50 described how he got the idea to cause trouble just to get out of the solitary cell and be punished. He just wanted to feel alive. P50 also thought about committing suicide if [his detention continued] because he did not know what would happen next and how things would end. P50 said he was “taken” on September [REDACTED] when he was wearing a t-shirt and a shirt. After one month, it got colder, and he asked for additional and different clothes. He even suggested to [the guards] that they could take the money he had with him at his arrest and use it to buy clothes. The guards denied.

Judge Wiedner asked whether P50 meant that he was arrested on September [REDACTED] when he said he “was taken”. P50 confirmed. Wiedner asked about the year. P50 said it was in 2011. He added that he told the interrogation officer that he needed a lot of water and he was given water.

Kerber said the judges would now ask some questions. She first wanted to know what P50 was able to hear from his cell. P50 said that someone was beaten, and he was able to hear that. P50 described that when he was in cell No. 1, there was another room from where one could go outside. Whenever someone was to be punished but the guards did not want to take him to the interrogation room, this person was punished in this other room. P50 could hear that.

Kerber asked if P50 was also able to hear street noise, the call for prayer, or pedestrians. P50 said he could not hear those sounds while at Al-Khatib Branch.

Kerber wanted to know what P50 was able to see inside his cell, whether there was light, and if so, where it came from. P50 explained that there was more light in the outer cells than in the inner cells. He could not remember whether there was light inside his cell, but he assumed that light from the hallway was shining into his cell. According to P50, the inner cells were darker. He further described that there was a small window measuring 30x50cm. This window was sometimes open, sometimes it was closed. There was also a gap between the door and the floor which was around 5cm. Light was shining through this gap as well.

Kerber asked if the door was wooden or made of iron. P50 said it was iron.....

Kerber wanted to ask a question but noticed that P50 was about to say something and asked him to go on. P50 explained that, at the end, he had to leave his fingerprint on papers he did not read. There were two investigating officers who conducted P50’s interrogation. P50 said he noticed that there were two voices. One time “this” person came toward P50 when P50 was not blindfolded. P50 said the person stood a bit behind him and did not want P50 to see him. However, P50 was able to see the person and recognized him as the person who was at his practice.

Kerber wanted to know what happened after P50 had to sign the papers. P50 said there was information that he could leave the Branch. It was right before Eid al-Adha. P50 assumed that he would be released and able to celebrate with his family. P50 described that [the detainees] were rounded-up and transported. Instead of being released, they were transferred directly to state security where they were frisked and interrogated. P50 said that he had to hand in all his clothes except for his underpants.

There was an investigator who called one person after the other and made accusations against them. No matter the answer, one was beaten and ridiculed. P50 said he and the other detainees were all accused of the same thing and all of them were beaten. When it was P50's turn, the investigator received a notice from his boss to stop beating people and take them to their cells. P50 said this was the reason why he was not beaten. P50 told the Court that all this happened around Eid al-Adha. His hands were tied behind his back and he had to stay there for 24 hours. P50 said these were the worst hours of his life, he could still feel the pain in his shoulder when remembering this time.

P50 added that he was able to hear the call for prayers so he could estimate the time. The detainees' hands were untied whenever they got food. P50 recalled that there was a child, a boy, in the same cell. His hands were not only tied, but his body was put in chains. P50 said he himself had to stay in this cell for 24 hours before the detainees were dispersed to different cells and fifty new detainees arrived.

There was a toilet inside the [new cell] and one could only sleep if laying on the side or the back. It was very tight. P50 was taken for interrogation from this cell once or twice. He was not beaten during interrogation. P50 said he and his fellow inmates had to stay there for fifteen days before it was decided that they would be released. However, the release was delayed due to a shift change. Some detainees were released, but P50 and some others were not. They were therefore transferred to another cell where they had to stay for two days. P50 explained that his release was initially scheduled for Thursday. He then had to stay on Friday as well because it was a holiday. He was eventually released on Saturday.

P50 told the court that he was taken to a military court where he had the chance to buy sandwiches and eat. It was of course a different and better place than "the hell" where he was before. He was then taken to a military prison where he also had to take off all his clothes. P50 said it was a strange situation because, before that, he could not look in a mirror. He did not know how he looked; he only knew how his "colleagues" looked. There was a very small mirror inside the military prison. P50 said it was very strange because when he looked in the mirror and saw his reflection, he did not recognize himself. He had to stay at this prison for one day before he was taken to a regular court at the Palace of Justice.

P50 said that, at the court, he "of course" denied everything and told the judges that all his statements and confessions were made under torture. P50 explained that his journey did not end in this court. He was transferred to Adra, a well-known prison for dangerous criminals, drug dealers, etc. For P50 and his fellow detainees, however, it was a dream to go there to escape the hell they had been in before. P50 said he only had to spent one day at Adra Prison in "investigative custody" before he was transferred to a normal prison where he had to stay for fifteen days. It was a normal prison where one could file requests to see his charges in writing. P50 said one time during his detention at this prison, someone from "security" was there to get information from P50. P50 was then released after fifteen days. On the day of his release, P50 got one stamp [on his hand]. He told the court that if one got two stamps on his hand, he would be transferred to another prison, but P50 got one stamp and was released. He stayed in Syria for five more days. When he got the information that he might be arrested again, he decided to sleep at different places. With the help of his relatives, he found out whether his name was on one of the lists at the border. On December [REDACTED] 2011, P50 went to Jordan.

Kerber thanked P50, saying she had one more question before the break. She asked P50 how he knew that he was first detained at Al-Khatib Branch and then at the General Intelligence Service. Regarding Al-Khatib, P50 explained that "the guys" [fellow detainees] knew it was Al-Khatib, but P50 did not know how they knew.

Kerber asked who P50 was referring to when talking about “the guys”. P50 said he meant his fellow detainees.

Kerber asked how P50 was able to communicate with them since he told the court that he was detained in a solitary cell. P50 explained that when the detainees were certain that there was no guard around, they communicated with each other in other cells. The cells on the left side were all in one row. The window in the door of the cell was relatively big and if one looked to the side, he was able to see the entire hallway. If [a guard] came, they gave each other signals.

Kerber asked if there were community cells as well. P50 said the cell where he was for the first 15 minutes was a community cell.

Kerber concluded that community cells existed. She went on to ask P50 how he knew that the second prison he was detained at belonged to the General Intelligence Service. P50 said he could not remember, but it was clear to him and his fellow detainees. P50 added that he knew everyone there, around fifty people, and everyone had small pieces of information.

Since there were no urgent questions, Judge Kerber announced a 15-minute break.

Judge Kerber handed out copies of P50’s sketch to the parties.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked P50 about the general conditions at “this Branch” [Al-Khatib], recalling that P50 was mainly detained in a solitary cell but that there was one injured person with him in the first solitary cell. He asked P50 to tell the court where this person came from and where he got his injuries from. P50 said he could not remember exactly what this person told him, whether he was injured during detention or before.

Wiedner recalled P50 telling the Court about the light in the cells and asked him if he was able to tell day from night and, if so, how he was able to do that. P50 said he thinks he was not able to tell day from night in the first cell where he was for thirty days. He assumed that, in the winter, rain got into the third cell at which he was detained. Based on the meals they got and the fact that they got food twice per day, P50 was able to guess the time.

Wiedner asked where the rain was coming into the cell. P50 said he could not remember whether it was the hallway or the toilet. The memories were a bit blurred and he could not remember exactly.

Wiedner asked if P50 could use the toilet whenever he wanted. P50 said no, detainees could use the toilet one after the other, twice per day. There were set times to use the toilet.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the general hygiene situation at the Branch, whether P50 was able to shower, and if the cells were clean or dirty. P50 said there was no possibility for him to wash for forty days. He did not wash. However, he could not say if they were allowed to or not. On his last day there, a guard asked P50 why he smelled so bad and why he did not shower. P50 replied that he was not sure whether there was a bathroom. The guard told P50 that if he wanted to shower, he would have been allowed to do so. P50 replied that since he would be released anyway, he preferred to shower at home. P50 concluded that he did not shower at Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner asked if the scene that P50 just describe happened at Al-Khatib. P50 affirmed, explaining it happened after forty days.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the general condition in the cells and whether it was dirty or clean. P50 said it was very dirty. There were blankets on the floor, but that was everything. P50 did not see dead insects or things like that. Regarding the tidiness, P50 added that it was not a priority for him.

Wiedner asked approximately how many times was P50 interrogated at the first branch. P50 said it was a maximum of ten times. Interrogations happened more frequently during the first couple of days. After that, it happened less and less. When there was new information or when new detainees arrived at the Branch...

Wiedner asked if P50 was always blindfolded on his way to the interrogations and during the interrogations. P50 confirmed, explaining that from the moment he was taken from his cell until he came back, he had to wear blindfolds.

Wiedner asked if P50 was beaten on the way [to interrogations]. P50 said he could not remember.

Wiedner recalled that since P50 was blindfolded during interrogations he could not see much or was unable to see anything happening around him. He asked P50 if he could tell from the voices how many people were present. P50 said he did not have this opportunity. He only noticed once that the investigating officer was talking to another person. It was an important conversation. P50 therefore remembered that there was a second person. Other than that, he had no idea.

Wiedner wanted to know if P50 could tell from that conversation whether the people were subordinate to each other and if orders were given. P50 said there were no orders. It was a conversation to prepare questions.

Wiedner asked if there were orders to beat P50 and if he was beaten by another person other than the interrogator. P50 said as far as he remembered the same person who "investigated" also beat him. He could not remember if someone said to stop or intensify the beating. When he was slapped, the person who slapped him stood right in front of him.

Wiedner wanted to know if P50 was mistreated in different ways as well, other than being beaten and kicked. P50 said there were threats against his family.

Wiedner asked what was said. P50 explained that the threats were general. [The authorities] were willing to get his family [to the branch] as well, and similar phrases. P50 could not remember other forms of physical mistreatment.

Regarding consequences and signs of torture, Wiedner asked P50 whether he was able to walk when his feet were injured and if there were any other consequences of mistreatment. P50 explained that after he was beaten on his feet, they were swollen and he was unable to walk. After he was beaten on his feet, he was told to walk it off so they would not swell. However, P50 did not believe that and thought the intention was to increase his pain. He then heard from others that it would have been good to walk it off. P50 added that his big toe was swollen when he was released, but it went away after two months.

Wiener wanted to know if other detainees told P50 how and if they were mistreated. P50 said he heard from another detainee who talked about a third person who had a boot put in his mouth and received electric shocks.

Wiedner asked if P50 saw other detainees injured apart from the one person who he saw in the solitary cell. P50 recalled that at State Security when he was transferred, he saw a person who was severely beaten on his feet. In the cell, P50 was able to see the person's swollen feet. One could also hear people being tortured.

Wiedner concluded that this happened at P50's second place of detention, the State Security Branch. P50 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what P50 noticed at the Branch that he identified as Al-Khatib. P50 did not notice anything there. He added that there was another person with him in the last cell for seven days. The person was from Harasta and was taken for interrogation and tortured as he told P50. The employees [at the Branch] took him to a place where he was hiding weapons. That was the reason he was tortured multiple times.

Wiedner asked what exactly happened to this person. P50 said he did not know exactly, but he thinks the person was beaten and tortured for several days, then eventually confessed. [Judges Wiedner and Kerber had a short conversation.] P50 recalled that once when he spoke to the detainees in the cell opposite to his, someone came and took a detainee, beat him, and brought him back.

Wiedner wanted to know if P50 experienced sexual violence or knew of others who were subjected to sexual violence. P50 could not remember whether he noticed something like that in detention. However, during his work he was also working with victims of torture, in particular those who were released from prison and women who had been detained. P50 therefore had a lot of information about [sexual violence]. But it did not happen to him while in detention.

Wiedner asked what P50 heard about such things through his work. P50 explained that only a few women spoke about being raped. There was once information about women being raped. P50 said he wanted to explain to the court what far reaching consequences rape has on Syrian society: A woman was in a car with her husband, neighbor, and her son. They were all arrested at a checkpoint and held there for two hours. The husband and the neighbor were separated from the woman. They were all released eventually. The woman was a patient of P50. She was very depressed, suicidal, and thought about killing her own child. Her husband asked her if [the men who arrested the family at the checkpoint] did anything to her. She denied, but her husband was not convinced. Because he was with their neighbor and separated from his wife, he did not believe her. P50 said the woman did not tell him that anything was done to her, but he sent her to a specialist. He later learned from his [female] colleague that the woman apparently had been raped. P50 told the Court he just wanted to illustrate that this woman was willing to kill herself and her child simply because she was asked if she was raped.

Wiedner said he wanted to come back to P50's own experiences, asking him whether he saw dead people at the first branch where he was detained. P50 said no.

Wiedner asked if P50 was able to see someone during his interrogation who he would be able to recognize. P50 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P50 remembered having seen the defendant [Anwar Raslan] on one of these occasions. P50 said no, adding that he would be able to recognize someone based on his voice.

Wiedner said he wanted to get a quick overview of the time during which P50 was detained, asking whether it was correct that he was arrested on September [REDACTED] 2011. P50 confirmed. Wiedner asked if it was correct that P50 then stayed at the first branch for forty days. P50 confirmed. Wiedner wanted to know if it was correct that P50 was transferred shortly before Eid al-Adha. P50 confirmed. Wiedner said that according to the judges' online research Eid al-Adha was from November 6 to 10, 2011. He asked P50 if that timeframe was correct in terms of his detention periods.

P50 confirmed again. Wiedner recalled that P50 was then transferred to the General Intelligence Service of the State Security Branch after fifteen days. P50 confirmed. Wiedner went on to recall that P50 was then at the military court and in detention there for one more day. P50 confirmed. Wiedner concluded that at the end of his entire detention period, P50 was at Adra Prison for around two weeks. P50 confirmed, adding it was fifteen days, maybe a bit less. Wiedner wanted to know when P50 was eventually released. P50 said it was on December [REDACTED] 2011.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Klinge said the prosecutors only had a few questions, starting with a question about how long the interrogations approximately lasted. P50 said they took one to two hours each time.

Klinge asked P50 whether he could say how many times he was approximately beaten during interrogations. P50 said as far as he could remember, he was beaten at almost every interrogation. At each interrogation, he was supposed to provide information. However, the interrogators already had the information, so P50 could not deny. If the interrogators did not like P50's answer, he was punished.

Klinge asked if P50 was beaten intermittently or without interruptions. P50 said he could remember one time where he received twenty beatings in a row.

Klinge wanted to know if P50 noticed female detainees at Al-Khatib Branch. P50 said he could not remember.

Klinge further recalled that P50 was detained in a solitary cell almost for the entire duration of his detention at Al-Khatib Branch. He asked P50 if he had any explanation for why he was in solitary confinement and not in a community cell. P50 said they probably assumed that he was playing a big role in the events in Syria. At his transfers, most detainees in the group were doctors as well. P50 said they would usually select one person who would then be the advocate of the group. However, there were orders from the top that no one was allowed to talk to P50's group. P50 said he would clarify: the order was that no one should talk to this group. P50 therefore assumed that his group was playing an important role for "them" [security forces]. P50 tried to understand why he was taken to a solitary cell. His guess was that "they" wanted to prevent P50 and his group from getting information from other detainees or passing information to them. P50 explained that there was one thought: There were so-called coordination points. Whenever groups within a city existed, they organized themselves on Facebook in so-called coordination points. If someone was a member of such a point, he was considered to be as dangerous as a person carrying a weapon. The regime considered these people to be more dangerous than those carrying a weapon. P50 told the court about one of his friends who participated in peaceful demonstrations and who was against carrying weapons. He was executed in detention. According to P50, detained jihadists were released at the beginning of the revolution.

Klinge wanted to know if P50's family members got any information about his whereabouts from authorities. P50 said no, his family thought he was somewhere else.

Klinge asked if P50's family made inquiries about him. P50 said his sister told him that the family tried to make inquiries about his whereabouts. His sister was the one who took the call from the person who pretended to be sick and came to P50's practice. His sister tried to call this number and berated the person. [P50 giggled when recounting the story.]

Klinge asked whether P50 knew if his relatives tried to get information from other places as well. P50 explained that every branch was in charge of a certain area. The Air Force Intelligence was in charge of [REDACTED]. Al-Khatib was in charge of [REDACTED]. His family therefore assumed that he was with the Air Force Intelligence since his practice was in [REDACTED].

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker recalled that P50's practice was in the suburbs of Damascus, and asked him whether it was north or south of Damascus. He asked P50 to tell him where exactly it was, ideally providing an address. P50 said his practice was in [REDACTED] in the [REDACTED] neighborhood.

Böcker said he needed to process this information and see whether he can localize the area [on a map]. P50 said that he was talking about 2011. The entire town was destroyed by now.

Kerber wanted to know whether Defense Counsel Fratzky had any questions while Böcker was looking something up, adding that [REDACTED] of Damascus. Fratzky said no and Böcker said no one had to wait for him; he needed to do some research and others could ask questions.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

P50's counsel Dr. Oehmichen said she only had one question. Since P50 used to work as a doctor, she asked him whether he could explain what the worst consequences of detention for people in Syria were. P50 explained that as a doctor he worked with detainees and people who were tortured. Most people focused on the physical consequences but there were psychological consequences as well, and they were deeper than the physical torture. He recalled the woman he mentioned earlier, who was detained for two hours. According to P50, this was a good example to illustrate that women are suffering worse consequences than men. P50 said that men [who were detained] would be considered heroes by society. However, some women who had been released were killed by their families. Other women were disowned by their husbands and relatives.

Kerber asked P50 whether he needed a break. P50 said no, adding that when women leave detention, they live in hell. They suffered from posttraumatic stress disorder and depression. Some things could not be diagnosed by people who had no expertise, only by experts. Torture and detention have such severe impacts that they could even cause people's personalities to change. P50 explained that when people were detained, they acquired certain personality traits. Due to torture in detention, these people would be completely different persons when they were released. When husbands, wives, and children wanted to greet their loved ones, they were met by a person who was entirely different than before. These people were even able to attack their families. P50 added that these consequences might not be directly visible to the families and have an impact on several generations.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Böcker recalled P50 being transferred to a detention facility from his practice in [REDACTED]. He asked P50 whether he went to Al-Khatib Branch without any stops along the way. P50 affirmed.

P50 was dismissed as a witness. P50 thanked the court and his counsel Dr. Oehmichen noted that P50 wanted to say something.

Judge Kerber said if it would not be too extensive, she would allow P50 to go on. P50 said he had one point that was very important to him. Judge Kerber asked whether this would be a declaration or a witness testimony. After a short consultation, P50's counsel said P50 would make a declaration. Kerber allowed P50 to continue. P50 said "this event" left its mark on him, which would be one of the reasons for his testimony in court. The detention had a severe physical and mental impact on him. According to P50, a psychologist called Frankl who was detained at a concentration camp for three years during the Holocaust made significant contributions to the treatment of detention survivors, in particular logotherapy. P50 said his presence and testimony in court would therefore be logotherapy for him and others who experienced similar things.

He added that he hopes people who worked for the intelligence services and the government learn the difference between information gained at a peaceful place and information extorted from people with torture. P50 said he wanted to thank the Court and hopes that the trial will be a lesson and people would no longer be tortured in prisons. P50 thanked the Court in German. Kerber thanked P50 in Arabic.

Administrative Matters

Regarding P50's request to join the trial as a plaintiff, the prosecutors said they were not opposed. The other parties did not provide statements on the matter.

Kerber said she would now read out a decision by the judges that was a bit longer and a statement by Plaintiff Counsels would be read out as well. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said it would take around twenty minutes to read his and his colleagues' statement.

Kerber announced a 10-minute break.

[The following is a recreation of the judges' decision, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Decision regarding the requests by counsels Böcker and Fratzky dated August 19, 2021.

The request to summon [REDACTED] was denied.

- 1) The request was referring to a witness currently residing in Turkey. He is a former Sergeant Major who worked as a guard in the same Branch as Anwar Raslan. He is supposed to testify that the Syrian Republican Guard, the 4th Division and 'Hafez Makhoulf's people' had power at Al-Khatib Branch. Further, employees of Division 40 conducted interrogations on a daily basis and sent reports via Hafez Makhoulf to the head of the Branch [Al-Khatib]. The witness is also supposed to have information on the power of Division 40. The witness is supposed to testify about the opposing attitude of Anwar Raslan in the situation back then. According to the request, the witness could also testify how powerless Anwar Raslan was compared to Hafez Makhoulf and Division 40. The request summarizes that the Accused did not have any authority and organizational power over the horrible incidents at Al-Khatib Branch. He rather tried to help. Once he ensured that his family was safe, he defected. Neither torture nor fatal casualties could be attributed to the Accused.
- 2) The formulation of the request is unclear.
  - a. The evidence taken so far indicates that the Accused himself worked at Branches 285 and 251 of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate for a long time. The request states that Branch 251 belonged to Division 40 and Branches 251 and 285 were both situated at the headquarters of the Intelligence Directorate. However, the evidence taken so far indicates that Branch 251 was located in Al-Khatib neighborhood, Branch 285 in Kafar Souseh and Division 40 in Jisr al-Abyad. The request states that the witness worked 'at the same Branch' as the Accused. It is therefore unclear whether he worked at Branch 251, 285 or Division 40. The timeframe is also unclear, and it is not clear whether the witness and the Accused met or had a personal relationship.

- b. Despite the unidentified power position and the lack of a concrete timeframe, it is also unclear whether the witness was at Al-Khatib. The alleged workplace was located close to the headquarters of the intelligence directorate. Al-Khatib Branch would therefore not be applicable.
  - c. The request further states that 'officers of Division 40 conducted interrogations'. However, it does not provide the location where these interrogations allegedly happened. The witness could therefore only testify about interrogations in general. The timeframe is also unclear.
- 3) Regardless of the lacking connectivity in accordance with § 244 (3) s.1 StPO, the Court must also consider the evidentiary value of a judicial enquiry into a witness who is summoned from abroad, in light of the timely and organizational efforts, in accordance with § 244 (5) s. 2 StPO.
- 4) Summons of the witness from abroad are not required for judicial enquiry.
  - a. The evidentiary value of the witness is not significant.
    - i. The witness could have been a guard at Branch 285 or his period of service could not be congruent with the indictment period in this trial. It is further not clear if the witness could provide information on Branch 251 if he was an employee of Division 40. Regarding the interrogations conducted by Division 40 about which the witness is supposed to testify: many witnesses already testified that this Division arrested people, interrogated and mistreated people at their premises, and transferred them to other Branches. Since the Accused was the head of the Interrogation Division, he can only be held liable for acts committed there. The evidentiary value of the witness is therefore low.
    - ii. Even if one considers the present request in conjunction with an earlier request according to which the witness apparently worked at Branch 251 during the indictment period, it is unlikely that the witness will provide details on his work there. The value of new insights is therefore low. Regarding Branch 251, so far almost all witnesses described the premises as a rather wide area with at least two buildings and a prison in the basement. The prison guards were mainly moving around in the basement where the cells were located, or they took prisoners to interrogations. The present request leaves open how the witness is supposed to say something about interrogation officers, powers at the Branch, reports, or the factual powers of the Accused. It is therefore not expected that the witness can provide any ascertainable perceptions. He cannot testify about administrative procedures in which he was not involved. The claim that certain units exercised 'power' at Al-Khatib Branch is unclear itself. The request states that the Syrian Republican Guard, the 4th Division and 'Hafez Makhoul's officers', which the court identifies as Division 40, exercised power over the Branch. However, based on the information provided by Ms. Thurmman, The German Federal Foreign Intelligence Service (BND), and several experts, the Republican Guard and the 4th Division were not part of the intelligence services. The request also does not specify how this 'power' was apparent to the witness.
The request makes unclear evidentiary claims and taking this evidence [hearing the witness] would not contribute to factual elucidation, particularly not in regard to the alleged coming into power. There are rather mere conclusions instead of factual claims. The exact ways of cooperation remain unclear, [...]. The evidentiary value of the witness's testimony is therefore not visible.

- iii. So far there have been no indications for the claims made in the request. According to Thurmann, the Republican Guard and the 4th Division were particularly close to the top of the regime and in charge of protecting the President. A collaboration between these units and Branch 251 of the General Intelligence Directorate only happened regarding military quelling of demonstrations, arrests, and transports of detainees. Neither Thurmann, nor Engels, Al-Bunni, Darwish or the BND indicated a connection between Branch 251 and other people regarding detentions, except for arrests which were conducted by other divisions as well. The result so far is that Division 40 acted as part of Branch 251 to a certain extent. What Division 40 actually did was to arrest critics of the regime, alleged critics, and others and keep them for a while as well as to conduct a first interrogation. All witnesses who were arrested like that were then transferred to Al-Khatib Branch. The court does not know of any witnesses who were interrogated at Al-Khatib by the same person who interrogated them at Division 40. P21, who worked at Branch 251 until 1989, described Hafez Makhoulf as a dominant figure due to his family relationship with Al-Assad. However, he did not detail how this was actually apparent, nor did he describe actual interrogations by Division 40 at Branch 251. He rather described that he saw Hafez Makhoulf as the factual head of the General Intelligence Service. Others like Engels, Al-Bunni, and Darwish stated that Division 40 supported Branch 251 and that they had shared local competences. They all said Makhoulf was very brutal. Engels added that Hafez Makhoulf unauthorizedly communicated with other intelligence services. [...] It is unlikely that the witness will describe anything else than Hafez Makhoulf acting arbitrarily to a certain extent.
- b. According to the German Federal Prosecutor General Office, it is very likely that the witness will be prosecuted for crimes against humanity (§7 (1) VStGB). The Judges also consider that based on findings so far regarding Branch 251 and Division 40, as well as detentions there including torture, detention condition, and the role of guards, as well as the position of the witness, there is a suspicion of crimes against humanity and a prosecution seems likely. According to the Federal Prosecutor General Office, due to the witness' connection to the events at Al-Khatib, he must foresee the possibility of an extradition request. If summoned, a request for legal assistance in accordance with Art. 12 EU Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters [controlled deliveries in cases of extraditable offences] was to be issued in connection with Art. 1 and 3 EU Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters. The witness would need to be extensively informed about his rights, in particular §55 StPO, and about the possibility that any statements can be used against him in proceedings against himself. The witness would further need counsel. It is therefore unlikely that the witness will testify. Rather, he will make use of his right to remain silent.
- c. The witness is currently in Turkey, which is a non-EU country. Legal assistance therefore has to be formally requested in accordance with the EU Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance and its Additional Protocol. The legal process is eased under Art. 4 of the Additional Protocol and the agreement between Germany and Turkey. Such a request must be handed to the Turkish Ministry of Justice by the German Embassy in Turkey. Upon oral request, the German Embassy told the Judges that such a request usually takes four to six months to be addressed, if they would be addressed at all. There are further uncertainties surrounding the witness' travel documents and a visa application must be examined first.

Visas are only issued for refugees for a permanent stay. The Federal Prosecutor General Office confirmed that legal assistance requests with Turkey usually take a lot of time and the exact duration is not foreseeable. The Office provided examples where such a request took twelve to fourteen months to be addressed by Turkish authorities and another one that has not been addressed since 2019. If the Judges counted September 1, 2021 as the date of issuance of a legal assistance request with Turkey, they would have to calculate at least six months until the witness would arrive in Germany, however, delays could lead to eight months duration and the success of the request is uncertain. Based on the current proceedings in court, the taking of evidence will be concluded by the end of September 2021, and summons and hearing of the requested witness would cause a significant prolongation of the trial.

- d. An overall assessment finds that summons of the witness are not required to determine the truth. The witness will most likely not agree to make any statements. If he does provide information, he will not provide additional information since it is not apparent how the witness obtained the knowledge. The required organizational and temporal efforts are not required.
- 5) An attempt to have an audio-visual questioning of the witness is demanded in light of temporal and other efforts. However, the value of the testimony would be significantly limited due to the witness not being present in court and the Judges being unable to observe his reactions.

[The following is a summary of the Plaintiff Counsels' statement based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Statement by Plaintiff Counsels Bahns, Dr. Kroker and Scharmer regarding the Prosecutors' statement dated August 19, 2021.

Contrary to the Prosecutors' perception, the legal notice to include enforced disappearance to the indictment should be made.

In sum, the prosecutors are of the opinion that an intention to place persons outside the protection of the law as part of the systematic attack against the civil population could not be proven and that several elements of the crime would not be provable in case of the Accused, Anwar Raslan.

1) Protection of the Law

No one could reasonably doubt that at least since the beginning of the revolution, there was the intention to remove people's legal protections. As the prosecutors admitted 'information was collected as well'. However, this was not the main goal and placing people outside the protection of the law was not simply a side effect or some kind of collateral damage. Such a view is absurd to those affected. The Prosecutors' elaborations on this matter further show a is also legally incomprehensible definition of intent relating to §7 (1) VStGB.

- a. All witnesses testified that they would have done anything when tortured just to prevent further torture: they were willing to provide false information and sign false confessions. The conclusion of the prosecutors that the release of detainees was connected to them providing information, was not confirmed by any witness. They rather said the intelligence services tried to disguise their fate and whereabouts.

Witnesses P20, P21 and P16 said that. It was also confirmed by the UN Commission of Inquiry. Mazen Darwish, Anwar Al-Bunni, Christopher Engels, Garance Le Caisne said that as well. In addition, Anwar Al-Bunni and Mazen Darwish told the court that a system of torture was already applied in Syria before 2011.

However, the aim, quality and occurrence significantly changed after the revolution. Torture was used systematically to intimidate society, not to gain information. It was enabled by enforced disappearances. This change of paradigm is also visible from a CCMC document dated April 20, 2011.

Those who were not fortunate enough to be released are still in detention, missing, or dead. This aspect is well documented by international organizations and NGOs. [Two COI reports from March 11, 2021, and 2013 were cited.]

- b. Contrary to what the prosecutors think, the fact that torture and unlawful detention was used to also obtain information is no contradiction to the intent to remove the disappeared person from the protection of the law. In addition, jurisprudence from the German Federal Court of Justice does not require that the relevant crime be the final goal of the perpetrator, but that he also acted with dolus directus, if the crime was only his interim goal. There can be no serious doubt that the Syrian Government and, acting on behalf of it, the Accused also wanted to terrorize civil society.*
- c. Precautionary to any doubts by the judges, the Plaintiff Counsels request to summon and hear Fadel Abdul Ghany and Mariam Al-Hallak [the plaintiff counsels detailed how these witnesses can testify about enforced disappearances in Syria based on personal experiences and professional work in specialized NGOs].*

2) Apparent Elements of the Crime

There are several interpretations of other relevant elements of the crime admissible regarding § 7(1) No. 7 VStGB. Nonetheless, the requested legal notice to include enforced disappearances as crime against humanity to the indictment must be issued.

a. Lack of immediately providing truthful information on whereabouts

The prosecutors were of the opinion that because the relatives of P17's brother were given false information about his fate by employees of military hospitals and not by the Accused personally, this element of the crime would not be fulfilled. However, the prosecutors misconceive that in accordance with international standards, enforced disappearances are regularly committed by more than one perpetrator as stated in fn. 23 of Art. 7 \(1\) \(i\) Elements of Crimes. The Accused acting as the one depriving people of their rights merely has to be from the same state institution as the person providing false information. In addition, the prosecutors did not acknowledge the fact that P18 and P17 were first given false information about the death of P17's brother by employees of Branch 251 regarding his alleged natural death (others provided different information about the death of P17's brother). This would already fulfil the element of the crime, since the Accused in his leading position had authority over employees of Branch 251 and was responsible for their actions. In addition, Anwar Raslan did not immediately provide truthful information about the whereabouts of P17's brother. He instead told the family that they should just take a corpse and not cause any trouble. He only gave hints that P17's brother died, however, he did not provide any concrete truthful information. Until today, no corpse was handed over to the family and the cause of death remains unclear. It is also entirely unclear what happened to P17's brother as could be seen when P17 directly addressed Anwar Raslan in court asking him to provide information about his brother.

This element of the crime must be interpreted in accordance with international law. Art. 24 CED stipulates the right of each person to be provided information about the whereabouts of missing persons and obliges states to immediately and entirely investigate disappearances. The information provided by the Accused about P17's brother cannot be considered immediate and truthful information. The Plaintiff Counsels also referred to the [Burundi Decision of the Pre-Trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court.]

- b. The Prosecutors are of the opinion that only explicit requests are captured by § 7 (1) No. 7 VStGB, however, this falls behind the ICC Statute, which was supposed to be the blueprint for this norm. The wording of the VStGB norm only requires an inquiry without specifying who needs to address who and in what way. It is also not required that the inquiry be directed to the perpetrator of deprivation of liberty or a direct colleague. An official enquiry is neither requested. It is self-explanatory that an official written request would obviously be unsuccessful, and the requirement of such is ignorant of the threats posed by the government on people living in Syria. Such a requirement would further avoid the protection aspect of the norm. [The Plaintiff Counsels again referred to the ICC PTC Decision.] Regarding the element of the crime of inquiries, the wording and purpose of the norm provide that any inquiry without immediate response is sufficient. This is fulfilled in the present case. P46 also described that his family approached different Branches but was always placated at the gate.
- c. Immediacy as an element of the crime
[The Plaintiff Counsels elaborated on different ways to determine an adequate timeframe that qualifies as 'immediate' for the purpose of informing families of arrested people. They argued that one must provide not only one period of time but also a point in time from which something is considered not immediate. In doing so, the Counsels referred to ICC Jurisprudence.] Immediate means without any culpable hesitation, meaning that there are no obvious reasons for letting someone wait. The Counsels referred to a [decision from the UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances saying that the first 24 to 48 hours of a disappearance are particularly crucial to prevent the risk of torture and killing.] According to Arts. 25 + 59 of the German Constitution, German law must be interpreted in an international law friendly manner. Therefore, letting someone wait [for information] for more than 24 hours in cases of arrest and detention qualifies as sufficient element of the crime. The Court heard from witnesses whose families did not hear about their whereabouts for more than three days. The timeframe of 24 to 48 hours was therefore considerably exceeded. It is also attributable to Anwar Raslan.

As a result, it is found that the elements of the crime of § 7 (1) No. 7 VStGB are fulfilled and the legal notice [to include enforced disappearances as crimes against humanity to the indictment] must be granted.

Prosecutor Klinge said he and his colleague would not make a follow-up statement.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen said she wanted to reserve the right to make a statement at a later point.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he wanted to stay out of this rather academic debate.

Presiding Judge Kerber distributed digital copies of the case file to the parties and announced that the BKA confirmed to the Judges that the family of the witness summoned for the following day would be in danger. The witness will therefore be anonymized.

The proceedings were adjourned at 1:17PM.

Trial Day 93 – September 9, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:37AM with fourteen spectators and one journalist in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. All Plaintiff Counsels were present. P50, who testified as a witness the day before, was given a headset to follow simultaneous Arabic interpretation, sitting next to his counsel Dr. Oehmichen.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked when the anonymous witness would testify in Court. Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the witness will testify at 11AM, after CCI Knappmann testified on his questioning of witnesses [REDACTED] and [REDACTED].

Testimony of Mr. Knappmann

Criminal Chief Inspector Christian Knappmann was informed about his rights and duties as a witness and denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that two witnesses declined to testify in court. She said that Knappmann who lead the police questionings of these two witnesses was therefore summoned to testify about these questionings. She asked him to first tell the court about his questioning of [FR19]. Knappmann explained that FR19 was questioned by the BKA in Toulouse, France. FR19 told the French authorities that he was detained at Division 40 and Branch 251, and was a witness and victim of severe violence. The German Federal Prosecutor General's Office (GBA) therefore told the Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) to hear the witness as part of the present case. Knappmann and his colleague then questioned the witness on [REDACTED] in Toulouse [the date was confirmed upon Judge Wiedner's request].

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, asking for the relevant code in the case file since he had not yet opened the relevant transcript. Judge Kerber provided the reference number and added that Knappmann's description of this particular questioning would be short. Knappmann went on to explain that the witness was questioned on the premises of the French Police in Toulouse. The BKA officers explained to FR19 why he would be questioned as a witness and informed him about his rights and duties. FR19 then told Knappmann and his colleague that he does not want his testimony to become public and prefers to hide his identity. Knappmann told the Court that FR19 already testified with the French Police before that and there were no indications that he preferred to stay anonymous. Knappmann and his colleague therefore informed FR19 that his first questioning would already be part of the German case file which is also accessible to the Defense Team and the Accused. They also explained that in case of a trial, FR19 would have to testify in a public court. According to Knappmann, FR19 was very irritated and concerned by this information. He hid his face in his hands and thought about what he just heard. FR19 then said he was unaware that things have already developed so far. Knappmann told the Court that he and his colleague decided to give FR19 a break. During the break, they tried to explain to FR19 what his testimony would mean for the German proceedings and that he would have to repeat everything in court. Knappmann also informed the GBA about the recent developments and called Prosecutor Klinge during this break. FR19 resigned, saying it was all pointless and that he worried about the safety of his family members in Syria. Knappmann told FR19 that they could not take that fear away from him, but that they would not want him or his family to be in danger. Knappmann left it to FR19 to decide how he wanted to proceed. FR19 said that it would already be too late anyway. When Knappmann asked him whether he was sure that he wanted to continue, FR19 said no. Knappmann therefore called Klinge again and explained everything to FR19 once more. FR19 then confirmed that he did not want to testify with the BKA.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner recalled that FR19 precisely articulated his concerns, according to the BKA's transcript: the case [against Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib] caused a lot of attention, also with the Syrian Regime. If FR19's testimony would be read out in Court, he would fear that there would be spies in the public audience collecting information about FR19. He also mentioned something about defected members of the [Syrian] Intelligence Services. Knappmann recalled that FR19 told the BKA that members of the Intelligence Services would never defect. Instead, they would continue their work and collect statements against the Syrian Regime and FR19 would therefore be considered a terrorist.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber asked Knappmann to tell the court about his questioning of [GER19]. Knappmann explained that GER19 was questioned in Berlin on [REDACTED]. He was made known to the BKA through ECCHR and he was accompanied by his counsel and legal representative Dr. Kroker. The BKA already knew what GER19 told the Belgian police and wanted to ask more precise questions. GER19 first provided extensive information about himself, saying that he was an activist who was detained by the [Syrian] Intelligence Services several times. At the very beginning [of the revolution] on March 15, 2011, he was arrested at a demonstration in Damascus and detained at Al-Khatib Branch and Kafar Souseh (Branch 285). He spent six days at Al-Khatib Branch and forty-one days at Kafar Souseh before he was released on the street. Knappmann told the Court that GER19 provided a lot of information about himself before the BKA presented him a photo array.

GER19 immediately identified Anwar Raslan in the second picture and mentioned the name Anwar Raslan. When asked about how he knew the name, GER19 explained that he was arrested by the General Intelligence Directorate on March 15, 2011 and Anwar Raslan was present at his interrogation. GER19 did not know this person back then, but when Anwar Raslan was arrested, his picture was shown on the internet and when GER19 saw it he was shocked and recognized the person. Knappmann explained that GER19 then described the course of his interrogation: he was interrogated by an interrogation officer on March [REDACTED] 2011, along with other employees of Branch 251 present as well. There were two guards, one on the left and one on the right of GER19. According to Knappmann, GER19 identified one of the guards as Mohammad Abdallah see day 12, [TR4]. Two more people were sitting on a sofa on the left of GER19. One of them was Anwar Raslan and the other one was unknown to GER19. The interrogation lasted thirty to forty minutes. GER19 had to look at pictures and videos of demonstrations and identify people. He was therefore not blindfolded. GER19 further told Knappmann that he was constantly beaten by the guards. The guard he identified as Mohammad Abdallah was in charge of the beatings and arbitrarily hit him at every answer and without any apparent reason. GER19 said he was beaten with a black stick with a five or six centimeter caliber. He was beaten on his back, head and face and subjected to Falaqa. When Knappmann asked GER19 whether orders to beat him were given, GER 19 said no and added that there were orders to pause the beating when he had to look at the screen [to identify people in pictures and videos]. Knappmann then asked Ger19 to describe the people in the interrogation room. GER19 mentioned the name Anwar Raslan and the name of one of the two guards. He also explained that the two people sitting on the sofa, Anwar Raslan and another man, were higher ranking because, the day before, when GER19 saw the interrogation officer, the guard did not salute. However, the guard did salute Anwar Raslan and the second person on the sofa. The people on the sofa were wearing suits, the interrogation officer a shirt, and the guards were wearing jeans.

Kerber asked if GER19 was able to identify the dialect of the people at the interrogation. Knappmann told the court that according to GER19, the interrogation officer came from the coastal region and was an Alawite. GER19 said that one would notice this different dialect easily.

However, he was not sure about Anwar Raslan. GER19 told Knappmann that Raslan spoke the Damascene dialect, but one could notice that he was not originally from Damascus. The second man on the sofa was from Sweida. GER19 assumed he was Ishmaelite but was not sure.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Wiedner wanted to know if GER19 remembered where he was interrogated. Knappmann affirmed, saying that GER19 described that he was interrogated in the basement of Branch 251. Knappmann added that GER19 mentioned the number 254 to identify the Branch but said that he was taken to Al-Khatib Branch. He was interrogated in a rather big room which was 20 to 25 square meters wide. To the left of the desk was a double-sofa.

Wiedner asked about the relationship between the two people on the sofa, if there was a supervisor-subordinate relationship. Knappmann said GER19 could not provide information on this matter. He was only able to tell that these two people were higher ranking than the interrogation officer, because the guards saluted them but not to the interrogation officer on the previous day, and due to their clothes. GER19 was unable to make assumptions about the relationship of the people on the sofa based on their conversations.

Wiedner recalled GER19 identifying Anwar Raslan and detailing his slang. Wiedner asked Knappmann whether Raslan was directly talking to GER19. Knappmann said when he asked GER19 about that, he explained that the interrogation officer was sitting opposite of him, behind a desk. The two people on the sofa made comments from time to time and insulted GER19, calling him a son of a bitch and a liar. One time someone from the sofa said "I'll show you how to answer properly" but GER19 was not able to identify who said that. Anwar Raslan directly addressed GER19 and asked him why he was unable to identify people in the videos although he was at the demonstration. GER19 further added that all people in the room were constantly present during the interrogation.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript of GER19's questioning according to which GER19 said that the employees constantly spoke with each other and said comments like "liar" and "son of a bitch". "I'll teach you how to answer properly" was said from the sofa. The beating then got more intense. Knappmann confirmed.

Wiedner recalled that Knappmann already told the Court how Raslan directly addressed GER19 when he asked him how it could be possible that he was unable to identify people in the videos although he was present at the demonstration. Wiedner confirmed that it was also transcribed like that, asking Knappmann whether he remembered what GER19 told him about his reply. Knappmann said he was not sure if it was at this occasion or another time when GER19 told the interrogator that he did not participate in the demonstration and was only there by chance.

Wiedner confirmed that the transcript says the same. He went on to ask Knappmann what GER19 mentioned regarding his position and reason for arrest. Knappmann asked Wiedner to prompt him. Wiedner said the reason GER19 was arrested was related to his engagement during the beginning of the Arab Spring. Knappmann explained that GER19 was an activist involved in the preparation of demonstrations. GER19 told Knappmann that the reason for his activities was the Arab Spring in Egypt. This was when Syrian society started thinking about its own fate. Society changes and they were ready for a change. According to GER19, a hitch moved the entire society and people started organizing themselves on Facebook, gathering, and organizing demonstrations.

Wiedner concluded that GER19 was not a mere participant of the demonstrations but one of the organizers. Knappmann said this is what he remembered. GER19 was among the last six people at this demonstration and stayed until the end.

Wiedner wanted to know what GER19 told Knappmann about how he knew that he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. Knappmann explained that GER19 was able to tell where he was detained for two reasons. First, during interrogations at Kafar Souseh Branch, he told the interrogators the same information that he told the interrogators at Al-Khatib Branch. GER19 therefore concluded that he was first detained at Al-Khatib Branch. Second, after his release he was told to pick up his ID card at Al-Khatib Branch. When he went there, he was indeed able to pick it up.

Wiedner recalled that when GER19 identified Anwar Raslan in a photo array he reacted [immediately] and mentioned the situation in the basement. Wiedner asked Knappmann what exactly GER19 said in this regard. Knappmann explained that GER19 was not blindfolded, however, he could not look around and was only allowed to look at the screen. Otherwise, he would have been beaten. When Knappmann asked GER19 how he was able to recognize Anwar Raslan, he said that he could take a look around, but was beaten. He further added that he was very good at memorizing peoples' faces and was therefore able to recognize Anwar Raslan in a picture.

Wiedner asked if GER19 saw Raslan again. Knappmann said no, GER19 saw a picture of Anwar Raslan when he was arrested in Germany.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript of the questioning according to which GER19 detailed that he was not allowed to turn toward the sofa. However, he had a glimpse at the people there and since he has a good memory of faces, he could remember them. He did not see them again but when Raslan was arrested he saw his picture on the internet and immediately recognized him and was shocked. Knappmann confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what else GER19 said about Al-Khatib Branch. Knappmann explained to the Court that he asked GER19 to chronologically describe his arrest and detention: GER19 was arrested by security forces at a demonstration. He was then taken to a hotel where all six of them (two women and four men) were beaten and experienced other violence. They were then taken to Al-Khatib Branch by car. When they arrived, ten to fifteen members of the security forces mistreated them for five to ten minutes. They were beaten amongst others with a threaded bolt and a car's toothed belt. Knappmann added this would be the usual welcome party. GER19 said there were male detainees at Al-Khatib Branch, but he did not know about women. He and other detainees were taken downstairs to the basement where they had to stand in line, facing a wall. They were immediately taken to interrogation, one after the other. GER19 was the last one. While he was waiting, he could hear the screams of his fellow detainees. He was then taken to a room where he had to lie down and someone stepped on his face. He was asked questions and asked why he participated in the demonstration. GER19 said he was severely beaten and hit on his head at the beginning, so he went unconscious. When he woke up, he was in solitary cell No. 16. He was interrogated again on the same day. This time it was about his family and he was tortured with Falaqa. GER19 said he could not remember how many times he was beaten because at some point one could not feel anything anymore. He was bleeding and lost a molar.

Wiedner asked Knappmann about an incident with water that happened after the interrogation. Knappmann said GER19 was dowsed with cold water.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the interrogation officer. Knappmann said GER19 was always interrogated by the same person. It was also the same person when Anwar Raslan was present, as well as the interrogations after that. Knappmann detailed that the interrogation with Anwar Raslan was on the second day of GER19's detention. On the third day, he was told to sign blank sheets of paper. When he refused, he was taken to a torture room and tortured.

Knappmann said he could not remember exactly, but he thinks that the interrogation officer was not present in the torture room. There was only a guard.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript according to which GER19 explained that he was not again interrogated by Anwar Raslan. GER19 had to sign blank papers with the letterhead of the General Intelligence Directorate on it. When he refused, he was taken to a torture room where he was subjected to Falaqa and beaten with hard items. He was wearing blindfolds. There was no interrogation officer, just a guard. Wiedner asked Knappmann what happened next. Knappmann explained that GER19 was called in for a conversation by the interrogation officer. GER19 was confronted with his alleged testimony. When he said that this was not the truth, he was beaten again.

Wiedner asked if GER19 had to give his fingerprint before this conversation. Knappmann confirmed.

Wiedner asked Knappmann what else he could remember from GER19's questioning. Knappmann said torture decreased from the third day onward while the number of detainees increased. GER19 assumed that there was simply not enough time to torture everyone as intensely as they did the first three days. GER19 further heard screams of other detainees, amongst them children and women. He recognized four people. GER19 wanted to be released, have cigarettes and eat good food. He asked to be transferred. On the fifth day, he was taken to the community cell and was not tortured. On the sixth day, four people were chained together and taken to Kafar Souseh Branch. According to GER19 Kafar Souseh was significantly worse. When asked about his physical condition [at Al-Khatib Branch], GER19 described that his back was hurting a lot, he had many enflamed wounds, a headache, and his feet were bleeding due to Falaqa. However, GER19 added that "this" was nothing compared to Kafar Souseh.

Wiedner asked if GER19 mentioned inflammation in his mouth. Knappmann affirmed.

Wiedner asked how GER19 got this inflammation, if it was related to his tooth. Knappmann affirmed, saying that GER19 told him that he lost his molar after the second interrogation and the wound got inflamed.

Wiedner asked about medical care. Knappmann said GER19 got pills twice: two on the fifth day and one on the sixth day.

Wiedner wanted to know about the medical care for other detainees. Knappmann explained that GER19 was in solitary confinement for the first five days but he could hear screams. When he was in the community cell, he could see signs of torture on other detainees, as well as open fractures. GER19 said one could see that people were tortured.

Wiedner recalled that GER19 witnessed black eyes, broken arms, swollen feet and other injuries, but considered this to be nothing in comparison to Kafar Souseh. Knappmann confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if GER19 saw dead people. Knappmann said when he asked GER19 about that, he said no.

Wiedner asked if GER19's relatives were given any information about him. Knappmann explained that nothing happened in this regard. Regarding dead people, he added that GER19 told him about an incident at Kafar Souseh: when GER19 was tortured in the hallway, he tried to defend himself by kicking. He accidentally kicked a person lying on the floor. One of the guards said this person would be left there to die.

Wiedner asked about the general situation of GER19's questioning by the BKA: how GER19 was able to communicate with the interpreter, what impression Knappmann had of GER19, how he behaved, whether he was hesitant or open. Knappmann said that as usual, they checked whether GER19 and the interpreter were able to communicate. Everything was fine in this regard.

Wiedner asked if the transcript was re-translated for GER19. Knappmann confirmed.

Wiedner asked if GER19 signed the transcript. Knappmann said it would be standard procedure that everything would be re-translated for the witnesses, and they then had to sign every page. Relevant edits would be made by hand and also signed by the witnesses.

Wiedner again wanted to talk about the situation in the basement involving Anwar Raslan on a sofa and guards saluting him. Knappmann explained that the guards who tortured GER19 were also the ones who picked him up at his cell. When they entered the room with the two men sitting on the sofa, they stomped on the floor and saluted. However, GER19 did not see them doing that when they met the interrogation officer on the previous day.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Klinge asked Knappmann for his impression of GER19. He wanted to know if GER19 was calm and credible or if there was a certain eagerness to incriminate [Raslan]. Knappmann said GER19 was very motivated to provide information about his activities as an activist and personal information on his studies in [REDACTED], where he also wanted to obtain a PhD. He was enthusiastic and happy about the weather in Berlin. Overall, GER19 was high-spirited. His English was very good, such that Knappmann was able to chat with him during the breaks. GER19 was not stressed at all. He was not excited, but saw a purpose to testifying and wanted to help detect a crime.

Klinge asked if the recognition of Anwar Raslan by GER19 was credible. Knappmann said he had no doubt about it during the questioning. When asked about the recognition, GER19 was completely convinced that he recognized the face and seemed truly shocked. He stuck to this story throughout. He was not stressed but convinced and never made any additions [to his story]. Knappmann concluded that he saw no reason to doubt GER19's identification of Anwar Raslan.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker asked if GER19 provided concrete information as to where exactly he was beaten. Knappmann said GER19 did so in parts. At the first interrogation, GER19 was beaten in his face and elsewhere. GER19 was not able to recall every hit, but described the arbitrariness of the beating.

Böcker said he was referring to the interrogation with Anwar Raslan. Knappmann explained that the guard who GER19 identified as Mohammad hit him on his back with a black stick and used his bare hands to beat GER19 on his head and face. GER19 was unable to tell whether he was beaten with a flat hand or a fist. He was also tortured with Falaqa and beaten on his feet using a stick.

Böcker recalled that when GER19 spontaneously recognized a person based on a picture he had seen on the internet, Knappmann asked him to describe all people who were present at the interrogation, except for one person. Knappmann affirmed, saying he did not ask GER19 to describe the person he identified as Anwar Raslan.

Böcker wanted to know why. Knappmann said GER19 already saw his picture on the internet and Knappmann was interested in who else was present at this interrogation.

Böcker asked Knappmann for his reasons to not let GER19 describe Raslan. Knappmann said in preparation of his in-court testimony he again read the transcript of the questioning. There was no explicit decision to not let GER19 describe Raslan. However, whenever witnesses already saw someone on the internet, one would abstain from a description of this person because memories of own experiences and the picture on the internet would mix, and a description would therefore not be relevant.

Böcker said he needed two more minutes to ask his next question.

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled GER19 mentioning the name of one of the guards and asked Knappmann if GER19 told him how he knew this name. Knappmann said GER19 did not tell him and he did not ask GER19 about it. Knappmann explained that from his and his colleagues' experience guards would usually be called "Abu names", which would not be their real names. There was not a single case where the "Abu name" was the actual name of one of the guards.

Knappmann was dismissed as a witness.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber said the Judges were thinking about reading parts of the transcript of the BKA's questioning of the witness who decided not to further testify [FR19]. However, this would not be done on this very day since Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen said she wanted to read out a statement. Kerber wanted to know how long Dr. Oehmichen's statement would be in light of having a break before the next witness would testify at 11AM.

Defense Counsel Böcker wanted to know if Kerber was referring to FR19 [Böcker mentioned the full name] when talking about reading out parts of a transcript. Kerber confirmed, adding that she did not want to repeat the name in court.

Dr. Oehmichen requested a longer break since the plaintiff issue [P50's admission to join the trial as a plaintiff] was not yet decided.

Judge Kerber announced a thirty-minute-break.

***

[35-minute break]

***

[Plaintiff Counsels Reiger and Mohamed left]

The witness [P51] entered the court room wearing glasses and a fake beard in addition to his COVID-19 mask. He was accompanied by his counsel Mr. Obst and two BKA officers.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the witness was anonymized as Z203052_07_06 [P51]. She noted that he was able to communicate in German and told him he could consult the interpreters anytime or switch to Arabic. Kerber further noted that P51's counsel Obst submitted a statement regarding P51's security situation. The BKA confirmed to the judges that P51 has relatives living in government-controlled areas in Syria. P51's counsel Obst submitted a request for anonymization of his client. Kerber decided that P51 was not obliged to provide information relating to his identity in accordance with § 68 (3) s.1 StPO. She added that security concerns were already raised by several other witnesses and that P51 was further allowed to partially cover his face.

P51's Testimony

Judge Kerber asked P51 whether he could give some information about his age and profession. Before passing the question to P51, Kerber informed P51 about his rights and duties as a witness. P51 said he is a doctor and worked at a hospital. He denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber said P51 was questioned twice by the BKA regarding Al-Khatib Branch in Damascus. She asked P51 to describe how this came about. P51 explained that a couple years ago, he was working at the Red Crescent Hospital close to Al-Khatib Branch, between thirty and fifty meters from the Branch.

Kerber asked if the buildings were neighboring buildings. P51 confirmed.

Kerber wanted to know more about the relation between the two institutions. P51 described how at the beginning of the revolution in 2011, demonstrations were mainly happening on Fridays. He and his colleagues were told to treat detainees at the Branch who were arrested during this first phase.

Kerber asked what P51 noticed and what the place looked like. P51 explained that usually someone [from the Branch] came and instructed one or two doctors to go to the Branch. P51 said [the doctors] had no choice but to follow [the order]. If they denied, they would have gotten into trouble. Depending on the situation, doctors and caretakers went [to the Branch]. P51 said he already described the building to the police.

Judge Kerber explained that the transcripts of both occasions when P51 was questioned by the police were on the case file. Nonetheless, P51 had to repeat all that [information] in court. P51 went on to explain that the main entrance of the Branch is at a crossroad opposite to the hospital. The Branch is called Al-Khatib due to the neighborhood where it is located. There were security guards one had to walk by. At the second or third building on the right-hand side, one had to hand over his mobile phone. Stairs led to the basement where the detainees were held. P51 added that he always had to go downstairs to the basement. Someone yelled that the doctors arrived, and a heavy gate was opened. P51 explained that there were several areas. He added that as far as he remembered, considering that it happened ten or eleven years ago, the cells were on the right side. On the left was a kitchen surrounded by a yard. This is where P51 had to go, depending on where the detainees were taken [left or right yard]. There were only a few injured detainees during the first phase. They were also beaten with items and hands in front of P51 and his colleagues. Then, one after the other was called and P51 and his colleagues were allowed to talk to them but not allowed to ask them questions. The detainees were not allowed to talk to P51 and his colleagues. P51 added that if someone had an injury that had to be stitched, he was allowed to do that or to apply bandages. There were four cases that required stationary treatment. Usually, P51 and his colleagues had to describe the cases on sheets of paper, for example detailing hematomas or whether a fracture needed to be x-rayed. P51 said the hospital did not have an orthopedic station, so patients who needed orthopedist treatment had to go somewhere else.

Kerber asked if these patients were actually taken somewhere else. P51 said he was not informed about that. It was not known to him.

Kerber wanted to know when P51 was at the Branch for the first time. P51 said he went there starting in April 2011, but he would be unable to provide an exact date.

Kerber concluded that the first visit was in April 2011. P51 confirmed.

Kerber recalled P51 mentioning that, at the beginning, the detainees “looked good”, asking him what he meant by that. P51 explained that it was normal that people were beaten and had fractures. The longer they had to stay in their cells, the worse they looked. They were just skin and bones.

Kerber asked P51 when he went to the Branch for the last time. P51 said he cannot answer.

Kerber asked about the year, adding that the indictment period was until September 2012 and asking P51 whether he was still working at the hospital at that time. P51 affirmed that he was working at the hospital in 2011 and 2012 and had to go to the Branch during this period.

Kerber recalled P51 “impressively” describing to the BKA how he was able to tell whether detainees had been at the Branch for a longer time, for example based on their clothes. P51 said one could not only tell from the clothes. 90-95% of the people were only wearing underwear. If they had been at the Branch for only a couple hours, the underwear was still white. Things looked differently after a couple of days, because it was too crowded, however, at the beginning the condition of the people was good. According to P51, people had a normal weight at the beginning of their detention, but they barely got food or water. He could not say for how long someone had been at the Branch, but he could tell whether they were new or not.

Kerber wanted to know how the prison looked, asking P51 what he noticed with his eyes and other senses. P51 said it was not bright, at least not on the right side where the cell area was. It was dark, although there were lamps. Nonetheless, the lamps were not shining very bright. It was bright on the left side, amongst others in the kitchen. However, that was only where the reception was and where people were sorted. P51 said the smell varied with the weather. It was horrible in summer and feces would be a fragrance compared to that.

Kerber asked what people mostly suffered from. On P51’s request she asked what diseases people usually had. [P51 quickly consulted his counsel] P51 explained that almost everyone had injuries from being beaten with items. New detainees were often bleeding and their hands were wetting from patterns of restraint. One could also see when people were beaten on the way to see P51 and his colleagues. Some had hematomas caused by their own bones.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Wiedner said since P51 is a doctor, he could give an expert opinion on the condition of the detainees at the Branch. He asked P51 to describe to a layperson how visible bones and bones still underneath the skin could cause different injuries. P51 said that hematomas were only caused [if there was no open fracture]. But detainees also had injured tissue, which P51 was able to stitch sometimes, but sometimes they were not. Injuries were not only caused by torture or beatings but also from sitting. If someone did not have fat, his bones would press against the skin.

Wiedner asked if P51 was talking about an open ulcer. P51 confirmed.<sup>2</sup>

Wiedner asked if P51 saw bone fractures. P51 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P51 also saw inflammation. P51 again confirmed, adding that they could not treat inflammation during later phases. They were allowed to conduct one examination but not to give medicine. Instead, they were told to write notes, but P51 did not know whether the instructions in the notes were realized.

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It was not entirely clear whether P51 was only talking about hematomas caused by bones, or about hematomas caused by bones and open ulcers.

Wiedner asked P51 whether he saw signs of medical treatment [being provided], like bandages. P51 said yes. Wiedner asked how many times. P51 said sometimes people had bandages, but most times they did not. P51 saw no apparent reason for why some people received treatment and others did not.

Wiedner summarized that P51 witnessed the condition of injuries and the severity of injuries, which were sometimes life-threatening. He asked P51 what would have happened if these people did not receive medical treatment. P51 said some people would have died.

Wiedner asked from what they would have died exactly. P51 explained that with open wounds and fever one could assume that, if left untreated, [their condition would] result in a massive inflammation causing a sepsis. One could not survive a sepsis without being hospitalized.

Wiedner asked if P51 ever saw people like that. P51 affirmed, saying he could not remember whether they were at the very last stage, but they were in a very bad condition.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were diseases that were left untreated like for example heart or kidney conditions that required urgent medical care. P51 confirmed that in particular elderly detainees between 70 and 80 years-old suffered from chronic diseases such as diabetes or hypertension. P51 added that he has a strong guess that these people never received medical treatment.

Wiedner asked if P51 guessed that or if he was able to find out through conversations. P51 said no, adding that they were not allowed to ask precise questions.

Wiedner wanted to know if they were not even allowed to ask medical questions. P51 said they were allowed to ask medical questions, for example if someone had diabetes or other chronic diseases. But they were not allowed to ask whether they received treatment.

Wiedner concluded that P51 was still allowed to ask detainees about diseases. P51 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P51 mentioning elderly people and asked him about the age range of the detainees. [P51 consulted his counsel.] P51 said there were minors as well. He himself saw a boy who was 14 or 15-years-old. He was arrested together with his father at a demonstration. The boy had a big hematoma on his head, something P51 had never seen before. It was filled with 'liquid.' One had to do a CT or MRI but P51 could not tell whether it was done or not. He added that the age range included eighty-year-olds as well.

Wiedner wanted to know when the incident with the boy happened, whether it was at the beginning or toward the end. P51 [consulted his counsel and] said it was definitely in 2011. P51 said he could remember because during the first phase there were more doctors at the Branch.

Wiedner said he wanted to talk about the different phases in a minute but first wanted to know how old the age range of detainees reached. P51 said it was more than eighty years.

Wiedner asked if P51 treated female detainees as well. P51 said he did not treat women.

Wiedner asked who treated them. P51 said he did not treat them at the Branch but at the hospital.

Wiedner concluded that P51 did not treat female detainees at the Branch, asking him whether the women he treated at the hospital came from the Branch. P51 affirmed.

Wiedner said he now wanted to carefully determine the timeframe starting in 2011. He recalled P51 mentioning that a first phase started in 2011 and asked him what he meant by that and how it was different from later phases. P51 explained that during the first months, demonstrations mainly happened on Fridays after the prayer.

The opponents of the government were arrested by security forces. [P51 consulted the interpreter for the following sentence] The police scattered demonstrations. However, the police were not normal police.

Wiedner asked how P51 came into contact with [protestors] at Al-Khatib Branch. P51 said as he already mentioned, after a few weeks, special shifts for doctors and caretakers were developed. Everyone at the hospital knew that [employees of Al-Khatib Branch] would call, so they took a bag with medical items and were accompanied to the Branch.

Wiedner asked if the people from the Branch usually called the hospitals or came and picked the doctors up. P51 said they were usually picked up and a man called before that.

Wiedner wanted to know how many people went to the Branch. P51 said it varied, asking Wiedner if he was only referring to doctors or all medical personnel.

Wiedner asked about the doctors. P51 explained that sometimes there were several doctors who were accompanied by medical personnel.

Wiedner asked if the medical personnel were caretakers. P51 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know the average number of doctors and caretakers who went to the Branch. P51 said during the first couple months they were usually three or four doctors and three or four caretakers.

Wiedner asked if they were all male. P51 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were female nurses who went the Branch. P51 said no, adding that [female nurses] were, however, often told to go.

Wiedner asked if P51 and his colleagues only went on Fridays during the first phase or how many times per week they usually went to the Branch. P51 said they did not only go on Fridays, but mainly on Fridays. However, they also went during the week.

Wiedner asked if they went two or three times during the week during the first phase. P51 explained that he was at the hospital every day, except for when he was on leave. He could not say how many times his colleagues went to the Branch.

Wiedner further recalled that P51 made a connection between the first phase at Al-Khatib and demonstrations. He asked P51 who he met at the Branch, how many people were tortured, how many people P51 saw, and what was the condition of people. P51 said [these factors] varied. Most of the time, the detainees were waiting in the yard. They sat on the floor while P51 and his colleagues were standing. The detainees were then called one after the other.

Wiedner asked how many people usually gathered there, asking P51 for a rough estimate (single-digit, double-digit or more than hundred). P51 said there were usually thirty to forty people, sometimes less, sometimes more. This was also the number of people who were treated by P51 and his colleagues. Some might not have been injured but there were usually thirty to forty people.

Wiedner wanted to know for how long P51 and his colleagues usually stayed at the Branch. P51 said they stayed until they were done, maybe two hours.

Wiedner asked if there were freshly injured people, or how P51 characterized the first phase. P51, affirmed, detailing that during the first phase they usually treated new detainees, however, P51 was not there every Friday.

Wiedner asked how many times P51 was there. P51 consulted his counsel who told the Court that P51 would not answer this question since it would lead to conclusions regarding his identity. P51 added that he was there more than once.

Wiedner wanted to know if P51 was there regularly. P51 said no, it depended on his shifts and holidays. However, he was there often.

Wiedner asked how long the first phase lasted. P51 consulted his counsel who asked for a short break.

Judge Kerber ordered a 60-minute lunch break.

Judge Wiedner first recalled that P51 defined the first phase as the time period when he treated new detainees. He asked P51 until when this phase lasted. P51's counsel wanted to say something, but P51 started to answer by saying that the first phase was when demonstrations happened every Friday and many people participated and were arrested. [The frequency of demonstrations] got less after a couple months but P51 could not provide a precise date.

Wiedner said he was not asking for a precise date but wanted to know if this occurred in 2011. P51 affirmed, saying that after four to six months, demonstrations were less frequent for different reasons.

Wiedner asked how P51's work changed as a consequence. [P51 quickly consulted his counsel.] Wiedner further wanted to know how the injuries of the detainees changed. P51 described that at first, four or five of his colleagues went to the Branch. After that, an employee from the Branch came when they needed a doctor and took whoever was at the emergency room. There were no or only a few new detainees and most had older injuries and things like that.

Wiedner recalled P51 telling the German police that there were two categories of patients: fresh ones and older ones. The newly arrived detainees were in a not so bad condition, their clothes still looked good. P51 confirmed, adding that there were only a few new arrests each Friday and many detainees had been at the Branch for three or four weeks.

Wiedner wanted to know how many people were usually there, where they were, and how many patients P51 and his colleagues usually treated during the second phase. P51 said they had to go downstairs where a heavy gate was opened. They then had to turn right to the cell area where another gate was opened. One or two people were injured, others had a cough, fever, or diarrhea.

Wiedner asked if P51 treated the people inside their cells. P51 said no, saying that they were treated in front of the [cell's] door. He did not dare to look inside the cells.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the general condition of the detainees. P51 said the longer one was detained, the worse his condition was. [Detainees] were only wearing underpants which had an awful color because they were covered in feces and urine. People were skin and bones and could not move properly.

Wiedner asked if P51 was allowed to take people to the hospital or if he recognized one of the detainees at the hospital. P51 said he could not remember; he only wrote reports.

They were not allowed to take anyone with them, simply because of the path they had to walk between the Branch and the hospital. People were only transferred by car.

Wiedner asked P51 if he could remember such a transfer to the hospital. [P51 consulted the interpreter and his counsel.] P51 said he could not remember how exactly the people looked because it was dark. He could therefore not say whether one of them was later taken to the hospital.

Wiedner explained that he was not particularly interested in detainees that P51 personally treated at the Branch. He was instead interested in transfers of detainees from the Branch to the hospital in general. P51 confirmed that such transfers definitely happened.

Wiedner asked P51 whether he saw dead people at the Branch. P51 said no.

Wiedner wanted to know if P51 noticed cases at the hospital where people who came from Al-Khatib Branch died. P51 recalled that he already told the German police about an incident when a car and a pick-up truck arrived at the hospital. They carried two or three corpses. It was at night and very dark. P51 was ordered to confirm the death of these people.

Wiedner asked if P51 did confirm their death. P51 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know how P51 was able to confirm the death of these people. P51 explained that he was unable to determine the exact cause of death. However, [detainees] were generally in bad condition and very thin. He could not exactly tell when they died. According to P51 the corpses smelled bad as all living detainees. However, the corpses smelled even worse.

Wiedner asked how P51 was able to attribute these corpses to Al-Khatib Branch. P51 described that one could say that the hospital he worked at belonged to this Branch. The people inside the cars also belonged to Al-Khatib Branch. They regularly came to the hospital, so P51 knew they belonged to the Branch. P51 added that he and his colleagues gave them "Abu names", explaining that this would be a common way to call people if you would not know their real names.

Wiedner concluded that P51 recognized employees of the Branch. P51 explained it was always the same ten to fifteen people from the Branch who came to the hospital to get the doctors and who also worked in the basement of the Branch. It was well-known that they came from Al-Khatib Branch, since it was opposite of the hospital and only people from the Branch came to the hospital. P51 added that the hospital and the Branch were located on the same block. Cars coming to the hospital were stopped and checked. [P51 used his hands to describe the location of the street and the hospital and Branch buildings on the table in front of him.] According to P51 there was a roadblock made of concrete and a check point at the main street. It did not belong to Al-Khatib Branch, but one had to pass it to get to the one-way street behind it. People coming from the opposite direction were allowed to go to the hospital. P51 added that most of the time there was an additional check point from Al-Khatib Branch as well.

Wiedner concluded that people coming from outside were consequently filtered. P51 confirmed.

Regarding the incident with the pick-up truck/van and the corpses, Wiedner asked P51 what he thinks the purpose of his work was: whether he had to issue a death certificate or take the corpses. P51 said he could not issue a certificate since he had no personal information about the deceased. He only had to confirm their death. P51 explained that every patient who was treated at the hospital had his own file. However, with detainees they just had to write any name. The guards then told them the age and they just wrote any date of birth. The files were therefore based on false data.

Wiedner asked if P51 had to write something when the corpses were shown to him. P51 said no, they only had to say that [detainees] were dead and then [the corpses were] transported somewhere else.

Wiedner wanted to know when this incident happened. [P51 consulted his counsel.] Wiedner said P51 already told the police. P51 said it was definitely before mid-2012.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript according to which P51 said, when asked about the date of the van incident, that he could not tell exactly but sometime between spring 2011 and June 2012. P51 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the state of the corpses, if they showed injuries and how their general condition was. P51 said he already described that they were in a bad, miserable state. They were extremely thin but he could not remember precise injuries.

Wiedner asked if they were dressed. P51 said they wore underpants and nothing else.

Wiedner confirmed that P51 told the police the same [information]: when he was asked about signs of torture, P51 affirmed and added that he could see bruises and that they were emaciated. P51 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled that the corpses did not stay with P51. He wanted to know what happened to them. P51 said he does not know but he was told that they were taken to Najha [Cemetery] مقبرة نجها.

Wiedner asked if apart from that, corpses from the Branch were stored at the hospital, for example in the mortuary. P51 explained that every hospital has a cooling room where corpses can be stored for a short time. According to Muslim tradition, people must be buried quickly. However, if someone dies at night the corpse is stored in the cooling room or a couple hours until the family arranged everything.

Wiedner asked if P51 was talking about 2011 or 2012. P51 said this was generally the case. In winter, one could not smell the corpses. However, at some point P51 and other neighbors of the hospital started to smell them. P51 explained that corpses were usually put in cooling drawers. The hospital's mortuary had four to six of such drawers. In the summer when it was very warm and there was not enough space, one could smell the corpses. According to P51, the pharmacy, laboratory, kitchen, and cafeteria for the hospital's employees were located in the basement. One could either take the lift downstairs or walk around the building, pass the loading ramp. If one took this way, he had to walk past the mortuary. P51 said it stank. Usually, the key to this room was kept at the hospital's reception. However, there was a time without a key. The families were then called immediately and told to take the corpse of their loved one because there was no space in the cooled mortuary.

Wiedner concluded that the cooling room was overcrowded and asked P51 why this was the case. P51 said he and his colleagues were told that the key to the cooling room was with Al-Khatib Branch. The hospital could no longer use the room. P51 added that he could not say if the room was overcrowded every day or how many corpses were stored there. It did not matter in the winter, but in the summer it often stank.

Wiedner further concluded that one could indeed smell that there were too many corpses and that during this time, the key was at Al-Khatib Branch. Wiedner asked P51 if there were other indicators that corpses were transferred from the Branch to the hospital.

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened saying P51 just said "we were told that the key was at the Branch". P51 asked what the question was.

Judge Wiedner said P51 made a connection between the key and Al-Khatib Branch because he was told that the key was at the Branch. Wiedner asked P51 if he noticed that on other occasions as well, or if someone told him about transports. P51 said neither. He was not told. But there were rumors, and no one asked questions because the hospital belonged to the Branch.

Wiedner asked P51 to explain what he meant by “belonged to”. P51 consulted the interpreter.

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened saying he was having an issue for a while now but did not want to offend P51. However, P51 just said the “the hospital belonged to the Branch.” One should therefore inform P51 that he is not obliged to make any further statements. It would not be because of his work but because of an organizational issue and hierarchies. Böcker said this would also be an important aspect for his closing statement.

Prosecutor Klinge said he does not see any necessity to inform P51 about § 55 StPO. P51 did not say that he was working at Al-Khatib Branch. In accordance with what the Federal Court of Justice found in June 2019, there would be no sufficient suspicion against P51.

Judge Kerber said she would also not see any necessity in this regard. P51 consulted the interpreter and his counsel asked for a short break.

***

***

P51’s counsel Obst explained that although his client has very good German skills, he could only express some details in his mother tongue. He just examined the organizational structure and competencies together with his client during the break. It would basically be the case that Al-Khatib Branch simply transferred patients to the hospital. Whenever a security officer from the Branch appeared at the hospital, everyone was at his service. Obst concluded that this is how P51’s descriptions should be understood.

Judge Kerber asked P51 if that was correct. P51 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P51 explaining to the police during his questioning that, regarding the relationship between hospital and Branch, every intelligence branch had their own hospital where they would take their detainees. The security guards [coming from Al-Khatib Branch to the Red Crescent Hospital] were always the same. P51 told the court that in Syria there were many branches like Al-Khatib, for example the Palestine Branch. This branch would not take its detainees to P51’s hospital because it was not nearby. According to P51 it was always the same fifteen people from Al-Khatib Branch who came to the hospital.

Wiedner asked P51 to continue his description asking if he remembered particular cases of detainees from the Branch who were treated at the hospital, for example a female activist. P51 said regarding women, he did not treat them at Al-Khatib Branch but at the hospital. He once treated a young woman, around 20 years old. She was an activist.

Wiedner asked whether she came from Al-Khatib Branch. P51 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know from what injuries or disease she was suffering. P51 recalled that she most likely had acute kidney failure. She was hospitalized at the station for internal medicine.

Wiedner asked about a Christian activist and what else P51 was able to remember. P51 affirmed that there was a Christian.

P51 added he was told that the activist was taken to the hospital, but he could not remember exactly. He took videos and pictures of demonstrations. When he was taken to the hospital, he was dead.

Wiedner asked if the person was dead when he arrived or died at the hospital. P51 said he could not remember very well.

Wiedner wanted to know the estimated date when these two cases happened. P51 said the incident with the female activist definitely happened in 2011 and the other incident with the man also happened during the first months.

Wiedner asked P51 to estimate how many people he treated at Al-Khatib Branch from “the beginning” until September 2012. P51 asked if Wiedner was referring to the number of people P51 himself treated or the number of people for whom P51 was present during their treatment. Wiedner said he wanted to know how many detainees P51 treated and for how many was he present while they were treated. P51 said he could not provide a precise number. Wiedner asked if they were hundreds or rather thousands. P51 said they were at least hundreds but he could not say whether they were thousands.

Wiedner asked P51 about a laboratory. P51 said it was diagonally opposite of the hospital in Al-Khatib [neighborhood].

Judge Kerber asked how P51 knew that it was the Al-Khatib laboratory and if there was a sign. P51 said it was widely known that the laboratory was diagonally opposite of the hospital. It is the biggest [laboratory] in Syria.

Kerber concluded that the laboratory existed and that it was known. P51 confirmed.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Regarding injured people who came to the hospital [from the Branch], Prosecutor Klinge asked P51 how this happened, if the patients were guarded and how they were treated. P51 asked if Klinge was referring to people P51 and his colleagues treated. Klinge affirmed. P51 described that they were taken by car because they could not walk. They were alone in a room and always accompanied by a guard. They were tied and their files were based on wrong information. P51 explained that although medical questions were permitted, one could not say that these people received proper medical treatment. It was normal that they were insulted by the people who guarded them.

Klinge wanted to know if there was a special station for these people. P51 denied, saying as far as he knew there was no special station.

Klinge recalled that there were constant insults from the guards who accompanied the patients. P51 asked whether Klinge meant that he was insulted. Klinge said he was talking about the patients. P51 said they were constantly insulted, even when they were tied [to their bed].

Klinge wanted to know what they were tied to. P51 said the detainees were tied to their bed by their hands or feet.

Klinge asked if everyone had his own bed. P51 affirmed.

Klinge recalled that P51 was unable to see the condition of the detainees in the basement of the Branch. He asked about the condition of the detainees at the hospital. P51 said the detainees who came to the hospital were not only those with injuries but also those with pneumonia or diarrhea. The longer they were detained, the worse their condition. They also had open wounds and bruises.

Klinge asked how long [detinees] usually stayed at the hospital. P51 said that it varied from patient to patient, depending.....

Klinge [interrupted and] told P51 to provide an estimate; if it was rather long or short. P51 said they were at different stations. He therefore could not tell.

Klinge asked if the patients were insulted and mistreated in front of P51. P51 said they were insulted, which was normal. He added that the guards were unable to speak in a normal tone.

Klinge wanted to know if there was mistreatment at the hospital. P51 said people were pushed. He added that when he came to the Branch, the guards yelled and opened the gate.

Klinge asked if there was a staff doctor at the Branch as well. P51 said there was someone but P51 could not say whether he was a military (police) or civilian employee. However, people would have noticed a difference: while P51 and his colleagues were always polite, this person was constantly yelling and insulting.

Klinge asked if this doctor mistreated people at the Branch. P51 said [the doctor] insulted people, slapped them in the face, “and things like that”.

Klinge wanted to know if the patterns of injuries were sufficient enough to allow for conclusions regarding torture methods. P51 said he was unfamiliar with torture methods, but there were injuries that could not be caused by hand. There were such massive bruises that could only be caused by an item. However, P51 could not say with which item they were caused.

Klinge concluded that people had welts. P51 consulted the interpreter and told the court that he would consider that a hematoma.

Klinge asked if people had bleeding and open [wounds on their] feet. P51 affirmed.

Klinge asked if they also had injuries on their wrists from being hanged. P51 affirmed that he saw such injuries with some detainees but he could not say if it was because they were hanged.

Klinge further wanted to know if people showed signs of fixation. P51 affirmed.

Regarding the different phases that P51 mentioned, Klinge concluded that the condition of the detainees got worse with the phases. P51 said he could not say it like that because he did not see people twice.

Klinge concluded that the overall condition [of detainees] got worse. [There was confusion with German-Arabic interpretation and] P51 said he did not understand every word. He told Klinge that he forgot the question and asked him to ask the question again. Klinge wanted to know if P51 noticed indicators of sexual violence. P51 said he could not say.

Klinge asked if there were female nurses for female detainees at Al-Khatib. P51 affirmed.

Klinge wanted to know about corpses at Al-Khatib Branch. P51 said, as he already told the court, he did not know exactly but he was told – and that would most likely be true – that those corpses were taken to Najha [Cemetery] مقبرة نجها .

Klinge asked P51 about the relationship between Al-Khatib Branch and Harasta Hospital. P51 said there was not only Harasta Hospital but also Tishreen Hospital. However, as the Court would probably know, the highway was blocked. The way to these hospitals was therefore dangerous because the government was not in control of certain areas and could therefore not pass parts of this way.

Klinge wanted to know if injured detainees from Al-Khatib Branch were taken to Harasta Hospital. P51 said he could not say anything about that. He would not know.

Klinge wanted to know if P51 knew who the head of interrogations at Al-Khatib was when P51 was in Syria. P51 said it was Anwar Raslan.

Klinge asked how he knew that. P51 said he could not provide an exact date [of when he learned this information] but later [after he had to go to the Branch]. When Raslan defected people were talking about his defection.

Klinge asked if he knew about Raslan before or after [Raslan's] defection. P51 said unfortunately he could not remember exactly but he assumed that the name was "known to us."

Klinge wanted to know if people said something about him [Raslan]. P51 asked what exactly Klinge was referring to. Klinge said he wanted to know if people said Raslan was nice or brutal. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying Klinge should ask a more precise question: when and where people were talking. Klinge specified that he wanted to know if people spoke about Anwar Raslan as the head on interrogations and about his character when P51 was still in Syria. P51 said no, people did not talk about higher-ranking officers. However, their names were known.

Prosecutor Polz wanted to know if P51 and his colleagues were watched by people from the Branch when they were examining and treating patients at the Branch. P51 said of course they were never left on their own.

Polz asked if these people also interfered with medical care. P51 said he was [not allowed to provide treatment]. He was only allowed to say what a person needed e.g., bandages or medicine. But he was not allowed to directly provide anything.

Polz asked if P51 could decide what happened [in terms of treatment] or if the final decision was with an employee of the Branch. P51 said he could not provide information on that.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker said it would be important to him to chronologically connect the incident with the van and the corpses and the female activist. He asked P51 which event happened first. P51 said he could not say.

Böcker referred to the BKA's transcript according to which P51 was asked if he saw children and women at Al-Khatib Branch. P51 replied to the BKA that he saw a 13-year-old child and remembered that a woman was taken to the hospital from Al-Khatib Branch. She was a famous activist, but P51 said he could not remember her name. According to P51, she was at the intensive care unit, and it happened before November 2012.

Böcker asked P51 if the date that he gave the BKA or the one he just gave in court was more accurate.

P51's counsel Obst intervened, saying that his client told the BKA that it happened before November 2012 and today in court he said it happened in February or March 2012. The latter date was earlier than the first date he provided. The question was therefore redundant, according to P51's counsel.

Böcker asked if it happened before November 2012. P51's counsel said P51 already answered this question.

Böcker went on to ask if it was correct that, during the incident with the van and the corpses, P51 was only told to orally confirm death and he did not have to confirm death in writing. P51 confirmed.

Böcker asked if P51 examined the corpses. P51 affirmed, saying he briefly examined them. However, to issue a death certificate he would have needed ID cards, and he would never get that.

Böcker recalled that P51 examined the corpses. P51 again confirmed.

Böcker referred to the BKA's transcript of P51's questioning according to which P51 said that he was able to confirm the death of these people without examining them. Böcker asked P51 [if he examined the corpses or not]. [After briefly consulting his counsel,] P51 said that one could say that these people were dead simply because they looked so bad. He saw their condition before an examination and noticed that they did not move.

Böcker wanted to know how he had to imagine this situation: he asked where the van was and whether P51 had to look into the van or if the corpses were taken out of the van. P51 said no one could imagine such things without having experienced it themselves.

Böcker affirmed that this would of course be the case, nonetheless he wanted to have an image of the situation. He asked P51 what happened after P51 was called [by employees of the Branch who carried the corpses]. P51 said the van stopped at the main entrance [of the hospital]. There was one or two cars of the same kind and P51 was told to come and see if the people were dead.

Böcker asked if P51 had to go outside. P51 affirmed.

While Böcker asked for a short moment, P51 spoke to his counsel. Böcker said he had no further questions.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner said he also had a question in this regard. He recalled that both times he was questioned by the BKA, P51 was asked how he confirmed the death of these people. P51 told the BKA that he did not feel a pulse and could not determine a heartbeat. The people already looked like they were dead and P51 explained to the BKA that he therefore would not have needed to examine them, but he did so nevertheless. P51 also told the BKA that he remembered a bad smell. In Court, P51 did not know what Wiedner meant.

Wiedner said he was talking about determinations of death [of the bodies] in the van, about which he was questioned by the BKA. He asked P51 if he could remember what he told the BKA about that. P51 recalled that he told the BKA that he could not feel a pulse and that the people looked like they were dead. They were not normal people with regular skin. In short: they looked really bad.

Questioning by a Plaintiff

Judge Kerber announced that P50 was admitted as a plaintiff to the trial and therefore allowed to question P51.

P50 said that it was often the case that a detainee was "out of reach" [fasal]. He asked P51 if he experienced cases where the person was "out of reach". P51 asked in what way one would be "out of reach".

P50's counsel told him to slowly repeat his question. Judge Kerber intervened, saying it was unclear what P50 meant by "out of reach". The court interpreters explained that P50 used the word "fasal" which they did not know. P50 started to repeat his question when Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying that P50 was speaking too loudly.

P50 said he would repeat his question slowly and quietly: it was often the case with Syrian detainees that some of them lost their minds and were no longer in control of the situation and acted strangely. One would call that "being out of reach" [fasal]. This was known regarding detainees and former detainees.

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying he objected to the statement. Presiding Judge Kerber said there was no reason to object yet, since P50 was only providing clarification to his question. P50 continued his question, asking P51 whether he saw such cases with detainees or other psychological cases. P51 said he now understood the question: “fasal” meant crazy or insane and someone would lose their senses under stress. P51 said he did not see such cases. Regarding the psychological situation of detainees, he explained that he did not see a single happy detainee. They were all depressed because they did not know what would happen next.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen asked if one would need a forensic education to determine whether someone was dead. P51 said no, every doctor is permitted to do that.

Dr. Kroker asked P51 to narrow down the time frame in which the incident with the van happened. He wanted to know when between early 2011 and June 2012 it happened. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying he objected to this question. According to Böcker, P51 already said he could not remember and confirmed the statements he made with the BKA saying that the incident with the woman was before the end of 2011, early 2012. Dr. Kroker said P51 confirmed the reference that Judge Wiedner made to the transcript of P51’s questioning. However, he wanted to know more precisely when exactly before November 2012 the incident happened.

Böcker said he objected to this question since it would be redundant considering that P51 also spoke about the event with the woman at the intensive care unit. According to Böcker, the question would also be incomplete.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, saying that since this was a trial according to German Criminal Procedure, one needed a precise question: P51 is asked to narrow down the incident with the van in relation to the beginning of an applicable time frame. Defense Counsel Böcker requested a decision regarding the admissibility of this question.

***

***

Presiding Judge Kerber apologized that she forgot to ask for statements from other parties on this matter. Since there were no statements, Judge Kerber read out the following decision:

[The following is a recreation of the above-mentioned decision based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

The question whether, regarding the event with the van, P51 is able to narrow down the estimated earliest possible date when this event happened is permitted. There are no restrictions to the question.

Dr. Kroker asked P51 whether he was able to narrow down when the incident with the van and the dead people occurred more precisely than spring 2011. P51’s counsel said he discussed the issue with his client during the break and P51 would not provide information on this matter. P51 confirmed that he would not provide information.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said he had one more question regarding the situation with the van. He wanted to know if the incident happened before or after P51 was called to Al-Khatib Branch for the first time. Scharmer added that P51 previously said that he went to the Branch for the first time in April 2011.

P51 asked what time frame Scharmer was talking about. Scharmer said he wanted to know if the incident with the van and the corpses happened before or after P51 went to Al-Khatib Branch for the first time in April 2011. P51 said it was after that.

P51 was dismissed as a witness.

Plaintiff Counsel Bahns said he wanted to make a statement about the objection of the question. P51 previously told the Court that the incident [with the van and corpses] happened before June 2012 which was earlier than November 2012, the timeframe he mentioned to the police. P51's counsel said that June was earlier than November. The objection of the question was therefore incomprehensible to Bahns.

Plaintiff and Plaintiff Counsel Statements

Presiding Judge Kerber said P50 and Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen prepared statements that they would now read in Court. Kerber said she would prefer if P50 would provide his statement first and asked Dr. Oehmichen whether this order would work for her. Dr. Oehmichen explained that P50 wanted to provide two statements. She therefore proposed to have P50 provide his first statement, followed by her statement, and then P50's second statement. Judge Kerber told P50 to come to the witness stand so he could sit next to the court interpreter to avoid confusion in interpretation.

P50 said he would try to speak slowly and quietly so the interpreter could follow, and everyone could hear him well.

[The following is a recreation of the statement provided by P50, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

In Syria, arrest by the regime means two things: disappearance and torture. No one knows where the detainees are taken and the detainees themselves only know [where they are] in some rare cases. One only knows if he is summoned to appear at an intelligence branch and does not return from there. There are some further aspects:

- 1) When my wife spoke to the person who arrested me, he denied everything. I saw this same person at Al-Khatib Branch [...] I asked others about it when I was in my cell. I spoke to others through the window in the cell door.*
- 2) My entire family did not know where I was. They assumed I would be with the Air Force Intelligence. They only received information after 55 days, when I was at the civil court and able to contact them because someone gave me his mobile phone.*
- 3) The regime arrests the people who appear [at a branch to ask for their relatives]. It is therefore very dangerous to ask questions. I was told a story which one can also read about on the internet: it is about a woman called [REDACTED]. The regime wanted to get her husband. He fled and drowned. She then wanted to get a passport because she was pregnant. She was accompanied by two of her husband's sisters. They were all arrested. The woman was detained for a long time and gave birth to twins while in detention. She was later released.*

Plaintiff Counsel Böcker intervened, saying he had to interrupt P50. Judge Kerber asked Böcker why he had to interrupt P50. Böcker said he was confused about what exactly was happening. If this was a questioning of a witness, then it would be repetitive in light of P50's previous testimony. If this was however a statement on certain evidence in accordance with § 257 StPO, then it might collide with § 258 StPO [The right to make final statements, however, the final statement must not include aspects that were already covered in previous statements by the plaintiff]. Judge Kerber said this would be a reasonable objection and asked Dr. Oehmichen whether she would know more about the length of her client's statement.

Kerber further noted that P50's statement included some repetitions, and his third point was mere hearsay. If he would only have another two or three sentences, she would let him finish the statements, otherwise further discussions would be needed. Dr. Oehmichen said she was sorry that her client was interrupted. This statement was actually planned to be read out after her own statement. However, it was rescheduled upon Kerber's request. Judge Kerber allowed P50 to continue.

The woman was released in exchange for FSA members.

- 4) There was no male who made inquiries to the regime about detainees. This is only done by elderly women. Young women did not do it out of fear of being arrested. My mother for example asked about my father who disappeared seven years ago. No one did anything to a man's mother. Therefore, no man went to the Syrian regime to make inquiries.
- 5) The regime is using enforced disappearance as a method to finance its employees. High amounts of money are being paid to get some information about one's loved ones.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen read out a statement about the Prosecutors' statement on a legal note requested by Plaintiff Counsels Bahns, Dr. Kroker, and Scharmer.

[Due to the length as well as speed of reading and amount of detail, the Trial Monitor was not able to adequately take notes and recreate the statement. The following is therefore a summary of the statement.]

Dr. Oehmichen stated that on behalf of her clients, she affirms to include enforced disappearances according to § 7 (1) no. 7 VStGB to the indictment. She said that in the context of a systematic and widespread attack against the civil population in Syria, people were subjected to enforced disappearances with the aim to remove them from the protection of the law. She went on to describe that both the Prosecutors and the Plaintiff Counsels agreed that there was a systematic and widespread attack against the civil population going on during the indictment period. They further agreed that people were arrested and deprived of their liberty by the Syrian state and its organizations. According to Dr. Oehmichen there were, however, disagreements regarding: (i) the immediacy of providing information as the objective element of the crime, (ii) the individual liability of the Accused, and (iii) the intention to remove people from the protection of the law as subjective element of the crime.

Dr. Oehmichen went on to elaborate on all three aspects, criticizing the Prosecutors' restrictive interpretation of the law and the divergencies between the VStGB and the Rome Statute, the Convention Against Enforced Disappearances, and ius cogens. She concluded that § 7 (1) no. 7 var. a VStGB and § 7 (1) no. 7 var. b VStGB are applicable in the present case.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked Dr Oehmichen and asked if her client wanted to make another statement. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying although he would be cognizant of the rights of plaintiffs, he would like to have clarification about whether P50 would make a statement on the current issue (a statement according to §257 StPO) or a general statement. Böcker said he would object to the latter. On Judge Kerber's request, Dr. Oehmichen detailed that there would be no direct connection between the intended statement and her statement or a witness testimony. She therefore had to admit that the defense was right and P50 did not intend to make a declaration according to § 257 StPO.

After briefly talking to her client, Dr. Oehmichen said P50 could make his statement as part of his final statement. Judge Kerber asked Böcker if the matter was urgent to him or if he could spare five minutes [to hear P50's statement]. Böcker replied that random statements would be made in this trial. He said he respected most of the witnesses, in particular P50, but he would still act as a Defense Counsel. Judge Kerber said since this was a trial based on German Criminal Procedure, she had no reason to oppose Böcker and P50 could still make his statement as part of his final statement.

Defense Counsel Böcker said the defense team had requests that needed to be submitted and read in court.

[The following is a recreation of the defense's requests, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Request to summon and hear [PW1] living in [REDACTED], Germany as a witness.

PW1 participated in opposition activities in 2011 and 2012 and in demonstrations in [REDACTED]. He is the brother-in-law of P32 and helped her. PW1 will be able to testify that the Accused did not use violence against P32 or against his sisters. He can further testify about P32's mental illness and whether it occurred shortly before her testimony in court or earlier. His questioning will disclose what happened to P32 and her family.

The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW1, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. However, his authority to give orders and his organizational authority was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoul as well as the Alawites were the ones with power at the Branch.

PW1 can clarify that the Accused did not use violence against P32 and her siblings and clearly distanced himself from this violence. These acts of torture can therefore not be attributed to Anwar Raslan who had no authority to give orders and no organizational authority. He did not aid this violence.

Request to summon and hear [PW2] living in [REDACTED] as a witness.

PW2 worked as a pilot and later as a journalist. He was arrested at a demonstration in 2011. The accused arranged for him to be released from his cell. PW2 can testify that the Accused never ordered, exercised, or approved violence. Rather, the Accused was interested in novels and opposed the continuing large-scale arrests. PW2 will be able to confirm this as the Accused told [the information] to PW2. PW2 met Anwar Raslan at the end of 2013 as part of Raslan's opposition activities. This was when PW2 and Raslan spoke about Raslan's activities during the indictment period.

The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW2, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. However, his authority to give orders and his organizational authority was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoul as well as the Alawites were the ones with power at the Branch.

The hurdles for required reachability of witnesses living abroad have to be placed low for the purpose of this trial.

Since this trial deals with acts committed abroad and is internationally recognized, the Court's efforts in determining the truth must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been applied in the past.

Request to summon and hear [PW3] living in [REDACTED] as a witness.

PW3 completed a degree in political science and worked as an officer at the General Intelligence Directorate. He joined the opposition and was detained 12 times. The Accused helped PW3 regarding his release and defection. PW3 knew the Accused's attitude and that he sympathized with the opposition and that he helped detainees. PW3 worked with Dr. Kamal Al-Labwani and met Riyad Saif in Istanbul.

The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW3, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. However, his authority to give orders and his organizational authority was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoul as well as the Alawites were the ones with power at the Branch.

The hurdles for required reachability of witnesses living abroad have to be placed low for the purpose of this trial. Since this trial deals with acts committed abroad and is internationally recognized, the court's efforts in determining the truth must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been applied in the past.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he had another statement to provide. He requested to visually inspect a screenshot from Google Maps in Court to show the way from Al-Khatib Branch to Darayya. According to Google Maps, one would need thirty minutes by car to go from Darayya to Al-Khatib Branch. However, it would only be ten minutes from Darayya to Kafar Souseh. P50 said the drive from his practice to Al-Khatib took ten minutes. However, it would be more likely that he was driven to Kafar Souseh.

Böcker said he objected to a reading of the transcript of FR19's questioning with the French Police. FR19 was not willing to be questioned by the BKA or in court due to an alleged security risk. This circumstance was also confirmed by CCI Knappmann. FR19 was questioned by the French Police before. The principle of immediacy would be violated [if the transcript was read] since the French interrogation officer could be summoned. Taking evidence by reading transcripts of questionings can be done as an additional measure. However, it could not be a replacement. This would be inadmissible.

Prosecutor Klinge and Plaintiff Counsels Oehmichen and Bahns reserved the right to provide statements on the defense's requests. Böcker said the defense would not provide a statement on Dr. Oehmichen's previous statement.

Dr. Oehmichen asked if her client could get an Arabic translation of the defense's request [to inspect the Google Maps screenshot]. Judge Kerber denied. Dr. Oehmichen said in this case, she would [officially] request it.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:37PM.

The trial will resume on September 29, at 9:30AM in room 128 in the Regional Court's building.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 47
Hearing Dates: September 29 & 30, 2021

Day 94 – September 29, 2021

Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing from the BKA testified about the questioning of a witness who declined to testify in court. The witness was first questioned by the Swedish Police before being questioned by the BKA. The Court further dealt with administrative matters related to the Defense's previous requests to take additional evidence, namely three witnesses and a Google Maps Screenshot.

Day 95 – September 30, 2021

Criminal Chief Investigator Schmidt from the LKA Berlin testified about his questioning of P46. According to Schmidt, P46 told the police that the first time he saw a picture of Raslan and heard his name was when he was with Al-Bunni. In contrast, P46 told the Court that he did not talk with Al-Bunni about the Accused and saw Raslan's picture in the media before he met Al-Bunni.

P52, a former Syrian pilot and journalist testified about his detention at Al-Khatib Branch where he also met Raslan with whom he had a friendly conversation. The two also met several times after Raslan's defection and had a conversation about Raslan feeling monitored by the Syrian Intelligence Services in Berlin.

The Court further heard requests by the Defense to summons two additional witnesses. The Judges denied the Defense's previous request to obtain access to the Federal Prosecutor General Office's structural investigation into the Syrian conflict.

Trial Day 94 – September 29, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with four spectators and two journalists in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Bahns was not present while Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer was substituted by attorney Dr. Stolle. There was only one court interpreter present.

Testimony of CCI Deußing

Presiding Judge Kerber informed Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing from the BKA about his rights and duties as a witness.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber explained that Deußing was summoned to tell the Court about his questioning of [SE5] and asked him to describe why and how SE5 was questioned. Deußing explained that the BKA was informed about SE5's existence by the Swedish Police. Consequently, an EU investigation order was issued to the Swedish Police who only referred to the witness as SE5. SE5 had been questioned by the Swedish Police in August or September 2018. The transcript of this questioning was forwarded to the BKA. The transcript detailed that SE was [REDACTED] and that he was detained at Branch 251. The BKA first wanted to question the witness in Stockholm, but attorney Dr. Kroker contacted the BKA and told them SE5 would be willing to come to Germany, so he was questioned in Berlin on October 31, 2018. Deußing said he conducted the questioning together with his colleague Knappmann and an interpreter.

Judge Kerber asked whether SE5 was informed about his rights and duties. Deußing affirmed, saying he first ensured that SE5 was able to communicate well with the interpreter, then explained to SE5 the subject matter of the case and informed him about his rights and duties.

Kerber said the Court would have a particular interest in the content of the questioning and asked Deußing to describe what SE5 told him. Deußing explained that SE5 was born in [REDACTED] but grew up in [REDACTED] where he graduated from high school. He then studied [REDACTED] and conducted further training in [REDACTED].

Kerber intervened, saying the Court would be more interested in what SE5 experienced. Deußing went on to explain that starting in 1987, SE5 was politically active and already detained for several days before 2011. From 2011 on, he organized and participated in demonstrations in Damascus and Douma. His name therefore appeared on a wanted list and in [REDACTED] he was arrested at his place of work [REDACTED], by the Political Security. He was transferred to Al-Khatib Branch by bus. Deußing remembered that SE5 told him that although he was blindfolded during the ride, he was able to tell where they were going since he knew the area very well. SE5 also told the BKA that he was beaten on the bus. Regarding SE5's detention periods, Deußing told the Court that SE5 was detained at Branch 251 and Branch 285 in [REDACTED] 2011 and continued to be politically active after his release in [REDACTED] 2011. He was therefore again arrested at the [REDACTED] and detained at Branches 251 and 285 as well as Adra prison. He was released at the beginning of [REDACTED].

Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether in light of what was transcribed, it would be possible that SE5 was released in early [REDACTED]. Deußing confirmed, adding that SE5 was detained for one year. Deußing went on to describe how SE5 was shown a photo array in which he recognized the person in picture No. 3. Deußing added in Court that this person was not Anwar Raslan but a stand-in. SE5 did not mention a name for the person in picture No. 3, so Deußing asked him about the name Anwar Raslan. SE5 then said that during his first detention, he heard the name [Anwar Raslan] in talks between fellow detainees. SE5 only mentioned the surname and said he did not hear the name in direct talks but in conversations between fellow detainees that he overheard. According to SE5, this person [Raslan] was an interrogation officer. When other detainees were taken for interrogations, the ones who stayed in the cell said they hoped this detainee would not be taken to Raslan who was a brutal beast and actively involved in torture. Deußing explained that SE5 immediately relativized this by explaining that he was not told that directly, but overheard it in conversations between fellow detainees. SE5 did not hear the name during his second detention. Deußing said that during the further course of the questioning, SE5 mentioned that he heard the name Raslan in connection to media reports about a person who defected and joined the opposition. Deußing also asked SE5 whether he was able to say something regarding uniforms of employees at the Branch. SE5 replied that the first interrogation officer was wearing a sweat suit and no uniform.

He said he was able to see that when his blindfolds slightly moved. The interrogation officer was standing behind him but he was able to see the sweat suit.

Deußing further recalled that he asked SE5 to draw a sketch of Branch 251. SE5 first described the location of the Branch, mentioning Baghdad Street, Aleppo Street, Samakeh Park, and the Red Crescent Hospital. SE5 then drew a sketch of the outside and inside of the Branch. According to SE5, the Branch had three underground levels. On the third underground levels were only solitary cells. SE5 was never there himself, he was only at the second underground level. On the first underground level were solitary and community cells, an area for the guards, a kitchen and a shower. SE5 said there were around 20 community cells, but he was not able to estimate the number of solitary cells. According to Deußing, SE5 described that the first underground level was 'for the privileged': disgraced Shabiha members or those who were about to be released. The food there was better and one could see the sky. According to SE5, it was impossible to see the sky from the second underground floor. The light there was solely artificial.

Regarding hierarchies, SE5 told the BKA that the guards were subordinate to the interrogation officers. He was able to tell that from the fact that guards addressed interrogation officers calling them "Sidi" and that the interrogation officers were very harsh with the guards.

In terms of overall detention situation, SE5 described that the community cell where he was detained was around 4x6 meters with around 50 detainees in it. They had to sleep in shifts and some even slept on some kind of mezzanine above the toilet. According to SE5, the food was good during his first detention. People were usually detained for forty days and got food twice per day.

Regarding interrogations, SE5 told the BKA that he was interrogated three times during his first detention. He was interrogated twice at Al-Khatib and once at Branch 285. Deußing recalled that SE5 first said he did not experience violence at the interrogations but received 'light hits' from a guard on his way to the first interrogation. The interrogation officer told SE5 that although they would have different opinions, he would 'try to find a way' - SE5 was interrogated about his Facebook account and his activities as part of the opposition. Deußing said that there was apparently a break during SE5's first interrogation, due to the interrogation officer making phone calls. During this break, SE5 had to wait in the hallway where he was beaten and insulted by guards walking by. Deußing added that SE5's second interrogation was similar. It was thematically connected to the first one and SE5 described to the BKA that the interrogation officer 'played psycho-games'. SE5 said the guard pushed him during the interrogation. He was not beaten on his way to the interrogation, but during the breaks. Deußing said SE5 initially told the Swedish Police that he was not subjected to torture but then explained to the BKA that he simply did not consider the beatings to qualify as torture.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked Deußing what SE5 meant by 'psycho-games'. Deußing explained that SE5 told him about a situation where he was taken to the interrogation room and the guard hit him. The interrogation officer was rather friendly but SE5 said it was faked. Deußing further explained that regarding the situation of fellow detainees, SE5 told him that it would be normal to hear screams of torture in the cells all around the clock. One could hear them in particular when one was called for interrogation and had to go to the front part of the cell, close to the door. People were tortured in front of the cell, so one could hear them when close to the door inside the cell. SE5 further said he witnessed Falaqa and saw a detainee hanging from the ceiling by his wrists. SE5 added he later saw this detainee when he was green and blue and only wearing underpants. SE5 also heard electro shocks and witnessed arbitrary beatings with a green hose.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript of the questioning according to which SE5 described that when a guard pushed him, the interrogation officer who was present told the guard to leave SE5 alone since they would be friends and surely find a way to cooperate. Deußing confirmed that SE5 told him that.

Regarding torture methods, Wiedner wanted to know if SE5 saw Shabeh or was told about it by others. Deußing explained that when they were talking about fellow detainees, SE5 mentioned this method, but Deußing was not sure whether SE5 saw it himself or heard about it.

Wiedner said according to the BKA's transcript, SE5 was asked about torture methods and replied that he saw beatings with the green hose and Shabeh. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner asked how SE5 was able to witness that, how he could see it. Deußing said SE5 explained to the BKA that the detainees were not blindfolded when they were inside the cells. They were only blindfolded when they were outside the cells, in particular on the way to interrogations. When their names were called to take them to interrogation, they had to go to the front area from where they could witness what was happening in front of the cell.

Wiedner confirmed that the transcript of the questioning states the same. He went on to ask Deußing if SE5 met injured detainees. Deußing recalled SE5 describing that he again met the detainee whom he had seen before when he was subjected to Shabeh. The detainee asked the guard why he was tortured and the guard hit him on his head, so that the head bumped against a wall and started bleeding.

Wiedner asked if there were assaults inside the cell. Deußing said SE5 told him that guards entered the cell to pour water over the detainees. The guards also arbitrarily beat people inside the cell. Falaqa was however mainly used outside the cells.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript according to which SE5 said that detainees were doused with water and arbitrarily beaten. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner further wanted to know whether SE5 saw corpses, dead bodies, deceased persons. According to Deußing, SE5 did not witness anything like that during his first detention at Al-Khatib Branch.

Regarding SE5's detention periods, Wiedner recalled that SE5 was first arrested in [REDACTED] 2011 and asked Deußing how long SE5 was detained. Deußing said SE5 was detained for 60 days in total. He spent 45-55 days at Al-Khatib Branch before he was taken to Branch 285 where he was detained for around ten days, and then taken to Adra prison.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript according to which SE5 explained that he was detained for 35-45 days at Al-Khatib Branch, then ten to twelve days at Branch 285 and was transferred to Adra prison after that. Wiedner wanted to know how SE5 was released. Deußing said SE5 was transferred to a court in Douma where he had to sign a declaration that he would never participate in demonstration or conduct opposition activities again. He was released after that.

Wiedner asked if there was a trial and a judgment. Deußing denied, recalling that SE5 described it as a mere formality.

Wiedner wanted to know more about SE5's second detention which lasted from late [REDACTED] until [REDACTED]. He asked Deußing about the periods SE5 spent at Al-Khatib Branch during this time. Deußing explained that SE5 was detained at Al-Khatib Branch for around half a year. However, he was taken back and forth to Branch 285.

Deußing said if he remembered correctly, SE5 said he was transferred to Adra prison after five months. Deußing added that according to SE5, his second detention was worse than the first and the first was 'a nice walk' compared to the second detention.

Wiedner asked if [at SE5's second detention] SE5 was detained somewhere else before he was taken to Al-Khatib. Deußing said SE5 was first detained at Division 40 for several days. Deußing remembered SE5 telling him that he was tricked and first stayed at Hafez Makhoul's Division 40 before he was taken to Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know if SE5 was put in front of a court at his second detention. Deußing recalled that SE5 was taken to a court during his second detention. When SE5 was at Adra prison, he was taken to a military court in Mezzeh where some kind of indictment was read out, accusing him of supporting and financing terrorists. Deußing said SE5 was irritated when a CD or USB stick was mentioned as main piece of evidence in this indictment, since it never existed according to SE5. Deußing said SE5 was eventually released because his wife paid bribes to Shabiha members. These bribes were also the reason why SE5's name was taken off the travel ban list so he could eventually leave Syria.

Wiedner asked if SE5 was an important member of the opposition. Deußing recalled SE5 extensively talking about his activities starting in 1987. SE5 told the BKA that he was working from the undergrounds until 2000 when he joined the [REDACTED]. When the [REDACTED] was prohibited, SE5 was immediately arrested by the Political Security but released thanks to human rights organizations. After the beginning of the conflict, SE5 started organizing and participating in demonstrations. SE5 told the BKA that his name was therefore third on the wanted list.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the subject matter of SE5's interrogations at Branch 251. Deußing recalled SE5 describing how he was called to Tawfiq Younes' office. SE5 said he did not know this person back then but made the connection afterwards. Tawfiq Younes made it clear to SE5 that he should cooperate 'to find a way.' Deußing said "recruiting" would probably be the wrong term in this context, however, according to SE5, Tawfiq Younes tried to convince SE5 to work for the government and influence the opposition.

Wiedner asked how SE5 later identified Tawfiq Younes. Deußing said he could not remember what SE5 said in this regard.

Wiedner said according to the BKA transcript, SE5 said he later saw pictures of Tawfiq Younes and recognized him. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know how SE5 described Tawfiq Younes' office. Deußing recalled SE5 saying that it was a big office with a wooden table, a picture of Bashar Al-Assad, and two Syrian flags.

Wiedner again referred to the BKA's transcript, saying that according to SE5 there was a picture of Al-Assad (no first name mentioned in the transcript) hanging in the office with a Syrian flag left and right of it. There was further a bowl with fruits and a big TV. Deußing again confirmed.

Wiedner asked if the office was in the same building or a different building than the cells. Deußing said he asked SE5 about that. SE5 told him that the office was further away from the cells because one could not hear any screams there. SE5 did not know if it was the same building or which floor it was.

Wiedner referred to the BKA's transcript according to which SE5 said he was taken upstairs but could not estimate the distance very well since he was blindfolded. He assumed that the office was in the same building as the cells but did not know exactly. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner recalled SE5 telling the BKA about Falaqa and Shabeh, and asked Deußing whether SE5 mentioned other torture methods as well. Deußing said SE5 told him about arbitrary beatings with a green plastic hose and cables. SE5 also said he heard electro shocks.

Wiedner wanted to know more about SE5's arrival at the Branch for his first detention. Deußing said SE5 described to the BKA that he was first taken to the Political Security in Douma to identify his mobile phone. He was then transferred to Al-Khatib with the same bus that was used to arrest him. SE5 was blindfolded, Deußing said he thinks SE5 said a bag was pulled over his head. However, SE5 could see that the bus had curtains because when he was arrested, he was not properly blindfolded, but his shirt was pulled over his head, so that he could still see some things. On the ride to Al-Khatib SE5 and other detainees were beaten and insulted by the guards and forced to praise Al-Assad.

Wiedner intervened, asking Deußing how long SE5's transfer to the Branch took. Deußing recalled that SE5 told him that the way from Douma to Al-Khatib was usually short, but it felt very long to him. It would usually take 15 minutes but to SE5 it felt like 45 minutes.

Wiedner asked Deußing to continue. Deußing said when SE5 was taken off the bus and had to go downstairs, he was beaten by guards, which would be "the classical welcoming party."

Wiedner asked if anyone was informed about SE5's whereabouts. Deußing recalled that no one was informed by official authorities. According to Deußing, SE5 managed to inform his relatives because a guard gave him a pen. SE5 hid the pen and when one of his fellow detainees was released, SE5 wrote the names of the other detainees on the inside of the jeans of the detainee who was about to be released. This person was then released and able to contact some relatives.

Wiedner recalled SE5 mentioning the name Raslan and asked Deußing whether SE5 ever personally met Raslan. Deußing denied, saying that SE5 told him he only knew the name from other detainees' conversations. SE5 never saw this person.

Wiedner asked if SE5 heard concrete descriptions of Raslan from other detainees. Deußing said he does not think that SE5 mentioned something in this regard. SE5 rather told Deußing that the name Raslan was mentioned in the context of interrogations, when others were called for interrogation and those who stayed in the cell said they hoped this person would not be taken to Raslan.

Regarding hierarchies described by SE5, Wiedner wanted to know from Deußing whether SE5 also described hierarchies between guards. Deußing affirmed, saying that according to SE5, the guards who tortured were higher-ranking than those who only supervised detainees.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the general situation at the BKA's questioning of SE5, whether SE5 was cooperating or hesitant. Deußing recalled that SE5 provided particularly extensive information about himself and his political activities. During the entire questioning, SE5 was willing to directly answer concrete questions. There was no equivocation on SE5's side, he tried to directly answer all questions.

Wiedner asked if there were problems in communication. Deußing denied, explaining that as usual, he assured that the witness and the interpreter were communicating well. SE5 affirmed that this was the case. Everything was re-translated to SE5 who signed at the bottom of every page and made one correction to the transcript. Deußing added that the re-translation took more than one hour.

Wiedner confirmed, saying that according to the transcript, the questioning started at 10AM, and the re-translation was done from 5:11PM until 6:39PM.

The Prosecutors did not have any questions for Deußing.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker said he had only a few questions. He first wanted to know what SE5 told CCI Deußing about how easy or difficult it was to find out the names of interrogation officers. Deußing recalled SE5 saying that Al-Khatib Branch was a world of its own where it was hard to find out names. When Deußing asked SE5 how he heard the name Raslan, SE5 told him that he heard it from other detainees. SE5 further said that the name might have been mentioned during other interrogations.

Böcker asked Deußing how he would value the truthfulness of SE5 descriptions, referring to the fact that the cells were in the basement and that according to the transcript, SE5 told the BKA that 'everything was relative' at the cells. Deußing explained that SE5 precisely said that in relation to the name Anwar Raslan. SE5 said he could not confirm if the name was correct since he never saw this person himself.

Böcker concluded SE5 consequently said one would not know what was the truth and what was not. Deußing confirmed.

Böcker asked if SE5 heard that someone was interrogated by Anwar Raslan. Deußing explained that SE5 did not have a direct conversation with others about Raslan. He only heard the name in conversations between other detainees.

Böcker wanted to know if someone told SE5 that he [the other person] was interrogated by Raslan. Deußing denied. Böcker said according to the Transcript, SE5 replied to this question that he was not sure and could not remember.

Böcker recalled Deußing asking SE5 about the course of his two interrogations at Branch 251. Böcker wanted to know how the interrogation officer was acting with SE5 at the first interrogation. Deußing explained that both interrogations happened during SE5's first detention at the Branch. Deußing said he and SE5 did not talk about SE5's second detention in 2012. The interrogation officer at SE5's first interrogation told him that although they would have different opinions, they would surely find a way/solution. SE5 did not have to endure violence during the interrogation, but during the breaks. SE5 described this violence as systematic: he had to wait in a hallway facing the wall. Every guard who walked by beat him.

Böcker wanted to know how SE5 was addressed at the first interrogation. Deußing said he thinks SE5 was called by his name. However, on the way to interrogations, detainees were only addressed with numbers, to make sure that no one would find out who else is detained there by hearing names.

Böcker asked if the interrogation officer was the same for SE5's second interrogation or if it was someone else. Deußing said he thinks it was the same one and SE5 was able to recognize the voice.

Böcker wanted to know whether the content of the second interrogation was following the first and if it was referred to information from the first interrogation. Deußing affirmed, saying he already told the court about that.

Böcker asked if there were orders regarding SE5's blindfolds. Deußing said he thinks that SE5 was told at the first interrogation to take the blindfolds off, but the interrogation officer was standing behind him.

Böcker referred to the BKA's transcript according to which SE5 said that he was allowed to take off his blindfolds at the second interrogation and that an interrogation officer was standing behind him on this occasion. However, according to the transcript SE5 did not see a tracksuit. Deußing said SE5 saw the tracksuit at the first interrogation.

Böcker referred to the ‘psycho-games’ that SE5 mentioned and asked Deußing if SE5 made a timely connection between physical actions and what happened in the interrogation room. Deußing said SE5 was pushed inside the interrogation room by a guard when the interrogation officer told the guard to stop because they would ‘all like to cooperate.’

Böcker asked Deußing what exactly, objectively speaking, was part of the ‘psycho-games’. Böcker referred to the situation when the guard was told to not use violence, however, SE5 said he was then subjected to violence during the interrogation breaks. Böcker asked if this contrast was the ‘psycho-game’. Deußing confirmed that SE5 described the situation as Böcker just recalled it. Deußing added that what exactly made SE5 call a practice ‘psycho-games’ would be transcribed. Deußing further explained that according to SE5 his time in detention was torture. SE5 also said that although the interrogation officer appeared friendly, it was only a fake.

Böcker asked if someone died during SE5’s time in detention. Deußing said he already told the court that this was not the case.

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking what Tawfiq Younes wanted from SE5. Deußing said Younes wanted to convince SE5 to cooperate and influence the opposition. Wiedner confirmed that according to the transcript, SE5 said he was a longstanding member of the opposition and therefore had a certain influence.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Anna Oehmichen recalled that SE5’s family did not receive information about him from official authorities. She asked Deußing if SE5 as a member of the opposition was prepared for that. Deußing said that a fellow detainee who was released smuggled names of other detainees out of the prison, because SE5 wrote them on the inside of this detainee’s jeans.

Oehmichen affirmed that Deußing already described this but wanted to know whether SE5 was prepared for this due to being a member of the opposition. Oehmichen referred to the transcript of SE5’s police questioning, according to which SE5 denied that his family was informed about his whereabouts but said that as a member of the opposition he ‘knew what one can do in this case.’ Deußing confirmed that if it was transcribed like that, SE5 said it that way.

Deußing was dismissed as a witness at 10:27AM.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced a 15-minute break for the interpreter to recover.

Administrative matters

Kerber announced that the Court received an additional expert statement from the Max-Planck-Institute [Kerber did not mention the precise name of the institute] regarding §240 StGB [coercion]. Regarding the further schedule of the trial day, Kerber explained that the Court would now hear two statements, one from the Prosecutors and one from Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen and after that maybe visually inspect documents and eventually discuss the further proceedings in the trial without the public being present.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he and his colleague would also need some time to talk to their client. Judge Kerber affirmed that everything would be arranged so they could have thirty minutes.

[The following is a recreation of the Prosecutors statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Statement regarding the Defense's request to take evidence dated September 9, 2021 [TR#46, day 93;PW3].

The Prosecutors object to summons and hear [PW3 93] as a witness

Reasoning:

- I) PW3_93 is supposed to confirm (i) that Anwar Raslan helped him to be released [from Al-Khatib Branch], (ii) Anwar Raslan's friendly and pro-opposition attitude, (iii) that Anwar Raslan never ordered torture, (iv) that Anwar Raslan and PW3 worked together for the opposition, (v) that members of Division 40 conducted interrogations at Al-Khatib Branch without Anwar Raslan or other employees of the Branch being present.
- II) Lacking a proper request to take evidence, the Defense's request is not to be granted. The defense did not submit a request in accordance with § 244 (1) StPO.
  - 1) The request is too vague, regarding Anwar Raslan's alleged help for PW3_93 to be released since it remains unclear when and how PW3_93 was arrested and released. The claim is further irrelevant to the question of the Accused's guilt because helping someone in one case does not mean that the Accused did not commit the other crimes he is charged of.
  - 2) Attitude and sympathizing opinion of the Accused are mere evaluations by PW3 and not concrete observations.
  - 3) It remains unclear how PW3_93 should prove that Anwar Raslan treated certain detainees well and did not torture them. The request is lacking connectivity in this regard. PW3 can only testify about his own experiences, regarding others, PW3_93's testimony would be vague since he can only testify about what he himself witnessed. Since he was not constantly accompanying Anwar Raslan, he could not have witnessed how Anwar Raslan behaved and treated others.
  - 4) The Accused's activities for the opposition are irrelevant regarding the question of guilt.
  - 5) The same is the case regarding independent interrogations conducted by members of Division 40. The evidence presented and heard so far does not provide any indications that this was the case at all. Even if members of Division 40 independently conducted interrogations at Branch 251, it does not preclude that personnel of Branch 251 did not conduct interrogations and did not torture detainees. Connectivity is also lacking here as it is left open how PW3_93 witnessed such interrogations by Division 40.
- III) Ex officio judicial enquiry as provided in § 244 (2) StPO is not applicable here since PW3_93's testimony has no apparent value for examining the truth. With regard to § 244 (5) StPO one must note that after 90 trial days, it is not obligatory to try to summons and hear witnesses based abroad. There is no adequate balance between efforts to hear this witness and findings added to the court proceedings.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Anna Oehmichen read out a statement regarding the Defense's request to visually inspect Google Maps screenshots.

[The following is a recreation of Dr. Oehmichen's statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Plaintiff Counsel's Statement regarding the Defense's request to visually inspect screenshots from Google Maps, dated September 9, 2021[TR#46, day 93]

Representing P50, the signatory objects to visually inspecting screenshots from Google Maps in court.

The requested evidence is improper and in the sense of § 244 (3) s. 3 StPO unnecessary to establish the truth.

- I) It shall be proven that P50 was detained at Kafar Souseh and not Al-Khatib Branch. However, the requested evidence is improper if the fact can be established by life experience. The time displayed in Google Maps varies based on the traffic situation: For the day of P50's arrest at 8AM Google Maps determined a 20–24-minute drive from P50's place of arrest to Al-Khatib Branch. For 8PM on the same day, a 22–28-minute drive was determined. The requested evidence is therefore no proof of how long the drive should have taken.

P50 estimated that the drive took ten minutes. However, this was only a guess and P50 explicitly stated that he was in shock and time might have passed quicker. In addition, vehicles of the intelligence services are not bound by speed limits like regular vehicles. They are therefore faster. P50 further said that there were no stops on the way. Google Maps, however, calculates the time based on current situation of traffic and necessary stops like for example check points.

The place where P50 was arrested is located in an area which is heavily destroyed nowadays. A calculation based on today's circumstances cannot provide information about how long the ride would have taken back then.

- II) The requested evidence is not necessary to determine the truth because it does not reasonably contribute to establishing the facts. It becomes clear from P50's testimony that he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch, because he was told by fellow detainees that they were at Al-Khatib Branch. Further, most of his fellow detainees were from Harasta and Douma which is the area that Al-Khatib Branch was in charge of. P50's descriptions of the place are also similar to what other witnesses told the Court in terms of size of the solitary cell and the TV for the guards.

The visual inspection of the Google Maps Screenshot from September 9, 2021 is therefore not necessary to determine the truth and further unsuited to do so.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he wanted to make a statement replying to Oehmichen's statement. Böcker said it would be obvious that Oehmichen's statement was only made to provide evidence in her own favor. Oehmichen replied, saying she wants to defend herself against such accusations. She only made this statement because the defense accused her client [P50] of providing contradictory information. Her statement was therefore only in regard to her client's credibility and in no way to establish her own evidence.

The court interpreter agreed to Judge Kerber's request to continue without a break.

Kerber read out a decision by the Judges regarding the Defense's request to get access to the [Federal Prosecutor General Office's] GBA's structural investigation.

[The following is a recreation of the Judges' decision, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Court Decision regarding the Defense's request dated September 1 and August 26, 2021.

The Defense's request to obtain access to the Federal Prosecutor General Office's file of the structural investigation is denied.

The Judges refer to their reasoning previously provided in their decision dated August 26, 2021. In light of the scope of the file, only limited access would be relevant to the present case.

There is no support for the allegation that there was a delay in disclosing transcripts.

Regarding P36: he was interviewed by the BAMF on [REDACTED]. The LKA [REDACTED] then questioned him on [REDACTED] and [REDACTED]. The transcripts of the questionings were transferred to the court by the GBA on [REDACTED]. P36 stated that as a doctor he was called to the Air Force Intelligence. In the following police questioning, P36 spoke about his perceptions of the Syrian conflict, the use of poison gas, explosions, the work of doctors, and hierarchies at the intelligence services. The transcript was heavily redacted regarding names of patients and other sensitive information. P36 further mentioned that he worked at the basement of the intelligence service in a building next to the Red Crescent Hospital. He was then specifically asked about this and mentioned Al-Khatib Branch for the first time. The procedure for the questioning and the immediate transfer of information cannot be criticized. There was no apparent delay and no indications that the structural investigation contains other information relevant to the present trial.

Before closing the trial session for the day, Judge Kerber thanked the court interpreter.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:10AM.

Trial Day 95 – September 30, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with three spectators and two journalists in the audience. As on the previous day, only one court interpreter was present. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer was substituted by Dr. Stolle.

Testimony of Mr. Schmidt

Criminal Chief Inspector Björn Schmidt from the LKA Berlin was informed of his rights and duties as a witness and denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber told Schmidt that there were certain discrepancies between P46's testimonies. She wanted to know how Schmidt's questioning of P46 went, how the re-translation was conducted, how P46 behaved, and how they were able to communicate. Schmidt explained that the date for the questioning of P46 was arranged with P46's Counsel Dr. Stolle who was present during the questioning. There was further an Arabic language interpreter present. However, P46 said at the very beginning that he speaks German very well and did not need an interpreter. According to Schmidt, P46's German is very good indeed. Schmidt informed P46 about his rights and duties and started the questioning at around 9:30AM. It lasted until 4:30PM.

Kerber asked if the transcript of the questioning was translated and read out to P46. Schmidt explained to the Court that whenever P46 needed clarification or certain terms or did not know some words, he consulted the interpreter. However, he did not consult the interpreter during the re-translation of the transcript.

Kerber wanted to know if P46 read the transcript. Schmidt confirmed.

Kerber asked if P46 made any corrections to the transcript. Schmidt said he does not know.

Kerber further wanted to know if P46 mentioned Mr. Anwar Al-Bunni. Schmidt affirmed and explained that P46 mentioned the name at the beginning of the questioning, saying Al-Bunni was an acquaintance of his; a Syrian lawyer and human rights activist who is collecting witness testimonies. According to Schmidt, P46 was in contact with Al-Bunni because P46 wanted to make a movie about him.

Kerber asked about pictures of Anwar Raslan. Schmidt said he presented a photo array to P46 who immediately identified Anwar Raslan. Schmidt said he was perplexed by how fast P46 identified the Accused. He therefore asked P46 whether Raslan was often present in the media and whether P46 knew Raslan's picture from the media or from his own experiences in detention in Syria. P46 said he could not exactly say, because his shirt was pulled over his head so that he could not clearly see the guards and interrogation officers. However, when his blindfolds were taken off, he saw a man with a striking birthmark on the left side of his face. This man was also wearing glasses and had thin hair. P46 added that the person in the picture whom he identified as Anwar Raslan also had a birthmark. However, P46 also said that before he saw Raslan's picture in the media, he was in contact with Anwar Al-Bunni. That was when he saw the picture and recognized Raslan.

Kerber asked if that was also when P46 heard Raslan's name. Schmidt confirmed that P46 learned the name Anwar Raslan from Anwar Al-Bunni.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Wiedner told Schmidt that the Court is precisely interested in this issue: P46 said something different in court. Wiedner asked Schmidt what exactly he remembered P46 saying regarding the picture: from whom he got it, where he first saw it, and how he recognized the person. Schmidt said P46 told him that he first saw a picture of Anwar Raslan when he was with Al-Bunni. That was before he saw the picture in the media. P46 told Al-Bunni that he knows the person and made the connection between this man and his own experiences.

Wiedner referred to the LKA's transcript of the questioning, according to which P46 said that before he saw Anwar Raslan's picture in the media, he was in contact with Anwar Al-Bunni, a Syrian lawyer and human rights activist who is collecting witness testimonies. Schmidt confirmed.

Wiedner further recalled P46 telling the LKA that he wanted to make a movie about Al-Bunni. He saw a picture of Anwar Raslan in this context and realized that he somehow knew this person. Schmidt confirmed again.

Wiedner continued citing from the LKA's transcript, saying that when asked whether P46 knows Raslan from his own experiences or from Anwar Al-Bunni, P46 said he had to lower his eyes and was afraid [during detention]. He was not sure if he recognized the person from his detention or not. Schmidt confirmed that P46 said that.

Wiedner said P46 told the Court that the transcript was wrong. Schmidt replied that Dr. Stolle was also present at the questioning and could confirm what happened. Wiedner said the Court would now ask Schmidt and not Dr. Stolle. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened saying he would think about [calling Dr. Stolle as a witness in this regard].

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Klinge asked Schmidt about his impression of P46, if he was cooperative, nervous, nice, or opposing. Schmidt said he cannot say anything negative about P46. P46 was very interested in resolving the matter and describing his experiences. He did not behave strangely.

Klinge wanted to know whether P46 tried to remember or started fantasizing at one point. Schmidt said no, he was under the impression that P46 described how he experienced things.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker referred to his notes of P46's in-court testimony, according to which P46 said he did not see a picture of Anwar Raslan when he was with Anwar Al-Bunni. Böcker asked Schmidt if he understood that differently during the questioning of P46. Schmidt said he understood that during the preparations of the movie [about Anwar Al-Bunni] Anwar Al-Bunni showed P46 a picture of Anwar Raslan.

Böcker asked if it would be correct that the name Anwar Raslan was mentioned between P46 and Anwar Al-Bunni. Schmidt affirmed.

Schmidt was dismissed as a witness.

Administrative Matters

Since the next witness was not yet at the Court, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the Court would now visually inspect two Google Maps screenshots and the information provided therein would be read out.

[two screenshots dated September 9, 2021 were shown in court and the information was read out. For purposes of witness protection, the screenshots will not be included in this report and sensitive information is redacted.]

Route 2: 23 minutes, 11.6 km

Defense Counsel Böcker confirmed upon Judge Kerber's query that the Defense's request for visual inspection would now be fulfilled.

Defense Counsel Böcker further announced that the Defense had two additional requests to take evidence which he and his colleague would now read out in court.

[The following is a recreation of the Defense's requests, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Request to summons [PW1_95], living in [REDACTED] (contact information provided by the Accused Raslan)

- 1) PW1_95 held the rank of a [REDACTED] in Syria before his defection at the end of 2012. From 2011 until 2012 he was working as [REDACTED] and head [REDACTED].

In summer 2011 PW1_95 called Anwar Raslan to tell him that members of a subdivision of Branch 251 were invading in Sayyidah Zaynab and robbed the safe of a shop-owner. They also tortured and arrested the shop-owner. PW1_95 called Anwar Raslan to ask for help since some of the men were from Division 40. Raslan, however, told PW1_95 that he could not do anything because the men would be subordinate to Hafez Makhoul, therefore others [than Raslan] would have the power.

- 2) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW1_95, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. However, the torture at the Branch cannot be attributed to him since he never ordered or exercised torture. He had no organizational or actual authority and within the margin of what he was able to do, he tried to help others, but could often not help.
- 3) The hurdles for required reachability of witnesses living abroad have to be set low for the purpose of this trial. Since this trial deals with acts committed abroad, has an international character, and is internationally recognized, the Court's efforts in determining the truth must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been applied in the past. PW1_95 is a [REDACTED] citizen and confirmed his ability to immediately travel to Koblenz to testify in court.

Request to summons [PW2_95], living in [REDACTED].

- 1) PW2_95 is a defected pilot of the Syrian Army who is living in Turkey and France. He, together with [REDACTED] and [REDACTED], helped Anwar Raslan escape Syria. PW2_95 had connections to the FSA who sent people to get Raslan out of Syria.

PW2_95 and Anwar Raslan met at the Syrian-Jordanian border and rented a flat for Raslan in Amman. PW2_95 can testify on Raslan's positive attitude towards the opposition based on the many conversations and the frequent contact the two had with each other. One to two months after the start of the uprising, Raslan was opposing the regime. Based, amongst others, on his critical attitude towards the regime, Raslan was limited in his powers. In summer 2011, Anwar Raslan told PW2_95 that he wanted to leave Syria, however, at this point it would have only been possible for him to leave the country without his family. Raslan therefore stayed and waited for a later escape, together with his family. This was only possible in fall of 2012 when Raslan immediately left the country.

- 2) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW2_95, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks a legal analysis of the issue of aiding and abetting. Raslan was doing his service as a Sunni and tried to help. He defected as soon as his family was safe. The torture that happened at the Branch cannot be attributed to Raslan since he had no influence on the acts of others at the Branch. His critical attitude towards the regime also leads to conclusions about his behavior at the Branch where he tried to help people.

- 3) The hurdles for required reachability of witnesses living abroad have to be set low for the purpose of this trial. Since this trial deals with acts committed abroad, has an international character, and is internationally recognized, the Court's efforts in determining the truth must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been applied in the past. In the case of P52 who will testify shortly, it was possible to summon and hear the witness in a very short time. PW2_95 confirmed that he is willing and able to travel and that he will appear in court.

[Another spectator took a seat in the public gallery.]

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to know whether the Defense knew PW2_95 's address in [REDACTED]. Defense Counsel Fratzky said they would not have it yet.

Judge Kerber explained that after the court interpreter explained the technical aspects to P52 and how they would translate everything with only one court interpreter, there would be a short break before P52's testimony.

Testimony of P52

P52, a 46-year-old Syrian journalist and author and former [REDACTED], now living in [REDACTED] was informed of his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the Accused by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that P52 would already know the topic for the day from his summons. She told P52 to first tell the Court who he is, how he and Anwar Raslan made contact, about P52's detention in 2011, and provide general information about Anwar Raslan, whatever he would know about him. P52 started to explain that at the beginning of 2011, when demonstrations started in Egypt and Tunisia, he and other activists also organized demonstrations in Syria to support the demonstrations abroad. They decided to have a demonstration in front of the Syrian Parliament on [REDACTED], 2011. But they decided to change the topic of the demonstration to now protest against the state of emergency which had been in place for half a century. P52 and his friends met at [REDACTED]. However, the security forces [Mukhabarat] were already informed and the place was crowded with security forces. P52 and his friends therefore decided to leave in pairs of two. P52 left together with a colleague, a journalist, when they noticed that security forces occupied the entire area. They took P52's ID and he and his friends were not allowed to go to the street leading to the Parliament, so they decided to go in a different direction. P52 told the Court that he and his friends agreed beforehand that in case they would not be able to demonstrate in front of the Parliament, they would instead meet in front of the [REDACTED] building. This company belonged to a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad. However, the Mukhabarat also occupied this area. One member of the security forces who was dressed in civilian clothes approached P52. He introduced himself to P52 and said he was [REDACTED]. This person told P52 that he was a friend of P52's late brother. P52 explained to the Court that his brother was a police officer, but died before 2011. This person further told P52 that he knew his brother well and because they were friends, he wanted to let P52 know that it is better to leave.

P52 told the Court that this person was apparently leading one of the divisions at the scene. However, P52 did not listen to his advice. He instead went to another place in the center of Damascus, [REDACTED]. He had been at this place before. When P52 was at this place, a colleague of his, a journalist called [REDACTED], called P52 on the phone to tell him that she left the scene as well but was traced by Shabiha. P52's colleague told him where she was and since it was close by, P52 went to pick her up. He saw how three Shabiha tried to beat her up. P52 and his colleague then went to the place where P52 was before but were surrounded by civilian-dressed security forces. This was when P31 met with P52 and his colleagues. P52 said that security forces approached P31 to tell him they would know where his friends were. P52 and the rest of the group therefore went to the hotel. P52 was told by a man that [security forces] would come, so P31 left and around thirty minutes later, [REDACTED] took a taxi home. Then P52 and his colleague left as well. However, as soon as they stepped outside, they were attacked by security forces and blindfolded. P52 said he was pushed inside a car where he had to sit in the middle of the backseat with guards left and right of him. P52 had to lower his head to a point where his head almost touched the floor. After a certain time, they arrived somewhere and P52 was blindfolded and had to leave the car. When he left the car, someone slapped P52 in the face and called him a traitor who conspired against the state.

P52 said he had to go upstairs on narrow, probably iron, stairs. When he arrived at a hallway, he had to stand there, facing the wall with his hands tied behind his back. P52 told the Court he did not know how long he had to wait in this position, but it felt to him like an eternity. After a while, P52 noticed that the security officer started moving quickly and acting with a certain degree of caution. P52 said "there was something in the air" when one of the security officers yelled that "the Colonel, the head of the Branch, arrived." P52 told the Court that this was the moment he realized that he was at Hafez Makhoul's Division 40. According to P52, this Division is special because it was led by a Colonel. Usually, such Divisions' head would have a higher rank like Lieutenant General.

P52 went on to describe that he was then taken to a person of whom he thought that he was Hafez Makhoul. This person wanted to know general information about P52, like personal information and his job. The man then asked P52 about his service at the Air Force. P52 explained to the Court that when he was working for the Syrian Air Force, he was interrogated several times. The man asked P52 about these interrogations and how it was possible that P52 was allowed to leave without any consequences. The man also asked P52 about [REDACTED] and why this person did not do anything about P52. The man further asked P52 about his participation in demonstrations. P52 explained to him that the demonstrations were in support of Tunisia and Egypt. The person then stopped talking and P52 was under the impression that the person got up. Indeed, the person was coming towards P52 and told him to open his mouth. P52 said the man put something in his mouth, presumably a gun barrel. He called P52 a liar and foreign agent, and said P52 organized demonstrations to force a situation like in Tunisia and Egypt where people overthrew the government. He said P52 and his friend wanted to start the same in Syria. However, according to this person the government was in control of everything and if someone tried to overthrow the government and say something against "Mister President" [security forces] would know about it and "cut your throat." P52 said the man told him that he had to stay where he was and if someone went to the streets, he would cut P52's throat. He also said to P52 that "just because you tried to save [P52's female colleague], you think you're tough guy. I show you your real value!" P52 told the Court that this was when the man ordered the guard to 'finish' P52.

The guard started beating P52 and continued kicking him when P52 was already lying on the floor. The guard was then told to drag P52 out of the room. P52 was taken back to the hallway where people were walking by. P52 had to stay there for some time before the guard was told to take P52 back to the man [whom P52 assumed it was Hafez Makhoul]. The man told P52 that he would be released on the same day but had to leave his phone and ID card at the Division. The man explained to P52 that they had their own ways of contacting P52 to tell him what to do. P52 got back home late at night on that day. On the next morning, security forces called P52's female colleague on her phone to tell her that P52 should call them back using a public phone. P52 told the Court that when he called back, a friendly person explained to him that he could come and pick up his belongings. He told P52 to come to the police station close to the building of Turkish Airlines in Damascus at 11AM sharp. P52 said after the call, he and a friend of him went to see a lawyer, Khaleel Ma'touq to get his advice. He told P52 to be cautious, it would be a dangerous situation, and P52's female colleague should stay away and watch P52.

P52 said he went to the place where he was supposed to go, but already arrived at 10:30AM. There was a young and friendly looking police officer in a stall [check-point]. P52 told the police officer that he was supposed to pick up his belongings. Because the officer did not know about P52, he made a phone call to get clarification. P52 told the Court that when the officer came back from the call, he was pale and told P52 he would not know anything about inquiry and told P52 to go away. P52 went to a nearby café from where he could watch the area. Then P52 saw a bus arriving. The bus usually had space for thirty to forty people. P52 said the bus stopped around 100 meters from where P52 was and thirty to forty people left the bus. They were carrying Syrian flags. P52 explained to the Court that shortly before this instance, he learned that Shabiha were allegedly taking people to demonstrations, pretending to be demonstrators so that they could beat up others in the streets. One would recognize them by the Syrian flag they were carrying, using shovels.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking P52 who told him [about Shabiha participating in demonstrations with flags tied to shovels.] P52 said a colleague of his who organized demonstrations told him about that but P52 did not know how his colleague knew about it. P52 went on to describe how he thought he would be beaten up as soon as he saw Shabiha getting off the bus. P52 said it was on a Friday when streets were empty and it was raining. He said he then, together with his female colleague, went back to [the lawyer] who told them that it would indeed be possible [that Shabiha were trying to beat people up by pretending to be protestors.] [The lawyer] told them that this was a special strategy by the security forces, because in light of Arab Spring, they were afraid to simply arrest people on open streets.

P52 went on to tell the Court that after this instance, he received the same phone call as before. When he was asked why he did not appear at the initial meeting, he told the person on the phone what he saw earlier. The person started laughing and telling P52 that he had a vivid imagination. He assured P52 that there was nothing and he should come and pick up his belongings. P52 said he decided to go get his belongings because he now knew that the people there were aware that he knew what happened before. P52 said when he arrived, there was a young, good-looking police officer who did not look like he was a bad person. P52 immediately told this officer what he was thinking but the officer assured that they would never do such things. After a short, friendly conversation, the officer told P52 to come inside to pick up his things and confirm receipt. P52 described to the Court how he was taken to a neighborhood with small, narrow streets. It was an old neighborhood. It felt suspicious to P52 that he was taken through this area. After a while, they arrived at a vehicle. P52 was told his papers would be inside the vehicle and when he went there he was pulled inside the vehicle. He was taken to the same Division as before. At the division, someone questioned him about [REDACTED]. P52 was beaten and asked who took pictures. P52 said he did not know what was going on, he assumed that there [at demonstrations] were people filming for TV. He was beaten even more but did not say anything. He was also again beaten in the hallway.

Later that day, at night, he was taken to a different place, downstairs in the basement. He was thoroughly frisked and had to take off all his clothes. P52 said he was able to see that he was inside a “simple room” with three other people. Torture tools like 4-wired-cables, batons, and other items were hanging on the walls. After P52 was frisked, his phone and ID were passed along from the previous Division to the new place. P52 had to confirm that it belonged to him. He then had to leave the room, was again blindfolded and taken to a small cell. The cell [zenzana – solitary cell] was located in a hallway with cells left and right. P52 was told that when someone would knock on his door, he had to turn around and put his hands behind his back. P52 said there was a small hatch in the cell door which could be opened and closed. Days passed by with P52 being taken out of the cell once or twice a day. P52 told the Court that when he had to leave the cell, he had to take off his shoes and socks, face the wall, put his hands behind his back, and was blindfolded.

He was then always taken to a room where someone was waiting for him and asking the same questions over and over again. P52 told the Court he could not remember any specific occasions, except for once when there was an apparently educated person. This person was not a member of the Mukhabarat nor an officer. The person interrogated P52 while P52 had to sit on a chair. P52 told the Court that he usually had to kneel during interrogations with his hand tied behind his back. However, this person spoke differently. He was an educated man, unlike the others. He asked P52 about his opinion on Syrian-Iranian relations and Syria’s relationship with Hezbollah. P52 described the conversation as “objective and pleasant.” The man told P52 that he saw in the media that P52 had an agreement with [REDACTED]. P52 replied that he did not have an agreement. When asked about why he would no longer have that agreement, P52 explained to the interrogator that he was no longer convinced of the agreement.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether this agreement was related to P52’s service at the Air Force. P52 said no, it was not about the Air Force but [REDACTED]. P52 said he told the interrogator that he was no longer convinced of the joint project. The interrogator then asked that P52 would, however, get good money for cooperation, which he would need. He asked P52 if it was correct that P52 would get $100,000 from the project. P52 affirmed and the interrogator told him that if he changed his opinion [and wanted to cooperate with [REDACTED] again] they [intelligence services] could contact him. P52 declined. The interrogator remained silent for a short moment before he told P52 that it would be obvious that P52 had a better source for money: he would sell Air Force secrets to Israel. P52 was dragged to the floor, beaten and insulted. The interrogator told P52 he should stay there [prison/Branch] until he would die.

Upon Judge Kerber’s request, P52 continued to describe what happened next. According to P52, he was then taken back to his cell. P52 said he was beaten all the time and his hair was shaved. He also had an injury on his head. P52 said things went on like that until [REDACTED] when he had to undergo the same procedure as usual and was taken to an interrogation room in the evening. P52 said when he took two steps inside the room, he heard a voice asking where P52’s shoes and socks are, as P52 could not be barefoot. When the guard said P52’s shoes and socks were in his cell, the person told the guard to get them. The guard was also told to take off P52’s handcuffs and blindfold. That was when P52 saw a man sitting in front of him. The man was around fifty-years-old, wearing glasses and a suit. He reached his hand to P52 and introduced himself as Colonel Anwar Raslan, head of the Interrogation Division at the Inner Security. P52 said he was allowed to put on his shoes and offered tea. Raslan also offered him a cigarette (the white ones) but P52 declined since he quit smoking. P52 said Raslan spoke about general things, for example about P52’s new novel which was banned. P52 said he was surprised that Raslan read it. They discussed the characters and spoke about the novel. From the way Raslan was talking, P52 noticed that he was educated. Raslan told P52 that he wanted to become an author as well but the way of life led him to where he was then.

P52 said they chatted for a relatively long time, around fifteen or twenty minutes. Raslan told P52 about his life: he studied law and went to the police academy. P52 told the Court that he was familiar with this curriculum vitae because his late brother's was similar. Raslan further told P52 that he became a Major and trainer at the police academy. However, he did not know P52's brother because Raslan was re-posted to State Security before P52's brother joined the police academy. Raslan then told another person 'We are ready, Sidi.' P52's hands were tied again, but he did not have to wear blindfolds. He was taken upstairs to a small square, then upstairs again for a few steps and to an office where someone was waiting. Someone said 'the Master' was waiting and a security officer took off P52's handcuffs. P52 said he immediately recognized the person waiting in the office: it was Tawfiq Younes, the head of Inner Security/Al-Khatib Branch. P52 told the Court he previously saw Younes at demonstrations.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking if Tawfiq Younes himself was present at demonstrations. P52 affirmed, saying he was the head of the Branch. P52 said someone [at a demonstration] told him that it was Tawfiq Younes, he is a tall and noticeable person. P52 went on to describe that Tawfiq Younes tried to calm P52 by telling him they would only gather to protect P52 from the Muslim Brothers who tried to kill people on open streets to start a campaign against the Mukhabarat and force a revolution like in Tunisia and Egypt. P52 said in this moment, he remembered the situation from the previous day and believed Tawfiq Younes. However, P52 showed him his injuries and asked if this is what it looks like when they tried to protect someone. Younes asked Raslan who did that [to P52] and Raslan replied that Younes would know how the guards were behaving from time to time. P52 explained to the Court that he was under the impression that Tawfiq Younes was hesitant: he started a sentence only to stop talking. It seemed to P52 as if Younes did not know what to tell him. Younes then told P52 that he would be released on the same day, however, they would stay in touch to further discuss the reasons for the demonstrations. When P52 was taken outside the room, Raslan was told to stay. P52's hands were tied again. When Raslan came a couple minutes later, he pulled P52 with him, telling him he should be grateful. Raslan was surprised that P52 was wearing handcuffs and he told the guard to take them off, since P52 would be free. The guard gave Raslan the keys and told him to do it [untie P52's hands] in his office. Raslan felt uncomfortable and again told the guard to take off P52's handcuffs. The guard gave Raslan a sign and said "do it in your office, Sidi." Raslan took P52 with him and they went downstairs. Raslan took P52 by his arm and told him that the Brigadier General told Raslan to let P52 know that he was released upon an order of the President. Raslan added that now, no one in Syria was allowed to say anything to P52. P52 showed Raslan his handcuffs and asked him to remove them. Raslan told P52 to be silent.

P52 told the Court that he was indeed released. His father was in coma at a hospital in [REDACTED] with a brain hemorrhage. P52 took his father to [REDACTED] for surgery. That was when Raslan called P52 to tell him he should come see him. P52 explained the situation with his father and the hospital to Raslan. Raslan asked P52 where exactly he was and told him he would come to P52, but he did not come. He then called again, asked about P52's father and told P52 he should come whenever he has time. P52 said he went there and the meeting took around thirty minutes. Raslan asked P52 how things [with the demonstration] were and P52 explained to him that he spent his entire time with his father. P52 told the Court that after this meeting, he took his father back to [REDACTED] and did not see Raslan again before he left Syria. P52 said he left Syria to go to [REDACTED].

P52 went on to tell the Court that after that, a friend of his, a female artist told him that Raslan would be in Jordan, and that he asked for P52's number. P52 agreed to give him his numbers and the two then had contact with each other. Raslan told P52 that he tried to reach P52 but he obviously changed his number. He also told P52 that he had been trying to defect for a longer time but he did not know anyone in the FSA, so he tried to contact P52 because he was a former officer.

P52 told the Court that they then had no contact until 2014. However, at the time when P52 was in contact with Raslan, P52 kept telling Raslan that he should [publicly] speak about the victims and all the torture. But Raslan said he did not like the media and did not want to appear on the media. Raslan said he preferred to work instead of giving interviews. However, he said that one day he would write a book about everything and P52 should help him with that.

At the end of 2013 or early 2014 – it was winter - Raslan called P52 who was in [REDACTED] at the time. P52 said Raslan was on a business trip with others who wanted to establish a ‘security apparatus’ for the opposition. P52 met with Raslan but did not ask him who he was working with. P52 said he was an author, not...

Judge Kerber intervened, asking if Raslan told P52 what this ‘apparatus’ should look like. P52 denied, adding that Raslan was reserved. He mentioned a few keywords but no details to P52. Around one week later, Raslan called P52 again and asked him whether he could come to [REDACTED]. P52 went there and saw Raslan waiting in the rain with a suitcase. Raslan quickly explained his situation to P52: Raslan and his colleagues were invited to [REDACTED] to establish the apparatus for the opposition. They stayed at a hotel but the person who invited them did not cover their expenses and disappeared. Raslan and his colleagues waited for one week but when they did not hear back from this person, they decided to go home. They were surprised that the hotel bill was not covered, so they had to use all their money to pay the hotel. Raslan was therefore bankrupt and on the streets. He asked P52 if he could stay with him until he found a solution. P52 agreed that Raslan could stay with him. At the same time, P52 had a visitor from [REDACTED]. Raslan then managed to get money to buy a ticket back to Jordan where his family was.

P52 told the Court that the next time he heard about Raslan, was when Raslan applied for Asylum in Germany. The two met for the last time in Turkey in early 2015. Meanwhile Raslan was granted asylum in Germany. However, he was concerned and said he felt under surveillance and that the [Syrian] regime tried to abduct him from Germany. Raslan told P52 about an incident in Berlin at his doctor’s medical practice. Raslan described that the last time he went to see his doctor, the appointment was deliberately rescheduled to a later time of the day. When Raslan looked outside the window [at his doctor’s practice], he was worried because he saw two men dressed in white standing next to an ambulance. Raslan concluded that the doctor postponed his appointment to anesthetize him, so that the two men could take him with them. When P52 asked Raslan why he assumed that, Raslan did not explain but said he did not do anything. P52 told the Court he then went to [REDACTED] and did not see or hear from Raslan again until he was arrested in Germany.

Judge Kerber announce that the Court would have a break soon, particularly for the interpreter to rest. Before that she wanted to know if Raslan met with P52 in [REDACTED] just to talk about him about being monitored in Germany. P52 explained that before he moved to [REDACTED], he lived in [REDACTED]. He lived in Turkey for three months. When Raslan visited Turkey, he also came to where P52 was living. They had each other’s’ number and when Raslan came to town, he visited P52 and they spent an evening together. From what Raslan told P52, P52 felt like Raslan felt safer in Turkey. P52 said he thinks Raslan’s daughter lived there as well, but he would not be sure.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Wiedner asked if it was correct that the detention that P52 described to the Court happened from [REDACTED], 2011. P52 clarified that he was arrested on [REDACTED] for three hours before he was allowed to leave in the middle of the night. On the next day, the incident with the men happened at 11AM and P52 was arrested again until [REDACTED], 2011 [around 8 days].

Wiedner recalled P52 telling the Court that he was detained at Hafez Makhoul's Division 40 and interrogated by Hafez Makhoul himself. He wanted to know if P52 was blindfolded and how he was able to see this person. P52 said as he already described, there was a certain business at the place he was detained at when someone said the head of the Division, a Colonel would come. Makhoul is the only person at the intelligence services who has the rank of a Colonel and is the head of a division.

Wiedner wanted to know if [Makhoul's] name was mentioned or if he introduced himself. P52 said neither was the case, he only assumed it. When he later met Raslan, he told P52 that he was at Division 40.

Wiedner asked when Raslan told P52 that. P52 said it was in Turkey, after Raslan defected.

Wiedner concluded that P52 met Raslan at a different place [other than Division 40]. Wiedner wanted to know if P52 saw other detainees and people being interrogated and whether he was mistreated at the prison or during interrogations at this place [where P52 met Raslan]. P52 said of course, he was beaten on every occasion, whenever he moved and injured his head.

Wiedner recalled another interrogation/meeting with a person who P52 described as 'educated' but who suddenly went angry. Wiedner asked if P52 was blindfolded at this occasion. P52 said he was blindfolded, adding that as he mentioned earlier, one would always be blindfolded at Al-Khatib Branch. P52 said he could not see who interrogated him on this occasion, he would not know who the person was.

Wiedner wanted to know if it was not Raslan then, or if it could have been Raslan as well. P52 said he was not sure. The person was very upset and beat him.

Wiedner recalled P52 mentioning 'Al-Khatib' and asked P52 whether he knew that he was at Al-Khatib when he was there. P52 denied, adding that he only knew after Anwar Raslan introduced himself as the Head of Investigations at Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner asked if Raslan said that they were at Al-Khatib Branch. P52 affirmed.

Wiedner said P52 already described to the Court what his first conversation with Raslan, amongst others, was about. Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan, apart from his curriculum vitae, said anything else about himself, for example his political attitude. P52 said Raslan did not say anything about [his political opinion]. He avoided to ask P52 why he and his friends were demonstrating. He only asked P52 questions about P52.

Wiedner explained that P52 was summoned to testify because he could allegedly say something about Anwar Raslan's critical position towards the Syrian regime. Wiedner asked P52 what he could say in this regard. P52 explained that during their first conversation, they did not talk about anything like that but P52 was under the impression that Raslan was not particularly supportive of the regime. However, they spoke about personal things and Raslan's dream to become an author. Raslan indirectly tried to explain to P52 why he was working for the intelligence services. P52 told the Court that one must say in this regard that anyone who joined the intelligence services enjoyed a certain trust by the regime.

According to P52, Raslan was selected because of his good performance, because of his excellent performance during his studies. P52 said he assumed this was an indirect message from Raslan to let P52 know that it was not his wish [to work for the intelligence services]. P53 concluded it was an indirect hint.

Wiedner wanted to know if P52 knew Raslan's name before his detention. P52 denied.

Wiedner asked if P52 would recognize Raslan somewhere in the courtroom. P52 said of course.

Wiedner asked whom he would recognize. [P52 pointed at Anwar Raslan] saying he was sitting over there.

Wiedner recalled that Raslan took P52 to Tawfiq Younes. Wiedner said not every detainee would necessarily receive such a treatment and wanted to know from P52 what he thinks was the reason for this meeting. P52 explained that it was a very confusing situation at the beginning of the Arab Spring, the beginning of the revolution. [The Syrian government] did not know what to do if similar things would happen in Syria. Eleven days after P52 was arrested in Syria, his name was all over the media. When he was released, he saw his name on every news channel, in every news banner on TV. P52 told the Court that he thinks it would have been unfortunate to hide him for a longer time. He added that there was some truth behind the statement that he was released upon Bashar Al-Assad's order.

P52 recalled that he earlier mentioned his work and thinking about a project with a Syrian director, a friend of Bashar Al-Assad who later became [REDACTED]. This person would also be the one deciding how Bashar Al-Assad would present himself on the media. P52 concluded that this person might have mentioned P52's name to Bashar Al-Assad.

Wiedner asked P52 if he was a prominent person by the time he was arrested. P52 affirmed, adding that in [REDACTED]. In 2008 [REDACTED]. He was also working for certain Arabic newspapers, amongst others [REDACTED], and gave many interviews. [REDACTED] wanted to work on a project with P52.

Wiedner asked what Anwar Raslan wanted from P52 when he first contacted him after his defection; why he contacted him. P52 said that he himself was some kind of a spokesperson of the opposition. He assumed that Raslan wanted to let him know that he defected and was pro-opposition. He wanted to emphasize that if it would have been possible for him, he would have defected and contacted P52 earlier. P52 told the Court he thinks that Raslan thought P52 would play a big role in the events because he was a former officer. However, P52 had to deny that.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Klinge said there would be several reports on the role of intelligence services in Syria before and after the revolution. Defense Counsel Böcker asked Klinge to repeat what he just said because Böcker could not hear him well. Klinge repeated the sentence and asked P52 about his take on that. P52 explained that he was born in 1975 and ever since he could remember, intelligence services would rule Syria using torture and disappearances. Not only the immediately affected persons would suffer from that, but everyone close to them.

Klinge wanted to know since when torture was used, if there was a certain development, and what kind of torture was exactly used. P52 said he did not know if there was a development but he would be sure that although the spying method might have changed, the torture stayed the same.

Klinge asked when the Syrian intelligence services started using torture in Syria. P52 said since he was five years old, since he was able to remember. His father was arrested and tortured. He kept telling his story until he died a year ago.

Klinge wanted to know if P52 knew Al-Khatib Branch before he was arrested there. P52 said of course he knew the Branch, it would be very/relatively known among Syrian intellectuals. According to P52, the Branch would be in charge of spying on educated people and the cultural scene. It would be the brain of the State Security, so to say.

Klinge asked if P52 knew that before his detention or if he only heard about the reputation [of the Branch] after his detention. P52 said Al-Khatib was already known before his detention. Its role was particularly known among intellectuals.

Klinge wanted to know if on [REDACTED] 2011 when P52 was taken to Branch, everything was like P52 expected it based on the reputation and rumors. P52 said he wanted to clarify that he was taken to Al-Khatib [one day later than Klinge said]. But everything was like he imagined it.

Klinge asked how exactly it was. How the hierarchies, hygienic condition, and detention situation were. P52 said he could only describe his personal view: he was allowed to use the toilet twice a day. He got food three times a day. The food usually consisted of potatoes or an egg and only once did they get a tomato. According to P52, he never got fruits.

Klinge asked if the food was enough. P52 denied.

Klinge recalled that P52 was detained in a solitary cell and asked him whether he was still able to see other detainees. P52 said he did not see others, but was able to hear them in their cells. He said the next cell was only two meters away, opposite his cell.

Klinge asked if he was able to communicate with other detainees. P52 denied.

Klinge wanted to know if there were also communal cells or only solitary cells. P52 said he assumes that there were only solitary cells in the area where his cell was, because every time a person was called from the cell, only one detainee reacted to the call.

Klinge asked if P52 witnessed interrogations of other detainees. P52 said he heard voices and noises from a place outside of where he was. He heard the voices of people who were beaten, particularly around midnight and late at night. P52 once saw a person who was tortured but other than that, he only heard people being tortured.

Klinge wanted to know if P52 heard voices or rather screams. P52 said of course he heard how people were begging.

Klinge asked what they begged for. P52 explained to the Court that the detainees said that they already said everything they knew but the beating continued. P52 said he was under the impression that torture never stopped regardless of what one was saying. He also felt that detainees who were interrogated on the previous day were taken to be tortured again and again, and worse, in order to get more information, even if they would not know more.

Klinge wanted to know what the screams felt like to P52. P52 said he expected it to be like that, so it did not have a big impact on him but the situation he described...

Klinge intervened, asking if P52 was not afraid to be next. P52 said of course he was.

Klinge further wanted to know how P52 would explain that he was not tortured like that. P52 said because he was famous, they were afraid that the media would find out and make a big deal of it. He said this was even more the case, since the incidents surrounding the Arab Spring were very similar. P52 added that the person he saw who had been tortured, was tortured like hell.

Klinge said he could unfortunately not spare P52 of describing the situation. P52 said it happened on [REDACTED]. There was a young man who was tortured every night. He was screaming very loudly and P52 could hear him scream at night, although the room [where this person was tortured] was in a different area. P52 recalled that the young man managed to get out of that room and was running through the hallway. The guards were running behind him, beating him. P52 told the Court that he saw this scenery because it happened at night, and the hatch in his cell's door was usually opened at night to let in some fresh air and check on the detainees inside the cell. When P52 heard the young man, he looked through the hatch, although the detainees were actually not allowed to look. The young man was wearing long cotton underpants and his hands were tied behind his back. Two security guards were running behind him and beat him with a four-wired cable. The man was shouting for help. Suddenly, P52 heard one saying "shilah!" which means "take it away/pick it up". The young man replied he would do it but asked the guards not to beat him during that. P52 said he first did not know what was going on, when the man fell on his face. P52 then noticed that the man pooped in his pants and because his hands were tied, he started 'picking up' the feces by licking it. When he was done, the two guards returned and started beating him. The man did not swallow and spit the feces at the wall. P52 said the man therefore had to lick the wall as well.

Klinge asked P52 to describe the room with the torture tools where P52 had to undress. P52 told the Court that there was a four-wired cable (four cables twisted into one) in this room, as well as batons. P52 said this was everything he saw in the short time he was in this room. It was rather an office, no torture room. There was a space for files on the wall. P52's items were packed in a bag, sealed, stamped and put in a cupboard.

Klinge wanted to know if there was an application to hang people. P52 said he did not see one. He was then blindfolded and not tortured like that, and did not see anything like that.

Klinge said there was a system of torture in Syria that existed for decades. He asked P52 what one had to do to get promoted within this system, to get a higher position in the hierarchy. P52 told the Court that there would be two ways. The first one would be to be very loyal to the regime, this would be the main way. The other way would be for people with a particularly good performance. These people would be chosen to get the work done because the people who are loyal only had very limited intellectual capacities.

Klinge wanted to know what kind of performance was required at the intelligence services. P52 explained that in this case, one had to be intelligent and have a good academic record. One should not have a clear political opinion, neither pro nor contra regime. As soon as one would be on "their" side, one would get certain privileges to secure loyalty. P52 said the same would be the case at other places, like the Center for Scientific Research. P52 said the center recruited scientists to produce weapons and step by step they would become part of the regime.

Klinge asked what P52 thought the head of the interrogation division at Al-Khatib was required to do. P52 said this person was required to be knowledgeable and intelligent. P52 said in case of Colonel Anwar Raslan he could provide an example: the head of the Branch is a very loyal person who had more capable subordinates that got the work done. The head was incapable but loyal, and working for the government. But the more capable person would not be involved in bigger strategic issues. P52 said another, better example would be a scientist who produced a weapon but was not involved in the planning of where and how the weapon would be used. This would be decided by the loyal people.

Klinge said a scientist producing a weapon and an intelligence officer working at a Branch where people were brutally tortured were two different things. P52 said it would be the same for him, because both served the regime.

Klinge asked P52 if he could imagine that Raslan did not know about the conditions in the basement of Al-Khatib Branch. P52 said he could not say that with certainty, but Anwar Raslan knew what was going on for 99.9%.

Klinge said P52 and Raslan also spoke about that. Klinge wanted to know if P52 did not ask Raslan why he participated in all that and why he did not publicly speak about what happened. P52 said Raslan only often mentioned that he wanted to write a book about it and P52 should help him once the time had come.

Klinge recalled that at the meeting P52 had with Tawfiq Younes and Anwar Raslan, Younes told P52 that he wanted to protect him from the Muslim Brothers. Klinge asked P52 'if he seriously believed that'. P52 said of course he did not believe it. When he asked Younes and Raslan if that [P52's hand being tied and his head injury] was how they would protect people, Raslan and Younes looked at each other and smiled. Younes then said something funny: 'What happened to you was all legal, because you were only detained for three days.' When P52 flagged to Younes that he was detained for ten days, Younes asked P52 if he had a watch or was able to see the sun rise and go down to know that he was there for ten days. Younes was making fun and told P52 that he was detained for three days only.

Klinge wanted to know why Younes played this kind of game. P52 said he assumed that at the beginning [of the Syrian revolution] they wanted to keep a low profile and not make it public that they arrested demonstrators. They were afraid that the media would find out and therefore told P52 to stay in touch and tried to control him.

Klinge asked if P52 was not allowed to talk to the media. P52 said he was asked to keep them [intelligence services] up to date and told him there would be no reason to talk to anyone.

Klinge asked if P52 was under the impression that Tawfiq Younes and Anwar Raslan were able to moderately influence the opposition. P52 said he does not think that a strategy like that existed because no one knew what was going to happen. At first thirty to fifty people demonstrated but there were more and more people every day. People started taking pictures and filming. However, no one could prohibit the demonstrations because they were not about Syria at the time. However, they could neither allow the atmosphere in Syria to change.

Klinge recalled that Tawfiq Younes and Anwar Raslan wanted to stay in touch with P52. Klinge asked P52 if he felt that these two tried to win him over as a spy. P52 denied, adding that it was meant as a way to monitor P52 and call him.

Klinge asked if he was afraid that his calls would be monitored. P52 said every person in Syria would be afraid of that. Everyone was afraid to be monitored. P52 said this was particularly the case with mobile phones, since the leading cell service agency belonged to a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad. The latter was therefore in a position to easily spy upon people.

Klinge said that not every person in Syria was, however, as prominent as P52 and luckily not every Syrian was detained at Al-Khatib. Klinge concluded that P52 was more likely to be monitored by Rami Makhoul than others. P52 denied, adding that in Syria everyone would be the same and everyone would be monitored.

Klinge wanted to know if P52 was in contact with Raslan's family during the last few months. P52 said the family approached him to tell him that Raslan's Counsel wanted to know if P52 was willing to testify as a witness.

Klinge asked how P52 knew the family. P52 said he would not know the family and never met anyone of them. He did not know where they got his number from.

Klinge concluded that the family called P52. P52 affirmed, adding that he thinks Raslan's son Mohammad called him.

Klinge wanted to know when the family approximately called P52. P52 said it was two years ago.

Klinge asked when they were in contact for the last time. P52 said it was two weeks ago. The family wanted to assure that the Court contacted P52.

Klinge wanted to know if P52 and Raslan's family also spoke about the incident with the doctor in Berlin. P52 denied, adding that they did not talk about that during the call.

Klinge wanted to know how P52 was able to remember details from a conversation he had in Turkey in 2015 and remember precise details as to the threatening situation. P52 said the situation was important after all. [Raslan] was very concerned, afraid, and upset. P52 said this story, if it is true, would scare all opponents of the regime. If Raslan fantasized, P52 wanted to understand why he was thinking like that. P52 added that of course he could remember the details, he would be an author after all.

Klinge said the story was of course very important to P52. However, Klinge did not believe that P52 was able to precisely recall that Raslan saw two men dressed in white standing next to an ambulance, based on a conversation he had six years ago. One could not remember such details after such a long time. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying Klinge's question would be inadmissible; it would be Klinge's subjective opinion. Böcker said he would not object to that. He himself would not be too happy with the witness's testimony but would still believe him more than other witnesses. Böcker directly addressed P52 to tell him that he thinks he is credible. Klinge replied that one should never have too high hopes regarding witnesses. Presiding Judge Kerber concluded that this conversation was a skirmish between the defense and the Prosecutor. She asked Klinge if he had a concrete question for P52.

Klinge asked P52 how he could explain that he was able to remember details about the number and appearance of people and where they were standing, based on descriptions he received from Raslan back in 2015. P52 said he had no clue and asked if the question was a joke.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, saying that one has to be careful now. What happened before was a skirmish between the parties, but that would be over now. All questions asked are important and P52 should not answer them by asking questions himself. P52 explained that he was impressed by the overall situation. It seemed to him as if Raslan was slowly becoming paranoid. P52 recalled that he even asked Raslan how he would know that the two men would be members of the intelligence services. Raslan replied to him that they looked like members of the intelligence services. P52 said it would be natural to him that people would remember such details and that such details would burn in one's memory because they had such far-reaching implications. P52 said he thinks he answered the question and added that if one thinks that Raslan's family provided instructions to him, one would be wrong.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker recalled P52 mentioning a demonstration in front of the Parliament and asked P52 if it happened [REDACTED]. P52 confirmed.

Böcker further recalled P52 mentioning P31 [P52 corrected Böcker's pronunciation and confirmed that he mentioned P31]. Böcker wanted to know if P52 also mentioned someone called [REDACTED]. P52 confirmed again. Plaintiff Counsel Mohamed intervened, saying Böcker would only check his notes with P52 and not ask actual questions. Presiding Judge Kerber said Böcker's questions would be okay so far.

Böcker went on to ask if [REDACTED] was a Major or First Lieutenant. P52 said he was not sure but he was in the same class [at the police academy] as P52's brother so he was either Major or First Lieutenant. P52 said he would not know for sure.

Böcker asked what this person's task was on [REDACTED] [at the demonstration that P52 organized and was arrested]. P52 said he would not know exactly. He led a group of security officers dressed in civilian clothes. P52 said that was all he knew.

Böcker wanted to know if P52 saw Raslan at the scene on this day. P52 denied, adding that he met Raslan once at the Branch.

Böcker asked if P52 can say something about [REDACTED] clothes. P52 said he remembered well that he was wearing a leather jacket. It was casual, rather functional clothes not like a usual officer.

Böcker asked about the color of the leather jacket. P52 said it was black.

Böcker recalled that P31 previously told the Court that he saw Anwar Raslan, leading security officers on [REDACTED] [demonstration that P52 organized and was arrested at]. According to P31, Raslan was dressed in civilian clothes, amongst others a brown leather jacket. P52 asked who was wearing a brown leather jacket. Böcker said it was Anwar Raslan, leading security officers. P31 identified Raslan like that. P52 said he did not see Raslan at the scene but there were several divisions and groups.

Böcker thanked P52, saying this was already more than he hoped for. Regarding P52's contact with Raslan's family, Böcker wanted to know if P52 since he left Syria and was in Germany ever had contact with the police, Prosecutors or counsels. P52 said not at all, this very day would be the first time in a courtroom for him.

Böcker said P52 would be someone who knows a lot, has a lot to say, and has a lot of contacts. He wanted to know if P52 did not want to talk to authorities or was never contacted by anyone. P52 told the Court that regarding Syria, he only spoke about it with OFPRA. Böcker asked what OFPRA would be. Klinge said it is the French equivalent to the German BAMF [Office for Migration and Refugees]. Böcker asked how P52 got into contact with OFPRA, whether they called or wrote him. P52 denied, explaining that it would be the official way to have one's asylum interview in France with this office. Böcker concluded it was a personal conversation then. P52 said of course, he had to explain his asylum request at this meeting.

Böcker said the procedure would be similar in Germany. He asked P52 if he was asked at this meeting to describe what he saw and experienced in Syria. P52 said of course. They also requested proof that he was detained in Syria. P52 then told them to simply check the media. Böcker asked P52 to leave the media out of it. P52 said this would, however, be what he told the OFPRA.

Böcker referred to the proof that P52 just mentioned, asking him what kind of proof that was and if he was able to deliver it. P52 said he referred to publications [about his detention]. He said he was interviewed by a human rights organization and BBC and Al-Jazeera also reported on it.

Böcker wanted to know if P52 told them [OFPRA] that he was detained at Division 40 and Branch 251. P52 said he could not remember if he mentioned the numbers or if they knew the numbers. However, he mentioned State Security which would be Division 40 and Al-Khatib.

Böcker asked if P52 also mentioned the year [of his detention]. P52 said of course he did, it would be an important event in his life after all.

Böcker concluded that P52 told the OFPRA what he also said in Court on this very day. P52 said he thinks so.

Böcker asked if one of the offices that P52 saw during his detention was the one of Anwar Raslan. P52 said he only saw Raslan's office when he was arrested the second time and taken to his office.

Böcker wanted to know if P52 was taken 'to' or 'inside' Raslan's office. P52 explained that after he was released for the first time, Anwar Raslan called him and told him to come to the Branch, to his office. Böcker asked what happened then. P52 said the first time, he told Raslan that he was at the hospital and when he called the second time, P52 went.

Böcker asked if P52 was inside Raslan's office. P52 said he was there once. Böcker asked P52 to describe the office. P52 said it was relatively small, full of files and had a small table that was not a proper desk. There were several phones and some chairs. P52 said one could notice that it was a place to work. According to P52, the office was different from Tawfiq Younes' office which was very spacious. Raslan's office had a cupboard with many files in it.

Böcker asked if there were pictures on the walls of Raslan's office. P52 said he was not sure but there would be not a single office in Syria that does not have a picture of Al-Assad.

Böcker asked P52 if he could say something about this topic. P52 did not understand the question. Böcker asked if there was a picture of Bashar or Hafez Al-Assad.

P52 explained that at the Branch itself, he saw many pictures of Bashar Al-Assad. However, he could not say if there was one at Raslan's office. What he could say is that it is not surprising that there was a picture of Al-Assad. According to P52, these pictures were everywhere in Syria, even at public toilets.

Böcker wanted to know if P52 was able to notice a certain relationship between Tawfiq Younes and Anwar Raslan and how the two interacted. P52 said it was a professional relationship. "He" entered... Böcker intervened asking who P52 was referring to. P52 said Anwar Raslan entered the room and greeted Tawfiq Younes calling him 'Sidi'. Raslan never said anything while Tawfiq Younes was speaking. It was a military interaction. P52 said he would know that because he was an officer himself. It was an officer and his supervisor.

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled P52 saying he remembered Raslan's story about the two men dressed in white who allegedly tried to abduct him. Fratzky said P52 also mentioned Raslan possibly being paranoid. He asked P52 if he himself was scared when he heard that story. P52 affirmed and explained that he had two feelings.

First, he thought that the story could indeed be true. The second feeling was that Raslan might only be fantasizing. P52 said he was impressed by both possibilities. It would be impressive if the regime would be able to do something like that. If it only existed in Raslan's mind, it would be a "psychological question."

Fratzky asked if it had an impact on P52 if the regime was indeed capable of doing something like that. P52 affirmed.

Fratzky wanted to know what this impact looked like. P52 said he tried to ask if the story was true but he realized it was not...

Fratzky interrupted P52, referring to Anwar Raslan's position at Al-Khatib Branch. Fratzky recalled P52 mentioning that Raslan and Younes acted like supervisor and subordinate. He asked P52 if he was able to notice a similar relationship at another situation as well. P52 said he only saw the two together at one occasion. But there would be another issue: Raslan is a Colonel and Younes is a Brigadier General, and therefore higher in rank than Raslan. It would be commonly known that Tawfiq Younes is the head of Al-Khatib Branch. P52 said when Raslan said that he was the head of a Division within the Branch, it was obvious that there were others with higher ranks.

Fratzky asked if P52 saw the two [Raslan and Younes] together on another occasion. P52 said he only saw them together once, but he saw Younes on the street.

Fratzky asked if Anwar Raslan himself told P52 anything about his relationship to Tawfiq Younes. P52 denied, saying they did not talk about that. According to P52, Raslan was generally reserved. P52 kept telling [Raslan] that he should say something [about what happened at the Branch] but Raslan kept telling P52 that he would talk about it when the time was right, but "now is the time to work, not to talk."

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen recalled that P52 mentioned that Raslan wanted to write a book. She asked P52 if there was already a draft or manuscript. P52 denied, adding that Raslan did not say anything about the book other than he intended to write a book and P52 should help him.

Dr. Oehmichen asked if Raslan said anything about the content of the book. P52 explained that when he asked Raslan about his years of service and all the people that were interrogated at the Branch, Raslan replied everything would have its time.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Fratzky wanted to know if P52 knew a person called [REDACTED]. P52 said there was a Colonel [REDACTED], however, P52 never met him. He might have met him at an opposition event once but P52 said he thinks he did not speak with him. However, he saw him in the media.

Fratzky concluded that P52 was not in contact with this person. P52 affirmed.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked if she understood correctly that P52 tried to avoid this person, or if she just did not get it right acoustically. The interpreter clarified that P52 said he knew this person from the media and might have crossed paths with him at an event. Judge Kerber thanked the interpreter.

P52 was dismissed as a witness.

Plaintiff Counsel Bahns left.

Administrative Matters

Plaintiff Counsel Mohamed said he wanted to read out a request to take evidence on behalf of his client P1 [Firas Fayyad].

[The following is a recreation of Counsel Mohamed's statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Plaintiff Counsel's Request to visually inspect pencil sketches of the crime scene

Anwar Raslan is the alleged head of the Investigation Division and the prison at Al-Khatib Branch where at least 4,000 people were tortured from April 2011 until September 2012.

Many witnesses testified on the prison area and the conditions there. However, these are all reports. There is no visual material existing. These accounts are therefore rather abstract and one cannot know what detainees are thinking when they are alone in their cells, blindfolded. Firas Fayaad captured all that: his arrest, torture, interrogations and other experiences in detention. These sketches provide an authentic impression of the crime scene.

Fayyad is further willing to testify on these sketches, if the Judges would request him to do so.

Signed by Counsels Schulz, Rieger and Mohamed

Defense Counsel Böcker said he wanted to reserve his right to make a statement on this at a later point. Böcker further announced that the Defense had another request to read out in Court as well.

[The following is a recreation of the Defense's request statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Defense Request to make an inquiry with the federal Prosecutor General Office to ask if a transcript of P52's interview with the OFPRA is part of the structural investigation, and add it to the case file if it is part of the structural investigation.

- 1) P52 said in court today, that he told the OFPRA about his detention at Al-Khatib Branch in 2011 and 2012. P52 testified today for more than four hours in court. The Defense requests to know from the BKA if they are in possession of a transcript of P52's interview with the OFPRA as part of the structural investigation.*
- 2) This is yet another aspect of the structural investigation to which the parties to this trial have no access.*

Prosecutor Klinge said he wanted to make a statement on this request: The transcript of P52's interview with OFPRA is not part of the structural investigation. If it was, the Prosecutors would of course have forwarded it.

Kerber asked if the Defense wanted to uphold their request, nevertheless. Defense Counsel Böcker said yes. Once the request was copied and added to the trial transcript, Defense Counsel Böcker announced that the request would no longer be needed.

Presiding Judge Kerber reminded the Plaintiff Counsels to agree on an order for the closing statements.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:55PM.

The trial will resume on October 13, at 9:30AM in room 128 in the Regional Court's building.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 48
Hearing Date: October 6, 2021

Day 96 – October 6, 2021

P53, a 36-year-old Syrian and (ex) brother-in-law of P32 told the court about his relation to P32 and her family. However, contrary to what the Defense previously proposed, P53 was not able to provide details about P32's detention or her mental health, as he did not speak about these issues with P32 and was not in frequent contact with her. He briefly told the court about his own arrest in 2012 and how Raslan helped him to be released, since P53's family and Raslan's family used to be neighbors.

The Prosecutors objected to two previous requests by the Defense to hear additional witnesses.

Trial Day 96 – October 6, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:34AM with five spectators and two journalists in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Defense Counsel were present as usual. Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker and Bahns were not present.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that there were some administrative matters that needed to be addressed before the court would hear another witness. She explained that due to a software problem, the newly announced trial dates were not sent to all parties. She therefore announced all dates in court and the parties confirmed that they took notice of it. Kerber further said that the Prosecutors submitted the transcript of a witness' questioning, which was also not sent to everyone due to technical issues. She said that since the prosecutors submitted additional evidence on this very day, everything would be printed and handed out to the parties in court. The witness whose interview transcript was just added to the case file, is summonsed to testify in court on October 14. The Judges, however, did not know if the trial day scheduled for October 13 would take place. Kerber said they had to make some phone calls after the session to clarify whether the day will take place or not.

Testimony of P53<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The court interpreter who sat next to P53 to translate his Arabic statements into German was a new interpreter who had never worked in this trial before. The audience noted several incidents where parts of P53's statement were not translated into German or falsely translated. Whenever the Trial Monitor was able to note these inconsistencies, it is noted throughout this report.

P53, a 36-year-old Syrian currently living in [REDACTED], was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. Judge Kerber told P53 that he was free to take his COVID-19 mask off or leave it on. P53 denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber said the Court was aware that P53 was apparently detained at Al-Khatib Branch in 2011 or 2012 and possibly in contact with Anwar Raslan. She asked P53 what he could say about these issues. P53 said he first had to clarify that he was not detained at Al-Khatib Branch. Kerber asked where he was detained instead. P53 said he was arrested by a security branch in Deir ez-Zor. Kerber asked if he knew the number of the branch. P53 denied.

Kerber said the Court would not be interested in details of P53's arrest but rather in his contact with Raslan and how P53 was released. P53 explained that he was from [REDACTED] [The interpreter added that this would be a neighborhood in Damascus, however, this place is a suburb of Deir ez-Zor.] P53 went to Damascus by bus and was told to leave the bus at a check point in Deir ez-Zor.

Kerber asked when this happened. P53 said it was in 2012.

Kerber asked about the month. P53 said he remembers that it was during Ramadan but he did not remember the exact date, probably July.

Kerber said the Judges were aware that Ramadan started on July 12, 2012 and asked P53 whether he was arrested at the beginning or end of Ramadan. P53 said it was at the middle or end of Ramadan.

Kerber recalled that P53 had to leave the bus and asked him what happened next. She added that the Court was not so much interested in details of the arrest but rather what Raslan had to do with P53's release and detention. P53 explained that he was on the bus together with his cousin. When they were told to leave the bus, P53's cousin called P53's father to tell him that he should contact Anwar Raslan. P53's father then spoke to Anwar Raslan on the phone and P53 was released from the branch. The head of the branch asked P53 if he was in contact with Raslan and after two or three hours, P53 was released.

Kerber wanted to know how it came that P53's father had such a good relationship with Anwar Raslan. P53 said he himself knew Raslan since 2002 or 2003. Their families were neighbors and living in the same building in Damascus. According to P53, Raslan's wife was a close friend of P53's mother and they would still be friends until this very day. P53 concluded that the ties between the two families were close.

Kerber asked if P53 was arrested by regular police, the military or an intelligence service. P53 said he was arrested by the Mukhabarat.

Kerber said the Court would be interested in a second topic as well: P53 would be the brother-in-law of P32 who previously testified in court. P53 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know since when P53 knew P32 and since when P53's brother would be married to P32. P53 said he knew P32 from when he was in Jordan. He met her once before he went to Germany.

Kerber wanted to know in which year they met. P53 said it was 2014.

However, P53's testimony as written in this report is based on the German translation, which is the authoritative language in this trial.

Kerber asked if P53 spoke with P32 about her detention. P53 denied, and said the two had no direct contact.

Kerber asked if P53 spoke about it with P32's sisters. P53 denied, saying he did not talk to any of the sisters.

Kerber asked if P53 spoke to P32's mother, P33. P53 denied.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner wanted to know if P53 was told a reason for his arrest or if it was rather arbitrary and he was not provided any information. P53 said he was not told any reason, not even upon his arrest. The head of the check point who looked at the IDs and checked the names spelled P53's name wrongly.

Wiedner concluded that it was a mistake/confusion then. P53 affirmed and said he was questioned for one hour about who he was, what he did for a living, where he was from, and where he wanted to go.

Wiedner asked if he understood correctly that P53's name was misspelled, and his arrest was possibly based on a confusion. P53 explained that the person who read the names [on the ID cards] got his name wrong. P53 said he would not know whether it was a mistake in pronunciation or spelling.

Wiedner said he wanted to come back to P32's family, asking if Anwar Raslan was a topic in discussions within the family and if the family members' experiences with Raslan were discussed. P53 said he would not know. He only met P32 once in Jordan and twice in [REDACTED].

Wiedner asked if the topic [Anwar Raslan] was discussed during these meetings. P53 denied and said they did not talk about it at all.

The Prosecutors had no questions for P53.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker wanted to know what the family, including P32, P32's husband and P32's sister [sister 2, TR#33] said about P32's sister [sister 1, TR#33] detention: if there was a conversation/meeting, who the meeting was with, and whether someone was beaten. P53 said he would not know much about this. He only met P32, P32's brother and his wife in Turkey, one or two days before he went to Germany. [P53 actually said that he met them before he went to Turkey to leave for Germany.]

Böcker asked if P53 would know nothing at all about this topic, or a bit. P53 said he only knew that she [not clear whether he meant P32 or her sister(s)] was detained at State Security Branch for one or two weeks. That was all he knew.

Böcker wanted to know when P53 heard Raslan's name for the first time. P53 said he knew Raslan since 2003.

Böcker concluded that P53 was familiar with the name and asked him if the name was mentioned within the family when P53 learned about [sister 1's] detention. P53 asked who [sister 1] was.

Böcker wanted to know if P53 did not know [sister 1]. P53 turned to the interpreter and said Böcker would know that he spoke about P32 [before]. After some confusion about the correct pronunciation of [sister 1's] name, P53 said he knew that she lives in [REDACTED] but he never met her and does not know her personally.

Böcker concluded that the misunderstanding was now solved, and asked P53 if he still spoke about [sister 1's] detention with someone, although he never personally met her. P53 denied. He assumed that P32's and [sister 1's] detention was before P53's brother married P32.

Böcker asked if P53 consequently did not know anything about it [[sister 1's] detention]. P53 said his knowledge would be very limited in this regard. He only knew that Raslan told him in Jordan that he helped "her" when she was in detention.

Böcker wanted to know if P53 was only referring to P32 here, not [sister 1]. P53 affirmed that he was talking about P32 in this regard.

Böcker concluded that everything that P53 knew about P32's detention, he knew from Raslan because the detention was before P53's brother and P32 got married. P53 explained that 'Mr. Raslan' was his neighbor in Jordan. They spoke about general things. P53 said it might be that Raslan mentioned him helping P32 and her sisters.

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled Judge Kerber asking P53 when his brother married P32. Fratzky wanted to know the exact year and month. P53 said it was before he went to Turkey to go to Germany. P32 and his brother met there [in Jordan] in 2014 and had 'some kind of engagement'. Because P32 wanted to leave the country and because P32's brother was there as well, they all had lunch together one or two days before P53 left the country. P53 said this was when he met P32. He said he thinks that the wedding was at the end of 2014, December 2014 or January/February 2015. P53 said it was winter and he was in a refugee accommodation in [REDACTED] at the time.

Fratzky wanted to know how intense P53's contact with his brother would be. P53 said he would be his brother, they have a good relationship.

Fratzky asked P53 to tell the court his brother's name and address. P53 said his brother's name is [REDACTED]. He lives in [REDACTED].

Fratzky asked for the street name and told P53 he could also provide this information to the court after his testimony. P53 said he could not remember the name, but the address was saved on his phone.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the Defense whether she should order a short break. Fratzky said yes, but P53 could also look up the number after his testimony. Kerber said in this case, P53 should complete his testimony first.

Fratzky thanked Judge Kerber and recalled that P53 said he assumed that his arrest was due to a misunderstanding. Fratzky wanted to know if P53 thinks this confusion was the reason for his arrest or if there was another reason. P53 said he did not do anything; he never committed a crime. However, it would be normal in Syria that people are arrested and even detained for up to two to three years simply because of a confusion of names. P53 said for example, his third brother has been missing since 2014. The family did not hear anything about or from him. He might be dead or alive, but no one knew. P53 concluded he does not know why he was arrested.

Fratzky wanted to know if P53 was interrogated before he was released after two or three hours. P53 said he was interrogated for almost one hour.

Fratzky asked what the topic of this interrogation was, what they wanted to know. P53 said it was about personal things. They wanted to know why P53 had not been arrested two weeks earlier when he went from [REDACTED].

Fratzky wanted to know if this meant that P53 was part of the opposition. He asked P53 what happened two weeks earlier. P53 explained that he was accused of smuggling arms between [REDACTED].

Fratzky recalled that P32's mental health was already mentioned in court earlier this day. He asked P53 if he ever heard about this issue from his brother, this year as well. P53 denied.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer recalled that it was said that P53's brother is P32's husband. Scharmer said according to his information, P32 was divorced. He asked P53 if his brother was or is P32's husband. P53 said they would no longer be married, his brother would be P32's ex-husband, the two divorced in 2015 or 2016. Scharmer thanked P53 and added that this information might also be relevant in terms of contacting P53's brother.

Judge Kerber announced a ten-minute break to get the contact information of P53's brother.

Judge Kerber explained that P53 provided his brother's contact information to the judges and that the court officers would hand out copies of all documents provided by the Prosecutors.

P53 was dismissed as a witness at 10:30AM.

Administrative Matters

The Prosecutors read out two statements on the Defense's requests to hear additional witnesses [\[TR#47, day 95\]](#).

[The following is a recreation of the Prosecutors' statements, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

The Prosecutors hold that the request to summon [PW2_95] must be rejected in accordance with §244 (3) s.3 no.2 StPO.

The request is a mere repetition of Anwar Raslan's opening statement from May 2020 regarding information about PW2_95 helping and contacting Raslan and arranging for two FSA members to travel to Syria to get Raslan and his family out of the country. The same is the case with statements that PW2_95 allegedly rented a flat for Raslan in Amman and the two meeting in Jordan. In addition, the Defense's request states that PW2_95 is supposed to testify that he learned through conversations with Raslan and others about Raslan's critical attitude towards the Syrian regime.

However, details about Raslan's escape and his efforts to help others are irrelevant with regard to the charges in this trial. The same is the case for Raslan's alleged critical attitude.

Anwar Raslan is accused of having killed, out of base motives, a considerable number of people and having tortured even more people in his capacity as head of the investigation division from April 29,

2011 until September 7, 2012 as part of an ongoing widespread and systematic attack against the civil population. He had an office and subordinate employees. The prison was also part of his division. He therefore was the military head of the prison and as such ordered torture. He also knew that people were tortured at the branch, since he dutifully reported to his superiors.

Raslan's flight out of the country is not contradictory to this. The Federal Court of Justice (BGH) further found that intent is not to be excluded in cases where the successful completion [of a crime] was not desired [by the perpetrator].

The summons of PW2_95 is further not required [to establish the truth] as laid out in § 244 (5) s. 2 StPO.

The Prosecutors hold that the request to summon [PW1_95] is to be rejected as well.

PW1_95 is supposedly a former Colonel who defected in 2012 and before was the head of the police department in Hanano, Aleppo. The Defense's request states that PW1_95 turned to Anwar Raslan at the end of 2012 when Division 40 invaded in Sayyidah Zaynab, plundered a safe and severely mistreated and arrested a shop owner. PW1_95 asked Raslan for help but Raslan declined, saying he had no power over this Division.

This is irrelevant in light of the life sentence that the Accused has to expect for committing crimes against humanity. He is, however, not accused of criminal acts performed by Division 40. It is therefore irrelevant whether he had control over Division 40 or not. This reasoning is also in line with what the Prosecutors stated at the BGH statement on August 12, 2020.

PW1_95 summons is not necessary pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO.

Judge Kerber announced that the documents from the Prosecutors that were just handed out included copies of [REDACTED] interview with the BAMF as well as his police questioning [REDACTED]. Kerber added that the parties to the case could meet right after this public session to discuss the order of closing statements and further trial schedule.

The proceedings were adjourned at 10:42AM.

The trial will resume on Wednesday, October 13 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 49
Hearing Dates: October 13 & 14, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Day 97 – October 13, 2021

P54, a former Syrian military pilot testified about Raslan's defection and how Raslan helped the Jordanian authorities to find a safer route for refugees to flee from Syria to Jordan.

The Judges rejected several requests to hear additional evidence that have previously been submitted by the Defense. The Judges held that the requests did not indicate the precise scope and source of knowledge of the proposed witnesses. Therefore, a summons would not be necessary given the efforts that would be required to hear these witnesses living abroad. In announcing that certain crimes committed against plaintiffs were also punishable under regular German criminal law, the Judges indicated that it was unnecessary to add enforced disappearances as a crime against humanity to the charges.

Day 98 – October 14, 2021

P55, a former employee at Branch 285 of the General Intelligence Directorate told the Court that before his defection at the end of 2012, Raslan was working as the head of the Interrogation Division at Branch 285. Several documents displayed in Court showed Raslan's signature on notes detailing how to proceed with individual detainees. P55 indicated to the court that Raslan could only make suggestions in this regard and due to being a Sunni he did not have much authority.

Trial Day 97 – October 13, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with six spectators and three journalists in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen was substituted by Ms. Bier.<sup>2</sup> The interpreter who worked for this trial for the first time the previous week was in charge of translating the witness' testimony from Arabic to German.

The witness summoned for this day did not arrive at the court on time. Presiding Judge Kerber therefore explained that she had two court decisions that needed to be read out.

[The following is a recreation of the decision, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The court interpreter in charge of translating from German to Arabic for the Accused did not translate while Presiding Judge Kerber was checking attendance.

Court Decision to reject the request to take evidence issued by Defense Counsels Mohammed, Reiger, and Schulz on September 30, 2021.

The Plaintiff Counsels had requested to admit as evidence, and visually inspect in court, sketches drawn by P1. Counsels argued that this would provide the court with an authentic impression of Branch 251. However, pursuant to § 244 (3) No.1 StPO [obviousness] it is not necessary to inspect these sketches since Firas Fayyad himself as well as many other witnesses already provided detailed statements about the Branch's premises and the conditions therein.

The witness entered at 9:40AM. Judge Kerber thanked the witness [P54] for following the summons despite the short notice.

Testimony of P54

P54, a 54-year-old Syrian and former military pilot currently living in [REDACTED] was informed of his rights and duties as a witness. P54 denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber indicated that the Judges were aware that P54 knew Raslan. She asked P54 to talk about Raslan, his escape from Syria, how and when P54 was in contact with Raslan. P54 explained that he had the rank of a Colonel back in Syria and was working as a military pilot. P54 said he "of course" did not know Raslan [during his service]. P54 defected in May 2012 and entered Jordan in July 2012. At that time, P54 heard through mutual friends that Colonel Anwar [Raslan] defected. However, according to P54 [Raslan] defected in December 2012. The mutual friends from whom P54 heard about Raslan's defection were [REDACTED], a businessman in Egypt, and [REDACTED], a [former] Colonel at the Political Security who was in Jordan together with P54. P54 told the Court that he did not know the reasons for the delay in Anwar's [Raslan's] defection; maybe he could not defect [earlier].

Kerber asked whether P54 got in contact with Raslan on the phone or in person the first time. P54 said the first meeting was face-to-face, when [Raslan] entered Jordan. P54 could not remember the exact date, but said it was a week before Christmas [2012].

Kerber said Raslan allegedly tried to defect in summer 2011, and asked P54 if he and Raslan spoke about the latter's attempt to defect. P54 denied, adding he did not hear about Raslan trying to defect in summer 2011. However, he had information from mutual friends that [Raslan] attempted to defect.

Kerber asked when P54 heard about this attempted defection. P54 said he heard about it when he himself defected. [REDACTED] told P54 that "Colonel Raslan wanted to defect and he was helping 'us' a lot".

Kerber wanted to know if this was in May 2012. P54 affirmed and said that [REDACTED] was detained at Raslan's Branch and [REDACTED] told P54 that [Raslan] helped him [to be released]. Kerber said she did not understand who helped whom. [The court interpreter in charge of simultaneous interpretation from German to Arabic clarified the issue].

Kerber recaptured that Raslan helped [REDACTED] to be released, and asked P54 if that was correct. P54 confirmed.

Kerber asked P54 if he and Raslan spoke about the latter's tasks and political opinions when they met before Christmas. P54 said he saw [Raslan] only for a short time in his own car, when he picked up [Raslan] at the [Syrian-Jordanian] border.

Judge Kerber asked if that happened in 2012 before Christmas. P54 confirmed, adding that he had previous information [that Raslan was going to defect] and therefore left [Raslan's] name with the Jordanian Military Services, saying that he would like to know when [Raslan] arrived. When [Raslan] eventually entered [Jordan], they told P54 about it and he went to pick up Raslan. P54 further told the Court that [Raslan] was separated from his family who was in a civilian [refugee] camp while Raslan was at the [Jordanian] Military Intelligence Services. It [the way that P54 drove Raslan from the border] was 90 kilometers long. It was the first time P54 saw or spoke to [Raslan]. On the way from the Military Intelligence Services [Raslan] spoke with P54 and mentioned that he had tried to defect: one time he could have fled from Az-Zabadani<sup>3</sup> but he refused because it would have been without his family. P54 stated that Raslan had no money at all.

Kerber asked if Raslan told P54 about the time he attempted to defect or thought about defecting. P54 said that [Raslan] did not agree with what was happening. [Raslan] said he was under immense pressure and mentioned an officer, Tawfiq Younes, who was thoroughly watching him in addition to Hafez Makhoulf. According to P54, [Raslan] also said that when he used to come home from work, there were two "members of the staff" <sup>4</sup> watching him from [down the street].

Kerber asked if Raslan said that he was being monitored at work. P54 recalled [Raslan] saying that there were people watching him all the time.

Kerber further wanted to know if Raslan told P54 about his job and tasks at the Intelligence Services and the reasons for not changing his job. P54 said he himself was part of the system and knows that [Raslan] could not change anything. He would have been risking his life with any mistake.

Kerber recalled P54 mentioning that Raslan was separated from his family. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying that he did not understand who said that "[Raslan] could not change anything. He would have been risking his life with any mistake". Böcker wanted to know whether it was Raslan or P54 who said that, asking P54 to clearly differentiate between his own statements and the ones that he attributes to Raslan. P54 clarified this was his own evaluation [of the situation].

Kerber again recalled P54 mentioning that Raslan was separated from his family. Kerber asked if Raslan's family was in Syria or in Jordan. P54 said that [his family] were at Az-Za'tari [refugee] camp.

Kerber asked if Raslan's family arrived in Jordan before Raslan. P54 said no, they arrived together, but the civilians and the military people were separated from each other [in Jordan by the Jordanian authorities].

Kerber asked P54 where he picked up Raslan; if it was at the Syrian-Jordanian border. P54 said he picked him up at Al-Mafraq Branch, the Military Intelligence Services.

Judge Kerber asked if Al-Mafraq Branch was at Az-Za'tari camp. P54 denied and said it was a city at the border. The first city one enters [when coming to Jordan from Syria].

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The court interpreter doing interpretation of the witness' testimony pronounced the name of this place incorrectly throughout the entire testimony.

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The term used by P54 usually refers to members of the Mukhabarat, however, P54 did not specify whom he meant.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan told P54 about his tasks back in Syria and where he had been working. P54 said [Raslan] told him that [he had been working] at the Interrogation Division at State Security, the General Intelligence Directorate. According to P54, [Raslan] did not say more than that.

Wiedner asked if Raslan mentioned the number of the Branch he worked at. P54 denied.

Referring to the time P54 himself was working in Syria, Judge Wiedner asked P54 whether he would know what tasks Raslan had. P54 said that it was [Raslan's] task to investigate security issues.

Wiedner wanted to know what had changed in regard to Raslan's tasks before and after 2011. P54 went on to explain that he himself was in the army, which is part of the same system [as the Intelligence Services]. As such, P54 had contact with the security services. Originally, [Raslan's] task would have been a noble one: he dealt with security issues concerning the state, just like any apparatus in a civilized state does.

Raslan's interpreter, sitting between Raslan and his Defense Counsel Fratzky, told the latter that a sentence from P54's answer was not translated. Fratzky therefore intervened to point this out to the Court. P54 repeated his previous answer and went on recalling that the question was about what had changed: P54 explained that what had changed was that the state was ruled by a dictator and the state was there to serve the dictator. According to P54, the institution where Raslan served was not supposed to detain the citizens and torture them, but all apparatuses were working to protect the regime.

Wiedner asked whether Raslan told P54 that, or if P54 was stating that. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying that there could be a third option and Judge Wiedner should not restrict the options. Presiding Judge Kerber told Böcker that he could ask his questions later. Böcker replied that he wanted to point out that Judge Wiedner gave the witness only two options of answers to choose from. Wiedner said he would rephrase his question and asked P54 how he knew that. P54 explained that he would know everything 'about the system'. P54 added that he had been in the army since 1983 and was from a military family, had many contacts and would even know Bashar [Al-Assad] personally. P54 further explained that it was true that he was a pilot, but he would also know how security forces, the Republican Guard, the Air Force Intelligence Services, the Military Intelligence Services, and the Political Security operate. P54 concluded that his personal assessment would be accurate. Even without Raslan telling him anything, P54 would know everything.

Wiedner asked P54 about the last rank he held before he defected. P54 said he was a Colonel.

For clarification purposes, Judge Wiedner asked P54 if the previous statements were based on his own experience and not derived from Raslan. P54 said 'let us detail [the answer]'. He told the Court that if Judge Wiedner would like to know if Raslan made a statement on a certain issue, P54 would say so.

Wiedner recalled that P54 said that Raslan's tasks at the Intelligence Services were similar to what is done in every other country. Wiedner asked P54 how he knew that. P54 said he knew because he was part of that system and is from a family that would be part of the ruling system.

Wiedner asked P54 if he would know what Raslan did within this system; and if he would know, how he knew it. P54 said he knew all this without Raslan [telling him]. A person who works as an interrogator at the state security, his job is to interrogate.

Wiedner concluded that the information that P54 just provided to the Court was known to P54 without Raslan telling him. Wiedner asked P54 if he, nonetheless, asked Raslan about it. P54 said he did ask [Raslan] who told P54 about his psychological state and the magnitude of violations and torture. P54 further explained that [torture] also happened 'under normal circumstances' before 2011. At that time, torture was used to extract information from suspects. However, after 2011, it was a means of retribution. The probability of someone dying under torture before 2011 was [marginal] but after 2011, it was at around 80%.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether that statement was from Raslan. P54 confirmed and said it was from the conversations he had with Raslan, and P54 would know it as well.

Wiedner asked P54 what Raslan said about his psychological state. P54 explained that [Raslan] said his psychological condition was bad and that he was unable to do anything or to stop this policy. P54 added that he would know that neither Raslan, nor his chief, nor the chief of his chief would be able to stop this policy.

Wiedner asked P54 how he knew that. P54 said he was part of the system.

Wiedner further wanted to know how often P54 chatted with Raslan when they were in Jordan. P54 said they spoke on the way, after [Raslan] got out [of the Military Intelligence Services]. P54 also met Raslan on the [following] day, and later, for a third meeting, [Raslan] was disguised and afraid. When P54 asked Raslan why he was behaving like that, he said that he was afraid that 'they' would assassinate him. P54 attributed that to the fact that [Raslan] knew with whom he was working and therefore, he was afraid.

Wiedner asked P54 if he knows whether Raslan helped or worked with the Syrian opposition in Jordan. P54 explained that he himself was involved in one situation: the route that civilians were taking when they were leaving Syria [to Jordan as refugees] was dangerous. Since Raslan was the last officer [to defect at that time] he, along with the help of the Jordanian authorities, helped to draw a safe route for people to leave. P54 concluded that [Raslan] helped them, because he suggested using a desert route east to As-Sweida, which helped the opposition and reduced the number of casualties during the displacement.

Wiedner asked whether the route was in Syria or Jordan. [P54 apparently misunderstood the question.] P54 said it was [he apparently referred to the location from where Raslan was helping the opposition] in Jordan. P54 went on to explain that in 2013, displaced people were subjected to ambushes and killing by the regime. "We" [opposition] were looking for a safe route without army camps. Since Raslan was the last officer to defect, "we" sought his help to sketch the route and the number of casualties decreased indeed. P54 said that forty to fifty people were killed every day before that. The route which Raslan provided, however, avoided many military sectors.

Wiedner wanted to confirm if P54 was talking about a route from Syria to Jordan. P54 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P54 what exactly Raslan did. P54 explained that [Raslan] provided them with the safest route to leave. According to P54, Raslan arrived safely because he was an officer and smart. However, regular civilians would not know how to choose that [route].

Wiedner asked if P54 knew about this instance from Raslan. P54 said he himself asked [Raslan] to draw the map, and the route was established with the help of the Jordanian Intelligence Services. P54 stated that they were concerned about the humanitarian aspect and wanted to avoid casualties.

Raslan in fact helped them to do so. P54 said regarding the second part of the question about the opposition, he would have no idea what Raslan offered the opposition, because P54 would not be part of the opposition.

Regarding the help Raslan offered, Judge Wiedner wanted to differentiate between information that P54 got from Raslan in this regard, and information that P54 obtained based on his own experiences. Wiedner asked P54 if he asked Raslan for help and what Raslan replied. P54 said that “we” opened the map, and “this” [P54 was demonstrating and pointing at the table in front of him] is the Jordanian Intelligence Services headquarters. “We” asked Raslan to specify the route that he took to safely arrive in Jordan.

Wiedner asked if that happened at the Jordanian Intelligence Services. P54 confirmed and added that a week prior to creating the map, 280 people were killed along the road.

Wiedner asked P54 how he would describe the relationship between him and Raslan; whether it was friendly or a friendship. P54 said he did not know Raslan before Christmas 2012 and he had the same strong skepticism towards Raslan that any Syrian has against people who worked for the Intelligence Services, even though P54 himself used to be an army officer. However, up to 2011, “we” [the army] were not involved in the torture of people.

Wiedner wanted to know “who” [he did not specify the conduct he was referring to]. P54 said “the army” and went on to explain that after 2011, everything was the same: army, police, and Intelligence Services. All of them detained and tortured [people], and even the customs agencies were involved.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Polz asked P54 if he knows how Raslan’s defection was carried out and whether somebody helped him. P54 said [Raslan] undoubtedly received help, but he did not ask him which party helped him. [Raslan] only told P54 that he had a failed attempt [to defect] through Az-Zabadani and the destination was Lebanon. However, P54 did not know why it did not work. According to P54, Raslan told P54 that the agreement was that his family should not be with him. P54 further explained that there was definitely cooperation in Jordan from the Syrian opposition who volunteered to transport officers. P54 himself experienced this support. According to P54, the locals were happy when a Syrian officer defected. Therefore, they volunteered to help, in order to solidify their position as part of the opposition.

Regarding Raslan’s failed attempt to defect, Polz asked P54 if he knew about this because Raslan told him or if he knew from somewhere else. P54 said “no”, [Raslan] mentioned that.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker asked P54 about his role at the Intelligence Services in Jordan. P54 said his role was that of a defected officer who opposed what the regime was doing. His whole job was of a humanitarian nature: to mitigate the suffering of people. P54 added that he was neither connected to politics nor to the armed conflict, in which he did not participate.

Böcker asked if P54 was working with the Jordanian Intelligence Services. P54 denied and said he would not work with any Intelligence Services.

Böcker asked if P54 picked up Raslan at the border. P54 confirmed, saying he went there and took him.

Böcker asked if Raslan drew the route. P54 confirmed.

Böcker concluded that this would mean that P54 and Raslan only met and P54 did not pick Raslan up. Judge Kerber clarified that P54 did pick up Raslan before the sketching of the route took place.

Recalling that P54 consequently picked up Raslan before the latter provided the map, Böcker asked how P54 helped Raslan. P54 said he got information about Raslan wanting to defect, months before Raslan actually arrived in Jordan. P54 therefore asked the Jordanian Intelligence Services to let him know once Raslan arrived. The Intelligence Services did inform P54 at the time and when Raslan got there, P54 went to pick him up. P54 further described that the instance when Raslan helped creating the map happened 20 days after Anwar [Raslan] entered Jordan. Usually, officers entered through Nasib نصيب, from the villages, but there were army checkpoints and border guards. P54 explained that a big attack on and raids in Al-Ghouta happened after that, and the roads were closed. “We” therefore needed a desert route without military checkpoints and posts. According to P54, Raslan indeed helped in this regard.

Böcker recalled that P54 said “we” and asked him whom he meant by that. P54 said “we”, the ones concerned about civilian and unarmed people, “we” together with the Jordanian authorities.

After reminding P54 to differentiate between his own experiences and Raslan’s statements, Böcker asked P54 whether Raslan carried important “things” with him when he came from Syria to Jordan. P54 said [Raslan] had important things with him, but P54 neither asked Raslan to have a look at them, nor was he interested in having a look at them.

Böcker asked what Raslan had with him. P54 said Raslan had “stuff and information”.

Böcker asked P54 whether he saw these important things or if Raslan told him about it. P54 said when P54 and Raslan went to create the map, Raslan had papers with him. P54 assumed that Raslan might have thought that the meeting was about the important things he had with him. But when P54 told him that the purpose of the meeting was the creation of a safe route, Raslan left the things in the car, and P54 neither asked Raslan to have a look at them, nor he was interested to have a look at them.

Böcker asked if Raslan left the things in the car. P54 said Raslan left some papers, a folder.

Böcker asked if Raslan left it in P54’s car. P54 said yes, in his car.

Böcker asked if there were other meetings with Raslan at the Jordanian Intelligence Services. P54 clarified that what he described was the only meeting Raslan had with the Intelligence Services with P54’s participation. However, P54 was sure that Raslan cooperated with the Jordanian Intelligence Services and gave information. Without P54 being present.

Böcker asked why P54 was so sure about that. P54 said he knew that from the intermediary, the director of the Syria desk at the Jordanian Intelligence Services, who told P54.

Böcker said that the translation was unclear and asked the answer to be repeated. P54 repeated that Raslan cooperated with the Jordanian Intelligence Services. The director of the Syria desk at the Jordanian Intelligence Services, told P54 that Raslan had important things in his possession but P54 did not ask him [P54 did not explain whether he was referring to the director or Raslan].

Böcker said that he did not understand what was meant by the “director of the Syria desk at the Jordanian Intelligence Services”. [There was some confusion about the translation of desk/file/case/division, so the other court interpreter intervened and clarified the meaning].

Böcker affirmed that he now understood the meaning of “director of the Syria desk at the Jordanian Intelligence Services” and noted that there would be a similar desk in Germany as well. P54 explained that Jordan is one of Syria’s neighboring states, and at that time, there were more than one million refugees illegally [in Jordan]. The [Jordanian] General Intelligence Directorate therefore (not the general director) assigned a Colonel who was responsible for the Syria desk regarding all aspects.

Böcker asked if P54 was talking about the Syria desk at the Jordanian Intelligence Services. [The interpreter reiterated what he meant by the “Syrian file/Syria desk”]. [Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker summarized and clarified that a person at the Jordanian Intelligence Services was responsible for and in charge of Syrian matters in Jordan].

Böcker wanted to know if it was correct that a person called [PW1_97] was currently living in [REDACTED]. P54 confirmed.

Böcker asked if P54 knows the name of the street where this person lives. P54 denied.

Böcker asked if P54 knows his email address. P54 said he has his phone number and Facebook account.

Böcker asked if P54 could share this information with the Defense, either at this very moment or after the end of the session. Presiding Judge Kerber asked P54 if he had the information on his mobile phone that he left outside the courtroom. P54 said he could send the phone number later, because he had nothing on the phone that he had with him. Böcker told P54 that he would give him his business card and would appreciate if P54 could send him the information via email.

***

[The court interpreters swapped positions]

***

Defense Counsel Fratzky asked P54 about his religious denomination. P54 said he would be Sunni.

Fratzky asked P54 if he could explain the interactions between Sunnis and Alawites within the Syrian regime to the Court. P54 wanted to know what aspect Fratzky was referring to: social, military, or security [forces].

Fratzky said he was interested in the security apparatus. P54 explained that the security apparatus was dominated by Alawites. However, there would be different grades even within the same denomination. According to P54, the Alawite denomination consists of tribes, which would “not be something invariable: for example, the Kalbiyya كلبية tribe ...etc.”

Fratzky wanted P54 to clarify whether the Alawites comprise 10% of the Syrian population while being in control of the state. P54 confirmed.

Fratzky asked P54 how difficult it was for a Sunni to work at the Intelligence Services. P54 said there were difficulties. There was a political system, and if one was involved in this system and committed to it, one would not face a problem.

Fratzky wanted to know who would have more decision-making power in a scenario where a Sunni has a higher rank than an Alawite. P54 said with regards to importance: even if Raslan was an Alawite, he would not be allowed to have a different mind-set.

Sectarianism exists distinctly in the security apparatuses. The essence of the police-regime is unrelated to religions. According to P54, even if the oppositionist is Alawite, Christian, or Sunni, he would still get annihilated for the sole reason of opposing the system, with respect to the supreme command. Regarding officers below the high decision-making ranks, P54 explained that the system would be that the Alawite might have more authority.

Fratzky wanted to know whether P54 knew Hafez Makhoulf. P54 said he knows him personally.

Fratzky asked what Makhoulf's role within the Syrian regime was. P54 said that he was among the "inner circle" as a result of his kinship to the president (he is actually his cousin) and has more power than a director. P54 said that there was an occasion when he was in Syria: Hafez [Makhoulf] had the same rank as P54 (Colonel), yet his orders were binding for [Ali] Mamlouk, Deeb [Zaytoun], and even on the Minister of Defense, only due to his closeness to the President. According to P54, Makhoulf's actual position was being the head of one division among hundreds of [other] divisions. Like the role of Maher Al-Assad, who was the head of one [army] division among a hundred [other] divisions. P54 explained to the Court that Makhoulf, however, made decisions and extended his power even on civilian [sectors]: the Prime Minister and the economy [...etc.]. P54 concluded that Makhoulf is a member of the "inner circle".

Fratzky asked P54 if he knows Manaf Tlass مناف تلاس. P54 said that he is [REDACTED]. "He was the head of the Republican Guard, a friend of the President, and the son of the former "Deputy of the Commander-in-Chief, the Minister of Defense", General Mostafa Tlass مصطفى تلاس and a friend of Bashar [Al-Assad]."

Recalling that Manaf Tlass was Al-Assad's friend, Fratzky asked P54 whether the relation between them changed. P54 said that it changed since the incidents of the revolution. Manaf had a different opinion regarding the use of the army, the violence, and against the security solution in general. Manaf advised Bashar to find a different solution, but he did not listen. He then left the regime and defected, [REDACTED]."

[REDACTED].

Fratzky asked if there was a conflict between Hafez Makhoulf and Manaf Tlass in 2011. P54 confirmed and said that there was a dispute between Hafez [Makhoulf] and Manaf Tlass, and between Manaf and Maher [Al-Assad] as well.

Fratzky wanted to know what the dispute was about. P54 said it was about [REDACTED] which Manaf opposed. Manaf was assigned by the President to meet delegations from Duma, find a "logical solution" with them, and meet their living and administrative demands. According to P54, Manaf was surprised that Hafez [Makhoulf] detained the delegations when they left Manaf. Some of them were killed at the headquarters of the 4th Division. P54 described that Manaf understood that there was another stream, 'the Falcons' which completely influenced the President and carried on with the security solution. Before he defected, Manaf resigned, and disobeyed orders. He was able to refuse and say "I cannot [do it] anymore" thanks to his personal history. According to P54, however, someone like Raslan would have been killed [for disobeying], just like P54.

Fratzky asked P54 if [REDACTED] Manaf Tlass was entrusted by the French Intelligence Services. [Judge Kerber asked whether Raslan was receiving interpretation since Raslan seemed to be waiting for something]. P54 asked if Fratzky meant before Manaf defected. [The interpretation of the question and the witness' reply overlapped.]

Judge Kerber requested the court interpreter who was in charge of translating from German to Arabic to stop interpreting and asked Raslan's personal interpreter to start interpreting for him and the court interpreter sitting next to the witness to also interpret from German to Arabic until the end of the session.

Fratzky said that he was referring to the context of Manaf's defection. He asked whether Manaf told P54 something about getting help from the French Intelligence Services. P54 said "of course."

Fratzky asked P54 if he could share the address of Manaf Tlass with the Defense. P54 said he could raise the issue with Manaf personally, but he would not know Raslan. P54 added that if the testimony would be political and a matter of public record, then what would be the benefits for this trial? P54 added he could share Manaf Tlass' phone number though.

Fratzky asked if he could get the phone number right away. Judge Kerber asked if P54 memorizes the number by heart. P54 denied and said it was saved on his phone.

Fratzky said that he could get that later and went on to ask whether P54 knows [REDACTED]. P54 denied.

Fratzky asked whether P54 knows [REDACTED]. P54 denied.

Fratzky asked whether P54 knows [REDACTED]. P54 said that this person would be a defected officer who participated in the armed conflict. He used to be a military commander in Aleppo area and is currently [REDACTED]. P54 concluded that this was all he knew about this person.

Fratzky asked if P54 had his phone number. P54 said he could get it.

Fratzky asked whether P54 knows Khaled Al-Halabi خالد الحلبي. P54 confirmed.

Fratzky asked what P54 knew about him. P54 said that he was the head of the State Security Branch, the Intelligence Services in Ar-Raqqa city, and P54 met him in Jordan. He is currently in a European country, maybe Austria.

Fratzky asked if this person would know Raslan. P54 confirmed.

Fratzky asked P54 if he and Al-Halabi spoke about Raslan. P54 confirmed.

Fratzky wanted to know what Al-Halabi said. P54 said that Al-Halabi had legal proceedings before Raslan and he was prosecuted as well.

Fratzky asked where that was. P54 assumed it was in the country where he was, in Europe.

Fratzky asked if P54 referred to the same European country that he mentioned when he said that Al-Halabi might be in Austria. P54 confirmed.

Fratzky asked if P54 had Al-Halabi's phone number. P54 denied and said he could get it, though.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked if P54 defected in July 2012. P54 confirmed.

Scharmer asked when P54 had contact with the Jordanian Intelligence Services for the first time after he arrived in Jordan. P54 said it was "immediately".

Scharmer asked how much time was between P54's first contact with the Jordanian Intelligence Services and Raslan's first encounter with them. P54 said he [himself] entered Jordan in July.

The system in Jordan was that the Jordanians wanted to [interrogate] each officer who defected from the [Syrian] Intelligence Services, and even the Americans wanted to interrogate them as well, that was unavoidable. P54 explained that Raslan defected in December, there was consequently a 6-month-period between their respective defections. P54 further stated that the Jordanian Intelligence officer said that Raslan offered useful information in January 2013. P54, however, did not know the content of this information. Raslan then cooperated with the political opposition and was involved [with the opposition] until Raslan traveled to Geneva, and since then P54 had no contact with him and did not follow what Raslan was doing, because P54 was not engaged with the opposition.

Scharmer recalled that P54 said that the Jordanian Intelligence Services had their first contact with Raslan at the border. Scharmer wanted to know at what point P54 saw Raslan for the first time. P54 said the first time was at the Military Intelligence Services in Al-Mafraq. After “they” were done with him [Raslan] and ensured that he was a defected officer. P54 explained that part of the Military Intelligence Services’ tasks was to confirm that defected officers were not sent by the [Syrian] regime. At that time, the Jordanians were hostile towards the [Syrian] regime. They were concerned about vandalism and retaliatory acts [by the Syrian regime against the refugees or Jordan]. Thus, it was the job of the Military Intelligence Services to make sure that the person was genuine and did not travel using a pseudonym. P54 said one was subjected to lengthy interrogations that could take more than twelve hours. This was to ensure that not everybody who was an alleged defected officer was simply let in to the country. According to P54, the military camp contained around 1,800 officers and 6,000 soldiers. Many soldiers defected with their arms, and it was Jordan’s right to verify the person’s identity, confiscate the arms, and authenticate the documents. Therefore, the Jordanian Intelligence Services did not inform P54 at the very moment when Raslan entered, but rather after they were done with him. P54 further explained that another reason for informing P54 was that Anwar [Raslan] had no money, and P54 paid Raslan’s rent the first time [month].

Scharmer asked P54 if he was present during the first interrogation about Raslan not having money. P54 clarified that Raslan was not being interrogated regarding money. P54 added that dozens of officers were entering Jordan every day. Thanks to his personal connections, P54 was able to leave a notice at the Jordanian Intelligence Services asking them to inform him whenever Raslan came to Jordan. P54 said it was a result of him talking with [REDACTED], because the officers who defected from the Intelligence Services were few, whereas the [defected] army officers were many (around 4,000). That was why P54 was interested [in Raslan].

Scharmer indicated that what he understood was that P54 was not present during Raslan’s first interrogation. P54 said no, he was not present.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Polz recalled P54 saying he knew months before Raslan arrived in Jordan that he wanted to defect. Polz asked if P54 could specify the period between receiving the information and Raslan’s actual defection. P54 said the period was around four months. P54 added that he might have received the information about Raslan wanting to defect in August. Raslan then defected in December, meaning it was a four-month period.

Polz wanted to know the precise content of P54’s information. P54 said he learned “that there is a Colonel at the State Security, Intelligence Services, who wants to defect”. P54 explained that since he was a defector himself, he knew that the decision was sensitive, meaning that if it would have been leaked, it would have cost Raslan’s and his family’s life. That was how P54 received the information, that Raslan intended to defect.

P54's personal assumption would be that he Raslan was in contact with [REDACTED] or someone whom he trusted, and the information was delivered to P54 who had to keep it secret, because there was some information about many people [s defection] like [REDACTED], who sent a message and "we" verified it to be authentic, but it never happened [he did not defect], either because he changed his mind or he was unable to do it.

Polz asked how P54 could personally assess the purpose of sharing such information. P54 said that concerning the information; anyone who enters [Jordan], would not be offered anything by the Jordanian authorities. According to P54, Jordan would not be like Germany [which helps refugees]. The Jordanian authorities could simply tell Raslan to go to the street, and the only option available was to stay at the camp. [REDACTED] therefore spoke to P54 in order to make special arrangements for Raslan. In order to get out of the camp, Raslan's family needed a Jordanian guarantor who had to sign a pledge to host them and to be responsible for them. Additionally, the director of the camp had to agree. P54 said many refugees were unable to secure such procedures which delayed their exit from the camp. What P54 did on his part was that Raslan got out the following day and did not stay in the military camp, and his family stayed for one or two days only.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Schulz recalled that P54 denied working with the Jordanian Intelligence Services. P54 confirmed.

Schulz asked how exactly P54 was acting as a mediator for the Jordanian Intelligence Services. P54 said he was a respectful guest with them. They asked him questions about any officer who entered [Jordan]. P54 explained that there are many [Syrian] family names that are common to Sunnis, Shiites, and Alawites.<sup>5</sup> P54 said he was mostly asked about officers. The Jordanian authorities had security concerns which P54 found reasonable. P54 wanted to offer help because there was a mutual benefit: not letting someone who should not enter get help to enter. However, the cooperation was not a job and was no obligation for P54 but rather voluntary.

Schulz asked if P54 knows whether Raslan had contact with other Intelligence Services. P54 said he had no information in this regard.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker recalled P54 mentioning that some people should not be let in and asked P54 who these people were. P54 said that there was great anxiety among defectors in the beginning. Even the location where they were put [contributed to their fear, because] there was a high probability that they could be attacked with missiles [by the Syrian regime]. Jordan also had security concerns and there were precedents for this: in 1982, two pilots escaped to Jordan from the airport where P54 was serving. Since the Syrian regime is "baltaji بلطجي" [here: aggressive], it sent helicopters and forces to the airport in Jordan where the 2 pilots landed and wanted to detain them from Jordan. P54 said the Syrian regime would be "crazy." It could target the camp where 4,000 officers and 6,000 soldiers were gathering or conduct a military operation and send forces abroad like it did in 1982. P54 said the Jordanian authorities wanted to ensure that no one would be able to geo-locate [the camp] or assassinate anyone, considering that there were high-ranking personalities like Generals, Major Generals, the Deputy of the Army Chief of Staff or even the Prime Minister. P54 concluded that "we" were careful to not let intruders in.

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P54 did not explain well. He presumably indicated that he was able to identify the background of a person based on their names.

Kroker asked P54 what happened to that group of people whom the Jordanian authorities decided not to let in. P54 said that they were sent back to Syria. They were transferred back to the official border crossing point.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Fratzky asked P54 if that means that he was helping the Jordanian authorities to verify whether a person was trustworthy. P54 said it was not only him, he was only a part of it.

Fratzky asked if the Jordanian authorities took information about defectors from P54 and others. P54 confirmed.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced a short break to let P54 bring in his phone before he would be dismissed as a witness.

P54 came back and handed Judge Kerber a sheet of paper.

Judge Kerber indicated that the Judges were given the phone number of Manaf Tlass, [REDACTED], Khaled Al-Halabi, and [REDACTED].

Böcker asked if the other phone numbers, including [REDACTED], could be shared with the Defense. P54 nodded. Judge Kerber said the phone numbers would be shared.

P54 was dismissed as a witness at 12:25PM.

Administrative Matters

Defense Counsel Böcker announced that the Defense had two requests to take additional evidence.

[The following is a recreation of the Defense's requests, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Defense Request to summons Ahmad Al-Jarba أحمد الجربا [PW1_97] as a witness

- I) PW1_97 was head of the opposition coalition from 2013 to 2014. He was opposing Hafez Al-Assad. PW1_97 and his family had been arrested in 1996 when his brother met Raslan at Branch 285. PW1_97 will testify that Raslan was friendly to him at the time and helped three of his relatives be released. Additionally, PW1_97 can testify about Raslan's activities for the opposition in Turkey, that he was opposing the regime of Bashar Al-Assad and worked for the opposition, for example by making black-and-white lists of officers, issuing travel documents, revealing a journalist who was working for Hezbollah, making some security studies, and so on.
- II) This will show the behavior of the defendant before and after the time of the crime, and will contradict any suspicions that he only defected for show while actually still working for the regime. According to Faye Sarah, PW1_97 spoke with the U.S. American Ambassador Robert Ford about Raslan. Additionally, PW1_97 worked with Dr. Kamal Al-Labwani in Geneva.
- III) The requirements on reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be reduced for the purpose of this trial. This trial deals with acts committed abroad and is internationally recognized. Witnesses living abroad were and are daily business in this trial. The Court's efforts in determining the truth pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO must be increased regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been used in the past. PW1_97 has been informed by the Defense and is willing to testify, although he would prefer to testify by phone.

Defense Request to summons [PW2_97] living in [REDACTED] as a witness

- I) PW2_97 will testify that as early as summer 2011, the Accused expressed his negative attitude towards the regime and his wish to defect. PW2_97 promised to help, but it did not happen because he left for [REDACTED]. He knew Raslan's sympathy for the revolution from the very beginning. In addition, PW2_97 knows that he transferred/mentioned fifteen to twenty detainees to Raslan in 2011, who were consequently released.
- II) The requirements on reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be reduced for the purpose of this trial. This trial deals with acts committed abroad and is internationally recognized. Witnesses living abroad were and are daily business in this trial. The Court's efforts in determining the truth pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO must be increased regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been used in the past.

Request to summons [PW3_97], living in [REDACTED] as a witness

- I) PW3_97 is a Syrian journalist and was detained at Al-Khatib Branch for four days. He can testify that the Accused treated him well during this time. PW3_97 was eventually released. PW3_97 also knows P31 and will testify that P31's parents were allowed by Raslan to bring P31 food to the Branch, and that Raslan allowed P31 to eat that food in his office. This contradicts the testimony of P31 who said that he was insulted by the Accused.
- II) PW3_97's testimony will show that the Accused was trying to help as many detainees as he could. The Accused was not responsible for everything that happened at the Branch. PW3_97 indicated to Raslan's family that he is willing to testify in court.

Presiding Judge Kerber read out the second Court Decision.

[The following is a recreation of the Court Decision, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Court Decision regarding the legal classification of acts attributable to the Accused

- I a) P20 said that he saw a fellow detainee bleeding from a circular wound and that this detainee later died. It is likely that a gunshot wound was the reason for his death, which could amount to murder with base motives, pursuant to § 211 (2) var. 4 StGB.
- I b) P46 mentioned deaths happening in July 2012: one dead body being carried out of the cell, then three to four more detainees died and the other detainees prayed for them inside the cell. P46 further said that in a room in Harasta Hospital where only detainees from Branch 251 would be taken to, two more people died. One had a prior heart issue and the other died of gangrene after an injury he suffered at the Branch. Murder with base motives pursuant to § 211 (2) var. 4 StGB could be considered in four cases, the fifth case could have had a different cause.
- I c) P51 said that he confirmed the death of two people between April 2011 and June/mid 2012. This could amount to a crime pursuant to § 211 (2) var. 4 StGB in two cases.
- I d) When different witnesses mention deaths occurring within the same time frame, the Court resolves any doubt in favor of the Accused, assuming that the dead bodies were identical and related to the same instance. As mentioned previously, the limitation of prosecuted acts is not applicable for plaintiffs who joined the case according to § 395 (5) StPO. Therefore, a conviction under the German Criminal Code (StGB) is possible in the following instances:

- a) P50 said that he was beaten on the soles of his feet, this could amount to §§ 223, 224 (1) no. 2, 239 (3) no. 1 StGB.
- b) P48 said that he was beaten with a four-string cable, this could amount to §§ 223, 224 (1) no. 2 StGB.
- c) P47 said that he was beaten with cables and rifle butts and threatened with death, this could amount to §§ 223, 224 (1) no. 2, 239 (3) no. 1, 239b StGB.
- d) P46 said that he was beaten with cables and pipes, a plastic bag was held above his head and set on fire, and there was an attempt to insert an object into his anus, this could amount to paragraphs §§ 223, 224 (1) no. 2, 239 (3) no. 1 StGB and § 177 (1) nos 1 + 3 StGB [old version].
- e) P44 said that he was not abused, however, the general prison conditions he described could amount to § 223 StGB.
- f) P42 said that she was beaten, received electric shocks, and that one of the guards pushed her head between his legs, this could amount to §§ 223, 224 (1) no. 2 StGB and § 177 (1) nos 1 + 3 StGB [old version] and § 174a StGB [old version].

As mentioned before on the July 21, the crimes of torture and severe deprivation of liberty according § 7 (1) nos 5 + 9 VStGB are considered as given. Several plaintiffs described the necessary prerequisites thereof. In cases d and f sexual assault is considered. The Judges do not consider it to be necessary to add § 7 (1) no. 7 VStGB [enforced disappearances] to the charges.

Court Decision rejecting a request to take evidence previously filed by the Plaintiff Counsels

The Plaintiff Counsels' Bahns, Kroker and Scharmer request [TR#46, day 92] to summons Fadel Abdul Ghany and Mariam Al-Hallak and to read several UN and other reports is rejected.

It has already been proven that it was part of the regime's strategy to arrest individuals without informing anyone about their whereabouts. This was confirmed by the majority of witnesses. The motives of the state are, however, not important. Only the motives of an individual perpetrator are relevant.

Court Decision rejecting requests to take evidence previously filed by the Defense

The Defense's request [TR#46, day 93] to summons PW3_93, living in [REDACTED] is rejected.

It has not been clarified what PW3_93's job was, where he worked or when he worked there. The Intelligence Services are a large system with many branches. It can therefore not be assumed that PW3_93 would simply know anything about what Branch 251 was during the relevant indictment period of this very case.

There is a further lack of connectivity. Neither location nor time of PW3_93's own detention has been specified in the Defense's request. The request also does not state whether PW3_93 met the Accused before his defection or how PW3_93 would know anything about the Accused's views or about how the Accused treated detainees. It is also not mentioned how exactly the Accused helped PW3_93 nor where and when this alleged help took place.

The Judges assessed the defense's request in accordance with § 244 (5) s. 2 StPO, weighing the relevance and the expected evidentiary value of PW3_93's testimony against the organizational efforts of his summons. The evidentiary value is considered to be low. It is unclear what and how much information PW3_93 will provide. The fact that PW3_93 was released quickly could further only show that the Accused was willing to help individual detainees. It is also already known to the Court that he was in touch with the opposition and people like Kamal Al-Labwani and Riad Saif.

PW3_93 does not live in the EU and therefore can only be reached through a formal request for legal assistance addressed to Turkey. However, by making relevant inquiries, the Judges learned that a legal assistance request to Turkey would take at least four to six months to be processed, probably longer. A request from 2019 to Turkey is still pending. According to the current estimate, the taking of evidence will end in October and would significantly be prolonged by summoning PW3_93. An audio-visual testimony cannot be conducted since it is crucial to get a personal impression of PW3_93.

Court Decision regarding requests to take evidence previously filed by the Defense

The Defense's request [TR#47, day 95] to summons PW1_95, who worked as the head [REDACTED] is rejected.

The evidentiary value of PW1_95's testimony is very low, close to being irrelevant. [The Judges referred to the Prosecutor's statement on October 6 [TR#48]. The Court further finds that the Accused might have simply been unwilling to help PW1_95 and used his alleged powerlessness as an excuse. Even if the Accused was indeed powerless in this situation, it would not be surprising that he was unable to object to another Colonel's order, particularly in light of the special position of Hafez Makhlof.

*PW1_95 does not live in the EU and therefore can only be reached through a formal request for legal assistance addressed to Turkey. The proceedings were adjourned at 1:37PM.

Trial Day 98 – October 14, 2021

The proceedings began at 09:45AM with seven spectators and four journalists in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Testimony of P55<sup>6</sup>

Presiding Judge Kerber informed P55 of his rights under § 55 StPO [right to not answer any questions that could incriminate the witness or a close relative]. P55 agreed to provide his personal information in court, stating his name, age and current occupation. P55, a 56-year-old Syrian and former Secretary of the Head of the Interrogation Branch 285, currently living [REDACTED], was informed of his rights and duties as a witness. P55 denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

<sup>6</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P55 referred to “Investigation Branch/Division” throughout his testimony. However, the equivalent Arabic phrase for investigation can also mean interrogation. Since most of the previous witnesses referred to Interrogation Branch/Division, the term interrogation will be used throughout this report. The terminology also caused some confusion Court which P55 had to solve at a later point in his testimony.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P55 what he did in Syria and how he came in contact with Raslan. P55 said he volunteered at the Intelligence Services in 1983 and, after a nine-month training course, he was assigned to the Interrogation Branch, Branch 285 of the General Intelligence Services. P55 emphasized that he does not remember dates very well. [Then] Raslan came to the Branch, holding the rank of a First Lieutenant.

Kerber asked if P55 could specify when that happened. P55 said he does not remember the dates, but it could have been in 1984, 1985, or 1986. P55 further explained that he served at Branch 285 in all divisions and his last position before he defected was Secretary of the Interrogation Branch.

Kerber asked when P55 started working at the Intelligence Services. P55 said he started in June 1983.

Kerber asked when P55 started working as Secretary of the Interrogation Branch. P55 said it was eight months before his defection.

Kerber asked P55 in what capacity he was working before that. P55 said he served in all divisions of the Branch, for example he was the Head of the Computer Department where he had to print out papers.

Kerber wanted to know more about the structure of Branch 285 and of which Divisions it consisted. P55 asked Kerber to clarify whether she was talking about Divisions outside the branch.

Kerber clarified that she was talking in general. P55 explained that the structure of the Branch provided a separate building where the Head of the Branch was situated with his Secretary and the Head of the Archive Division next to him.

Kerber wanted to make sure that she understood correctly that the offices of the Head of the Archive Division and the Head of the Branch were on the same floor. P55 affirmed, saying that the office of the Head of the Archive Division was next to the Head of the Branch's office.

Kerber asked if there were Divisions in Branch 285. P55 said that there were none outside the building, but within the building.

Kerber indicated that this was what she meant. P55 [enumerated]: the Head of Guarding Division, the Head of Interrogation Division and the interrogators, the Head of the Accounting Division, the Prison Division and its personnel, the Officer of the Vehicles and his personnel (the cars and the drivers).

Kerber asked whether there was a Mail Division. P55 wondered whether Kerber meant that there was a Mail Division [interpretation caused a misunderstanding] and denied, saying that there was قسم الذاتية [an Entity] and the Postal Correspondence Division. All these divisions report back to the Head of the Archive.

Kerber wanted to know in which Mail Division P55 worked. P55 said he worked in all Divisions of the Branch for two or three years each before he was transferred to another Division. P55 added that he would know all tasks of the Branch.

Kerber asked when Raslan was transferred to Branch 251. P55 said he did not understand but [Raslan] served a long time until he was transferred to Branch 251.

Kerber asked if Raslan came back to Branch 285 at some point. P55 explained that after [Raslan] went to Branch 251, he came back to Branch 285.

Kerber asked what Raslan's job was at Branch 285. P55 described that [Raslan] was an interrogator before he was relocated. After he came back from the Inner Branch [Branch 251], he was the Head of the Interrogation Division.

Judging by his own personal experience, Kerber wanted to know how P55 would describe and evaluate Raslan as a person. P55 explained that as a human being, [Raslan] was a good Syrian human being, but at Branch 251 [upon Raslan's transfer] their relationship was interrupted, because it was a different Branch and Division.

Kerber asked if P55 had contact with Raslan after he came back to Branch 285. P55 clarified that their contact was limited to greeting each other and P55 paying respect to Raslan, considering Raslan's military rank. P55 said he himself was a non-commissioned officer while [Raslan] was an officer. [Therefore, P55 addressed Raslan with] "Sidi [Sir]" and respect.

Kerber asked if P55 knows how Raslan's demeanour was at Branch 251. P55 denied.

Kerber recalled that it was said that Raslan was cold. P55 said he does not have any knowledge in this regard. P55 only knows that they relocated [Raslan] and brought him back [to Branch 285].

Concerning his working circumstances, Kerber wanted to know if Raslan had a workspace and how it was. P55 said it was an office, a table, a car, and a telephone. He used to sign the notes of the Interrogation Committee. P55 concluded that this was all that was apparent to himself and others and that these would have been normal procedures.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner first wanted to know when exactly P55 defected. P55 said it was at the end of December 2012, exactly on December 31th.

Wiedner asked who the Head of Branch 285 was until P55 defected. P55 said that the Head of Branch 285 was Brigadier General Rukn,<sup>7</sup> Ahmad Deeb عميد ركن أحمد ديب.

Wiedner asked P55 to describe what his job was at the end of summer/autumn 2012. P55 said [he was] the Secretary of the Head of the Interrogation Branch.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether by saying "Interrogation Branch", P55 was talking about the Division within Branch 251, and asked P55 for whom exactly he was working as a Secretary. P55 said [he was the Secretary of] the Head of Branch 285, Ahmad Deeb.

Wiedner asked if P55 was his secretary. P55 confirmed and said he and another person, Al-Ammouri العموري [were his secretaries].

<sup>7</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: There is no English translation for the term "Rukn". It is used as an addition to military titles when an officer completes an "Arkan [plural of Rukn] course".

Wiedner asked when P55 became his secretary. P55 said it was seven to eight months before his defection.

Wiedner recalled P55 saying that Raslan was a First Lieutenant when he started working at Branch 285. P55 said he did not say Brigadier General. [Apparently, the court interpreter translating from German to Arabic for the witnesses, defendant, and plaintiffs used the term Brigadier General. The court interpreter sitting next to P55 and translating from Arabic to German clarified that Wiedner meant "First Lieutenant."] P55 indicated that he understood now.

Wiedner asked if Raslan was a First Lieutenant when he started working. P55 said that [Raslan] was a First Lieutenant and was promoted during the following years to a Lieutenant Colonel. P55 explained that they were together at the [same] branch.

Wiedner asked P55 if he could estimate Raslan's age when he started working at Branch 285; whether he was in his mid-twenties or mid-thirties for example. P55 asked if Wiedner meant the time when [Raslan] returned from Branch 251.

Wiedner denied and clarified that he meant when Raslan first came to Branch 285. P55 said [Raslan's] age was 26, or 27, or 30 [between 26 and 30] when he came as a First Lieutenant.

Wiedner asked if that might have happened in the 1990s. P55 denied, adding that he saw Raslan between 1980 and 1987 when [Raslan] was young.

Wiedner recalled P55 saying that he did not have contact with Raslan after the latter was transferred to Branch 251. Wiedner asked P55 if he knows whether the transfer between the branches was normal or happened for a special reason. P55 asked Wiedner whether he meant the transfer from Branch 285 to Branch 251, or when [Raslan] returned to Branch 285.

After clarifying that he meant the first option, Wiedner asked whether transfers between branches were common or not. P55 explained that there were many transfers during the incidents, including when they brought Anwar [Raslan] back to the branch [Branch 285]. However, in terms of a reason, P55 and others did not know if it was normal or not. [Raslan] came back to the branch to his normal job.

Wiedner asked P55 what he meant by "normal job". P55 said "his normal job". Even P55 and others had respect for Raslan due to the immense work pressure during the incidents. The whole branch was busy.

Wiedner asked what the task of Raslan was at Branch 285. P55 said [Raslan was] the Head of the Interrogation Division.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly his task was. P55 said [Raslan's task] was interrogations and signing notes.

Wiedner asked if this meant that Raslan was conducting interrogations by himself. P55 explained that all interrogators were interrogating. However, the building of the Head of the Branch and his Secretary was separate from the branch, P55 could therefore not see who was interrogating because he was sitting at the Secretary's [office].

Wiedner asked if this meant that P55 could not see or notice that by himself. P55 asked “notice what?”.

Wiedner clarified that he meant whether P55 saw or met Raslan while the latter was working or interrogating. P55 said he did not see him while interrogating. [Raslan] interrogated in the prison downstairs or sometimes in his office. However, his job was the Head of Interrogation Division and P55 and his colleagues had nothing to do with him.

Wiedner recalled P55 mentioning that he had no knowledge of the reason for Raslan’s transfer and that there were many transfers during the incidents. Wiedner wanted to know if the transfers were as common before 2011. P55 explained that there were transfers every year and “they” even brought heads from other governorates. P55 provided an example: Brigadier General Ahmad Deeb was transferred from Dar’a Branch to Branch 285, and Colonel Firas Hamed العقيد فراس حامد who was the Head of Branch 285, was transferred to Homs Branch (318). P55 concluded that there were many transfers.

Wiedner asked if P55 knows whether it was possible that Raslan was transferred from Branch 251 to Branch 285 as a punishment. P55 said as far as he was concerned [P55 stopped for a moment], however, he would not be in a position to know if it was a punishment or not. Nonetheless, [staff transfers] happened often during the incidents and P55 and others did not know whether it was a punishment.

Asking in general about P55’s personal assumption, Wiedner wanted to know how the Syrian regime would deal with someone who was not loyal to it. According to P55, if the regime considers that someone has no loyalty, he would be referred to an investigation/interrogation or to the Directorate Disciplinary Board. Sometimes, depending on the case, he might get fired or suspended from his job. P55 pointed out that he was not sure and further explained that such cases happened in the directorate and P55 knew [of these cases]. After [being referred to] the Disciplinary Board, some people were imprisoned and others were released of their duties. P55 concluded that this was all he knows in this regard concerning the General Intelligence Directorate, but he would not know about the rest, because during the incidents, P55 and his colleagues did not know anything. According to P55, many things happened which they did not expect to happen, and everything was “crowded and noisy” [hectic].

Wiedner wanted to know if that means that P55 does not know the situation concerning Raslan. P55 denied, saying he would not know.

Wiedner wanted to know if someone would be released from duty if he was not loyal to the regime and did something wrong. P55 said that depending on the crime, he could be imprisoned if he was collaborating with [certain] “groups”, [or] he could be suspended from work. However, P55 stressed that officers would know more about such matters.

Wiedner asked whether P55 was aware of any instances where such scenarios occurred. P55 denied knowing of such cases during the incidents but said he would know a case that happened before the incidents.

Wiedner asked P55 to explain what happened. P55 said [after taking a moment to recall details in his mind] there was the Head of the Intelligence Directorate, Major General Bashir Najjar اللواء بشير نجار and the Head of Interrogation Branch, Brigadier General Rukn Aziz Abbas العميد الركن عزيز عباس.

Najjar was referred to the judiciary and imprisoned at a military prison where he died. Abbas was imprisoned at Branch 285 (he was previously the Head of this branch), was referred to the investigation, and was released from his duties [due to] him transcending from their working protocol. According to P55, Abbas was loyal to “them” [regime] and they still imprisoned him.

Wiedner recalled P55 saying that Raslan had an office and a car, asking P55 whether Raslan had other privileges as well. P55 said that as far as he knew [Raslan] went back to his work and had his office and a car.

Wiedner referred to the transcript of P55’s questioning with the police according to which P55 stated that when Raslan came back to Branch 285, he had his office and car, as well as personnel to serve him coffee. Wiedner asked P55 what he meant by personnel serving him coffee. P55 said there was First Lieutenant Tammam Abbas الملازم أول تمام عباس and [REDACTED] [along with Raslan] who were all on the same floor and they had their private conference where they were served tea and coffee.

Wiedner pointed out that P55 mentioned during the police questioning that if Raslan’s transfer would have been a punishment, then he would not have obtained what he did. P55 told the Court that they might have suspended [Raslan] but P55 would not know the reasons for the transfer because he himself was a non-commissioned officer. P55 further described that Raslan was initially a good person before he was transferred. Thus, they might have sent him back [to Branch 285] because he “was good.”

With regards to the hierarchy at the branch, Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan was able to make important decisions and if so, to what extent. P55 explained that as an interrogation officer [Raslan] would make suggestions and was not a decision maker at the branch. According to P55, the decision makers were the Head of the Interrogation Branch and the Director of the General Intelligence Directorate. Any note from the Head of Interrogation Division, Raslan, had to go via the Head of the Interrogation Branch, who could possibly modify it, and then onto the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate.

Defense counsel Böcker indicated that he did not understand some of the terms. Judge Kerber said that they should give the interpreter some time to sort out the problem.

P55 said he wanted to give an example to explain to the Court what actually happened: the Head of the Interrogation Division, Raslan, makes suggestions in a note concerning an individual detainee. The note then goes to the Head of the Interrogation Branch, Ahmad Deeb who could agree to [Raslan’s] suggestions or not. If he would agree, then the note would be passed to the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate, Mamlouk or Deeb Zaytoun who in turn might agree or disagree.<sup>8</sup>

Judge Kerber asked Defense Counsel Böcker whether everything was clear to him now. Böcker affirmed.

<sup>8</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: This example also served to clarify the difference between Interrogation Division and Interrogation Branch. In line with what P10 stated, Branch 285 was also called the central Interrogation Branch. P55 was therefore referring to Branch 285 when talking about Interrogation Branch and referring to a sub-division of branches when talking about Interrogation Division.

Judge Wiedner wanted to clarify whether Ali Mamlouk was the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate. P55 explained that after Mamlouk was relocated and became the Head of the National Security Bureau, Deeb Zaytoun became the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate.

Wiedner wanted to make sure that he heard “General Intelligence Directorate” correctly. P55 confirmed, adding that he was the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate – also called State Security – but not in all of Syria since there would be many other security apparatuses.

Wiedner asked P55 if he knew whether there was a special council that was established within Branch 285 to make decisions. P55 asked if Wiedner meant before or during the incidents.

Wiedner clarified that he meant during the incidents. P55 said “they” established a committee including the head of the Interrogation Division, First Lieutenant Tammam Abbas, Major [REDACTED], and another officer whom P55 does not know. Sometimes they would also invite the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate in addition to the Head of the Interrogation Branch, Ahmad Deeb.

Wiedner said he would show some documents in Court and would like P55 to demonstrate what they represent, in case he would know what they are.

P55 explained to the Court that the Head of the Branch agreed to the suggestions in this case, however, Deeb Zaytoun only agreed to suggestions 2, 3, 5, and 6 and disagreed to 1 and 4. Thus, it [the note] went back to the branch with the resolution: "Referring him to the court of terrorism, re: Confiscating the 2000 USD: Deeb Zaytoun, the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate does not agree".

Wiedner asked if P55 could recognize the signatures of the people in the document. P55 denied, adding he would recognize only the one of the Head of the Branch, Ahmad Deeb. However, if the document would be verified, then the signatures should be as said in the document.

[Another set of 5 documents were briefly displayed one after another. They belong to the same note. The focus was on the last page.]

Wiedner asked P55 if he could comment on the document. P55 said that he needed to see the suggestions. [The last page including the suggestions was shown. The document looked similar to the last one recreated above].

P55 explained that in this note, the detainee was considered guilty. The investigation/interrogation committee signed it and Major General Deeb Zaytoun agreed to all suggestions.

In terms of interaction between Branch 251 and Branch 285, Wiedner wanted to know if there were connections between them interrogation-wise. P55 said there would be indeed a connection, in the sense that when the subject matter of a detainee concerned Branch 285 but he was with Branch 251, the interrogation had to be continued at Branch 285. In such cases, Branch 285 would interrogate the detainee and after some procedures and signatures, refer him to a court. P55 said the same would also happen vice versa: if [the detainee] was at Branch 285 and Branch 251 wanted to complete investigations/interrogations. P55 concluded that this would be the connection between the Branches. In terms of personal connections however, for example if P55 would have gone to Branch 251 alone, this would have been prohibited, only official correspondence or postal correspondence was permitted.

Regarding Branch 251 and Branch 285, Wiedner wanted to know whether their function and power was the same. P55 said he could not tell because he would not know their specialties. However, in terms of power, Branch 251 was much bigger since Hafez Makhlof – a Colonel and the cousin of Bashar Al-Assad – was in charge of Division 40. P55 added that the Patrols Division had a high status during the incidents and that Hafez Makhlof was more powerful than the Head of the Branch of Branch 285.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Klinge wanted to know how many people were arrested at Branch 285 on a daily basis. P55 said he would not know; however, the numbers were high during the incidents, especially on Fridays when arrests took place from mosques and streets.

Klinge asked if there was a transcript – similar to the ones just shown in Court – for each detainee. P55 said that what he and others saw concerned people whose crimes were proven. “They” [staff at the branches] could interrogate people and refer them to court and eventually release them.

Klinge wanted to know what P55 meant by “proven”. P55 said that [one could be] convicted for: possession of arms, acts against the state, possession of foreign currencies like USD or Euro since it would be prohibited in Syria to have foreign currencies without a permission from the Central Bank, unlicensed weapons, car smuggling, or possession of large amounts of drugs.

Klinge asked whether such confessions were taken under torture. P55 said [they could have been taken] through explicit confessions or sometimes from confessions under torture, especially during the incidents, innocent people were detained and put in prison.

Klinge wanted to know how many interrogation transcripts the Head of Branch 285 would have received. P55 said that there was no specific number, but there were many during the incidents, and the duty [interrogations] continued until midnight or 1AM. P55 added that even himself and his colleagues at the secretariat did not have the official [working hours]. P55 worked three days in a row, then Al-Ammouri would work for three days. They had to work a full day and slept at the Branch.

Klinge asked if a distrusted Colonel would have had the ability to release detainees without getting punished for it. P55 indicated that he mentioned before that no officer was able to release any detainee without the approval of the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate. P55 told the Court that as shown before, Raslan could suggest [releasing a detainee] according to his own beliefs. The Head of the Branch could disagree or agree and then it would go up to the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate, Zaytoun, who would in turn either agree or disagree until further notice. The detainee could be referred to a civilian prison like Adra, or Sednaya. According to P55, the colonel in Klinge's example could release [a detainee] but only after the approval of... [Klinge interrupted].

Klinge wanted to know the reason why a distrusted Colonel would be assigned as the Head of a Division. P55 said he would not know because these decisions would be made at a higher level at the Branch or the Directorate. Brigadier General, Tawfiq Younes [the Head of Branch 251] might suggest that he does not want Raslan and that he should go back [to Branch 285]. Perhaps if [Younes] would not like [Raslan], [Younes] submits to someone [unclear whom P55 referred to] that he does not want [Raslan]. According to P55, anything Younes suggests would be effective because [Branch 251] is a powerful branch.

Klinge wanted to know whether the position of the Head of the Interrogation Division was important. P55 wanted to make sure whether Klinge meant the Head of the Interrogation Branch or the Interrogation Division – Deeb or Raslan [respectively].

Klinge clarified that he meant Raslan. P55 said that [Raslan] was an officer who was respected for his rank. He could suggest whatever he wanted in a note, but the final decision belonged to... [Klinge interrupted].

Klinge recalled that P55 was asked during the police questioning whether someone would be punished when committing something wrong, and P55 answered that one option would be that one would be relocated. Klinge wanted to know if that could apply to Raslan's case. P55 told the Court he would not know the mechanisms at Branch 251. According to P55's knowledge, one could not be released in such a way at his Branch [285], however, he had no knowledge about Branch 251. P55 added he would believe that the approval of the Head of the Branch is mandatory [at Branch 251] as well. [Raslan] could suggest releasing twenty detainees, and Younes might request him to come, and they would discuss it. Perhaps [Younes] agreed or not, depending on the beliefs of the Head of the Branch, concluded P55.

Klinge recalled that P55 was also asked during the police questioning whether someone whose loyalty was questioned would be punished by being relocated to another branch. According to Klinge, P55 replied to the police that this would be illogical and if one's loyalty was questioned, he would have been punished in another way and could get imprisoned. P55 explained to the Court that "they" had many procedures in these cases: One could be sent back to his initial branch but with certain restrictions and if the crime was serious, he might be imprisoned. P55 stated that during the incidents, many problematic issues occurred, and the system was sabotaged.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker asked P55 where he was questioned on [REDACTED], 2021. P55 said in [REDACTED].

Böcker wanted to know the reason for the questioning and how he was contacted. P55 said that he was told that there was a case concerning Raslan and due to P55's long service history at the Interrogation Branch, "they" sent him a summons for P55 to tell them what happened. P55 said they asked him questions and he answered.

Böcker asked if P55 was contacted via mail. P55 said of course, he received a letter.

Böcker asked whether Inspector Knappmann was present during the questioning. P55 said he would not know their names, but they were two [police officers] and an interpreter.

Böcker asked if they talked to him about the possibility of being a witness in a trial and whether they told him how they reached him. P55 said this did not happen, they sent him a letter and did not tell him how they reached him.

Böcker wanted to know whether P55 heard something on the topic of the Intelligence Services and trials in the EU before he was interrogated. P55 denied, adding that [in this regard] only two young men came to him in Jordan when he defected.

Böcker asked if P55 was questioned on another occasion other than at the end of September. P55 said that this was the only time [he was questioned] in Germany.

Böcker wanted to confirm that he correctly understood that P55 was questioned only one time in Germany. P55 confirmed and said this very day would be the second time.

Böcker asked if P55 was interrogated once in Jordan. P55 confirmed.

Böcker asked if P55 was interrogated somewhere else in the EU. P55 denied.

Böcker wanted to know how many interrogation divisions would be within the Interrogation Branch. P55 said that the question was not clear and wanted to clarify whether Böcker was asking about the Interrogation Division or the Interrogation Branch.

Böcker said the Interrogation Branch whose head was Ahmad Deeb. P55 explained that the Interrogation Branch and the Secretary were [isolated]: Ahmad Deeb, P55, Al-Ammouri, and the Archive. Regarding the Interrogation Divisions, there were two to three officers and [other] civilian interrogators.

Böcker wanted to know if that means that the Interrogation Branch has just one Interrogation Division. P55 said there would only be one Interrogation Division in the branch: Raslan and someone else [as officers].

After he reiterated that there was only one Interrogation Division, Böcker recalled that Raslan became its head after coming back from Branch 251. Böcker wanted to know how P55 knew that information. P55 said that the head of the branch, Ahmad Deeb, said that Raslan came to "us", and the whole branch and all staff knew that he returned.

Böcker asked if P55 knew that only through this one source or if there was an additional source. P55 said he did not understand.

Böcker asked P55 if he knew about Raslan's return only because Ahmad Deeb told him that, or whether P55 knew that information from somewhere else as well. P55 said that the whole branch knew that Raslan was transferred from Branch 251 to Branch 285, just like when Ahmad Deeb came from Dar'a to Branch 285. According to P55, this was normal [procedure].

Böcker asked whether the officers at the Interrogation Branch had offices. P55 said of course.

Böcker wanted to know if they had phones in their offices. P55 said they might have had an external phone [to make calls outside the branch]. P55 wondered if Böcker meant a phone [to make calls] within the directorate [internal]. P55 concluded that they had four-digit-number phones [every division has its own four digits] to call other departments and there were phones with which one could use to make calls outside [the branch].

Böcker asked if Raslan's phone was able to make external calls. P55 said maybe, however, they also had mobile phones. P55 said he believes that they did not use ordinary phones anymore.

Böcker said he was asking because P55 mentioned earlier that "Raslan got his office, his phone, and his car". So, he was just wondering if it was a special phone. Böcker went on to ask P55 about Raslan's office, whether it was premium, upstairs or downstairs in the basement, or like P55's office. P55 said there might have been slight differences [to P55's office]. According to P55, "it was an office" with a desk, two or three sofas, but also a TV screen, a chair... [P55 repeated the objects again to indicate that it was nothing that special].

Böcker asked whether every officer had a car by the time Raslan came back to Branch 285. P55 explained that every officer at the General Intelligence Directorate had a car, except Ahmad Deeb who had four or five cars from good brands.

Böcker asked what car brands there were: Lada, Mercedes, something else. P55 wanted to know if Böcker meant Raslan or the Head of the Branch.

Böcker clarified that he meant anybody, in general. P55 said "we" had Mercedes, Opel, Peugeot 405 or 504.

Böcker wanted to know if P55 was able to recall from which brand Raslan's car was. P55 said he would not remember, it was ten years ago.

Böcker asked if P55 could tell whether Raslan worked at Branch 285 between October 2006 and August 2008. According to P55, Raslan stayed at Branch 285 until the day he was transferred to Branch 251. P55 apologized to the Court, saying he would not recall the precise date.

Böcker recalled P55 mentioning other divisions like Division 40 which was headed by Makhoul. Böcker asked which branch it belonged to. P55 said that Division 40 would be one of Branch 251's divisions.

Böcker concluded that Division 40 was not related to Branch 285, then asked P55 if members from [Division 40's] staff used to enter Branch 285. P55 stated that he would not know and did not come across such a person. However, P55 was not sure whether Makhoul had sent someone from his side [division] to the Head of the Interrogation Branch.

According to P55, [Makhlouf] did not need to send anyone and could [simply pick up the phone] being a supreme authority, and “top” cousin of the President.

Böcker wanted to confirm that P55 personally never came across such a person [from Division 40]. P55 denied and said himself and his colleagues were lower-ranking personnel than that. Maybe officers and the bosses came across such personnel.

Böcker recalled P55 saying that he defected on the last day of 2012, during the incidents. P55 said that “first of all,” the incidents were not in Damascus. P55 was in Damascus and there were not many incidents. When the incidents increased P55, his wife, and children decided that it was “outside the law” [it did not become clear what P55 meant by that.]

Böcker asked P55 when he decided to escape. P55 said “thinking about it was...[he interrupted his line of thoughts]”, the day he decided was the day he defected, but [thinking about defection] started two or three months earlier.

Böcker wanted to know for how long P55 thought of the topic of escaping before he made the decision. P55 explained that three months before his defection, he sat down with his family (his children were old [enough]) and they discussed. Then P55 got a passport for his wife and daughter and thought about the topic. However, three days before his defection, P55 sent his wife and daughter to Beirut and then to Jordan on the same day. Three days later, P55 and his son, [REDACTED], got their salary, prepared themselves, and went via rural Damascus to Jordan.

Böcker quoted from the transcript of P55’s police questioning according to which P55 said with regards to escape and defection that he needed a few months and wanted to organize many things and get his family outside [Syria] first. Böcker asked P55 why he needed to secure his family first. P55 explained that in Syria, any member of the [government] personnel, an officer or a non-commissioned officer, who defects... [P55 stopped] P55 said he was afraid that his wife and daughter would be detained. Even after his defection, P55 knew that “they” went to his relatives’ houses and asked about him. P55 was very concerned about his family and did not want to get blood on his hands [in case] “they” would have forced him to “go out” and shoot. P55’s son was also a reservist, and the family did not want to “get involved”. P55 was worried about his wife and daughter and did not want them to be harmed, P55 added that he only had one daughter.

Böcker recalled that P55 said he needed three months to decide. Böcker asked P55 what happened. P55 said the family discussed the subject matter and agreed.

Böcker recalled that P55 was working at the Intelligence Services at that time and discussed with his family to leave his work and escape, however, P55 was working under Zaytoun and Mamlouk. P55 said it was Ahmad Deeb, not Zaytoun and Mamlouk.

Böcker said “okay” and asked P55 to describe what he did during these three months, whether he spoke with his colleagues about it or simply told Deeb that he wanted to leave. P55 explained that at the climax of the incidents, no one had trust in his colleagues and all members of the personnel were afraid of [more like ‘discreet with’] each other. Had P55 told Al-Ammouri about it at the office, he would have reported P55. P55 kept his relationships as if everything was normal until he defected. P55 added that he [kept working] as an administrative person, [received or dealt] with the guests of the Head of the Branch.

He did not often sit with the staff and had no conversations about the defection topic, only about work. It was an immense pressure, if he had spoken with someone, someone would have written a report about him or made a phone call and P55 would have been imprisoned immediately. P55 concluded that it was an absolute secret.

Böcker reiterated that P55 did not talk with his colleagues. P55 said “absolutely not.”

Böcker wanted to know why. P55 explained that in Syria, there would be no democracy, and no one was allowed to ever talk about the state’s politics. It was a red line, simply preposterous.

Böcker recalled that P55 said “in our opinion, Raslan was a good person”. Böcker wanted to know who P55 meant by “we/our”. P55 clarified that before the incidents, Raslan was good with all the personnel. No one talked about him. He was neither mean, arrogant, strict, nor imperious. He used to greet [people]. P55 said if Raslan came across P55 or one of the personnel, they would say “Respect, Sir!” [salute] and he would greet them back. Others, however, did not greet back. After the incidents, P55 was relocated to a remote office with the Head of the Branch and the work pressure increased. P55 thus had no more contact [with Raslan] and everybody was busy with his own work.

Böcker asked P55 if Raslan’s demeanor with detainees changed after the incidents. P55 explained that he had no personal connection with Raslan, he only knew his external manifestations [the surface]. However, in general, before the incidents and even after them, Raslan was smiling and had a happy face but P55 did not know [how Raslan acted] in prison and during interrogations.

Böcker wanted to know what P55 meant with “happy face” and whether Raslan kept it when he was at [or returned from] Branch 251. P55 said he already mentioned that [Raslan] was a morally good human being. P55 added “he was good, but I don’t know”. However, P55 did not see Raslan [after/at] Branch 251 at all.

Böcker reiterated that Raslan was a good person according to P55. Böcker wanted to know P55’s opinion on the likelihood of whether Raslan kept that smiley face with the detainees and treated them well, in a subjective comparison with how he used to treat other people. P55 said that first and foremost, he and others did not see the detainees who Raslan interrogated. P55 and others would have had to see whether [the detainee] was shocked or not. P55 told the Court that he was talking about [Raslan’s] relationship [interaction] with him and his colleagues as personnel, not the detainees. P55 further added that he wanted to mention an older instance: P55 had a car and back then, before the incidents, there were coupons for gas before. P55 used to go to Raslan and say “Respect, Sir! I need 20 liters of gas”. If [Raslan] got some [coupons] available, he would say “Ok, [REDACTED]! [here you go], 20 liters”. P55 would thank him saying “Respect, Sir!”. P55 concluded that he would, however, not know anything regarding prison and detainees.

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled that P55 was the Secretary of the Head of the Branch. Fratzky wanted to know what P55’s tasks were and whether he came across interrogation transcripts. P55 explained that regarding the job of the Secretary of the Head of the Branch, P55 and his colleagues had a nice, luxurious office with four to six telephones. Their task was delivering the mail to the Head of the Branch, for example notes and things like that were delivered by the Head of the Archive. In addition, they had to deal with the service log, and things concerning vehicles, working hours, holidays, and sick leave, as well as other administrative matters. P55 said they sometimes received sealed letters, addressed to the head of the Branch personally. P55 and his colleague did not have to look at mail that was addressed to officers personally and thus did not know its contents.

According to P55, the Head of the Branch would only pass these letters to P55 and his colleagues if the subject matter was trivial. If it was, however, important, [the Head of the Branch] would keep it with him or inform the Head of the Archive, because he was close with the Head of the Branch, and sometimes the Head of the Archive dealt with the matter on the computer in his office, in case it was classified.

Fratzky asked P55 whether the resolution to relocate Raslan to Branch 251 or back to Branch 285 was passed via P55's office. P55 clarified that when [Raslan] was relocated to Branch 251, P55 was not [yet] the Secretary of the Head of the Branch. When [Raslan] came back, [the Head of the Branch] told P55 and his colleagues that Raslan came back. P55 did not see the relocation resolution. According to P55 it was exclusive to the officers.

Fratzky stated that he did not fully understand the reason for P55's escape from Syria. P55 explained that he did not agree with what the regime was doing regarding detentions and killings. He was also afraid that one day, they would be forced to go to detention [operations] or demonstrations, to do field work. P55 said he was further afraid that he and his son would "be polluted with blood" [get blood on their hands].

Fratzky recalled that P55 defected on December 31, 2012. Fratzky wanted to know if Raslan was missing before that. P55 said that the question was not clear.

Fratzky asked P55 if he heard that Raslan defected or was reported missing before P55 himself defected. P55 said he did not know that [Raslan] defected in the first place, until "they" said that [Raslan] was missing from the Branch. It was Raslan and another officer who defected before or after [Raslan]. The officer was called [REDACTED] and was missing from the branch as well. According to P55, himself and his colleagues did not know anything about Raslan.

Fratzky asked P55 to repeat the name as he did not understand it acoustically. P55 said [REDACTED].

Fratzky asked P55 where this person worked. P55 said that [REDACTED] was an interrogation officer. His name was on the note along with Tammam, Hasan, Anwar, and Ahmad Deeb.

Fratzky wanted to know what was said about Raslan at the branch when he left, from P55's own experience as the Secretary of the head of the Branch. P55 stated that it was said that Raslan and [REDACTED] did not appear for work, contact with them was lost, and there were rumors about them having defected and escaped. However, no one knew with 100% certainty. According to P55, the rumors could be true after all.

Fratzky wanted to know how the Head of the Branch reacted and whether he told P55 something concerning Raslan's escape. P55 denied and said that a search warrant was circulated, the Director of the General Intelligence Directorate was informed, and "they" conducted the rest of the measures.<sup>9</sup>

Fratzky asked if such measures passed P55's office. P55 said that such a topic was exclusive to the officers, but generally, the "search card" would be known in Syria. According to P55, "they" would conduct a search, and it would not pass his desk, because these would be legal measures.

<sup>9</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It was not clear whether P55 himself or the Head of the Branch initiated the search warrant.

P55 pointed out that he mentioned earlier that anything that concerns the officers, would be exclusive to them: any mailed search card would have “Exclusive to officers” written on it. That would be the working mechanism according to P55’s experience.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the BKA [Federal Criminal Police Office] sent her the transcript of an anonymous potential witness’ questioning. She then recalled that the next trial session would take place on October 26th would be held in room 120 at the Higher Regional Court’s building.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Fratzky continued his questioning of P55 by asking whether P55 was working at Branch 285 during 2005 and 2006. P55 confirmed.

Fratzky asked if P55 would know a person called Anwar Al-Bunni. P55 said he heard the name and added that this might be a lawyer, however, P55 did not remember. P55 concluded that the name crossed his mind, he was indeed a lawyer.

Fratzky asked whether P55 heard about Al-Bunni’s detention at the Intelligence Services or encountered him there. P55 denied, adding that he would, however, recall that a person with the name “Anwar Al-Bunni” was a lawyer.

Fratzky wanted to know which religious denomination P55 would belong to. P55 said he would be a Sunni Muslim.

Fratzky asked P55 to describe the power-hierarchy between Sunnis and Alawites, and to elaborate on his own experiences, in case he had some. According to P55, the Alawite authority would be more powerful and there would be no Sunni authority. According to P55 there are names [some people] on the margin. P55 said he wanted to shed light on something: from 1983 when P55 volunteered at the Intelligence Services and until he defected, there was a Sunni Director of the General Intelligence Directorate, but the Head of the Interrogation Branch was Alawite. The decision would be made by the Head of Branch 285, who was Alawite, but the responsibility [liability] of signing would lie upon the Sunni. In case a problem occurred, the Director of the General Intelligence Directorate would be held accountable. The Head of the Interrogation Branch would not be held accountable, and instead say that he just made a suggestion, and it was the Director of the General Intelligence Directorate who made the decision and who is in fact the boss of the Head of the Branch.

Fratzky concluded that, according to what he understood, the head of the Interrogation Division only suggests resolutions. Fratzky wanted to know if it would give the Head of the Interrogation Division more significance and power, in case he was an Alawite. P55 said that Fratzky did not understand him correctly: the Head of Interrogation Branch would be the one with power, personnel, vehicles, and money. However, regarding prison matters, he only suggests things, but the decision belongs to the Director of the General Intelligence Directorate. P55 said there was only one exception to this: the Director of the General Intelligence Directorate who was powerful, Major General Ali Mamlouk, succeeded by Deeb Zaytoun. These were the ones to make powerful decisions during the crisis.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer summarized that P55 worked at the Intelligence Services for approximately twenty-nine years. Scharmer wanted to know roughly how many employees worked there. P55 asked if Scharmer meant at the branch.

Scharmer confirmed. P55 explained that there was no specific number, sometimes there were eighty and on other days there were one hundred, depending on the release of the conscript classes (the compulsory service). Sometimes a decision to release one to five people was issued, and thus they had to wait for other personnel to come to join them. Having said that, P55 added that the [number of] [enlisted] employees who were working there voluntarily, and the officers would only fall short by one or two, when someone was relocated to another branch.

Scharmer wanted to clarify whether eighty to one hundred included the officers. P55 confirmed.

Scharmer asked whether the situation was the same after 2011. P55 clarified that this was before the incidents. After the incidents, the personnel increased at all the security apparatuses. The reason for that were summons of the released ones and the reserve, like P55's son who was released and then was summoned years later.

Scharmer asked whether that situation applied to September 2012. P55 said he could not provide an exact answer, but the personnel increased, because they pulled people from their houses as reserve. P55 was the Head of the Computer [department] and witnessed that people were released, and then were summoned back during the incidents.

Scharmer wanted to know the total number of officers during that time. P55 asked whether Scharmer meant the Interrogation Division or the Interrogation Branch.

Scharmer said he was referring to the Interrogation Division. P55 indicated that there were approximately eight to nine people: employees, interrogators, and officers, during the incidents.

Scharmer wanted to know the number of the personnel, among others, the prison guards, who were responsible for the prison of the branch. P55 described that there were two prisons before the incidents, the southern and the northern with eight people working at each prison in on-day shifts of four people. Nevertheless, during the incidents, detainees increased and a third, western, prison was opened which was underneath the building of the Head of the Branch and his secretary office. According to P55, eight people worked there as well in shifts of four. P55 summarized that the approximate number of the personnel, including the director of the prison, was twenty-five or twenty-six people.

Scharmer asked P55 if everything he said during the police questioning at the end of September in Germany was true and whether he said something that could be confidential. P55 said that he did not say anything but the truth.

Scharmer clarified that he wanted to ask to make sure that P55 did the same on this very day [in court]. P55 said of course, he said everything he would know.

Scharmer wanted to know on which floor Raslan's office was in 2012. P55 described that "our" branch consisted of a ground floor, a prison in the basement, and a first floor. The inner building was above the southern prison. Raslan's office was there.

Scharmer asked if Raslan's office was above the prison. P55 said of course.

Scharmer concluded that Raslan conducted interrogations at that office. Scharmer wanted to know whether interrogations were conducted in other offices as well. P55 said there were no other offices for the officers. There was Raslan, [REDACTED], and Abbas, the rest were interrogators situated above the northern prison. P55 added that the office of the Director of the Prison was where Raslan's, [REDACTED], and Abbas' offices were.

Scharmer asked what position and rank Raslan was holding at that time. P55 said Raslan was the head of a division and a Colonel Officer; the highest rank.

Scharmer recalled P55 telling the police that one could hear screams at the branch. P55 explained that Branch 285 was very small and not big at all. If any human being was screaming, his voice would be heard, particularly at the time of the incidents when there were many detainees. P55 said he could hear screams at his office when there was an interrogation. However, he could not see anything because his office was far away.

Scharmer asked if one could hear screams even outside the office. P55 explained that there was no real distance, only one wall was separating "our" office and the inner building of the branch. Separating them was one iron door that would close automatically and P55's office was above the western prison.

Plaintiff Counsel Schulz recalled that P55 was asked during the police questioning whether the Head of the Division could hear screams. Schulz wanted to know how P55 answered. Judge Kerber intervened and asked Schulz to specify whether he meant the head of the Interrogation Division or the Interrogation Branch. Schulz said that he would have a follow-up question after the answer. Kerber requested Schulz to specify whether he meant Ahmad Deeb or Raslan. [After a short discussion between Schulz and Presiding Judge Kerber about specifying the question and quoting from the transcript, Schulz said he would make a quote first and then ask his question later].

Schulz quoted from the transcript of P55's questioning with the BKA, according to which P55 said that Anwar [Raslan] could of course hear screams. Schulz asked P55 if Raslan could hear screams from his office. P55 said he did not sit in Raslan's office [to verify that]. P55 could hear them in his own office as it was directly above the prison and nothing separated the office and the prison except for the ceiling.

Presiding judge Kerber announced that P55 was dismissed. P55 apologized and said he was trying to remember anything he could say.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:20PM.

The trial will resume on October 26, at 9:30AM in room 120 at the Higher Regional Court's building.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 50
Hearing Dates: October 26 & 27, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Day 99 – October 26, 2021

During this short administrative session, the Prosecutors objected to three requests previously issued by the Defense Counsels to hear three additional witnesses. The Defense announced that they would submit further requests to take additional evidence.

Day 100 – October 27, 2021

The Defense submitted eight more requests to take evidence. Amongst others, they requested to hear additional insiders to testify about Raslan's opposition-friendly attitude, how he wanted to defect since the beginning of the revolution, his limited powers at Al-Khatib Branch due to Hafez Makhlof, and Division 40 allegedly taking over interrogations and the prison at the Branch. According to the Defense, additional expertise on the history and power structures of the Syrian Intelligence Services is needed.

The Judges did not make any decision about previous request to take evidence and explained that the schedule for the next trial days was still unclear.

Trial Day 99 – October 27, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with two spectators and three journalists in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Bahns and Dr. Kroker were not present.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the Defense previously announced that it would submit further requests to take additional evidence, however, according to the Defense, the submissions were not yet complete. Kerber concluded that this trial day would therefore be relatively short. She announced that the session would start with statement by the Prosecutors regarding previous requests by the Defense to hear additional witnesses.

[The following is a recreation of the Prosecutors statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Statements regarding the Defense's request to take evidence dated October 13, 2021[\[TR#49, day 97\]](#).

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

The Prosecutors object to summons and hear Mr. Al-Jarba [PW1_97], [PW2_97], [PW3_97] as witnesses.

Reasoning:

- I) According to the Defense's request, PW1_97 is supposed to testify that he and three of his relatives were accused of supporting Iraq to intervene in Kuwait and consequently arrested in 1996 and detained for two years. The request to hear PW1_97 as a witness must be rejected in this regard.
 PW1_97 is further supposed to testify that his brother was detained at Branch 285 at the same time, and that his brother told him that Anwar Raslan was always friendly, treated him with respect, was never disrespectful towards PW1_97's brother and never used violence against him. PW1_97 is further supposed to testify that his brother told him that he and his relatives were only released due to Anwar Raslan's intervention. However, there is no evidence that the release was solely based on Raslan's intervention.
 The Prosecutors further doubted the connectivity of the Defense's request regarding the question about how PW1_97's brother would know all that. In light of this, summons of PW1_97 is further not required because of the court's obligation or judicial enquiry since PW1_97 is living abroad.
 It remains unclear how these events that happened between sixteen and eighteen years ago could be fruitful for the question of fact and guilt in this present trial. It is irrelevant what Anwar Raslan did between 1996 and 1998 and whether he was friendly towards detainees at that time. This trial is also not about Raslan's work at Branch 285 but at Branch 251.
 Regarding the Defense's aim to have PW1_97 testify on Raslan's dissertation and work for the opposition: PW1_97's summons must be rejected as well.
 On August 12, 2020, the Prosecutors already stated at the Federal Court of Justice that the Defendant's behavior after the charged acts is irrelevant. The behavior was furthermore already detailed in the course of taking evidence at this court, in the form of testimonies by P54 and Riyad Saif. Testimonies of additional witnesses in this regard would only provide limited new insights.
 Neither the alleged content of the requested evidence, nor time and place thereof are sufficiently detailed in the defense's request. It is also unclear how exactly Raslan was involved with the opposition. The request provides no explanation on how Raslan's interventions affected Syria. For example, it remains unclear what happened to the black-and-white lists that Raslan allegedly drafted.
- II) The overall judicial enquiry does not require to hear PW2_97 as a witness, since he is residing in [REDACTED].
 PW2_97 is supposed to testify that Raslan was pro-opposition, wanted to defect and discussed his escape with PW2_97. However, the request does not provide any concrete information on how PW2_97 knew about all that. It merely mentions nebulous conversations in the summer of 2012. The purpose of the requested evidence is not visible due to missing details. There is further no connection between the charges and Raslan's escape and his pro-opposition attitude.
 Raslan is accused of having killed a high number of detainees for base motives and tortured an even higher number of detainees as part of a systematic and widespread attack against the Syrian population from April 29, 2011 until September 7, 2012. During this time, Raslan was in charge of the state-organization that was responsible for these crimes.

This is, however, not contrary to Raslan planning his escape. Jurisprudence from the Federal Court of Justice finds that the intent element is not discarded solely because the successful completion of a crime might not have been desired.

Regarding the allegation that PW2_97 could confirm Raslan's position of power, the Prosecutors further refer to their statement at the Federal Court of Justice, dated August 12, 2020. In addition, according to Anwar Raslan, PW2_97 was only aware that some detainees were referred to Raslan, but not how exactly these detainees were released or how much power Raslan had.

- III) The request to summons PW3_97 must be rejected. PW3_97 allegedly resides in [REDACTED] and would testify that he was detained at Al-Khatib for four days (although it is not clear when he was detained there) and that Raslan treated him well during this time and eventually released him. Further, PW3_97 would testify that P31's parents were allowed to bring food to the Branch and that P31 was allowed to eat his food in Raslan's office. In addition, PW3_97 is supposed to testify that Raslan asked government employees why they continued to arrest innocent people.

The Defense's request lacks connectivity and therefore does not meet the threshold pursuant to § 244 (3) s.1 StPO.

The Defense's request is missing information about how PW3_97 knows this information, and in general only provides vague information. For example, it is not clear when PW3_97 was detained at Al-Khatib, or why and how he was arrested. It is further unclear how, when and where he was in contact with Anwar Raslan and how he knew about Raslan's efforts regarding his release.

According to all evidence taken so far, one must assume that detainees at Branch 251 were usually held in the underground prison at a building close to Baghdad Street in Damascus. Detainees were only taken to other buildings for interrogations. It remains unclear how PW3_97 could have witnessed P31's parents bringing food to the Branch and P31 eating this food at Raslan's office.

If one considers the Defense's request to be a request to take evidence, the predicted evidentiary value is so limited that summons of PW3_97 is not necessary. According to a decision by the Judges dated October 13, 2021, Raslan was involved in the arrest and referral of detainees. PW3_97's testimony would merely provide information on individual support from Raslan to some detainees.

Presiding Judge Kerber handed out paper and digital copies [CDs] of the prosecutors' statements.

Defense Counsel Fratzky said the defense reserved its right to provide a response to the Prosecutors' statements.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the court decided on October 19, 2021 to refrain from hearing another female witness. Copies of the e-mail conversation between Judge Wiedner and a police officer regarding this witness, and the German translation of a screenshot provided by P54 were sent to the parties to the case.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked to talk to his clients for 30-60 minutes after the session to clarify aspects of future requests to take additional evidence that the Defense intends to submit the following day. Böcker added that the Defense already finalized some requests, however, it decided to submit all requests at once on the following day, after they spoke to their client. Judge Kerber consulted the court guards and confirmed that the Defense could talk to their client for thirty minutes after the session.

The proceedings were adjourned at 9:54AM.

Trial Day 100 – October 27, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:35AM with two spectators and two journalists in the audience. The Prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Kroker and Dr. Oehmichen were not present. Plaintiff Counsel Bahns joined five minutes late.

Administrative Matters

After opening the session, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the Defense Counsels would now read out the requests to take additional evidence, as the Defense announced they would the previous day.

Defense Counsels Fratzky and Böcker explained that they already provided the signed copies of the following requests to the court interpreters to ease simultaneous interpretation. Defense Counsels Fratzky and Böcker took turns reading out the following requests.

[The following are recreations of the Defense's requests, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court.]

Request to summons [PW1_100], living in [REDACTED]

- I) PW1_100 held the rank of a [REDACTED] in Syria and attended three training courses with Anwar Raslan. He helped Raslan escape and defect, together with [REDACTED] and P54. PW1_100 knows from conversations he had with Raslan about Raslan's pro-revolution attitude. From these conversations, as well as from his own close connections to government circles, PW1_100 also knows that as early as one or two months after the start of the revolution, Raslan opposed the government and wanted to defect. However, Raslan was unable to safely leave the country with his family at that time and therefore he had to delay his escape. PW1_100 can further testify that Raslan did not want to go along with the government's handling of the revolution and had his bags packed by the start of the revolution. PW1_100 obtained this knowledge from conversations he had with Raslan in November 2012 regarding Raslan's escape. PW1_100 and Raslan were both part of a committee on travel restrictions for retired officers over the age of 66 years. After a session of the committee at the Ministry of Interior, PW1_100 and Raslan went to PW1_100's office and spoke about Raslan's escape and the bad conditions at Branch 251. PW1_100 had the same opinion as Raslan. During this conversation, Raslan also told PW1_100 that he would contact people in Jordan regarding his escape. PW1_100 defected one or two days before Raslan and went to Jordan, where the two of them met again. PW1_100 is a Sunni like Raslan and is familiar with the problems that come with that. PW1_100 also knows about the problem that Hafez Makhlouf detained people at Branch 251 and oversaw their torture at this Branch. PW1_100 can testify how on one instance, when Raslan heard screams from the basement prison, he called there and was told that Mohammad Abdallah and others were in charge of torturing detainees.
- II) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW1_100, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks legal elaborations on the topic of aiding and abetting. However, Raslan's authority to give orders and his organizational authority at Branch 251 was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and eventually defected.

Division 40 and Hafez Makhoul, as well as Alawites in general, were the ones in power at the Branch. Raslan's attitude allows for conclusions on his behavior during his time at Branch 251. [Defense Counsel Fratzky added that the following paragraph would also be a reply to the Prosecutors' statement from the previous day.]

- III) Pursuant to § 244 StPO, a request to take evidence first requires one to (1) precisely describe an allegation or fact, (2) to name the evidence that is proposed to prove this allegation or fact, and (3) show connectivity between the alleged fact and the evidence proposed to prove the fact. Regarding requests to summons and hear witnesses, it is consequently required to detail in the request why the witness is supposed to testify about certain things. However, this is not required if the connectivity requirement becomes apparent from the overall context. On the issue of how and why a witness obtained knowledge of certain things, the Prosecutors stated that 'nebulous conversation without providing a time when these conversations allegedly took place' are insufficient for a request to summon and hear a witness. The Defense points out that the requirements for requests to take additional evidence must be set lower for witnesses from abroad. It must therefore be sufficient to state that someone had a conversation with someone else without specifying the time or providing a broad time frame. It must further be sufficient to draw a person's knowledge of certain facts from the person's rank or position within the government. The present trial is a trial of international nature, dealing with acts committed abroad, and is of international interest. In light of this and the fact that many of the charged crimes took place ten years ago, it is hard for the Defense to conduct its own investigations. The Defense does not have the capacities like the BKA or intelligence services with their specialized personnel. If one is to say that conducting a trial under universal jurisdiction is "prosecution without borders", the limitations to requests to take evidence must be set lower than in usual trials. It would otherwise violate the constitutional provision of the German state under the rule of law. The investigation of the truth must not fail due to lacking connectivity in requests to take evidence. The defense can only provide rather broad descriptions of a requested witness' testimony, however, restrictions in this regard would unproportionally restrict the work and rights of the Defense.

Defense Counsel Fratzky stressed that paragraph III would be the Defense's reply to the Prosecutors' statement from the previous day. Fratzky added that the Defense also objects to the Prosecutors' statements regarding PW2_97/PW2_100 and insists to summon and hear him as a witness.

Request to summons [PW2_97/PW2_100] (phone number provided by P54)

- I) PW2_97/PW2_100 was a major and also known as Abu Mahmoud in [REDACTED]. He acted as an intermediary between his town [REDACTED] and Branch 251. One week after the start of the revolution, PW2_97/PW2_100 was at Raslan's office at the Branch. PW2_97/PW2_100 is able to testify that Raslan released 30 to 40 detainees every week but had to consult Tawfiq Younes, who was the head of the Branch, for every release. Raslan always told Younes that the detainees would be unarmed, innocent civilians. PW2_97/PW2_100 and Raslan spoke about government attacks on their respective hometowns. Between April 2011 and summer 2011, PW2_97/PW2_100 went to Raslan every week to pick up 30 to 40 detainees. After that, it was no longer possible for PW2_97/PW2_100 to continue this practice since [REDACTED] took over all of Raslan's tasks at the Branch. There was only one single exception: when someone named Youssef was released after two or three hours in detention after PW2_97/PW2_100 contacted Raslan regarding Youssef's detention. Youssef was an opposition activist and participated in every demonstration. Raslan further told PW2_97/PW2_100 at an early stage that he wanted to defect.

Raslan's positive attitude towards the opposition is also known to PW2_97/PW2_100 due to the many conversations the two of them had. They also spoke about how very sad they were over government attacks on their respective hometowns.

- II) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW2_97/PW1_100, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks legal elaborations on the topic of aiding and abetting. However, Raslan's authority to give orders and his organizational authority at Branch 251 was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and eventually defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoulf as well as Alawites in general were the ones in power at the Branch. Raslan's efforts to defect and escape have direct implications on the charged acts and his attitude allows for conclusions on his behavior during his time at Branch 251.
- III) 1) The requirements on reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be placed lower for the purpose of this trial. This trial deals with acts committed abroad and is of international interest. Witnesses living abroad were and are daily business in this trial. The Court's efforts in determining the truth pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning witnesses, such as making telephone calls or contacting them via email, are possible and have been applied in the past.
- 2) Pursuant to § 244 StPO, a request to take evidence first requires one to precisely describe an allegation or fact, to name the evidence that is proposed to prove this allegation or fact, and to show connectivity between the alleged fact and the evidence proposed to prove the fact. Regarding requests to summons and hear witnesses, it is consequently required to detail in the request why the witness is supposed to testify certain things. However, this is not required if the connectivity becomes apparent from the overall context.
- 3) On the issue of how and why a witness obtained knowledge of certain things, the Prosecutors stated that 'nebulous conversation without providing a time when these conversations allegedly took place' are insufficient for a request to summons and hear a witness. The Defense points out that the requirements for requests to take additional evidence must be set lower for witnesses from abroad. It must therefore be sufficient to state that some had a conversation with someone without specifying the time or providing a broad time frame. It must further be sufficient to draw a person's knowledge of certain facts from the person's rank or position within the government. The present trial is a trial of international nature, dealing with acts committed abroad, and is of international interest. In light of this and the fact that many of the charged crimes took place ten years ago, it is hard for the Defense to conduct its own investigations. The Defense does not have the capacities like the BKA or intelligence services with their specialized personnel. If one is to say that conducting a trial under universal jurisdiction is "prosecution without borders", the limitations of requests to take evidence must be lower than in usual trials. It would otherwise violate the constitutional provision of the German state under the rule of law. The investigation of the truth must not fail due to lacking connectivity in requests to take evidence. The defense can only provide rather broad descriptions of a requested witness' testimony, however, restrictions in this regard would unproportionally restrict the work and rights of the Defense.

[Judge Kerber reminded Defense Counsel Fratzky to read slower so that the court translators could follow. The court translators swapped after these two requests and took turns in the further course.]

Request to summons Dr. Kamal Al-Labwani [PW3_100], living in [REDACTED], as a witness and expert

Dr. Al-Labwani, who is requested to be summoned and heard as a witness and expert, indicated his willingness to testify in court in Koblenz to Raslan's family.

- I) Dr. Al-Labwani is a [REDACTED] citizen. He worked as a doctor in Syria and is one of the leading members of the Syrian opposition. Dr. Al-Labwani met with Anwar Raslan in Jordan after the latter defected. PW3_93 and Raslan both worked for the opposition and amongst others participated in talks in Geneva. Dr. Al-Labwani can testify that in 2011 Anwar Raslan was responsible for the release of PW3_93 who was detained between one and ten days. Both later worked for Dr. Al-Labwani as part of the opposition. The three of them therefore had several conversations. Dr. Al-Labwani can further testify that Hafez Makhoulf was the 'instance of power' at Branch 251, which was amongst others due to his family relations to the President Bashar Al-Assad. Dr. Al-Labwani knows this from his work with the opposition. Dr. Al-Labwani further has his own YouTube Channel where he is posting videos on the history of Syria and the revolution on a daily basis. He is therefore a suitable expert on Syria and the Syrian revolution.
- II) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear Dr. Al-Labwani, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks legal elaborations on the topic of aiding and abetting. However, Raslan's authority to give orders and his organizational authority at Branch 251 was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and eventually defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoulf as well as Alawites in general were the ones in power at the Branch. Raslan's efforts to defect and escape have direct implications on the charged acts and his attitude allows for conclusions on his behavior during his time at Branch 251. In determining whether one went along with what happened at the Branch, it makes a difference if this person helped one or many detainees.
- III)
  - 1) The requirements on reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be placed lower for the purpose of this trial. This trial deals with acts committed abroad and is of international interest. Witnesses living abroad were and are daily business in this trial. The Court's efforts in determining the truth pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning witnesses, such as making telephone calls or contacting them via email are possible and have been applied in the past.
  - 2) Pursuant to § 244 StPO, a request to take evidence first requires one to precisely describe an allegation or fact, to name the evidence that is proposed to prove this allegation or fact, and to show connectivity between the alleged fact and the evidence proposed to prove the fact. Regarding requests to summons and hear witnesses, it is consequently required to detail in the request why the witness is supposed to testify certain things. However, this is not required if the connectivity becomes apparent from the overall context.
  - 3) *On the issue of how and why a witness obtained knowledge of certain things, the Prosecutors stated that 'nebulous conversation without providing a time when these conversations allegedly took place' are insufficient for a request to summons and hear a witness. The defense can only provide rather broad descriptions of a requested witness' testimony, however, restrictions in this regard would unproportionally restrict the work and rights of the Defense.

Defense Counsel Böcker noted that § 184 of the German Court Constitution Act (GVG) would be the core of the Defense's reasonings.

Request to summons a witness, following the decision to not summon female witness Z121020528

- I) Z121020528 was initially supposed to be summoned for October 26, 2021. However, after a phone call between Presiding Judge Kerber and CCI Frey, Kerber decided to refrain from summoning Z121020528. While the Defense does not know about the precise content of this phone call, Presiding Judge Kerber added a handwritten note to the file in which she explained that the witness's in-court testimony would require measures by the BKA and its partners. However, these measures could only be granted in calendar week 45 since the BKA does not have the respective capacities before that.
- Z121020528 is, however, still relevant to this trial. This is not waived by the fact that the BKA currently has no time to accompany the witness and can only do so in week 45.*

Request to summons [PW4_100], living in [REDACTED], as a witness

- I) PW4_100 worked as an interrogation officer at Branch 251 with Anwar Raslan for two years until the start of the revolution. PW4_100 will be able to testify that not a single detainee died at the Branch before the revolution. He can further testify that members of Division 40 conducted interrogations at Branch 251 and tortured detainees before the revolution and did increasingly so after the start of the revolution. PW4_100 can further say that due to orders at Branch 251, Anwar Raslan was not allowed to intervene in March 2011, however, he helped detainees by releasing them as part of his daily transcript work. Division 40 was in power of Branch 251 and the relevant prison. PW4_100 can testify that members of Division 40 created interrogation reports and used employees of Branch 251 for their purposes, such as to identify persons they considered traitors. As early as May 2011, Raslan was deprived of all his powers. PW4_100 is able to confirm this because he was transferred to [REDACTED] in May 2011.
- II) PW4_100's testimony will further support Anwar Raslan's statements made in this trial.
- III) The requirements of reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be placed lower for the purpose of this trial. This trial deals with acts committed abroad and is of international interest. Witnesses living abroad were and are daily business in this trial. The Court's efforts in determining the truth pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning witnesses, such as making telephone calls or contacting them via email are possible and have been applied in the past. PW4_100 indicated that he is willing to testify via video link.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the defense how many more requests they would read out. Defense Counsel Böcker said they had three more requests.

Request to summons [PW5_100], living in [REDACTED], as a witness

- I) PW5_100 will testify that Anwar Raslan was transferred from Branch 285 to the Espionage Branch, Branch 300, at the end of 2006. Raslan could therefore not have been present at Branch 251 in 2007, as one of the previous witnesses stated. PW5_100 himself was transferred from Branch 300 to Branch 251 in 2007. Anwar Raslan took over PW5_100's task at Branch 300. PW5_100 was the head of the Interrogation Division at Branch 251 until 2008 when he was succeeded by Anwar Raslan.

PW5_100 was then transferred to Branch 285 and the police before he eventually defected. PW5_100 can say that he was unable to act within his Division at Branch 251 due to a conflict he had with Lieutenant Colonel Mohammad Abdallah about [...].

- II) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear PW5_100, since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks legal elaboration on the topic of aiding and abetting. However, Raslan's authority to give orders and his organizational authority at Branch 251 was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and eventually defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoulf as well as Alawites in general were the ones in power at the Branch. Raslan's efforts to defect and escape have direct implications on the charged acts and his attitude allows for conclusions on his behavior during his time at Branch 251.

PW5_100 is further relevant in light of P35's testimony. Raslan was not the head of the Interrogation Division at Branch 251 in 2007. P35's testimony is therefore incorrect with regard to Raslan's activities in 2007.

- III) The requirements on reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be placed lower for the purpose of this trial. This trial deals with acts committed abroad and is of international interest. Witnesses living abroad were and are daily business in this trial. The Court's efforts in determining the truth pursuant to § 244 (2) StPO must be higher regarding such witnesses. Other forms of summoning such as telephone calls or email are possible and have been applied in the past.

Request to summons Manaf Tlass [PW6_100], living in [REDACTED], as a witness (number provided by P54)

- I) Tlass is a former Syrian Brigadier General, now living in [REDACTED]. He escaped Syria in July 2012 with the help of the [REDACTED] intelligence service. His father served as [REDACTED] for over thirty years. The Defense cited from an interview that Tlass gave to the [BBC: @14:08 – 14:45, the translation was provided by the Defense team's translator]. PW6_100 will testify that Hafez Makhoulf was the head of Division 40 and gave orders and tortured detainees at Branch 251. Makhoulf's power was so great that he was able to act without the knowledge of the president and no one could disobey his orders without being detained or even killed, even if one had a higher rank than Makhoulf.

- II) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear Manaf Tlass since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks legal elaborations on the topic of aiding and abetting. However, Raslan's authority to give orders and his organizational authority at Branch 251 was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and eventually defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhoulf as well as Alawites in general were the ones in power at the Branch. Raslan's efforts to defect and escape have direct implications on the charged acts and his attitude allows for conclusions on his behavior during his time at Branch 251.

Tlass' testimony is also relevant in light of what P54 said about Manaf Tlass: that he was leading the Republican Guard but changed his attitude when the revolution started; that he disapproved of the military reaction to the revolution, but Bashar Al-Assad did not listen to his suggestions; that Manaf Tlass and Hafez Makhoulf had an argument about a more rational solution for the revolution, and that no one could simply disobey Makhoulf's orders. In light of these statements by P54 about Tlass, one can conclude that Anwar Raslan, who was not as high-ranking as Manaf Tlass, would have been killed in case of disobedience. Manaf Tlass' testimony will also confirm that Hafez Makhoulf was the source of power at Branch 251 and that even a high-ranking, long-serving officer like Tlass could only defect and flee.

A lower-ranking officer without relevant connections would have risked detention or even death in case of disobedience. Anwar Raslan's help for detainees must be evaluated in light of this and acknowledged accordingly.

- III) 1) *The requirements on reachability of witnesses living abroad pursuant to § 244 (5) s.2 StPO must be placed lower for the purpose of this trial. #### Request to summons Gerhard Conrad as an expert

Request to summons an expert on Islamic Studies with a focus on Syria, to testify about the power structures in Syria, particularly regarding to Branch 251, Hafez Makhoul, and Division 40, as well as the structures between Alawites and Sunnis.

The Defense proposes to hear Gerhard Conrad, who according to Wikipedia [German entry] is a retired German intelligence officer with experience working in Damascus and the Middle East. He retired in 2011 and is a Visiting lecturer at King's College and a member of the Roundtable of Intelligence Services in Germany. His testimony is based on his professional background and own personal experiences.

- I) On April 28, 2020 the Court heard from Ms. Thurmman who provided an overview of Syrian history and a media analysis of what happened during the revolution. The Defense provided a comprehensive summary of Thurmman's testimony. For a summary and her full testimony, see [TR#1, trial day 3].

An additional expert report will show that Anwar Raslan had no power and had to follow orders of Hafez Makhlouf. Anwar Raslan could neither order torture nor prevent what Division 40 was doing. Within his limited capacities, Raslan tried to help detainees regardless of the dangers for his own life.

- II) The decision dated July 21, 2021 makes it necessary to hear Mr. Conrad since the decision holds Raslan responsible for almost everything that happened at Al-Khatib Branch. The decision further lacks legal elaborations on the topic of aiding and abetting. However, Raslan's authority to give orders and his organizational authority at Branch 251 was very limited due to him being Sunni. Raslan tried to help detainees and eventually defected. Division 40 and Hafez Makhlouf as well as Alawites in general were the ones in power at the Branch. Raslan's efforts to defect and escape have direct implications on the charged acts and his attitude allows for conclusions on his behavior during his time at Branch 251. Anwar Raslan put his own life at risk when he turned against the regime. In assessing contribution under the German Criminal Code and the Code against International Crimes, examining the backgrounds is crucial. Ms. Thurmman's expertise was far from being sufficient for these purposes. The Defense therefore requests to hear Mr. Conrad.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the Defense whether their statement on the Prosecutors' statement would be submitted and read out. Defense Counsel Fratzky affirmed, saying that it would be paragraph III/2 of the previous requests and since he already read it out four or five times, he sees no necessity to read it again. Kerber concluded that the deadline for submitting the statement would be met.

None of the parties provided a statement on the Defense's new requests. Prosecutor Klinge said he and his colleague would reserve the right to provide statements and would try to submit the statements in writing before the next trial day.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced a 30-minutes break to prepare copies of all submitted requests for the parties and to discuss additional administrative issues afterwards.

***

***

After handing out the copies of all submissions made on this day, Kerber announced that the Judges have to read out a decision regarding charges of crimes committed against the plaintiffs:

Supplementing the decision dated July 21, 2021 on crimes committed against the plaintiffs in this trial pursuant to German domestic criminal law, the Judges consider that all acts were committed unanimously together with jointly performed dangerous bodily harm, § 224 \(1\) No. 4 StGB.

Based on recent phone calls he made with several people, Judge Wiedner added a note to the case file:

On October 25, 2021 Judge Wiedner had phone call with an officer at the Ministry of Justice of Rhineland-Palatinate who is in charge of legal assistance requests. This person informed Wiedner that legal assistance requests issued to Egypt would only be processed very slowly and it would be difficult to estimate how long such requests would take to be processed by Egyptian authorities. A request related to a confiscated truck was issued in 2017 and until this day, there has not been a reply from the Egyptian authorities. Another legal assistance request related to the transfer of files was issued in 2018 and it took one year to be processed.

A request from 2011 remained unaddressed for six months and eventually was withdrawn since it could no longer be considered in the relevant trial. The officer further explained to Wiedner that there was no legal basis to have audio-visual testimonies of witnesses in Egypt.

Wiedner further called the German embassy in Cairo on October 26, 2012<sup>1</sup> The relevant officer there confirmed to Wiedner that the above descriptions were similar to his own experiences. He also added that it is questionable if requests would be processed at all. According to the officer at the embassy, legal assistance requests would take at least four to six months to be processed, however, it usually takes one year, and some are never processed at all. However, it would depend on political aspects and intelligence background of the requests. The officer explained to Wiedner that the Egyptian intelligence service has a veto right concerning certain legal assistance requests of special interest. This would lead to some request never being processed or being blocked.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the Judges are unable to provide information about the schedule and content of the next trial days. They would have to make several phone calls and as of now, the next trial day would take place as initially scheduled.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:28AM.

The trial will resume on November 3, at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 51
Hearing Date: November 4, 2021

Day 101 – November 4, 2021

P56, a former colonel at the Syrian Ministry of Interior and a long-time friend of Raslan, told the Court that Raslan defected relatively later than other members of the military because he was concerned about his family and he had to take a long route to Jordan littered with military checkpoints. P56 also identified Hafez Makhoul as the head of Al-Khatib Branch and said Raslan was under immense pressure from Makhoul.

The Prosecutors objected to hear additional witnesses requested by the defense. According to the Prosecutors, whether or not Raslan helped people or planned to defect was irrelevant because he knowingly followed through on orders to have thousands of individuals tortured and he reported back to his superiors regarding the successful completion of those orders. The Presiding Judge announced that the Court undertook immense efforts to secure witnesses for the following trial days, however, it was not possible in many cases.

Trial Day 101 – November 4, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:40AM with four spectators and three journalists in the audience.<sup>2</sup> Two cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Schulz was not present.

The witness waited in the last row of the public gallery before the start of the session.

Testimony of P56

Presiding Kerber apologized to P56 for mispronouncing his name and informed him about his right and duties as a witness. P56, a 59-year-old Syrian living in [REDACTED] and former colonel at the Syrian Ministry of Interior denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage. [REDACTED]

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that she was going to ask P56 general questions before her colleague, Judge Wiedner, would continue with in-depth questions. Before starting her questioning, Kerber asked Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer if he had any concerns because he looked slightly confused.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said he assumed that P56 was to be informed about his right under § 55 StPO since, according to the Defense's request that proposed P56 as a witness in this trial, P56 worked at the same Branch as Raslan. Judge Kerber said she did not see any necessity in this regard. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying since other witnesses in a similar capacity testified in this trial without any issues, he thought that it was irrelevant to inform P56 about his rights under § 55 StPO. Böcker concluded that there were no indications as to why P56 should be informed about these rights. No other parties provided statements in this regard. Presiding Judge Kerber said it was unnecessary to inform P56 about his right under § 55 StPO.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he could not hear the Presiding Judge very well. Kerber pulled the microphone closer and started her questioning of P56.

Kerber asked P56 who he was, what he did in Syria, and how he came into contact with Raslan. P56 said he did not work in the same area as Raslan. He worked at the Ministry of Interior on police issues.

Kerber wanted to know how P56 came into contact with Raslan. P56 said he and Raslan were friends and colleagues because they attended police academy together in 1992. According to P56, Raslan was among the top three of their class and therefore started working at State Security after their one-year training and graduation. P56 stayed with the police. He added that he and Raslan were friends. They stayed in touch, but they did not visit each other until the end of October in 2012. At that time, there was an assembly at the Ministry of Interior to establish a council in order to deal with the issue of retired officers. Raslan and P56 were both members of this council. After the assembly – which took place at the Ministry of Interior where P56 worked – he invited Raslan to his office for a coffee. P56 and Raslan spoke about the events in Syria and Raslan told P56 that he wanted to defect. Raslan “made it clear” to P56 that he wanted to leave the office and Syria. P56 then explained to Raslan that he himself “was sitting on packed bags” and would be leaving the country within the next two days. Raslan therefore asked P56 for help and they agreed on a plan: they agreed to only talk about their defection by using codes. P56 told the court that the phones of all officers were monitored so they decided to refer to the people helping them as ‘you are invited for lunch’. P56 went on to tell the Court that he contacted people in Jordan who wanted to help him, including [REDACTED], who in turn was willing to help Raslan. P56 gave them each other's number and Raslan contacted [REDACTED]. P56 added that he left Syria two days after his meeting with Raslan, then Raslan followed and left Syria two weeks later. However, according to P56, Raslan's journey was more difficult than his own because P56 lived in a town close to the Jordanian border. Whenever he went home from his workplace, the Ministry of Interior, no one asked him where he was going, while Raslan was from a town close to Homs with many military checkpoints on the way to the border. People would have noticed that he was moving toward the border. Raslan therefore had to take a detour via Dara'a, Damascus suburbs and Sweida.

Kerber asked whether P56 knew if someone called [P54] helped Raslan. P56 denied.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner said his first question referred to how P56 got to know Raslan in 1992 when they did their training together. He asked P56 what kind of training that was and what kind of people were trained to do which tasks. P56 explained that there were 50 students training to become officers. All of them previously studied law and then took a voluntary training at the police academy. Courses dealt with all aspects of police work, such as crimes and drugs.

Wiedner recalled that Raslan joined the Intelligence Services after this training and asked P56 if the training was geared toward potential work with the Intelligence Services. P56 said he did not think so. It focused on police tasks, but it was possible that someone was accepted to another department afterwards.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened with Raslan after the training and where he worked afterwards. P56 said both of them were busy and had no time to visit each other. However, as friends they stayed in contact and asked each other about their families and children.

Wiedner said that was not what he wanted to know. He wanted to know where Raslan worked after the training. P56 said Raslan went straight to the State Security. He was dealing with crimes concerning the security of the state. P56 added that Raslan maybe also dealt with drug issues.

Wiedner asked at what Branch Raslan worked. P56 said Raslan worked at the State Security Branch in Damascus and was the deputy of the Investigation Division shortly before “the events”. According to P56, the head of the Branch was a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad, Hafez Makhoulf.

Wiedner asked for the number of the branch. P56 said he could not remember, maybe it was 225. It was known as Al-Khatib Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know if P56 knew who led Al-Khatib Branch. P56 said it was Brigadier General Hafez Makhoulf.

Wiedner asked P56 if he knew the name Tawfiq Younes. P56 affirmed that he heard the name.

Wiedner wanted to know who this person is. P56 said he might be the head of a different State Security branch.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan worked at Al-Khatib Branch ever since their training or if he also worked somewhere else. P56 said Raslan maybe worked as a police instructor for two years before starting at State Security.

Wiedner asked what P56 meant by “maybe” or if he knew that for certain. P56 explained that he knew Raslan was working as an instructor but was not sure for how long. It might have been one or two years.

Wiedner wanted to know how close P56’s contact to Raslan was since 1992. P56 said they did the one-year training together. They were friends and colleagues and in constant contact by telephone.

Wiedner asked how often they were in contact and whether they called each other or sent messages. P56 said they were in contact on special occasions, such as holidays. P56 added that it was normal in Syria that people acted as intermediaries, meaning they would contact each other and ask for favors. When Raslan needed anything police-related, he contacted P56.

Wiedner asked P56 to provide an example. P56 described how a doctor friend of his was arrested during the events in Syria. He was accused of treating wounded people. P56 therefore contacted Raslan, and his friend was released after two days.

Wiedner wanted to know when this happened. P56 said it was in early 2012.

Wiedner said he still did not understand what exactly P56 meant when he said that he and Raslan were friends. He asked P56 how often he and Raslan were in contact: once a week, once a month or rather once a year. P56 said he and Raslan were both very busy.

Sometimes they contacted each other once a year, sometimes multiple times per month. He added that they were in contact for special occasions.

Wiedner asked what they spoke about when they were in contact and what P56 knew about Raslan's work. P56 explained that he did not interfere with Raslan's matters. They spoke about their children. P56 added that Raslan was not allowed to talk about his work and P56 did not ask him about it.

Wiedner asked if they spoke about politics. P56 denied, adding they could not do so.

Wiedner asked if P56 knew something about Raslan's work at Al-Khatib Branch. P56 told the Court that demonstrators who were arrested during the events in Syria were taken to Al-Khatib Branch where they were interrogated.

Wiedner asked if P56 knew that from Raslan or somewhere else. P56 said he and Raslan spoke in P56's office in 2012. That was when Raslan told him that a couple of demonstrators were taken to the Branch and that he helped thirty of them to be released. He had to talk to the head of the Branch to do so. When P56 told Raslan that he must help these people, Raslan told him he could not always help them.

Wiedner asked if this was the meeting at P56's office that he previously mentioned when he and Raslan first met. P56 affirmed, adding it was two days before he left Syria.

Wiedner wanted to know when it exactly happened. P56 said it "could have been" on October 29, 2012. He said he left Syria on December 2, 2012.

Wiedner asked if they met two days before P56 left since P56 just said they met on October 29, 2021. After P56 turned to the interpreter, the latter told the Court that P56 had just asked him which month October would be and that he meant the eleventh month. Wiedner asked P56 whether he consequently meant November 29, before his departure. P56 affirmed that it was two days before that. Wiedner asked if P56 left on December 2, 2012. P56 affirmed, adding that Raslan left a few days later.

Wiedner asked P56 if he knew when Raslan left Syria. P56 said it was three or four days after him.

Wiedner said P56 previously mentioned a longer time span and asked P56 how he learned that Raslan left Syria. P56 said they both were in contact by phone after Raslan arrived in Jordan.

Wiedner wanted to know if P56 and Raslan also met in person. P56 said they met once.

Wiedner asked if they met in Jordan since they were in contact. P56 denied.

Wiedner asked P56 what he could tell the Court about his first meeting with Raslan. Wiedner recalled that it was on the occasion of the establishment of some sort of committee. He asked P56 who comprised the committee and what the committee's functions were. P56 explained that the Ministry of Interior established a council of five or six officers. P56 was the representative of the Ministry of Interior and Anwar Raslan represented State Security. There was also a brigadier general from Air Force Intelligence and a brigadier general from the Military Intelligence, as well as a brigadier general from the same division at the Ministry of Interiors as P56. This brigadier general was in charge of passport and migration issues. The aim of the committee was to come up with restrictions for retired officers who wanted to leave Syria.

Wiedner asked how many times the committee met. P56 said they had one assembly, maybe two but he thinks it was once.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P56 knew what Raslan was doing at this time and where he was working. P56 said when they met at his office it was the first time they met [again].

Wiedner asked from which Branch Raslan was sent [to the committee] and what his task was. P56 said it was Al-Khatib Branch. [Raslan seemed upset, gesticulating with his hands while talking to his translator who in turn spoke with Raslan's Defense Counsels.]

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan said that. P56 said Raslan told him, adding that P56 knew where Raslan was working and Raslan knew where P56 was working.

Wiedner recalled that first, P56 and Raslan both attended the assembly before they had a private conversation. He asked P56 to recall this conversation in detail. P56 recalled that after the assembly was over, everyone went their own ways and he invited [Raslan] to his office for a coffee because they were colleagues and friends, since they did their training together. P56 added that they both had not seen each other in a long time. It was therefore necessary to meet again and talk because the situation in Syria "was very precarious" at the time.

Wiedner asked what happened next. P56 told the court that "as he already mentioned," he asked Raslan [if he was going to flee Syria], because he felt that Raslan was under psychological pressure. Raslan then told P56 that he had to leave [Syria].

Wiedner wanted to know if P56 was surprised. P56 said of course he was surprised. He told Raslan that he was sitting on packed bags and ready to leave within the next two days. Raslan asked P56 how he was going to "do that" and if he could help him. P56 therefore contacted the person who wanted to help him. P56 explained to the Court that he contacted the person when he was at home, not in his office. He contacted him via Skype because it was less monitored. According to P56, the same person then contacted Anwar [Raslan].

Wiedner asked P56 if Raslan told him about earlier attempts to defect. P56 said he does not think so, however, [Raslan's] situation was different from his own situation: Raslan was from Homs, in the middle of Syria and was working in Damascus, and the easiest way to leave was to go to Jordan. P56 said Raslan was apparently looking for people to help him leave Syria. Maybe he got a chance that day.

Wiedner asked whether money had to be paid [for Raslan's escape]. P56 said he was in contact with Raslan via phone after Raslan arrived in Syria and he thinks that Raslan had to pay money. P56 added that Raslan's journey took ten days because he had to go from house to house, from farm to farm. According to P56, this was certainly expensive.

Wiedner asked if the two men had further contact in Jordan or at a later time. P56 explained that the two of them spoke about the events and the difficult situation of living in Syria when they were both in Jordan. They spoke about the fact that their children could no longer attend university. According to P56, that was the main issue they spoke about.

[The two court interpreters were quickly chatting with each other, as did the Judges.]

Wiedner wanted P56 to tell the Court what Anwar Raslan told P56 about the reasons for his defection. P56 said they did not talk about details, but he could see that [Raslan] was under psychological pressure. P56 went on to explain that the two of them left Syria at a point in time that some would consider quite late because many officers left before them. However, [fleeing] was dependent on the situation and opportunities. P56 said it could cost one his life to be arrested [while trying to leave the country].

Wiedner asked if Raslan told P56 why he did not defect earlier and why he was unable to try before. P56 denied, adding that he could not remember the details. He said he already mentioned earlier that it was not easy for an officer to leave Syria, it was depending on opportunities.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan spoke about his family in this regard. P56 said of course Raslan wanted to take his wife and children with him, otherwise they would have been arrested by the regime.

Wiedner asked if they spoke about that. P56 said of course Raslan said that he did not want to leave alone but only together with his family. P56 added that this was normal. He recalled that he himself went to Geneva in 2011 to attend a conference on human rights. He wanted to stay in Geneva, but his family was still in Syria, so he returned.

Wiedner recalled P56 mentioning psychological pressure on Raslan. Wiedner asked P56 if Raslan said anything on this matter, like where the pressure came from and what kind of pressure he faced. P56 said Raslan told him that he became tired of his work. P56 added that he already told the Court that Hafez Makhoulf was working in the same area [as Raslan]. Raslan was under [Makhoulf's] control and had to do everything Makhoulf wanted.

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened saying he had one question: who said that Hafez Makhoulf worked at the same area? Judge Wiedner replied that this was his next question anyway: how did P56 know that Hafez Makhoulf worked at the same area as Raslan? P56 explained that he was an officer at the Ministry of Interior. He of course knew who worked at the different branches because Damascus was relatively small.

Wiedner wanted to know whether what P56 just told the Court was what Raslan told him or what he concluded from his own experience. P56 said he knew that without Raslan telling him. P56 knew [Makhoulf]. P56 added that he knew that Hafez Makhoulf was the head of a Branch at the State Security.

Wiedner asked P56 who Hafez Makhoulf is and what branch he led. P56 said Hafez Makhoulf was the head of Al-Khatib Branch and enjoyed full sovereignty because he is the cousin of Bashar Al-Assad.

Wiedner asked about Makhoulf's rank. P56 said he was Brigadier General.

Wiedner wanted to know where Makhoulf's office was. P56 said it was in Damascus on Baghdad Street.

Wiedner asked P56 if he knew about Division 40. P56 said he thinks it was [Makhoulf's office].

Wiedner asked if the office and Division 40 were the same place. P56 said he thinks so, adding that if someone asked him questions about police matters, he would be able to answer all of them. However, he was unsure about the different State Security Branches.

Wiedner wanted to know if Anwar Raslan was under Hafez Makhoulf's influence when P56 met Raslan. P56 said of course he was, he was until the very last minute. According to P56, the name Hafez Makhoulf was frightening in Syria.

Wiedner explained that the Court heard that Raslan worked at Branch 285 at this time and not at Al-Khatib. P56 said what he knew was that Raslan was at Al-Khatib, however, it could have been possible that he was somewhere else.

After a short discussion, Presiding Judge Kerber announced a ten-minute break.

***

***

Judge Wiedner said he only had two short questions. He first wanted to know which rank P56 held when he defected. P56 said he was a Colonel.

Wiedner also wanted to know what Hafez Makhlouf's rank was as far as P56 would know. P56 said he was a Brigadier General. [Judge Wiedner consulted both interpreters to confirm that P56 indeed said Brigadier General ["ameed" عَمِيد]].

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Prosecutor Klinge asked P56 whether he knew something about Raslan's political beliefs before they met in November 2012. P56 explained that Raslan was from Homs, more precisely Al-Houla, where more than a hundred people were killed, including neighbors, friends and relatives of Raslan. P56 said he knew Raslan as a friend and colleague, and he knew Raslan's morals and character as well. According to P56, Raslan definitely did not agree with [the killing in Al-Houla].

Klinge asked when the killing happened. P56 said it was at the end of 2011.

Klinge asked if it could have also been May 2012. P56 said he already told the Court that he could not remember details very well because it happened ten years ago.

Klinge wanted to know if P56 spoke with other people about Raslan's attitude. P56 denied, explaining that everyone kept that to himself.

Klinge asked if Raslan at one point spoke about the massacre in Al-Houla himself. P56 said of course. He added that he and Raslan had another colleague who also did his training together with the two and was from the same town. This colleague, [REDACTED] and his child were killed there.

Klinge recalled P56 mentioning that relatives of Anwar Raslan were killed as well. He asked P56 how he knew that. P56 explained that the massacre was in the same town [as Raslan was from] and it was a very small town. According to P56, there were certainly relatives, neighbors, and acquaintances of Raslan among those who were killed. P56 said one of them was the colonel whom he just mentioned.

Klinge wanted to know if Raslan told P56 about the conditions at Al-Khatib Branch in 2011 and 2012 or later. P56 denied, adding that they did not talk about details.

Klinge asked if Raslan said anything on this matter at all. P56 said no, quite the contrary. Raslan told him that he helped thirty people. They were protestors who were arrested at Al-Madamiyyeh in Damascus. Raslan convinced the head [of the Branch] that they were innocent and should be released.

Klinge asked who the head [of the Branch] was. P56 said he assumed it was Hafez Makhlouf.

Klinge further wanted to know if P56 was in contact with the Jordanian Intelligence Services before he fled to Jordan. P56 denied.

Klinge asked if P56 was questioned by the Jordanian Intelligence Services after his flight to Jordan. P56 affirmed.

Klinge asked what they wanted to know. P56 said they asked him personal questions, for example, where he had been working.

Klinge said Intelligence Services normally did not question people without a purpose and always had a special interest. He asked P56 whether he had an idea what this special interest was. P56 explained that every officer who defected was questioned by the Jordanian Intelligence Services. Their focus was on officers from the [Syrian] Intelligence Services, not the police.

Klinge wanted to know if many intelligence officers had defected at that time. P56 said the number of intelligence officers who defected was relatively low. More military and police officers had defected.

Klinge wanted to know what it looked like in Syria when P56 left: what the state of the regime was and where the frontlines were. P56 explained that the war was on the doorstep of Damascus. The situation in Syria was difficult. When P56 left, he heard gunshots everywhere.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker recalled that P56 went on a trip to Geneva in 2011 but returned home because of his family. Böcker asked P56 to describe how he went to Geneva and what he did there. P56 explained that there was a conference. He was a member of a discussion board dealing with human rights in Syria. P56 said [the board] was supposed to discuss this matter. He was part of an official delegation led by the current Foreign Minister who was then the Minister of Justice, Faisal Muqdad. P56 was sent from the Ministry of Interior with another officer.

Böcker wanted to know in which month this happened, acknowledging that it happened a long time ago. P56 said it was in [October].

Böcker recalled that P56 fled in October [2012], asking P56 whether he had to pay money [to flee]. P56 said he personally did not have to pay money.

Böcker further recalled that P56 mentioned that he left Syria relatively late and that it was easier [to escape with one's family] the closer one was to Jordan. P56 confirmed.

Böcker asked if this circumstance affected the timing of one's escape, considering that people who were closer [to Jordan] could leave earlier. P56 said his situation was different from [Raslan's]. P56 lived in the border area and defected later because he was under no pressure since his work was solely administrative. Anwar [Raslan] however was from the middle of Syria. Things were therefore not that easy for him and he had to wait for an opportunity.

Böcker asked if P56 knew what Raslan or others in 'small Damascus' said about the beginning of 2011, the events in spring 2011. Böcker wanted to know if P56 held the same post throughout this period. P56 affirmed.

Böcker wanted to know if Anwar Raslan told P56 anything about what changed after the start of the events, since early to mid 2011 P56 said they did not talk about details, and he did not ask Raslan what and where he was working.

Regarding their talks, Böcker wanted to know what P56 had to expect what would happen between his meeting with Raslan and his escape, in case Raslan would have been a good servant [of the regime]. P56 asked if Böcker referred to whether P56 trusted Raslan. Böcker affirmed. P56 explained that he knew Raslan since 1992. He knew his morals, his character, which town he was from. P56 said Raslan opened his heart to him.

Böcker asked what would have happened if P56 trusted the wrong person. P56 said it could have cost him his and his children's lives.

Böcker concluded that P56 was aware of that. P56 said of course he was. He was cautious.

Defense Counsel Fratzky said he had another question regarding the conversation that P56 had on November 29. Fratzky recalled that P56 and Raslan were both members of a committee and he asked P56 if he spoke with Raslan [during the conversation on November 29] about where Raslan was working. Fratzky recalled P56 saying that Raslan worked at Al-Khatib. Fratzky wanted to know from P56 whether he knew [where Raslan was working] from what Raslan told him during this conversation or from the fact that they knew each other for a long time. P56 said he did not know if Raslan mentioned it, however, P56 already knew that Raslan was working at Al-Khatib Branch.

Fratzky further recalled P56 saying that Hafez Makhoulf was a Brigadier General, a relative of Bashar Al-Assad and had a lot of power. Fratzky wanted to know if Makhoulf was able to give orders to persons with a higher rank due to his family relations. P56 said that Makhoulf surely derived his power from his familial relation to the President. According to P56, Hafez Makhoulf gave orders to higher-ranking persons. His brother Rami was in control of the economy.

Questioning by the Plaintiff Counsels

Defense Counsel Dr. Kroker recalled that P56 mentioned he was in Geneva in “the tenth month of 2012.” He asked P56 whether it could have been September. P56 said he thinks it was “the tenth month.”

Kroker asked if the meeting was at the United Nations. P56 affirmed that it was at the UN.

Kroker asked if it was at the seat of the United Nations Human Rights Council. P56 affirmed, adding that there was a report on Syria and they discussed this report internationally. P56 added that it was a report which is issued every four years.

Kroker wanted to know if the report also included descriptions of the Intelligence Service’s prisons in Syria. P56 affirmed, explaining that the heads of the security branches dealt with this report before the events in Syria. Every minister was given the opportunity to make statements on his position.

Kroker asked what the report said about the conditions at the Intelligence Service’s prisons after April 2011. P56 said he did not know exactly.

Kroker recalled that P56 mentioned a meeting at the Ministry of Interior which took place on November 29 and included brigadier generals from the Ministry of Interior and the Intelligence Services. Kroker asked P56 for the names of these people. P56 said he could not remember names. The name of the colonel from the Ministry of Interior might have been Naji An-Numayri ناجي النميري, who was responsible for passport and migration issues.

Kroker asked about the ranks of other people who were present. P56 said there was a brigadier general from the Intelligence Services. There were three brigadier generals.

Kroker recalled P56 describing six people. He asked P56 whether he could remember who else was present. P56 said it was him, Anwar Raslan and three brigadier generals. There were five or six people in total.

P56 was dismissed as a witness at 11:27PM.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the session was not yet closed for the day since the Prosecutors had a statement to read out.

[The following are recreations of the Prosecutors' statements based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Prosecutors' objection regarding the Defense's request to summons [PW2_97/PW2_100], [PW4_100], and [PW5_100] as witnesses

- I) The request to summon PW2_97/PW2_100 should be rejected pursuant to § 244 \(5\) s. 1&2 StPO since the Court's duty to establish the truth does not require it to hear PW2_97/PW2_100 as a witness. The positive attitude of the Accused towards the opposition, as mentioned in the statement on October 26, 2021, is irrelevant to the events at the Division at issue. The Federal Court of Justice repeatedly found that intent is not waived if the final outcome of an act might not be desired.
Raslan might have planned his escape for a year and a half, however, during this time, he continued working in his position, passing along orders that he knew were illegal and always reported back to his superiors on the successful completion of these orders. In its decision from October 13, 2021, the Court found that occasional help by the Accused to individual detainees took place. However, this does not change the fact that within the same period, thousands of people were tortured with the Accused's acceptance. He could hear their screams at his office and refrained from helping them. His liability is not waived by his escape.
The effort in terms of time and organization does not acceptably relate to the expected evidentiary value of PW2_97/PW2_100's testimony. The prosecutors referred to their statement from [October 26, 2021 regarding efforts, expected duration and success of legal assistance requests to non-EU countries.]
- II) PW4_100, a former interrogation officer at Branch 251 is supposed to confirm that no one died at the Branch before early 2011. This knowledge would, however, require that PW4_100 was involved in all aspects at the Branch, which will most likely not be the case. It is also not apparent if this would have any effect on the question of facts and guilt. Even if PW4_100 testifies for the purpose of showing that even after early 2011 no one died at the Branch, his summons should still be rejected pursuant to § 244 \(3\) s. 3 no. 2 StPO [irrelevant for decision]. The general obligation of the Court to establish the truth would neither justify PW4_100's summons. Moreover, PW4_100 is supposed to testify that Hafez Makhoul's Division 40 conducted interrogations and torture at the Branch, controlled Al-Khatib Branch, independently wrote interrogation transcripts, and made use of Al-Khatib Branch personnel for its own purposes. Nonetheless, there is no connectivity between the temporal information provided in the Defense's request. PW4_100 should also be rejected as a witness in this regard, considering that his testimony would be irrelevant for the decision. The request only offers possible conclusion but no mandatory conclusions. Anwar Raslan's liability is independent of a potential use of Al-Khatib Branch by Division 40. It would not prove a deprivation of power.
It is also unclear what PW4_100 is supposed to say in terms of the Accused's general behavior since this is not part of the indictment. The required connectivity between the request and the trial as laid out in § 244 \(2\) StPO is not given since the alleged facts are irrelevant for the decision. PW4_100 is also supposed to testify on orders by the head of Branch 251 given from March/May 2011 onwards. However, the Defense's request is not a formal request to take evidence on this matter since it lacks connectivity. The request does not elaborate on how PW4_100 is supposed to know about this. The sole fact that PW4_100 and Raslan both worked at the same Branch is insufficient, since not every employee knows about everything that is going on at a Branch, as P55's testimony showed. The same is applicable regarding Raslan's treatment of detainees and his alleged involvement in releases. The request is lacking precise information in this regard as well and only offers general information.

It remains unclear why, when, and how many detainees Raslan helped. It is further irrelevant how many detainees he helped before April 29, 2011 since it is not part of the indictment period. It is also not apparent how PW4_100 should know that Raslan was completely stripped off his authority from May 2011 latest, as claimed in the request. This claim is further contrary to what Raslan himself stated on May 18, 2020 when he said that he was stripped of power in June 2011.

- III) PW5_100 is supposed to testify that Raslan did not work at Branch 251 in 2007 and thereby refute P35's testimony. This is, however, irrelevant pursuant to § 244 \(3\) s. 3 no. 2 StPO as it does not matter where Anwar Raslan was working before April 2011 when he accepted and ordered horrible acts as part of a systematic and widespread attack against the Syrian civil population. Regarding the alleged differences between Raslan and Mohammad Abdullah, PW5_100's testimony would be irrelevant pursuant to § 244 \(3\) s. 3 no. 2 StPO. PW5_100 is supposed to testify that Anwar Raslan was completely hindered in doing his work and that there was enmity between Raslan and Abdullah. However, it is not apparent how this would affect the question of guilt.
- IV) Lowering the threshold for the requirement of connectivity for cases related to other countries, as proposed by the Defense, is not compatible with German law. The issue of witnesses who need to be summoned abroad is already addressed in § 244 \(5\) StPO. This legislation concerning summons of witnesses living abroad entered into force in 2000. When the German Code of Crimes Against International Law (CCAIL – VStGB) entered into force two years later, in 2002, the legislator did not see any necessity to amend the existing law on witnesses living abroad, as one can see from the legislation-reasoning. Rather, the Procedural Code (StPO) was amended in 2019 by adding detailed requirements in terms of connectivity that need to be fulfilled for a request to qualify as a valid request to take evidence. This amendment aims to prevent delays of judicial processes through submission of unqualified requests. A lowering of these requirements in cases of witnesses living abroad was not intended.
- The argument that the Defense would not have sufficient capacity to conduct its own investigation, thus lowering the threshold for connectivity, is irrelevant since the party investigating a matter is not the one who has to draft the request and set out how and why a proposed witness knew certain things. This is for the party requesting the witness.*

Objection regarding the Defense's request to summon Gerhard Conrad as an expert

- I) The Defense's request to summon Gerhard Conrad as an expert is not a request to take evidence but a suggestion to take evidence because there are no concrete allegations as to how Conrad obtained the relevant expert knowledge. The reasons for rejecting a request to take evidence as set out in § 244 \(3\) StPO are applicable in this case as well. § 244 \(4\) StPO, however, only includes additional reasons for the rejection of an expert. The summons of an expert must therefore be rejected pursuant to § 244 \(3\) s. 2 StPO. The requirements of a formal request to take evidence and a formal request to summon an expert are not fulfilled [Prosecutor Klinge recalled that it was the Defense's intention to prove that Raslan did not have decision-making power at the Branch due to being a Sunni and therefore also suffering mortal fear]. The Defense's request, however, merely includes assessments and conclusions without any facts. It is not apparent how the proposed expert would know all that. The experts CV that the Defense pulled from Wikipedia, does not provide any hints for the source of the expert's relevant knowledge. The relevant knowledge requires that the expert had knowledge of Anwar Raslan's personal connection to Hafez Makhoulf – knowledge that other experts would not have either. The Defense's request is therefore a mere suggestion.

- II) The suggestion should be rejected pursuant to § 244 (3) s.3 no. 1 StPO since the Judges themselves already have the relevant knowledge. Throughout the trial, the Judges heard several experts, among them Syrians such as Al-Bunni and Darwish, and obtained multiple reports on the Syrian context. Judges can obtain certain knowledge throughout trial which consequently renders the summoning of additional experts redundant. No expert could provide additional expertise to what had already been collected from the countless witnesses who testified in this trial. All these witnesses had direct experience of the events happening in Syria during the indictment period.

Defense Counsel Böcker replied that, in terms of connectivity, time cannot be a decisive factor since P56, for example, provided valuable contributions to the trial, although he testified about his experiences after the indictment period. Böcker further said it would be in the Defense's own discretion to determine the time to submit a request to take additional evidence and that the required connectivity was given in all their requests.

Defense Counsel Fratzky added that it would be far from irrelevant if the court heard from witnesses and the Defense summoned witnesses to debunk previous statement from other witnesses. According to Fratzky, this would all be about the truth and therefore be relevant to the overall evaluation. Every piece of evidence would be relevant if it was pertinent to the truth. On the topic of required connectivity, Fratzky added that this present trial was one of its kind. One could therefore not make arguments referring to jurisprudence from the Federal Court of Justice from the last century. Fratzky added that he quickly looked up other, more current and relevant jurisprudence from the Court of Justice and indeed found something to which he might come back.

Plaintiff Counsel Mohammed said establishing the facts is always important. However, on the 99th trial day, one could indeed ask why these requests were not submitted one and a half years ago.

Defense Counsel Böcker replied that the Defense does not have the relevant resources and it sometimes makes more sense to submit these requests now, rather than earlier.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the Court had several piles of paper to hand out to the parties. These papers included the Court's efforts during the last few days:

- Email communication between Judge Wiedner and a witness;
- Note dated October 29, 2021;
- Email communication between Judge Wiedner and one of the court interpreters;
- Note from the BKA dated October 29, 2021;
- Statement from the BKA dated October 29, 2021 regarding the evaluation of a situation of threat;
- Note from the Court's administration regarding a phone call;
- Note from Judge Wiedner regarding a phone call;
- Forwarded email from Judge Wiedner to Presiding Judge Kerber regarding an email from the BKA dated November 3, 2021;
- Annexes:
  - two travel documents
  - one identification card
  - witness summons by the BKA
  - one of the Prosecutors' statements that were just read out in court.

Presiding Judge Kerber added that the Judges undertook significant efforts to secure witnesses for the coming trial days. However, it was not always possible to do so, the trial day scheduled for November 10 would therefore be cancelled.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked if the Judges could informally ask Mr. Al-Bunni and the BKA why the witness “HS” only appeared now after the trial had been going on for one and a half years. Judge Kerber replied that Böcker could ask Attorney Schulz himself.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:47AM.

The trial will resume on November 11, at 10:15AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 52
Hearing Date: November 11, 2021

Day 102 – November 11, 2021

Dr. Kamal Al-Labwani, a former Syrian doctor and a member of the opposition testified about his work with the opposition through which he met Raslan. He told the Court that he had no doubt that Raslan turned his back towards the Syrian government and sympathized with the opposition. Al-Labwani also extensively elaborated on his own views of the Syrian conflict and transitional justice.

Trial Day 102 – November 11, 2021

The proceedings began at 10:23AM with two spectators and three journalists in the audience. Four cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. P30 took a seat next to his Counsel, Mr. Bahns. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Kroker and Mohammed were not present, and Plaintiff Counsel Schulz joined three minutes late.

Testimony of Dr. Kamal Al-Labwani

Dr. Kamal Labwani, a former Syrian doctor and a member of the opposition, now living in [REDACTED] was informed about his rights and duties as a witness.

When asked by Presiding Judge Kerber, to provide personal information, Al-Labwani detailed that he was born on October 1957, became a Swedish citizen in 2017, and would now live in [REDACTED], he further said that he was initially working as a doctor in Syria, and engaged with the opposition since he went to university. Since 1976 he had been a member of Riad Al-Turk's Syrian Democratic People's Party.

Judge Kerber said the court would be interested in Al-Labwani's current personal information, for example whether he currently had job. Al-Labwani said he would be unemployed and waiting for pension since he would already be sixty-five years old. He was working with the opposition and continued working with them after he stepped down.

Kerber asked if Al-Labwani was related to the defendant by blood or marriage. Al-Labwani denied, adding that he would be from Az-Zabadani while Raslan was from Al-Houla. The two only got to know each other after Raslan left Syria.

Presiding Judge Kerber first wanted to know how Al-Labwani and Raslan met, how they worked together and what the name PW3\_93 would have to do with that. Al-Labwani explained that he was engaged in the opposition coalition. His work was related to former, now defected, officers who went to Jordan. It was Al-Labwani's task to meet with them, get to know them, and determine "whether their defection was truthful or false." Al-Labwani added that the coalition wanted to make use of these officers for the benefit of the Syrian people.

Kerber asked if this was how Al-Labwani got to know Raslan as well. Al-Labwani affirmed, adding that Raslan together with twenty-five other higher-ranking officers, was waiting in Amman where they had difficulties with their flat and were threatened by Jordanian authorities. Al-Labwani said the work he and others were doing [in relation to defected Syrian officers] was not official.

Kerber said she would still not know how Al-Labwani met Raslan and how they had worked together. Al-Labwani said he worked with Raslan on a friendship-basis and they got to know each other in person. He added that they were part of a group and that in Syria, there was no opposition party and the room for maneuver was very limited for the opposition. The group that Al-Labwani was part of wanted to get rid of this chaos and create a situation where they would be recognized by the 'friends of the Syrian people.' The idea was to establish an institution for information, some kind of "Inteligencia". Al-Labwani said that "there, as part of this work," he met Raslan and three or four other officers from the security sector: State Security, Political Security, and Military Security. Al-Labwani said their groups did not receive financial support from Jordan, and when they went to Turkey they did not receive support there either. Al-Labwani told the court that in his opinion, these countries wanted the chaos to stay "with the aim that it would end in a fiasco." Al-Labwani concluded that this was how he knew Raslan and why he chose to step down from his opposition work in 2013.

Kerber explained that from what Al-Labwani just said, she understood that Al-Labwani's and Raslan's group wanted to establish some kind of counter-espionage. Al-Labwani said they wanted information.

Kerber concluded that it would be a counter-intelligence service then. Al-Labwani confirmed. He said that the group knew the situation in Syria and the threats coming from the Islamists, the regime, and from everywhere. It was their task to secure security and weapons. Al-Labwani was part of the political body who had meetings with ambassadors from friendly states, such as the US and Germany. These embassies required that [the opposition group] must form organizations in order to be supported.

Kerber asked Al-Labwani about the name PW3_93 and whether he worked with the opposition as well. Al-Labwani confirmed that he knew the name.

Kerber recalled that a conference on Syria took place in Geneva and asked Al-Labwani if he participated in this conference as well. Al-Labwani explained that he retired because he was against negotiations "with the criminal regime." Al-Labwani said he assumes that the Syrian issue would be of criminalistic nature and not political. If someone cares about society, he should take care of it. If someone instead kills them, it would be a crime and not politics.

Kerber wanted to know whether PW3_93 and Anwar Raslan knew each other. Al-Labwani said they both worked for State Security. PW3_93 was an academic and teacher while [Raslan] was at the interrogation division.

Before [Raslan] started at Al-Khatib Branch, he was working at State Security, as far as Al-Labwani was concerned. He added that Raslan was a Sergeant, then attended university and became an Officer. He was reliable and a technocrat, and people had great trust in him. According to Al-Labwani, Raslan was tasked whenever there were “grave issues” because he drafted good things and was familiar with the law.

Kerber asked Al-Labwani to provide an example. Al-Labwani said he met Raslan after the questioning [it did not become clear who questioned whom and who was interrogated] with Ahmad Al-Jarba the president of the National Coalition. Al-Labwani said he suspected Al-Jarba of lying, Al-Jarba said that he was a political prisoner. But Anwar was able to remember details very well. He remembered the interrogation and precisely recalled it for Al-Labwani who was then able to publish everything.

Kerber concluded that Al-Labwani had great trust in Raslan and once asked him about Al-Jarba. Al-Labwani told the Court that to be precise, he did not trust anyone. He was very careful and wanted to make sure that none of the defected officers was cooperating with the regime. He therefore examined them to see if there were any tendencies. Al-Labwani said he did not have suspicions in Raslan’s case, which had different reasons: before Raslan defected, many people in Az-Zabadani and from Duma were arrested and eventually released. When they were released, they said there was a Colonel at Al-Khatib Branch, at State Security, who they felt had a strong affinity towards them and towards their people and helped to get some of them released. According to Al-Labwani, these people were again arrested by the Air Force or Military Intelligence. Al-Labwani concluded that there were first signs that at the beginning of the revolution, at the time when the security forces and the regime were split into for and against, some of them were eager to find a political solution but others were very strict. Officers therefore only had a very limited scope to act how they wanted to. Al-Labwani went on to explain that from April or May on, the strict and loyal group had support from Iran. The ones loyal to the regime regained strength while the ones who wanted a political solution were endangered.

Kerber wanted to know if Al-Labwani was talking about 2011 or 2012. Al-Labwani explained that it was March 2011 when the regime was still split in two groups. In July or August [2011], the ones loyal to the regime regained strength and the first crimes started. They started “detaining and liquidating” people in November or December [2011]. Al-Labwani said amongst these people [victims of the regime crimes] was his brother-in-law [note for the translator: his wife’s brother] and two of his cousins from his father’s side of the family. Just because they were related to him, they were killed in detention. Al-Labwani went on to explain that the crimes mainly happened in 2012 and 2013.

Al-Labwani said the third reason [why he trusted Raslan] was that Anwar [Raslan] would be Sunni. Al-Labwani said, if the Court would like to hear, he could report many things to illustrate how Sunni officers were treated. The fourth reason would be that Raslan is from Al-Houla where the massacre happened. According to Al-Labwani no “human conscience” could accept what happened there. Al-Labwani explained he wanted to know from Raslan about his intentions and ambitions. Had he been a spy, he would have wanted information about [the opposition’s] information and activities and would have asked questions. However, Raslan only wanted two things: he had health issues (urology) and was eager to protect his family because he was afraid of the regime. Al-Labwani told the Court that Raslan avoided to engage with the opposition because he knew himself how many people in the opposition would cooperate with the regime.

Kerber wanted to know if Raslan told Al-Labwani about Branch 251. Al-Labwani denied.

Kerber asked what Al-Labwani would know about Branch 251 from his work. Al-Labwani said he would know that Branch 251 would be the State Security itself. It would be the directory of State Security, however, that would only be pro-forma. It [Branch 251] would “be the actual kitchen” that is in charge of filling posts. According to Al-Labwani, Branch 251’s president would be Alawite with a direct connection to the president [Bashar Al-Assad]. Al-Labwani added that these structures were not in place before, but only established under Hafez Al-Assad. The directory of the State Security would normally be a constitutional authority to collect information just like in any other country, such as the US for example. However, Hafez Al-Assad turned it into a criminal authority, according to Al-Labwani. Al-Labwani further elaborated that the head [of the State Security Directory] would be Sunni but the actual acting head would be the Head of the Inner Branch, an Alawite. This person would do everything: appoint Ministers and Ambassadors.

Al-Labwani added that Anwar [Raslan] was not working at Al-Khatib Branch when [Tawfiq] Younes started working there. However, Younes did not have much experience and therefore hired technocrats to help him. Al-Labwani said that this happened at the time of the revolution and this person [the technocrat] was in charge of arrests and detentions.

Kerber asked if Raslan was one of these technocrats. Al-Labwani explained that he meant that Younes took him [Raslan] to the Investigation Division as a technocrat. According to Al-Labwani, Younes was a chaotic person and idiot and therefore needed people around him who were able to write. Al-Labwani said if the Court would allow him to add one thing, he must say that Anwar [Raslan] had no competencies and could not make any orders. He only wrote reports to the Head of the Branch, who then in turn made suggestions and the directorate would make a final decision.

Kerber concluded that Raslan consequently had no competence to release people. Al-Labwani said this would be correct, unless [Raslan] was able to guide the people in a certain direction during the interrogation. Al-Labwani added that he himself was detained for ten years and he would know all Branches and had been at every court. The problem was that the employees, and particularly the head of his office, were tasked to spy on Raslan. Even other branches were ordered to spy on this Branch [Branch 251], for example branches at the Air Force Intelligence, State Security, and Military Intelligence. All of them were spying and reporting information to the President [Bashar Al-Assad]. Al-Labwani said that the Branch [Branch 251] was not allowed to communicate with others. The President got information from his spies and compared the information to ensure that everyone was loyal. Al-Labwani concluded that the possibility that an officer was able to release someone would practically be zero.

Kerber asked Al-Labwani how he would know all that. Al-Labwani explained that he served his military service in Hama in 1982. He would still have his military booklet to prove that [he opened his bag pack to show the booklet to the Court]. He was a doctor with the 99th Legion in Hama in 1982. As a doctor doing his military service, he was called to go to Hama immediately after the incidents. There he saw detained and injured people. The military took Al-Labwani to a school which was filled with injured people, but he was only allowed to treat one of them. Al-Labwani recalled that there were fifty people in the room, all of them were injured and needed help, however, “he” [the person whom he was allowed to treat] apparently paid bribes to get medical treatment and Al-Labwani was only allowed to have a look at him. Al-Labwani said that all other detainees were watching him, and he could see from the look on their faces that they all needed help. Because it was his job as a doctor, Al-Labwani turned to the Head of the Legion Brigadier General at the Air Force to explain to him that there would be hundreds of injured detainees who needed Al-Labwani’s help but he was only allowed to see one of them. As the Brigadier General was the Head of Hama, Al-Labwani asked him to be allowed to treat all patients and they argued back and forth about it.

The Brigadier General then told Al-Labwani that if he wanted to live, he would be welcome to stay with the army. Al-Labwani said he had to make a decision and was not able to leave. He could have either died or waited for an opportunity when the situation in the country would be better. Al-Labwani told the Court that until this very day, his conscience would not be at ease because he did not treat even half of the patients.

Judge Kerber said she wanted to come back to Anwar Raslan. She asked Al-Labwani if Raslan told him during one of their conversations about his margin of action at Branch 251, or how Al-Labwani would know about that. Al-Labwani denied that he and Raslan spoke about this issue. He told the Court that he compared Raslan's situation with his own situation at the Political Security. If for example Brigadier General Abdel Mahmoud would come and exercise pressure as an Alawite, to force "us" to do something, this would be what happened on September 9, 2001. Al-Labwani said this was when he and others were arrested. He himself did not provide any testimony and requested a lawyer. However, "they" wanted to beat him instead. Al-Labwani therefore requested to see the Director who asked him what his problem would be. Al-Labwani told him that his people would not know any laws and asked him what the allegations against him would be. The Director told Al-Labwani: "Listen, it was not our Branch who arrested you, but Political Security who brought you here. We are convinced that you are innocent but the leadership, the president, gave us orders that we cannot abandon." Al-Labwani further described that the people at the branch had a transcript with questions and he was told to write down his answers to these questions. He was transferred to the State Security Court which found that he was a criminal and sentenced him to three years imprisonment, which he completely spent in a solitary cell. Al-Labwani said all this happened because he was Riad Seif's deputy in an association of the National Body [Forum for National Dialogue]. Al-Labwani told the Court that all he wanted to say is that the Head of the Investigation Division could not change much. If he was to compare a Sunni and an Alawite, the Alawite would be like the Head of the Branch although he was only the Head of a Sub-Division. Al-Labwani added that he said he could provide further illustration.

Kerber said further illustration would not be necessary at this point. She asked Al-Labwani if he was detained at Branch 251 or where the story that he just told took place. Al-Labwani said he was not detained at State Security but at Political Security for his first detention. His file was then forwarded to State Security. Al-Labwani explained that he was detained twice: once due to the Damascus Spring in 2011 and once in 2005 due to a trip to the US, the EU, and Germany. His overall sentence was eighteen years. However, he only spent ten years in prison because the United Nations Human Rights Council issued a resolution that condemned his detention as arbitrary and found that he was an unlawful political prisoner.

Kerber concluded that Al-Labwani had never been detained at Branch 251. Al-Labwani said he directly came from State Security and was never detained at Branch 251.

Kerber recalled that Al-Labwani previously mentioned he would know all Branches. Al-Labwani confirmed, saying he would know State Security, Political Security and Military Security.

Kerber said she again would like to know if Al-Labwani was ever detained at Branch 251, also known as Al-Khatib Branch, located close to Baghdad Street in Damascus. Al-Labwani denied.

Defense Counsel Fratzky intervened, saying that Al-Labwani merely said he would know all Branches, not that he was detained there himself. Kerber said that Al-Labwani just confirmed that.

Judge Wiedner and Kerber had a short discussion after which the court interpreter who was in charge of translating Al-Labwani's testimony from Arabic to German, requested a short break.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner first wanted to know when Al-Labwani was arrested for the second time and when he was released. Al-Labwani detailed that he was first arrested in 2001 and released in 2004. He was released by the State Security Court and it was a Branch of State Security that arrested him. His second detention was after he travelled to the US and the EU. One could see his visas and corresponding dates of issuance in his passport. Al-Labwani said he visited Great Britain and the EU where he visited the European Parliament, the German Foreign Office in Berlin, and the CDU [Christian Democratic Party] who just won the elections in 2005. After that, he went to Washington DC where he met with the US government for fifteen days. Al-Labwani added that he already told people back then that Syria would be on its way to a civil war if no reforms were implemented.

Wiedner apologized for interrupting Al-Labwani and told him that he just wanted to know the dates of his second detention. Al-Labwani explained that he arrived at Damascus Airport on November 8, 2011. That was where he was arrested. Al-Labwani said that he was stopped by the General Security who then called the Air Force Intelligence Service in front of Al-Labwani. However, the Military Intelligence Services did not want Al-Labwani, neither did the State Security. Al-Labwani said no branch wanted him and there was no arrest warrant against him. Someone therefore called Bashar Al-Assad and Al-Labwani was taken to the Political Security for interrogation. Al-Labwani told the Court that he would need to provide some details here: At the Political Security, Ali Makhoulf [Al-Labwani kept saying Ali Makhoulf although it became apparent that he was referring to Ali Mamlouk] called President Bashar Al-Assad's advisor via loudspeaker. Al-Labwani told the Court that when he heard that, he told Ali [Mamlouk] to go to Bashar Al-Assad and tell him that Al-Labwani wanted to be seen for three hours, in case Al-Assad would want to know what was going on. Ali Mamlouk indeed went to Bashar Al-Assad and on the next day, Al-Labwani was taken from his room, blindfolded and with his hands tied in front of his body. He was taken to Ali Mamlouk's office who told him that he should talk. However, Al-Labwani told him that he would only talk in the presence of his lawyer and if there were any concrete accusations against him. Al-Labwani was then slapped in his face four times. Al-Labwani then took off his blindfolds and saw that an officer who was working with Bashar Al-Assad, and [REDACTED] were present. Al-Labwani therefore asked Ali Mamlouk whether this would be Bashar Al-Assad's response. Mamlouk in turn told Al-Labwani that this would be a message for Al-Labwani's friends. Al-Labwani was then taken to another room "where they wanted to be friendly." Al-Labwani there told [the officer working with Al-Assad] that he would make sure that they were one day to be held accountable for what they were doing. [The officer working with Al-Assad] laughed at Al-Labwani and told him that only God would be their witness.

Wiedner asked when Al-Labwani was arrested. Al-Labwani said the court in Damascus sentenced him to twelve years and three additional years. He was supposed to stay in prison for fifteen years. He would actually have to stay in prison until this very day. However, at the beginning of the revolution amnesties were issued and Al-Labwani only had to serve half his sentence. He added that he served his first prison term on November 15.

Wiedner wanted to know if Al-Labwani was talking about 2001 or 2011. Al-Labwani said he was talking about 2011 when he was at the State Security Directorate and detained by Ali Mamlouk for five days.

Al-Labwani went on to describe that he had to go downstairs where there were several solitary cells on the right-hand side and ten solitary cells on the left. His cell was the last one on the left side. Al-Labwani said he started a hunger strike and said he would only want to be released “when things were resolved.”

Wiedner wanted to know where Al-Labwani was last detained before he was released. Al-Labwani said it was Adra Prison and that he was released due to the US government interfering with Bashar Al-Assad. Al-Labwani was then transferred to a civilian court and a civilian prison. Al-Labwani went on to say that “he armed his henchmen...”

Judge Wiedner interrupted Al-Labwani to ask when this happened. Al-Labwani said this was in 2007. [He again opened his backpack and showed a document to the Court.] Al-Labwani went on to say that there would be pictures of Assad’s henchmen. Al-Labwani pointed at the document he was holding up and explained that “this one” was sentenced to two times life imprisonment but he was released before Al-Labwani. He was then ordered as a henchman to kill the population. Al-Labwani said these people were armed with knives and attacked him. According to Al-Labwani, Hafez Makhoulf who was the Head of Al-Khatib, ordered that and was a witness.

Wiedner wanted to know when Al-Labwani left Syria. Al-Labwani said he left five days after he served his sentence. Ali Mamlouk, the head of State Security called Al-Labwani to see him, after Al-Labwani was with another officer called Abdul Dani Taleb before that. Al-Labwani said that there were many TV screens in the [Mamlouk’s] office on which one could see the community cells.

Wiedner asked Al-Labwani to only provide the date of when he left Syria, since the Court would only be interested in the temporal processes. Al-Labwani explained that it was November 15, 2011, when he was at Mamlouk’s office and saw the pictures on the screens. [Mamlouk] told Al-Labwani that he would release him and that he should participate in the national dialogue. Al-Labwani told the court that he replied to Mamlouk that he would not want to participate in this and rather go back to his cell instead. However, Mamlouk told Al-Labwani that he wanted to release him. According to Al-Labwani, observers were ordered to follow him and even snipers were positioned in front of his home. On December 30, 2011, his children took a plane to Jordan and at the same time, he crossed the border [to Jordan] on a motorcycle [Al-Labwani started giggling.]

Wiedner wanted to know when Al-Labwani met Anwar Raslan for the first time. Al-Labwani said it was at the beginning of 2013. Ahmad Al-Jarba was newly elected and Al-Labwani was also part of the political body and Al-Jarba tasked him to meet and talk to defected officers in Jordan. These officers were afraid that they would “be kicked out of their flat.” Al-Labwani met these around twenty officers and Brigadier Generals. The second and third time they met in the second district in Amman and once Raslan was not able to attend because he was sick. Six months later, they met in Istanbul. Al-Labwani said they met four times in total, once in Istanbul and thrice in Amman.

Wiedner asked if Al-Labwani was familiar with the name Anwar Raslan while he was still in Syria. Al-Labwani denied, adding that he did not know Anwar Raslan at all.

Wiedner asked Al-Labwani whether he would know where Raslan was working at what time. Al-Labwani explained that after he met some people, he drafted a document and understood that Anwar Raslan was first working with State Security and at last at Al-Khatib Branch. He defected when he was working at the Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know where Al-Labwani had this document from. Al-Labwani said he drafted it himself. He drafted these documents for every officer. “We” as politicians should assess these documents.

Wiedner asked how Al-Labwani knew about [Raslan working at] Al-Khatib Branch. Al-Labwani said he learned about that from former detainees who were released [from this Branch]. These released detainees said that there was an officer from Al-Houla who helped them. Al-Labwani did not know his rank. That was the first time he heard his [Anwar Raslan’s] name. That was months before Raslan defected.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan spoke about his work in Syria. Al-Labwani said that Raslan “was very conservative.” He said that he would talk about it when there would be time for that. Al-Labwani said he assumed that Raslan was “not able to open the files of the Syrian Security because otherwise he would have suffered a horrific revenge from the Syrian regime.” Al-Labwani went on to tell the Court that both he and Raslan would know that there is a connection between international Intelligence Services and the Syrian Intelligence Services. Every officer in the Arab world who would defect and then speak, would be chased everywhere in the world. According to Al-Labwani, this would show that the Syrian Intelligence apparatus would not be independent of the US, European, and Russian Intelligence Services. Al-Labwani added that as a European citizen himself, he would find it awful that there is a “common file of the European and Syrian Intelligence Services.” [...]

Wiedner concluded that Raslan said he would talk at a certain time but that never happened, and that Al-Labwani had an assumption why Raslan never spoke. Wiedner asked Al-Labwani if this would be the correct summary. Al-Labwani said he would repeat that when Raslan would feel safe, he will talk. Al-Labwani further said he could imagine that Raslan’s verdict would be seen as a warning to other defected officers to “shut their mouths.” Al-Labwani said he wants that defected officers to feel safe so that they could together unveil the “joint files of the French and Syrian Intelligence, the GDR and Syrian Intelligence, and the Syrian and Russian Intelligence.”

Wiedner asked Al-Labwani if Raslan ever spoke about all this at all. Al-Labwani said he told Raslan that “he should open these files.” All Al-Labwani wanted to know was whether Syria would be an independent or “staged” country. However, Anwar Raslan said that the situation in Jordan would not permit that and when the revolution would be successful then...

Wiedner interrupted, asking Al-Labwani if Raslan said that. Al-Labwani affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if Al-Labwani would know anything about PW3_93’s detention. Al-Labwani denied, adding that PW3_93 would, however, have told him something. He told him that...

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking what PW3_93 told him. According to Al-Labwani, PW3_93 told him that there were suspicions against him and that he was arrested because every Sunni officer was suspected of something. Al-Labwani added that the crimes in Syria would have “adopted a religious couleur.” Certain religious communities would be the targets. Al-Labwani said if one would take into account the number of cities and the arrests, one would see that 95% are Sunnis and that all militias who would fight the war for the regime would be “on the President’s religious side.”

Wiedner wanted to know when PW3_93 was detained. Al-Labwani said it was after the revolution, in 2011 or 2012 but he would not know exactly. When PW3_93 told Al-Labwani about it, he had already defected and left Syria in 2013.

Wiedner asked if Al-Labwani knew where PW3_93 had been detained. Al-Labwani denied.

Wiedner wanted to know if Anwar Raslan had something to do with PW3_93 detention. Al-Labwani said he heard from PW3_93 that Anwar [Raslan] helped him with his release and during the interrogation but one should ask PW3_93 about that.

Wiedner asked how Raslan helped. Al-Labwani said there were exaggerated allegations, which was always the case. Normally, someone would be tortured until he confessed everything. If an interrogation officer wanted to help, it would be sufficient to simply investigate the truth and not search for anything else. According to Al-Labwani, the mere application of the laws would already qualify as help in Syria.

The Prosecutors did not have any questions.

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled that Al-Labwani already spoke about the role of Sunnis within the “Syrian power apparatus,” and asked him to clarify what he wanted to say. Fratzky said he understood from Al-Labwani that the power structures were related to and dependent on religion. He asked Al-Labwani what he could say in this regard. Al-Labwani said he would not condemn the Alawites belonging to the regime. However, if one was to define the crimes one should have this [religious dependance] in mind. According to Al-Labwani, the crimes turned political and there had been a change with regard to the crimes. He said that crimes against humanity turned into regular crimes, and that he could provide two examples to illustrate his point:

When Brigadier [REDACTED] issued criticism in relation to the prisons, he knew that if his deputy would hear that, he would be dead. Al-Labwani said the Brigadier General would be Sunni and was the one who hit Al-Labwani. However, because he would be Sunni, his phone was monitored. Al-Labwani said he once noticed that an officer from the [REDACTED] family lowered his voice. He realized that the head [of his Branch] was monitoring him and that his deputy officer was listening to his conversations. According to Al-Labwani, the officer therefore sent (i.e. deployed) his deputy to another workplace. The Ministry of Defense then issued an order which said that Hassan Mohammad, the previous deputy-officer would become the head. Al-Labwani said this means that the deputy officer was a person of trust because he was Alawite and therefore got promoted. The Brigadier General was, however, not trusted.

Al-Labwani further described that in the same year, there were military celebrations on August 2 and Al-Labwani participated in them with his former Brigade. At this time, [REDACTED] was the head of the Military in Hama. Al-Labwani sat next to him during the celebrations, and they drank anise liqueur together. Al-Labwani filled [the head of the military in Hama’s] glass and when he was tipsy, Al-Labwani asked him how he would interrogate criminals. [The head of the military in Hama] told him that there was a small joinery next to his office. The joinery had a vice in which [the head of the military in Hama] put the criminals’ heads for five minutes. Al-Labwani replied to him that the people then might confess although they were innocent. [The head of the military in Hama] denied and said he would recognize from their family names if they were criminals. Al-Labwani explained to the Court that there was a list with the names of families who were supposed to be killed. Al-Labwani concluded that these would be crimes against humanity.

Al-Labwani further told the Court that the same thing happened to him when his relatives were killed. Al-Labwani therefore insisted that these crimes against humanity would be religiously motivated. Al-Labwani said that when he sees that a defected Sunni officer is to be sentenced by this Court while other officers request reconciliation as Pederson told the UNSCR, he does not think that this is fair. Al-Labwani therefore thinks that this idea and understanding has a negative impact on all Arab Sunnis, especially because so many of them are living in Germany.

Al-Labwani said it is selective justice if defected Sunnis are sentenced while Rifaat Al-Assad was allowed to return from Syria to France where he now lives freely. According to Al-Labwani, “we” understand this as hatred and racism which will lead to extremism.

Al-Labwani turned to the Court, saying he had one request: that it will not spread this message. He added that “we as opposition” were trained, amongst others by Germany, and that they learned that there has to be transitional justice because it would be impossible “to put all criminals in front of a court.” Al-Labwani said justice would be a global designation. He requested the Court to consider the crime of torture, because he would know that this happens in all areas in Syria and that torture was applied at all Branches and the Police. Al-Labwani said this would be a fact and no one could deny that. However, the problem of who would be responsible would remain.

Al-Labwani further recalled that he already mentioned before that as a doctor he was subordinate to someone from the regime who gave and received orders. Everyone who is a friend would make money and a fortune. Everyone else would defect and escape as quickly as possible. Al-Labwani added that this was not to say that Anwar Raslan] was not responsible, but he should have defected earlier. However, other people would think just like Al-Labwani himself and could not imagine that a security employee would ever be taken to court. Al-Labwani said it was heroic [to defect] but according to the law it was high treason. He said he would not know anything about the judiciary in the GDR and after WWII, but the Syrian judiciary would be much worse. Since the 20th century there would be no sense of the law. Officers are not supposed to respect the law but to follow orders that were given orally via telephone and not on documents. Al-Labwani said there would be no documents at all, and he could tell the Court what happened to him at the criminal court [in Syria]:

[REDACTED] was the judge and he had one person sitting to his left and right each. The prosecutor was from the [REDACTED] family. Al-Labwani said he asked the judge why the Quran was lying in front of him at the judges’ bench. The judge replied that witnesses have to take an oath on the Quran. Al-Labwani then asked the judge whether he did not take an oath on the Quran. The judge replied that he did. Al-Labwani then told the judge that if he would get a call the next day to sentence Al-Labwani he would have to do so. The judge denied and told Al-Labwani that if he would get such a call, he would resign. Al-Labwani told the other judges who were present to witness what the judge just said. According to Al-Labwani, on the day of his judgment, the judges’ bench was staffed differently and Al-Labwani was sentenced for many things that he did not commit. Al-Labwani concluded that everyone at the Syrian judiciary, the security, politics, and army would receive oral orders that they had to follow. Whoever would disobey orders, would have the same fate as the prison guard who hit detainees [during Al-Labwani’s detention]. Al-Labwani said he knocked on the door of his cell and told the guard to either stop beating the detainee or beat him as well. The guard replied that he would beat his own father if he was at the prison. According to Al-Labwani, this means that the guard had to either follow orders or die.

Al-Labwani went on to say that he appeared before the Court to speak. He said he would not want to lower the crimes and the torture that the victims suffered, but as [Syrian] people, “we” need a “feeling of security in terms of how the German judiciary would address the Syrian issue.” He would therefore be very precise in his testimony and tell the Court all the details. Al-Labwani said there would be a feeling of injustice if justice was coming from Bashar Al-Assad. Instead, justice starts if it would come from the victims. Al-Labwani added that there would be several more security officers who were under immense pressure: [REDACTED], who worked at a Police Branch in Damascus, [REDACTED], [REDACTED] who was an Alawite as well, [REDACTED], and General Major Ali Mamlouk who is a Sunni. Al-Labwani said that all of these people told him that they would not be responsible for interrogations and would only serve their country.

Al-Labwani added that in his opinion, “Bashar Al-Assad is mentally retarded” and that as a doctor, Al-Labwani considers him to only be “half-responsible for his acts.” The problem in Syria would be very complicated and much more complicated than to address it “here” in parts. Al-Labwani therefore insisted on transitional justice to do justice to the victims and the people. [The Syrian people] should decide on the instances that it wants justice for. Al-Labwani said this would be the right of the people and which would apply to everyone. Al-Labwani added that if “you [the Court in Koblenz] would like to help us, then what you are doing is not right.”

Defense Counsel Fratzky intervened, asking if Al-Labwani and Raslan were in contact when Raslan was in Geneva and Al-Labwani in Jordan. Al-Labwani explained that Anwar Raslan went to Geneva upon demand of the opposition to make sure that they would not be spied on. As a former Intelligence officer, Raslan had “experience with meetings in hotels and such things.” Al-Labwani said Riad Seif was the one in charge and tasked Raslan to go to Geneva. Al-Labwani was against that.

Fratzky recalled that Al-Labwani previously mentioned that Branch 251 was a Branch of the State Security but that its Head was only pro-forma and that it was an Alawite who was actually in charge. Fratzky wanted to know who it was. Al-Labwani said [REDACTED] was the Head and he was factually the president’s deputy. He was the one who should help Bashar Al-Assad to be President.

Fratzky asked about Younes and wanted to know from Al-Labwani whether Tawfiq Younes was the pro-forma Head. Al-Labwani explained that before Younes came, Hafez Makhoulf was there for a long time “until the last epoch” when there were changes. Al-Labwani said Tawfiq Younes was the last one. He was the Head of State Security when Raslan went from State Security to Al-Khatib Branch, which was actually a downgrade for Raslan. Al-Labwani said it would make a difference if one was the Head of the Investigation Division at the Directorate or the Investigation Division at a Branch.

Fratzky wanted to know more about the role of Hafez Makhoulf at Al-Khatib Branch. Al-Labwani said he [Makhoulf] is the maternal cousin of Bashar Al-Assad and practically his deputy due to this position [family connection]. According to Al-Labwani, there were two persons in Syria who “had something to say”: Assef Shawkat and Hafez Makhoulf.

Fratzky said he was referring to Al-Khatib Branch and asked what influence and position Hafez Makhoulf had at the Branch. Al-Labwani described that “every Ambassador who is appointed, comes through Al-Khatib Branch.” He further said that every Minister, or Governor, or head of something, everything related to inner matters would be decided at Al-Khatib Branch, which would be “the kitchen” leading the state. Al-Labwani said it would be Al-Khatib Branch who puts the names on a list [suggests appointments] that is sent to the president, “the main kitchen.” According to Al-Labwani, “there” [Al-Khatib Branch] must be someone “who has a word” and is cooperating with the state leadership. He added that everyone who had something to say in Syria is a criminal. “They” [criminals] would have all institutions in their hands and turned the republic into an “inheritance matter.” Al-Labwani concluded that there is no law and no institutions.

Al-Labwani was dismissed as a witness. He thanked the Court and said he would not need to fill the travel reimbursement form.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the interpreters would certainly need a break and that the Court had nothing else on its schedule for the day. She asked all parties to stay for a non-public discussion and closed the session for the day.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:35AM.

The trial will resume on November 17, at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 53
Hearing Dates: November 17 & 18, 2021

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Day 103 – November 17, 2021

P57, a 40-year-old Syrian, testified about his detention at Branch 251 where he was interrogated three times. He told the Court that Raslan was present during one of these interrogations and that he was able to recognize Raslan during a later visit to the Branch based on Raslan's voice.

The Defense had several questions for P57 regarding his connection to Anwar Al-Bunni who was, according to P57, the person who helped him testify in Koblenz. Al-Bunni previously sent the Prosecutors a German-language summary of P57's testimony based on a zoom call he had with P57. However, some aspects of the summary, for example that Raslan threatened P57 to be tortured, were revised by P57 in Court, who said there must have been a translation error. The Defense suggested to hear Al-Bunni again, saying there would be an "Al-Bunni problem" in this trial.

Day 104 – November 18, 2021

Criminal Chief Inspector Alexander Frey from the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) testified about an interview he previously conducted with a former doctor at the Red Crescent Hospital in Damascus. The doctor was initially summoned to testify in Court herself. However, the BKA was unable to reach her, although she was under special witness protection. According to the BKA, the witness left the EU and her current whereabouts are unknown. In her police interview, the witness stated that Al-Khatib Branch treated the hospital like their own and frequently referred detainees there. Many detainees showed signs of beatings, torture, dehydration, and malnutrition. Although the doctor did not see corpses of detainees, she heard about some dying from alleged heart attacks.

The Court also rejected several of the Defense's previous requests to hear additional witnesses. Amongst others, the Court rejected a request to summon Manaf Tlass because he told the Court that he was unwilling to testify as he does not want his statements to be publicly perceived as either incriminating or exculpatory for Raslan. The Judges decided that Tlass would most likely not provide any new and relevant information and therefore refrained from summoning him. In their rejection, the Judges also stated that the period of accepting evidence will probably be closed in early December. In addition, the Judges said they will not follow the defense's suggestion to summon Al-Bunni again.

Trial Day 103 – November 17, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:35AM with four spectators and two journalists in the audience. Two cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Mohammed and Dr. Oehmichen were not present, and Plaintiff Counsel Schulz left after the lunch break.

Testimony of P57

P57 was accompanied by attorney, Dr. Daimagüler, who told the Court that P57 requested to conceal his name and other personal information because P57's brother, a human rights lawyer, was in the hands of the regime or might be dead already, however, one could not say for sure. If P57's name went public, the situation for his brother would be life-threatening. Presiding Judge Kerber asked P57 whether he could confirm what his counsel just said. P57 confirmed. Since there were no objections from the parties, Judge Kerber announced that the Court would allow P57 to conceal his personal information due to the possibly life-threatening situation of one of his close relatives.

Kerber asked if P57 requested Dr. Daimagüler to act as his witness counsel. Daimagüler and P57 confirmed. Kerber announced that Daimagüler was admitted as P57's witness counsel because of P57's posttraumatic stress disorder and due to the fact that P57 would otherwise be unable to exercise his rights.

P57, a 40-year-old Syrian currently living in [REDACTED], was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that P57's counsel already sent the Court some of P57's descriptions regarding his detention at Branch 251, and asked P57 to tell the Court "what was going on there." P57 said he first wanted to take the chance to thank the Federal Republic of Germany and the German people for "the opportunity to face the criminal." He would also like to thank the Court for being able to talk about his suffering after seven months.

P57 described that he was arrested on [REDACTED], 2012 at his store. He was sitting in his shop when suddenly around twenty armed people entered and five vehicles arrived. The people put guns against his and his business partner's heads, pulled their t-shirts over their heads, and put them in the cars. P57 added that he and his business partner were put in separate cars. According to P57, "this was when my journey of suffering started." P57 further described that the armed people started beating him and his business partner on their heads with rifle butts. P57 was holding his car key in his hands, which was taken away from him. Some members of the security forces took P57's and his partner's mobile phones from the shop. P57 said they then started a long trip through Damascus before they arrived at Division 40, which he knew very well. P57's name was put on the wanted list by Major Mohammad Abdallah. When P57 and his partner arrived, they were taken to the second or third floor. P57 described that they went upstairs more or less voluntarily; they were basically pushed upstairs. When they arrived upstairs, they received electric shocks and were beaten. P57 told the Court that he had previously heard that sparks flew out of a person's eyes due to electric shocks, but this was the moment when he experienced it himself. He was also beaten at his kidneys. P57 then requested to use the toilet and felt that "something warm was flowing out of me." The guard therefore said to another person "Sidi, he is losing blood." [P57 and the court interpreter sitting next to him had a short discussion after which the interpreter explained that P57 was using a term that he did not know.

The other interpreters helped clarify.] P57 said that the furthest back part of his tongue - the skin in his throat - was stuck inside his throat.

He was then taken to the military hospital in Harasta where he arrived on the seventh floor. His eyes were blindfolded, and pictures were taken of him. He was also beaten at his shoulder. P57 described that he stayed at the seventh floor. He was not allowed to use his name there and was instead given a number. He was number 5 and his business partner was number 12. P57 said they had to stay there for two days, and he noticed that people were being tortured. One guy had a gunshot wound on his leg and was beaten on this wound until he fell unconscious. When they were served food, they were allowed to lift their blindfolds a bit, but only so far as to see the food in front of them. P57 said he once wanted to use the toilet at the hospital. He stepped on a corpse at the toilet. Two days later, a guard called P57's name. P57 told the Court that before that, he was interrogated at Division 40 where he met an officer who stole the identity of an FSA member. This person called P57's name which surprised P57 because they were not allowed to use their names at the hospital.

P57 said that they then went on a long trip through Damascus until they stopped in Al-Baramkeh. P57 expected to be released there because it was only him, the driver, and the officer. However, P57 had to put the blindfolds on again. The officer told him to do so, saying that there was a checkpoint in front of them. They then went to Branch 251. P57 described that when they entered, "we" received a welcoming party which was directed by Abu Ghadab who was known for his brutality and hatred. After P57 was beaten, he was taken to a "recreation room" that was around 10x3.5 meters or 10x4.5 meters big and had a window looking at the cells. "We" could therefore hear the screams from torture. P57 said there were around 200 people inside this room and everyone's smell was awful due to sweat and other things. At the end of the cell, on the right side, was a toilet where people had to sleep. P57 said he once asked for medicine because his kidneys got inflamed, however, he never received any medicine.

Two or three days later, he was taken for interrogation. P57 explained to the Court that he had already been arrested in 2011 when there were pictures of him participating in a demonstration. [Another journalist took a seat in the public gallery]. P57 said, during the interrogation, he was asked questions and he noticed that the interrogation officer was typing. The officer recalled that P57 had already been detained in 2011 at Branch 227. P57 said he confirmed because "they" already knew that and because there were pictures anyway. P57 was admonished to stop attending demonstrations otherwise the officer would "show [him] God himself". One of the accusations against P57 was that he founded a "gang" to abduct security officers. The interrogation officer said P57 led this gang as someone told the officer. P57 denied all accusations. P57 told the Court that, after his denial, he was beaten with a tube, a certain pipe called "Al-Akhdar Al-Ibraheemi". He had to lay down on the floor, hold up his feet, and was beaten on his feet. P57 said "they" also insulted his mother and sister, but he still did not admit anything. The officer then told the guard to take P57 to Abu Ghadab. P57 was taken downstairs to Abu Ghadab who tied P57's hands behind his back and hung P57 at his hands for four hours. Every person who walked by P57 spat on him and called him a traitor. P57 told the Court that one of the employees hit him on his "most sensitive part" of his body. Four hours later, P57 was taken back to the community cell where he had been before. P57 described that he was very exhausted because the beatings had been very harsh.

One week later, P57 was again called for interrogation. It was the same interrogation officer as before. P57 told the Court that this officer pretended to be someone from the FSA. According to P57, someone was hurt at a demonstration and this FSA officer was supposed to take the injured person to Lebanon. However, the injured person disappeared and was never seen again.

The interrogation officer who took the identity of the FSA officer mentioned names of people who P57 knew and who allegedly testified against P57. P57 kept denying. He told the Court that he knew it would be his end if he admitted any of the accusations. In any event, he did not have anything to do with the accusations: he did participate in demonstrations but never established a gang to abduct officers. When the officer had enough, he called one of the guards to take P57 with him. On the way downstairs, P57 was beaten, and his teeth broke. The guard kept beating P57 who started screaming. P57 was taken back to the community cell.

P57 further described that there was a doctor detained in the same cell, who P57 knew. He was from [REDACTED]. There was also a lawyer inside the cell, [REDACTED] who was arrested by Anwar Raslan himself. According to P57, there were also elderly people, one of them was eighty years old and tortured. Inside the cell, the elderly people had to [urinate] right where they were standing. P57 added that another detainee was called [REDACTED] who was one day taken from the cell and never returned. When P57 was released, he went to [REDACTED] family who told P57 that he was missing.

P47 went on to describe that two weeks later, he was again taken for interrogation. This time, there were more people [officers] inside the interrogation room. These people had a conversation about a detainee from [REDACTED] whom they wanted to release. According to P57, one of the people said to his subordinate "Sidi, we cannot release him on my responsibility." P57 said the person who was supposed to be released was supposed to help "them" to arrest others, however, one of the persons inside the room said it could not be his responsibility to release the detainee since he might "go to the mountains and disappear." P57 said one of the people who discussed the matter then left the room while P57 had to kneel. The interrogation officer asked P57 questions and told him that he would soon be confronted with another person. When P57 said this would not be a problem for him, he was beaten by the interrogation officer. P57 started screaming and said he would be willing to just give them his fingerprint or they should "put a bullet in [his] head." The interrogation officer replied to P57: "You traitor, you might wish to get a bullet in your head, but I would rather put a gun in a dog's head than in yours because you went to the streets and demanded freedom." P57 told the court that he was again beaten and taken downstairs. He added that he did not describe all details of the torture but could do so if the court wants him to.

Presiding Judge Kerber said P57's descriptions were "okay for now." P57 recalled that after three or four days he was supposed to be confronted with another person. It was P57's paternal cousin. P57 told the court that when "they" told him they would bring another person, they tried to talk to him in a friendlier way but P57 refused. He was then beaten on his head and forced to put his fingerprint on three sheets of paper. Since he was wearing blindfolds, P57 was unable to see whether there was something written on the papers or if they were blank. He was then taken back downstairs and released after a while. P57 said that, when he was released, a guard took him outside the cell. He added that he experienced many things that he could tell the Court about.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained to P57 that the Judges were going to ask more detailed questions later on, but for now, P57 could just tell them what he wanted. She recalled that P57 was released and asked him if there was a reason for his release and what happened next. P57 said the truth was that when he was outside the Branch and released, he learned that his family had hired an intermediary. Fifteen days after his release, P57 returned to the Branch to get his car back. He went to Al-Khatib Branch together with the intermediary, and they met with a Warrant Officer 3rd Class. When P57 and the intermediary went there, the Warrant Officer 3rd Class asked P57 whether he "wanted to have Bashar [Al-Assad's] job or why [he was] participating in demonstrations." P57 said the Warrant Officer 3rd Class also advised him to be careful and took P57 and the intermediary to Anwar Raslan's office.

P57 said he did not know what the Warrant Officer 3rd Class told Anwar Raslan, but the latter asked him whether there was someone else on his file. When P57 affirmed and said there was his business partner, Raslan sent them to another office. There, P57 demanded to get back his car. The Warrant Officer 3rd Class again asked the same question about an additional person on P57's file and P57 again affirmed. P57 was then told that, when his business partner would be released, P57 would get his car back. P57 replied that it was his car and not someone else's. The Warrant Officer 3rd Class told him to go before he would be sent back downstairs. P57 then left.

When P57 and the intermediary were outside, P57 told the intermediary that he knew "the person" from his voice. P57 added that his memory was still fresh and he was able to remember well. The intermediary replied that "it is him" [P57 presumably meant Raslan but the Trial Monitor was not able to see if P57 was pointing in Raslan's direction]. P57 recalled that other detainees in his cell were interrogated by this person himself. P57 added that after this happened in 2012, he went back to his hometown and never returned to Damascus.

Judge Kerber asked if the intermediary mentioned the name of the person. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying that the intermediary was referring to a person that P57 saw at the office and not the person that P57 is referring to himself. Judge Kerber replied that she understood that both were referring to the same person. Böcker said it was not clear to him. Judge Kerber recalled that P57 and the intermediary were standing at the entrance of an office, and asked P57 if he was able to look inside the office or if the door was closed. P57 said he had a look inside the room.

Kerber asked what it looked like. P57 explained that in this moment, he was paralyzed by fear. He recalled that they left the office of the Warrant Officer 3rd Class and turned to the right where they stopped in front of a door which was on the right side. He did not take explicit note of the office.

Kerber concluded that P57 did see the room but was unable to describe the furniture. P57 said he did not explicitly look at it. He only had a quick look.

Kerber asked if P57 heard the voices of both people. P57 affirmed, adding that immediately when he and the intermediary left the building, he told the intermediary that he recognized the person. The intermediary then told P57 the person's name and said he was the Head of the Interrogation Division.

Kerber wanted to know which name the intermediary mentioned. P57 said he did not focus on the name.

Kerber asked if the name was mentioned. P57 said the intermediary did not mention the name, he only said the person was the Head of the Interrogation Division. From that, P57 learned that it was Anwar Raslan because fellow detainees told him about that before.

Kerber wanted to know how P57 made the connection between rank and name. She asked if one of the detainees explicitly told P57 "Anwar Raslan is in this building" and where that was. P57 said there was a lawyer [in the same cell as P57] and after that lawyer was interrogated, he said that the Head of the Interrogation Division, Anwar Raslan, interrogated him. His name was [REDACTED]. He had to kneel during the interrogation, but Raslan did not beat him and took off his blindfolds.

Kerber concluded that P57 recognized Raslan at his office. She asked P57 whether he personally saw Raslan. P57 said "yes, exactly" Raslan might have even recognized him as well.

After a short discussion with Judge Wiedner, Presiding Judge Kerber said she had an "overview question": P57 mentioned that he was first interrogated at Division 40. She asked P57 how he knew it was Division 40.

P57 explained that he had been at the Division many times in 2006 and 2007 when he met with Major Mohammad Abdallah. At this time, P57 owned a store in Damascus and Mohammad Abdallah often asked him to tell him if he ever noticed something strange. P57 added that he went back and forth for one month and said he did not notice strange things.

Kerber wanted to know where the building of the Division was, in which neighborhood. P57 said it is in Jisr al-Abyad.

Kerber recalled that when P57 was at Harasta Hospital, he always had to wear blindfolds. She said she was wondering how P57 noticed that another person was constantly beaten on the wound on his leg. P57 said he did not see but heard it.

Kerber asked if that person screamed “do not beat me on my wound on my leg again” or what exactly P57 heard. P57 explained that the guards were talking to each other. They said that there was a man from Harasta who was shot in his leg.

Kerber wanted to know how many people were in P57’s room at the hospital. P47 said he did not know because he was blindfolded.

Kerber concluded that P57 did not talk to others and did not know where they came from. P57 confirmed.

Kerber asked how P57 knew that he was at Branch 251. P57 explained that “downstairs, all guards and detainees know”. He said there was a guard who “was alright.” P57 said he preferred not to mention the guard’s name in Court, however, this guard informed P57’s family about his whereabouts after a couple of months.

Kerber concluded that P57 learned from his fellow detainees [that he was at Branch 251]. P57 affirmed.

Kerber further asked what part Abu Ghadab played, recalling that P57 said this person directed P57’s welcoming party. She explained to P57 that the Court did not hear often that detainees arrived at the Branch individually, however, P57 described that he was alone with the officer. She asked P57 if there were no other detainees when he arrived. P57 said that from the moment they were arrested at his store, he did not know what happened to his business partner. At Division 40 they were still together, as well as at the hospital. But from then on, P57 did not hear anything about his business partner anymore. P57 said the interrogation officer told him that his business partner betrayed him.

Kerber asked P57 to describe his arrival at Branch 251. She recalled that P57 left the car and wanted to know what happened after that. P57 said since he was blindfolded his perception was based on his feelings. “We” were taken downstairs where “we” had to undress, were frisked, and beaten.

Kerber asked where that happened, at which part of the building. P57 said it happened downstairs.

Kerber also wanted to know if P57 was beaten before, during, or after he had to undress. P57 said “of course”.

Kerber asked what P57 meant, if he was always beaten while he had to undress. P57 said “we” were perpetually beaten. If one was slow, he would be beaten. He recalled that in 2011, he was wearing a ring. When he was unable to quickly put the ring off his finger, the guard threatened to cut off his finger. P57 added he was not sure if the guard was serious about it. He added that this happened at Military Security.

Kerber again asked P57 about Abu Ghadab and wanted to know how he knew that it was him who was in charge of the welcoming party. P57 said he knew from fellow detainees who told him that Abu Ghadab would “do that.” P57 said a young man who wore a t-shirt with a German phrase on it, told him.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner explained to P57 that he would ask P57 individual questions in chronological order. He recalled that P57 previously mentioned he had been arrested and detained before and noted Branch 227 in this regard. Wiedner asked when and where P57 was detained. P57 said it was at the beginning of the Syrian revolution in April.

Wiedner concluded it happened in 2011. P57 affirmed, adding that he was detained for a “good two months.” In 2011 he was also arrested at his store. He said that there was a customer who regularly came to his store. His name was Colonel Munir Al-Hariri. He blindfolded P57 but P57 was able to recognize his voice. P57 said he was taken to Branch 227 where he was tortured as well and had to stay in a solitary cell, cell [REDACTED]. He stayed there for ten or eleven days until he went crazy, started screaming, and knocking on the door of his cell. P57 added that at this point he was not yet told that there were pictures showing him at a demonstration. After 25 days he was interrogated and tortured but did not admit anything. After the interrogation, a TV screen was taken to the room where P57 was held. His blindfolds were taken off and he was shown the pictures of him at a demonstration. P57 said it was clear to “them” that he participated in demonstrations, and he was tortured for his acts.

Wiedner asked if P57 also had been detained at Division 40 and Branch 251 before. P57 denied. He explained that in 2006 and 2007 he was at Division 40 and again in 2012. He said it was State Security of which Division 40 was part.

Wiedner recalled P57 describing that a shirt was pulled over his head when he arrived at Division 40. P57 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know how P57 knew he was at Division 40 when he was unable to see. P57 said that first of all, the textile of his shirt was relatively thin, so he could see some things. At the door of Division 40, the shirts were pulled back and “we” were blindfolded. P57 added that he knew the entrance of the Division from earlier.

Wiedner asked if P57 was interrogated already at this Division. P57 affirmed, explaining that the officer who pretended to be from the FSA came. This man told P57 that they had already arrested other people who said that P57 helped his brother to defect from the army. P57 told the court that when he was later told that he would be confronted with another person, he thought it would be his brother, but it turned out to be his paternal cousin.

Wiedner asked if the interrogation took place inside a room and whether accusations were raised during the interrogation. P57 said “of course.” When he was “taken outside” he was beaten and told that they had arrested other people who said that P57 established a gang to abduct officers. P57 told the Court that he denied everything, however, later after so many beatings – including with metal poles – he could not say a word. Blood was running from his nose and face.

His kidneys got inflamed. P57 described that when he was at the toilet, a soldier came and said “Sidi, he is bleeding”. P57 was then taken to the Harasta Hospital by car. P57 remembered that in 2011, a man called [REDACTED] was detained at the same time as P57. This man was accused of having founded an Islamic extremist group although he was Christian.

Wiedner asked if the accusations regarding the foundation of the gang to abduct officers were made at Division 40 or Branch 251. P57 said these accusations were made once at Division 40 and once at Branch 251. He was confronted with that during both interrogations.

Wiedner asked how long P57 stayed at Division 40 until he was taken to Harasta Hospital. P57 told the Court that he was taken from the Division at around 7PM. He arrived at the hospital around midnight.

Wiedner concluded that P57 was taken to the hospital the same day that he arrived at the Division. P57 confirmed.

Wiedner again wanted to know whether the interrogation at Division 40 was conducted only by the alleged FSA officer or if there were others present as well. P57 said “we” were subjected to the beatings of several people. However, the alleged [FSA] officer was the one who said that P57 founded a gang to abduct people. P57’s name was allegedly mentioned by other people who were arrested before that. P57 told the Court that he found out more things later on – many things were happening. P57 mentioned that, for example, a friend of his was injured at a demonstration. A person said he knew a Warrant Officer 3rd Class who could help them to take the injured friend away. The Warrant Officer 3rd Class then took the injured person with him after they agreed to hand him over at a restaurant. It then turned out that the Warrant Officer 3rd Class was an officer “from the other side” who let their friend disappear.

Wiedner said he would jump to the point in time when P57 was taken from Harasta Hospital. He asked P57 if there was only one person with him or if other detainees or guards were there as well. P57 said that the person who accompanied him knew his name and called him by his name. P57 was afraid and did not dare to react because they were assigned numbers and not allowed to use their names. This person calmed P57 down and told him everything would be fine, and that he would be released. P57 told the Court that he was very surprised and told the person to gift him 50,000 [he did not specify the currency]. He also took off P57’s blindfolds and they took the elevator down to the first floor [German ground floor] where they went into a car, a Peugeot estate car. It was only P57, the driver, and the guard. The latter told P57 he would be released.

Wiedner asked if P57 was blindfolded. P57 denied and added that he was comforted by this circumstance. He was expecting to be let out at any moment. When they arrived at Al-Baramkeh, where people were usually released, P57 thought he would be released as well. However, the guard told P57 to put his blindfolds on again because there was a checkpoint ahead of them. They then continued driving until P57 at some point heard a person who was talking to the guard. They then drove to Branch 251 where P57’s belongings were.

Wiedner said he did not understand what happened with P57’s belongings. P57 said he meant his car, his purse, and his ID card. He added that in this situation he had the chance to run away because there were only two people but he “was so distracted by the words.”

Wiedner asked if P57 was told where they were driving to, and if he was told that they were driving to Branch 251. P57 denied, adding that he was told that he would be released, and that was everything he was told.

Wiedner wanted to know why P57's belongings were at Branch 251 although P57 previously said he was at Division 40 before that. P57 explained that the belongings always followed a detainee. Wherever a detainee went, their belongings did as well.

Wiedner asked when it had been discussed that P57's belongings were at Branch 251. P57 said it was when they were on the road. The guard told him that he had to deal with P57's matters and would then release him.

Wiedner asked how P57 thought he would get his belongings back, and what he had expected to happen. P57 said he of course believed [what the guard told him.] P57 added that usually one would be accompanied by four people in the car. But since there was only the driver and one guard, P57 believed what the guard said.

Wiedner concluded P57 believed that he would get back his belongings and be released. P57 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P57 to describe the situation when he arrived at Branch 251, whether he already knew the Branch. P57 asked Wiedner if he was referring to Branch 251 or Division 40.

Wiedner clarified he meant Branch 251. P57 said he did not know [how he knew the Branch], the Branch was commonly known. He knew about Al-Khatib Branch before but had not been there.

Wiedner asked P57 to describe what happened on his arrival there. P57 said "we" went through a door and down the stairs. Downstairs was a yard, a square, and cells. "We" had to undress and were frisked and then taken through a room on the left and through a long corridor. At the end of the corridor on the right side was another room - what one would call a break room or an "outer room". P57 said he might confuse this situation with Branch 227, however, since there was a similar room.

Wiedner wanted to know what the building looked like from the outside when P57 was arriving by car. P57 said he did not see it due to his blindfolds.

Wiedner asked when P57 had to put his blindfolds on again. P57 said it was in Al-Baramkeh at the checkpoint.

Wiedner asked if P57 was allowed to take off the blindfolds after they had passed the checkpoint. P57 denied.

Wiedner wanted to know if P57 had asked why he had to wear blindfolds again. P57 affirmed that he asked. He said the guard tried to calm him down by saying that he would be released and then give the guard money.

Wiedner asked when P57 was allowed to take off the blindfolds again. P57 said it was after "we" were frisked, at the room where they had to hand in their shoelaces, at the beginning of the corridor. [P57 was showing the space with his hands] This room was full of belts and laces.

Wiedner said P57 would constantly say "we", and asked him if he was not alone, adding that he assumed P57 was alone. P57 said he was alone. He might use the plural form because he is used to talking in the plural form.

Wiedner wanted to know when and where P57 was mistreated for the first time, whether it was on his arrival at Branch 251. P57 said he was tortured in the yard close to the cells and during the interrogations which happened upstairs.

Wiedner asked P57 to describe the frisking that happened downstairs. P57 said he entered and was perpetually beaten and insulted.

Wiedner wanted to know if P57 had to undress outside and was frisked there, or inside. P57 said it was inside the building. "We" had to undress ourselves and while doing that they were beaten with hands, feet, and sticks. "We" then had to do "the security move" meaning to squat several times while being naked. "We" were then taken to the cells. P57 said he was "strung out" by the many beatings but other detainees came towards him and comforted him. They also put wet tissues on his wounds. P57 explained to the Court that they always did that for new detainees. New detainees also had to sleep by the toilet and gradually moved to other sleeping places. P57 said he stayed there until [the Trial Monitor was unable to hear what P57 was saying due to the generally bad acoustics inside the court room.] P57 said they heard screams from torture because the cell had windows showing to .... he could draw a sketch if the Court wanted him to do so. P57 concluded that he could never forget what he experienced. He tried to abandon the memory but was unable to do so.

Wiedner wanted to know how P57's fellow detainees were doing, if they were injured, and how their condition was. P57 said that there were of course many people who were close to the end. He recalled that there were people who had been arrested at a mansion. One of them had an open wound on his head. P57 later heard that this person died. All of this person's teeth were broken because when he was arrested, he was having lunch and "they" put a potato in his mouth and hit it. Fellow detainees further told P57 that one man from [REDACTED] died. There were also people whose bodies were blue. There were elderly people who had to urinate right where they were standing. P57 recalled that one detainee was 85 years old. "They" wanted to arrest his son and the old man stood in front of his son and they arrested him instead. There was also an IT person, [REDACTED]. He was not tortured. P57 recalled that this person was picked up at the airport and before he was released, he was allowed to shower and got dressed. P57 concluded that this person was treated differently because he was working for the UN.

Wiedner wanted to know if there were juveniles or children as well. P57 said "of course." There was a person from Harasta who was tortured. This man was detained together with his son who was 15 or 16 years old. The son was also tortured in front of his father and vice-versa. Both their feet were massively swollen. P57 concluded that he had seen many horrible things.

Wiedner asked if there were women. P57 explained that there were cells for women, he was able to hear their voices. P57 said this was what hurt him most. It was torture to hear the female screams.

Wiedner wanted to know if the detainees spoke with each other about how they were mistreated and what they had to endure. P57 said they did talk to each other, however not much because there were spies among them. P57 remembered one person called [REDACTED]. P57 assumed that Raslan might know him. This person was killed and P57 later learned that his corpse was taken to Ghouta. However, no one dared to ask about it.

Wiedner asked if there were dead people at the Branch. P57 said he did not see dead people with his own eyes, but he might have touched one and stumbled over corpses.

Wiedner clarified that he was not referring to Harasta Hospital in which regard P57 already mentioned that he stumbled over a corpse at the toilet. Wiedner was instead referring to Al-Khatib Branch, Branch 251. P57 said "of course people died there." He did not see dead people, but he heard about them. He learned after his detention that one of his fellow detainees, [REDACTED], had been "eliminated."

Wiedner asked P57 if he did not see anyone die during his detention. P57 said there was an old man. P57 did not know if he was dead or unconscious. Nevertheless, the man was taken outside the cell and did not return. [REDACTED] was also taken from the cell and P57 later learned that he died.

Wiedner wanted to know how many times P57 had been interrogated at Branch 251 in total. P57 said “around 4 times.”

Wiedner asked if it had always been in the same room. P57 described that “we” sat in a room, a kitchen, which had a window toward the street. They had to wait there until the interrogator would call them. P57 concluded that he assumes it was the same room most times.

Wiedner wanted to know who P57 meant by saying “we”, whether there were several people in one interrogation. P57 clarified that he was talking about himself. He added that “my business partner was involved in the same thing.” That might be the reason P57 kept saying “we”.

Wiedner asked on which floor the room was. P57 said it was upstairs, but he did not know which exact floor it was. It was definitely not the basement, because when he raised his head he was able to look below his blindfolds and see the building around him.

Wiedner asked if P57 was able to see the interrogation room the same way. P57 denied. He added that the interrogation officer was cautious that the blindfolds were in place. P57 did not have the chance to see anything, not even the sheets on which he had to put his fingerprint. He was unable to see if they were blank or if there was something written on them.

Wiedner recalled that when P57 earlier described the mistreatment he had to endure, he mentioned that he was beaten on his most sensitive body part. Wiedner asked P57 whether he had experienced other forms of sexualized torture or heard from others about it. P57 said as far as he was concerned, he was beaten and threatened that he would be castrated. The guards told him that someone like him should not have children. P57 said that he ordered a medical examination and report [REDACTED] to document the signs of torture on his body. His Counsel had a picture of him and the signs of torture. This picture was taken one year ago, after that...

Judge Wiedner interrupted, asking whether all mistreatment was related to interrogations and if mistreatment happened in the interrogation room or if P57 was taken to another room to be mistreated. P57 said it happened in the [interrogation] room upstairs.

Wiedner asked if there were orders to beat and torture P57, whether he was able to notice something. P57 said there was once an order for him to be taken downstairs. However, there was constant beating, not to mention the insults.

Wiedner wanted to know how someone could picture the situation of when P57 was asked a question by the interrogator and then beaten. Wiedner asked if the beatings happened in reaction to something. P57 described that when he, for example, said that he had nothing to do with the accusations, he was threatened, and the interrogator told him that he would “show you God himself” and insulted him.

Wiedner asked whether the interrogation officer insulted P57 or someone else. P57 said it was the one who also said “that” [quote above] but he did not know who hit him. P57 once felt that there were multiple persons. People were talking at his third interrogation, saying they wanted to release someone but one of them said he did not want to be responsible for it. This person said that if the [person supposed to be released] would go to the mountains they would never get him back again.

Wiedner asked if it was the same voice or multiple. P57 said he would never forget the voice of his interrogator. Judging from his dialect, he was from Aleppo. P57 said there were multiple voices, but he would never forget the voice of his interrogator.

Wiedner asked if it was always the same person [interrogator]. P57 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if P57's family was informed about his whereabouts. P57 denied, adding that his family did not know anything at all for one and a half months. They thought he was dead. His family then hired an intermediary who knew a Warrant Officer 3rd Class and who wanted money.

Wiedner asked "how much money." P57 explained that it was less about the money. The family had an estate in Syria and "he" got half of it. P57 told the Court that this is all he wanted to say to not endanger his family.

Wiedner asked who was benefitting and receiving a reward for his duties. He told P57 to answer as long as it would not endanger his family. P57 said he could provide the name to the Court, but it should remain "amongst us" and not be mentioned "here." He said that if he mentioned the name, Anwar Raslan would immediately know who he was, although P57 assumed that Raslan already recognized him. [Raslan was laughing.]

Wiedner asked how P57 got to know the name Anwar Raslan. He recalled P57 previously saying that he and the intermediary went to Branch 251 together where the Warrant Officer 3rd Class led them to Raslan's office. Wiedner asked if that was correct. P57 affirmed, summarizing that he went to Anwar Raslan's office together with the Warrant Officer 3rd Class and the intermediary.

Wiedner asked P57 to stop for a second, asking whether he was blindfolded on the way to the office. P57 denied, saying that he entered together with the intermediary and did not wear blindfolds.

Wiedner wanted to know on which floor they were. P56 said it was the second floor as far as he remembered. He had to take some steps, two landings.

Wiedner asked if P57 saw the person inside the room or only heard him. P57 said he heard him, adding that as he already mentioned, he was asked if there was another person on his file. When he affirmed, he was sent to the next office. P57 said he was asking for his car.

Wiedner wanted to know if P57 spoke with the person himself. P56 denied, adding that the person, however, was standing at the door and P57 saw him.

Wiedner asked P57 to explain why he assumed that this person was Anwar Raslan. P57 explained that the intermediary told him that this person was the Head of the Interrogation Division. He did not mention his name, but P57 knew the name already, from one of the detainees who was detained by Raslan himself.

Wiedner asked P57 if he would recognize the person in this courtroom. P57 said "of course." He had been seeing Raslan the entire time. He assumed that Raslan already recognized him as well and he himself already recognized Raslan when he entered the room.

Wiedner asked if Raslan had anything to do with P57 interrogations. P57 said "of course" he did, because P57 was detained at Branch 251. According to P57, Raslan might not kill or torture people, but it happened upon his orders and he would report to the Head...

Wiedner interrupted, asking if P57 himself noticed anything. The Court was not interested in what P57 solely heard from others. P57 said he did not understand the question.

Wiedner asked if P57 saw or heard Raslan while he was detained at Branch 251 or whether he saw him for the first time when he wanted to pick up his belongings. P57 said he only heard [Raslan's] voice, he did not see him. Fifteen days after his release, P57 saw him and when he spoke, P57 recognized his voice. P57 immediately told the intermediary that he recognized the voice and his intermediary said he would know the person, he would be the Head of the Interrogation Division.

Wiedner asked from where P57 recognized the voice. P57 said [he recognized the voice] from the third [interrogation] session when the people were talking about the man whom they wanted to recruit.

Wiedner asked P57 if he only heard the voice in this situation. P57 affirmed.

Wiedner recalled that P57 previously said that he had been interrogated by the same interrogator for all three interrogations, and concluded that the voice therefore did not belong to the interrogation officer who was present during P57's interrogations. P57 said "for 95%, it was the same person."

Wiedner asked whether it was correct that P57 recognized the voice from the third interrogation and did not hear it before. P57 said there was only one person at all other interrogations.

Questioning by the Prosecutors

Klinge first wanted to know how long P57 stayed at Harasta Hospital. P57 said he stayed there for two days.

Klinge further asked P57 to describe the conditions there: if patients were lying in beds, received treatment, what the procedures at the hospital looked like. P57 said he did not know the number of beds because he was blindfolded. However, there were multiple people. From what P57 heard from the guards, there were injured people who were beaten until they fell unconscious. P57 added that he was always blindfolded, even when he got food. This was not to mention the insults and offences.

Klinge wanted to know how the patients were accommodated if they were lying in beds or sitting on chairs. P57 did not understand the question and Klinge repeated it. P57 said he and other patients were lying in beds, handcuffed.

Klinge asked if P57 was alone in his bed. P57 said "yes", there was one person next to him. He was a detainee as well.

Klinge recalled that P57 was first at Division 40, then Harasta Hospital, and after that at Branch 251. Klinge also recalled that P57 mentioned he was interrogated at Division 40. Klinge asked if P57 met someone at Branch 251 who he had already met at Division 40 or elsewhere. P57 said that due to the blindfolds he could not see anything.

Presiding Judge Kerber said she assumed that the Defense's questions would not be done in five minutes and The Court would therefore have a break before that. Defense Counsel Böcker said the assumption was "correct."

Questioning by the Defense Counsels

Defense Counsel Böcker explained to the witness that the parties had received several files. He first wanted to know whether it was correct that there is a journalist accompanying P57 for several weeks together with a camera team to make a movie about P57. P57 said there would be a film, but he was not accompanied right now.

Böcker said according to the BKA, a witness called them and told them that P57 wanted to make a movie. P57 said he was not accompanied by anyone at the moment. He added that he was initially summoned for July 28, 2021, however, he did not know what went wrong at the Court.

Böcker said he would talk about this aspect [reasons for rescheduling P57's in-court testimony], however, he had a problem that P57 was working on a public movie while in court, yet he wanted to conceal his name. P57 said his name would not be mentioned in the movie and his face would be censored.

Böcker wanted to know whether the summons that P57 just mentioned, July 28, 2021, would have been a court summons or a summons for a police interview, for example with the BKA. P57 said the summons was for a police interview regarding his witness testimony. However, at that time, he was in [REDACTED] and his documents were not yet complete. When he spoke with his lawyer, his lawyer gave him the police's number and told him to call them. P57 said, before going on an unofficial journey, "we" called the police.

Böcker wanted to know who P57 referred to as "we". P57 said he meant the young men who was supposed to accompany him to the police.

Böcker said he had a BKA summons for P57 laying in front of him. However, the date was July 27, 2019. He asked P57 whether that was a typo or if he was summoned two years ago. P57 said it was a mistake. It was in 2021.

Böcker asked how P57 received the summons. P57 said it was orally through the "Syrian Center for Documentation and Research" [Syrian Center for Legal Studies and Research].

Böcker asked if the Center was in Berlin. P57 affirmed.

Böcker asked about the name of P57's lawyer. P57 said "Anwar Al-Bunni".

Böcker asked P57 what would make him think that Al-Bunni was a lawyer. P57 explained that when he first saw the defendant's picture on the media, he was in [REDACTED]. He already provided a witness testimony in 2018 with [REDACTED]. According to P57, this testimony was documented for "the Americans" and he provided it in [REDACTED]. When P57 learned that Anwar Raslan was in Germany, he called [REDACTED] to ask him "who was the lawyer in charge of testimonies on this matter." [REDACTED] replied that it was attorney Al-Bunni. P57 therefore told Al-Bunni that he wanted to make a witness testimony. Al-Bunni said this would not be a problem and P57 sent Al-Bunni copies of his passport and Syrian ID. However, COVID-19 happened. P57 added that after his testimony in [REDACTED], he was afraid.

Böcker concluded that P57's testimony was from 2018 then. P57 denied, explaining that he was only able to testify with Al-Bunni in 2020. The testimony from 2018 was with [REDACTED].

Böcker said this would answer his question. He continued saying "if we assume that in 2018 you had your first contact with 'the Americans'... P57 intervened, saying at that time he was in contact with [REDACTED]. [Böcker complained about the difference in volume between P57 and the interpreter. Several parties intervened and agreed. Judge Kerber asked the interpreter to pull his microphone closer.] P57 asked whether he should repeat his last sentence. He said that he assumed his testimony was for the U.S. Foreign Ministry, but he would not know for sure.

Böcker asked if [REDACTED] said it would be for the U.S. Foreign Ministry. P57 said he thinks so.

Böcker said he wanted to go back to 'the lawyer in charge of testimonies', asking P57 whom he meant. P57 said he did not fully understand the question. Böcker recalled that P57 previously told the Court that he was asking for 'the lawyer in charge' of documentation. Böcker added that given the time, P57 could not have meant his current counsel. Böcker therefore wanted to know to whom P57 was referring.

P57 explained that the first time he documented his witness testimony was in 2018 with [REDACTED] and then with Al-Bunni. "There was nothing official involving a court or something like that."

Böcker asked if that was all. P57 said that "one month later" I contacted a German lawyer and sent him a letter. However, he replied one and a half months later and "said no."

Böcker asked when P57 contacted this lawyer. P57 said it was in August 2021.

Böcker said that given that P57 already provided a statement on the human rights situation in Syria back in 2018, he was, according to Böcker, getting involved this trial at a late stage. Böcker asked P57 why he only joined now. P57 said "yes, I am late."

Böcker asked why. P57 said he could not say what happened at the Court, apparently something went wrong.

Böcker said the Court had, however, not been in trial since 2018 when P57 gave his first testimony. Böcker wanted to know if P57 ever since [2018] was in contact with German authorities, the police or the BKA for example. P57 denied, adding that there was no contact with German authorities at all.

Böcker concluded that P57 was in contact with Al-Bunni but there was nothing official. He asked P57 if there was something official, and if so, what it was. P57 said "it was the content of the communication with Al-Bunni". The Court said P57 should appear to provide his testimony. P57 said he was supposed "to be here" seven months ago. He did not know what happened.

Judge Kerber intervened, saying "to repair shortcomings" she can say that P57's current counsel recently sent the Court the email in which P57 contacted Counsel Schulz, who on October 30, 2021 told P57 that he would not take him as a client due to the already well-advanced stage of the proceedings.

Böcker explained that he had two documents lying in front of him that looked like they contained the statements P57 made on what happened to him in Syria. Böcker said both documents were, however, unsigned, nor were they dated. The first document was a two-page document which Böcker assumed P57 created with his current counsel. He asked P57 to have a look at this document and tell the Court whether the statements therein were his, and how the document was created. Judge Kerber asked Böcker how he wanted P57 to inspect the document since it was written in German. Böcker said the interpreter could translate parts of it. P57 having a look at the summarized version was sufficient for Böcker. P57's Counsel Dr. Daimagüler added that this document was not created in cooperation with him. P57 sent it to him together with the original Arabic-language version. Daimagüler explained that because he could not speak Arabic, he could not translate it, but sent it to the Court. Judge Kerber told Böcker to hand the document to the interpreter so he could quickly go through it together with P57. She further added that this procedure would be treated as a remonstrance [citing from a previous statement of a witness or another document for recollection purposes].

After the interpreter translated the first two or three paragraphs for P57, the latter said "it is the same" document.

Böcker recalled that P57 previously described to the Court how he recognized Anwar Raslan and made the connections: he recognized him in the room at the Branch and then learned the name from the intermediary, however, in the document.... Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, saying that Böcker's summary was wrong. She clarified that P57 previously said that the intermediary did not mention the name, but that P57 knew the name from a fellow detainee. P57 added that the intermediary did not mention the name but only told him that "he" was the Head of the Interrogation Division. Böcker asked who mentioned the name then. P57 said it was [REDACTED] - one of his fellow detainees.

Böcker explained that in the last paragraph of the document, it says that: ‘one year later in [REDACTED], I saw a picture of Anwar Raslan in the media. It was the same man who I saw at the office and whose voice I heard at my third interrogation.’ P57 intervened, saying he did not see him, but heard his voice.

Böcker said the issue was how exactly P57 saw Raslan or assigned him. According to what P57 said on this very day...Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer intervened, saying he objected to Böcker’s question. According to Scharmer, seeing someone and assigning something were two different things which did not exclude each other. Böcker agreed that they did not exclude each other, however, P57 said in Court that he was told the rank ‘Head of the Interrogation Division’ and heard the name from another person. Böcker asked P57 why he did not deem it necessary to mention this in the document as well. P57 said the document was only a summary.

Böcker concluded that P57 did not deem this detail to be relevant. P57 affirmed, adding that he was supposed to testify in Court as well, anyway.

Böcker went on to explain that there was another document which also contained names. Böcker said the document was from the Syrian Center for Legal Studies and Research and titled “Testimony Against Anwar Raslan and Hafez Makhlof”. As “name” the document stated two letters, Böcker said they matched P57’s first and second name and he therefore assumed that P57 was referred to here. The document also included a date and a statement provided in the first-person-singular-perspective, but was not signed. Böcker again asked P57 to have a look at the document and explain how this was drafted. Presiding Judge Kerber said this would be handled as a remonstration and asked Böcker to simply show the document to P57. She added that the document included names which she did not want to be shown in court through visual inspection. Böcker asked P57 to have a thorough look at the document and then describe what he was able to say about it. P57 added that the document included the name of his business partner which he did not want to be shown in court. Kerber assured P57 that the name would not be shown or mentioned and that for this particular reason, only P57 would be able to see the document.

[After P57 and the interpreter went through the document together, P57 consulted his Counsel.]

Böcker explained that according to the Court’s files, the Syrian Center for Legal Studies and Research, namely Anwar Al-Bunni, sent this document as a one-page pdf file. The file name said “Testimony Against Anwar Raslan and Hafez Makhlof” and also featured P57’s initials. The document itself featured the date and place of birth of P57 and stated “mandate to interview.” Böcker asked P57 what this document was. P57 said it was also a summary of his statements that “we” created through a zoom call in early June.

Böcker asked if P57 meant this year. P57 affirmed, saying it might have been later [than early June].

Böcker also wanted to know who P57 meant by saying “we”. P57 said he and Al-Bunni documented that.

Böcker summarized that there had been a zoom call between P57 and Al-Bunni. Böcker wanted to know whether P57 had ever been interrogated by Hafez Makhlof between the date of his arrest and the date of his release in Syria. P57 explained that he never saw Hafez Makhlof, however, he was in his office when the soldier said “Sidi, he is urinating blood.” P57 added that the soldier was Warrant Officer 3rd Class, Moussa Al-Khateeb. He was a regular customer at P57’s store but actually worked for the Mukhabarat, the Air Force Intelligence.

Böcker asked if P57 had ever been interrogated by Hafez Makhlof. P57 affirmed.

Böcker asked if P57 was interrogated by Hafez Makhlof. P57 affirmed, adding that he did not see [Makhlof] himself, but later learned this from fellow detainees.

Böcker concluded that P57 was interrogated at an office when a soldier said that he was urinating blood. P57 was not able to see the interrogator but fellow detainees later told him that it was Hafez Makhlof. Böcker asked P57 whether this was correct. P57 confirmed.

Böcker said the document, contrary to what P57 said in Court on this very day, provided the following summary: 'While Anwar Raslan was present, I was beaten and mistreated in various ways. Anwar Raslan threatened to take me in a torture room and hang me.' [P57 wanted to say something] Böcker asked P57 if these were his words. P57 said that he remembered, however, there might be a translation mistake: Raslan was present at P57's third interrogation.

Böcker said "OK" and went on to explain that the document stated that, after two days, P57 was transferred from Division 40 to Branch 251 where P57 was beaten and mistreated in different ways while Anwar Raslan was present. Böcker wanted to know whether this was consequently be wrong. P57 said it was a mistake. He never said that Raslan personally tortured him.

Böcker said "OK", asking P57 whether Raslan threatened P57 and ordered to hang him in a torture room. P57 said this was the interrogation officer at his first interrogation. P57 added that he never said that Anwar Raslan said that.

Böcker asked if P57 could explain how these two sentences, that were not from P57 and were wrong, could be part of the statement from Anwar Al-Bunni and the Syrian Center for Legal Studies and Research. P57's Witness Counsel Dr. Daimagüler intervened, saying he objected to this question because his client already said that there could have been a translation mistake. Daimagüler added that one should rather ask the person who drafted the document about that.

Böcker said this would actually be a good idea, and asked P57 whether he could say something about how these two sentences got into the statement: yes or no. P57 said he could not answer and will not answer.

Böcker wanted to know if P57 was unable or unwilling to answer. P57 said he already answered by saying that if these two sentences are part of the document, there must have been a translation error. P57 added that Böcker should ask the person who drafted the document, instead.

Böcker further recalled that P57 mentioned [REDACTED] and wanted to know where he was currently residing. P57 said it was correct that he mentioned this person. P57 could provide the information to the Court "but not to you."

Böcker explained that he would also get the information if P56 would provide it to the Court and acknowledged that P57 might be uncomfortable sharing it in public. Böcker asked P57 to provide this information to the Court in due time. Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, asking P57 if he would be able to let the Court know on this very day. She asked P57 to write the information down on a sheet of paper, using the pen and notepad in front of the interpreter.

Defense Counsel Böcker said he would then have some more questions later this day. Judge Kerber denied, asking Böcker to complete his questioning right away. P57 added that as far as he remembered, [REDACTED] denied appearing in Court.

Böcker asked P57 if he wrote down the address and if it was correct that this person is currently living in [REDACTED]. He further wanted to know how [REDACTED] was released from his detention. P57 described that [REDACTED] had not been released directly but was transferred to Kafar Souseh.

Böcker asked if he was released from there or was still there. P57 clarified that he was not talking about Branch 285 which was in Najha.

Böcker concluded that [REDACTED] was released and left Syria. P57 confirmed.

Böcker asked if [REDACTED] had a brother called Mohammad who was the head of a hospital. P57 denied, saying [REDACTED] did not have a brother called Mohammad.

Böcker asked whether he had brothers at all. P57 said [REDACTED] was an only child.

Böcker said regarding the document, he would like to know whether Al-Bunni ever told P57 that he submitted it. P57 said of course Al-Bunni told him that he wanted to forward it.

Böcker asked if P57 read it before that. P57 denied.

Defense Counsel Fratzky recalled that when asked by the Prosecutors whether he saw people at Al-Khatib Branch whom he had seen at another Branch before, P57 replied that he was blindfolded. Fratzky therefore wanted to know whether P57 was able to recognize someone from Division 40 at Al-Khatib Branch based on their voice. P57 asked whether Fratzky meant the person in charge.

Fratzky said he meant the interrogating person, guards, and people like that. P57 denied, adding that “it has nothing to do” with each other. Division 40 and Al-Khatib Branch had nothing to do with each other according to P57.

Fratzky further recalled P57 describing to the Court that he was holding his car key when he was arrested and later returned [to the Branch] to get his car back. Fratzky said he understood from P57’s story that he was not taken to the Branch in his own car. P57 explained that usually when someone is arrested, his car gets confiscated. When he was arrested, he was asked if his car was there and they then took it with them.

Fratzky asked if he understood correctly that the intermediary paid bribes to the Warrant Officer 3rd Class equivalent to half a house. P57 affirmed, adding that he and his family would however not know who exactly was paid how much. It was the intermediary who had the contacts.

Fratzky wanted to know to what exact value P57 was referring when he talked about half a building. P57 explained that he did not know any details because the intermediary agreed on the details with P57’s brother. P57 said that his family owned a “mantiquh bina” [meaning building in Arabic but according to the interpreter meaning building site in Syria]. The intermediary was given that ground and built a house on it.

Fratzky asked if this was a comparison or if the intermediary actually received half a building site. P57 said he received half a building site. It was transferred to the name of the intermediary.

Fratzky wanted to know where the site was. P57 said it of course belonged to “us.”

Fratzky asked if it was P57’s site. P57 said he must be careful here because he does not want to unveil too much.

Fratzky wanted to know who transferred the site to whom, and who “he” was. P57 explained that his brother transferred half of the site to the name of the intermediary. P57’s brother had been arrested in 2013.

Fratzky asked why the intermediary received the site although he was not the one who released anyone. P57 said this person would simply be an intermediary with connections. According to P57, all of Syria “lived like that.” One could get everything for money.

Fratzky concluded that the intermediary did his intermediary work for half a site. P57 affirmed, saying that this was what he was told. The intermediary said he wanted something to get P57 released. P57 said he did not say anything [during the interrogations] and they had nothing against him. During the revolution, people often made use of such situations.

Fratzky asked who the intermediary was and whether P57 could identify him. P57 said he could not mention his name.

Fratzky asked P57 to provide some context, if for example the intermediary belonged to Al-Khatib Branch. P57 said he was a civil engineer.

Fratzky concluded that he was not an employee of Al-Khatib Branch. P57 confirmed.

Fratzky further summarized that when the intermediary facilitated P57's release and received half a building site for that, there must have been another person involved. Fratzky wanted to know if "anything else flew there" [if more bribes were paid]. P57 said he did not know who the intermediary paid or not. All he knew was that he facilitated P57's release.

Fratzky concluded that P57 did not know what the intermediary paid to Al-Khatib Branch. Fratzky said he did not believe P57 in this regard. P57's counsel Dr. Daimagüler intervened, saying he objected to this question. According to Daimagüler, what Fratzky believed or not was his private matter. In any event, P57 already answered the question regarding who received bribes. Daimagüler concluded that it was the very nature of an intermediary to be paid and to pay others.

Fratzky said he did not believe P57 and recalled again that P57 said he did not know what the intermediary paid to Al-Khatib Branch. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer intervened, saying that this question has just been objected to. Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, saying that Fratzky might not believe P57, nonetheless, P57 already answered this question.

Defense Counsel Böcker wanted to know how P57 knew that it was the intermediary who facilitated his release. He asked P57 if he had any clues from the intermediary's statements. P57 said he did not know, but it was certainly the intermediary who facilitated his release. After all, it was the intermediary who accompanied him to the Branch after his release and met with the Warrant Officer 3rd Class.

Böcker asked how it could be that P57 was not sure whether someone has been paid. P57 said he did not know how [people were paid/how exactly his release was facilitated].

P57 was dismissed as a witness at 2:07PM.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked P57 for his testimony and for being able to come to the Court on short notice, which was not normal, as Kerber concluded.

Defense Counsel Böcker announced that the Defense suggested to again summon Anwar Al-Bunni. According to Böcker, it was a mere suggestion for the moment, but the Defense considered submitting a request in writing. Böcker concluded that P57's witness counsel Dr. Daimagüler correctly stated that one should ask Al-Bunni [the drafter].

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to know what exactly the defense wanted to ask Al-Bunni. Böcker explained that the Defense would like to hear Al-Bunni as a witness and ask him what parts of Annex I derived from P57 and how the annex was drafted in light of the fact that it included "extremely incriminating statements" with regard to Anwar Raslan, however, "no word of it was true."

The Defense would further question Al-Bunni about his interactions with P57. Böcker concluded that all this information would be necessary, not only for his closing statement, but with regard to the existing “Al-Bunni problem.”

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:12PM.

Trial Day 104 – November 18, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM with three spectators and two journalists in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Oehmichen and Mohammed were not present. Defense Counsel Böcker was not present either.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that she would read out a Judges’ Decision before the witness, a BKA officer, would be called.

Decision rejecting the Defense’s request dated October 27, 2021 to summon female witness Z121020528

The Senate finds that the request submitted by the Defense does not constitute a proper request to take evidence as outlined in § 244 \(3\) s.1 StPO since there is no concrete claim as to which facts the requested evidence is supposed to prove. There is further no obligation to investigate on the side of the Court regarding the requested witness.

The witness was supposed to be summoned, however, received witness protection from the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA). The Court therefore tried to summon the witness through the BKA to appear in Court on November, 18, 2021. However, the BKA was unable to contact the witness and found that the witness left the EU. Her current whereabouts are unknown. The Judges therefore summoned the BKA officer who led the police interview of the witness.

In case one would consider the Defense’s request a proper request to take evidence, it was rejected pursuant to § 244 \(3\) s. 3 no. 5 StPO, given that the witness cannot be contacted.

Testimony of Criminal Chief Inspector Frey

Criminal Chief Inspector (CCI) Alexander Frey from the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He denied being related to the defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber first wanted to know how the interview of the witness<sup>2</sup> came about, whether she was informed about her rights and duties, and what she told the BKA. CCI Frey explained that CCI Deußing told him that there was a witness who had previously worked at the Red Crescent Hospital in Damascus. Since Frey had previously conducted an interview with another doctor from this hospital, Deußing tasked him to interview this witness as well. Frey told the Court that he and his colleague Strell of course informed her of her rights and duties as a witness. They also ensured that the witness's communication with the interpreter was smooth. According to Frey, the witness was also informed about her rights under § 55 StPO [right to refuse an answer in case of incrimination for oneself or close relatives]. Frey further told the Court that the witness was concerned about her relatives' safety at a relatively early stage of the interview. Frey therefore contacted Prosecutor Klinge regarding anonymization of the witness which was granted.

In terms of the witness' career, she told the BKA that she had studied medicine and worked as a doctor at a hospital which was close to Al-Khatib Branch. The witness stated that this hospital was treated by Al-Khatib Branch as if it belonged to the Branch. The Branch's employees went there to get treated themselves. Since the beginning of the conflict, detainees from the Branch were transferred to the hospital. The witness said this started at the end of 2011 or even June 2011. The witness further told Frey that the detainees were mostly "relatively bad" cases, however, added that she probably did not see the really bad cases. Starting in mid 2012, hospital staff also had to go inside Al-Khatib Branch and the witness heard that detainees from this Branch were taken to military hospitals. According to Frey, the witness saw fifteen to twenty detainees herself. She particularly remembered a young woman who was sixteen or seventeen years old. Her upper body was completely blue due to the many bruises. However, the witness was not able to examine her from close up. The witness further told Frey that she could imagine that there were corpses coming from the Branch, but she did not see any herself. She knew about the mortuary, however, never had been there herself.

Kerber wanted to know about the diagnoses that the witness made and her findings. Frey explained that the witness mostly found that the patients were dehydrated, malnourished, and showed signs of beatings caused by sticks and metal poles. Dehydration was the most common finding and the cause of death was mostly cardiac failure.

Kerber asked if that [cardiac failure] was what was stated in the death certificate. Frey said the witness did not fill in any death certificates but heard about this cause of death.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner first wanted to know whether the witness said anything about the possibilities of treatment regarding the fifteen to twenty patients she saw from Branch 251. He added that he was aware that the witness was unable to say much in this regard due to her anonymity. Frey said that the people who the witness saw or treated herself must have been more. They mostly only stayed for one night or were transferred to another station.

Wiedner asked in which period the witness saw the fifteen to twenty patients. Frey said it was from 2011 until mid 2012. He added that it was since the beginning of the conflict.

<sup>2</sup> For the purposes of this report, the term "witness" refers to the woman (Z121020528) who was previously interviewed by the BKA. The person who appeared in Court as a witness for this day, CCI Frey, will be referred to by his name and/or title.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness said anything about surveillance and guards in terms of possibilities to treat people. Frey affirmed, adding that according to the witness, all detainees were accompanied by intelligence employees who ensured that the detainees would not flee and who monitored the treatment. The witness described that the detainees were not handcuffed and did not wear blindfolds during the medical examination. However, the opportunities for conversations were limited to medical aspects. Frey added that in the case of the young woman, the witness was not allowed to make a blood examination because Al-Khatib Branch would have to pay for that.

Wiedner asked if there was the chance to have conversations with patients beyond medical matters. Frey said neither the witness nor the patients dared to do that.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the condition and injuries of the patients. He added that according to the BKA's transcript, the witness often illustrated what the patients looked like. Frey recalled that the witness told him that the patients showed signs of torture that were very well visible. On the surface, the patients showed bruises, signs of beatings, and abrasions on their wrists. However, the witness was not able to closely examine the abrasions to determine whether they were caused by fixations, because the guard threatened her.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript of the witness' interview according to which, when asked about injuries and methods of torture, the witness stated that she saw signs of beatings, superficial injuries, inflammations of wounds. But that she was unable to tell what exactly had happened. Frey confirmed that the witness said that.

[Another spectator took a seat in the public gallery.]

Wiedner recalled that Frey already told the Court that the witness did not see any corpses. Nonetheless, Wiedner wanted to know what the witness said about corpses in terms of hearsay, what she heard from others. Frey recalled that the witness noticed that normally when patients died, the corpses were handed over to their families. Regarding detainees, they were often handed to their relatives shortly before they died. The witness assumed that this happened when the families paid money or had connections, so that the detainees could die at home. Frey concluded that the witness said she did not see anything but could imagine that these things actually happened.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the witness' experience regarding causes of death of detainees. Frey said that in the end, cardiac failure was noted as cause of death.

Wiedner asked about the actual cause of death. Frey said the witness stated it was often kidney failure and dehydration. Frey added that the witness mentioned a medical term in this regard that he was unable to remember.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript according to which the witness stated that she did not witness it herself, but that detainees died of disseminated intravascular coagulation (DIC). Frey said this sounded like the term that the witness mentioned, however, he would not know whether this was the correct terminology.

Wiedner recalled that according to the BKA's transcript, the witness was asked whether deaths were avoidable. He asked Frey what the witness replied here. Frey said the witness denied this question. She explained to him that the patients were already in such a bad condition that it was impossible to prevent their death. Frey recalled that when he asked the witness if the deaths could have been prevented by earlier treatment, the witness affirmed and added that they were all strong, young men.

Wiedner asked if the witness said how the patients were normally treated. Frey said according to the witness, they were usually given hydration and in one case a patient received antibiotics.

Wiedner wanted to know how long the detainees usually stayed at the hospital. Frey said they normally stayed for one day or night, and some of them stayed even shorter.

Wiedner asked how the witness was able to determine that certain patients came from Al-Khatib Branch. Frey explained that the witness often assumed it, saying that 90% of the patients came from Al-Khatib Branch due to the proximity [between Branch and hospital]. However, the witness was unable to make a direct connection because the head of the hospital announced every time an intelligence patient arrived, however, it was never said which patient was from the Intelligence. Nonetheless, the faces of Al-Khatib Branch staff were familiar to the witness due to the fact that many of them were patients at the hospital themselves. This was how she was able to determine which patients were from the Branch.

Wiedner asked if the witness said anything about the arms carried by the intelligence employees who accompanied the patients. Frey said the witness told him that she was not familiar with arms but could say that the weapons they carried were bigger than a pistol.

Wiedner recalled that Frey told the Court that according to the witness, Al-Khatib Branch treated the hospital as if it belonged to the Branch. Wiedner wanted to know what the witnesses said in terms of medical treatment of Branch employees. Frey said according to the witness, the employees went to the hospital when they were sick to receive medical care.

Wiedner asked how exactly that happened. Frey said he could not remember what the witness said in this regard and asked Wiedner to cite from the transcript.

Wiedner said according to the BKA's transcript, the witness said that the employees simply appeared at the hospital, requested favored treatment and were ruthless toward other patients. Frey confirmed that the witness described that.

Wiedner asked Frey whether he remembered what the witness said regarding delivery and retrieval of corpses that initially came from Al-Khatib Branch. Frey recalled the witness telling him that she did not witness anything herself, because it happened at night. However, she stated that there was a hearse and that corpses were transported by ambulance. Frey added that this was, however, hearsay.

Since none of the parties had questions for Frey, he was dismissed as a witness.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber said that the Judges would now read out a number of Judges Decisions. She added that the Judges would not follow the Defense's suggestion to summon Al-Bunni again.

Rejection of the Defense's request to summon [\[PW4\_100\]](#) as a witness

- 1) PW4_100 is allegedly residing in the [REDACTED]. The Defense's requests merely states [REDACTED] as current place of living alongside a phone number and e-mail address. PW4_100 allegedly worked as an interrogation officer at Al-Khatib Branch for two years until 2011, together with the defendant Anwar Raslan. PW4_100 supposedly knows that until this point in time, no one died at the Branch. He is further supposed to know that before March 2011 and after that, members of Division 40 conducted interrogations, mistreated and tortured people at Al-Khatib Branch.

PW4_100 also supposedly knows that the defendant Anwar Raslan was the head of the Interrogation Division, but was unable to intervene in this matter between March and May 2011. However, the defendant was allegedly able to help detainees by releasing them as part of his daily transcript work.

According to the Defense's request, officers from Division 40 were active at Al-Khatib Branch where they allegedly interrogated detainees and created their own transcripts. The request further states that the Division 40 officers therefore used Al-Khatib guards and other personnel. PW4_100 is supposed to provide statements regarding the person in charge of arrests and the circumstance that Anwar Raslan had no more competencies from as late as May 2011.

II)

- a. The Defense's submission does not qualify as a request to take evidence pursuant to § 244 \(3\) s.1 StPO regarding various aspects.

It is not apparent how PW4_100 obtained the alleged knowledge. It is merely stated that he worked at Al-Khatib Branch in an unspecified position until the outbreak of the revolution. Relying on the expert testimony previously heard in this trial, the start of the revolution can be dated early- or mid-March 2011, which was also mentioned in the request. However, it remains unclear what PW4_100 did at this time. The Judges therefore assume that PW4_100 only worked with Anwar Raslan until March 2011 and cannot make any statements as to the defendant's obligation to act after that time. Due to PW4_100's unknown ranks, it cannot be assumed that he will be able to testify about the defendant's deprivation of competencies, releases and activities of Division 40. Previous witnesses such as P10, P21 and others rather told the Court that they only received limited information as to the activities of others. The Judges consider this a tool of the government's exercise of power in Syria.

The Judges do not see any indications in the request for an obligation to investigate.

- b. The circumstances regarding competencies are not concretely described in the request. The request is therefore not a proper request to take evidence as described in § 244 \(3\) s.1 StPO. The request does not describe the defendant's competencies before they were allegedly taken, how they were taken and what they looked like after that. The same can be said regarding the allegation that "Division 40 ruled over Al-Khatib Branch". The Judges do not see any indications of an obligation to investigate this matter.

- c. Precautionarily assuming that the entire request would constitute a proper request to take evidence, the Judges reject the request pursuant to § 244 \(5\) s.2 StPO which provides that witnesses living abroad do not have to be summoned if the Judges consider that their testimony is not relevant to establish the truth.

- aa. The expected evidentiary value of PW4_100's testimony is not high regarding cases of death that allegedly did not occur at Al-Khatib Branch until March 2011. The taking of evidence so far rather showed that at least since end of April 2011, arrests and brutality increased. State repressions drastically worsened at this point in terms of quality and quantity, leading to an increase in the number of victims.

Regarding the activities of Division 40, it is unlikely that PW4_100 made any concrete observations in this regard. The Judges are aware that there has been informal influence by Hafez Makhoul at Al-Khatib Branch. However, there have not been any indications so far pointing at a direct interference. Regarding Anwar Raslan's work it is further irrelevant who conducted interrogations.

In terms of the defendant's alleged inability to intervene, it remains questionable whether PW4_100 can provide any information. The indictment period ranges from April 29, 2011 until December 7, 2012 but PW4_100's position during this period remain unclear. The same is applicable in terms of deprivation of competencies which further contradicts alleged releases by the defendant.

The fact of who conducted arrests has almost no relevance for the present trial since the defendant is not accused of involvement in arrests and a potential evidentiary value is not visible.

bb. Efforts to summon PW4_100 are high and seem to be unsuccessful.

- 1. [REDACTED] is a non-EU country. Therefore, a formal legal assistance request would be required. The Defense's request states that he would be willing to testify by video conference. However, the witness' postal address is not detailed. The Judges could contact PW4_100 via phone and ask for his postal address. Should the witness be willing to provide his address and testify, formal summons would still be required. There is no treaty between Germany and [REDACTED] regulating legal assistance. It must therefore be requested through diplomatic channels as there is also no legal basis to question the witness in [REDACTED].*
- 2. According to an oral information, the Ministry of Justice of Rhineland-Palatine has no experience with requests for legal assistance with [REDACTED]. Two previous requests have not been replied to. In 2003, a request for a witness interview had been issued. After a request to extend the deadline, the request remained unaddressed as of October 2006. A request for extradition in 2019 did not receive any reaction until 2020. It was eventually said, after one and a half years that the documents were lost, and the request has remained unanswered for two and a half years. The German Foreign Office stated that they had a "mixed picture" in terms of legal assistance requests in criminal matters. Some requests were addressed after a short time while others remained unaddressed. Official letters often arrive at the wrong address or are not delivered at all. Requests for assistance that have an intelligence or political background are first examined regarding potential prosecution in the country of destination and after that often remain unanswered.*
- 3. Efforts to summon PW4_100 are therefore afflicted with uncertainties. First, the postal address of PW4_100 must be determined, if he is willing to share that at all. If PW4_100 is only willing to provide an audio-visual testimony, the authorities in [REDACTED] must be willing and capable to support this. In any event, an official request for legal assistance must be granted.*

The taking of evidence in this trial will most likely be concluded at the beginning of December 2021, a summons of PW4_100 would therefore considerably delay the proceedings. One must calculate nine months for the summons, after which it still remains unlikely that PW4_100 would actually testify.

It is uncertain whether the [REDACTED] authorities would be willing to permit a request without any legal basis or regulations. The summons of PW4_100 would require a lot of time, be complex, and a success is unlikely

- cc. In an overall weighting, summons of PW_100 is not demanded in terms of judicial obligation to establish the truth. The summons will likely be unsuccessful, delay the trial, and the testimony will not deliver any new insights. The summon is therefore not demanded. The same can be said regarding an audio-visual testimony, through which the evidentiary value would be further limited due the Court being unable to immediately observe PW4_100's reactions and behavior.

Rejection of the Defense's request to summon Manaf Tlass [PW6 100] as a witness

- I) Manaf Tlass cannot be reached. The request is therefore rejected pursuant to § 244 (3) s. 3 no. 5 StPO. The postal address of Tlass in [REDACTED] is known to the Court. He could therefore be summoned. Nonetheless, the Judges know for sure that the former Brigadier General would not follow the summons. One of the Judges had contact with Tlass via e-mail regarding his willingness to testify in Court.
- Tlass first vividly told the court interpreter via phone that he would not appear as a witness and not testify in Court. He said he was not involved in anything relevant to the case and that he would not want to contribute anything to the trial which could be publicly perceived as incriminating or exculpatory for the defendant, because he would like to return to Syria one day. Upon request by Judge Wiedner, Tlass confirmed these statements, saying that he would not be willing to testify as a witness in this case. It was further stated that formal summons would be dangerous. Although a detailed explanation is missing in this regard, the Judges found that the simple informal summons was already not convincing.*
- II) The Court can further refrain from summoning Manaf Tlass pursuant to § 244(5) s. 2 StPO [rejection of a request to summons a witness abroad in case the testimony would not contribute to establishing the truth].
- The Defense's request merely states general facts. The fact that Hafez Makhoulf had a close relationship to Bashar Al-Assad given their family relation had already been proven. The same can be said for the request's general statements regarding Hafez Makhoulf's position within the Intelligence Services. Manaf Tlass further told the Judges that he could only provide general information and that he knew 'no person' and would like to have 'no connection' to this trial. The expected evidentiary value is therefore low and lacking willingness of the witness to testify, his summons is not demanded to establish the truth.*

Rejection of the Defense's request to summon [PW5 100] as a witness

- I) The witness cannot be reached. The request is therefore rejected pursuant to § 244 (3) s. 3 no. 5 StPO. The Defense's request merely stated PW5_100's name and that he is currently residing in [REDACTED]. Other measures to reach PW5_100 such as phone number or e-mail address as included in other requests are not detailed in this request. The Judges contacted the BKA and asked them to investigate PW5_100's current whereabouts. The BKA in turn contacted the Criminal Police in [REDACTED] on October 29, 2021. However, PW5_100's name is not contained in the residents register in [REDACTED]. The criminal police only found one person with the same last name. However, this person is an Algerian national who is currently not residing in [REDACTED]. It is therefore impossible that this person is PW5_100.

Rejection of the Defense's request to summon [PW2_97/PW2_100] as a witness

- I) The Defense's request does not state PW2_97/PW2_100's address or place of living. PW2_97/PW2_100's phone number was provided by a previous witness. The Defense filed a previous request on October 13, 2021 regarding the same witness. However, his place of living was only provided in the current request and the phone number was recently provided to the Court by another witness.

According to the request, PW2_97/PW2_100 was living in Damascus suburbs and acted as an intermediary between his town and Al-Khatib Branch. He is supposed to testify that one or two weeks after the beginning of the revolution, he met Anwar Raslan in Raslan's office. Further, PW2_97/PW2_100 supposedly knows that from March until summer 2011, Raslan released thirty to forty detainees every ten days. In order to do so, Raslan allegedly had to consult Tawfiq Younes and argue that these detainees were unarmed civilians and unlawfully arrested. PW2_97/PW2_100 is also supposed to testify that Abdel Na'saan took over Raslan's responsibilities and that Raslan was consequently no longer able to do much. Nonetheless, Raslan allegedly released a person called [REDACTED] who was released after two or three hours once PW2_97/PW2_100 contacted Raslan. [...] PW2_97/PW2_100 is also supposed to testify that he spoke with Raslan about the attacks on their respective hometowns, and that Raslan told him about his plans to defect, his critical position towards the regime, and his sympathy for the revolution. During this conversation Raslan allegedly also told PW2_97/PW2_100 how sad he was about the government attacks on his hometown that were carried out with heavy artillery.

The aim of the Defense's request is to find that Raslan had no decision-making and organizational power at Al-Khatib Branch and that he cannot be held liable for what went on at Branch 251 and the torture that happened there. The request argues that Raslan's attitude leads to conclusions about his work as an intelligence employee.

- II) It can be left unaddressed whether the request is actually a request to investigate, since a postal address to summon PW2_97/PW2_100 is not detailed and, in this case, must be investigated first. The request neither makes any claims as to PW2_97/PW2_100's willingness to testify as a witness in this trial. Efforts to investigate PW2_97/PW2_100's address must be assessed in light of §§ 244 (2), 244 (5) s. 2 StPO, according to which all evidence that contributes to establishing the truth must be taken into account. However, the required efforts to investigate PW2_97/PW2_100's address and to eventually summon him are not demanded with regard to the Court's obligation to establish the truth.

- a. The expected value of PW2_97/PW2_100's testimony is not very high, neither in terms of the question of guilt, nor in terms of legal consequences [sentencing].

aa. Defendant Anwar Raslan is accused of having been the Head of Investigations at Branch 251 between April 29, 2011 and December 7, 2012. His critical position [towards the Syrian government] does not affect this accusation and does not allow for conclusions about his activities as far as he did not critically evaluate his own activities at Branch 251 starting in 2011 and did not oppose the torture there. Intent or base motives do not play a role here [...] the evidence so far, as well as the defendant's own statements, rather point at a liability due to his superior position and the overall situation in Syria. He was aware of the reasons for the events happening in Syria at this time because the overall situation was already emerging during the time when Hafez Al-Assad was still in power. The overall picture rather indicates that Raslan overlooked his own doubts and put his work at Branch 251 and the aim of this work above.

The same can be said in terms of his plans to escape. One can merely find that his escape was foreseeable, however, it cannot be said whether there had been an actual opportunity to defect or not.

- bb. The release of certain detainees does not indicate a willingness on Raslan's side to oppose the regime. [...] it is therefore possible that Raslan initiated the release due to PW2_97/PW2_100's personal relation with him or because the release was scheduled anyway since the aim of the detention had already been achieved. In this regard, the Court notes that the aim of detentions included obtaining information, scaring the population, and intimidating opponents. Detainees were sometimes released after one of these aims had been achieved. It is further noted that Raslan had to get approval from Tawfiq Younes to release detainees and did not do so on his own. The early release of [REDACTED] seems to have been a favor rather than being motivated by altruistic motives. It is further not apparent how he would know the actual reasons for the releases and Raslan's own motives and internal workings at the Branch. The claims are rather based on assumptions and do not affect Raslan's work at Branch 251 and the treatment of other detainees at this Branch. The Defense's request is further limited regarding claims that were inaccessible for PW2_97/PW2_100: the circumstances under which the Head of Branch 251 was involved in detention issues. In addition, PW2_97/PW2_100 only heard about the change of powers at the Branch from Anwar Raslan himself. The correctness of these claims can barely be assessed.*
- b. Efforts to investigate the whereabouts of PW2_97/PW2_100 and to summon him are very high while the success of these efforts will probably be low. Since PW2_97/PW2_100 is living in [REDACTED], he can only be summoned through an official legal assistance request. While the Judges could indeed contact the witness via phone to investigate his address and ask him about his general willingness to testify as a witness, his summons would still require the official way through a legal assistance request, if PW2_97/PW2_100 was at all willing to testify.*
The Judges have information from the Ministry of Justice of Rhineland-Palatine that legal assistance requests with this country are generally difficult and require considerable time. A request from 2017 remained unanswered until this day, while a request for referral of a case file dated 2015 was only answered after one year. Another request from 2011 was taken back after six months since it could no longer be considered in the relevant proceedings.
An agreement regulating audio-visual testimonies is nonexistent between Germany and this country. The German embassy in [REDACTED] told the Judges that legal assistance requests with this country are generally difficult, particularly regarding the delivery of summons. According to their experience, the quickest requests took four to six months, however, one should usually calculate at least one year or more, while an answer is not guaranteed. Requests for legal assistance are particularly difficult in cases with a critical political or intelligence background due to the veto right of the [REDACTED] Intelligence Services that can block a request entirely. The Judges must calculate one year to summon PW2_97/PW2_100. Having him testify in court would take even longer, while the success of the summons remains questionable. At the same time, the taking of evidence in this trial will most likely be concluded at the beginning of December 2021.

- c. In an overall weighing, the summoning of PW2_97/PW2_100 is not required under the Court's duty to establish the truth due to the questionable success of a required legal assistance request which would most likely be unsuccessful. PW2_97/PW2_100's summoning and testimony would further considerably delay the trial while it would not provide new insights. The summoning is therefore not required.
- III) An attempt for audio-visual questioning is not demanded since the expected success is the same as with the general summons detailed above. It is further questionable if the [REDACTED] authorities have the required organizational and personnel capacities to conduct such a testimony. It would further lower the evidentiary value of PW2_97/PW2_100's testimony.

Rejection of the Defense's request to summon [PW3_97] as a witness

- I) PW3_97 is allegedly residing in [REDACTED] and is supposed to testify that he was detained at Al-Khatib for four days at an unspecified time. During his detention, Raslan allegedly treated PW3_97 well and facilitated his release. PW3_97 further supposedly knows that Raslan asked other employees at the Branch why they kept arresting innocent civilians. PW3_97's testimony is supposed to prove that Raslan had no decision-making and organizational power at the Branch and rather tried to help detainees. PW3_97 also supposedly knows that P31's parents brought him food to the Branch which P32 was allowed to eat at Raslan's office. PW3_97's testimony is aimed at questioning P31's credibility and convince the Court that the alleged violent attacks from Raslan against P31 are not credible.
- II) The Defense's request to summon PW3_97 must be rejected.
  - a. Regarding P31, the Defense's request is not a request to take evidence as it does not fulfill the criteria of § 244 (3) s. 1 StPO because it does not specify how PW3_97 is supposed to have the alleged knowledge.
    - aa. Regarding P31 allegedly eating food that his parents brought him in Raslan's office, it remains entirely unclear how PW3_97 knew about that. It is unclear how he was able to learn about that directly or indirectly. The request does not state whether he was detained at the Branch at the same time as P31 or not. It is also unlikely that P31's parents told PW3_97 about it.
The evidence taken so far rather indicates that the detainees were mainly in the prison at the basement and only taken upstairs for interrogations to rooms where they were individually tortured and mistreated. It is therefore unclear how PW3_97 obtained the relevant alleged knowledge. The request only states that PW3_97 knows P31, however, it remains unclear how he would have been able to witness the alleged scenery and recognize P31 in an office upstairs. It is also unlikely that PW3_97 made his own conclusions. In his testimony in Court, P31 provided detailed descriptions of Branch 251 as well as the distribution of food in the prison area. No other witness, apart from what he is supposed to testify, ever told the Court about a privilege to receive food in one of the offices upstairs. [...]
    - bb. The same can be said about PW3_97's perceptions of Anwar Raslan's comments regarding arrests of civilians. It remains unclear how PW3_97 is supposed to have heard that comment during the arrival of new detainees. The evidence taken so far indicates that new detainees arrived at the yard while the detainees were in the underground prison of close-by buildings.
    - cc. PW3_97's insights therefore remain unclear and do not demand his summons.

- b. As far as the Defense's request claims that PW3_97 is able to testify about his own detention and in relation to Anwar Raslan, it is irrelevant whether the request is considered to be a request to take evidence pursuant to § 244 (3) s. 1 StPO, since it must be assessed in accordance with § 244 (5) s. 2 StPO. However, according to that, the expected evidentiary value of PW3_97 is so low that his summons is not demanded. The description of the requested evidence is weak, and it is not detailed whether PW3_97 was detained during the indictment period or not. The reasons for PW3_97's detention and release are unclear as well, so is Anwar Raslan's alleged involvement in this matter. [...] The 'good treatment' is not further specified in the request. Overall, the request is not a sufficient foundation to assume that PW3_97 would provide additional insights regarding the treatment of detainees by Anwar Raslan. Although summons of witnesses living in [REDACTED] are relatively uncomplicated, the expected evidentiary value is without reasonable relation to the delay that the summons would still cause. In addition, PW3_97's appearance in Court is not granted.
- c. The request is also rejected with regard to other evidentiary claims pursuant to § 244 (5) s. 2 StPO. Regarding these other claims, the request does not provide any sources of PW3_97's alleged knowledge which further seems unlikely. It is therefore not demanded to make further assessments.

Rejection of the Defense's request to summon Ahmad Al-Jarba [PW1_97] as a witness

- I) The Defense's request does not state PW1_97's address, however, the phone number that was given to the Judges indicates an [REDACTED] country code, the country that was also stated in the request. The request further stated that PW1_97 was willing to provide his testimony via phone. PW1_97 supposedly knows that Anwar Raslan was working at Branch 285 between 1996 and 1998, at the time when Hafez Al-Assad was still in power. PW1_97 is also supposed to testify that Anwar Raslan treated PW1_97's brother well during his detention. PW1_97 further allegedly learned from his brother that Anwar Raslan was the one who facilitated their release back then, arguing that there was allegedly no evidence against them. PW1_97 is also supposed to testify about Raslan's activities for the Syrian National Coalition between June 2013 and June 2014, and that Raslan was standing alongside the opposition, opposing the regime, and working with the opposition. The defense's request lists several of Raslan's alleged activities for the opposition: distributing passports, creating black-and-white lists, and unveiling the activities of certain journalists.
- II) It is left open whether the request is a request to take evidence or a request to investigate evidence. An assessment in favor of the latter conclusion is supported by the fact that the request does not provide PW1_97's place of residence and that his address is unknown and must be investigated first. It is also unclear whether PW1_97 is willing to testify at all. Even if one was to consider the request a proper request according to § 244 (2) StPO, it would still be overruled pursuant to § 244 (5) s. 2 StPO which says that the summons of a witness abroad can be rejected in case the Court finds after careful consideration that the testimony of the witness is not necessary to establish the truth.
  - a. The expected value of PW1_97's testimony regarding the question of guilt in this trial is low. Regarding the question of legal consequences [sentencing] the expected value of PW1_97's testimony is not high.
    - aa. The request is irrelevant regarding the release and treatment of PW1_97 by Anwar Raslan since this happened eleven to thirteen years before the indictment period, at a different branch, within a different political framework during the time of Hafez Al-Assad, and before the escalation of the revolution and repressive measures.

It is further unclear if the treatment happened according to official duty since it is known that sometimes, prominent people like PW1_97 received different treatment during their detention and did not experience the same violence as other detainees.

- bb. The same can be said for Anwar Raslan's activities for the opposition. The Judges are familiar with the fact that Anwar Raslan was active with the opposition in 2013 and 2014, this was already mentioned in court. Regarding precise activities as claimed in the request, efforts to summon PW1_97's are not justified as these claims do not provide particularly valuable insights. For example, it is unknown what precise impact the above-mentioned lists actually made. The Judges acknowledge that PW1_97 might be able to provide more detailed information regarding Anwar Raslan's activities for the opposition, however, this happened after the charged acts and therefore has only limited effect on this trial. PW1_97's willingness to testify is also questionable.*
- b. The Defense's request would require official summons of PW1_97 in [REDACTED] by a legal assistance request which must be issued through diplomatic channels. While the Judges could indeed contact the witness via phone to investigate his address and ask him about his general willingness to testify as a witness, his summoning would still be required through official channels via a legal assistance request, if PW1_97 was at all willing to testify. An informal questioning of PW1_97 would violate [REDACTED] sovereignty.*

The Judges have information from the Ministry of Justice of Rhineland-Palatine that legal assistance requests with this country are generally difficult and require considerable time. A request from 2017 remained unanswered until this day, while a request for referral of a case file dated 2015 was only answered after one year. Another request from 2011 was taken back after six months since it could no longer be considered in the relevant proceedings. An agreement regulating audio-visual testimonies is not existent between Germany and this country. The German embassy in [REDACTED] told the Judges that legal assistance requests with this country are generally difficult, particularly regarding the delivery of summons. According to their experience, the quickest requests took four to six months, however, one should usually calculate at least one year or more, while an answer is not guaranteed. Requests for legal assistance are particularly difficult in cases with a critical political or intelligence background due to the veto right of the [REDACTED] Intelligence Services that can block a request entirely. The Judges must calculate one year to summon PW1_97. Having him testify in court would take even longer, while the success of the summons remains questionable. At the same time, the taking of evidence in this trial will most likely be concluded at the beginning of December 2021.

- c. Considering all aspects, it is not required to summon PW1_97 in order to establish the truth. The success of the summons as well as PW1_97's willingness to testify remain questionable. Considering that it would delay the proceedings and not add new insights, the request to summon PW1_97 must be rejected.*
- III) An attempt to have PW1_97 testify via audio-visual questioning is not demanded for the same reasons. It is further questionable if the [REDACTED] authorities have the required organizational and personnel capacities to conduct such a testimony. It would further lower the evidentiary value of PW1_97's testimony.*

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that another request by the Defense to take an additional expert report was pending and would be decided soon.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:03AM.

The Trial will resume on December 1, 2021 at 9:30AM

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 54
Hearing Dates: December 1 & 2, 2021

Day 105 – December 1, 2021

P58, a 33-year-old Syrian testified about his detention at Branch 251, as well as Raslan's sympathy towards the Syrian opposition and Raslan's good treatment of P31. The Court previously rejected the Defense's request to hear P58 as a witness, arguing that he would not add relevant information. P58 then travelled to Koblenz on his own initiative and was allowed to testify in court. He was not able to answer questions by the party and provided an inconsistent and vague testimony.

The Judges then closed the period of taking evidence in the trial of Anwar Raslan and announced that the closing statements by all parties would follow.

Day 106 – December 2, 2021

The Prosecutors provided their closing statements, arguing that Raslan should be found guilty as an accomplice to crimes against humanity in relation to 4,000 cases of torture, 30 cases of murder, and sexual violence. Accordingly, they contended that Raslan should receive a life sentence. The Prosecutors also stated that Raslan was an accomplice to several underlying crimes against humanity, therefore, he should not be eligible for parole after serving 15 years [German law typically provides for a review of imprisonment after 15 years of the life sentence to determine whether the convicted person is eligible for parole.]. Finally, the Prosecutors expressed the importance of psychosocial support for all survivor witnesses and Germany's historic responsibility to prosecute core international crimes under universal jurisdiction.

Trial Day 105 – December 1, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:35AM with three spectators and three journalists in the audience. Two cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. The witness, P58, was in the public gallery. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer was the only Plaintiff Counsel present, Counsel Mohammed joined twenty minutes late and Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Oehmichen and Schulz joined during one of the breaks.

Administrative Matters

Presiding Judge Kerber said the witness called by Defense Counsel Fratzky was already in court, however, the Judges would first read pending decisions regarding previous requests by the Defense.

[The following are recreations of the Judges' decisions based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Judges' decision regarding the Defense's request to summon Gerhard Conrad as an expert

- I) According to the Defense's request, the proposed expert Gerhard Conrad is supposed to testify about the question of power structures within the Syrian intelligence services and Al-Khatib Branch, the role of Hafez Makhoulf as head of Division 40, and the relation between Sunni and Alawite members of the intelligence services. The Defense's request further states that Gerhard Conrad is a former high-ranking member of the German Foreign Intelligence Service, BND, and that the expert testimony of Laura Thurman was insufficient in terms of power structures. As alleged evidentiary fact, the request states that Anwar Raslan had no decision-making powers. Instead, Hafez Makhoulf was in control of the Branch and Raslan had no competencies to order torture or disobey torture orders from Alawite members of the intelligence services. The request describes that Raslan tried to help detainees wherever he could. The aim of the Defense's request is to state that the mistreatment that happened at Al-Khatib Branch cannot be attributed to Anwar Raslan.
- II) The Judges consider the defense's request to be a mere suggestion of evidence, but in light of § 244 (3) s. 1 StPO, is not a proper request to take evidence. The defense's request does not put forward any concrete facts that the proposed expert is supposed to evaluate. The request only describes general conditions at the intelligence services that the expert is supposed to testify about. The request therefore does not correspond with the requirements set out in § 244 (3) s. 1 StPO. The Judges further doubt that the descriptions in the request regarding Anwar Raslan's role and to general power structures are framed precisely enough. It is also unclear what exactly the proposed expert knows that could add new information in terms of Anwar Raslan's individual situation. One can doubt that the expert is able to have the relevant knowledge on the individual situation of one single intelligence employee. The relationship between Anwar Raslan and Hafez Makhoulf, in particular, was already determined and confirmed by previous witnesses. The system of the Syrian intelligence services is widely ramified with many Branches, making it questionable whether the expert has the relevant knowledge about one individual Branch at a certain point in time.

The proposed expert Gerhard Conrad worked for the BND office in Damascus from 1998 until 2002 and speaks Arabic. He then worked in Jerusalem on international intelligence issues. However, it is unclear how he is able to testify about the inner workings of another intelligence service by the time of 2011. It is also not apparent how any additional expert could have such relevant knowledge. The alleged evidentiary facts as laid out in the defense's request would be sufficient if the expert's testimony allowed for relevant conclusions. However, it remains unclear what general allegations the proposed expert is supposed to support.

The Judges therefore do not see the necessity to summon and hear Gerhard Conrad as an expert pursuant to the Court's obligation to establish the truth.
- III) The Defense's submission must also be rejected pursuant to § 244 (4) s. 1 StPO, if one would consider it to qualify as request to take evidence. Although the facts and circumstances at the heart of the request are not common knowledge, the Judges have the relevant knowledge nevertheless. The Judges know about the power structures and, in particular, Anwar Raslan's position and power through several experts and documents presented in Court. There are clan-like power structures at the top of the Syrian government and relevant agencies and intelligence services. This was confirmed by expert Laura Thurman, the expert report on Syrian intelligence services by the BND, as well as experts Al-Bunni, Mazen Darwish, and Christoph Reuter.

Witnesses P10, P21, P54, Al-Labwani, Riad Seif \(P13\) also provided the Court with insider knowledge about the power structures within the Syrian intelligence services in 2011 and 2012, the social structures and hierarchies, the influence of the Al-Assad family, and the effects of denominations on power and possible consequences of certain denominations. In terms of the individual relationship between Anwar Raslan and Hafez Makhoul, the Court also heard from the above-mentioned witnesses. In addition, former detainees who directly observed Anwar Raslan at the Branch testified about his position and role. Eyad Al-Gharib also provided comprehensive descriptions of Division 40. In addition, people close to Anwar Raslan told the Court about Raslan's position and role in the intelligence services and the Branch. The Judges can therefore determine for themselves if and to what extent Raslan was limited in his scope of action. No expert could have better expert knowledge in this regard or provide better detail knowledge.

Judge Kerber said that the Defense had an additional witness, however, the Court would need a relevant request to hear the witness. Defense Counsel Fratzky said the Defense referred to its request from October 13, 2021 (PW3_97). Defense Counsel Böcker added that the defense would not refer to para. II of this request, but to the fact that the witness is already present in court.

Testimony of P58

P58 was informed about his rights and duties as a witness. He provided his name and told the Court that he is 33 years old and works as a journalist. P58 currently resided in [REDACTED]. He denied being related to the Defendant by blood or marriage.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber first asked P58 to provide his ID or other proof of identity to allow the Court to assess his identity. P58 said he left his documents downstairs at the security gate. Judge Kerber told P58 to go and get his documents.

While the session was on a break, defense Counsel Böcker complained to the Judges that his client, Anwar Raslan, was treated rudely by the court guards and almost dragged into the courtroom. He asked the Judges to talk to the guards and to remind them that they treated Raslan well for the last year-and-a-half and that Raslan always behaved well. Judge Kerber explained that there was a new court guard and that she would talk to him about the issue.

P58 came back to the courtroom and handed a sheet of paper to the Judges. Judge Kerber asked him whether this piece of paper was his only proof of identity. P58 explained that he lost his wallet including all his identification cards, and that this piece of paper served as his proof of identification until he received new cards.

Presiding Judge Kerber summarized the French-language document, and asked P58 why the document would state that the department of [REDACTED] confirmed the loss of his wallet when P58 was allegedly living in [REDACTED]. P58 explained that this was the department in charge of his affairs. It was common in [REDACTED] that someone was responsible for the matters of political refugees.

Kerber asked who, where, what P58 was talking about. P58 said that he studied in [REDACTED] and now he lives in [REDACTED]. He requested the relevant papers in [REDACTED].

Kerber said she now understood what P58 meant and had no concerns about his identity. Defense Counsel Böcker added that [REDACTED] is right next to [REDACTED] anyway.

Kerber asked one of the court interpreters (who is also a sworn-in interpreter of the French language) to translate P58's document. According to the interpreter, the document states that P58 lost his identification card on October 8, 2021, and it was currently being renewed. The document was stamped by the authority in charge of adults based in [REDACTED].

Judge Kerber explained to P58 that the Court was told that he had once been detained at Branch 251. She asked him whether that was correct and what he could tell the Court about it. P58 said he was detained five times before the revolution. He was a member of the Association of Publicists and Journalists which was part of the Syrian state. P58 worked together with one of his cousins who had a high position within the Syrian state and P58 himself was employed in [REDACTED]. P58 said he is a friend of P31. He was friends with P31 and visited him in [REDACTED]. According to P58, he himself was an employee of the Syrian state and not a member of the opposition before the revolution. Since 2017 and he worked as a journalist who did documentaries and expert-journalism. Within Syria, he never had issues with the police or intelligence services. P58 said that "of course there was a dictatorship in Syria," but he is from a family that had always worked with the state.

On January [REDACTED] 2011, P58 visited P31. They met at P31's home and P58 was there together with a group of five journalists. P58 said he then accompanied P31 to a demonstration because he was worried about him. They went to a café together where they wanted to meet others. They went to the [REDACTED] café in Damascus, close to the Syrian parliament. P58 explained that at this time, he did not know anyone from the Syrian opposition, except for P31. At first, they were 30 people, then 15 people. According to P58, it was the first time he had been in such a situation. There were security forces everywhere and strict regulations to prevent anyone from protesting or doing a minute of silence in front of the parliament. "The guys" therefore decided to go to the Syriatel building instead. P58 added that the company was owned by one of Bashar Al-Assad's close relatives [Rami Makhlouf]. However, security forces came into the café and asked for everyone's IDs. The protestors stayed close to the Syriatel building for around five minutes before everyone went their own ways. P58 said that one patrol stopped him and P31's girlfriend [REDACTED], an artist, nearby [REDACTED] Cinema. P31's girlfriend was not physically harmed, but she was [nervous] and started crying. According to P58, "the guys" [who stopped them] were in contact with Colonel Anwar Raslan and were waiting for his orders. They then found P58's card stating that he was a member of the journalist association and started beating him. They only stopped the beatings after "Mister Colonel" arrived. They then put "us" in state-owned Volkswagen cars where P58 and P31's girlfriend had to wait for one hour. P58 told the Court that "people were in contact with other people" and that there were many phone calls during the one hour that he and P31's girlfriend had to wait in the car. During the last call, P58 heard someone saying "Sidi". After someone called and said he spoke with Anwar Raslan. P58 assumed that they were told to stop beating, but he had to wait in the car for one hour. They were then taken to Crime [State] Security Branch [P58 constantly said "Strafsicherheit" meaning Crime Security] in Damascus where they had to stay from 7PM to 10PM. P58 said he had to wait in a cell for one hour before he went to an officer, a captain at the "crime security." P58 had to wait for two more hours in this captain's office. The captain received a call and "we were served coffee and the captain apologized saying 'well, you know how the situation is these days.'"

P58 told the Court that he was very familiar with the hierarchies within the Syrian regime. At the demonstration [where P58 was arrested] the intelligence services were not overly aggressive, they just wanted to get information. P58 said at 10PM, there were other journalists as well [at the Branch]: a TV journalist, [REDACTED], the journalist [REDACTED] from Al-Jazeera, the Al-Jazeera newspaper in Damascus, and P31. As P58 found out later, Anwar Raslan ordered their release. P58 said he learned that later when [REDACTED] was arrested.

That was the first time he heard the name Anwar Raslan. P58 went on to describe that on the next day [after their release] P31 and P58 went to [REDACTED]. P31 was afraid of check points on their way. When they arrived, P58 first went to his office where he found a letter - his notice of termination. P58 said this was when his life was turned upside down. These were all the details on how P58 first heard the name Anwar Raslan.

Judge Kerber asked whether P58 was detained another time at Branch 251 or if this was his only detention. P58 said this was the first time. It was at Crime Security, not at Branch 251.

Judge Kerber asked P58 what he meant by Crime Security. P58 said it was the normal police "that was in charge."

Kerber concluded that everything that P58 just described happened at a regular police station. P58 said "we" were arrested by Crime Security and were held on the street from 4PM to 6:30PM. When they were moved, P58 asked where they were, and he was told that the people were from Crime Security.

Kerber asked P58 whether he was detained at Branch 251. P58 said "of course." It was his fifth and last detention before he left Syria. P58 said he was detained at Palestine Branch for 37 days.

Kerber warned P58 that he could not continue his testimony like that. She said that she did understand his excitement, but he had to wait for the court interpreter to translate what he was saying. Kerber asked P58 to testify one sentence after the other. P58 said "okay."

Kerber recalled that P58 was detained at Palestine Branch and affirmed that he had been detained at Branch 251. She wanted to know when he was detained at the latter Branch. P58 recalled that on March [REDACTED] 2012, he was released from State Security Court. He was at P31's house in [REDACTED] when on March [REDACTED] 2012, officials came into the house and arrested P58 and a friend of his. From there, "we" were taken to Branch 251 on Baghdad Street.

Kerber wanted to know who P58 meant by "we". P58 asked if Kerber wanted to know names.

Kerber affirmed. P58 said [REDACTED].

Kerber asked if P31 was with them. P58 denied, saying P31 was not in Syria at that time.

The court interpreter, interpreting P58's testimony from Arabic to German, told the Court that due to P58's speech defect, he had difficulties understanding P58 and therefore had to frequently consult him for follow up questions.

Judge Kerber summarized that P31 was not present at P58's arrest which he had just described in Court. She asked P58 what happened next and whether he was taken to Branch 251 or not. P58 explained that he was arrested but was not beaten. He arrived at the Branch at 7:30PM. When he arrived at the Branch, he read a sign on a door saying "Head of Investigations." They were five friends, students from the faculty of fine arts, and friends of P31. P58 said it was very loud and Colonel Anwar Raslan asked what was going on and if they brought him the entire faculty of fine arts. According to P58, no one was beaten. P58 said it was important for him to tell the Court that his worst experience was his detention at the Military Intelligence Service where he was detained for 37 days. He was detained with the intelligence in Deir ez-Zor...

Presiding Judge Kerber interrupted P58, telling him that she wants to know when and for how long he was detained at Branch 251. P58 said he wanted to mention the second point to provide a comparison.

Kerber concluded that P58 was arrested on March [REDACTED] 2012 and was treated well. Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying P58 did not say that he was treated well. Kerber said that was what she understood, and she therefore wanted to ask P58 about it. P58 denied [being treated well], adding that he and the five friends were detained at a community cell which was around 15-sqm with more than 50 detainees inside. There was torture...[P58 paused]

Kerber asked P58 to try and remember because the Court needs to know what happened. P58 said it stressed him [to speak on the subject].

Kerber said she would then try to make it less painful for P58 by first asking him how long he was detained at Branch 251. P58 said he was detained from 7PM until 10AM the next morning.

Kerber asked if P58 was consequently released on March [REDACTED] 2012. P58 described that guards took him to Anwar Raslan's office in the morning. P58 directly addressed Raslan in Court saying "you might not remember me because I looked different back then." However, Anwar Raslan was friendly as P58 said he had to admit. P58 said Raslan spoke with him and told him there was nothing against P58 and the others, and that they would be allowed to go home. But when P58 left Raslan's office, there was a Warrant Officer 1st Class who was very annoyed. He came behind "us" and told "us" that he would have burned "us" if he was in the place of the Colonel.

P58 added that what he experienced inside the cell was surprising compared to his detention at the Air Force Intelligence and the Military Security. Detainees were indeed beaten, however, they were not treated like the detainees at the Air Force Intelligence. P58 said there [Branch 251] was a different kind of treatment by the guards. It was different from the Air Force Intelligence, even in terms of certain freedoms. P58 described that the detainees were allowed to use the toilet [at Branch 251], contrary to the Air Force Intelligence where they only were allowed to use the toilet after they received three meals in a row. P58 concluded that the treatment was not nice [at Branch 251] but it was not so brutal either.

After pausing for a second, Judge Kerber asked P58 whether he knew anything about P31's detention. P58 said "yes exactly," and explained that he grew up at P31's house and was responsible for the campaign demanding P31's release. P58 said this was one reason for him to leave [Syria]. He recalled that when P31 was detained at Branch 251, P31's father made a phone call to [REDACTED] [Doctor]. This person was close to the regime and had good contacts with P31's father. P58 told the Court that when one is detained with the intelligence services, one cannot be visited. P31's parents were "hysterical." The Doctor knew a Colonel. P58 said he later learned from P31's father that [the colonel was] Colonel Raslan. P31's father heard from the Doctor that Anwar Raslan is a nice person. P31's mother was then allowed to visit P31 at Al-Khatib Branch. P58 said P31's parents were allowed to visit him at the Branch. This was the first time something like that happened. It happened in the office of Colonel Anwar Raslan. P58 added that P31's favorite food was Kebab, so his parents brought him Kebab to the Branch. The Colonel calmed P31's parents down and they were relieved after the visit. When P31 was released, he returned to [REDACTED] where P58 welcomed him at the bus station. P58 said he could not see any signs of torture on P31, neither physical nor psychological.

Kerber wanted to know who told P58 about the visit to the Branch. P58 said, as he told the Court before, he grew up at P31's house. One could ask P31.

Kerber again asked who told P58 about the visit. P58 said he was always there, even when "they" spoke with the Doctor. One could ask P31 about it.

Kerber asked who told P58 about the visit; how he knew about the visit. She asked if it was correct that P58 was present during the talks with the Doctor. P58 said that when “they” went to Damascus, he was at P31’s house every day.

Kerber wanted to know when that happened. P58 said “to be precise” it must have been a month before April or May 2011.

Judge Kerber ordered a 15-minute break.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner said he had some questions about P58’s own detention at Branch 251. He asked P58 to tell the Court how he was arrested and what happened. P58 asked if Wiedner meant his detention at Branch 251. Wiedner affirmed. P58 said he was a colleague of Mazen Darwish from the journalist committee and he was responsible for the office in [REDACTED]. He also worked as a journalist.

Wiedner asked P58 to simply describe how he got to Branch 251. P58 explained that it looked like P31’s flat was under surveillance. P31 worked as a journalist.

Wiedner wanted to know when that happened. P58 said before Branch 251.

Wiedner said he was not referring to a place but a time. P58 asked Wiedner what time he was referring to.

Wiedner said he wanted to know at what time the incidents that P58 just described happened. P58 said he was at Branch 251 on March [REDACTED] 2012.

Wiedner asked what happened. P58 said that a big patrol stormed into the flat. They had two cars and took P58 with them. It happened at around 6PM. P58 had just left the court after he had been detained at Palestine Branch. The five friends did not have a criminal record, and no one was interrogated that night.

Wiedner asked P58 where they drove to, what happened, and how he was treated. P58 described that when he was arrested by the intelligence employees, the beatings were not “that massive.” These intelligence employees also took measures that others did not, for example P58 did not have to wear blindfolds and spent the night and the morning at a community cell.

Wiedner wanted to know where P58 was taken to by car. P58 explained that at 8AM, the Colonel requested to see P58 alone. P58 was served coffee and offered to smoke...

Wiedner interrupted P58, saying he did not answer the question. Wiedner asked P58 to describe where he was taken to by car after his arrest. Wiedner wanted to know whether it was correct that P58 was arrested. P58 said he was arrested in Damascus. He was taken from P31’s house in [REDACTED]. P58 said he was surprised that [REDACTED] interrogated him at the Military Intelligence Branch in Deir ez-Zor. P58 recalled that he was slapped on his ear and told that he would only be respected because of his cousin. However, P58 noticed that the Colonel [Anwar Raslan] was cultivated. They spoke about books.

Wiedner said he would now try to ask his questions differently and ask precise questions that P58 should answer. Wiedner wanted to know for how long P58 drove after he was arrested. P58 said he did not memorize the time, “why should [he]?” He was completely exhausted. P58 said when he was released...

Wiedner stopped P58 to talk about P58’s arrival at the Branch. He asked P58 to describe what the Branch looked like. P58 asked if Wiedner wanted a description of the building. He went on to describe that there was a big building, but he did not remember how many floors it had. There was also an adjoining building and a prison belonging to the Branch.

Wiedner recalled that P58 said it was Branch 251. He wanted to know how P58 knew that. P58 said he learned that when he left the Branch. “We” were told we could leave. According to P58, it would be commonly known that this Branch...Everyone in Syria knows about it.

Wiedner concluded that P58 knew about the Branch before his detention. P58 said before 2011 he had nothing to do with the police and intelligence services.

Wiedner asked P58 whether he knew the Branch. P58 said he knew where it was but had not been there before.

Wiedner wanted to know where the Branch was, since P58 said he was not blindfolded on the way to the Branch. P58 confirmed that he did not have to wear blindfolds.

Wiedner asked P58 to tell the Court where he was taken and what he could see. P58 said he was at the Military Intelligence Branch for a long time.

Wiedner said this was not what he meant. He was referring to Branch 251. P58 wanted to know what Wiedner’s question was.

Wiedner said he wanted to know where the Branch was and what it looked like when P58 arrived there. P58 said it would be some kind of....the streets were blocked with concrete blocks. Right after his arrival, he was taken to the Interrogation Division. This was the first time [he was interrogated]. P58 said that he saw a sign on the door saying ‘Head of Interrogations’. The head [of interrogations] was angry and asked the guards if they brought him the entire faculty of the fine arts.

Wiedner wanted to know where the Interrogation Division was located within the Branch. P58 said it was the floor next to the prison, but he did not remember which floor it was. There was no lift and they had to take the stairs to go upstairs. “They” asked “us” for personal information for 40 minutes. After 40 minutes, he was taken to a community cell, not a solitary cell. The cell was around 15-sqms with more than 50 detainees inside. P58 said he found that funny because it was different from other Branches. People asked him why he would laugh...40 minutes later, at around 8:30 PM he was taken to a community cell.

Wiedner asked if P58 was blindfolded. P58 denied, adding he already said that he was not blindfolded.

Wiedner recalled P58 saying “they asked us” and wanted to know to whom P58 was referring. P58 said “we” were first taken to a person whose rank he did not know. He then learned that it was Colonel Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner asked who P58 meant by “we”. P58 said he meant the five friends and himself. The friends did not have criminal records and were students at the faculty of fine arts in Damascus and also friends of P31. P58 said he could provide some of their names to the Court if needed. Some lived in the EU.

Wiedner asked if P58 was interrogated. P58 said he was questioned twice. The first time took around 40 minutes when he was asked for his personal information and “routine measures” were taken. At 8AM on the next morning, the friends were released and P58 had to stay at the Branch. One of the employees told P58 that they did know about his “evil doings.” P58 said this was when he was not afraid anymore because he knew that he had just been released from Palestine Branch. After the employees were done, P58 was taken to Colonel Anwar Raslan. The Colonel was cultivated and educated, unlike “normal” intelligence employees. P58 was served coffee and the Colonel sent his employees home.

Wiedner recalled that P58 was told that they knew about his activities. Wiedner added that it was unusual to be released after such a short time. He asked P58 how he could explain his timely release. P58 said it was the way in which Anwar Raslan treated people.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen said P58 did talk for a long time, however, the interpreter only said one sentence. Presiding Judge Kerber explained to Dr. Oehmichen that, before Dr. Oehmichen joined, Kerber already asked P58 to only talk for short periods, however, he did not do that. Kerber asked Dr. Oehmichen to excuse the interpreter for being unable to capture everything that P58 says. Dr. Oehmichen said she just wanted to ensure that the Court was not miss anything. The interpreter explained that whenever he asked P58 for clarification, P58 started mentioning new things. Kerber again asked P58 to use short sentences that the interpreter could remember correctly.

P58 explained that his release happened for two reasons: he had previously been detained and released by a court. He was arrested because he went outside the house and had no time until the Branch..... The interpreter apologized, saying that this was exactly what P58 just said.

Wiedner recalled P58 saying that Anwar Raslan was cultivated and educated. He wanted to know how P58 came to this conclusion and what the two of them spoke about. P58 explained that Raslan told him that “this” would not happen to him again and that he could go home. Raslan then asked P58 what he desired, what his goals were, and what P58 and the others demanded. P58 replied to Raslan that if the regime continued like that, there would never be a state. P58 told the Court that this conversation did not last longer than 15 minutes before they spoke about other things. Raslan also asked P58 if someone had beaten him. P58 concluded that this was all they spoke about.

Wiedner asked who else was present during this conversation. P58 said there was an employee, the Colonel and P58 himself.

Wiedner concluded that there were three people. P58 explained that the guard only took him to the door [of Raslan’s office] and then left. There were only two people during the conversation. P58 later learned that “he” [Anwar Raslan] was nice and that [REDACTED] had the same experience. P58 also learned that the relationship between [REDACTED] and the Colonel was amicable. “He” [Anwar Raslan] is educated and this was how he spoke with people.

Wiedner said they would now jump in time. He asked P58 whether he could tell the Court what P31 had been up to since 2011, what P31 did for a living, whether he was engaged in the opposition and why he was arrested. P58 started talking when Wiedner reminded him to only use a few sentences in a row. P58 said P31 was in charge of the coordination committee in Damascus.

Wiedner asked what precisely P31 did. P58 said P31 established contacts with satellite television agencies and helped journalists to get inside the country. P31 had contacts with people who equipped him with communication technology. In short, P31 was responsible for the coordination committee in Damascus.

The committee was a new invention by the opposition to fight against the regime for the “first three, four, three months.” P58 then moved to an area close to the government palace where he had a second flat. He was an active journalist who reported on the situation in Syria.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that P58 was released from 251 and asked him where the Branch was located. P58 said it is east of Baghdad Street.

Kerber wanted to know if there were any significant buildings close by. P58 explained that he did not grow up in this neighborhood, so he was not familiar with the area. However, he knew the Branch because it was commonly known.

Kerber wanted to know if anyone spoke with P58 about his testimony in court. P58 denied, adding that no one was influencing him. In 2018/2019 he authored a report for the Syrian Orient Channel. In Syria, 1,200 officers are responsible for the repression in Syria. If one was able to take all 1,250 of them to trial, one should sentence Anwar Raslan.

Kerber concluded that before this present day, no one spoke with P58 about his testimony. P58 said he is a well-known journalist and studied law. He is not open to any influences.

Kerber asked if Anwar Raslan’s family was in contact with P58. P58 said no, not at all. He would not know the family and was contacted by Raslan’s lawyer.

Kerber asked who paid for P58’s ticket to Koblenz. P58 said that he paid for it himself.

Kerber asked who paid the hotel bill. P58 said he paid for it himself.

Kerber wanted to know for how long P58 had been in Koblenz. P58 explained that he arrived at 2:30PM on the previous day and did not see anybody, until he met one of the Defense Counsels and the court interpreter earlier that day.

Kerber concluded that P58 paid all travel-related bills on his own. P58 said “of course” he did. He said that one would have been able to end his life, but the Colonel was nice, treated him well, was cultivated and educated.

Kerber said she would just leave it as that. Defense Counsel Böcker asked what exactly Kerber wanted to leave. Kerber said she was referring to P58’s statement that he paid for everything on his own and the travel-related descriptions he provided. Böcker replied that the Defense Counsels would be able to provide more precise statements in this regard, if needed, without providing any subject matter-related information. Kerber said the Defense could talk with its client if needed. Defense Counsel Fratzky explained that the receptionist at the hotel where P58 was staying told Fratzky in the morning that P58 made an advance payment but 46€ would still have to be paid. Fratzky said he could not provide information on P58’s train/bus tickets and did not know who paid them.

P58 was dismissed as a witness at 11:37AM.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said he wants to provide a “257 statement” [statement according to § 257 StPO] once the witness was dismissed. Scharmer said he could have asked P58 many more questions, but one should only ask questions if one assumes that the answers will provide clarity. There were so many contradictions within P58’s testimony, for example he did not mention the hospital opposite to Al-Khatib Branch at all. Which was the Branch where he was allegedly detained and not blindfolded upon his arrival. Scharmer said that P58 was not credible, and the Court heard about his motives to appear in Court. Scharmer concluded that this is all one has to say about this witness.

Defense Counsel Böcker replied with his own statement. He said in reply to his colleague's [Scharmer's] statement, he can only say that hearing this witness' testimony was as painful for him as the previous witness testimony [P57].

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to know whether the Defense planned on submitting more evidence requests. Defense Counsel Böcker said he and his colleague will think about that for a moment and might be able to provide more information on the matter in the course of the day.

Judge Kerber said there is a German language translation of a witness interview with the police that needs to be read out in Court. She noted that the defense previously objected to this read-out. Defense Counsel Böcker said the Defense had no more evidence requests to submit on this very day.

[The following is a recreation of the Judges' decision based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

Judges' decision regarding the read-out of a translation of a witness' police interview.

The police interview of [FR19] led by the French Police was partially translated into German. The translation relating to FR19's detention in Syria and his arrest will be read out in Court.

- I) FR19 indicated to the French Police as well as to the BKA in July 2019 that he is unwilling to provide a testimony in a German trial. In reply to his summoning by the Court on [REDACTED], he told the court that he is unwilling to testify in this trial. He declined witness protection offered through § 68 StPO. One must therefore assume that FR19 will not testify in this trial. Pursuant to § 251 (1) no.3 StPO, the German translation of FR19's French police interview will be read out in court.
- An audiovisual testimony of FR19 is impossible since FR19 is unwilling to testify at all. It is not necessary to summon the relevant police officer who led the interview since FR19's testimony is of no central importance to this trial and because the BKA officer who also interviewed FR19 already testified as well.*

Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying the defense needs five minutes to issue a statement replying to the Judges' decision. Judge Kerber explained that the defense's objection was already included in the minutes, but the Defense is allowed to again refer to its previous objection. Böcker said in this case, the defense refers to its previous objection.

[The following is a recreation of the transcript based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

German Translation of the transcript of the French Police's interview with FR19

[details on date, location, and authority]

FR19 was asked whether he was arrested by Syrian authorities or arrested from the streets. FR19 explained that he was twice detained in Syria. The first time was from [REDACTED], 2011 until [REDACTED] 2011 and the second time was from [REDACTED] 2012 until [REDACTED] 2012. On October 7, 2011 he was presented to the State Protection Court. Amongst others, he was accused of having incited religious hatred. However, since he had not done anything against the police, he was released on bail.

FR19 was then asked by the French Police whether he participated in the protests that started in March 2011 and that were suppressed. FR19 said since January 2011 he had been involved in gatherings related to the Arab Revolution. The gatherings took place in front of the embassies. In March 2011, the first demonstrations started and FR19 was a member of the organizational committee. He participated in demonstrations. At one demonstration, his friends were arrested, and he had to hide for twenty days. When he returned to his store afterwards, he was arrested there. FR19 was beaten throughout the entire drive [to the Branch]. He only learned at the first interrogation where he was. He was told to provide the names of his friends. From the very beginning, FR19 was exposed to beatings and torture. FR19 said he was forced to undress. He was constantly handcuffed and blindfolded. He was tortured with “Doulab”. He was beaten on his feet, so they started bleeding.

FR19 further told the French Police that he was detained in a solitary cell in the basement for two months. He was interrogated and tortured for fifteen days, “practically without any breaks.” FR19 then confessed what he was told to confess, and he had to sign a blank paper. He was then put in a cell where the air was very bad, and his inflammation was not treated. The cell was 1.7x1.1 meters, without any ventilation. The toilet was very dirty. Inside the cell it was very hot in August and very cold in October. FR19 was only wearing a ripped shirt and received food twice a day. The meals consisted of two olives and a piece of bread.

FR19 said he was detained in cell [REDACTED] and could hear what was happening around him. People were screaming and they were taken back [to the cells] from the interrogations. People came and left. In the cell next to FR19, a man called [REDACTED], was detained. After two months, FR19 was transferred to the central prison. He had difficulties with his fellow inmates, but Adra Prison was not as bad as the prison he had been before. The prisoners there were detained for committing sexual abuse of minors and other crimes. FR19 said he had to pay for the food at this prison. On [REDACTED]2011, he was released after a deposit and returned home to his wife and newborn son.

FR19 explained to the French Police that even after this detention he stayed militant and formed a group together with other people. They wanted to overthrow Bashar Al-Assad and participated in strikes. They also supported residents who lost their homes due to bombardment. FR19 said a child was killed in his neighborhood on [REDACTED], 2012. On this day, three men and two women had a meeting at a lawyer’s office where they were overpowered by officers. The officers searched FR19’s and the others’ phones and computers for thirty minutes and spoke with each other over the detainees’ heads. They were then taken to Division 40. FR19 explained that he cannot remember how he and the other men had been tortured. He only received beatings, while others received electric shocks. FR19 said they spoke about their experiences when they were able to and he himself might have been beaten less because he did not carry any items with him.

FR19 further described that he had to deal with a colonel, however, he does not know his name. The colonel asked FR19 personal questions. FR19 said there were 300 people [at the premises of Division 40] and the place was overcrowded. There were disabled people as well as children, and each day people were taken for interrogation from the community cell. FR19 and his three friends were not tortured. They had to sign a statement. FR19 said this was the reason why, after one month, he was transferred to Kafar Souseh. FR19 said this would, in his opinion, be the headquarters of the intelligence services. He said he was punished by a soldier and unable to see for ten days. He was detained in a double cell, however, there were more than two detainees. They were always handcuffed and had to face the walls. This was also the position in which they had to sleep. FR19 told the French Police that the guards were constantly watching them and then ordering them to wake up.

Meals consisted of a pot of burnt bulgur and some bread. They were only given two liters of water for all detainees to share. Once a day they were allowed to use the toilet for four seconds. FR19 said he had to experience this for 15 days. The others had to stay longer, for one or two months but he was released.

The French Police wanted to know who decided about FR19's arrest and release. FR19 explained that there was twice a man with a water pipe who provided information to the police.

The French Police asked whether someone was informed about FR19's whereabouts. FR19 denied, adding people were only informed about his whereabouts when he was at Adra Prison. However, his family was not allowed to visit him. [...]

The French Police wanted to know if FR19 remembered names of officers. FR19 denied. He told the French Police that people were given satirical names, but no real names were mentioned. Nor did he know who interrogated him. He only saw one face, but [...]

The French Police further wanted to know whether other people apart from him were tortured. FR19 said [torture] was systematic. The system existed ever since Hafez Al-Assad.

FR19 was then asked by the French Police what he knew about deaths, murders, and executions during his detention. FR19 said he did not see dead people during his detention. However, he heard that someone died at Palestine Branch. He also heard about someone who died at Al-Khatib Branch. People often suffered from inflamed wounds on their feet due to beatings. He also saw people who fell unconscious and then simply disappeared [from the cell]. Once, someone was beaten on his head with a metal pole and FR19 did not see this person again. He concluded that probably many people died due to the violence and the lack of hygiene.

The French Police wanted to know how and by whom FR19 was arrested. FR19 explained that in August 2011, officials from Political Security Branch entered his store to take him with them. They were ten people with several cars. The road was blocked. FR19 said the people were dressed in civil clothes. They entered his store, saw his tattoos, and simply took him with them. FR19 further described that these people carried pistols and wore different civil clothes. However, FR19 immediately knew "with whom he had to deal." FR19 added that his sister was there as well. FR19's phone was not there because his sister had taken it home. The people searched for the phone until FR19's sister gave it to them. FR19 said he was interrogated in the basement. He was blindfolded and the officers addressed each other with code names. They called each other "Sidi" and were formal in addressing each other.

FR19 added that the second time, in February 2012, he was at Division 40. The building was in Damascus. He was arrested at a lawyer's office. According to FR19, Division 40 was known for its brutality. He did not know where the Division was. He had been blindfolded since his arrest.

The French Police wanted to know how FR19's arrest took place. FR19 explained to the Police that during his first arrest he was taken to a building with a business car. He had to take the stairs down to the basement. The driver went fast and FR19 was sitting on the back seat. He stayed at this detention facility for two months before he was transferred to Adra Prison.

During his second detention, FR19 had to stay at Division 40 for 24 hours and was beaten before he was then transferred to Al-Khatib Branch, to State Security. There he also experienced violence for a month-and-a-half. FR19 further explained that Division 40 was located in Damascus and led by Hafez Makhoul. Before the revolution the Division was in charge of drug matters.

FR19 recalled that when he was in [Hafez Makhoul's] office, men told him they were at the boss' office. [Makhoul] insulted FR19. FR19 was then taken outside and transferred to Al-Khatib Branch, then Kafar Souseh for fifteen more days. He was then released and told that this better be his last arrest, the next time he would be dead. FR19 told the French Police that he does not know why he was released. At the central court, he had the right to consult a lawyer who told him to write everything down on paper.

The French Police asked FR19 about the detention conditions. FR19 described to the police that he was at the second or third floor at Division 40's building. There was no prison in the building. He was asked about his arrest. He had to go upstairs by foot since there was no lift. There was a small room and he had to go upstairs again. There was a sign at the wall saying "Division 40". He was asked several things, for example whom he helped. There was neither a toilet nor a shower. He had to stay there for 24 hours before he was taken to Al-Khatib Branch. He arrived at a "rather small room" where people were standing in a semicircle and people were tortured in the middle. According to FR19, the building had several floors with offices. And rooms were restructured to gain more space. FR19 said he could hear torture. He had to sleep together with 200 people, all of whom had to sleep while sitting. Others had to stand up for days and suffered the so-called "elephant man syndrome". They were given one plate of food for all of them. There was one water tap for all of them to use. FR19 recalled that at Kafar Souseh, the cell was very big with four detainees in it. FR19 was detained in the west wing of the building. He assumed it was the headquarters of State Security. FR19 went on to describe that he was in a small room, his hands were tied with a thin rope, and he had to face the wall. He was, however, not blindfolded. There were around 20 other people and a high fluctuation [of detainees]. FR19 said he was also tortured every day. He was taken to a different building where he was photographed. There were five or six people, two or three of whom were violent. There was a superior person and an assistant. The superior asked questions that were all connected to each other. FR19 added that he thinks that it was in a state building and Hafez Makhoul was wearing civilian clothes.

The French Police recalled that FR19 mentioned that guards came into the cells. FR19 denied, explaining that there were, however, "false detainee" and the people who started talking [inside the cells] were taken away.

The French Police wanted to know more about the torture methods that FR19 had to experience. They asked him about names or other things one can use in order to identify the torturers. FR19 told the French Police that, as he already told them before, he was not able to talk about it with others. He had issues with his kidney and his arm. According to FR19, there were several people from Sweida at Division 40. At this Division, FR19 did not hear or see anyone being tortured. At Al-Khatib Branch was a head of interrogations, Hafez from Sweida who also had an assistant. The one in charge was from Marjeh. One of the detainees told FR19 that he knew the father of this person [superior]. FR19 saw this person once. He was the boss of the Secret Police and wore a Christian crucifix around his neck. He also had an assistant. FR19 concluded that this was everything he knows. He added that he knows fellow detainees who are also living in France at the moment.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that there were two more documents with the Defendant's signature that needed to be read out in Court as German translation, in addition to two expert reports by the Max Planck Institute, as well as the Defendant's criminal record detailed in the German Federal Central Register.

[REDACTED]

Report on Criminal Liability for Torture, Deprivation of Liberty, and Sexual Violence under Syrian Law in 2011 and 2012

The experts note that they only found limited information. All information is compiled below.

1) Deprivation of Liberty

Punishments for deprivation of liberty:

§ 555 Syrian Penal Code	deprivation of liberty	6 months to 2 years imprisonment
§ 556 Syrian Penal Code	deprivation of liberty exceeding one month; deprivation of liberty in combination with torture; [committed against an official while he is performing his duties]	3 to 15 years forced labor

§ 357 Syrian Penal Code	deprivation of liberty performed by officials and administration, justice, military, or civilian officers	Same margin as above
§ 358 Syrian Penal Code	deprivation of liberty or prolongment of detention committed by prison directors or staff, or any other official exercising their powers without an official arrest warrant or judicial order	1 to 3 years imprisonment
	Hostage taking and related conduct was not punishable in 2011/12
§§ 559 – 562 Syrian Penal Code	threats to commit a felony e.g. threatening to kill someone, putting a gun against someone's head	low margin of punishment

2) Sexual Offences

Punishments for sexual offences:

	rape by penetration with the penis and under threat or force
§ 391 (1) Syrian Penal Code	more severe punishment in cases of extracting confessions under torture or coercion if committed by perpetrators are officials	up to 16 years forced labor
§§ 493 ff. Syrian Penal Code	Men and women can be victims of immoral acts. Acts are considered immoral when they cause shame, loss of dignity, or violate a person's chastity
§ 493 Syrian Penal Code	Using coercion or threats to commit an immoral act	At least 12 years forced labor
	Victim younger than fifteen years	At least 18 years forced labor
	Uncovering a woman's pubic bone and touching it with a limb, for example hands or destroying the hymen with something else than a

	penis is considered an immoral act/sexual violence under this paragraph. It cannot be ruled out that inserting a stick in someone's anus can be considered anal intercourse and subsumed under immoral acts as provided in this provision. However, there is no relevant jurisprudence on this matter An attempt to taking off someone else's trousers is considered immoral. However, it is unclear how pushing someone's head against one's lap is legally qualified.
§ 505 Syrian Penal Code	touching or fondling girls or women of any age or boys below the age of 15 in an immoral manner without their consent	up to 1.5 years imprisonment
	Causing shame is always implied by e.g. touching one's pubic area, coming into close bodily contact, or touching a woman's breast Incidents under §§ 493 and 505 Syrian Penal Code are differentiated depending on the pressure with which the hand touches the victim's body, the part of the body, as well as time and place of the offence. Touching a woman's breast is therefore punishable under § 493 and § 505 Syrian Penal Code

3) Prohibition of Torture

Prohibition of torture is included in both Syrian Constitutions:

Art. 28 (3) Syrian Constitution of 1973

Art. 53 (2) Syrian Constitution of 2012

The wording of the condition of 1973 defines torture as physical and psychological violence, while the constitution of 2012 only generally prohibits torture.

The Syrian Penal Code punishes torture with up to 3 years imprisonment. In cases where victims are injured or suffer disease from torture, the lowest punishment is 1.5 years imprisonment [1 year imprisonment if torture is used to extract confessions according to § 391 (2) Syrian Penal Code.].

ANNEX: German translation of excerpts of the Syrian Criminal Code and relevant Constitution articles:

§ 44 Syrian Penal Code	3 to 15 years forced labor in cases where the law does not specify the time of forced labor and merely provides for “temporary forced labor”
§ 247 (1) Syrian Penal Code	Defines more severe punishment in cases of § 246 Syrian Penal Code (repetition of a criminal act): death penalty instead of life imprisonment; 1/3 and ½ increase of sentence
§§ 340 Syrian Penal Code	Definition of the term “official”
§ 357 Syrian Penal Code	An official depriving another person of his/her liberty without legal grounds shall be sentenced to temporary forced labor [3 to 15 years]
§ 358 Syrian Penal Code	In case directors and guards of prisons, disciplinary institutes, or other corrective institutes, and all officials exercising their duties, accept a prisoner or imprison a person without a judicial warrant or judicial decision, or keep them in detention beyond the term specified by law, shall be punished with imprisonment from one to three years.
§ 381 (1) Syrian Penal Code	A person forcing another person to confess by the use of torture shall be sentenced to two months up to 3 years imprisonment
§ 381 (2) Syrian Penal Code	In case the victim suffers physical harm from torture, the sentence shall not be lower than 1 year imprisonment.
§ 492 (2) Syrian Penal Code	(Referring to § 492 (1) criminalizing intercourse by legal guardians with minors between the age of fifteen and eighteen years, and providing for punishment of nine years forced labor) same punishment in cases where the perpetrator is a religious representative, official, manager or employee at an official authority abusing his power derived from his position to commit the above crime.
§ 493 (1) Syrian Penal Code	Using coercion or threats to commit an immoral act shall be punished with at least 12 years of forced labor.
§ 493 (2) Syrian Penal Code	If the victim was younger than fifteen years, punishment shall be at least 18 years of forced labor
§ 497 Syrian Penal Code	Punishment for conduct provided in §§ 489, 493, 495 Syrian Penal Code is increased if the perpetrators is one of the persons listed in § 492 Syrian Penal Code
§ 505 Syrian Penal Code	Touching or stroking a minor or woman in an immoral way
§ 555 (1) Syrian Penal Code	Deprivation of liberty shall be punished by up to 2 years imprisonment.

§ 556 Syrian Penal Code valid in 2011	Deprivation of liberty that a) lasted more than one month; b) included physical or psychological torture; c) was committed against an official shall be punished with temporary forced labor
§ 556 Syrian Penal Code valid in 2012	Deprivation of liberty that 1) a) lasted more than one month; b) included the infliction of the physical or mental torture to the victim; c) was committed against an official, that 2) involved violence, death threats or ransom demands, shall be punished with 10 to 12 years of forced labor and fines, if committed against a juvenile
§§ 560, 561 and 562 Syrian Penal Code	Threats to commit a felony e.g. threatening to kill someone, putting a gun against someone's head entail a lower margin of punishment
Art. 28 (3) Syrian Constitution of 1973	Prohibition of torture
Art. 53 (2) Syrian Constitution of 2012	Prohibition of torture

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that since there were no requests to have the interpreters take an oath, the interpreters were dismissed as experts [regarding German, Arabic, and French translations].

The period to accept evidence in the trial of Anwar Raslan was closed at 1:22PM. Presiding Judge Kerber announced that there were no discussions of a plea bargain pursuant to § 257c StPO .

The proceedings were adjourned at 1:24PM

Trial Day 106 – December 2, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:32AM with seven spectators and seven journalists in the audience. Two cameramen took videos and pictures before the start of the trial day. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiff Counsel Reiger was not present, and Plaintiff Counsel Bahns joined ten minutes late. Defense Counsel Böcker was not present either.

Closing Statement – Prosecution

[Below is a summary of the Prosecutors' oral closing statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court. Direct quotes are marked with "" and additional observations are detailed in square brackets.]

Introduction

The Prosecutors started their oral closing statements with a quote from the Austrian-Jewish writer Jean Améry, who said that 'those who suffered torture can never feel at home.' The Prosecutors stated that they thought of this quote during the entire trial. They saw that what happened at the Syrian Intelligence Services scarred the survivors eternally, while all of them tried to find a way back. Nonetheless, none of them was able to feel at home again. The Prosecutors said everyone inside the courtroom could feel this. They added that victims should know that they are not alone with their suffering.

The Prosecutors went on to note that the fight against impunity would be a challenge for international criminal law and a historic responsibility for the Federal Republic of Germany. Nonetheless, prosecutions would be reliant on the victims. According to the Prosecutors, participating in prosecutions of international crimes in trials and investigations is extremely burdensome for all victims, and can even lead to re-traumatization. One must counteract that by anonymizing witnesses when necessary, and providing them with witness protection and counsels. According to the Prosecutors, these measures were frequently applied in the Koblenz Trial. Nonetheless, such measure could also oppose other rights.

The Prosecutors added that demands to record such trials are fatal, since recording can have severely negative impact on the willingness to testify of witnesses who are already scared. Everything that had been recorded will fall in the hands of the Syrian regime sooner or later, according to the Prosecutors. This would have negative consequences for future trials. The Prosecutors further added that such trials would have satisfactory function for many people and would help them to re-gain their dignity.

As one of the last introductory aspects, the Prosecutors stated their thanks to the Defense for its work, saying that although the Defense Counsels were very engaged, they refrained from asking uncomfortable or hurtful questions. According to the Prosecutors, such fair behavior was unfortunately not always the case in criminal trials.

The Prosecutors said they hope that at least some victims could feel at home again. According to the Prosecutors, the peaceful existence of all people would require trials like the one in Koblenz. They referred to the preamble of the ICC's Rome Statute which states that 'such grave crimes threaten the peace, security and well-being of the world, [and] that the most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole must not go unpunished and that their effective prosecution must be ensured by taking measures at the national level and by enhancing international cooperation.' The Prosecutors concluded that Germany and other states are called upon to prosecute such crimes where they would otherwise go unpunished. This would, however, only be the case for the most serious mass atrocities and not resemble a widening of individual legal assets. Only in cases where the international community as a whole would be affected, such [domestic] prosecutions [under universal jurisdiction] would be justified.

The Prosecutors stressed that in such [universal jurisdiction] prosecutions, the rule of law would be particularly relevant. It would be harmful if the judiciary would act as an "avenging angel." They quoted Benjamin Ferencz, the last living prosecutor from the Nuremberg Trials who said in his opening statement in Nuremberg that 'vengeance is not our goal, nor do we seek merely a just retribution. [...] The case we present is a plea of humanity to law.' According to the Prosecutors, the same was true for this present trial, which was all about the rule of law. One single person can never be seen as representative of an entire unlawful regime. Prejudgments are prohibited. What is rather necessary is the assessment of the Defendant's individual contribution to criminal acts through a differentiated analysis. The Prosecutors concluded that this was the challenge of international criminal law.

Before detailing the subject matter, the Prosecutors noted that they would only detail the Defendant's, Anwar Raslan's, curriculum vitae when it was necessary to do so in order to paint a picture of the overall situation in Syria and for sentencing purposes. In addition, they would only provide limited elaborations on the existence of the systematic and widespread attack in Syria, since the Judges already established that in their written judgment following the trial of Eyad Al-Gharib. Witnesses who were allowed to stay anonymous in Court will be referred to by the date on which they testified in Court, in case they were not anonymized at an earlier stage.

Subject Matter

Starting in early 2011, demonstrations and protests as part of Arab Spring took place in Syria as well. According to the Prosecutors, first acts of sympathy with other Arab countries started in Syria in February 2011, and from March 2011 on, Syrians started protesting against their own government. The government, however, immediately reacted by brutally dissolving demonstrations. The situation escalated quickly with the first people being killed by the government in Dara'a in March 2011. The Prosecutors recalled that the Syrian government quickly launched measures affecting the general population, and not only those who participated in peaceful protests, by erecting checkpoints and controlling hospitals. Nonetheless, protests continued to spread all over Syria.

In March 2011, the CCMC was founded, comprised of amongst others the heads and members of the four intelligence services. Its task was to give orders regarding brutal, bloody, and rapid suppression of demonstrations. According to the Prosecutors, the first military operations started in April 2011 in Dara'a where more than 200 people were killed by the regime. The same happened in Duma. The military then started attacking civil population in 'insurgent neighborhoods.' According to the Prosecutors, the Syrian Intelligence Services and the Military played a central role in the suppression of civil society. Thousands of civilians were injured and killed through the use of batons and live ammunition.

Many people were arrested and put in prisons where they had to endure inhumane conditions, were tortured and humiliated. The prosecutors stated that the system of torture was well established for decades, but the nature and frequency of torture increased with the start of the revolution. The prisons were bursting at the seams. Arrests and detention were not so much used to obtain information, but to break the opposition. According to the Prosecutors, it was a means to finish the opposition.

The Prosecutors further described that there was physical as well as psychological torture in prisons. Detainees had to endure massive violence, malnutrition, and overcrowded cells. According to the prosecutors, prison cells were “death cells.” Military hospitals were also integrated within this system. Since the beginning of the protests, military hospitals were used to torture people and turned into death facilities, according to the Prosecutors. Hospitals were often “the final destination” for detainees, in particular al-Mazzei Hospital 601, Tishreen Hospital 507, and Harasta Hospital. The Prosecutors said that soon, corpses from prisons were sent to these hospitals where they were photographed and cataloged before they were taken to mass graves. This was done to prove that these detainees actually died, so that no one could take bribes to allegedly facilitate the release of these detainees, and to ensure that no detainees were unofficially released by claiming that they died.

According to the Prosecutors, it was not only the General Intelligence Directorate also called State Security, but the Military Intelligence, Air Force Intelligence, and Political Security who played an important role in Syria. All of them were divided into Branches. Branch 251 of the General Intelligence Directorate was located in Al-Khatib neighborhood in Damascus, from which it also got its name ‘Al-Khatib Branch.’ According to the Prosecutors, this Branch was in charge of Damascus and its surrounding area. Branch 251 conducted many arrests and roadblocks, together with Division 40, which had its own building in Jisr al-Abyad. Division 40 was led by Hafez Makhoul, a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad. Although this Division was subordinate to Branch 251, it almost acted autocratically. The Division was in charge of raids, shattering demonstrations, and conducting controls at checkpoints. Since Division 40 did not have its own prison, it transferred its prisoners to Branch 251 and left them with the employees there. The Prosecutors further detailed that those arrests were always conducted according to the same scheme: they happened quickly like raids and were very brutal. Civilians were mistreated and arrested, those who fled were hunted down. People were packed into buses and cars and eventually taken to torture Branches.

The Prosecutors added that people who were arrested were never told any reasons for their arrest, neither did the arrests happen in accordance with criminal procedure. Relatives were not informed about the whereabouts of detainees. According to the Prosecutors, most detainees at Branch 251 could already imagine what would happen to them within the following days, weeks, or even months of their detention, from the moment when they entered the Branch. It was brutal and their fate was uncertain. The employees at the Branch wanted to never let the detainees rest at all. Upon their arrival, detainees received the so-called “welcome party” during which the guards wildly unleashed beatings on new detainees. They also sometimes hit the heads of detainees against a wall. The beating only stopped at the facilities downstairs, although not everyone survived the welcome party.

The Prosecutors recalled that in June 2011, one detainee was beaten so harshly by an employee of Branch 251 upon his arrival, that he died in the yard. Only in very few cases, detainees were only beaten for the first time at a later stage of their detention, and not upon arrival. Following the welcome party, new detainees had to undress downstairs and were frisked. They had to squat several times while naked. This procedure was called ‘safety move.’ The detainees then got their clothes back. Their personal items and shoe laces were, however, confiscated. During their detention, detainees had to undergo violent interrogations.

Obtaining information through forced confession only played a minor role. There was so much torture that often, interrogations simply happened without any useful questions. Usually at least one guard who humiliated and insulted detainees was present at each interrogation. The Prosecutors said that the torture methods such as Falaqa, Doulab, German Chair, and Shabeh probably existed for decades if not centuries. Electro shocks were also applied on a daily basis.

The Prosecutors added that at Branch 251, Al-Khatib Branch, detainees were constantly exposed to inhumane conditions. Medical treatment was mostly denied, even when it was necessary. Women, children, and elderly men were put in overcrowded cells where they could often only sleep while standing. There was no air conditioning inside the cells, so people regularly collapsed due to lacking oxygen. Food was often insufficient and simply inedible. Hygienic conditions were “catastrophic” as well with flees and lice dropping from the ceiling together with the condensed sweat of the detainees. Detainees were not allowed to wash and denied basic personal hygiene, leading to scabies and skin rashes. Detainees often had to urinate and defecate inside the cell. This led to an unbearable smell of urine and feces. In addition, detainees were constantly exposed to the screams of torture from other detainees. The prosecutors concluded that many detainees found it worse to be exposed to the screams of others than to be tortured themselves. They were constantly afraid to be the next person tortured. It was not a surprise that many detainees lost their mind in detention, said the Prosecutors. Detainees were further exposed to sexual violence, humiliation, threats to rape them or conduct other sexual assaults, as well as relevant threats against their close relatives.

The Prosecutors concluded that between April 29, 2011, when the systematic and widespread attack by the Syrian regime started, until December 7, 2012 when Anwar Raslan defected, at least 4,000 detainees at Branch 251 were exposed to brutal violence and living in constant fear for their lives. There was a realistic threat that they would not leave the Branch alive. Many detainees found this fear and the screams of other detainees worse than physical torture. According to the Prosecutors, the Judges therefore correctly qualified the mere detention at Al-Khatib Branch as torture in their written judgment in the trial of Eyad Al-Gharib.

The Prosecutors said that these conditions were described by many witnesses, amongst others plaintiffs: P1, P11, P12, P19, P25, P27, P28, P30, P41, P39, P38, P34, P32, P22, P50, P48, P47, P46, P44, P42.

The Prosecutors provided a brief summary of every plaintiff’s testimony, detailing: when, where and how they were arrested; for how long they were detained at Branch 251 and other places if applicable, what they had to endure during detention at Branch 251; how this still affects them today. For summaries of each plaintiff’s testimony, visit [SJAC’s trial monitoring website which also provides links to each witness’s detailed in-court testimony]

The Prosecutors concluded that during the indictment period [4/29/2011 - 12/07/2012], at least thirty people died from mistreatment at Al-Khatib Branch.

The Defendant

The Prosecutors went on to sketch the Defendant’s curriculum vitae:

- After his high school diploma, Anwar Raslan started studying law at the university in Damascus.
- In 1984, he applied to the Syrian police, where he started working in 1986. The Prosecutors added that in the 1980’s, the opposition in Syria was massively oppressed by Hafez Al-Assad. After the Massacre in Hama on February 2, 1982, the prisons were overcrowded and the conditions there were very similar to the conditions after 2011.

- In 1987, after his professional training, Anwar Raslan worked as a police officer in Aleppo, Al-Hasakah, and Tartous. He also completed his law studies.
- In 1992, Anwar Raslan completed his training as a police officer and graduated second best in his class. After that, he worked as an instructor at the police academy for a year and a half.
- In 1995, when he was 32 years old, Anwar Raslan was promoted to the General Intelligence Directorate due to his outstanding performances. For a year and a half, he worked at Branch 251, doing patrols.
- He then became an investigation officer and was transferred to Branch 285 in Kafar Souseh.
- On August 9, 2008, he held the rank of a lieutenant colonel and was transferred back to Branch 251 where he headed the Investigation Division.
- On January 1, 2011, Anwar Raslan was promoted to the rank of colonel.
- Anwar Raslan had an office on the first floor of the building of Branch 251 in Al-Khatib neighborhood in Damascus. The interrogation offices were located on the ground floor and the prison was located in the basement where Anwar Raslan had a second office. The Interrogation Division was comprised of 30 – 40 employees, amongst others 6 – 7 interrogation officers, minute-takers, guards and other prison officers.
- On September 9, 2012, Anwar Raslan was transferred back to Branch 285 where he kept working until December 2012.
- On December 7, 2012, Anwar Raslan had his last day of work before he left Syria.

During the indictment period [4/29/2011 - 12/07/2012], Anwar Raslan oversaw killings, torture, deprivation of liberty, and sexual assaults, according to the Prosecutors. They detailed that Raslan was responsible for the prison where people were tortured and detained. The Branch was organized by clear hierarchies and a military structure. Raslan therefore had direct command over the interrogation officers. He was also the direct supervisor of the guards. According to the Prosecutors, Raslan was in charge of making shift schedules and employees had to follow his orders. In terms of orders, the Prosecutors detailed that individual orders to torture someone were unnecessary since there was a “well-functioning system of torture” already in place. Everyone knew about the torture and explicit permission was unnecessary. Explicit orders [to torture] were only given in cases where people should not be brutally mistreated and tortured. Anwar Raslan himself attended some interrogations, according to the Prosecutors. However, as a colonel and head of the Interrogation Division, “he did not get his hands dirty himself.” That was what he had his employees for. Nonetheless, Raslan always knew about the extent of killing, torture, deprivation of liberty and sexual assaults. As head of the Interrogation Division, he was aware of it and recklessly accepted it. According to the Prosecutors, after March 2011 Raslan did not agree with torture in individual instances, however, only because it hindered his work as an investigator. It did not prevent him from continuing his work at the Branch.

Evaluation of Evidence

Alleged Deprivation of Power

During the trial, the Court heard from the expert Laura Thurmman and Prof. Dr. Markus Rothschild who inspected documents. It heard many witnesses’ testimonies, and heard a defense plea by the Defendant. According to the Prosecutors, Raslan’s defense plea essentially argued that he started working as a police officer in the mid 1980s and was allocated to State Security in 1995.

After some transfers, he worked at Branch 285 and, starting in 2008, he worked at Branch 251 where he was the head of the Interrogation Division. The Prosecutors said that Raslan further argued that from March 15, 2011 on, chaos erupted in Syria and the 4th Division led by Maher Al-Assad and the Republican Guard worked together to suppress this chaos. The Prosecutors further argued that Raslan said that particularly the Republican Guard shared the area of responsibility with Branch 251. Many detainees who were arrested by the Republican Guard showed bone fractures and other injuries. According to Raslan's defense plea, the number of detainees at the Branch rose from 250 to more than 1,000 from March 15, 2011 on. Leading to overcrowded prison cells. The Prosecutors further recalled that Raslan argued that this [overcrowded prison] was, however, the responsibility of the Head of Branch 251, Tawfiq Younes, to whom Raslan complained about the conditions. Colonel Anwar Raslan instead wanted to verify arrests by checking arrest warrants and release all detainees whose names did not appear on relevant lists. Raslan complained twice with Tawfiq Younes, according to his defense plea. However, at the second complaint, Younes replied that Raslan should not raise the issue again. The Prosecutors recalled that Raslan also told the Court in his defense plea that at the beginning of April 2011, Tawfiq Younes mentioned to Raslan that people in Houla, Raslan's hometown, were demonstrating against the government. Raslan understood this notice as a direct threat and made the decision to defect.

Raslan also alleged that between March and June 2011, he helped as many detainees as he could. Amongst other orders, he allegedly ordered to release all unarmed detainees, which was partly done. This was one of the reasons why the Republican Guard filed a complaint against Raslan with Tawfiq Younes. According to Raslan's defense plea, this was the reason why competencies at the Branch were restructured and why Tawfiq Younes deprived Raslan of his competencies and made Major An-Na'saan and Division 40 his superiors. Raslan was then only in charge of reporting to the head of the Branch but not officially degraded. According to Raslan, he was even told to continue regularly visiting the prison to cover up for the actual aim which was to establish a state within a state. From June 2011 Raslan was no longer allowed to conduct interrogations until he was transferred to Branch 285, according to his defense plea which the Prosecutors continued summarizing. However, up until the time of his transfer, he heard that many detainees were taken to hospitals like the Red Crescent Hospital and the hospital in Harasta. He could also hear people screaming when he was in his office, and was told that violence was indeed used during interrogations. Contrary to what several witnesses described, Raslan alleged that there were no mechanism on the walls or ceilings to expose detainees to Shabeh.

The Prosecutors also recalled that Raslan told the Court in his defense plea that he had tried to organize his defection with the FSA since Mid-2011, however, he did not want to leave without his family. He also stated that at the end of November 2011, he refused to take new detainees during a night shift because their names did not appear on any wanted list. According to Raslan, this was the reason why investigations were conducted against him and why he was eventually imprisoned for twenty days on probation and then transferred to work at Branch 285. He further alleged that he was being intensively monitored until September 9, 2012. However, the controls at Branch 285 were rather relaxed and he was eventually able to organize his defection and escape in December 2012.

After recalling Raslan's defense plea, the Prosecutors stated that Raslan was the Head of the Interrogation Division at Branch 251 since 2008. Starting with the protests in 2011, massive arrests were conducted and during Raslan's work at the Branch, people were mistreated, and the prison was overcrowded five times. According to the Prosecutors, Raslan admitted that he regularly went to the prison facilities and did not deny that people died.

He rather said in a statement about deaths in March 2012 that according to his knowledge, there were no cases of death in this month. The Prosecutors concluded that by saying so, Raslan admitted that people indeed died at the Branch at other times.

[...] The Prosecutors further called Raslan's statement that he was deprived of all competencies in June 2011 a mere "evasive defense." According to the Prosecutors, this characterization was supported by the fact that until Raslan made the relevant defense plea in which he claimed to have been deprived of all his competencies, he never claimed anything like that before. Although Raslan had enough chances, for example when writing his CV, or during several police questions with the LKA and BKA, he never claimed to have been deprived of competencies due to his critical position towards the regime in June 2011. However, it would have been obvious for Raslan to address such an instance when writing his CV or during the police questionings, since all that focused on his role within the Syrian intelligence services. According to the prosecutors, Raslan himself stated that he was a well-acknowledged person, even after his transfer to Branch 285, given the request to summon P56. The request, as well as P56's testimony in Court, states that Raslan was a member of a committee of the Ministry of Interior which was composed of one brigadier general from each intelligence directorate, and had Raslan as the representative of the General Intelligence Directorate. The Prosecutors said it would be "ridiculous" to make Raslan a member of such an important committee if he was deprived of his powers at that time.

The Prosecutors further argued that it would "make no sense" to deprive someone of his power and at the same time let him remain in his position for the public image. It would be "against all logic" to create the public image that a person remains in power although he mistrusts the "unjust regime". According to the prosecutors, such a person would rather be fired, detained, or forcibly transferred to another position. This procedure was also confirmed by P10, a high-ranking officer at the General Intelligence Directorate who said that suspicious officers would have either been detained by Branch 285 themselves or transferred to remote positions. P55 who worked at Branch 285 himself also confirmed this procedure. The Prosecutors said that another fact against Raslan's alleged deprivation of power would be his transfer as a colonel from a general Branch to a Branch that was specialized in interrogations. At the new Branch, Raslan continued to enjoy many privileges. His transfer was consequently no degradation. According to the Prosecutors it would also be "nonsensical" to deprive a mistrusted officer of his competencies just to leave him without observation at a new Branch. In addition, the Prosecutors argued that Raslan contradicted himself in his defense pleas by saying that he was deprived of all power by June 2011 and at the same time claiming that he helped countless detainees at a later time. The Prosecutors concluded that one would either be powerless and unable to release anyone or powerful and able to release detainees. Being both powerless and able to release detainees would "logically be impossible."

The Prosecutors went on to argue that a number of witnesses credibly confirmed that Anwar Raslan kept his powerful position after June 2011 and exercised his power. P5 who worked as a guard outside Al-Khatib Branch's building testified on positions, functions, and power within the Branch. As part of his work, P5 regularly entered Branch 251 where everyone knew that Colonel Anwar Raslan was the Head of the Interrogation Division and in charge of the prison, according to P5. Anwar Raslan conducted important interrogations himself and in 2011 came to the yard during one of the welcome parties, as P5 told the Court. During the welcome party, Raslan told the guards to stop beating the new detainees because they could otherwise not be interrogated properly. According to P5, the guards stopped the beatings, a definite sign of Raslan's authority, as the Prosecutors concluded. In addition, Anwar Raslan was regularly seen at Al-Khatib Branch until August 2012, and it was witnessed how he gave orders during this time.

Even the former co-defendant Eyad Al-Gharib who was a member of Division 40 and had considerable insider knowledge, told the German police on August 16, 2018 that Anwar Raslan was the Head of the Interrogation Division at Branch 251 until January 2012 when Al-Gharib himself defected. According to Al-Gharib, Raslan had an office on the first floor [EN: second floor] above the prison which was located in the basement and belonged to the Interrogation Division. Al-Gharib further detailed that the Interrogation Division was comprised of 6 – 7 investigators and 30 – 40 other employees, such as minute-takers, archivists, and prison guards. Raslan was also superior to the prison director at Branch 251. Due to his professionalism, Raslan was also sometimes called to Branch 285 to step in as an interrogator, due to his experience. The Prosecutors recalled that this information was introduced in Court by Criminal Chief Investigator Deußing on May 27, 2020. And although parts of Al-Gharib's testimony with the police could not be used in his trial, his entire testimony can be used against Anwar Raslan according to permanent jurisdiction by the German Federal Court of Justice [Rechtskreistheorie]. According to the Prosecutors, Al-Gharib's entire testimony with the police was credible and can therefore be used in its entirety in the trial of Anwar Raslan. The Prosecutors stated that Al-Gharib had no reason to unjustly incriminate Anwar Raslan at the time of his police questioning, because he neither knew about Raslan's presence in Germany, nor about the investigations against Raslan. Eyad Al-Gharib who was a warrant officer at Division 40 and therefore regularly visited Branch 251 did not talk about Raslan's alleged deprivation of power, simply because there was no such thing, according to the Prosecutors.

The Prosecutors further recalled the situation when P18 recognized and identified Anwar Raslan in court on the day of his testimony. In June 2011, P18 was looking for his cousin, [REDACTED]. After the family paid bribes, they were allowed to meet Colonel Anwar Raslan at Al-Khatib Branch to ask him about the whereabouts of P18's cousin, because others previously told the family that P18's cousin would likely be detained at Branch 251 after he was arrested. According to the Prosecutors, Anwar Raslan made it clear who was in charge during P18's "audience" with him. P18 first had to wait in front of the office for fifteen minutes. During this time, he continuously heard loud screams and felt like this was an intentional form of intimidation. The guards then dragged him inside the office where Anwar Raslan was very abrasive and told P18 to "just take any corpse and leave." Raslan also told P18 to go to Tishreen or Harasta Hospital to simply pick any corpse and not make any inquiries ever again. However, when P18 wanted to leave Raslan's office, Raslan called him back and told him that there were certain conditions: another one of P18's cousins should return to Syria and hand himself in to the intelligence. Only then would P18's other cousin be released and the corpse of his missing cousin be handed over. The Prosecutors concluded that this incident showed that Raslan had decision-making power at the Branch, an arrogant attitude, and treated people aggressively. P18 was visibly traumatized by these events.

The Prosecutors argued that Raslan's leading position at the Branch was also confirmed by the German journalist Christoph Reuter who interviewed Raslan in 2013 after his defection. Reuter said that Raslan was a very good source of information and further told the Court about Raslan's "almost photographic memory." Raslan's credibility was also visible from the fact that Reuter cited him many times in his publications about the Syrian Intelligence Services. The Prosecutors recalled that Raslan told Reuter that he had a meeting with Ali Mamlouk, the head of the General Intelligence Directorate at that time, after the explosion in Kafar Souseh at the end of 2011, early 2012. Participants in this meeting were Ali Mamlouk and his entourage, as well as Anwar Raslan as the head of interrogations. However, Ali Mamlouk who was the most important person within the General Intelligence Services at that time, did not want Anwar Raslan to investigate the explosion and Raslan in turn was upset about lacking professionalism.

According to the prosecutors, this meeting would nonetheless show Raslan's superior position within the intelligence services as he was part of a meeting along with the highest-ranking officials of the intelligence services and security authorities. He could therefore not have been a "ditched" person who was allegedly deprived of all powers. The prosecutors concluded that no officer who was distrusted due to his origins or critical position would have been allowed to participate in such a meeting. On the contrary, Raslan was even allowed to make proposals during that meeting. The Prosecutors stressed that this meeting happened at the end of 2011 or early 2012 when Raslan claimed to have been deprived of all authority for at least six months.

The Prosecutors argued that P53 also testified about Raslan's impressive decision-making power and influence. P53 told the Court that he was arrested in late July 2012, around one month before Raslan was transferred to another Branch. The arrest was due to a confusion of names and P53's family contacted Anwar Raslan since both families had been neighbors since 2003 and P53's mother and Raslan's wife were good friends until today. When P53 was released, his contact with Anwar Raslan was mentioned as well. The Prosecutors concluded that this was yet another indication of Raslan's "impressive decision-making powers which expanded far beyond Damascus. One call from Raslan was enough to get people released on the other end of the country, at a time when Raslan claimed to have been deprived of all powers. According to the Prosecutors, Raslan would, however, not have been able to make calls to arrange releases within two to three hours if he had been under surveillance and considered disloyal.

Raslan's decision-making power and influence at Al-Khatib Branch were also confirmed by several witnesses, as the prosecutors recalled. The Prosecutors explained that they would, however, only refer to witnesses who saw Raslan at the Branch beyond any reasonable doubt. [The Prosecutors recalled when and how each witness saw Raslan at the Branch and identified him as a high-ranking officer. They also briefly assessed the credibility of each testimony.]

P11, the Prosecutors added that Raslan himself confirmed that he interrogated P11. Although P11 could not see his interrogator, it was certain that Raslan interrogated him since he admitted it.

P41, the Prosecutors deemed P41's testimony to be consistent and coherent. They did not see any efforts by P41 to incriminate Raslan as he particularly pointed out when Raslan's deputy was involved in interrogations without Raslan being present.

P49, the Prosecutors noted that P49 described Raslan's involvement in his release. According to the Prosecutors, this testimony showed that in December 2011, Raslan was not only able to protect certain detainees from beatings but also to release them. His employees followed his orders and his superiors accepted his decisions, although they were not very satisfied with it. Such procedures would be impossible if Raslan was deprived of his authority, according to the Prosecutors.

P16, the Prosecutors recalled that upon request, P16 confirmed that she received relatively good treatment due to Kofi Annan visiting Syria at the time of her detention. Nonetheless, her testimony showed that Raslan was the powerful head of interrogations at Al-Khatib Branch in April 2012.

[\[REDACTED\]](#), Syrian actress, the Prosecutors argued that although the witness did not personally testify in Court, her previous police testimony was introduced in Court by Criminal Chief Inspector Knappmann. In her interview with the police, the witness credibly described how she met Raslan at the Branch. She did not show efforts to incriminate him and even stated that she was treated well by him. Anwar Raslan himself confirmed that he met this witness at the Branch, in his defense plea.

P33, the Prosecutors noted that Raslan himself confirmed that he met P33 in his office at Al-Khatib Branch where she identified him as high-ranking officer with decision-making powers who facilitated her release.

Regarding P58 [see above] the Prosecutors noted that he was “a prime example of a liar” who provided no information to verify his statements. According to the Prosecutors, “whoever paid P58 to testify made a bad investment.”

The Prosecutors added that all other witnesses confirmed that the alleged deprivation of power “belonged in the domain of fairytales. The Syrian regime surely had other problems than covering up a deprivation of power.” According to the Prosecutors, the Syrian government would have even preferred to make such a deprivation of power public to benefit from the deterrent effect.

Defense Pleas as Trivialization Attempts

The Prosecutors then stated that with his defense pleas, Anwar Raslan tried to trivialize the situation in Syria and his own role therein. Firstly, he claimed that there have been acceptable interrogations before March 2011. However, the contrary would be the case according to P35, P40, P52, and a witness who’s testimony was introduced in Court by CCI Deußing. After briefly recalling these witnesses’ descriptions of torture and detention conditions at Branch 251 prior to March 2011, the Prosecutors concluded that contrary to what Raslan claimed, the conditions at Branch 251 were catastrophic and inhumane even before March 2011 and Raslan himself was present while people were being tortured. Secondly, Raslan stated that “chaos” erupted in Syria on March 15, 2011. According to the Prosecutors, however, the situation in Syria at that time was far from chaotic. It was rather civilians demanding their basic rights in peaceful demonstrations. The reaction to these protests was massive violence and “state-led repression and oppression” which eventually led to a civil war which would indeed be chaotic, according to the Prosecutors. They concluded that Raslan’s statements in this regard would be a clear sign of his actual attitude.

The Prosecutors further recalled that Raslan stated that disciplinary measures were implemented against him in the summer of 2011 when he wanted to verify arrest warrants for new detainees after a wave of mass arrests. Raslan claimed that he had refused to accept detainees who were arrested by 4th Division without arrest warrants and without being listed on wanted lists. The Prosecutors said these claims “derid[ed] the actual situation in June 2011.” They recalled that many witnesses told the Court that there were no arrest warrants, that arrests were conducted arbitrarily, and that no proper investigations took place. According to the Prosecutors, Anwar Raslan attempted to suggest a certain degree of the rule of law, which is however not applicable. All witnesses spoke about the tyranny of the intelligence services, and no one mentioned a state governed by the rule of law.

Evaluation of Evidence

Alleged Overtaking of Branch 251 by Division 40

The Prosecutors argued that the taking of evidence in this trial also confirmed that Division 40 did not take control of Al-Khatib Branch and did not conduct its own interrogations at the Branch, as Raslan's Defense suggested. P5, who was a guard outside the building of Branch 251 until August 2012 saw employees of Division 40 regularly leaving the Branch after they brought new detainees. He testified that Division 40 did have certain freedoms due to Hafez Makhoul's family relationship with the President. However, the Division did not conduct interrogations at Branch 251. It was only in charge of quelling demonstrations and arresting people. The former Co-Defendant Eyad Al-Gharib who worked for Division 40 neither spoke about the Division seizing power over Al-Khatib Branch, although he provided a lot of information, even highly incriminating information. The Prosecutors concluded it would simply make no sense for Division 40 to take power at Al-Khatib Branch. As a rapid intervention force, they had more than enough work and did not need to adopt new competencies. In addition, witnesses who were arrested by Division 40 all stated that they were interrogated at Branch 251 by local employees of the Branch.

Attempted Reduction of Liability

According to the Prosecutors the Defendant further tried to reduce his own liability by claiming in his defense plea that there were no applications to hang people at the walls or ceilings. However, many witnesses testified that they were either themselves exposed to Shabb or saw and heard about other detainees being hanged. The Prosecutors mentioned several witnesses who testified in this regard, amongst others [P1, P33, P27, P28, P32, P35, P39, P46, and a witness whose testimony was introduced in Court by CCI Deußing]

The prosecutors said one must, however, admit that Raslan partially disapproved of the brutality against the detainees. Nonetheless, he only did so in cases where it hindered his work as an investigator, for example when people died due to beatings or fell unconscious. The Prosecutors recalled that Raslan elaborated in this regard in his questioning with the LKA Baden-Wuerttemberg on October 27, 2017, when he "cynically stated that" sometimes, dead detainees were taken to him, but he did not know what to do with them, since they were useless for him. The Prosecutors concluded that despite having power and decision-making capacity at the Branch during the indictment period, his function and position were more important to Raslan than his disapproval of the described situation. His defense plea on May 18, 2020 was therefore a failed attempt to deny responsibility for the inhumane conditions and acts at the Branch which happened with his knowledge, within his scope of activity, and under his order.

Systematic and Widespread Attack

Since the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz already detailed and "correctly qualified" the situation in Syria during the indictment period as a systematic and widespread attack against the Syrian population in its written judgment from February 24, 2021, the Prosecutors only briefly elaborated on the witnesses who described the relevant situation at Al-Khatib Branch during this time [amongst others]:

P1, P4, P8, P11, P12, P16, P19, P24, P26, P27, P28, P30, P31, P33, Fayez Sarah, P34, P35, P38, FR18, P41, P46, P47, P49, P50, P57.

The Prosecutors recalled that all these witnesses either described the horrors at the Branch themselves, or their descriptions were introduced in Court by the police investigators who had led their previous witness interviews. They described how detainees were beaten, insulted, humiliated, and closer to death than to life. Many of them are marked by these horrors until today. The Prosecutors described that their tears and sadness were a heavy, dark veil that coated the courtroom during the testimonies. Witnesses described that when they were not tortured themselves, they could hear the suffering of others. The Prosecutors recalled that all witnesses had to spend different amounts of time in the underground prisons of Branch 251. Nonetheless, all of them described the bad air and smell of blood, sweat and feces. Detainees were constantly hungry and not allowed to wash. They could only leave the cell when they were taken to interrogation. Representing all witnesses, the Prosecutors quoted P28 who said in Court that he was taken to cell No. 5, the “Death Cell.” P28 said he felt like he was still living in it now. It was like a grave, a dark grave with 130-140 people crammed inside and no light or windows. The cell’s width was 3 – 3.5m and its length was 5 – 6m. P28 stood on one leg for six hours, then alternated. There was also a toilet. There was a hatch at the bottom of the cell door that was 30x50cm. Air and dim light from the corridor entered through it. Ventilation happened through an air-suction device. The detainees felt like they were suffocating. The guards often punished the detainees by shutting the hatch on the door. When that happened, the detainees could not breathe.

The doctors P56 and P51 described the conditions at the Branch from a different point of view. They worked as residents at the hospital next to Al-Khatib Branch and had to go to the Branch as well. They described the insufficient medical care provided at the Branch as well as dehydrated and malnourished detainees. They also said that the feces and urine on the detainees’ underwear was an indication of how long they had been in detention, so was the length of their beards. The Prosecutors further recalled that the doctors described that many detainees had abscesses and were in life-threatening shape. Nonetheless, the medical professionals were only allowed to provide very basic treatment and were not allowed to decide who had to receive what kind of treatment. The detainees’ clothes were ripped and the detainees themselves smelled very bad. Only a few of them dared to tell the doctors how they actually got injured. However, the guards intervened every time that happened and punished them. According to the doctors, the full scale of violence was also covered up by creating false death certificates which indicated the wrong causes of death, such as heart attacks or kidney failure. The witness who was supposed to testify on November 18, 2021 was also a resident at the Red Crescent Hospital. However, she did not appear in Court herself and her previous statements she provided during the police interview were introduced in Court by CCI Frey. Her descriptions confirmed what her colleagues had previously told the court.

The Prosecutors concluded that there was not the slightest doubt about the credibility of any of the witnesses. None of them showed visible eagerness to incriminate the Defendant. According to the Prosecutors, all witnesses mentioned the same small details such as: welcome party; security move; kitchen as waiting area; yard, stairs, and prison facilities in the basement with interrogation rooms on the first floor; Abu Ghadab and Mimati as the two most violent guards; silent orders to torture people; pre-prepared confessions that one had to sign; limiting times and time to use the toilet; cells with windows to the outside; a green tube named after an UN official; insufficient food; “far away calls by the muezzin that were the only connection left to the outside world which seemed so far away.”

The Prosecutors concluded that there was no doubt that within the indictment period thousands of people were unlawfully deprived of their liberty, physically tortured, and detained in torture-like conditions. The latter was already confirmed by the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz in its written judgment from February 24, 2021.

Number of Torture Cases and Deaths

The Prosecutors first stated that in favor of the Defendant, one had to consider a number of 4,000 cases of torture at Branch 251 during the indictment period. In elaborating how they counted this number, the Prosecutors first referred to Raslan's defense plea in which he stated that from March 15, 2011, there was not one single day on which the prison at Branch 251 was not overcrowded. He said there were never less than 1,000 detainees, most times there were even more. According to the Prosecutors there was no set detention duration and all witnesses provided different timeframes of detention at Al-Khatib Branch. Most of them had to spend a few days at the Branch, up to three weeks. P4, P50, NW15 and [...] were detained for one month each. P1 was detained for two months and P22 was detained for around three months. The Prosecutors consequently assumed that every detainee had to spend around two months at the Branch before they were either released or transferred to another Branch. Given a 16-month indictment period, one must assume that there were at least 8,000 detainees within that period. Even if one set the average detention period at three months, there would have been 5,000 detainees. In favor of the Accused, one must therefore set the number of detainees at 4,000. This number was also confirmed by Eyad Al-Gharib who told the BKA that in July 2011, around 100 people were arrested and taken to Al-Khatib Branch. If one assumed that 75 of them were arrested at demonstrations and some were released, Al-Gharib's descriptions would even lead to 24,000 detainees during the indictment period. Al-Gharib himself said that between July 2011 and January 12, he was involved in the arrest of 1,000 people.

The Prosecutors further concluded that at least 30 detainees from Branch 251 died during the indictment period. Eyad Al-Gharib provided very detailed descriptions to the BKA of what detention at Branch 251 looked like and the severe consequences it had. According to him, people frequently died during investigations conducted at the Branch. He himself saw 10 dead people at the Branch between May and June 2011 and, sometime between July and September 2011, witnessed how a guard hit a detainee with an iron pole against his head so that the detainee died. The Prosecutors concluded that there are no doubts about the credibility of Al-Gharib's statements. They were also confirmed by CCI Deußing and after all, the judgement against Al-Gharib is largely based on his own statements. In light of this it is certain that:

- 10 deaths occurred between May and June 2011;
- 1 death occurred between July and September 2011.

The Prosecutors recalled that FR18 whose testimony was introduced in Court by CCI Knappmann since FR18 did not want to testify in Koblenz, witnessed the death of one person during one of his interrogations shortly after he was arrested in early March 2012. CCI Knappmann ensured that FR18 was able to communicate well with the BKA interpreter. Knappmann also told the Court that he found FR18's testimony to be credible and that FR18 was very emotional during the interview. FR18 further told Knappmann as well as the judges about his opinion of the trial which he disapproved. The Prosecutors therefore found that there was no apparent reason why FR18 would have made up this instance. They said it was certain that:

- 1 death occurred in March 2012.

The Prosecutors went on to briefly recall P4's testimony. P4 said he saw fifteen people die at the Branch between mid-July and mid-August 2011. Among them was one child below the age of seven who collapsed in the middle of a community cell due to the bad air condition. In addition to the child, P4 described thirteen people who died from torture and whose corpses were simply left in the hallway. Another person was beaten so heavily on his throat that he died as well, according to P4.

The Prosecutors said that P4 described even more cases of death at the Branch, however, due to unprecise memories, these cases of death could not be considered. The number of deaths that P4 precisely described and that it was certain that:

- 15 deaths (including one child) occurred between mid-July and mid-August 2011.

P36 who worked as a doctor at the Red Crescent Hospital and also visited Branch 251 in this capacity told the Court that he witnessed at least ten deaths during Ramadan 2012, which was from July 19 until August 18, 2012. The Prosecutors recalled that these people either died directly in the prison or at the hospital where they were transferred to from the branch and eventually died due to their injuries. The timeframe of Ramadan 2012, however, includes the timespan during which P4 witnessed fifteen deaths at Branch 251. One must therefore assume that the corpses that P4 saw at Al-Khatib Branch were identical to those that P36 saw at the Branch. P36 was further unable to precisely state how many people died at the Branch and how many died at the hospital. One must therefore conclude that one person died at the hospital. P36 further stated that he witnessed 50 cases of death at Al-Khatib Branch and 100 at the hospital between February 2012 and the end of 2013. However, his descriptions were not precise enough to consider them in the judgment, as they were mere guesses. It is further unclear if and how many people died within the indictment period. The Prosecutors concluded that it is certain that:

- 1 death occurred in between July and August 2012.

The Prosecutors briefly described how P46 was arrested and how he witnessed one person die at the community cell in Al-Khatib Branch where P46 spent the first night of his detention before he was transferred to Harasta Hospital due to his bad health condition. The Prosecutors briefly recalled P46's descriptions of the conditions at the hospital and concluded that they underlined the "pointless torture which was far from aiming at gaining information." Torture rather happened merely because guards and caretakers had the chance to torture patients. P46 described that there were other patients from Branch 251 in his room at the hospital. According to P46, each Branch had their own space at the hospital. During P46's stay at the hospital, two people died. One of them was from Branch 251. P46 knew this person from before and described how he was so severely injured that he could not use the toilet without help and eventually got a high fever and died. Another person died in the same bed as P46, and the guards only dragged the corpse outside the room after it was already cold. After P46 was transferred back to Branch 251 in early July, he witnessed at least three deaths in his community cell. He described how other detainees prayed for these people after they ensured that they actually died. However, the timeframe during which P46 witnessed people die in the community cell partially overlapped with P4's timeframe. One must therefore assume that the three cases of death that P46 witnessed were included in the 14 cases of dead adults that P4 described. It is therefore certain that:

- 2 deaths of detainees from Branch 251 occurred at Harasta hospital.

P51 who also worked as a doctor at the Red Crescent Hospital told the Court that he did not witness cases of death at the Branch. However, one day between spring and June 2011, a pick-up with two or three corpses from Branch 251 arrived at the hospital and P51 was told to confirm that these people were dead. P51 was not allowed to properly examine them and could only determine that they were in a very bad condition and only consisted of skin and bones. However, one could not determine whether these corpses were the same that Eyad Al-Gharib or others saw. It must therefore be assumed that the corpses which P51 saw were identical with those that other witnesses described.

The Prosecutors concluded that within the indictment period, at least 30 detainees from Branch 251 died. The exact cause of death could however not be determined. Due to the testimonies of victim witnesses, of doctors and due to the torture and the bad conditions to which detainees were exposed it is impossible that these people died a natural death. It was rather a bundle of causes that were all rooted in Al-Khatib Branch and Harasta Hospital, a torture outpost of the Branch. Prof. Dr. Rothschild, the forensic expert who examined the Caesar Files confirmed to the Court that the corpses shown in the pictures from the Caesar Files did most likely not die a natural death. He also stressed that all corpses showed similar signs and that one can therefore conclude that the same tools, torture methods and conditions were systematically used. The Prosecutors said that other cases of death than the 30 case that they just described cannot be attributed to the Defendant.

P5 told the police about an elderly man who he witnessed dying. However, in Court, P5 was no longer certain if the man died or was unconscious. The Prosecutors added that they already refrained from considering P17's brother/P18's cousin one of the death cases when they filed the indictment since it was not clear when and where he died. This remained unclear after the taking of evidence in the trial. P57 told the Court about a person with a gunshot injury who died. It could not be determined whether the gun shot which he received prior to his detention was the cause of death or not.

The Prosecutors concluded that during the indictment period and under the supervision of Anwar Raslan, at least 30 Al-Khatib Branch detainees lost their lives. Anwar Raslan was able to recognize that this could and would happen and he at least recklessly accepted that.

Sexual Violence as Crimes against Humanity

The Prosecutors recalled that experts Thurmann, Al-Bunni, and Darwish, as well as the witnesses P4, P12, P16, P27, P28, P29, P46, P50, P57 testified about sexual violence and its central role at the intelligence services. They spoke about the significant stigmatization of victims of sexual violence and said that mere threats to make one or ones close relatives victims of sexual violence would make one do anything to prevent that from happening. Sexual violence cannot be discussed publicly. Reports by the UNHCR from November 2011 and February 2012 detail that sexual violence was frequently used in Syria before and after the revolution, and consequently, within the indictment period. The Judges already confirmed the existence of a widespread and systematic attack during the indictment period in their judgment from February 24, 2021.

The Prosecutors further recalled that P1 described how a stick was inserted into his anus. P19 told the Court that she and her siblings were threatened with sexual violence. P42 described to the Court how one of the guards pressed her head in his lap. According to the Prosecutors, all three witnesses provided coherent and consistent descriptions and did not show any eagerness to incriminate the Defendant. These three instances are therefore proven.

The Prosecutors referred to P32 who also told the Court that she is a victim of sexual violence and was exposed to looks and assaults by the guards. The Prosecutors noted that P32 was severely traumatized, and her descriptions of the sexual violence were not precise enough in terms of time and location. There were significant discrepancies between her police interview and in-court testimony and it was consequently impossible to determine which assaults happened when and where.

Legal Evaluation

According to the Prosecutors, an in-depth assessment of the Court's jurisdiction over the charged crimes was not necessary since it was apparent from the principle of universal jurisdiction as provided for in [§ 1 VStGB \[CCAIL\]](#).

In addition, the German Federal Court of Justice recently confirmed in its judgement on January 28, 2021 that functional immunity is not applicable in cases under the VStGB that are tried in German courts. The existence of a systematic, and in this case “and”, widespread attack against the Syrian civilian population during the indictment period had already been confirmed by the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz in its judgment on February 24, 2021. Witnesses who testified after this judgment confirmed and corroborated the existence of the systematic and widespread attack. There are no doubts that even until the end of the relevant indictment period on December 7, 2021, the Syrian regime acted increasingly brutal against the oppositionist civil society. Thousands of civilian opposition members and civilians who were not directly affiliated with the opposition died at demonstrations and through mistreatment by the intelligence services until December 2012. At Al-Khatib Branch, where Anwar Raslan was the head of Interrogations and in charge of the prison, at least thirty people died between April 29, 2011 and September 2012. Their concrete cause of death could not be investigated. The prosecutors noted that because the charged crimes took place a long time ago and because investigations could not be carried out at the crime scene, one must rely on the testimonies of witnesses.

Bundle of Omission and Active Doing

Killings

According to the Prosecutors, active actions frequently taken at Al-Khatib Branch included humiliation, insults, and violence. Omissions included deprivation of food, hygiene, and medical treatment. What led to the death of people was mostly active action, since without physical and psychological mistreatment, people would not have needed medical care in the first place. In addition, it would not have required much organization to prevent malnutrition. The Prosecutors concluded that 30 cases of active killings pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 1 VStGB were proven. The Prosecutors further found that the murders were carried out with base motives pursuant to § 211 (2) StGB. Jurisdiction defined base motives as motives that are despicable, which is certainly the case here, according to the Prosecutors. The only purpose of torture and killings was to suffocate the legitimate and peaceful desire for freedom of parts of the Syrian civilian population. It was only aimed toward people who actually or allegedly dared to protest against the regime.

Torture

The Prosecutors further found that because countless people were tortured during the indictment period, the requirements of § 7 (1) no.5 VStGB [torture as CAH] were fulfilled as well. Between April 29, 2011 and September 7, 2012, at least 4,000 people were tortured at Branch 251. The Higher Regional Court in Koblenz already found in its judgment from February 24, 2021, that the mere detention conditions at the Branch qualified as torture. The Prosecutors had nothing to add to this finding.

Dangerous Bodily Harm

Regarding the former detainees of Branch 251 who joined the trial as plaintiffs, one must also consider dangerous bodily harm pursuant to § 224 StGB. The Prosecutors recalled that from the moment the detainees were arrested, they were insulted, humiliated, degraded, and physically mistreated. During the welcome party until they reached the cells, detainees were constantly beaten. The prosecutors said it was out of question that people were in pain and were injured. In addition, they had to suffer from hunger and were detained under inhumane conditions as several experts, as well as P36 and P51, told the Court.

The psychological burden to become a victim of violence once more, the fear of raids in the community cells or the loneliness in the solitary cells, the hatred, or the fear to die undoubtedly damaged the detainees' health. In legal terms, the crime was committed to the disadvantage of the plaintiffs, however, not by multiple single actions but as one permanent crime. From the moment the detainees arrived at the Branch until they left it, all detainees were permanently physically and mentally mistreated. The bodily harm caused to the plaintiffs was not simple (§ 223 StGB) but dangerous (§ 224 StGB) since it was committed within a system. There were multiple people who were part of that system and contributed to its functioning. Many guards and interrogation officers were involved in the deprivation of food, beatings, and assaults. There were people like Anwar Raslan who gave orders and carried responsibility. They all acted jointly. The Prosecutors concluded that it was therefore irrelevant who directly performed certain acts. They added that detainees were also beaten with objects and concluded that § 224 (1) n. 4 StGB, jointly committed dangerous bodily harm, and § 224 (1) no. 2 StGB [use of objects] were therefore fulfilled. They recalled relevant descriptions from amongst other P1, P11, P12, P19, P25, P27, P39, P38, P32, P22, P50, P44, P47.

The Prosecutors concluded that §§ 223 (1), 224 (1) nos 1 and 4 StGB were consequently applicable. They briefly recalled several plaintiffs' testimonies to illustrate instances when detainees were beaten, amongst others with objects, and how this amounts to cases of bodily harm: P28 was arrested in May 2011 and was detained twice at Branch 251. Before he was transferred to Branch 285, he was beaten with an object and was later, when he was returned to Branch 251, beaten again. This amounts to two cases of bodily harm due to the interruption. P41 was detained at Branch 251 in October 2011 before he was transferred to Kafar Souseh, and then returned to Branch 251 for one week. During his third stay at the Branch, he was also beaten. These instances amount to three cases of bodily harm. P46 was severely mistreated at Division 40 in June 2012. After one night at Al-Khatib Branch, he was transferred to Harasta Hospital where he was put in a room with other detainees from the Branch. At the hospital, he was beaten by guards from the Branch and hospital employees before he was returned to Branch 251 where he was beaten with objects. Although he did not constantly stay at the Branch, he remained under the control of Branch 251. His case therefore amounts to one case of bodily harm. On March 17, 2011, P42 was told to regularly appear at Branch 251. She first refused but eventually appeared at the Branch for the first time in early April. A couple days later, she was taken to the basement where she was abused, amongst others with a hose. She then had to stay overnight. This procedure was repeated several times. However, P42 did not have to stay at the Branch for longer periods. Nonetheless, she experienced the bad detention conditions, insults, and beatings during her short stays there. One can assume that there were three acts of bodily harm. One happened at her first interrogation in the basement, P42 was able to precisely describe this instance in court. However, it could not be determined how many times P42 left and returned to the Branch. One must therefore assume in favor for the defendant that one act of bodily harm happened before she had to stay at the Branch overnight, and another one when she had to return to the Branch. The Prosecutors also found that while P33 was not physically abused herself, she also had to endure the bad detention conditions at the Branch that amount to dangerous bodily harm themselves.

Severe Deprivation of Liberty of Detainees at Branch 251

The Prosecutors stated that the Judges at the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz already found in their judgment on February 24, 2021, that detainees at Branch 251 were severely deprived of their liberty, which amounted to crimes against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no.9 VStGB. The deprivation of liberty continued to take place even after January 2012 (the end of the indictment period in the case of Eyad Al-Gharib) until the end of the indictment period in the case of Anwar Raslan, on December 7, 2012. This was confirmed by multiple witnesses who testified before and after February 24, 2021.

The Prosecutors therefore referred to the previous judgment in this regard. They noted that the acts committed by the Syrian regime in this regard also fulfilled the criteria of § 239 (1) StGB [deprivation of liberty], this norm would, however, be secondary for congruence reasons. This would however not be the case for instances where plaintiffs were detained for more than one week (§ 239 (3) no.1 StGB). The Prosecutors concluded that this had been the case for fourteen plaintiffs. In P1's and P47's cases, the requirements of hostage-taking as laid out in § 239b StGB are met as well. The Prosecutors added that the minimum punishment in these cases would be five years imprisonment (§ 239b (1) StGB) since both of them were coerced in detention. After his unlawful arrest, P1 was detained at Al-Khatib Branch where he was interrogated multiple times and mistreated, including psychological mistreatment. He told the Court that at one point he was willing to do anything just to evade the situation. P47 was also interrogated multiple times. At his second interrogation, he was told that he could easily be killed by only one shot if he refused to cooperate. In both cases, the plaintiffs were appropriated by the Branch personnel and their situation was used to coerce them to provide information or threaten them with death.

Sexual Offences

The Prosecutors found that for P1 § 7 (1) no.6 VStGB, sexual violence as crimes against humanity was fulfilled. They first elaborated that the official reasoning behind the law regarding sexual violence as crimes against humanity was to establish domestic German law representing Art. 7 \(1\) g ICC Statute. The Elements of the Crimes of the ICC Statute state that invasion by an offender in the victim's body is considered rape that can amount to crimes against humanity if committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack. The Prosecutors said P1 credibly described how, during one of the interrogations, a guard inserted a stick into his anus. This is undoubtably rape as crimes against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB. It also fulfils the requirement of rape under §§ 177 (1) no. 1, 177 (2) no. 1 StGB (old version), however, this norm is congruent to § 7 VStGB. According to the Prosecutors, P1's descriptions also amount to sexual abuse of a prisoner pursuant to § 174a (1) StGB (old version) which clearly describes the subordinate position of the victim toward the offender and the restricted situation of the victim who is surrendered to the offender. The Prosecutors found that inserting the stick into P1's anus while he was hanging by his wrists did amount to sexual abuse of a prisoner.

P19 was detained several times, amongst others at Al-Khatib Branch in February 2012, where she was physically assaulted by one of the guards who also touched her breast while she was blindfolded. P42 was detained for two months, although she was allowed to leave the Branch several times in between. Nonetheless, she had to experience the same violence as other detainees. One time, a guard took her head and pressed it in his lap. She was also tortured while Anwar Raslan was present.

The Prosecutors concluded that § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB was applicable in the above cases since § 177 (1) no. 3 StGB (old version), sexual coercion, was fulfilled, given the defenseless situation of the plaintiffs in which they were exposed to the uninhibited guards. In addition, § 177 (1) no. 1 StGB (old version) was applicable. Both norms would, however, be congruent to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB. The Prosecutors concluded that sexual coercion as a crime against humanity was committed by the guards who worked at the prison of Branch 251. Consequently, sexual coercion against prisoners pursuant to § 174a StGB (old version) was applicable as well. According to the Prosecutors, P32's description could not be considered here since they were too vague in terms of time and location of concrete offences.

The Prosecutors further found that forced nudity and the so-called security move that detainees had to perform upon arrival at Branch 251 could not be subsumed under § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB. They explained that since its implementation in 2001, the German Code of Crimes Against International Law (VStGB) was in constant tension between international and domestic law. It is generally domestic German law and therefore to be interpreted according to domestic interpretation rules. Nonetheless, Art. 59 of the German Constitution (GG) requires an international law friendly interpretation of domestic law, as does the application of universal jurisdiction provided for in § 1 VStGB. In interpreting the VStGB, one must therefore apply international treaties, international customary law, and general principles of law, according to Art 38 \(1\) ICJ Statute. As the Prosecutors already mentioned, § 7 VStGB was drafted based on the relevant article in the ICC's Rome Statute. By directly comparing the two norms, one, however, notes that the German domestic law does not include 'sexual slavery' and 'sexual violence of comparable gravity' as underlying crimes of crimes against humanity. Instead, it refers to 'sexual coercion'. Based on the drafting history of the German domestic norm, one must therefore assess whether forced nudity and the security move amount to sexual coercion, which includes sexual slavery and sexual violence of comparable gravity. Sexual slavery is not applicable in this case, so one must determine whether the above-mentioned conduct qualifies as sexual violence of comparable gravity.

The Prosecutors said that it is uncontested that the detainees did not undress themselves voluntarily. To completely undress is extremely humiliating and degrading. Nonetheless, in determining comparable gravity with other conduct listed in § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB, one must particularly take into account the intensity of consequences of forced nudity and the security move. In doing so, the Prosecutors concluded that § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB would not be the applicable norm to address the emotional and legal needs of the detainees who had to undress and perform the security move upon arrival at Branch 251. The Prosecutors found that the forced nudity neither harmed the detainees' bodily integrity nor harmed their sexual autonomy to a high degree, as far as the detainees were not exposed to other acts performed with their bodies. Nonetheless, the undressing did burden their sense of shame. However, all female witnesses told the Court that they only had to undress in front of women in a separate room and that female employees from the hospital were called to the Branch to search the female detainees while naked. According to the Prosecutors, this reduced the burden on the detainees' sense of shame, although it was undoubtedly burdensome for them to undress in front of many other people. The Prosecutors further stated that other forms of sexual violence on the other hand, lead to physical consequences such as sickness, pregnancy, infections as well as social consequences. In addition, the time component would be relevant in determining whether forced nudity can be considered sexual violence of comparable gravity. According to the Prosecutors, severity of sexual violence increases with time when the consequences last for a long time, for example in cases of forced pregnancy. The frisking at Branch 251 and the consequent nudity, however, did not last long and detainees were allowed to dress again right after the frisking. In addition, one must take into account the purpose of the sexual violence. In cases of forced prostitution, rape, and forced pregnancy, there is always a sexual component to it. This was, however, not, or only rarely the case for nudity at Branch 251. The main purpose there was to frisk people. This was confirmed in Court by P10, P11, and P25 who said that detainees were either not touched while naked or were frisked to ensure they don't carry any items with them. According to the Prosecutors, frisking new prisoners was a common practice in law-enforcement around the world. All sixteen Federal States in Germany have laws that allow for new prisoners to be undressed in order to frisk them and ensure that they are not carrying any dangerous items with them. Nudity while frisking detainees is therefore not sexual violence with comparable gravity, according to the Prosecutors. It is neither sexual coercion which could be subsumed under § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB.

The Prosecutors stated that this finding is also in line with international law. The Prosecutors referred to a decision by the ICC's PTC in Bemba, which did not consider forced undressing as sexual crimes of comparable gravity. At the ad-hoc tribunals, forced nudity was only considered sexual violence when additional acts, such as posing in front of men, were involved. This was, however, not the case at Al-Khatib Branch, according to the Prosecutors. They concluded that an international law friendly interpretation of § 7 (1) no.6 VStGB would not provide for forced nudity as performed at Al-Khatib Branch to qualify as sexual violence of comparable gravity.

Enforced Disappearances

The Prosecutors added that enforced disappearance as crimes against humanity (§ 7 (1) no. 7 VStGB) was neither applicable. They referred to their own statements on the issue, as well as the Judges statement dated October 13, 2021.

Criminal Contribution of the Defendant

Co-Perpetration

The Prosecutors stated that Raslan committed the alleged crimes as a co-perpetrator pursuant to § 25 (2) StGB. They argued that the Syrian Intelligence Branches and their prisons were a well-functioning construct with a large number of people providing for the functioning of this construct. There were for example people like Eyad Al-Gharib who conducted arrests, guards, interrogation officers, and a large number of other people involved, such as post officers, archivists, and managing staff. Of course, not all of them acted as co-perpetrators (§ 25 (2) StGB) as the German Federal Court of Justice found on June 6, 2019. One is only considered a co-perpetrator if he makes his own contributions and if the result of the actions of other people are known to him. It is irrelevant whether a co-perpetrator was physically present at the crime scene or directly participated in the core offences or not. It is relevant if he has his own interest in the crimes, the scope of his contributions, his power over the offence, or his willingness regarding the offence.

The Prosecutors argued that Anwar Raslan was the head of interrogations at Branch 251 and had a special personal interest in the successful completion of the charged crimes. He wanted the repression of the demonstrations to be successful, since he would have otherwise not only lost his position and job, but been exposed to the same repression himself. His own interest in the completion of the crimes was therefore to keep his position, power, and lifestyle. According to the prosecutors, Anwar Raslan tried to paint the picture of sympathizing with the opposition, being concerned about his family, and seeing no way out of the situation, other than to stay in his position. [...] However, Anwar Raslan was loyal to the regime, although he might have disagreed with the brutal beatings of detainees in some instances. According to the prosecutors, his participation in the crimes went far beyond mere aiding and abetting. He was the head of the interrogation division at Al-Khatib Branch, a Branch of the Syrian general Intelligence Directorate. As such, he was responsible for the detainees in the underground prisons of the Branch and was commanding thirty employees. He was the focal point in giving and fulfilling orders. Three insider witnesses told the Court about the military structures at the Branch. Anwar Raslan fulfilled orders and reported back on their successful completion. P55 who worked at Branch 25 together with Raslan and the signature of the Defendant on several documents also illustrated his position. Documents provided to the Court by Chris Engels from CIJA also proved Anwar Raslan's position at the Branch. The Prosecutors recalled that Raslan had argued that he only received orders and had a very limited scope of action. Indeed, the scope of action is more limited the lower a person's rank is. However, the higher-ranking a person is, the wider his scope of action and the higher his contribution. The Prosecutors found that, after Tawfiq Younes, Anwar Raslan was the second man at Branch 251. His help to get certain detainees released is an example of his wide scope of action.

The Prosecutors concluded that Raslan consequently facilitated the overall crimes. The Syrian regime based its decisions also on the information gained from detainees at Al-Khatib Branch. The Branch where Raslan worked was spreading fear amongst the civil population. Everyone in Damascus knew about Al-Khatib Branch and what was going on there. People were so scared of the Branch that they had to act in the underground. In the end, Anwar Raslan was still an exchangeable number like everyone else within a totalitarian regime. According to the Prosecutors, however, Raslan did not let himself be exchanged. After the start of the revolution and the following repression, he stayed in his position for 16 months, did his job, and enjoyed the privileges of his position.

Objective Liability

The Prosecutors said that to hold the defendant liable for the crimes committed at the Branch, it is not necessary that Raslan gave individual orders or knew about each individual case of hostage taking, sexual violence, or one of the multiple other cases at the Branch. As the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY found, liability arises when one can foresee that certain crimes could be committed for fulfilling a certain goal. According to the Prosecutors, one can assume that this was the case for Anwar Raslan. He was aware of the systematic and widespread attack against the civil population in which the intelligence services participated, and which was characterized by torture and sexual violence, although the latter might not have been that systematically applied at Al-Khatib Branch.

Intent

Anwar Raslan personally stated that he was aware of the overall circumstances and the conditions at the Branch. He told the LKA Berlin that he not only worked in the interrogation rooms but also regularly visited the prison area where he could see and hear people being tortured. He also knew that detainees died due to the life-threatening conditions at the Branch. Permanent jurisprudence from the German Federal Court of Justice does not provide any justification applicable to Anwar Raslan's case.

Guilt

According to the Prosecutors, there was no doubt about the Defendant's guilt. He cannot use necessity as a defense pursuant to § 35 StGB. Anwar Raslan could have defected right after the start of the revolution. He also had opportunities to defect later in 2011 and in early 2012. Through the abduction of his son-in-law, he was in contact with the FSA which he could have asked for help to arrange his defection and escape. However, he did not do so while the situation in Syria became more complicated and confusing. Thousands of officers and regime employees fled during this time. The Argument that Raslan did not want to leave his family behind might be understandable from a human point of view, however, jurisprudence from the German Federal Court of Justice provides that it was acceptable for Raslan to leave without his family given his involvement in crimes against humanity.

The Prosecutors mentioned that based on objective facts and Raslan's own statements the clear picture was that he wanted to defect at the end of 2011 when his son-in-law was abducted by the FSA and his son was shot. However, the massacre in Houla took place on May 25, 2012. After this event, the pressure on Raslan grew significantly to the point where he could no longer stay in his position. Eyad Al-Gharib and another witness confirmed that this was the actual reason for Anwar Raslan's defection. Raslan himself told the LKA Baden-Wuerttemberg on October 16, 2017 that the only reason for his defection was of a social nature. He was originally from the region around Homs where people, including relatives and neighbors of his, were killed and he was suspected of having killed regime officers, despite his position at the intelligence services. The Prosecutors said these statements from Raslan were introduced in Court by the police officer who led the relevant questioning.

According to Christoph Reuter, the massacre in Houla took place at a time when the Syrian regime was about to collapse. This was also when many high-ranking military officers, including officers from the Tlass family, fled from Syria to Jordan. P56 admitted that he and Raslan defected too late when the FSA was already at the gates of Damascus. Raslan wanted to be on the right side of history. He only left Jordan after the situation in Syria and the regime were stable again. The Prosecutors concluded that Raslan's narrative that he was unable to defect earlier was therefore baseless.

Competencies in Terms of Killings, Deprivation of Liberty, and Sexual Violence

The Prosecutors argued that jurisprudence from the Federal Court of Justice regularly finds that people are committing one crime against humanity, which is however, comprised by multiple individual acts. Given a factual, temporal, and local, connection, these acts are considered one unity when evaluating them. Regarding the connection in this case, it is found that the Syrian regime ordered a systematic and widespread attack by state-led violence on April 29, 2011, latest. This attack lasted for the entire indictment period and far beyond. All charged crimes were committed at Branch 251 and the hospital over which the Branch had control. A consistent machinery of torture and killing was running at Branch 251. Not only were crimes against humanity committed, but also bodily harm caused to the plaintiffs in this case. The bodily harm resulted from the permanently lasting overall conditions at the Branch. The Prosecutors further argued that it was irrelevant whether Raslan was immediately involved in causing bodily harm. It was relevant, however, that he was responsible for the system that caused the bodily harm. According to the Prosecutors, detainees had to live in a climate of permanent mistreatment which undermined their free actions. The Prosecutors concluded that the dangerous bodily harm which was committed against every plaintiff in one case, by using tools or objects, and jointly performed by multiple perpetrators, was considered one offence and was subsumed under § 7 VStGB.

Sentencing

The prosecutors found that the sentence must be determined according to § 7 (1) VStGB and § 211 StGB which both provide for a life sentence. The lower sentence provided in both paragraphs is to be neglected in this case, according to the Prosecutors. § 211 StGB does not provide for a less grave case and other reasons for lowering the sentence are not applicable either. The Prosecutors therefore demanded a life sentence for the Defendant Anwar Raslan. In addition, they requested the Court to determine the particular severity of guilt pursuant to § 57a (1) s. 1 no. 2 StGB [meaning that the sentence can usually not be suspended for probation after fifteen years].

Mitigating Factors

In weighing the overall context, according to § 46 (1) StGB, the Prosecutors found that in favor of the defendant, one must acknowledge that he did not commit any crimes in Germany and that he provided at least a partial confession. The Prosecutors recalled that the Court also heard that Raslan at least helped certain individual people to evade grave torture and provided privileged treatment for those detainees. However, one must consider that Raslan did not help these people simply because of altruist motives. In the case of detained actors and actresses, it was rather his personal preference for artists which was the reason for helping these detainees. The Prosecutors also found that the evidence provided in Court showed that Raslan was a professional investigator who only disagreed with the regime's actions starting in March 2011, because the extensive violence hindered him in his investigative work, for example when torture made it impossible to interrogate the detainees. The fact that he acted within a hierarchy is not a mitigating factor. Employees of the intelligence services indeed had a limited scope of action. However, he voluntarily joined the intelligence services although it was long known how the intelligence services in Syria worked.

Aggravating Factors

The Prosecutors found that not only one human being, but thirty persons, died in terrible conditions at Branch 251. The way in which these people had to die is particularly severe. Since both § 211 StGB and § 7 (1) VStGB are fulfilled, two life sentences are applicable, although they cannot be added up. At least 4,00 people were tortured and deprived of their liberty. They all had to endure massive torture, which further severs the offence. Anwar Raslan was involved in the killings and torture and continued to work at the Branch where these crimes were happening for sixteen months. He continued to be part of the “cowardly criminal regime.”

One must therefore determine the particular severity of guilt. The Prosecutors requested the Judges to find Anwar Raslan guilty of co-perpetrating crimes against humanity in the form of killings, torture, rape, and deprivation of liberty, in addition to murder in 30 cases, dangerous bodily harm in 26 cases, severe deprivation of liberty in two cases, hostage taking in two cases, and sexual abuse in three cases. The Prosecutors requested life imprisonment with particular severity of guilt. They also requested the Judges to uphold the current arrest warrant against Anwar Raslan, given the risk that he could flee

Before ending the trial day, Presiding Judge Kerber thanked the court interpreters for their hard work simultaneously interpreting the Prosecutors’ closing statement.

The proceedings were adjourned at 4:00PM.

The trial will resume on December 8, 2021 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 55
Hearing Date: December 8, 2021

Day 107 – December 8, 2021

This was the first day of closings statements delivered by the plaintiffs and their counsel. The Court heard from four survivors who joined the trial as plaintiffs, each of whom provided their own statement. They all stressed the personal importance of the trial on their lives. The plaintiffs also said that they see themselves as representatives of all the victims who did not survive Branch 251 and everyone who is still detained in Syrian government prisons.

Four Plaintiffs Counsel also provided their closing statements in which they briefly recalled the individual detention experiences of their clients. Counsel also noted some of the criticism that the trial received, such as: not charging deprivation of liberty as a crime against humanity, not providing simultaneous translation to the public, and not recording at least the closing statements and verdict. One Plaintiff Counsel concluded that the survivors who testified are the heroes of the trial. All Counsel demanded life imprisonment and particular severity of guilt for Raslan, just as the Prosecutors demanded the week before.

Trial Day 107 – December 8, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:35AM with eight spectators and eleven journalists in the audience. Two cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz.

Presiding Judge Kerber opened the floor to the plaintiffs to deliver their closing statements. She explained that everyone could decide freely if they wanted to speak from their seats or from the dais in the front of the courtroom.

Closing Statement by P12

After greeting the Judges, P12 said that ever since he left Syria, he does not know if he should be happy because he survived or if he should be angry because tens of thousands of unfortunate people are still missing. He said that he and other Syrians had only one simple dream, although many people, including German citizens, do not share this dream because it is a matter of fact for them: to have a home that protects them, and respects the humanity of people, and a state that provides for equal rights for all citizens. Although this dream is so basic according to 21st century standards, P12 said that he and other Syrians knew that the price they would pay for their demand would be enormous.

However, they did not expect, even in their worst nightmares, that the regime would be willing to go beyond any limits that a reasonable person could imagine for atrocity crimes.

P12 recalled that once the Tunisian president fled and the Egyptian president resigned, Syrians were certain that their dream was not just the dream of individual people or small groups, but a dream shared by millions of people in the region. They believed that this dream could come true in Syria, by the power of the people, although they knew the history of the regime since the 1980s. P12 said they took to the streets and demanded to get their country back. They had only their voices and their will to do so. Security forces and the military responded with live ammunition. Two bullets flew past P12. One of them almost hit his head. P12 told the Court that he was lucky, otherwise he would not have been able to stand where he was at this very moment. Hundreds of thousands of others, however, were not this lucky.

P12 went on to explain that because those who took to the streets were not deterred by live ammunition, the regime decided to confront them with armored vehicles and tanks, to surround and starve towns and communities. Unimaginable videos document the bombardment of residential areas with all kinds of weapons. P12 said that he remembers one of these videos: the cameraman was filming a tank attack on a neighborhood in Tall Kalakh. The soldiers were watching him and aimed the tank's cannon at him. He stood there, nailed to the ground, not knowing what to do. One could hear him shout that the tank was about to shoot him. And that is exactly what happened. The young man fell, and only his phone survived. This was how others were able to see the clip a few days later.

P12 explained that he would not describe the crimes committed by the regime and its supporters in detail; from bombing civilians to destroying all of Syria. The Prosecutors already spoke about this more than once in a way that P12 found very impressive because it revealed how many details about the Syrian tragedy are actually known. P12 said pictures and videos can often say more than words. However, he wanted to talk about something that pictures usually cannot express: the experience of detention and enforced disappearance.

P12 said it was scary enough to be subjected to live ammunition as an unarmed person, but it was even scarier to be bombed by all kinds of weapons, including planes. However, nothing could describe the horrors of being in detention in Syria. P12 recalled how in the early months of the revolution, hundreds of security forces attacked the town of [REDACTED], where he lived. The town was within the area of jurisdiction of Al-Khatib Branch. P12 described how he visited his family's house, which was 200 meters away from his own apartment. P12's wife and two children stayed at home. P12 and his parents heard a strange noise outside and opened the door to see what was going on. There were intelligence officers shouting at them. P12 and his parents realized the officers were storming the neighborhood. P12 tried to contact his wife, but all the phones were dead. He wanted to go out and check on his wife and children, but his mother rightly prevented him from doing so. P12 concluded that if he had gone out into the street, he might not have come back - like many others who were arrested on that day. P12 further told the Court that he could not tell how long it took, but it felt like years to him. He was overwhelmed by the fear of being wanted, that they would enter his home and harm his wife and children because they could not find him. Or they would come to his parents' house and take P12 away so he would disappear 'behind the sun where not even the blue flies would know where I was.'

P12 directly addressed the 'esteemed Judges,' saying he respected their decision not to include the crime of enforced disappearance in the charges against the Defendant. P12 said he also may not have the evidence required to prove that enforced disappearance is systematically applied by the regime and in full awareness of the consequences by the military and intelligence services with the aim to terrorize Syrian society. Nevertheless, P12 wanted to tell the Court about this crime from his own experience, because what is presented in this courtroom will also represent historical documentation in the interest of all Syrians and all human rights defenders. P12 said that when the interests of a Syrian security employees conflict with those of a Syrian citizen, the first thing one would hear from these henchmen is “I will take you behind the sun where even the blue flies will not know where you are.” The victim is then forced to surrender because he knows exactly what this means, and that realizing this threat ‘is easier than taking a sip of water because it is a well-established practice by the regime.’

P12 said the purpose of this threat is to intimidate the opponent. It is an often-tested recipe by the regime and its officials. According to P12, enforced disappearance must not only be considered a crime against humanity, but also terrorism. Its aim is to terrorize society and force it to surrender to power. P12 explained that “to disappear behind the sun” means to be in the dark and to vanish from life without actually dying. One ‘becomes Schrödinger’s cat, about whom the outside world does not know whether one is dead or alive.’ According to P12, these two options are always present for the prisoner himself, as well as for the prison guard or the prison officials. The officer or the prison director themselves do not know whether they are going to kill someone the next minute. One of them might be angry about something his son did and simply kill a prisoner who happens to be in front of him at that moment. P12 said it would ‘indeed be that easy for them.’ However, what would be even worse is, according to P12, that the prisoner himself does not know what his fate will be. While of course no one knows the future, the difference between the two cases is fundamental, according to P12: the prisoner does not die naturally, but is murdered, probably in the most horrible way. The prisoner has no way to resist his fate. To disappear behind the sun means to lose one’s sense of time.

P12 asked everyone present in the courtroom to spend five minutes of their time imagining that they are locked in a dark place where not one ray of light shines, where “even flies do not stray,” and where one knows no time. After a few days, one can no longer tell day from night, as if they did not exist at all. Light and darkness become meaningless, one forgets the imagery of trees and the smell of flowers. “But what is life without these small details?” asked P12.

He recalled that Einstein once discarded all scientific evidence and said, “I want to know that the moon exists whether I see it or not!” He was almost obsessed with the idea. In detention, people are driven insane because they are no longer sure of anything, said P12. He once cried simply because he heard the call to prayer, even though he is not religious. P12 cried because he heard a sound other than just the prison guards. He cried because for a moment, he remembered that life is more than the darkness he was living in. He cried in that moment, even though he did not cry during the daily torture routine.

P12 asked the people in the courtroom whether they knew the reason why he fled Syria. P12 said he did not flee out of fear of death, but out of fear of disappearing again. Eventually, the intelligence officers, one of whom was charged in this trial, managed to intimidate P12 and forced him to flee. P12 went on to explain that enforced disappearance is one of the main elements of a systematic regime policy to silence and get rid of critics. This method is well known and used by all collaborators of this regime. According to P12, the Defendant was an important and senior henchman of this regime. P12 further said that he fled because he did not want his family to experience for a third time the nightmare of never-ending questions weighing on their lives: Did they kill him? Is he still alive? Did they hang him somewhere? Did they break his back? Are they torturing him right now while we are eating? Did this happen and did that happen? P12 said despite the bitterness of the death of a loved one, the families of prisoners can at least come to terms, albeit painfully, with the uncertainty when the death of their loved one is confirmed to them. A distant and indeterminate hope, on the other hand, was more agonizing and exhausting, according to P12.

P12 went on to recall that when he was arrested by the Al-Khatib Branch, he was on his way to work. After his release, his then three-and-a-half-year-old son cried every time P12 left the house because he thought that if his father left, he would not come back. P12 said he never dared to promise his son to come back in the evening because he might not have been able to keep that promise, and in fact, that was exactly what happened: when P12 left, he did not come back until four years later.

P12 said what perhaps hurts more than the killing and torture is the enthusiasm of the government employees and officers in inflicting the greatest suffering to people. P12 was convinced that these employees were not just carrying out orders, but taking revenge on everyone for trying to take away their absolute power, the power given to them as ‘part of the regime’s control machine,’ a power that is outside of any law or moral code, and that they can use however and whenever it serves them.

P12 recalled the time when he was ten years old. At this time, he began to understand people’s fear of the Syrian intelligence and the warnings he received from those around him not to say anything that might displease the intelligence services. P12 said Syrian parents warned their children that any word could lead to the disappearance of the entire family. At the age of ten, P12 also began to be disgusted with everyone who worked for the intelligence services and with their family members who were proud to be in a position of power that allowed them to terrorize the people around them.

P12 told the Court that his uncle was arrested in the 1980s and was tortured for six years because he belonged to the Communist Party. Three members of one of P12’s friend’s family (the friend’s father, uncle and brother) disappeared and their whereabouts were unknown ever since. P12 said this happened merely because they were suspected of opposing the regime.

P12 said there is not a single Syrian, adult or child, who does not know about the crimes that the intelligence services have been committing. According to P12, anyone who volunteered to work for the intelligence services has consciously chosen to be a tool to commit crimes against humanity. To that extent, no intelligence officer, regardless of his position, could claim that he was merely following orders, that he was forced, or that his role was marginal. P12 said everyone in the intelligence services is an active part of that apparatus and responsible for his/her own actions. It goes without saying, said P12, that the higher one’s position, the more outrageous the crimes one is responsible for. More significantly, the higher one’s position, the more one was obviously aware of the fact that one would commit crimes when one joined the security forces.

P12 said he might have been able to forgive the Defendant for the crimes he committed against P12. However, in [Raslan’s] statement at the beginning of the Trial, [Raslan] did not show any remorse or sense of responsibility for the crimes he committed or contributed to. P12 said that instead, the Defendant claimed to this very day that there was no systematic torture at Al-Khatib Branch. P12 said he could have forgiven the Defendant because he is not looking for personal revenge, but for justice in the broadest sense. P12 wishes that in the future there is no safe space for the perpetrators of these crimes in Syria or anywhere else in the world.

In terms of a ‘minimum amount of justice,’ P12 demanded that those who committed such crimes in Syria should be held accountable. The Defendant in this trial would be one of them, according to P12. P12 illustrated that regardless of how long the Defendant would be imprisoned after this trial, he would still have a watch with him, be able to see the sun, know when it rises and when it sets. The Defendant would receive medical treatment if needed, and be allowed to be visited by his family who will know about his whereabouts and how he is doing, just like the Defendant would be able to know how his family is doing.

P12 said he survived, however, others were not as lucky as P12: [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED], her husband and six children, [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED], [REDACTED], and tens of thousands of people who deserved to be named individually in this courtroom and whose stories and the stories of the pain of their loved ones deserve to be told.

Closing Statement by P32

P32 began her statement by saying ‘my name is [REDACTED]. I breathe slowly and observe what is happening inside my head, when all the heads around me give the impression that they are awaiting my words. Everything inside me prevents me from saying the first word. It is the circumstance of appearing before the Court and the justice system that causes difficulties for me. It is rather the beginning. Beginnings have been challenging for me for quite some time. Beginnings are usually exhausting.’

P32 explained that she does not know how or where to start. Every day, from the first moment she wakes up in the morning, she just thinks about how to evade beginnings: the beginning of the day, beginning her rituals to wake up, the beginning of work, her upbringing, her obligations and meeting new faces each day without any sense.

P32 asked the Judges if they could imagine having to start their life all over again, while they are right in the middle of their lives. P12 said one has to start all over from the very beginning. One has to start at point zero, actually even below zero, due to having to live in a foreign country where everything is different from the country where one used to live. At the same time, one feels that the past experiences, the convictions and thoughts, as well as the society living under the rule of the regime, played a crucial role in shaping one’s personality.

P32 said she was used to a life in fear, terror, and lack of security. The regime made one believe that no one at all was entitled to demand their rights.

P32 described that both ‘practically and psychologically,’ she has to start her life all over again. She asked the Judges to imagine the effort, strength, strong will, and inner peace one needs to have in order to start all over again. At the same time, however, life could not simply be reset.

P32 explained that she does not want to be in the position of a victim and does not want to see herself as such. She said everyone is responsible for their own actions, regardless of the difficult circumstances they find themselves in throughout their lives. Nevertheless, it does not change the fact that the political, social, and dictatorial system does a fair share in forming or – more accurately – destroying, one’s personality. To be more precise, P32 said that no one who belonged to the people living under the regime had the opportunity to develop their own personality.

P32 said she believes in justice. She believes in the importance of this trial and in the importance of the verdict that will be handed down. The latter will not only affect the future of Syria, but society as a whole. The Trial would indeed be the first step of its kind since the start of the revolution. P32 concluded that she hopes the Judges will take into account that the verdict in this case has the power to change the lives of millions, depending on its outcome merely due to its importance for the Syrian country and its people.

Plaintiff Counsel Kroker requested a short break to get a fresh bottle of water for the next plaintiff.

Closing Statement by P42

After greeting the Judges, P42 explained that thanks to her confidence in the Counsels who represented her during the trial, she decided to deliver her own closing statement on this day. She added that the trial was not a routine procedure for her, and that this very day was not like any other ordinary day. This day would be “our day” – the day of the victims who, through this trial at this very Court were for the first time ever in a position to regain their voices and take action against those who deprived them of their liberty and against the crimes that have been committed against them.

P42 added that she also chose to speak in front of the Court on this day, despite the gravity of this task, because she felt a sense of obligation towards all those who have gone through similarly painful experiences and who do not have the same opportunity to tell their stories in front of a court or any other comparable legal institution. P42 said she first and foremost decided to speak on this day out of a sense of duty to those who are still held ‘in the detention centers of the Assad regime’ and in other prisons in Syria, those who do not know ‘that we are standing here today and who might never know.’

According to P42, her participation in this trial had on the one hand been a painful experience for her. She was forced to recall many memories that she previously tried to forget about for good. She told the Court that this process had a tremendous impact on both her physical and mental health. At the beginning of the trial, P42 did not know what to expect. On this very day in Court, however, P42 said that this difficult experience has restored her faith in justice. She concluded that justice is not an illusion, but a necessity, and it can eventually become a reality.

P42 went on to explain that with this trial, the story of her imprisonment would come to an end. Prior to the trial, P42 used to tell people how she was arrested, how she was deprived of her liberty, and how her rights were violated. From this day on, however, she could continue to tell her story and say that she helped to bring to justice one of the individuals responsible for these violations. P42 said this also helped her to ‘regain a portion of her violated dignity.’ Like many other Syrians, P42 had lost hope for a very long time. Her participation and involvement in the many layers of this trial restored P42’s faith in the importance and benefits of the struggle for a more just world. P42 said the ‘potential attainability of justice and change’ has been revealed to her through this trial. The trial has also rekindled her hope that what happened to her and others in Syria, and what was still happening there every day, was not where the story would end.

P42 explained that she says all this in complete awareness of the fact that what she was trying to express in words and emotions would merely be her own individual experience. To many Syrians who have lost their faith in justice, this might still seem like an illusion. P42 said this trial might be a small drop in the ocean, but on a personal level, it meant a lot to her. She said that this was the reason for her to have hope that all Syrians will once again believe in the value and reasons of their efforts.

P42 further addressed the Judges, recalling that the Defendant claimed to have helped prisoners. However, the very fact that ‘we’ are in this courtroom in Germany, far away from Syria, was proof enough that neither the Defendant, nor any of his colleagues provided P42 and other prisoners with any form of help, companionship, or empathy.

If the Defendant was to ask P42 on this very day about her hopes in what to achieve with this trial, P42 said that she would reply to him: 'I don't want you to experience the horror that I had to experience, and I don't want you to be forced to wait for a long time without knowing what will happen to you next, which is what burdened me most during the days of my imprisonment. But most of all, I do not wish for you to suffer torture, to die from it, or to be detained and imprisoned in an unjust manner, as you and other criminals have done to me and to millions of other Syrians many times over. I do, however, wish that this court will give you time, a lot of time, enough time to think about us, the victims and witnesses who have appeared here. To think about the faces, voices, and dreams of all those you met during the years that you worked in the prison. I wish for you to have a lot of time to reflect upon this at length, because I am convinced that you will not be able to hide from these thoughts.'

P42 went on to say that 'we Syrians' have fought and are still fighting for the liberation of their country from an inhumane regime, fighting for justice, and for the restoration of their personal dignity. P42 said Syrians deserved all that. Justice, dignity, and freedom are the fundamental rights of all individuals, said P42. What was happening in this courtroom on this very day should, according to P42, not remain a one-time event, nor should it be thought of as an act of generosity from anyone. It was rather the human, legal, and civic duty of every human being, of every judiciary, and of every state [to conduct such trials]. P42 said that the verdict that the Court will reach, would not mean full justice to Syrians, nor should it be seen as an alternative to a comprehensive and lasting solution to the issue of detainees in Syrian prisons or to the Syrian conflict as a whole. However, the Court's findings should be an urgent call to the German government and all governments around the world to take 'real action to save those who are still held in the regime's prisons, and in the larger prison called "Assad's Syria."'

Plaintiff Counsel Kroker requested another short technical break so that everyone inside the courtroom could hear the speakers loud and clear.

Closing Statement by P11

P11 started his closing statement with a quote from Nelson Mandela who said "what counts in life is not the mere fact that we have lived. It is what difference we have made to the lives of others that will determine the significance of the life we lead."

P11 went on to recall that '595 days have passed since the first hearing in this trial held on April 23, 2020. 595 days of testimonies and arguments about events that happened and are 'unfortunately' still happening in the prisons and detention centers of the Syrian regime. 595 days of horrific details recounted by survivors of the ravages of oppression and tyranny under Bashar Al-Assad and his henchmen.' P11 added that he himself recounted some of the horrific details during his testimony in Court. Other survivors who testified in the trial were those who managed to escape Syria and are now living in Europe, far from the direct threats of the 'Syrian repression apparatus.'

P11 said that on this very day, as on every other day, he wondered how many details have not yet been heard and will never be heard because those who experienced them died, either under direct torture or due to the ill-treatment and poor health conditions in the prisons. P11 also asked himself how many details were not obtained because those who experienced them cannot share them, since they still live in the areas ‘controlled by their jailers, who act as if they have the right to decide over life and death.’

Addressing everyone present inside the courtroom, P11 said that everyone was there to witness the trial of the former Colonel of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate, Anwar Raslan. P11 added that as soon as he hears the words “Colonel in the intelligence services,” he feels deeply frightened. According to P11, Syrians were raised in fear since their early childhood because of the crimes committed by intelligence officers in Syria. It had been like that for decades. P11 said fear grew inside every Syrian as a result of the atrocities they heard about, mostly only in private conversations with their closest friends and family members, speaking in a low voice; ‘because walls have ears,’ as a Syrian saying goes. P11 said if only a single sentence reaches an officer who disapproves it, ‘it may lead the speaker and listener alike to the unknown.’ Torture in Syria is unfortunately not a new practice, said P11. It is a method of governance on which successive regimes have been relying since the 1950s until this very day. Repressive regimes, including the Syrian regime under the rule of former President Hafez Al-Assad and his son Bashar Al-Assad, became used to the fact that the response to any opposition or political, social or economic demands is torture and violence, not dialogue or discussion, concluded P11.

P11 went on to describe that in Syria, civic engagement is considered suicide due to the looming dangers that await those who try to make a change, regardless of the type of change. To a dictator, change would be dangerous, said P11. And demanding change would be an unforgivable crime, and the only response to it is violence and bloodshed. P11 said that in Syria, this response comes at the hands of officers and intelligence agents who are well-versed in tools and types of torture and violence. They do it cold-bloodedly, without hesitation to kill, in order to preserve the dictator and their own positions within his system. According to P11, the charges against the accused, Anwar Raslan, are just the tip of this ‘dark iceberg.’ The killing of 58 people and the torture of more than 4,000 others, along with accusations of sexual violence, and other chilling details that are well-known to those who followed the proceedings, were the daily work of the defendant for months and even years, according to P11. However, the harm was not limited to the direct victims, said P11, but also affected their families and friends. One must talk about 4,000 families who suffered as a result of the crimes of Anwar Raslan. One must talk about a generation, if not generations, suffering from repression and deprivation as a result of what Anwar Raslan has done in serving the machinery of oppression in Syria, concluded P11. P11 then rhetorically asked ‘What could possibly be a more severe crime than for someone to torture you, kill you, forcibly remove you from your family, deprive you of any contact with them, or do all of this collectively and systematically as a direct punishment because you demanded what is rightfully yours?’

P11 went on to explain that he stood before this Court on this very day, demanding justice, not seeking revenge or retaliation. He said that the Syria he dreams of and continues to fight for must be based on justice and the rule of law, not on violence, counter-violence, revenge, and the ‘law of the jungle.’ P11 further said he did not know what the just sentence for severe crimes that the Defendant allegedly committed would be. However, P11 knew for sure that the verdict will be the first judicial ruling against a Syrian intelligence officer as a punishment for his practices while he was on the job.

P11 said the trial of Anwar Raslan will not end the suffering of Syrians. He recalled that some of the ongoing torture practices were documented in the 10th annual report on enforced disappearances in Syria, issued by the Syrian Network for Human Rights on August 30, 2021. According to the report, there are 131,469 people still in detention or enforcedly disappeared in Syria, by the Syrian regime. 131,469 families who are waiting for the verdict of this very Court, said P11. The verdict was the result of a fair trial, which allowed the Defendant to be represented and to communicate with the world outside his prison. P11 said this fair trial also respects the Defendant's dignity and considers him innocent until proven guilty. This is in complete contrast to everything that the Defendant consciously did during his work as an officer in Syrian intelligence since 1995, concluded P11.

P11 further told the Court that Syrians were looking forward to the day when their country, like other developed countries, will be a country that respects the rights of its citizens without violating them. P11 said Syrians were also looking forward to the day when they were no longer treated in ways disrespectful of their human rights. Syrians were looking forward to a future in which torture and forced confessions will not be politically or socially accepted. P11 added that Syrians are tired of the state of intransigence in Syria, where their blood had been shed over decades without anyone being held accountable, and with political talks in many countries about restoring relations with a 'criminal regime that is deliberately humiliating people regardless of the suffering of Syrians who are seeking a better future.' P11 turned to the Judges saying their judgement would be the first step on this long road. It would be a ruling that 'with a clear and unambiguous voice' holds 'the criminal' accountable, even if only after some time has passed since the crimes were committed. P11 added that the Court's ruling would also be one respecting human dignity and freedom as inviolable rights. Something that would be, although evidently given in Germany and many countries around the world, a dream for P11 and many Syrians. P11 concluded that the Court's ruling will be 'a resounding condemnation of torture as a crime in the first place.'

P11 said torture is a crime against humanity wherever it is committed, in Syria or any other part of this world. Syrians have been eagerly waiting for a judicial condemnation of torture for many decades. P11 admitted that despite the Court's upcoming verdict, the road for Syria will remain long and not end until the entire ruling system, especially the head of the Syrian regime, Bashar Al-Assad, and the senior officers of his army and intelligence, and perpetrators from all sides of the conflict, will be held accountable before a court.

P11 went on to thank everyone inside the courtroom on his own behalf and on behalf of many Syrians, including those inside Syria under the rule of the regime, in displacement camps inside Syria, or under asylum in neighboring countries. P11 said he would speak for all those who had the desire and courage to stand before this Court and testify but did not have the opportunity because they 'either drowned in the sea or froze in the forests on the borders on their journey to reach a safe country.' P11 added that to describe this journey, one must only look at the treatment of refugees as criminals at the borders of countries that were supposed to help them. P11 concluded that all this, however, would not be a mere Syrian story, but shared by many other people around the globe. P11 called repression 'the enemy of humanity, because it kills the most beautiful thing that makes us human: ambition.' He said injustice is the enemy of societies because it divides even brothers. He quoted the Arab poet Al-Mutanabbi who said in the 10th century that "the lack of fairness cuts ties between people, even if they were ties of blood." P11 concluded his statement by saying he bows to the justice of this Court and puts his faith in the Judges' judgement.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked whether there were other plaintiffs wanting to deliver their own closing statements. Plaintiff Counsel Kroker denied and explained that he would deliver his closing statements next, which would take around one hour, before his colleagues Scharmer and Bahns would follow with their closing statements.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker

Kroker first recalled that the Court just heard the moving statements from survivors who not only illustrated their suffering but their different hopes stemming from the sentencing of the Defendant.

According to Kroker, these hopes would be as different as the plaintiffs themselves. All of them experienced detention and its consequences differently. He explained that he and his colleagues Scharmer and Bahns worked together closely in representing their clients. Bahns and Scharmer will each detail the stories of their clients individually in their closing statements, while Kroker will address aspects relevant to all of them.

Kroker said that all plaintiffs were detained at the same prison: Branch 251 of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate in Damascus, Al-Khatib neighborhood. During the 16 and a half months which frames the indictment period of this trial, all of them experienced the horrors that were daily routine at this prison. In its legal notice on the 82nd trial day [day 84], the Judges considered the mental pressure caused by constant screams from torture and the uncertainty detainees felt surrounding their fate has met the threshold of torture as a crime against humanity as laid out in the German Code of Crimes Against International Law (VStGB). Kroker added that the plaintiffs further experienced severe physical and mental mistreatment. They also witnessed the violent deaths of their fellow detainees.

Kroker explained that the first part of his closing statements deals with the fact that all plaintiffs engaged in demanding freedom, demands to which the Syrian government reacted with violence completely disproportionate to the actual demands. The second part of his statement addresses the role of plaintiffs as part of a collective of injured persons. The third and last part of his closing statement addresses the fact that this trial illustrates the scope of crimes against humanity committed in Syria.

Kroker recalled that the plaintiffs represented by him and his colleagues all participated in historical actions that some would merely call “events”. Actions that these plaintiffs would, however, call a “revolution”. All of them peacefully participated in these activities. Nonetheless, it was hard for outsiders to imagine the immense bravery required to participate in these peaceful activities. Kroker said that after decades of suppression, Syrians knew exactly what they had to face when opposing the regime. In his closing statement, P12 explained that at the age as young as 10-years-old he already knew about the decade long history of systematic torture in Syria. Kroker mentioned that expert Thurmman also told the Court about the torture system that existed since the 1980s and increased in quality and quantity from 2011 on, including sexual violence against men and women. People also died from torture before and after the revolution, something that Mazen Darwish and Anwar Al-Bunni both confirmed to the Court. Al-Bunni also stated that following the massacre in Hama, threats for Syrian civil population increased.

According to Kroker, Branch 251 specifically was an integral pillar of the repression machinery run by the Syrian government. The Defendant worked for this machinery since 1995 and since 2008 at a dedicated investigation division. Kroker added that P10 also told the Court that Branch 251 had always had a bad reputation in Syria and Anwar Al-Bunni and Mazen Darwish spoke about the central role of Branch 251 within the General Intelligence Directorate. Al-Bunni also told the Court about mistreatment in 1987. Kroker added that P35 described in Court how he was arrested in 2007 and severely tortured at Branch 251. According to what Mazen Darwish told the Court, the Syrian intelligence services were well prepared to deal with the freedom movement starting as early as February 2011. Fear of being detained therefore dominated the activities of those participating in peaceful protest. This was also the dominating feeling during the first weeks and months of demonstrations in Syria, said Kroker. Although people saw the revolutions in Tunisia and Egypt, they never imagined anything comparable to be possible in Syria as well. Many were of the opinion that such movements could not be carried out in Syria. Kroker said it took until March 2011 for the full potential of civil society to unfold in Syria. Kroker recalled how many of the plaintiffs also described these events to the Court and how overwhelmed they were because it had previously been impossible to merely talk with close friends about criticism of the government. However, suddenly thousands of people took to the streets. Kroker referred to Mazen Darwish's testimony in which Darwish called this movement a "scream for freedom." However, the regime replied to it with unprecedented brutality. The aim was to crush all opponents, even as early as February 2011. Kroker said that at this point, the regime already had all torture tools at hand to conduct its revenge and retribution, and to break people's will. Al-Khatib and its loyal employees played a central role in these efforts, as the Court was told multiple times during the trial proceedings by many witnesses and by police investigators who introduced the testimonies of witnesses who declined to testify in Koblenz.

Kroker went on to say that the start of the indictment period of this trial, April 29, 2011, was a relatively late date to determine as the start of systematic and widespread violence in Syria. According to Kroker, many wished for an earlier date. They think that the threshold of crimes against humanity had already been met by March 2011. Even at the early demonstrations, people were arrested. Kroker said his and his colleagues' clients were incredibly brave at this time to continue while being faced with this systematic violence. As soon as detainees entered the detention facility, they were exposed to a systematic procedure: first they were frisked, then they faced more mistreatment, which eventually deprived them of their humanity, as did the overall conditions to which the detainees were exposed. Kroker said the Prosecutors already provided a very detailed analysis of these aspects to which he and his colleagues agree. Kroker therefore only highlighted a few aspects.

According to Kroker, the physical and psychological destruction of opponents was indeed the aim of the regime, however, it was also an end in itself. P10 for example told the court that detainees were treated like animals as revenge for questioning the authority of the state. Anwar Al-Bunni also described that the only demand was freedom, then people were tortured to death, only for the regime to satisfy its desire for revenge. According to Kroker, the violence was supposed to intimidate the "terrorists" and to seek revenge. However, even this line was crossed: children were detained and tortured, people had to watch others be tortured, and people were forced to eat their own feces. The dominating approach was [to engage in] pointless violence [for the sake of it] without any purpose.

Kroker said that this situation was impressively illustrated by the Caesar Files, that were also shown in court. According to Kroker, the Syrian government accepted every means to break peoples will. Death was often intended or at least recklessly accepted. The Caesar Files also showed that this violence was entirely disproportionate. Kroker recalled the forensic analysis of the Caesar Files conducted by Professor Dr. Rothschild who said that this was beyond everything he had seen in his 30-year-long career and that he even had to look up certain injuries because he had never seen them before. The Caesar Files furthermore showed the meticulous documentation of deaths that Bashar Al-Assad ordered for internal purposes, as explained by Garance Le Caisne and Sami. The fate of detainees was willingly disguised to also terrorize their relatives. Kroker said it was only thanks to the brave actions of Caesar, Sami and their supporters that the world learned about this horror. Kroker recalled that when he met Caesar and Sami in 2017, they were disappointed that the pictures from the Caesar Files did not have had any meaningful impact. They had hoped that the pictures would contribute to judicial processes. Kroker added that even though the two of them had not been in Koblenz, Kroker could say on their behalf that they closely followed the proceedings and are happy that impunity for these crimes was fought for the first time.

Kroker explained that he would now turn to the second part of his statement, focusing on the collective violations. He started by recalling that in a speech on March 30, 2011, Bashar Al-Assad called the people who supported protests "terrorists." According to Kroker, Mazen Darwish also confirmed this in one sentence: "it was an open war." Kroker said that being part of this movement, his clients were not only individual targets of the security forces but targeted as opposition. Some of them were arrested merely because when they passed a check point, it was noted that they came from a neighborhood known to support the opposition. They were oftentimes arrested for things that were not illegal at all: peacefully demonstrating for children's rights or distributing medicine. However, they were considered terrorists because law was suspended to persecute them.

Kroker said it was also the goal of Branch 251 and Anwar Raslan to hurt the opposition as a whole. In this vein, the Judges already found in their judgment on February 24, 2021, that the requirements for a widespread and systematic attack pursuant to § 7 VStGB were met. However, the consequences of these crimes remained unaddressed. Kroker said the research on mass graves showed the particularly painful de-individualization of people. The entire torture system in Syria was aimed at this de-individualization, according to Kroker. All people became one massive entity. The analysis of the Caesar Files, which was introduced in court by CCI Deußing, showed that people were assigned numbers and, even in death, remained anonymous due to these numbers. P14 described the system of mass graves in his testimony. Kroker said the continuous de-individualization was particularly painful for the victims.

Regarding torture at the Branch, Kroker said that many plaintiffs have told the Court about how they were tortured during their detention. They were exposed to the prison staff, completely defenseless. A circumstance that they were aware of at the moment [detainees] entered the Branch, when they were forced to undress, and their body openings were searched. Kroker called this practice a "demonstration of power." He said that all detainees were exposed to an immense risk of mistreatment and to the screams of other detainees being mistreated, which they could constantly hear. Every contact with a guard was associated with fear and violence. Kroker added that the feeling of powerlessness in the face of the constant danger intensified the permanent humiliation of detainees and led to psychosocial degradation.

He went on to say that in testifying about unimaginable things, the plaintiffs proved how different each of them experienced and coped with the mistreatment they had to suffer. They also showed that they are no longer degraded objects, but actors in a judicial process. They showed that they do not let fear keep them from demanding justice, not only for themselves, but on behalf of many others who could not demand the same because they are dead, detained, or not residing in a European country with access to systems of states governed by the rule of law. On behalf of his clients, Kroker said that the plaintiffs hope this trial will contribute to respecting human dignity in migration policies and increase solidarity of others with the Syrian community.

Kroker added that detention at Branch 251 also had a social component. Many of the plaintiffs who testified in this trial were detained with their closest friends or family. In detention, they were often threatened that their friends and families would be hurt as well. According to Kroker, cultural and social components can significantly impede the [the process of] coping with suffering in [situations of] collective violations. It was hard to deal with these experiences oneself if unable to talk to persons of trust because everyone has to fight their own trauma. Kroker said this circumstance must be recognized in assessing this case, in addition to the charged crimes.

Kroker continued with a section on important aspects of the trial for his and his colleagues' clients. He explained that in order to address these aspects, he has to recall the development of this case. He recalled how structural investigations into the Syrian conflict were initiated in Germany by the Federal Prosecutor General in 2011, amongst others, thanks to the principle of universal jurisdiction enshrined in § 1 VStGB; thanks to the existence and tireless work of specialized War Crimes Unit at the German Federal Criminal Police Office and the Office of the Federal Prosecutor General; and thanks to cooperation amongst European countries and with Syrian civil society organizations who united early on to collect evidence, making it available to prosecution authorities and taking care of survivors. Kroker said his and his colleagues' clients had to re-learn life from scratch. They were injured and had to leave their home country. They had to re-organize their lives in foreign countries fighting all odds and fighting for the truth to be unveiled and those responsible for their suffering to be held accountable. Kroker referred to the ICC PTC Decision in Katanga in which a single judge found that victims of atrocity crimes have the right to have the truth be established by a judicial process. Kroker said it was therefore a main concern for his and his colleagues' clients that the scope of the widespread and systematic attack by the Syrian government against the Syrian people was made visible and represented in this trial. Regarding the scope of the systematic and widespread attack, the Judges already provided detailed deliberations in their judgment on February 24, 2021. The prosecutors also extensively assessed this context in their closing statement on December 2, 2021. Kroker said that while agreeing with these assessments, he just wanted to highlight two additional aspects on behalf of his and his colleagues' clients.

First, the decision not to include enforced disappearances as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 7 VStGB to the charges is not in accordance with the sense of justice of the plaintiffs represented by Kroker and his colleagues. According to Kroker, enforced disappearances are a big part of crimes against humanity committed in Syria. His colleague Bahns will provide further elaborations on this issue in his closing statement.

Secondly, Kroker recalled that sexual violence was at first not charged as a crime against humanity. He and his colleagues therefore requested a legal notice on charging sexual violence as a crime against humanity, which was eventually accepted by the Judges on March 17, 2021, and further detailed on subsequent trial days. Kroker said the Judges found in their legal notices that three female plaintiffs experienced sexual assault as a crime against humanity. In their closing statement, the Prosecutors argued that there were two instances of rape as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB, as Kroker recalled. He added that his colleague Scharmer would elaborate further on sexualized violence regarding their other clients in his closing statements. Kroker concluded that both the Judges and the Prosecutors share the view that sexual violence was committed systematically and widespread and as part of the attack against the Syrian civilian population. They share the view that sexual violence was not applied occasionally, but was a special part of the persecution apparatus of the Syrian government which was particularly suited to destroy the opposition. According to Kroker, sexual violence was used to undermine the opposition, to break its physical, psychological, and social existence.

Kroker explained that especially in Syria, sexual violence is an effective means of torture from which particularly females have to suffer due to the patriarchic norms. The honor of a family was borne by females, said Kroker. This is why sexual violence against women has particularly severe consequences. He recalled P16's testimony during which she spoke about divorces, killings, and being outcasted by their families, as consequences for women who were victims of sexual violence in detention. Kroker added that unmarried women might no longer be able to get married following sexual violence. It was always suspected that female detainees were subject to sexual violence due to prejudices about such violence in detention, as P16 told the Court. Kroker said male victims of sexual violence also described that they suffered depression because they were unable to share their stories and to fulfil gender stereotypes. According to expert Thurmann, sexual violence was in conformity with the system of abuse in Syria. Kroker added that this analysis was also confirmed by P19, Anwar Al-Bunni, Mazen Darwish, Mr. Lindemann, and CCI Deußing.

Kroker recalled that Anwar Al-Bunni told the Court that his organization had documented countless cases of sexual violence committed by the intelligence services, amongst others at Al-Khatib Branch.

Sexual violence was used as means of humiliation. This was also achieved by constant sexual insults and threats, as P32, P19, and P16 confirmed. Kroker added that the ritual performed upon arrival of new detainees at Branch 251 can be considered sexual intimidation. He recalled that P11, P16, P1, P39 and other witnesses described how they had to undress until naked, perform so called “security moves”, and some of them even described how they were touched during this procedure. Kroker said that even if female detainees were frisked by female officers, the procedure was still humiliating given the defenseless situation of the detainees. This feeling was furthered when detainees were beaten throughout this procedure. Kroker said the procedure was a demonstration of dominance by the guards over the detainees’ bodies. Kroker added that P39 and P1 were tortured while naked. Kroker concluded by saying that undressing [forced nudity] should be considered sexual violence pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB in the judgment.

Kroker recalled that the Prosecutors were of the opinion that sexual assault was the catchall element of the Rome Statute in light of provisions on sexual violence in the ICTY’s and ICTR’s statutes. Kroker explained that at the ICTR, forced nudity was considered sexual violence if it was of comparable gravity as other sexual conduct. This was the case here, said Kroker. He added that the detention conditions and humiliation further aggravated the conduct. According to Kroker, the frisks conducted at Branch 251 were therefore not at all comparable with frisks performed in German prisons, as the Prosecutors argued. Kroker recalled that, according to P33’s descriptions, the frisks were performed in a room where the walls were covered in blood, with a strong smell inside the room, and a torture tool lying on the floor. Timing and circumstances of forced nudity consequently amounted to physical coercion. Kroker further explained that detainees were usually forced to undress in front of others. It was thereby irrelevant whether the procedure was aimed at sexual satisfaction of the guards and nurses, as the Prosecutors already found based on jurisprudence from the Federal Court of Justice on § 184h StGB (old version).

Kroker went on to explain that to know the truth about what happened in Syria would also mean to know the truth about the responsibility of Anwar Raslan. He was the ‘investigator’ overseeing everything, giving orders, and maybe at times shortening the detention of certain people. Kroker recalled that the prosecutors also agreed with this conclusion, however, Anwar Raslan himself only provided a very limited contribution to establishing the truth. According to Kroker, Raslan’s contribution was limited to his contradicting statements which were further contradicted by the evidence presented in this trial. Kroker said his clients had hoped that Anwar Raslan would contribute to unveiling the truth about what happened in Syria, and they asked him to do so. Kroker recalled that everything that Raslan provided pointed at An-Na’saan and Hafez Makhoulf. However, Raslan was in the position to make valuable contributions. Kroker recalled that in September 2011, Raslan was member of a crisis committee together with Hafez Makhoulf and in November 2012 participated in a meeting at the Ministry of Interior. No one is better positioned to provide information on the situation and context in Syria at that time, concluded Kroker. He directly addressed Anwar Raslan, saying that it was not too late for him to speak.

Kroker went on to say that overall, the trial proceedings contributed to illustrating the scope of the systematic and widespread attack against the civil population and the individual sufferings of Syrians. According to Kroker, this result of the trial would be visible far away and other countries would look at what is happening in Koblenz and Germany at this time and in the future. Kroker recalled Bashar Al-Assad claiming that “it is all lies. There is no torture.” In this vein, Kroker said his clients also appreciated the general social dimension of this trial. Of course, the trial primarily addressed the individual culpability of the Defendant. However, it also had an effect on society as a whole. Kroker referred to the victims of the attack on Bataclan in Paris who said that the subsequent trial was a chance for them to understand what happened by recreating the events. Kroker said the same was true especially in trials under the VStGB, given the wider context. In this trial, the context was enforced disappearances, torture, and sexual violence. He recalled that thousands of people suffered from torture in Syria. More than 55,000 reportedly died of government torture and were buried in mass graves. The trial also showed the involvement of hospitals in the Syrian state-led torture system. Kroker concluded the trial was therefore of great significance for Syria, which no one could imagine.

He further recalled that around 150,000 Syrians were living in Germany, and around 1 million in the European Union. Kroker said his and his colleagues' clients had hoped that the work of the Judges in Koblenz would be shared in Germany and that it would be made available. However, they were disappointed. It was only the Federal Constitutional Court who made Arabic language interpretation available for the public, and only for accredited journalists. Kroker said only organizations with sufficient resources were able to report about the trial days. Their clients' hopes regarding the partial recording of the trial pursuant to § 169 (2) GVG which allows for audio-visual recordings of trials of paramount significance for the contemporary history of the German Federal Republic, were disappointed. Kroker said he knew about three requests to the judges in this regard. All of them addressed concerns about affecting witness testimonies by, for example, offering to ask each witness for permission to record his/her testimony or only recording expert testimonies such as those of Professor Dr. Rothschild, Garance Le Caisne, Anwar Al-Bunni, Mazen Darwish, and Riad Saif. The last request to record this trial merely requested the recording of the closing statements. In addition, the recording would have been protected by a 30-year-long concealment period, requiring the Court in Koblenz to agree to the disclosure after reviewing the material. Nonetheless, this request was denied as well. Kroker recalled that the denial was justified by arguing that this trial was of no outstanding significance for the Federal Republic of Germany. However, former Minister of Justice, Christine Lambrecht, explicitly mentioned the Koblenz trial in her contribution to the German newspaper FAZ on the 75th anniversary of the Nuremberg Trials. Former Foreign Minister Heiko Maas mentioned the trial in his speech addressing the UNGA, and the Koblenz trial was the only trial that was mentioned in the invitation to the UNSC meeting on Syria. Kroker said that in light of this, the Judges' assessment of the trial's importance for the Federal Republic of Germany is not understandable. The argument that the trial might be of importance for the Syrian people but at the same time not for the Federal Republic of Germany is also not understandable. Kroker recalled that 750,000 Syrians are part of German society, some of his clients even have German citizenship. They all contribute to German society. Kroker concluded that it was very regrettable that only the judgments and the products from NGOs and journalists would be accessible to the public.

Kroker concluded his closing statement by mentioning the names of his clients whose personal interest it was to receive some redress from this trial. However, to those who heard the descriptions of what happened to [Kroker's clients], there is no redemption for what has been done. Kroker referred to the Austrian-Jewish writer Jean Améry who admits in his book "Jenseits von Schuld und Sühne" that there is always a certain feeling of distrust in the world left.

Kroker said the upcoming verdict in this trial can guide [the world] in the direction that killing, rape, torture, and enforced disappearances committed in Syria are not accepted and will be prosecuted in Koblenz. Kroker said he hopes and thinks that thanks to universal jurisdiction, the plaintiffs hope in this world was at least partially rebuilt.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer

After greeting the Judges, the parties to the case and the audience, Scharmer said that after more than 100 trial days, he was now speaking on behalf of his clients, who are survivors of the most brutal crimes against humanity committed in Syria. He asked the Judges to legally and factually consider his closing statement as part of one big statement in cooperation with his colleagues Kroker and Bahns.

Scharmer started by saying that the personal statements from the plaintiffs spoke for themselves. However, he would like to remind everyone who this trial was all about. One would reflexively say that this trial was about the question of guilt and legal consequences for the Defendant, Anwar Raslan. However, this is inaccurate according to Scharmer. He explained that criminal trials had always been conducted within a certain historical and social context. The sentencing in this trial would therefore be secondary. Scharmer said this trial is all about the truth. The Higher Regional Court in Koblenz was the first to legally qualify the systematic and widespread attack against the Syrian civil population by Bashar Al-Assad's government as crimes against humanity. According to Scharmer, Al-Assad and his fellow criminals would always be omnipresent in the courtroom as well, although invisible. Anwar Raslan might disapprove of this attack because he defected. Nonetheless, the Court has to address the actions of the Syrian regime due to the systematic and widespread attack that is the framework for the crimes against humanity dealt with in this trial. Scharmer said the Judges put an emphasis on this framework, thereby giving hope to the world and especially Syrians that crimes of the Al-Assad government will not be left unpunished. The Judges assessed the systematic and widespread attack in an independent and fair trial, said Scharmer.

Scharmer said that these "unimaginable horrors" were not only documented in reports but also directly in Court. He said that the Prosecutors already evaluated the evidence in detail and he would not repeat these findings and only focus on individual significant aspects. Scharmer recalled how P14 told the Court about how he was forced to contribute to the disposal of corpses. Corpses of which many were killed by the General Intelligence Directorate and delivered to mass grave sites in cooling trucks on a daily basis. Scharmer added that many of the corpses showed signs of electric shocks, blue and black bodies, ripped out fingernails, and sometimes unrecognizable faces. Among these corpses were women as well as children. Scharmer said he would never forget how P14 described the smell and flood of blood coming from the trucks once he opened the gates. It was not determined how many corpses were buried in the 100 meters long and 6 meters wide graves; probably more than one can imagine. Scharmer said he would neither forget the trial day when Professor Dr. Rothschild analyzed the Caesar Files, showing at least 6,821 corpses in 26,938 pictures. All these people were marked by torture and the horrible detention conditions. Scharmer said that without these pictures taken by former military photographer Caesar and smuggled abroad with the help of his friend Sami, this trial and people's comprehension of the atrocities in Syria would probably be impossible. In the name of the survivors, Scharmer thanked the Court for their consideration of the Caesar Files.

However, P14 and the Caesar Files only represented a small fraction of the crimes against humanity committed in Syria. Scharmer said the dimensions are so hard to capture that there is a risk of starting to think in terms of numbers. According to Scharmer, it was, however, all about the fates of human beings. He said that "the true heroes of establishing the truth are the survivors." Scharmer said he had the honor of getting to know nine of them and representing them in this trial.

He started to recall the testimonies and stories of his clients, starting with P11. Scharmer added that even Anwar Raslan himself admitted in his statement that he interrogated P11. Scharmer said it was important for him that the Court would not consider P11 and his other clients as mere objects. Of course, detention at Al-Khatib Branch had severe psychosocial consequences for all of them. Nonetheless, it is even more impressive that detention did not keep them from continuing to fight for the opposition.

Scharmer then recalled P12's story. He added that P12 bounced back and continued his fight for independent journalism. He only fled Syria after his second detention. Scharmer then recalled P19's testimony, adding that even after being released from Kafar Souseh, she continued to engage with the opposition in Syria. Only after five arrests did she decide to flee the country and today is continuing her fight from abroad.

With regard to P32, Scharmer explained that everyone copes with their trauma differently. One could see the suffering on the face of some of them. Others were unable to speak. According to Scharmer, re-traumatization through witness testimonies was a serious concern for these witnesses. He recalled the prosecutors saying in their closing statement that they believed P32, but they also acknowledged the discrepancy relating to time and place of certain sexual assaults, eventually preventing her testimony from being considered in the judgment in this regard. Scharmer said the Prosecutors joined the plaintiffs' motion to charge sexual assaults as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB. However, he asked "how would P32 benefit from that when her individual suffering would not be acknowledged?" According to Scharmer it would be certain that P32 was detained together with her mother at Al-Khatib Branch, and that she was massively tortured at the Branch and suffered from physical assaults. This was correctly acknowledged by the Prosecutors, concluded Scharmer. He added that since P32 was not detained again, one can be certain that all her descriptions referred to Branch 251. She was able to clearly differentiate what happened to her at Division 40, Kafar Souseh, and Adra prison. Scharmer said P32 further described how she was beaten by Abu Ghadab with his fists in a torture room at Al-Khatib Branch. After that, she received electric shocks while sitting on a chair, and then was exposed to the German Chair. Scharmer said P32 described all that in the trial. After being confronted with quotes from her previous police interview, P32 also told the Court how she was hung from her wrists while being sexually harassed by Abu Ghadab who touched her, though she was fully dressed. Scharmer explained that without further details, Abu Ghadab touching P32 qualified as sexual assault. P32 told the police that she could not remember the sexual assault in detail. However, she also told the police that she fell unconscious and was taken to a different room and that this violence was the reason for her trauma. Scharmer said one must not forget that P32 described multiple incidents, a fact that was however, not considered by others. He recalled that at the police interview, P32 identified Abu Shamleh, calling him the person "responsible for mistreatment at the prison." She described how he touched her breasts through the grids of her cell and made sexual comments. Scharmer said P32 described this in Court as well. It was obvious that she remembers such a situation despite her trauma. Scharmer added that regarding the vanished memories relating to Abu Ghadab, he has confidence in the Judges' expertise regarding the effects of trauma on human memory in situations of stress. Scharmer said P32 was merely unable to remember due to so many people being present. In favor of her credibility, one must also consider that after being confronted with quotes from her police interview, P32 did not try to revise previous descriptions, but she clearly described what she was able to remember. It would be enough if only one guard committed such acts. According to Scharmer, P32's descriptions of the incident involving Abu Shamleh would therefore leave no doubt. Scharmer concluded his assessment of P32's testimony by saying that the testimony of her mother, P33, supported P32's descriptions. P33 was arrested in April 2021 and described Abu Ghadab and Abu Shamleh to the Court and how she was threatened to be raped.

Scharmer went on to say that for P38, it was the drive to Al-Khatib Branch that was particularly traumatic. It was good that P38 was given the opportunity to talk about this experience in Court, because his story illustrated the unimaginable horror and fear of the regime. Scharmer recalled how P38 described that the corpse of a 15-year-old boy was displayed in front of a car and how the boy's siblings were scared of the security forces who killed their brother. Scharmer said the picture of the boy's corpse burnt into [P38's memory] who then randomly told the Court about his own detention and the torture he had to endure. For example, P38 described how he was treated like an animal and how a guard was told to show P38 ‘how things are done here’. Scharmer recalled that P38 further described how he was kicked in his genitals and beaten with the four-wired cable that ripped off parts of his flesh. Scharmer concluded that nevertheless, after his release P38 continued to equip field hospitals before he eventually fled Syria.

Scharmer also recalled P39’s detention story, how a guard was told to get P39 ‘out of here’ and the inhuman detention conditions he had to endure. Scharmer also recalled how P39 was exposed to electric shocks while he was naked and covered in water, how he was threatened that his wife and daughters would be hurt, and how he developed a fatherly friendship with a minor detainee who was raped with a wooden stick at Al-Khatib Branch. Scharmer said P39 described to the Court how the boy had suffered from the rape because he was unable to talk about it with anyone due to social norms and the bad reputation it would cause to talk about such things. Scharmer concluded that although P39 was detained twice, in 2012 and 2013, he did not let detention break him. He only fled Syria and went to the EU in 2015 when he had no more reason to live in Syria.

Scharmer went on to recall P46’s detention story as well. Scharmer explained that in addition to describing his detention at Al-Khatib Branch, P46 also described his stay at the “the torture hospital, Harasta”. Through these descriptions, the Court had a good impression of how torture was committed by Al-Khatib Branch [not necessarily at the Branch]. P46 had told the Court that there were different halls for different intelligence branches at Harasta Hospital, amongst others, one for Branch 251. Scharmer said one cannot talk about medical treatment at all when referring to this hospital. There were corpses on the hallways and patients were mistreated. Scharmer found P46’s description of how he stumbled over the corpse of a 12-year-old boy at the toilet and how another patient died right next to him in the same bed, particularly impressive. Scharmer recalled that after his stay at the hospital, P46 was transferred back to Al-Khatib Branch where he again had to endure inhumane detention conditions, was interrogated, had hot melted plastic poured on his back, and where the detainees were forced to drink the dirty water of the air conditioning. P46 still had scars from his detention on his hands, back, and feet until this very day and suffers from the psychosocial consequences. According to Scharmer, P46 also heard from fellow detainees who were tortured with the German Chair which broke their spines, from fellow detainees who were beaten on their genitals with batons, from fellow detainees to whose genitals the guards attached a bag with water. Scharmer recalled P46 telling the Court that one night, a fellow detainees died in the community cell and that he saw three more corpses after his return from Harasta Hospital. Scharmer concluded that after his release, P46 continued to engage in protests and eventually fled to Germany in 2013 where he now lived as a successful author and comedian. According to Scharmer, P46’s statements in Court and during his police interview were credible, including his descriptions of how he identified Anwar Raslan. Scharmer said that P46 already told the police that he did not see the person he identified as Anwar Raslan very clearly. P46 did not say anything else in Court, said Scharmer. P46 did not show any eagerness to incriminate the Defendant. Scharmer asked why P46 would lie in Court when it would actually discharge the defendant.

Scharmer then went on to recall P48’s detention story. P48 concluded after his testimony that it was a small comfort for him that at least his detention served a good purpose, however, he had accepted that the Syrian regime would behave like that and that he could not do anything about it.

Scharmer said it was very impressive that all these survivors and thousands more continued to go to the street, protesting against the inhumane regime even after their painful experiences at Al-Khatib Branch. According to Scharmer, they all “are the heroes of this trial” who accepted the risk of re-traumatization to contribute to establishing the truth by publicly speaking about their experiences.

With regard to the defendant, Anwar Raslan, Scharmer said that he had worked his way up within the intelligence services in Syria. Even before the revolution, he accepted torture which was his daily business. Scharmer said that things had been like that during Hafez Al-Assad's reign and continued under Bashar Al-Assad. By accepting that, Raslan made his way to a Colonel at the General Intelligence Directorate, the second highest position one could achieve. He achieved that despite being a Sunni. Scharmer said Raslan's career was not unplanned. It was no coincidence that he became Colonel and the head of interrogations at Al-Khatib Branch. Raslan worked hard: a 120%. Scharmer recalled that in 2012, Raslan was officially representing the General Intelligence Directorate in meetings. His position also came with many benefits. According to Scharmer, Raslan only chose the path of least resistance in 2012 when he eventually went to Jordan and defected. However, this was irrelevant. Everything that Raslan described about his time in Jordan and other aspects of his escape he only did to not be seen as a keen enthusiast of the Syrian regime, for example on his arrival in Jordan.

Scharmer said he requested the same sentence as the Prosecutors: a life sentence finding the particular severity of guilt. He directly addressed Raslan, saying that in case of this sentence, the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz would decide on the rest of his sentence as early as thirteen years from now. He would not be able to request a suspension of his sentence earlier than that. Scharmer explained that at this point, it will be important how Raslan behaved after the verdict. According to Scharmer, thousands of Syrians, not only in Germany but everywhere will still wait for answers. Scharmer told Raslan to help these people and share the data and information currently in his possession. Scharmer added that "to be honest, no one believes the story that the data was destroyed while the kids were playing on the computer."

Scharmer said he would like to thank all parties to the case for their fair and humane treatment. One must consider the question of guilt and the legal consequences within the historical context. According to Scharmer, the Court's finding will help the international community to figure out how to characterize Bashar Al-Assad's government. Scharmer ended his closing statement by saying that the systematic crimes of torture and killing were committed by the regime with whom one should not negotiate but who should be put on trial.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Bahns

After greeting the parties to the case, Plaintiff Counsel Bahns started his closing statement by thanking the Judges for their thoughtful and appropriate interactions with his clients. He added that, in long trials like this one, it often comes down to the small details in the end. Bahns recalled how overwhelmed one of his clients was when Judge Wiedner went to get him a bottle of water because he was so surprised that a Judge would approach him in such a relatable manner. Bahns also thanked the Prosecutors and the defense team for their work. He said special thanks go to the interpreters who are so important for trials like this. He therefore felt even more sorry for only providing them with a bullet point of his closing statement rather than a fully drafted speech, said Bahns. He also thanked the NGOs who are determined to address the crimes committed in Syria, particularly the ECCHR. Lastly, Bahns thanked his clients and all other survivors for their selfless fight for freedom. Bahns said one must pay their highest respect to all of them. He then thanked the witnesses who testified on behalf of all disappeared, detained, and killed people in Syria. They testified in Court despite the immense burden and traumatic experiences. Bahns went on to say that he represented several survivors of Branch 251/Al-Khatib Branch who endured detention and torture.

First, Bahns recalled the story of P30 as the witness described it in Court. According to Bahns, many witnesses described their experiences in Court. There were consequently several repetitions. However, the small details are what make these descriptions tangible. P30 for example described to the Court how detainees smelled as newly arrived detainees because they did not smell like the overcrowded cell. P30 also told the Court about a child that was detained at the Branch. Bahns said that on behalf of his client P30 he would like to state that P30 considers this trial to be important for the future of Syrian society and hopes that the ones responsible know that they will be held accountable.

Bahns then recalled P47's descriptions of collective punishment at the Branch and the mock executions he had to witness. One thing that Bahns said he remembered very well from P47's testimony was that an elderly man was detained to pressure his sons. Bahns added that P47's family asked for him at every possible office, including Al-Khatib Branch and did not know where he had been until his release. He was only released thanks to bribes. A usual procedure said Bahns.

He went on to recall P34's story. P34 was released by being left on the street where he had difficulty finding a taxi to take him home. Once he arrived home thanks to the help of a taxi driver, he learned that his other three brothers were still in detention. Later, P34 identified his brother-in-law on one of the pictures in the Caesar Files. Bahns recalled that P34 told the Court that one who was detained simply disappeared. P34 had asked Bahns to read out a statement on his behalf:

After apologizing for not being able to speak in Court himself, P34 thanked the Judges, Prosecutors, and Plaintiff Counsels. P34 described that he was unable to imagine what it would be like to face a member of the [Syrian government] system and that he had lost hope that justice would be achieved one day. While Bashar Al-Assad destroyed the Syrian people and its cities, the world was watching. P34 therefore wanted to thank Germany for being the only country to conduct such prosecutions. In his letter, P34 then directly addressed Anwar Raslan by saying that "Mister Raslan will never be able to understand the suffering and pain I feel." P34 said he only saw his father and brothers in his dreams. He could never again visit his homeland and the graves of his loved ones. P34 said he cannot describe this pain. However, he is relieved that these crimes were investigated and that someone was held accountable. P34 concluded by thanking Germany and expressing his hope that more responsible persons will be put on trial in the future.

After reading out P34's statement, Bahns recalled the testimony of P17 who was not detained at Al-Khatib Branch, but who's brother was detained at his place of work on the same day when P17 was arrested. Bahns said that after their arrests, P17's other brother and his cousin [P18] searched for them. P18 had told the Court how he approached Anwar Raslan several times until he was eventually allowed to meet him. However, Raslan simply told P18 to just take any corpse and stop causing problems. Bahns said that P18 and his cousin were told to take a corpse from the military hospital. Raslan did not provide further information about the alleged death of P17's brother. Bahns said the search of P17's brother and his cousin P18 for the corpse of P17's brother was completely "grotesque." Bahns added that there were different reports on the fate of P17's brother. Most information indicated that he already died at the beginning of his detention at Al-Khatib Branch. However, the issue could not be resolved during the trial. P17 even directly turned to Anwar Raslan and asked him to say what happened to his brother. Raslan, however, only provided a statement read out by his Counsel that says he was informed about the arrest of a doctor but did not find him among the detainees. Bahns concluded that P17 and his entire family are suffering from the uncertainty until this very day.

Bahns moved on to provide “a short note on the importance of plaintiff participation in trials like this.” He said that defense teams and courts were often unhappy with plaintiffs participating in trials. One could even ask whether their participation might be redundant in this trial. According to Bahns, one could argue that the two Defense Counsels, the Prosecutors, and the Judges each did a conscientious job and plaintiff participation would therefore only be burdensome for such a trial. It could be argued that the plaintiffs’ representation is an additional logistical challenge that raised the costs of a trial, and if [the representation is] actively engaged, could require additional time and efforts. Bahns said that after hearing four of the plaintiffs on this day, such questions must not be asked. Plaintiff representation would neither be redundant nor burdensome for the trial. According to Bahns, plaintiff participation in this trial was a way for survivors of Al-Khatib Branch to experience self-empowerment. As plaintiffs, they were heard, and through their procedural rights, they supported the prosecution and legal investigation. By doing so, they legitimize this trial and the verdict. By exercising universal human rights and thanks to universal jurisdiction, Syrian society engaged in this trial as prosecutors through the plaintiffs. According to Bahns, no one could claim that Germany presumed to judge over foreign countries. It was rather that his and other colleagues’ clients participated in this Trial as representatives of the Syrian society whose rights are unacceptably being violated.

Bahns explained that he would now turn to the issue of enforced disappearances. He recalled that in July, he and his colleagues submitted a request for a legal notice to include enforced disappearances as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no.7 VStGB into the indictment. The Prosecutors did not elaborate on this issue in their closings statement and instead referred to their previous statement. In this statement, the prosecutors disapproved of charging enforced disappearances as a crime against humanity for two reasons. According to Bahns, they first argued that the intention to remove the victims from the protection of law was not proven. Secondly, they said that an element of the crimes was not proven regarding the Defendant, Anwar Raslan. Bahns further recalled that the Judges eventually rejected the Plaintiff Counsel’s submission in October. The Judges argued that the required intent is to be qualified as dolus directus of the first degree, which would not be given in this case, just like the requirement that particular inquiries must be made in regard to the whereabouts of missing persons.

Bahns said he and his colleagues strongly disagree with these findings. They are of the opinion that charging enforced disappearances as a crime against humanity in this case is not only legally acceptable but necessary. He said that he would only summarize his and his colleagues’ statement on this matter.

According to Bahns, enforced disappearances pursuant to § 7 \(1\) no.7 lit. a VStGB was applicable in this case. He added that the question of ‘what is behind enforced disappearances was not only important to his and his colleagues’ clients. He recalled P12 providing a description saying that ‘one disappears behind the sun.’ In 2021, the COI on Syria released a report dedicated to detention and disappearances in Syria. This reports details that until March 11, 2021 at least 100,000 people have been disappeared in Syria. It also found that enforced disappearances have been deliberately committed by the security forces throughout the entire last decade. 635 witness statements on detention in this report also include information on enforced disappearances.

Bahns called enforced disappearances a “far reaching and serious crime.” He said that both the evidence taken in this Trial, as well as the Plaintiff Counsels’ submission, clearly indicated that there was a high risk of being tortured or even killed in detention. The uncertainty was traumatic for the relatives and friends of detainees. Bahns said that this last bit of hope makes it impossible for people to find closure. P17 and P18 were both visibly stressed when they had to speak about this issue. According to Bahns, having to live with this uncertainty is like a silent poison. P12 called it a never-ending question causing desperation, helplessness, and grief, accompanied by a tiny bit of hope that is left. Bahns said this could only be resolved if people know about the fate of their loved ones, even if it means that they know [their loved ones] died, as in P34's case who identified his brother-in-law among the pictures in the Caesar Files.

Bahns said it would therefore be of immense importance to the victims to call this practice enforced disappearances. Nonetheless, individual criminal liability must of course be given. He said that he will therefore address two cases in detail. The one of P32's two sisters/two of P33's daughters and the case of P17's brother/P18's cousin.

According to Bahns, P17's brother was most likely killed. However, the Prosecutors must also admit that it could not be conclusively determined in Court when and where he died, despite efforts to investigate by, for example, reading out relevant Facebook chats. His case can consequently be considered an enforced disappearance. Bahns recalled that P33 described to the Court how she was arrested herself, and the detention of her three daughters. When her daughters disappeared, P33 contacted different intelligence branches and even publicly demanded the release of her daughters. Her public protest eventually led to her being taken to Al-Khatib Branch where she and her husband were able to see their daughters in presence of Anwar Raslan.

Bahns concluded that both cases fulfil the objective prerequisites of § 7 (1) no.7 lit. a VStGB: the relevant persons were detained during the indictment period and deprived of their liberty as a consequence. Due to the inhumane detention conditions, the deprivation of liberty qualifies as severe. This is to be attributed to Anwar Raslan who had the responsibility and authority over these acts due to his position at Branch 251. The government ordered and accepted these acts. Bahns explained that it is relevant whether the acts were isolated acts or acts in conformity with the system. It was without a question that these acts were in conformity with the system. Bahns said Anwar Raslan was acting as a state official, exercising his state-given powers.

The other relevant question, according to Bahns, was whether information was provided immediately and truthfully. In these cases, there was a refusal to provide such information, concluded Bahns, although the Prosecutors and the Judges "are apparently thinking that this [refusal] was not the case." Bahns referred to Art. 103 (2) of the German Constitution, saying that the mere wording of § 7 (1) no. 7 lit. a VStGB only requires one inquiry relating to the whereabouts of a missing person without further specifying to whom this inquiry must be made.

Bahns said that in case of P17's brother, his relatives neither received immediate nor truthful information. The information they were provided was insufficient and P18 was denied crucial information. Bahns recalled P21's descriptions of the meticulous documentation and files at the intelligence services, adding that whoever observed Anwar Raslan and his continuous notetaking during this trial has no doubt about his meticulousness. Nonetheless, the fate of P17's brother remains unclear. Regarding the case of P33's daughters, Bahns detailed that P33 was not given any information. Only after she had contacted several branches for three days and publicly protested was she taken to Al-Khatib Branch where she and her husband were able to meet their daughters while Raslan was present.

Bahns concluded that in both cases, the relatives of the missing persons were not given immediate information. P17 did not receive sufficient information until this very day. P33 was not provided with information immediately. Bahns said it is therefore not convincing when one tries to create an additional materiality threshold. The protective purpose of the norm would be made irrelevant if it was applicable only after a certain time. According to Bahns, the argument that pursuant to international practice, authorities are allowed to conceal information for 24 to 48 hours, would not be applicable in this case. He referred to P18 who told the Court that as soon as the family learned about the disappearance of P17 and his brother, they tried everything to find them because they knew that they would likely be killed very soon. Bahns said, for the same reason, P33 tried everything she could to get information about her daughters. Bahns concluded that an additional materiality threshold by imposing a time hurdle would lead to a deprivation and loss of protection of rights. The term ‘immediate’ is only to be differentiated from ‘prompt’ to allow the alleged perpetrator to collect relevant information. Bahns said it is irrelevant for how many days information was not provided. The crime of enforced disappearance was committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack as determined by the Judges on February 24, 2021.

Bahns recalled that according to the Judges, however, Anwar Raslan had a different intent. Bahns recalled that in their statement from October 13, 2021, the Judges found that although the regime detained people without providing information on their whereabouts, there was no individual intent of Raslan as the alleged perpetrator. Bahns said that the findings of the Judges are insufficient and the arguments by the Prosecutor that disappearance and loss of protection of law were a mere side-effect was insufficient as well. He added that “there cannot be any serious doubts about the government’s intent to remove people from the protection of law” based on the testimonies of witnesses, plaintiffs, and experts heard in this trial.

Bahns added that enforced disappearances also had a significant impact on the social environment of those who disappeared. It is a means to spread fear and horror, according to Bahns. He said that the COI’s report in 2013 already found that this was a practice applied by the government since the very start of the Syrian revolution. Bahns said it was therefore incomprehensible how the prosecutors came to the conclusion that it was not the regime’s intention to remove people from the protection of law. Referring to the Prosecutors’ findings that it was the intention of the regime to gather information about alleged terrorist and opposition members by detaining people, Bahns said that although the prosecutors might not be aware of the consequences of this statement or did not intend it, it still felt like a slap in the face for his clients. Bahns explained that arrests were carried out arbitrarily and oftentimes there had not been the slightest suspicion against detainees. It was rather a means of terrorizing the civilian population. Releases and transfers were neither related to any sufficient information provided by the detainees. He added that some interrogations were only short and superficial, and detainees regularly had to sign blank confessions. There was absolutely no gathering of information and detainees had no influence over their detention, other than by paying bribes. If they did not bribe anyone, the course of their detention was dependent on arbitrary decisions.

Bahns explained that Anwar Raslan had a leading position at Branch 251. All detainees who disappeared at this Branch consequently disappeared within his area of control. Some of them remain disappeared until today, added Bahns. He concluded that Anwar Raslan therefore acted in conformity with the system and in full awareness and with requisite intent. Bahns said during the indictment period of this case it was state policy in Syria to arrest any alleged member of the opposition and simply detain them. Bahns said Raslan’s intent in the above-mentioned individual cases could also be proven with regard to individual instances. According to Bahns, it was impossible that the inquiries and efforts to obtain information as described by P18 remained unknown to Anwar Raslan. He left P18 and his cousin in the dark when they met him at his office and, by calling P18 back, deliberately gave him false information regarding the corpse of his cousin. In the case of P33, it can be questioned whether Raslan personally learned about P33’s individual inquiries at different Branches. However, it did certainly not remain hidden from him when P33 increased her efforts by publicly demonstrating, which eventually led to her visit at Al-Khatib Branch, as Bahns added. Bahns further explained that refusing to provide information was a given practice anyway. It is therefore irrelevant whether Raslan approved of it or not. He nevertheless followed this practice in full knowledge and intent of its consequences.

Bahns added that the consequences of this practice are still visible today and were visible in this very courtroom. He recalled Christoph Reuter's testimony in which the journalist stated that Raslan has an almost photographic memory and a sharp mind. This was also confirmed by former intelligence officers who testified in this trial. Bahns added that Raslan continuously took notes during the entire trial, and it was obvious that if he was only willing, he was able to provide information. At least P17's request for information ended with a brief statement by Raslan. Bahns concluded that considering the above analysis, one must find that § 7 (1) no. 7 lit. a VStGB, qualifies enforced disappearances as a crime against humanity that is fulfilled in Raslan's case.

Bahns then mentioned that his colleagues already said that from the Judges' perspective as well as from the perspective of the prosecutors and most of the plaintiffs, the overall aim was to conclude the trial in due time and "keep it under control". According to Bahns, the trial was indeed never endangered to "turn out of control." He said it was therefore desirable for the Judges to open up on the importance of this trial. According to Bahns, the Koblenz trial would of course be of significant importance for the Federal Republic of Germany, not at least due to Germany's own history.

Bahns added that, of course, different plaintiffs had different motivations to join this trial, a matter that has been discussed previously. He said that justice by a court was a complex issue, and one could ask whom it helps and in what way it helps that Anwar Raslan will be sentenced to imprisonment. According to Bahns, everyone individually has to answer the question of whether they will achieve redemption by the verdict or consider Raslan's guilt to be satisfied after his prison term.

Bahns said he personally thinks it is an important step to set something against the inhumane Syrian regime. It would also be a necessary first step for future prosecutions. Bahns added that he and his colleagues also hope that the trial and the judgment will counteract fast-moving facts and highly concerning normalizations with Bashar Al-Assad. The findings made in this trial are also a clear signal to domestic agitators and foreign policy "Realpolitiker" that there will be no deportations to Syria and that any kind of relationship with the regime is to be excluded. Bahns said these people deserve to be on trial but not to sit at negotiation tables.

Bahns recalled that until 2008, Syria was a close partner of the CIA in its war against terror. BKA and BND each conducted questionings together with the Central Syrian Military Intelligence Service in 2002. The former BND Director once called the Syrian intelligence "a difficult partner" during his testimony in a German parliamentary commission of inquiry. Bahns said the Syrian regime disqualified itself as a liable partner once and for all. Bahns closed by saying that systematic human rights abuses must not be ignored.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Kaleck

Plaintiff Counsel Kaleck started his closing statement by saying that in light of P32's statement, every word was too much. He then referred to P42's statement which illustrated why universal jurisdiction trials could be conducted in the first place. [Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, asking Kaleck to speak slower because the interpreters had difficulty following along for simultaneous interpretation.] Kaleck thanked Kerber, explaining that he speaks freely without notes. He went on to describe that P42 was certainly in a special situation by being allowed to leave the Branch again and having to return several times. Kaleck briefly recalled P42's detention story. He said that what fascinated him about P42's closings statement was that international criminal law was recently celebrated in light of the 75th anniversary of the Nuremberg Trials, however, international criminal law must also come to life. This very day is therefore an extraordinary day, and this trial is an extraordinary trial, said Kaleck, because it showed the Federal Prosecutor General's determined work and also the Court's effort to conduct this trial that was not always easy.

Kaleck said the strong Syrian exile community in Germany who supported the police shows that international criminal law is not only a matter of states. Neither is it a gift or a one-time thing. According to Kaleck, it is rather an ongoing progress. He said this progress must be carried outside the doors of this courtroom and people must participate in such trials. He concluded by saying that at first, people confidently went to the streets and after experiencing so much pain, they became procedural subjects again through this trial.

The proceedings were adjourned at 4:00PM

The next session will be on December 15, 2021 when more plaintiffs and their counsels will deliver their closing statements.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 56
Hearing Date: December 15, 2021

Day 108 – December 15, 2021

This was the last day for closing statements from Plaintiffs and Plaintiffs Counsel. Like others before them, three Plaintiffs emphasized the importance of victim participation in universal jurisdiction trials. Each of their Counsel then joined the Prosecutors' demand for a life sentence with particular severity of guilt for Anwar Raslan [meaning that Raslan is not eligible for parole after fifteen years imprisonment]. All speakers directly addressed Anwar Raslan, requesting him to break his silence at the next trial day in January and to provide information about the fate of missing.

Trial Day 108 – December 15, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:32AM with seven spectators and two journalists in the audience. Two cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiffs P1 and P50 sat next to their respective Counsel. Plaintiffs Counsel Kroker and Bahns were not present.

Closing Statement by P1

P1 started his closing statement by quoting Dante's Divine Comedy, saying "[a]bandon hope all ye who enter here." P1 also quoted George Orwell, saying "[n]ever, for any reason on Earth, could you wish for an increase of pain. Of pain you could only wish for one thing: that it should stop. Nothing in the world was so bad as physical pain. In the face of pain and its consequences there are no heroes."

P1 went on to explain that "[t]he one who enters this place is lost, and the one who gets released is newborn" is a saying created by the Syrian Intelligence Services and repeated by Syrian society in private and public. It turned into a long, never-ending nightmare. According to P1, this was exactly what one was supposed to [experience upon] entering the detention facilities. It was also a way to feel your body in places that are designed to destroy one's body.

After greeting the Judges and parties to the trial, P1 said that his psychotherapist, [REDACTED], who has extensive experience working with Holocaust survivors, told P1 about the impact and meaning of 'traumatic memories'. The psychotherapist told P1 the following story which, according to P1, helped him to recognize how important conversations are [in coping with these memories].

His psychotherapist told P1 that when the allied forces were close to Berlin, the SS guards forced the survivors in the concentration camp to march "with their emaciated bodies" to then take them somewhere else. Many of them died or were executed because they were unable to continue walking. They eventually reached a forest between Berlin and Brandenburg where they were left alone in the cold, [in a state of] weakness. After a while, the survivors were forced to eat tree trunks to survive, but they did not forget to engrave their memories in these trunks. The trees continued to grow steadfast and preserved the memory of the survivors engraved on their trunks. P1 said these trees are still standing today and the victims will be remembered as long as the trees are standing.

P1 continued by saying that he is standing in front of the Court today, facing an existential dilemma because he survived, but he keeps asking himself "why exactly did I survive? What happened and is happening to our colleagues who we left behind? What can we do to save them?" P1 said he knows that "we" are powerless to do anything more than continue to tell what "we have experienced and not remain silent at all costs." P1 described that at Branches "of the evil," that have countless ways to harm someone, there are still more than 142,062 people waiting for their loved ones who have been abducted or captured. Amongst others, they are held at Al-Khatib Branch and other Intelligence Branches simply due to their participation in the democratic movement, or because they exercised their right to freedom of expression and voiced their opinion. According to P1, one's existence is denied as soon as one enters such a place [Intelligence Branch]. First, the existence of one person, then the existence of an entire group, and eventually the existence of an entire society is denied. This is how society loses its identity, said P1. An entire society is living, searching for its identity that was lost with the loss of the knowledge about the fate of its loved ones and the loss of being able to achieve justice.

What is terrifying, said P1, is that the crime of enforced disappearance and torture was an essential tool to demonstrate the absolute and imbalanced power of the regime. It was commonly used by all Intelligence Branches. According to P1, it is the core of the regime's existence. The regime who is proud in front of the entire world because of how it spreads horror and terror to take control of the lives of Syrian people every day, even after they have survived [these horrors].

P1 said he was one of those who were forcibly disappeared by the regime during his two detentions. During his first arrest, P1 was suddenly abducted from an internet cafe without saying goodbye to his beloved and friends. P1 said he was on Facebook talking with friends about their basic rights and democracy, freedom, and the start of the Syrian revolution. During his second arrest, P1 was abducted from Damascus Airport because he decided to take his camera and went to the streets, determined to document what was going on. When he was exposed, P1 decided to flee, thinking that he could smuggle and save what he had documented. Unfortunately, the documents did not survive, but his body survived and so did the story along with it, said P1.

P1 addressed the Court, asking people to "imagine saying goodbye to one of your family members, and the other part of the family is waiting for you on the other side of the airport, and suddenly you disappear just like that." P1 said one's family would not know if the person actually started his travels, stayed, or decided to leave this world. According to P1, in such a case, one's family would keep asking themselves questions like "what happened when and where?" and continue waiting and searching for their loved one. This is how the regime uses time and waiting to torture people and prevent progress even when people are outside [the regime's] prisons, even when they are in places of refuge.

P1 quoted Samuel Beckett's 'Waiting for Godot', saying "let's go!" followed by "we can't." He asked "why not?" and replied "we're waiting". P1 said this is what his family had to live through for months, and what the families of many of the forcibly disappeared are still living through.

The dilemma is that abduction, enforced disappearance, and torture is still ongoing in Syria. P1 said he is certain that in every moment he spends in this Court, there is more than one Syrian family who has to endure what P1 and his family had to before. P1 added that the torture methods increased and were further developed over the past nine years. P1 said there are people being tortured at this very moment, hanging between life and death, whereas perpetrators are still in their position. This feeling “hits us in the core of our stomachs everyday” said P1. He described [the feeling] as ripping peoples’ hearts out.

According to P1, the impact of enforced disappearance is deeply traumatizing to Syrians as a society and individually, even when people survive. P1 addressed the Court, saying he was standing there on this cold day that reminded him of the weather in Damascus. P1 felt as if he was in Damascus. Especially undergrounds it gets cold, said P1. Undergrounds, where the cold in the detention facilities was very hard on the detainees. P1 described the situation in the detention facilities where he and others were half-naked, psychologically broken, and closer to death than life, deprived of food and water, shivering from the cold, and barely breathing or perceiving the world around them. P1 said he and hundreds of other detainees were forcibly deprived of the freedom to know the time in solitary cells and in community cells that were full of people who deserve to have a dignified life. P1 also described detainees being thrown in the corridors, covered with pieces of clothes torn due to brutal torture. Their families did not know anything about them. P1 said he and others were lost as if they were inside a black hole or a parallel world. P1 recalled that, back then in Damascus when he could hear the screams of torture day and night and when the terror had no end, he and the other detainees knew they were unable to do anything about it. The squeaking from opening and closing the cells’ doors which preludes torture or killing under torture, and the screams of torture and the sounds of the cables hitting the body, were a daily threat to detainees. P1 said this was the reason he thought about committing suicide when he heard the sound of the prison guards approaching the cell and before opening the cell door to take him to interrogation or a torture session.

P1 quoted German philosopher Schopenhauer who found that “if we are suffering from severe physical pain, or if the pain lasts for a long time, all we are thinking about is just finding a way to stop this feeling in any way or form, and that makes suicide easy.” P1 remembered that on a day similar to [the cold December days in Germany] he was asked during an interrogation whether he likes President Bashar Al-Asaad, knowing that he would be tortured regardless of his answer. The guards arbitrarily beat P1 with cables, their hands and feet, and he was hung from his wrists until he felt like his body was torn in the middle. P1 added that he still has this feeling nowadays, especially when falling asleep. P1 said he could not help himself and could barely breathe while he was tortured. While he was beaten, P1 also felt a hard object inside his anus. He felt he was at the end of his tether and felt severe abdominal pain. P1 said it was as if his head was split into two parts. He recalled that he did not know whether he was able to scream or not. A terrifying shudder and numbness ran through his body which he was unable feel, and he started sweating. Even nowadays when he sees a stick in someone’s hand, P1 feels anxiety, stomach pain, suffocation, and his body starts to sweat.

P1 further described that after he was released from prison, he suffered from severe infections. But he was afraid to talk about the issue due to shame and potential dishonor. He felt that something inside him had been destroyed. A feeling of insecurity and mistrust led him to hate his own body. After he was released, P1 often thought about suicide. Even during the hot summer, it was cold inside him, and he felt taken back to this dark terrifying place where he was deprived of his freedom. P1 explained that he is unable to accept that he is living safely in Germany or America where he often travels for work. P1 said there are times when his sense of security and location disappears. That is when he cannot believe that he is living in safety now.

P1 said he then does not know if security is real or a temporary illusion that is going to disappear. He then also struggles to believe that he is where he is.

P1 said he sometimes hears a noise in his ear and loses his sense of time and space. He then finds himself in the middle of the street when the traffic light is red. It also happens that he is standing [in the same spot] for some time without noticing and the traffic light has changed several times. According to P1, these feelings were worse when he came to Germany, but once he started psychotherapy, his condition gradually improved. P1 said this, nonetheless, took away a lot of his abilities that he could have used to make art, films, or [used toward] his social life. P1's therapist told him [the trauma] would stay with him for the rest of his life but that at least there was a way to deal with it safely.

P1 said "the world does not believe what we have been through, what we had to experience because it is too horrific for people to imagine." According to P1, people learned to match society's perceptions and consider men as the guardians of the state. If "something like this happens," they have to stay silent because merely speaking about this is considered weakness, reducing one's value and respect and disqualifies one from being a normal human being. P1's therapist says society cannot accept these experiences because it does not want to hear since it cannot do anything about them. According to P1's therapist, society prefers such things not to happen, and for the image of a strong society to prevail, unbroken by its victims.

P1 described that on a cold day like this very day, he was told during an interrogation that no one would ever hear about him again and that the guard had all the authority to do whatever he wanted. P1 recalled that he was surrounded by the sounds of beatings, giggles, insults, torture, humiliation, people being proud to torture, and death threats. The goal was to force him to confess that he was making films on behalf of America and France. The mere thought of this prelude [threat that no one would ever hear about him again] was enough for him to be scared that the guards would soon execute and hang him at Al-Marjeh Square as a disciplinary measure and to set an example for society.

P1 recalled that Anwar Raslan himself said in his first plea that the reason for P1's detention was that he had relations to foreign countries. Anwar Raslan imbued the regime's beliefs and was convinced that what P1 did was a crime that deserved punishment. Being financed by the West for making films and making them in the first place was considered a crime, said P1. He said he was punished because he was making documentaries and because he was brave enough to document this story, including scenes that criticize the Syrian regime. P1 explained that there is one scene showing Syrian regime forces firing live ammunition at peaceful demonstrators, and another one showing the fall of the picture of the "dictator Bashar al-Assad" then people stepping on [the picture]. P1 remembered that a fellow detainee who was detained in the cell next to him, told P1 that P1 carried great guilt and was to be executed and should pray. However, P1 grew up as an atheist rejecting the existence of a god and only believing in truth, freedom and democracy. P1 did not find a way to believe in and pray to a god who watches torture, is silent about it, or even participates and enjoys it as the guards enjoy it. God does not exist [at the Intelligence Branches] said P1 and referred to Nietzsche's infamous "God is dead! God remains dead!" P1 concluded that the truth is that one only has one life and the Intelligence Services as "elements of torture" took it away from "us". P1 said "we have regained our strength to speak out and search for justice by all means."

P1 went on to describe that after he shared his experience in Court, he was the victim of a defamation campaign and hatred. P1 said there were public calls from supporters of Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib. P1 claimed that a representative of theirs is sitting in Court right behind him.

P1 said the organization published false testimony of him on their website, and the person who published it claimed it was a verbatim record of P1's testimony. According to P1, it was published alongside his name and personal information. According to P1, the testimony was used to incite people to hate him. He was allegedly pressured to withdraw his testimony. P1 said there were also calls to kill him and prevent him from demanding his rights. P1 said people contacted him, his lawyer Anwar Al-Bunni, his co-workers, and his family to create recordings of calls and to preserve messages, or social media posts to instigate hatred against P1. "They" have also used Qatari and Turkish-backed platforms to spread false and misleading information about P1. As a result, his family received death threats, and people were sent to collect information about him to be used to defame and abuse him and his family. P1 said he was forced to relocate his family despite the cost and difficulties of finding a new home for them in northern Syria. P1 further told the Court that there is a Facebook page run by relatives of Anwar Raslan called "The Trial of Colonel Anwar Raslan in Germany" and "a page dedicated to the justice of Colonel Anwar Raslan, the respected son of Taldou". P1 said these are the platforms where the calls [against P1] started. According to P1, the page was still live until that very day. P1 said these platforms tried to use him as an example to intimidate witnesses and victims and discourage them from talking about their experiences and cause distrust in this trial and the usefulness of testifying and trying to turn victims into perpetrators and perpetrators into victims. P1 concluded it had a huge impact on him and his family and has caused him psychological and professional damage.

P1 went on to say that despite all this, he was again in Court for the second time. P1 said he very much likes to keep talking about his experience "because silence has more of an effect on us than talking." P1's therapist told him that acknowledging the damage caused to him does not give the perpetrators a moral victory. According to P1's therapist, it is silence that gives [the perpetrators] a sense of victory. P1 recalled that the same campaign he described above also asked for forgiveness for Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib and turned them into victims, criticized prosecuting them because they were defectors, or because they were Sunnis, or because they belonged to tribal areas and regions that were targeted by the regime of Bashar Al-Assad. However, one must also acknowledge that Anwar Raslan was an integral part of the torture system of the Assad regime, said P1.

P1 said these calls, especially those directed against himself and other victims, did not have an impact on him. On the contrary, they motivated him to continue, and to believe that Anwar Raslan did not represent himself alone but is rather a defender of the beliefs of the torture regime that has existed for decades. According to P1, this represents the body and mind of the regime. For decades, the regime has been trying to deny and criminalize people in order to terrorize them and their families and prevent them from speaking. P1 recalled that throughout the trial sessions, Anwar Raslan took notes, tried to justify himself, and tried to undermine individual experiences, and by that, undermining the experiences of society as a whole. According to P1, the regime is not only a body that tortures and lets people disappear, but the regime is also an evil thinker and an experienced manipulator. P1 said the regime keeps taking advantage of peoples' experiences because the regime has a talent of unfolding the evil. These are the very experiences and talent that mutilated peoples' bodies, said P1. It is the education that Anwar Raslan talked about in his defense plea that is the reason people are "here" seeking refuge and trying to restore life in their bodies. P1 said Branch 251 is a place to violently indoctrinate people to love the regime of Bashar Al-Assad and to test the vilest methods on their bodies and the many possibilities for bringing death. If one gets out alive, the traces of these experiences remain on their bodies. This is just to see for how long people stay alive and keep fighting against it [regime and/or experiences].

P1 said he was not saved and is unable to fully recover from his experiences, but he keeps trying. P1 explained that back then, he did not care about the regime's revenge tactics nor the methods of its supporters trying to bring shame on him. Back then, P1 was an innocent student and a filmmaker at the beginning of his career. P1 had a dream. At that time, P1 was looking for a future and to escape conscription in the army of the regime because he did not want be part of it even for one day. P1 said he is certain that there are many advocates for and sympathizers of the perpetrators who are trying hard to find a way to disgrace the victims, palliating the perpetrators, and raising their profiles by demonizing the victims. P1 said he wants to quote Primo Levi, a chemist, writer and Holocaust survivor who said that “to confuse the executioners with their victims is a moral disease or an aesthetic affectation for the executioners or a sinister sign of complicity; above all, it is a precious service rendered (intentionally or not) to negate the truth of the experiences and their eligibility”. P1 concluded that this service is indeed no less despicable than the crimes of the criminal himself.

P1 recalled that he started as a filmmaker before the beginning of the democratic revolution in Syria and continued throughout it. Making documentaries criticizing the regime has long been considered an unforgivable crime, and filmmakers like P1 have been criminalized for doing their job. The regime told people to hinder P1 and other filmmakers from doing their job and portrayed them as dangerous people who must be eliminated or humiliated. P1 recalled that this was also the reason for why the Syrian regime recently forced the father of one of the characters in the film “The Cave” to appear in the media, denying the content of the film. Buthayna Sha’ban, Bashar Al-Assad’s political and media advisor, wrote an editorial entitled “The Most Dangerous War” in the most powerful Syrian newspaper of the Syrian regime and in another one affiliated with Hezbollah, accusing P1 of running an office in the West to fabricate news about events in Syria. P1 called this article a character assassination. Over the course of his work as a documentary filmmaker during the Syrian revolution, P1 created almost 2,500 hours of recordings that documented unspeakable horror, made films about it, and made films documenting the ongoing crimes committed against Syrians, including the use of sarin and other internationally prohibited gasses, the killing of civilians, the use of siege and starvation, and airstrikes targeting White Helmets volunteers, their work centers, and attacks on hospitals and marketplaces carried out by the regime and Russia. This has long been met with misguided campaigns by the regime and its allies, said P1. The discourses of denial and hate were part of the torture regime and a reason for its existence, and a reason to kill and isolate filmmakers, even though their films are documenting a struggle for democracy and human rights violations. P1 said he and other filmmakers are just individuals committed to speaking about things the authorities do not want to hear.

P1 said “above the ground and below it,” he had to witness the evil that is still happening in Syria because the regime behind it is still in power. But P1 has also seen the good things survivors did, which gives people confidence that they will find justice somewhere on this earth.

P1 said he is also thinking of his lawyer [REDACTED], of his Kurdish friend [REDACTED], of his fellow documentary filmmakers who have been forcibly disappeared. He is thinking of the sounds of their screams, and of their smell that P1 will not forget until his death. He is thinking of their ghosts who visit him in his sleep and while he is awake. P1 said this gives his life a purpose and the strength to be in Court on this very day and talk about the experiences of those who continue to be in his memories. P1 said that nothing can restore the dignity of peoples’ destroyed bodies, or of families seeking justice, except to reveal the fate of their loved ones and to consider the institutions that tortured and disappeared persons as criminal organizations terrorizing people around the world. P1 said these institutions continue to exist despite any moral rules. These places exist to break peoples’ will as free individuals and undermine their individual rights. According to P1, these institutions seek to create copies of the regime. People are not even allowed to be the shadow of a society.

One is not supposed to exist at all in the first place, said P1. P1 added that people like Anwar Raslan and others in his position accepted to be a part of these institutions. They are executing the will of evil and punish people for their mere existence. A first step to prevent these people from doing their job is to trust in justice and trust that those who died under torture will not be forgotten, said P1. He added that the world has changed and is no longer a place where perpetrators wander with impunity. According to P1, the absence of deterrence will no longer make society implicitly accept torture and all evil disappear. He said that punishing these people will make for a just society.

P1 apologized for providing such a long closing statement, adding this was his last paragraph. He explained that he came to the Court with confidence and gratitude in the counsel representing him in this case, with gratitude to his lawyer in Syria, Anwar Al-Bunni, and with great belief in the usefulness of this trial. P1 said he endured the psychological, professional, and social consequences of sharing his experience. P1 said he was accompanied by the thought that he would testify on behalf of his friends who shared the same experience as P1 regarding “these extermination Branches” but did not have the opportunity to share their experience. P1 said he also came to the Court to find answers to his family's and daughter's constant questions about what happened before and during this trial and what will happen in the future. P1 concluded by saying he trusts in the Court's wisdom and thanked the Court.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Mohammed

Plaintiff Counsel Mohammed started his closing statement by saying that, in legal terms, the case would be explained relatively quickly in terms of facts and required life sentence also finding the particular severity of guilt. Mohammed said he would join these demands as well. Nonetheless, he also thought about the consequences of this trial beyond the legal aspects.

He turned to Anwar Raslan, saying that he was a lawyer himself and that he sometimes wondered what Raslan was thinking. Mohammed asked Raslan if he actually thought that anyone was convinced of his innocence. He mentioned that Raslan knew the parties for 18 months now and his lawyers for almost three years. Mohammed addressed Raslan, saying that he must be aware that he will have to face a life sentence. Mohammed explained that Raslan is almost 60-years-old and with a life sentence with particular severity of guilt ahead of him, given an average age of 78 years, he will literally have to spend the rest of his life in prison. The rest of his life will be limited to a 10-sqm cell. Mohammed said he wondered how Raslan feels about that. Mohammed even spoke about it with his girlfriend, and they found that this would be the completely opposite situation of their own lives at the moment. They were in a situation where they were making plans, where to go for vacation, whether to buy a house. Mohammed asked Raslan how he was dealing with his own situation right now, given that he has to spend his sunset years in prison.

Mohammed went on to say that during the last 18 months, the Court often discussed Raslan's role as a Sunni within the government system, and the options available to him. However, it was never asked what an Alawite is and what Alawites believe.

Mohammed said to Raslan that the two of them were both Sunnis and probably the only people in the courtroom who understand all these questions. Mohammed said Sunnis believe in afterlife and the idea that people who are doing good in this life will be awarded in the afterlife. The question was therefore what one has to do in case he did something bad. Mohammed said the answer is to regret and ask God for forgiveness. However, Mohammed was wondering whether Raslan actually had any regrets. Mohammed quoted verse 2:222 from the Quran saying that ‘Allah loves those who are doing penance and those who purify themselves.’ According to Mohammed, Raslan was, however, merely claiming that he did not do anything and only found himself in a bad situation.

Mohammed explained to Raslan that according to § 258 (2) StPO, Raslan has the right to provide his last words in this trial. He told Raslan to use that opportunity to answer the questions of victims. Many of them were unable to see what happened around them while in detention. Mohammed referred to P1 and asked what it depended on for someone to be subjected to sexual violence or not. Raslan has the chance to use his voice and help the victims. Mohammed added that using his own words also provides Raslan with the opportunity to actually demonstrate his opposition to the government. However, Raslan must also defect from his first plea claiming his deprivation of power.

Mohammed again referred to a quote from the Quran (verse 40:40) saying that “the person who does good things in this life will be forgiven all sins in the afterlife.” Mohammed said Raslan now has the chance to do good in this life and benefit from it in the afterlife. In the end, he only has to stand before God and ask for forgiveness. Mohammed said if Raslan uses his chance, he will ask his clients to forgive him as well.

Referring to P1, Mohammed said his client was attacked in the media and accused of being a liar. Mohammed recalled that he personally spoke with more than 100 people none of whom believed in this trial. He therefore thanked the Court for making this trial happen. He added that one might at times have wondered if there would ever be an end to this trial. According to Mohammed, the upcoming verdict will be a relief for many. It shows that a fair court legally confirmed that things actually did happen as people described them. He added that people in Damascus were robbed of their trust in God. On January 13, 2021, their trust will be restored. Mohammed concluded by saying that for many others, however, trust will still remain a dream.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Reiger

Plaintiff Counsel Reiger started his closings statement by saying that he would like to come back to the very basis of this trial: § 7 VStGB. He said there is no common legal definition of crimes against humanity. § 7 (1) VStGB provides its own definition. If someone, however, seeks a linguistic definition of humanity [Menschlichkeit], one talks about tolerance, respect, and empathy. German dictionary ‘Duden’ defines humanity [Menschlichkeit] as mercy and humanitarianism. Reiger said this was a stark contrast to what happened to the people in Syria. Humanity died in Syria, it died in the basement of Branch 251/Al-Khatib Branch. Reiger said Anwar Raslan is also responsible for humanity dying in Syria. It is therefore rightful and important that he is held accountable for that.

Reiger recalled that the Court heard witnesses like P1 and Anwar Al-Bunni. Reiger said he has a lot of respect for these people who always continue to fight for humanity. He constantly wondered how these people were able to continue their fight despite being detained and tortured. Reiger said justice can be achieved in many different ways. In the end, humanity would always be stronger than the torture henchman. Reiger concluded that the correct linguistic definition would however be only of limited relevance and mostly be of political relevance.

He went on to say that in one's mind, the torture basements in Syria are far away from Koblenz. The subject matter, however, was not far away. Germany is a country governed by the rule of law, with jurisdiction to hold all perpetrators accountable under the principle of universal jurisdiction. Reiger said the trial is therefore a signal to the entire world.

Reiger recalled that he had many discussions with his client, P28, because P28 could not believe how such atrocities remained unpunished so far. Reiger had to tell him that it was impossible to hold all perpetrators accountable at the moment. According to Reiger, that answer is a big disappointment for many Syrians. But the Koblenz Trial gave people a space and opportunity to tell their stories. There was even an attempt to silence P1. Reiger added that everyone sitting at a table together with Bashar Al-Assad must know what he is like.

Reiger said his client, P28, told him that he feels his dignity is restored [through the trial of] Anwar Raslan, who is responsible for all his suffering [and now] sitting on the defendant's bench. P28 wants to thank the BKA, the German Federal Prosecutor General's Office and the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz. Reiger recalled that P28 told the Court how he was arrested, despite not being an activist. He does not know the reasons for his arrest until this very day. P28 assumes that he was arrested simply due to a confusion of names. Nonetheless, Anwar Raslan remains silent and hides behind his first plea. Reiger said this showed the inhumane acts committed by the Syrian regime and Anwar Raslan. Reiger further read out a note by P28 saying that detainees were psychologically intimidated in detention and that he still suffers from this mental pressure today. P28 said he still lived in the death cell in which he was detained. His son is unable to fall asleep alone in the dark. P28 further said in his statement that he cannot forget his pain for a single day, and he still has the pictures in his head. He cannot fall asleep without his ears ringing. P28 concluded that he is not himself anymore.

Reiger said P28 is forever marked by his horrible experiences and hopes that Raslan will be held accountable. Nonetheless, one would still only scratch the surface of the unimaginable suffering of victims, according to Reiger. He added that for legal reasons his other client was unable to participate in this trial. The Federal Prosecutor General's Office should therefore continue to pursue more of these cases.

Reiger said, as a lawyer, Anwar Raslan knew about the prohibition of torture. He was aware of what he was participating in. He heard the screams of torture every day and saw injured detainees. Reiger said Raslan was certainly "not the good man of Al-Khatib." He was a long-serving officer and agent who committed the crimes of the regime that have been perpetrated since 2011 until this very day. Reiger said Raslan allegedly defected when the regime turned against his hometown, however, his defection was not due to his humanity but mere self-interest because he was personally affected.

Reiger concluded by saying that he, on behalf of his client, joins the Prosecutors in demanding a life sentence and establishing the particular severity of guilt for Anwar Raslan who must bear the costs of this trial.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Schulz

Plaintiff Counsel Schulz first said that he would try to avoid any repetition. On behalf of his client, P25, he joins the Prosecutors' demand for life imprisonment and establishing the particular severity of guilt for Anwar Raslan. Schulz said "P25 was one of the few lucky ones who made it out of hell after ten days." To stick to the quote of Jean Améry, Schulz hopes that P25 will feel home again in Germany where he lives with his family and is now helplessly exposed to the cold bureaucracy. Schulz told the Court the story of how P25's newborn child was named: the German registrar did not accept for P25's son to have the same name as his father, although this is Syrian tradition.

However, Schulz added, the bureaucracy of the BAMF [German Migration and Asylum Office] was even worse. The newborn baby was sent a letter telling him to immediately detail his asylum status in writing. The newborn baby therefore had to hire a lawyer to help him deal with the German authorities. Schulz said, although the German bureaucracy was overwhelming, the family was eventually able to deal with it.

Schulz went on to recall that one of the torture tools frequently mentioned in this trial was the so called “German Chair”, Al-Kursi Al-Almani in Arabic. Allegedly it was the Nazis who brought this tool to Syria. There are also rumors that the GDR [German Democratic Republic] taught the Syrian Intelligence Services how to use this torture item.

In 1954, Schulz said, a man called George Fischer started selling sauerkraut. At the same time, Alois Brunner, the right hand of Adolf Eichmann, the highest Nazi technocrat who was tasked with solving the Jewish question, was twice sentenced to death in absentia by a French Court. Brunner was hunted by the Mossad and eventually sought refuge in Syria where he became a consultant to the Intelligence Services on all issues related to torture. In 1966, Brunner met then Syrian president Hafez Al-Assad. Schulz went on to say that by 1971, Brunner and Hafez Al-Assad established a network of intelligence services under control of the Alawites. Brunner was a consultant to the President and a helping hand to the police state. Brunner sought protection in Syria from the Mossad who was hunting him. In Syria, Brunner was given a house and protection. But rumor has it, said Schulz, that Brunner once, called Hafez Al-Assad a ‘dog’. In 2001 he was reported to have committed suicide in a Syrian torture prison, allegedly Branch 251. Schulz turned to the GDR side of the story by saying that in the mid-1960s, the GDR supported the Ba’th party by building upon Brunner’s previous work. Erich Mielke [Head of the GDR Ministry of State Security] even met with his Syrian colleague Abdennaser at the East-German State Security premises in Berlin. Schulz said the cooperation of the two countries’ intelligence services was consequently strengthened. Schulz said the GDR was the “obstetrician of the Syrian torture apparatus.” The Syrian government then wanted to get rid of Brunner but his deportation failed in April 1989.

Schulz turned to Anwar Raslan’s curriculum vitae, saying it was known that Raslan worked in different cities in Syria as part of his training and was involved in torture by the Intelligence Services. He learned intelligence work and the required practical skills from scratch. Schulz recalled that the State Security in the GDR had a Division called “Main Department IX, Investigative Body”, the German equivalent to the Syrian Investigations Division at Branch 251. Both used torture as a state policy.

Schulz said the story of the German Chair would now come to an end: the German Chair was used by the Secret State Police and State Security in the GDR and by the Syrian Intelligence Services, until the implementation of international criminal law through the VStGB [German Code of Crimes against International Law]. Schulz concluded that at the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz, Anwar Raslan was now sitting on a German Chair himself, however, a far more comfortable one.

Schulz then quoted Friedrich Nietzsche who said in “Jenseits von Gut und Böse” that if one only stares into the abyss for long enough, the abyss stares right back. According to Schulz, Raslan’s defense was too obvious and limited. He was now right in the middle of the abyss. Schulz said that one who is fighting beasts must be cautious to not become one himself.

Schulz finished his closing statement by saying that Raslan’s last words were still forthcoming. Nonetheless, the German Chair at the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz would probably accompany him for a long time.

Closing Statement by P50

P50 started his closing statement by saying “in the name of God, the Entirely Merciful, the Especially Merciful.” After greeting the Judges and everyone else present in the courtroom, P50 said they just listened to the statement of P1 who does not believe in God. Now, people will listen to a person who believes in God’s existence. P50 recalled that what brought the two of them together is that they are both victims of the regime. P1 and P50 also share their belief in the principles of freedom, justice, and the Syrian revolution. P50 said his closing statement would not be long, since he only prepared three pages.

P50 explained that this Court is of great importance to the Syrian context, as it is the first court to consider the issue of detention by the Syrian regime. Therefore, P50 and others want it to be a success story. They want it to be a foundation on which they can build upon to hold the leaders of the regime, and the most important individuals and entities that founded and maintained it, accountable. P50 recalled that according to documentation, so far more than 130,000 people have been detained and disappeared in Syria. P50 said this number includes his father, his cousins, his relatives, his friends and other innocent people. P50’s father, who disappeared eight years ago when he was seventy-three years old, still visits P50 in his sleep. P50 said he does not know when he will be able to accept that his father died, or have hope to see him again. P50 described that no one can imagine for how long a woman who lost her husband or her child keeps waiting to know their fate.

According to P50, the Syrian people who are yearning for freedom are looking at this Court full of hope. They hope that this trial will pave the path toward uncovering the regime’s atrocity crimes. The mindset of the oppressive regime was clear from the beginning, said P50. The regime does not hold back from doing anything against innocent citizens in order to maintain its power. As Syrians, P50 and others dreamed of having political pluralism in which a former president would hand over power to a new president in a smooth and peaceful manner. P50 said people dreamed of seeing a scene similar to what people witnessed a few days ago when Ms. Merkel left office and handed over everything to her successor. However, the regime's Shabiha and its henchman insisted that Al-Assad remain in power and said: "Al-Assad or we burn the country!"

P50 said they eventually not only burned the country by displacing its people and ruining the economy and society, but they literally burned the country: by bombing schools, hospitals, defenseless houses, and even displacement camps were not spared from their rockets. The detention carried out by the Syrian regime is not, as it claims, a “legitimate measure to protect the country’s security” but rather one of its dirty tools to silence the voices of freedom because they exposed [the regime] and revealed its truth to the world. P50 said that the regime targeted intellectuals and peaceful people who called for freedom, tortured, and killed them. This for example happened to “our colleagues and companions in the peaceful revolution, including the icons of the Syrian revolution: martyr Yahya Ash-Sherbaji, martyr Ghiyath Matar” At the same time, P50 said, the regime was releasing “terrorists, extremists and takfiris” P50 explained that these releases happened so that, with the help of these people, militant groups like ISIS and others could be founded, later allowing the Syrian regime to present itself to the world as a counterterrorism fighter.

P50 said that his detention, and the detention of his fellow doctors, who were fulfilling their professional and national duty, and the detention of many others believing in their country, is sufficient proof against the allegations of the regime. Even if the regime's relationship with ISIS was not subject of this trial, P50 was sure that it will be discussed in subsequent trials, "hopefully soon." P50 added that there was a big difference in mentality: the mentality of those who demanded freedom and a state that protects its citizens and their well-being on the one side, and the mentality of the regime that reminds its citizens of its generosity that they grew up unharmed, a regime prepared to "burn the green and the dry" [to destroy everything], and to kill the elderly, women, and children in order to remain in power. P50 concluded that "in order to liberate our country and people of this regime, we carried out the revolution, and we will not back off until we achieve our goals, God willing."

P50 recalled how he was transferred to the Main Branch of State Security on Eid Al-Adha, the most important day of the year. This day was supposed to be one of the happiest days of one's life, and celebrated with friends and family, said P50. It was on this day that he and fellow doctors were arrested and forced to stand in painful positions all day long. P50 told the Court that as he stood in pain and listened to the sound of Eid celebrations and chanting outside, he found the courage to pray to God to give him the ability to forgive. P50 said he believes that God has responded to him. P50 said he and many others demanding freedom are "willing to forgive the aggressors if they stop their crimes, confess their sins, and accept to engage in the mechanisms of transitional justice."

P50 explained that he has no personal grudge toward Anwar Raslan or others who were affiliated with the security services of the regime. In fact, he feels sorry for them. "Revenge is not in our vocabulary," added P50. What he and others want is to succeed in rebuilding their homeland on the foundations of freedom and human dignity and to restore the rights of the people. P50 said he and others have paid a lot in terms of health and time and they lost many relatives and friends. Hundreds of thousands of people have suffered the physical and psychological effects of detention. The suffering of women in detention does not end with psychological and physical torture, said P50. He explained that these women also suffer stigmatization and rejection by society. Some even thought of committing suicide or actually committed it. P50 concluded that for these reasons, revenge will not give back what people lost. However, it is important that their suffering has a meaning that justifies and consoles them. P50 recalled that he had already told the Court about so-called "Meaning Therapy", a form of psychotherapy. It was invented by a German [speaking] psychiatrist named Frankl who suffered from detention and torture in the Nazi concentration camps for three years. P50 explained that in detention, Frankl found that having purpose in people's lives and suffering is what keeps them alive. P50 said that his participation in this trial, despite the difficulties and psychological intensity, was a way for him to find meaning. P50 said he wants to feel that he is contributing to efforts to expose the torture machinery of the Syrian regime. He and others want to feel that they are contributing to prevent such things from happening again by sending a clear message to all those tempted to affiliate with a criminal intelligence system. The message is: 'Your defection from the system after committing what you have committed does not relieve you of your responsibilities. In other words, a profession cannot be vanished by defection.' P50 said he therefore hopes again that this Court can help the Syrian people yearning for freedom and justice, to find such meaning, and that their suffering as Syrians will be the last of this kind. P50 concluded that "enough is enough" [He said it in English and Arabic].

P50 concluded his closing statement by addressing and thanking Presiding Judge Kerber and the other Judges, the Prosecutors, the Plaintiffs' Counsel, his fellow Plaintiffs, the witnesses, the interpreters, and everyone who contributed to this trial.

P50 said he does not want to forget to especially thank the Defense Counsel whose presence and efforts in defending the defendant is important for a fair trial in which the defendant can enjoy all his rights until he is convicted. The fact that Syrians yearn for a country with fair trials was one of the main reasons they started the revolution, said P50. P50 recalled that when he was detained, the interrogator, who P50 did not know, but who was certainly one of the interrogators at Al-Khatib Branch which Anwar Raslan headed the Interrogation Division, reminded P50 of a verse from the Qur'an [74:30] in which the nineteen angels of torment in hell were mentioned. The interrogator compared them to the nineteen security branches of the regime. P50 recalled that he, on the other hand, reminded the interrogator of a great verse from the Noble Quran [16:118] in which God almighty says: "we did not wrong them, it is they who wronged themselves". God Almighty has spoken the truth, concluded P50.

P50 thanked the Court in Arabic and German.

Closing Statement by Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen

After greeting the Judges and the parties to the trial, Oehmichen explained that one question that was repeatedly asked by trial monitors and journalist throughout the trial was "why are defectors being punished?" She said that one must answer that the Defendant is tried for the things he had done before his defection and that defection is not an excuse for what he did before. The suffering of the Plaintiffs of this trial and of Syrian society was not restituted by the Defendant's defection. According to Oehmichen, the Plaintiffs in this trial are only the tip of the iceberg because there were no statistics about the number of victims. She added that systematic crimes are not committed alone by those in power. It always needs followers and small cogs to keep the wheels turning. However, shared responsibilities do not release anyone in charge of their responsibility.

Oehmichen went on to explain that this trial is the first torture trial worldwide against the Syrian regime. It should not be the last one. It has an effect on Germany and the international community. Oehmichen explained that her task on this day was to represent persons who were immediately affected by the crimes at the heart of this trial. She said she represents these people also in the name of the Open Society Justice Initiative and Steve Costas. She explained that her closing statement will first focus on two aspects that highlight the trial's importance as a legal precedent. She will then detail the consequences of the crimes for her clients and the importance of this trial for her clients. Then she will draw a conclusion and thank her clients and all witnesses.

Stir that this trial will create

Dr. Oehmichen said she first wants to join the commendation of the speakers before her and thank the Court for its sovereign and pragmatic handling of the trial. The Court conducted the trial without any eagerness to raise its profile and did not engage in media interviews. Oehmichen added that the Court did not treat Anwar Raslan any differently than other defendants, and most importantly, it was always fair. She also thanked the Judges for their thoughtful treatment of the most vulnerable persons and for becoming increasingly aware of the witnesses' concerns, taking their concerns seriously and providing protection whenever possible.

According to Oehmichen, this trial also showed the shortcomings of German procedural law (StPO) regarding witness protection. She said that witnesses remain the most important source of information and that trials like this are dependent upon bereaved people describing their experiences without fear. Witness protection is therefore a crucial element for conducting a criminal trial: witness protection leads to witnesses who provide important evidence which is crucial for indictments and verdicts.

Oehmichen recalled that it is often difficult to summon witnesses who are afraid of the Syrian regime. There is no possibility under German law nor experience in providing protection to these witnesses. Oehmichen said the Court experienced how witnesses spoke about their relatives being threatened by the Syrian regime or intimidated by the relatives of Defendant Eyad Al-Gharib. In the end, many witnesses did not appear in Court because they were too afraid. The Judges and other parties to the trial learned how serious and real the danger is for witnesses. The Judges therefore allowed some of them to stay anonymous. However, others were not granted such measures because they had no legal counsel, felt obligated to make a testimony, or were not aware of the dangers. Oehmichen said this trial therefore has a significant impact on future trials. Witnesses will not dare to participate in any trials because they saw the limited the protection measures [in Koblenz]. One will therefore not learn how the witnesses were influenced or what the Court could have known if the witnesses were not exposed to threats. Oehmichen concluded that many witnesses in this trial simply did not appear in Court. This is not acceptable because it hinders the Prosecution.

According to Oehmichen, this trial has shown that witnesses must be informed about their rights and the relevant procedure before their questioning. Those witnesses who were supported by NGOs were assisted by legal counsel. Those who were forwarded to the BKA by the German Office for Migration and Asylum (BAMF) did not receive such support. One must think about ways to protect all witnesses. For example, a public audience can be excluded from certain sessions, although a public audience was not excluded in this trial because it constitutes a ground for appeal in specific circumstances. Oehmichen added that international courts and tribunals, however, apply a well-established practice of having the most vulnerable witnesses testify anonymously via video link, and offering them support beyond the main proceedings. Oehmichen concluded that increased witness protection can encourage people to participate in legal proceedings in Germany.

Outreach

Oehmichen went on to explain that it was important to inform the public and affected societies about the proceedings in Court. The VStGB [German Code of Crimes against International Law] acknowledges that certain crimes affect the international community as a whole and have to be taken to trial in Germany. However, those who are directly affected by the crimes cannot follow or understand the proceedings. According to Oehmichen, the Court did important work with this trial but the trial resonates very little when people do not know that the trial took place or how it worked. Oehmichen added that it must be explained to people why German courts have jurisdiction over these crimes at all, as well as how fair trials and equality of arms work. According to Oehmichen, the closing statements by the Plaintiffs showed that these principles were not known in all countries around the world. Oehmichen concluded that if such information is not made available, those actually affected by the crimes at the heart of the trial do not know that there is no impunity for the crimes. Lacking information also creates ideal conditions for misunderstandings, rumors, and misinformation. This is eventually only beneficial for those opposing trials like this.

Oehmichen said that of course, no court is obliged to provide extensive information on ongoing trials. However, it would be insufficient if only accredited journalists could follow the proceedings in the Arabic language. Instead, information must be made available to NGOs and journalists in different languages so that it can be made available to the media. Oehmichen explained that most information about this trial spread on Facebook and through word of mouth. This left a lot of room for misunderstandings. She added that in order to keep control over information, it is useful to better inform the public with multilingual information and background communicated in multiple languages through the press office.

Only then can non-German non-lawyers understand the proceedings. Oehmichen provided three recommendations: (1) regarding international crimes, public relations work must become an integral part of judicial administration, (2) accredited journalists must be given access to interpretation from the very beginning of a trial, and (3) do not leave the coverage of the beginning of a trial and other important moments to the media and instead provide information to the public.

Oehmichen said this trial was a foundation stone. Other judges in Germany and beyond should learn from the experiences of this trial. Oehmichen said that “unfortunately, the Judges rejected a request to audio record the trial.” Concerns about witness protection could have easily been solved. According to Oehmichen it was common practice in many countries to record criminal trials. Many witnesses therefore expected that the trial was recorded anyway. According to what is written in the new government’s coalition contract, this practice is about to be implemented.

Fate of Oehmichen’s Clients

Oehmichen went on to describe what happened to her clients while in detention at Branch 251.

Oehmichen recalled that P22, a medical professional, who testified in Court on December 9, 2020, was tricked into Al-Khatib Branch by officials who told him that his interrogation would only last fifteen minutes. He was then detained at the Branch for ten days before he was transferred to Kafar Souseh where he had to stay for fifteen days after which he was transferred to Adra Prison from where he was eventually released. During all ten interrogations, he was blindfolded and tortured. He was also forced to hear a friend being violently interrogated. Oehmichen recalled that the interrogation officer told P22 to be grateful for the free professional training he enjoyed. He was very scared and was tortured with Falaqa. He was detained in a solitary cell which was around 0.80 meters wide and between 1.60 and 1.80 meters long. P22 stated that the interrogation officer who interrogated him was from Homs and that he still remembered his voice. However, Anwar Raslan was unwilling to provide a voice sample, said Oehmichen. P22 further told the Court about arbitrary, absurd torture at the Branch, including collective punishment. After a short circuit, guards entered the cell and started beating all detainees. Oehmichen further recalled that the hygienic situation during P22’s detention was horrible and that his family was not officially informed about his whereabouts. P22 also spoke about psychological torture and an alleged amnesty that raised hopes among detainees. He described the constant state of limbo between hope and fear and that he was also threatened.

Oehmichen recalled that P27 who testified in Court on January 28, 2021, participated in demonstrations and was detained twice with the Military Intelligence and Criminal Security Branches, once at Al-Khatib Branch, then several other Branches thereafter. Oehmichen remembered that during the first conversation she had with P27, he did not even mention the welcome party he had to endure because he thought that beating did not qualify as torture. He was chained during the transfers between Branches. P27 said that Al-Khatib Branch was the worst because there was no fresh air circulating. It was hot and smelled very bad. He described how there was a significant difference regarding the quality of air between the cell and the hallway in front of the cell. P27 further described the detention conditions and the interrogations he had to endure. Oehmichen recalled that P27 was arbitrarily beaten and saw signs of torture on the bodies of his fellow detainees. He was tortured with Shabeh and was always blindfolded during interrogations.

Oehmichen went on to recall what P44, who testified in Court on August 8, 2021, had to endure during his detention at Branch 251. P44 was stopped at a gas station where he was insulted, beaten, and later taken to Al-Khatib Branch. He had to undergo the welcome party and was taken to a 3x3 meter cell which was so small and overcrowded that only a few detainees were able to lie down.

The air was so bad that many detainees got scabies. Oehmichen said that P44 was lucky because he only had to endure the bad detention conditions which, however, constitute torture themselves. P44 was not interrogated and was allowed to leave the Branch after a few days.

Oehmichen recalled that P50 already described what this trial means to him personally. Oehmichen therefore only briefly recalled that P50 was detained at Al-Khatib Branch for forty days during which he was interrogated and tortured. [...] he described how attacks on the detainees were the rule. For there to not be attacks was exceptional. Oehmichen recalled P50 telling the Court that it was strange for him to not be able to see himself in the mirror and that he was scared when he first saw himself in the mirror after his detention at Al-Khatib Branch. After Al-Khatib Branch, P50 was detained at other Branches of the General Intelligence Directorate, the Military Intelligence Service, and eventually Adra Prison.

Impact of the Crimes on Oehmichen's Clients

Oehmichen explained that her client P27 received psychosocial treatment for one year and a half. He is living in fear every day and the mere word "investigations" scares him. As a medical professional, P50 treated people who experienced similar things. He spoke about this aspect during his testimony in Court, for example that women especially suffer from their detention experiences. They are abandoned by their families or even killed. Oehmichen recalled P50 telling the Court about a woman who was detained for only two hours but became depressed afterwards. Oehmichen concluded that most people focused on the physical consequences, but the psychological consequences are often even worse. She recalled P50 saying that 'people are suffering post-traumatic stress disorder after detention and some even change their personality.'

Importance of the Trial for the Plaintiffs

Oehmichen explained that many Plaintiffs and witnesses said they do not feel any personal anger toward Anwar Raslan himself. P50 affirmed this at the very beginning of his testimony, as did P22 at the end of his testimony. Oehmichen said P22 was not in Court today, but he asked her to read out a statement on his behalf:

P22 said he wants for Raslan to be held accountable. According to P22, Raslan does not show any sign of remorse. He keeps claiming that he defected, but at the same time he refuses to cooperate. P22 said it should be the regime of Bashar Al-Assad facing trial. P22 said he hopes that this present trial will prove the crimes against humanity committed by the regime.

Oehmichen went on to say that she hopes that the consequences of [Raslan's] actions and the anticipated life sentence should open Raslan's eyes to see that others are still suffering today. [...] According to Oehmichen, those who are released from detention are no longer the same people they were before. She recalled one witness saying that 'those who are detained are lost, those who are released are newborn.' Witnesses are still scared of police officers today, suffering from sleeping disorders, and are scared by certain noises. According to Oehmichen, these consequences were the very goal of the regime and its employees terrorizing the civilian population.

Oehmichen directly addressed Raslan saying, "it is not too late. The last word has not been spoken. Please help us uncover the crimes."

Oehmichen then went on to say that this trial unveiled many abysses. The Caesar Files and information about mass graves do not require further details in this closing statement, she said. Oehmichen said people inside the courtroom were often speechless and wondered how human beings could commit such crimes against other human beings.

Oehmichen then turned to Presiding Judge Kerber, saying that when Kerber said on February 24, 2021 that she would never forget the Caesar Files, it was more than a personal comment. No one would ever forget what one saw in the Caesar Files. Nor would one forget witnesses telling the Court that they made friend with cockroaches because the guards were monsters. [...] Oehmichen recalled “so many brave Syrians testified in this trial and showed humanity.” She further acknowledged that the political and historical context must be acknowledged in such trials, as discussed in international criminal law. Oehmichen added that the testimonies of many witnesses also showed that people have a choice and that the Syrian people achieved something historical.

Oehmichen concluded by quoting Berthold Brecht who wrote in “Das Leben des Galilei” that “unfortunate is the country that needs heroes.” Brecht also wrote in the 1940s that poor people have no choice but to be heroes, saying that ‘to get a bag of flour one now needs the same energy which before was sufficient to make an entire field arable.’ According to Oehmichen, the many heroic acts in Syria are proof of the injustice there. Syria needs many heroes. The Plaintiffs and many witnesses in this trial are heroes. She said that her clients are impressive examples of such heroes: P27 was only 21-years-old when he participated in demonstrations. P44 developed a strategy on how to inform his relatives about his and his family members’ detention. P50 supported people who had the same experiences as him, and one must not forget the teenagers in Dara’a who started the revolution. Oehmichen recalled that P44 not only saw activists and bloggers demanding freedom at demonstrations, but also a 70-year-old man. Those who filmed the demonstrations, thereby risking their own lives, the doctors who treated injured people, witnesses who did not turn in their friends despite massive pressure, detainees who informed the families of fellow detainees about their [missing loved ones’] whereabouts, detainees who secretly smuggled bread and gave it to other detainees, the 85-year-old man who stood in the way when his son was about to be arrested, supporters of NGOs such as CIJA, lawyers like Mazen Darwish and Anwar Al-Bunni, Caesar and his friends and supporters; all these people are heroes said Oehmichen. She concluded that their sad and important role shows how bad the situation in Syria is because ‘unfortunate are the countries who need heroes.’

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:31PM

The next session will be on January 6, 2022 at 9:30AM when the Defense Counsel will provide their closing statements and the Defendant will be given the opportunity to provide his last words in this trial.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany
Trial Monitoring Report 57
Hearing Date: January 6, 2022

Day 109 – January 6, 2022

On this day, the Defense team provided their closing statements, then Defendant Anwar Raslan had his personal interpreter read out a written statement on his behalf. Both Defense Counsels requested that their client be acquitted. According to the Defense, Raslan was not one of those most responsible for crimes against humanity committed by the Syrian government. The charged crimes cannot be attributed to Raslan, said his Defense Counsels, adding that he cannot be held liable for what happened at Branch 251. They further stated that Raslan had no authority at the Branch and tried to help detainees whenever possible. The Defense also claimed that it was impossible for Raslan to defect and safely flee the country with his family at an earlier time.

In his written statement that was read out by his interpreter, Raslan again claimed that he had no power at Branch 251, that Hafez Makhlouf and Division 40 were the ones in control of the Branch, that as a Sunni, he had to follow orders by his Alawite superiors, and that he tried to help detainees whenever possible since he was supportive of the opposition. Lastly, Raslan addressed the “entire Syrian people and victims” apologizing for being unable to help more people and saying that he sees himself as a victim who is now separated from his home and his family.

Trial Day 109 – January 6, 2022

The proceedings began at 9:34AM with six spectators and nine journalists in the audience. Three cameramen took videos and photos before the start of the session. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Two Plaintiffs attended the session alongside their Counsel.

Presiding Judge Kerber left the floor to the Defense Counsel to deliver their closing statements.

Closing Statement by Defense Counsel Fratzky

Defense Counsel Fratzky started his closing statement by saying that the Court has reached this point after 103 days of taking evidence. 103 days that showed unimaginable suffering. 103 days of a trial conducted during a pandemic. Fratzky said the latter point demanded a lot from everyone, especially the Judges. Fratzky thanked all parties in the case for their professional and collegial interactions.

He went on to explain that this trial also happened outside the courtroom. It was an international trial, because it was conducted pursuant to § 1 VStGB which provides for universal jurisdiction. Fratzky said that it is important to have such trials due to the U.S. and Russia, as the Tiergarten Trial in Berlin recently showed.

Fratzky added that his and his colleague's closing statements are not intended to diminish the suffering of the victims or deny that torture occurred. Nor do they oppose the concept of universal jurisdiction and other indispensable values. The crimes in Syria that are also committed by others, including the U.S., are cruel and must be prosecuted. No one can allow the Syrian government to have dust set on it and continue normalization efforts. Injustice continues and Bashar Al-Assad is still in power. Fratzky explained that injustice and innocence are, however, two different things. The latter focuses on an individual perpetrator. Fratzky stressed that systematic torture did indeed happen at Al-Khatib Branch. But in terms of an individual perpetrator, individual contribution to the execution of the crimes must be given. Fratzky said it seems easy to simply consider this in light of the generally existing injustice.

Fratzky recalled Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen reading out a statement from her client P22 who said that Bashar Al-Assad should be the one on the defendant's bench. Fratzky said it is questionable whether Anwar Raslan can be tried as a substitute for Bashar Al-Assad, and concluded that this is not in line with existing laws.

Fratzky explained that, according to the law, individual liability must be given. Nonetheless, things are a bit different in this trial. § 25 (2) StGB on co-perpetration and § 27 StGB on aiding and abetting cannot be applied with existing thresholds. In this case, additional factors must be considered as well. Fratzky said that such factors are: the accused's 'point of view,' the accused's ethnicity; considerations on the scope of action of employees of totalitarian regimes; and dangers for [the employees] and their families. Regarding the latter aspect, Fratzky recalled that the Prosecutors argued that it would have been bearable for Raslan to defect and leave Syria without his family. According to Fratzky, this conclusion cannot be drawn from the testimonies that the Court heard. In addition, one must only look at the issue of witness protection in this trial to find that the same standards and concerns are applicable to Anwar Raslan as well. If Raslan left Syria without his family, his family would have faced a high risk of being subjected to repression and other threats.

Fratzky concluded that one must evaluate Raslan's individual, personal actions. Liability is not a normative concept, according to Fratzky. He referred to jurisprudence from the German Federal Court of Justice that found in 1952 [rn.17] on the issue of culpability and duress that a person is not culpable when the circumstances in which he finds himself prevent him from recognizing the illegality of his actions. Fratzky added that it is questionable how much freedom Anwar Raslan had in determining the legality of his actions. His superiors and colleagues were all acting based on experiences that cannot be compared to what people are used to in states governed by the rule of law.

Liability in international criminal law

On the issue of modes of liability in international criminal law, Fratzky referred to a publication [p.414, incl. fn. 40] by Professor Dr. Stefanie Bock on liability in international criminal law, by saying that international criminal law was designed to hold those most responsible for crimes accountable and that one must always consider the actual margin of influence of the individual accused. Fratzky argued that Anwar Raslan, however, was only the head of a sub-division at Branch 251 for some time. Neither Bashar Al-Assad nor Hafez Makhoul, who Fratzky identified as those most responsible, were on trial in Koblenz said Fratzky.

He further referred to jurisprudence from the German Federal Court of Justice relating to liability of administration officers when shooting people at the inner-German border. According to Fratzky, Raslan did not act himself. The trial did not find anything to support such a finding, said Fratzky. He added that according to international criminal law standards, certain points of connection [between the perpetrator and the crime] are required. However, Raslan did not belong to any relevant group. He had no organizational power, said Fratzky. This power was with Tawfiq Younes and Hafez Makhoul. Fratzky concluded that many aspects contradict a finding of criminal liability in Raslan's case. To the contrary, Raslan helped people, was punished for this help by the actual perpetrators, defected, and changed sides.

Fratzky said Raslan never denied that he knew about torture. The question was rather about what he was able to do on his own. One must answer this objectively. Fratzky recalled the Prosecutors and Plaintiffs Counsel saying that in terms of orders, explicit orders to torture detainees were not necessary at Branch 251, and that Raslan only disagreed with torture when it hindered his investigative work. Fratzky said that especially the phrase 'explicit orders were not necessary' was problematic since silence only constitutes a limited declaration of intent.

Fratzky added that in Syria, torture is generally considered a crime and punished. He also made a reference to an [article on Syrian Intelligence Services by the German Federal Center for Political Education (BPB)]

Anwar Raslan's Role at Branch 251

Fratzky went on to elaborate on Anwar Raslan's role at Branch 251. He said that starting in 2008, Anwar Raslan was the head of the Investigation Division at Branch 251. The Branch was headed by Tawfiq Younes. Fratzky recalled Raslan telling the Court that officers from the Republican Guard and the 4th Division were tasked with suppressing demonstrations, according to an order by the CCMC. However, Raslan was not a member of the CCMC. According to Fratzky, Raslan also told the Court that in April 2011, Tawfiq Younes called him to his office because of the demonstrations in Houla. Raslan said that when Younes told him that he considered the demonstrator to be traitor, Raslan understood that as a direct threat toward himself. This was the moment when Raslan was convinced that he had to defect. According to Raslan, the Republican Guard then increasingly intervened. He twice complained to Younes about arbitrary detentions but was told to remain silent. Fratzky further recalled that Raslan told the court that some officers filed a complaint against him in July 2011 because of his origin and because he released prisoners. Younes then told Raslan that he wanted to reform the Branch and Raslan was deprived of his powers already in June 2011. Fratzky concluded that Raslan was not in a leading position and was under surveillance.

Eyad Al-Gharib's statements regarding Anwar Raslan

Fratzky referred to CCI Deußing's statements about his questioning of Eyad Al-Gharib on August 16, 2018. Fratzky said that Al-Gharib worked at Division 40 for a short period and was considered an insider according to the police questioning from 2018. During this questioning, Al-Gharib said that Raslan was the head of the Interrogation Division at Branch 251 until August 2012, had an office on the first floor, was superior to the Prison Director, and was also called to Branch 285 sometimes due to his expertise in investigations. Fratzky added that the Prosecutors already extensively elaborated on this point.

Fratzky said he wants to make a few comments on Al-Gharib's statements: Al-Gharib said that he worked at Al-Khatib Branch starting in February of 2010, then worked in Az-Zabadani starting in June of 2011, and starting in July of 2011 worked at Division 40 in Al-Jisr al-Abyad before he defected in January of 2012 and went to hide in Deir ez-Zor.

Fratzky said Al-Gharib's statement on Al-Khatib Branch during the time from March until May 2011 and up to August 2012 is therefore not credible. After his defection in January 2012, Al-Gharib was more than 500 kilometers away from the Branch in an area where the regime was in conflict with the FSA. Fratzky therefore concluded that Al-Gharib's statements do not contradict Raslan's own statements. Fratzky added that even if Anwar Raslan was formally the superior of employees at the Branch, this does not contradict the finding that he had no more power after the re-structuring.

Fratzky said that there was nothing more to say on Thurmann's expertise other than what the Defense had already stated in their requests for evidence.

He went on to explain to the Court that, contrary to certain expert statements, the trial showed that soldiers were frequently punished. According to Fratzky, it is common practice that people who are no longer trusted are put in key positions where they cannot cause harm. Just like Raslan was a member in a committee deciding on pension matters.

Fratzky went on to depict Al-Gharib's police statement. He referenced page ten of the transcript according to which Al-Gharib said that he had been at the prison of Al-Khatib Branch only once in October 2011 when he visited a friend who worked at the Branch at that time. Al-Gharib further told the police that there was mistrust among all intelligence Branches. Fratzky concluded that Raslan therefore was not the superior of the Prison Director at the Branch, and even if he was, he had had no influence as Al-Gharib also told the BKA that the prison guards were free to do whatever they wanted. Fratzky added that at the end of 2011, Tawfiq Younes prevented an inspection of the prison facilities at Branch 251 by the Arab League. According to Fratzky, this circumstance further proved that Raslan had now power over the prison or the prison staff. Rather, this was the task of Tawfiq Younes. Fratzky added that Al-Gharib also told the police that Tawfiq Younes and Habib Fadel are the ones responsible for torture at the Branch. In terms of hierarchy, Fratzky said that Al-Gharib merely told the police that Abdul Ghani [the Prison Director at Branch 251] 'was of course subordinate to Anwar Raslan, since the latter was the boss.'

Fratzky concluded that beyond that, Al-Gharib made only general comments about Raslan, saying that Raslan was consulted on investigation matters and that he was very professional. Fratzky questioned how Al-Gharib knew that, since before, he only said that these matters are widely known. Fratzky concluded that one cannot draw any conclusions from Al-Gharib's statement with the German Police, since he only made general comments. For example, Al-Gharib was never at Raslan's office, but located the office in a sketch of Branch 251 that he provided to the police. According to Fratzky, Al-Gharib's statement regarding Raslan also contradicted Al-Gharib's own background as he was working at a different area in Damascus at that time. Fratzky said the Prosecutors' referred to Al-Gharib's police statement despite all that and despite the fact that Al-Gharib had not been to Al-Khatib Branch since June or July 2011. Al-Gharib can therefore not know what happened at the Branch after that. Fratzky said the BKA did not question Al-Gharib's statements, especially relating to the fact that he defected in January 2012 yet said that Raslan was the Head of Interrogations at Branch 251 in August 2012.

Fratzky said that, nonetheless, Al-Gharib also told the BKA that he never saw Raslan participate in the arrest of demonstrators. Al-Gharib further said his colleagues told him that 'Raslan punished soldiers for beating demonstrators without questioning them.' Fratzky added that according to Al-Gharib, Raslan was unable to do anything because he is a Sunni. This was also confirmed by Raslan himself in his plea.

Fratzky went on to say that in terms of intent, the Prosecutors' argued that it is irrelevant whether Raslan wanted people to be mistreated or whether he was opposed to it because it hindered the collection of information. Fratzky found the contrary, arguing that according to the principle in dubio pro reo, one must assume that Raslan only used this argumentation to protect himself and to not disclose the actual reasons for his opposition to torture people.

Fratzky went on to address the issue of reforms and restructuring at the Branch, about which Al-Gharib also spoke to the BKA on page 22 of the transcript. Fratzky recalled that he explained to the Court on several occasions that Hafez Makhoulf was the actual head of Branch 251. According to Fratzky, Al-Gharib confirmed this view in his police questioning when he said that Hafez Makhoulf was subordinate to Ali Mamlouk [head of the General Intelligence Directorate at the time], but only on paper. Al-Gharib recalled an instance when Hafez Makhoulf did not even dare to pull down the window of his car when he was driving past Ali Mamlouk. Fratzky added that when Al-Gharib was asked by the BKA whether the power structure at Branch 251 was that Tawfiq Younes was the head of Branch 251 and that all staff are subordinate to him and must adhere to his orders, other than Division 40 and Hafez Makhoulf who reports to Ali Mamlouk. Al-Gharib denied this and said Hafez Makhoulf reported directly to Bashar Al-Assad. Fratzky concluded that it was Hafez Makhoulf who had the power over torture at the Branch because he was not subordinate to Tawfiq Younes. It was Division 40 that used the prison at Al-Khatib Branch without being subordinate to the Branch.

Fratzky added that, within this frame, Raslan not only served as a Sunni and punished soldiers, but also released detainees. Consequently, the defense of duress pursuant to § 35 StGB is applicable in his case. The Prosecutors are therefore wrong when arguing that Raslan could have defected without his family. Fratzky recalled that multiple witnesses in this trial were anonymized to protect their families. The same was applicable for Raslan, said Fratzky. It was impossible for him to leave Syria without his family. It would have meant their certain death.

Presiding Judge Kerber reminded Defense Counsel Fratzky to be aware of the difficult work that the interpreters have been performing for two years and asked him to speak slower.

Fratzky went on to explain that Anwar Raslan is from Houla where many of the opposition were killed in a massacre, and which had been an opposition stronghold even before the massacre. Doubts about Raslan's loyalty [to the government] are consequently relatable, said Fratzky. In addition, Raslan helped some people in Houla, planned his escape at the same time, left the country together with his family, and immediately afterwards started to work for the opposition. According to Fratzky, Tawfiq Younes and Hafez Makhoulf were the ones in power. They were happy about people being detained and interrogated. Hafez Makhoulf belonged to Bashar Al-Assad's inner circle and was therefore sanctioned by the U.S. as early as 2007 and again in May 2011. He was also sanctioned by the EU in September 2011. Fratzky concluded that there are rumors that Makhoulf found refuge in Belarus. Fratzky said he would not be surprised if these rumors were true.

Witnesses in this Trial

Fratzky went on to elaborate on the witnesses who testified in this trial. He said there were three categories of witnesses:

- 1) Witnesses who only heard about Raslan or were shown his picture by Anwar Al-Bunni at a later point. For these witnesses, one cannot rule out that Al-Bunni played a role with regard to their testimonies.
- 2) Witnesses who actually experienced Raslan back in Syria and told the Court that Raslan was kind and helped them.
- 3) Witnesses who claimed to have met Raslan back in Syria because they recognized his voice or saw him when their blindfolds moved.

Fratzky said that almost all of these witnesses had one thing in common: for them, it was all about Syria. They used the trial as a political trial and a stage to oppose the regime. Fratzky said this is not a criticism that witnesses found closure through their testimonies. Nonetheless, one must also filter testimonies like P22 who told the Court that he does not personally know Raslan. Fratzky said detainees in Syria and at Al-Khatib Branch suffered unimaginable horrors. However, this trial is about legal responsibility and not moral responsibility. In this vein, one must consider the following testimonies:

Not one sentence from Eyad Al-Gharib's statement to the BKA can be used to convict Raslan. To the contrary, Al-Gharib's descriptions are in favor of Raslan.

Nothing in P18's testimony can support a conviction of Raslan. According to Fratzky, it is questionable why P18's intermediary did not personally facilitate the release of his cousin and instead forwarded him to Raslan. P18's perceptions of his meeting with Raslan in Raslan's office cannot be used against Raslan. Having to wait a long time before an appointment at a public entity is nothing unusual, said Fratzky, and added that every person living in Berlin can relate to that. He concluded that the message that P18 perceived from this waiting time was subjective. Further, P18 was unable to allocate the name Anwar Raslan with certainty. He said the scene happened on the first floor, then he spoke about the ground floor. He first said he did not hear noises, then he described noises. "Suddenly" P18 also described interrogation rooms next to the waiting area, said Fratzky. Fratzky recalled that during P18's testimony in Court, Presiding Judge Kerber at one point advised P18 to listen to his counsel who tried to save the situation. [Kerber said she could not remember saying that.] Fratzky continued, saying P18 also used the "often-heard excuse" that the police interpreter made mistakes. Fratzky noted that the BKA considered their interpreter to be so good that he accompanied the investigators to interviews abroad. Fratzky concluded that, regarding P18's descriptions, it was rather the case that Anwar Raslan was told that a person died in detention and that he had to take care of that. P18's in-court testimony was not stringent and when he was confronted with his previous statements to the police, he provided contradictions. Anwar Raslan said he does not know P18.

Fratzky recalled that according to Reuter, Raslan was not deprived of his power as he was able to influence proceedings in Deir ez-Zor in June 2012 when he facilitated the release of a detainee. However, there are several other reasons why Raslan was able to facilitate the release. The reason for the arrest is unknown; it is unclear whether the officers in Deir ez-Zor knew that Raslan was deprived of his power. Fratzky said he knows from another 60-day-long trial that in June 2012, the Syrian regime was under pressure by the FSA in Deir ez-Zor, one could read the relevant Wikipedia entry on the 'Deir ez-Zor clashes'. According to Fratzky, it is more likely that when Raslan called to facilitate the release of the prisoner, no one of the officers in Deir ez-Zor made enquiries about who exactly was calling from the Intelligence Service in Damascus.

Fratzky went on to recall that P11 was unable to remember and therefore had to be confronted with his police statements in Court. According to Fratzky, P11 said the transcript of his police interview had not been re-translated to him, but it was re-translated at least in parts.

P11 did not recognize Raslan's picture and claimed to be able to recognize his voice. He was further unable to locate the Branch on a map. Fratzky said Raslan admitted he knew P11 and made enquiries about him to put his name on a list of detainees who were supposed to be released and forwarded this list. P11 was detained several times. Fratzky said it was remarkable how detailed P11's descriptions of this particular detention were with the police, while in Court, his memory had to be triggered by recalling almost his entire police statement. Fratzky concluded that P11 claimed that the voice that he said was Raslan's, had no accent, while Raslan is from Homs and has the relevant accent.

Fratzky said that the Prosecutors found that P41 showed no eagerness to incriminate the Defendant. However, his second sentence in Court was that "then the torture, led by Anwar Raslan, began." Fratzky went on to compare P41's in-court testimony and his previous statements with the police. In Court, P41 said that An-Na'saan mentioned the name Anwar Raslan. When asked about how P41 knew the name, he added that An-Na'saan introduced Raslan and that there was also a sign with Raslan's name on it. P41 then pointed at Anwar Raslan in Court when asked whether he was able to identify someone in Court as the person he was told was Anwar Raslan. Fratzky added that during his police interview, however, when P41 was asked about whether he knew someone in the photo array, P41 pointed at picture no.2 after he hesitated for a while and said that he knew this person and that he saw him in Syria [Raslan is in picture no.2 of the BKA's photo array]. P41 then told the police that it was difficult for him to remember exactly. He saw this person in detention at the General Intelligence Service's Al-Khatib Branch during interrogations. When the BKA asked P41 when he saw this person, P41 said he assumed it was in October during his detention. He added that he thought this was the person responsible for the Branch, but he was slimmer back then. P41 also said that he only saw this person briefly two or three times. When the BKA then asked P41 whether he was able to look around during interrogations, P41 said he had to look on the floor but 'the responsible person stood behind a desk.' Fratzky concluded that P41 only identified a person after he hesitated for some time, and that the BKA had to ask several times about how he identified this person. According to Fratzky, it is interesting that P41 said he only had a brief look but was still able to locate the person behind a desk. He neither mentioned in Court that he had to look down on the floor, nor that he had read a sign with Raslan's name on it. Fratzky concluded that P41 did not mention the name Anwar Raslan but merely spoke about the "responsible person;" even during his police interview. During the trial in Court, however, P41 immediately pointed at Anwar Raslan sitting on the defendant's bench when asked to identify the person. Fratzky said it was obvious that Raslan was the one sitting on the defendant's bench. "Who else should have been sitting there?" asked Fratzky. However, it could also be the case that before his in-Court testimony, P41 was already shown a picture of Anwar Raslan, said Fratzky. In any case, he never mentioned the name Anwar Raslan.

Fratzky further recalled that P49 told the Court two things. First, interrogations conducted by Anwar Raslan were "completely free of violence." Second, detainees could only be released with the permission of Tawfiq Younes. Fratzky concluded that the actual power [over the Branch and releases] therefore laid with Tawfiq Younes. He further recalled that Raslan confirmed in Court that lists with names of detainees who were supposed to be released had to be approved by Tawfiq Younes. Fratzky added that according to P49, Raslan allegedly apologized to him via Facebook and told him that someone else had denounced P49 at the head of the Branch. Referring to P49's description of Raslan's office and a picture of Hafez Al-Assad hanging there, Fratzky said it was mere speculation that Raslan allegedly said 'such things would have not happened under Hafez Al-Assad.' Fratzky concluded that Raslan did apologize to P49 and had to follow orders coming from his superiors.

Fratzky said that due to P16's testimony, the Prosecutors found that Raslan had decision-making power at the Branch. However, P16's description of Raslan complaining to the guards because he had told them multiple times to take off detainees' blindfolds, indicates that Raslan had no decision-making power at the Branch. It also indicates that Raslan conducted his interrogations without detainees being blindfolded. One therefore has to doubt every testimony of witnesses who said they were blindfolded during an interrogation with Raslan, said Fratzky. He added that the phrase "sidi" with which guards addressed Raslan was only an empty phrase. Fratzky recalled that P16 was not tortured during the interrogation with Raslan, was not insulted, was offered coffee and cigarettes, and eventually released one day after that. P16 further met with Raslan in Jordan, and he had already asked her about a way to Ghouta [to leave the country] at their first meeting [at the Branch]. P16 also told the Court that it was not easy for government officials to defect, said Fratzky. In her interviews with the German police, P16 said she and Raslan spoke about general things when they met in Jordan and that Raslan was relieved. In terms of position towards the regime, Fratzky concluded that P16 also said she assumes that Raslan stopped supporting the regime from the moment when it started bombing civilian population.

Fratzky went on to explain that another witness, who declined to testify in Court and whose testimony was therefore introduced by inspector Knappmann, also allegedly met Raslan at the Branch but did not experience torture. The witness told Knappmann from the BKA that Raslan did not voice any allegations against her in their conversation. Referring to the witness' descriptions of how a guard who had pulled up his sleeves entered the room and told Raslan that he executed the order, Fratzky found that one cannot conclude that this scene referred to an incident of torture. Fratzky said that the witness' statements with the BKA confirmed what Raslan said in his first plea. The fact that the witness was not tortured at Division 40 was apparently due to phone calls by Anwar Raslan. However, the witness was not asked about Hafez Makhoul, unless this was part of the structural investigation to which the defense had no access, said Fratzky. He added that unfortunately, the witness did not testify in Court. Her in-court testimony would have been interesting, and many aspects required further clarification, particularly in light of P33 describing Division 40 as a "reception Division."

Regarding P33, Fratzky recalled that the Prosecutors found her release to be an indicator for Raslan's decision-making power at the Branch. Fratzky recalled that P33 described three people being present at a meeting in Al-Khatib Branch: one man, Anwar Raslan, and the head of the Air Force Intelligence [Jamil Hassan]. P33 told the court that in this meeting, she and her husband apologized for their daughters and one of her daughters was consequently released. However, as P33 told the Court, her other daughter's release was denied by the President Bashar Al-Assad himself. Fratzky found that this instance showed that the Air Force Intelligence had influence over proceedings at Branch 251 and even the president himself was involved in the release of one of P33's daughters. Fratzky added that this meeting happened shortly after the beginning of the revolution and that only ten days later, P33 was able to arrange another meeting without involving an intermediary or paying bribes.

Referring to P33's daughter, P32, Fratzky said she told the court that Raslan was not harsh and did not beat her. She was released after her meeting with him, according to Fratzky. He added that P32 did show eagerness to incriminate Raslan by, amongst other reasons, saying that money was paid and that he 'wanted to get rid of the problem.' Fratzky said that while P33 identified the head of the Air Force Intelligence Service, P32 did not and instead only identified Anwar Raslan.

Fratzky then turned to Anwar Al-Bunni, recalling that he had testified in Court as an expert on June 4, 2020. However, his name was mentioned throughout the trial despite the fact that he had not been detained at Branch 251 after 2011. Fratzky said Al-Bunni believes he heard Raslan's voice in 2006. According to Fratzky, Al-Bunni's description that Division 40 received orders from Branch 251 was incorrect since it was "rather the other way around." Fratzky further recalled that according to what Al-Bunni said in Court, higher-ranking officers were afraid of Hafez Makhoul. Al-Bunni told the police that he was beaten in 2006. In Court he said he was not beaten. On his second day of testimony, he said he "endured physical violence" recalled Fratzky. He added that Al-Bunni's role in this trial was, however, interesting for several other reasons as well.

Fratzky explained that he was now at page 90 of 119 of his closing statement and suggested a short break.

***

***

Fratzky went on to lay out the reasons for why Al-Bunni's involvement in this trial was noteworthy:

- a) On August 25, 2021, P46 testified in Court. His colleague made a film about Al-Bunni and put him in contact with the latter.
- b) Another witness with connections to Al-Bunni declined to testify in Court and his testimony was introduced in Court by CCI Deußing in February 2021.
- c) P30 told the Court that Al-Bunni made a public call to all people who were detained at Al-Khatib Branch in 2011 and 2012 to contact Al-Bunni.
- d) In Court, P47 stated that he was not sure whether he had seen Anwar Raslan. When confronted with his police statement, saying that he saw Raslan's picture on the internet and that he was in contact with Al-Bunni for work reasons, he told the Court that it was known that many witnesses in this trial came through Al-Bunni and that he spoke with Al-Bunni about the picture of Anwar Raslan.
- e) P48 told the Court that he did not see Anwar Raslan in detention but refused to look right to identify the Defendant. When P48 was asked about his connection to Anwar Al-Bunni, he immediately said he knew that this issue would come up.
- f) CCI Schmidt from the LKA Berlin was summoned to testify in Court about his questioning of P46. Schmidt told the Court that P46 told him that Al-Bunni collects witness statements and showed pictures of Anwar Raslan to P46. Fratzky concluded that P46 lied in Court.
- g) P57 [Fratzky mentioned the name of this witness, despite anonymization] said Al-Bunni documented his testimony during a call. However, the information in the document that Al-Bunni created and sent to the court was contradictory to P57's in-court testimony.

Fratzky concluded that Al-Bunni is "obviously working behind the investigations" and creating false documents. He further showed pictures of Raslan to potential witnesses and told them Raslan's name. He also made public calls for potential witnesses while the trial was already running. Fratzky said Al-Bunni should make the same intense efforts to search for the actual perpetrators. Fratzky concluded that Al-Bunni and other witnesses' testimonies were completely unusable because they had all been influenced.

Fratzky went on to recall that Al-Labwani told the Court that because Raslan is Sunni he "was treated as such." Regarding Branch 251, Al-Labwani told the court that the Director of the "State Security Branch" was "only pro forma."

It would always be an Alawite with direct connection to the President. According to Al-Labwani, Hafez Al-Assad turned State Security into “a criminal institution.” Fratzky added that according to Al-Labwani, Raslan managed to get detainees released by Tawfiq Younes, in the beginning [of the revolution], whenever he noticed that unarmed people were arrested. However, he could not continue doing this from June 2011 onward because he was then deprived of his competencies.

P22 told the Court that he had “nothing personal against Raslan” and that it was good that Raslan defected “relatively early in 2012” recalled Fratzky.

Fratzky further recalled that P56, a former employee at the Syrian Ministry of Interior told the Court about a committee in which Raslan participated. P56 also said that Hafez Makhoul was the actual head of Al-Khatib Branch because he is Bashar Al-Assad’s cousin. Fratzky said that according to P56, Tawfiq Younes might have been the head of the State Security Branch, but at the Ministry of Interior it was clear that Hafez Makhoul was the Head of Al-Khatib Branch. Regarding Raslan’s work, P56 testified that Raslan tried to talk to the head of the Branch to help detainees but was not always able to help. Raslan therefore had an argument with Tawfiq Younes about releasing detainees.

Conclusion

Fratzky said that in conclusion, one must acknowledge that most of the witnesses who had actually seen Raslan, said that he helped them, that they did not have to suffer or that at least Raslan did not harm them. And then there were witnesses who claimed to have met Raslan because someone told them so, said Fratzky. He added that from these testimonies, one cannot find any liability for Raslan. Fratzky said there were also witnesses who encountered Raslan who did not harm them but blamed Raslan for everything [that happened at Branch 251].

To the contrary, Raslan did not approve of torture and one must acknowledge that he acted under duress pursuant to § 35 StGB as his family was in danger. Fratzky concluded that even if one found that Raslan is liable for what happened at the Branch, he acted without any guilt pursuant to § 35 StGB.

Fratzky added that he can relate to some witnesses and plaintiffs. They are of the opinion that a defendant who worked for a criminal system must not be free. However, Raslan defected, supported the opposition in Geneva, and risked his own life to do all that.

Fratzky stressed that this trial must not be a political trial. Even if some people might not consider this to be just, Raslan must not be convicted instead of the entire regime. According to Fratzky, Anwar Raslan’s conviction cannot be a mere consequence of Eyad Al-Gharib’s conviction because Al-Gharib confessed what he did. Raslan, however, neither approved nor carried out torture. Fratzky said one must instead clearly name the actual perpetrators and responsible persons, just like the Berlin Kammergericht did in its verdict in the Tiergarten Trial. One must send a clear signal against torture and war crimes. However, this signal must be sent to those who are actually responsible. Fratzky said Raslan is not one of them. Fratzky demanded the Judges acquit Raslan.

Closing Statement by Defense Counsel Böcker

Defense Counsel Böcker started his closing statement by saying that he has a few sidenotes and conclusionary notes to add. He said he does not work for the Syrian regime, but instead for Anwar Raslan as an individual, who was born and raised in Syria and lost his home country, like all other Syrians who engaged in this trial. Böcker said they all shared the same general fate: the Syrian state of injustice [Unrechtsstaat].

According to Böcker, he and all other parties in the trial, including the defendant, are dismayed in the face of this situation [state of injustice, state-led violence]. He added that the line of defense was never intended to negate the Syrian system [of violence] but to defend Anwar Raslan personally.

Personal Remarks

Böcker said that the situation in Syria and German history taught him to be grateful to be living in a state governed by the rule of law, including all its rough edges. If people want to demonstrate against Covid-19 restrictions, they are allowed to do so [in Germany] although not everybody shares their opinion. If one is accused in a criminal case, s/he can choose a counsel. Böcker said it is a great fortune to be able to live [in Germany]. The prosecution [of crimes committed in Syria] is therefore of immense importance for Syrian society.

Question of Criminal Liability

Böcker added that, nevertheless, the political circumstances are irrelevant for this trial. This trial is only conducted against one person. Böcker recalled that the Court already elaborated on the situation in Syria during the indictment period. The Defense has no contrary opinion in this regard. His findings therefore, first and foremost, relate to the individual liability of his client, said Böcker. He concluded that this trial is therefore not entirely suited to address the full situation in Syria, although Syrian human rights activist wish for something different.

Böcker said the question is whether the defendant, between the start of the widespread and systematic attack against the Syrian civilian population on April 29, 2011 until his transfer to another branch on September 7, 2012, was working as a state servant in a position in which he ordered torture and had power. The question is if he was a murderer until his defection or if he stopped [having relevant intent] the moment he decided to defect.

Shortcomings

Böcker described that the presentation of evidence in Court took place ten years after the alleged offence and 3,901 kilometers away from the crime scene without the possibility of accessing the crime scene or having comparable intense connection to it. Böcker said he asked himself the question of how much time has been spent since April 23, 2020 dealing with the Defendant individually. For him the answer is: almost none. He added that witness testimonies related to the defendant individually can also be counted on two hands.

Böcker explained that Raslan was, however, not one of the defendants who used their right to remain silent. CCI Deußing told the Court that Raslan provided information on the subject matter of the case at an early point in investigations. According to Böcker, Raslan's testimonies with the LKA Baden-Wuerttemberg in 2017 and with the LKA Berlin in 2015, which were confirmed by the relevant investigators, support this view. Böcker concluded that Raslan always openly provided information. His statements were all voluntary. Böcker said that due to the time pressure of the trial, one might have come to a different conclusion which he wants to correct.

According to Böcker, Raslan's statements that he provided during the trial were confirmed and remained unrefuted. He denied the accusations and provided information about his personal and professional life. Böcker explained that this information is crucial to understand the [Syrian] system and the background [of the charges]. Böcker recalled that Anwar Raslan was born in 1963 in Houla, Homs Governate, Syria. He is a Sunni Muslim and studied law at the University of Damascus. In his fourth year at law school, he was allowed to participate in a police training which he conducted while he studied until 1986.

Raslan started working at the Directorate for Emigration and Passport Matters as a sergeant in Aleppo, Harasta, and Tartous. After the successful completion of his studies, Raslan conducted another training until 1992 when he was promoted to the rank of First Lieutenant and completed the course as second best in his class. In 1995, Raslan was the third best in his class and was called to work at State Security for whom he did patrols, including near the embassy quarter in Damascus. In 1996 he was promoted to the rank of Major. From 2006 until August 8, 2008, he worked at Branch 300 until he started working as the head of investigations at Branch 251.

Böcker said the situation in Syria before March 2011 was not sufficiently clarified in this trial. He recalled that Reuter said the situation significantly changed in early 2011. According to Böcker, Reuter said that there was no real opposition in Syria before 2011 and torture and killing only started after March 2011. Böcker added that, in an article in Der Spiegel on October 2019, the authors describe the fear of returning foreign ISIS fighters in light of potential terror attacks in Germany. A fear that proved to be valid, said Böcker, referring to the attack on Breitscheidplatz in Berlin in 2016. Böcker said that Raslan had similar fears when things were changing in Syria in 2011. Böcker said that one can only guess what really happened at that time. Nonetheless, one must acknowledge that Raslan, as a police officer with a legal background, must have found himself in a situation that was dominated by the desire for revenge. After the massacre in Houla and after a conversation with Tawfiq Younes who declined Raslan's request to be transferred to another place of work, in April 2011 Raslan decided to defect.

Böcker said Raslan's first plea remains unrefuted. In this plea, Raslan also said that he tried to help wherever possible [by releasing at least unarmed detainees]. However, from June 2011 onward this was no longer possible because Raslan was deprived of all his [power]. Böcker recalled that Raslan then wanted to be transferred to work with the police, but Tawfiq Younes declined his request and threw the document in the bin. Nonetheless, Raslan tried to help detainees until he was eventually transferred to another Branch. Böcker further recalled that in April 2011 Raslan decided to defect and was able to carry out his plan in December 2012. According to Böcker, Raslan "did not have the slightest chance to defect safely with his family any sooner." His family would have otherwise been left in Syria without protection.

Böcker recalled that throughout this trial, there was speculation about the reasons for Raslan's defection. Some said he only defected when he was afraid that the regime would collapse, others said he was still working for the Syrian government as a spy. Böcker found that all these assumptions were "speculations into the blue, cheap propaganda, and voiced by political-trial-professionals." Böcker said allegations that Raslan only helped artist detainees are mere speculation as well. He suggested that these detainees might have simply been those who Raslan was able and willing to help. According to Böcker, this was a more likely explanation [for Raslan's help for detainees focusing on artists]. Böcker concluded that this [explanation] was not constructed and no contrary evidence was introduced during the trial.

Opposition Work

Regarding Raslan's work for the opposition, Böcker said he and his colleague are aware that [the fact that Raslan worked for the opposition does not undo the crimes he committed]. Nonetheless, evidence introduced throughout the trial shows that Raslan's plea was correct in this regard as well. Böcker said the plaintiffs and the prosecutors often neglected this aspect. "His post-offence-behavior is of course irrelevant regarding his motivation," said Böcker, nonetheless it indicates that Raslan's statements are true and that he recognized the pointlessness of his work at the Branch from 2011 onward, but simply had no way out. Böcker went on to say that overall, there were many speculations but no concrete findings regarding his client.

“What did the evidence then reveal?” asked Böcker who then answered that evidence led to the certain conclusion that Raslan’s plea remains unrefuted.

Evidence against Raslan

Böcker then turned to the Caesar Files, calling them “a manifestation of evil.” He said the “precise motivation of Caesar and his friends remains unclear.” Despite the great importance of the Caesar Files to the overall proceeding and the great media attention that they received, they are entirely irrelevant regarding Raslan because they do not show a single detainee from Al-Khatib Branch who died at the Branch during the indictment period, said Böcker.

He referred to P4 who told the Court that at least 45 people died at Al-Khatib Branch. Böcker said P4 is a bragger and a disgrace to all other witnesses who testified after him. His testimony “was obviously false testimony. The 45 deaths obviously never occurred” said Böcker. Regarding Eyad Al-Gharib, Böcker said that he had no knowledge of the subject matter [Al-Khatib Branch] and his statements with the BKA are exculpatory for Raslan. Böcker concluded that other testimonies were irrelevant in terms of the question of guilt and merely related to the context of a systematic or widespread attack.

However, Böcker preferred to have learned more about the situation in Syria than what expert Thurmann told the Court. While this might not be particularly relevant for Raslan’s case, Böcker had still hoped for more, he said. He had also hoped to know more from witness Becker regarding Raslan’s escape to Germany. Böcker said her testimony was surprisingly a “zero-enlightenment-act” because he heard from the German Foreign Office, off the record, that Becker was involved in all every-day aspects of Raslan’s move to Germany. Böcker added that the witness from the German Office for Migration and Refugees apparently did not have any clue about how Raslan ended up in Germany. Böcker concluded that witnesses Drechsler and others only left question marks regarding international efforts in Raslan’s asylum-seeking procedure. He said this was unfortunate due to the overall political component, and he had hoped for more [information and effort] from the German authorities.

Böcker asked which testimonies are actually supposed to incriminate Raslan regarding the charged murders and are supposed to prove that his plea was a mere protection assertion. He concluded that there was not much [incriminating information] left from all the testimonies in this trial.

Böcker said P1 behaved completely different inside the courtroom than outside where he was constantly being followed by cameras. Böcker said he personally did not like the media involvement but regardless of what one thinks about that, one must acknowledge that “P1’s contribution to this trial was almost zero.” Böcker added that the Defense already elaborated on Anwar Al-Bunni who claimed to have identified Raslan in 2006. Nonetheless, he did not make any statements on the charged crimes at heart of the trial, concluded Böcker. He added that Al-Bunni’s role in this trial was different from the role of a witness and he significantly complicated reaching a verdict. Böcker said the Prosecutors “will soon again come across Al-Bunni’s striking stationary in another trial in Berlin.” According to Böcker, the elderly male witnesses in this trial (Böcker added he assumes he can call them [elderly] since he himself is an elderly man) did talk a lot, however, most of it was unrelated to the events in the indictment period. Regarding “so-called lawyer,” Anwar Al-Bunni, Böcker recalled that Al-Bunni showed a picture of Raslan to P46 and “significantly hindered the general evaluation of evidence in this trial.” Böcker added that the extent of Al-Bunni’s actions relating to this trial is still unclear. Böcker mentioned “keyword: structural investigation” in this regard.

Böcker went on to address the death of P17's brother and how P17 said that Raslan is the one responsible for the death of his brother. Böcker said that apart from that, P17 did not provide further information. The evidence presented in Court thereafter rather indicated that P17's brother was beaten to death by fellow detainees [at Branch 251]. According to Böcker, P18 [Böcker mentioned P18's name despite anonymization] did not deliver any information in this regard. The relevant Facebook chat that was read out in Court confirmed that P17's brother was beaten to death by a fellow detainee.

Böcker further said that P31 allegedly recognized Anwar Raslan at a demonstration but also said that "[he] imagined stories that will help him during his interrogation." Böcker said such statements are a red flag for him. Someone who makes up stories cannot be trusted. Böcker added that P31 only identified Raslan at a later point.

Turning to P20 [whose name Böcker mentioned despite anonymization], Böcker recalled that P20 was 90% certain that he saw Raslan on the internet and that he was the interrogation officer who beat him. Böcker said the only transparent thing about this testimony is that P20 was uncertain, and that he only got a glimpse of the interrogation officer when his eye was injured and while he was blindfolded. Böcker concluded that P20's descriptions were inconsistent, and one can therefore not come to any conclusions.

Raslan's Character

Böcker concluded that there was much more one could say about witnesses incriminating Raslan. However, [Böcker mentioned a few witnesses] were unable to contribute anything to this trial.

Böcker then turned to P49 [Böcker mentioned P49's name despite anonymization] saying that he told the Court that the interrogation with Raslan was friendly. P58 also said that Raslan facilitated his release, said Böcker. He added that P56 also credibly confirmed the picture that Raslan had painted of himself in his first plea.

Böcker recalled that P32 also told the Court that she was taken to meet with Raslan while in detention who granted her request to be transferred to another cell for psychological reasons to which anyone can relate, added Böcker. P32 also told the Court that it was Raslan who hit one of her sisters in the face so that her headscarf was covered in blood when the family met Raslan at his office. However, there are significant doubts about P32's descriptions, and it remained unclear what she meant by saying that it took 11 days for her sister to be released. Böcker said it was rather the case that P32's sister was released after Raslan facilitated the release, as P33 told the Court.

Böcker went on to say that CCI Knappmann from the BKA also introduced the testimony of a witness who preferred not to testify in Court. Böcker said that while her reasons not to come to Koblenz were relatable, it was still unfortunate that she did not testify in Court. Böcker recalled that the witness had told the police that Anwar Raslan was friendly, offered her coffee, and was not violent toward her, and was loyal toward the 'old regime.' Böcker said it would have been interesting to ask this witness more questions in Court.

He then turned to P21, an insider witness, who was under enormous distress during his in-court testimony. Böcker said this distress made it impossible to assess whether P21 was telling the truth. Nonetheless, he said one credible thing: Anwar Raslan was in permanent fear of Taleb Hassan [an Alawite employee at Branch 251].

Böcker further recalled P16's testimony in which she told the Court that Raslan was friendly and offered her coffee and allowed her to have a cigarette. In addition, P5 who worked at Branch 251 as a security guard, told the Court that Raslan did not mistreat detainees and ordered other staff to refrain from violence toward detainees. P9 also said that Raslan was a friendly interrogator. P10 told the Court that anyone at the Branch was free to do whatever they wanted to, and that Anwar Raslan had no control over the people at Branch 251 who were given a free hand [to treat the detainees], and that many people who died at Division 40 were taken to Al-Khatib Branch. Böcker added that P52 also said that Raslan facilitated his release, which was similar to what P53 experienced.

Böcker went on to say that, by describing his own situation and defection, P54 confirmed Raslan's statement regarding his difficulty to safely defect and leave Syria. P55 then described Raslan as a kind and good person, said Böcker. He said that although P55 belonged to the inner circle at the Intelligence Services, he was unable to provide details about Raslan's transfer [from Branch 251 to 285] because he was not given any information on the matter. In light of an intelligence officer who had been working for the Intelligence Services since 1983 and still being unable to elaborate on inner workings at the Intelligence Services, Böcker asked how anyone else without a relevant position at the Intelligence Services could be able to make any assumptions about Raslan's position and competencies. Böcker concluded that all assumptions regarding this topic are therefore mere speculation. He said that all that happened in "a closed and far away state."

Böcker concluded that the trial lacked reliable incriminating evidence against Raslan and lacked exculpatory evidence. One can therefore not find institutional [superior] responsibility in Raslan's case. Böcker said this might also be the reason for the Prosecutors to simply find that explicit orders to torture were redundant at Branch 251.

Defense Counsel Böcker demanded that the Judges acquit Anwar Raslan and order monetary compensation for the time he already spent in prison.

Böcker concluded his closing statement by citing P56 who told the Court that he trusted Anwar Raslan and if he trusted the wrong person, 'it could have cost me and my children's lives.'

Defense Counsel Böcker explained that Anwar Raslan wrote down his closing statement in Arabic. The Arabic text was then translated into German by the Defense's interpreter who will also read the German version. According to Böcker, the court interpreters should re-translate the German statement into Arabic for Raslan to follow and confirm its originality. Presiding Judge Kerber agreed to the proposed proceeding and handed over to Raslan's interpreter.

Closing Statement by Anwar Raslan

[The following statement was read out in German by Raslan's interpreter.]

Raslan started his closing statement in the name of Allah, saying that in this closing statement he will not only defend himself but also tell the truth. According to Raslan, it was already clear on the very first demonstration in Damascus that the government would [allocate] resource to violence. He said that counterdemonstrations were supposed to be staged. After violent disputes involving the use of thrust weapons, the behavior of security officers changed, according to Raslan.

He said that tsunami-like arrests happened, and chaos and fear spread amongst the officers. Raslan explained that he tried to keep the number of detainees [at Branch 251] as low as possible by trying to transfer them [to other detention facilities] or release them. Nonetheless, it always depended on Tawfiq Younes.

Raslan went on to explain that Hafez Makhoul was the head of Division 40 that was in control of Damascus and the surrounding areas. According to Raslan, Makhoul had “great power and influence.” Raslan said that this [Division 40 led by Makhoul] was the reason that a high number of detainees in “miserable condition” were brought to Al-Khatib Branch and were received with the welcome party. Raslan added that Basel Hakim was the head of the Student [Affairs] Division and responsible for the arrest of many students who were alleged opposition members. Raslan said that when he once condemned the violence against detainees, he was told that all of them were terrorists.

Raslan recalled that, in early April of 2011, Tawfiq Younes called Raslan to tell him that people demonstrated in Al-Houla, Raslan’s hometown. This conversation took place at Kamal Al-Ahmad’s office and Raslan was told that he was now considered a traitor. Raslan said that this was the moment when he decided to defect. He added that the Republican Guard and the 4th Division formed a commission, which also included Tawfiq Younes, Mohammad Al-Abdallah, Mohammad Khaddour, Ali Nayyuf, and Mohammad Ali, the entire 4th Division, and 4th Division Colonel an-Na’saan and its members.

Raslan said that arbitrary arrests were conducted for months, and he was given interrogation transcripts every day. In order to reduce the number of detainees, he twice mentioned that there was not enough space [at the prison]. When he rose the issue a third time, he was told to be silent and not talk about it again. Raslan said that the commission that he just mentioned started to meet every day, in the evenings. The following mornings, signed orders [from this commission] were handed out. Raslan said he made two unsuccessful attempts to defect.

Raslan further told the Court in his closing statement that he received a phone call from Ahmad Noah and Khedr Kaddour on May 11, 2011 during which an employee told him to get P39 for interrogation, that the employee had permission to interrogate this person, and that members of Division 40 were also allowed to be present during the interrogation. Raslan therefore went to get P39. When Raslan started to talk with P39 about his family, Ahmad Noah and Mohammad Abdallah started insulting P39. Raslan told this employee that he should not do that, but the employee replied that someone else ordered him to do so. Raslan said that when he later asked for written orders to conduct this interrogation, he was simply told that there were orders.

According to Raslan, the “prison and the investigation division were open to anyone from this point onward and the head of the division had no more [power].” He further recalled that in the summer of 2011, two people came to his office to invite him to the office of the head of the Branch because members of the Republican Guard complained about him. Raslan said that Omar Shannan and Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan were present as well. According to Raslan, this was when the restructuring of the Branch started. There was no longer a real head of investigations. Every officer behaved like his own superior. Raslan said that from this moment on, he merely checked some of the investigation results. The [above-mentioned] commission met at the office of the head of the Branch every evening. They discussed how to handle demonstrations, hospitals, and coordination points. Raslan said that [the Head of the Branch] signed [orders] which were then decided.

Raslan said his task was to forward [investigation] results. One time, Tawfiq Younes and Omar Shannan went on a mission to Az-Zabadani. Due to the results of the investigation [at Branch 251], similar missions were conducted west, east, and in parts of the area north of Damascus, and in Damascus city. During these missions, the Head of the Branch told Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan and Raslan that the two of them were the officers in charge of Al-Khatib Branch for the time. Raslan explained to the Court that when he was in charge of two categories of detainees, while Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan and three close employees were in charge of hospital staff, armed demonstrators, and terrorists. According to Raslan, Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan and the three others "tortured [detainees] day and night" and forwarded the information from these sessions directly to the Head of the Branch [without involving Raslan]. Raslan, on the other hand, forwarded transcripts of the interrogations for which he was in charge to the head of the office of the Head of the Branch.

Raslan further recalled that, once when he came [to Al-Khatib for] work, he heard screams from the prison. He went to his office and called the prison because he was the officer in charge of the Branch at this time. Raslan said that the person on the other side of the line told him that Division 40, Makhoul's division, as well as Mohammad Abdallah and Ahmad Mon'em, were torturing people at the prison.

Raslan said this was when the Syrian Army advanced to Al-Houla. He assumed it was in August 2011. He recalled that when he heard about the artillery bombing and executions, he was unable to find rest for three days. Raslan said that one of his relatives died during the massacre at twenty years old, as well as one of his sister's grandsons. However, his family told him not to come and look after them due to the dangerous situation. Raslan described another situation that happened around New Year's Day of 2012. At this time, several people were arrested by the Syrian Army and Division 40 and [...] in a [manner] similar to what he described earlier. Raslan said he was tasked with conducting preliminary investigations into these cases. Around 170 people, mostly fieldworkers who had nothing to do with the opposition were arrested, according to Raslan. He told the Court that around 30 of them, or even less, had previously violated the narcotics law, participated in demonstrations, or were accused of illegally owning weapons. Raslan said he demanded that the relevant transcripts were forwarded to the head of the office of the Head of the Branch. He ordered all 170 people that he was in charge of to be released. According to Raslan, he was then called to Tawfiq Younes' office one or two days after this incident because Hafez Makhoul had told Tawfiq Younes that Raslan had released terrorists. Raslan therefore showed Younes the relevant files. Younes then told Raslan to stop [going through the files] and called Hafez Makhoul. Raslan was told to wait for ten minutes while the call lasted. When the call ended, Younes informed Raslan that he was "in the middle of the storm" and that Hafez Makhoul wanted to start investigations against Raslan and hold him accountable. Raslan told the Court that this was when he requested to be transferred to the police. He said that a copy of this request is attached to his written closing statement.

[Below is a recreation of Raslan's transfer request based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in Court.]

From: Brigadier General
To: General Intelligence Directorate

Request for Termination of Contract and Secondment to the Police Service

Anwar Raslan, currently working at Branch 251 requests to be transferred to the Ministry of Interior.

To be signed by:

Brigadier General at Branch 251

Decision of the Head of the General Intelligence Directorate

Raslan went on to explain to the Court that when [Younes] read this request, he told Raslan to go back to his office and that everything would happen at its time. Raslan said he then sent his son-in-law to Az-Zabadani to make arrangements with the Free Syrian Army [FSA]. Then the massacre happened, and people were “executed, stabbed to death, and slaughtered” by Alawites and Shiite militias. Raslan said he was called to Tawfiq Younes’ office two days later. Two representatives of a Russian TV channel, an interpreter and [REDACTED] were there as well, and Raslan was told to give them an interview and state that Islamic terrorists conducted the attack. When Raslan refused, Younes replied that Raslan “put all [his] cards on the table and they are all losing cards.” Raslan said he then contacted PW2\_97/PW2\_100 but he was followed by the security offices like anyone else [who defected]. Raslan told the Court that PW2_97/PW2_100 now lives in [REDACTED], knowing his opinion [against the arbitrary detentions and torture] and can confirm that Raslan helped him.

Raslan went on to explain that the number of demonstrations decreased since 2012 and the situation “rather turned into an armed civil war.” He added that he never gave orders to torture or mistreat anyone. These orders came from Division 40, An-Na’saan, and Ahmad Noah, as well as from the Prison Director and three of his employees. Raslan said their motives [for ordering torture] was that they were subordinate to and identified themselves with two people: Tawfiq Younes and Hafez Makhoulf. Raslan added that one must understand that he never participated in any actions, such as arrests at demonstrations, raids, or any other actions outside of Branch 251

Dead People

In terms of deaths at Branch 251, Raslan let his interpreter read out that:

- 1) One person was taken to Al-Khatib Branch where Doctor [REDACTED] examined him in the yard. As a result, the detainee was sent to the Red Crescent Hospital where he died from internal bleedings. The person was previously beaten on his head by a member of the Republican Guard. Everything happened on orders from the Republican Guard.
- 2) Following an incident in Idlib, the Republican Guard brought around 45 people to Al-Khatib Branch. One of them, a man from the [REDACTED] family in Harasta, was carried on a stretcher. Raslan noticed a fracture on the man’s left leg. When Raslan asked who caused the fracture, he was told that the head of the checkpoint in Harasta injured the man in revenge. From Al-Khatib Branch, the man was taken to the hospital. Thirty minutes later, he died from a lung embolism because he had lost a lot of blood. Tawfiq Younes, the head of the Branch and Hafez Makhoulf are the ones responsible for this, as they are the ones responsible for the mass crimes.

- 3) Once, Mohammad Al-Abdallah brought a detainee with a bullet wound to Al-Khatib Branch. He got the wound in Damascus and was taken to the hospital upon his arrival at the Branch.
- 4) Yousef Ibrahim from Division 40 once brought a detainee to the yard of Al-Khatib Branch. The detainee bled from his nose and mouth. He was taken to the hospital where he died thirty minutes later. Raslan later learned from PW1 95 that this person was beaten and robbed of 2,000 Syrian Pounds [by authorities at Division 40]. When Raslan informed the head of the Branch, he was told to remain silent.
- 5) When Raslan was ordered to merely check investigation results, An-Na'saan and members of Division 40 were interrogating detainees who had to be taken to the hospital. However, the results of these interrogations were not forwarded to Raslan.
  - a. The grievances at the Branch are mainly a result of the tenfold occupancy [of the prison]. People were malnourished. The Branch's doctor tortured detainees, as did the officers and Prison Director. This amounted to the overall conditions at the Branch. Raslan did not approve of that, but was unable to do anything about it, as witnesses testified.
  - b. Tawfiq Younes and Hafez Makhoulf are the ones responsible for injuring and arresting opposition members who they considered "enemies of the regime."
  - c. People were enforcedly disappeared. Despite the law prohibiting such interactions between families of the missing and Intelligence Services, Raslan provided the families with information via telephone. Once the anti-terrorism law was passed, a central list with the names of all detainees was created. The list was available at the Office of the Prosecutor in Damascus. Family members of missing persons were able to go to the Office of the Prosecutor and check the list of detainees, including those detained by the police and security forces.

Raslan further explained to the Court that Syrian law lists three elements to a crime:

- 1) will and intent, the mental element
- 2) the material element
- 3) success [completion of the criminal act]

Raslan said that there must be a causality link between all three elements.

Raslan told the Court that he never gave orders. On the contrary, he tried to help people the best he could. He said that he had no authority over officers who decided torture should be performed. In terms of Division 40, he had to be silent. According to Raslan, the head of Division 40 [Hafez Makhoulf] was a danger for Branch 251 and other Intelligence Services because he received a lot of information.

Raslan described how usually, people from outside had no access to Branch 251 and its prison. Only when Hafez Makhoulf started his work did the head of the Branch give in and allow the Division to enter the Branch.

Raslan said his reasons for defecting were confirmed by several witnesses: P5, P10, Christoph Reuter, P15, P49, P53, P54, and P55. All of them confirmed that Raslan had to give up many privileges when he defected. Raslan added that he lost seven relatives. Two of them died under torture and one of his grandsons was also killed.

Raslan recalled that, at the end of Ramadan in 2012, people from Az-Zabadani were taken to Al-Khatib Branch. All of them were mistreated. Raslan found out that none of them were officially wanted people, so he tried to help them. This was when he was punished and transferred to another post.

He was transferred to Branch 285 where he stayed for less than three months. Raslan said that this was not an official secondment. The leading employees did not know his name and he was merely a member in a committee. After that, he defected.

Raslan said that due to the situation in Syria, many people like [REDACTED], [REDACTED], and PW4 100 were unable to appear in Court. PW2_97/PW2_100 and other renowned people would have been able to talk about Raslan's great help [to detainees] for which he often took many risks. Raslan said he reached a point where he had no more influence because he was against Tawfiq Younes and Hafez Makhoul who considered him to be a terrorist because he was from Houla. Raslan said he already explained that before.

Raslan then turned to the entire "Syrian people and the victims" and said he feels sorry for having been unable to help more people and having been unable to stop "the death machinery". He wrote, as his interpreter read out, that he bemoans "the extinction of this great [Syrian] people." Raslan added that he and his family are also victims. He recalled that seven of his relatives died through government acts as well. Two of them died "the martyrs' death" and his ten-year-old grandson died through "a bullet that hit his head and basically blew up his head." Raslan said it was very painful for him to hear about what happened in his hometown. Nonetheless, he did whatever possible to help others until he defected. He said he opposed that innocent people were injured and killed. According to Raslan, one still heard bad news from northern Syria until today.

Raslan further described how, now that he is almost 60-years old, chronic diseases and the separation from his family and homeland tear him apart in detention, where he has had to spend the last three years. He addressed the Court by saying that he wishes for a just judgment and fairness, which would stand above all things. Raslan quoted a paragraph from the Quran (5:32) saying that "if one kills one human being, it is as if he had killed the entire human race. If one helps one human being, it is as if he had helped the entire human race."

He concluded that there were many detainees who he could not help back then and who could now be among the pictures in the Caesar Files. Raslan said he believes in German law and the judiciary and will accept the Court's judgment.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the trial day scheduled for January 12, 2022, is cancelled and that "if the sky does not fall down on us" the verdict in the trial of Anwar Raslan will be announced on Thursday, January 13, 2022. Kerber explained that on [January 13th], there will be an additional 15 seats for journalists in a separate room where they can listen to the German and Arabic language audio transmitted from the courtroom. The final trial day will start at 10AM with the courthouse opening at 7AM if nothing contrary is announced in a relevant press release.

The proceedings were adjourned at 1:53PM

The next session will be on January 13, 2022 at 10AM when the verdict against Anwar Raslan will be announced.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 58

Hearing Date: January 13, 2022

This was the last day of the Trial of Anwar Raslan at the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz. The Judges held that Anwar Raslan was guilty of being an accomplice to 27 murders, 4,000 cases of torture and severe deprivation of liberty, and three cases of sexual violence as crimes against humanity. The Judges found that, as head of the Investigations Division at Branch 251 of the General Intelligence Directorate in Damascus, Anwar Raslan was responsible for interrogations and prison facilities. The Judges stated that the Syrian Government conducted a widespread and systematic attack against civilians since at least April 29, 2011. They also said that detention conditions at Branch 251 qualified as torture. Anwar Raslan was sentenced to life imprisonment. The Judges weighed the mitigating and aggravating factors, and concluded that they could not find a particular severity of guilt. According to German law, Raslan can apply for parole after serving 15 years of his sentence.

After the announcement of the verdict, the Prosecutors said they were happy with the verdict. The Defense on the contrary, announced that it will appeal the judgment.

Trial Day 110<sup>2</sup> – January, 2022

The proceedings began at 10:17AM with seventeen spectators and nineteen journalists in the audience. More journalist followed the proceedings from a separate room where they listened to the audio broadcast. A crowd of journalist and cameramen also waited in front of the courthouse. Six cameramen took videos and photos inside the courtroom before the start of the session.

The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer and Mohammed were not present. Several Plaintiffs sat next to their Counsel.

The Court issued the following verdict:

[THIS IS NOT A TRANSCRIPT OF THE OFFICIAL VERDICT. It is a detailed summary of the oral hearing at which the verdict was announced.]

In the name of the people, the following judgment is delivered: The Defendant, Anwar Raslan, is found guilty of 4,000 cases of torture and severe deprivation of liberty, 27 murders, and three cases of sexual violence as crimes against humanity in accordance with §7\(1\) Nos 1, 5, 6 and 9 VStGB. He is also found guilty of 27 murders, 25 cases of dangerous bodily harm, two sexual assaults and 14 cases of severe deprivation of liberty, two cases of hostage taking, and three cases of sexual abuse, one of which constitutes a particularly dangerous rape. The Defendant is sentenced to life imprisonment.

The cost of the trial, including the expenses of the Plaintiffs P48, P39, P34, P1, P22, P50, P11, P41, P12, P25, P19, P38, P42, P30, P27, P32, P33, P28, P16, P47, P44 must be borne by the convict.

After reading out the verdict, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that there will be consecutive Arabic translation for the entire session transmitted through the loudspeakers in the courtroom. She asked all parties to the case to wear their FFP2 COVID masks wherever possible, although there was no official order making that mandatory for the parties. [All parties followed Kerber's request.]

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to read out the reasoning:

[Note: the following is not an exact duplicate of the Judges' reasoning which was read out in Court. It is based on what our Trial Monitors were able to hear in Court.]

Introduction:

Before reading out the reasoning for the verdict, Presiding Judge Kerber said that this trial was conducted on 108 trial days. This number already shows that proceedings under the VStGB/CCAIL [German Code of Crimes against International Law] are particularly complex and require thorough preparation by the prosecutors. Kerber said she therefore wants to thank the BKA [German Federal Criminal Police Office], which the Court heard on several occasions, for collecting information and conducting investigations into the Syrian conflict together with its European partners for years now. She added that this trial would not have been possible without the tireless work of the BKA officers involved in the structural investigation into the Syrian conflict. Kerber recalled that these officers accompanied this trial for years and testified as witnesses and experts on several occasions. Kerber also thanked all parties to the case for their always professional and collegial behavior.

Presiding Judge Kerber further said she was compelled to comment on some of the Plaintiff Counsels closing statements. She explained that trials like this are impossible without witnesses. It was not without reason that the Court heard around 80 witnesses over the course of two years. Kerber said some of these witnesses testified in Court despite fear of their own and their families' safety being threatened by the regime. Presiding Judge Kerber said she owes all her respect to these witnesses. However, she recalled, the Court also had to watch as lists of witness' names were leaked to the press. She added that the Court then had to watch the panic of a witness who was approached by people who were not parties to this trial, prior to his testimony. In the end, the situation was harmless, and the witness testified despite his fear. Kerber said that several testimonies were affected by the deep insecurities of witnesses. She concluded that the decision-making in this trial would not have been easier if the trial was recorded because even the slightest suspicion that their testimonies were preserved in recordings would have caused insecurities among the witnesses.

Introduction:

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that the Judges already found in February 2021, that the Syrian government conducted a systematic and widespread attack against its civilian population at least since April 29, 2011. The evidence presented after this first verdict did not lead to any other conclusion. Kerber said, since the Defendant did not deny the situation in Syria in 2011 and 2012, she will only briefly summarize the previous findings regarding the existence of a systematic or widespread attack during the indictment period. Nonetheless, it was necessary to also provide a short overview of the situation in Syria before Bashar Al-Assad's took power since that was the foundation for the systematic attack.

Kerber said that there are multiple ethnic and religious groups in Syria. She said that prior to the conflict, around 60-70% of the people in Syria were Sunni, around 11% of the people were Alawites. Nonetheless, the latter group has the most influence in politics and society. They represent the majority of officers in the military and dominate the Ba'th party, the only state party.

Kerber further mentioned that Hafez Al-Assad gained power in Syria through a coup in 1970. When he died in 2000, his son Bashar Al-Assad took over. However, the repressive and autocratic regime in Syria already existed under Hafez Al-Assad. The state of emergency, which had been in place since 1963, broadened the competencies of the security forces. Arbitrary arrests of unfavorable people increased and they were detained in the prisons of the Intelligence Services. Despite the fact that torture was prohibited by the Constitution since 1971, it was frequently applied to extort information and intimidate people. Kerber added that people also died in detention as a consequence of the detention conditions and through direct killings. Kerber said the massacre in Hama, a city largely supporting the opposition, in 1982 was well known because Hafez Al-Assad used the military to bomb and kill thousands of civilians.

Kerber recalled that following his inauguration and a short period of opening, Bashar Al-Assad quickly returned to his father's policy in 2001. Political freedoms were restricted again, and members of the opposition were arrested. In doing so, Kerber said, Bashar Al-Assad built upon the intelligence apparatus of his father. The official task of the Intelligence Services was to defend against activities hostile to the government and fight terrorism and extremism. The actual task was, however, to surveil the population and suppress the opposition.

Course of the Conflict:

Kerber recalled that at the end of 2010, the so-called Arab Spring evolved, especially in Tunisia and Egypt. It eventually made its way to Syria. Hoping for more freedom, it increased the willingness of people to openly take to the streets against the government. The already established opposition, consisting of younger people, and those who were unable to economically benefit from the current system formed the biggest group of people on the streets. However, those who were upset by the government's violent actions and relatives of the people who were arrested and injured during the early phase joined the protests. According to Kerber, Sunni mosques were a symbol and point of gathering for the demonstrations which mostly happened on Fridays after prayers. Kerber said since the counter actions of the Alawite dominated regime focused on these locations, more and more Sunnis became upset. In February 2011, smaller demonstrations against corruption and poverty, and in favor of more participation rights, happened in different parts of Syria. They were peaceful and mostly remained undisturbed.

Judge Kerber further recalled that in March 2011, teenagers in Dar'a spray-painted slogans on walls. They were arrested, then showed clear signs of torture on their bodies once they were released. This led to more protests in other parts of the country. On March 15, 2011, one of the first major protests took place in Damascus. Three days later, on March 18, more protests followed in Dar'a, Deir ez-Zor, and Homs. Kerber said that violent actions against these protests led to multiple people injured and at least two people died. More demonstrations with thousands of people followed, particularly on Fridays. Security forces intervened by using tear gas and live ammunition. Kerber recalled that on March 23, 2011, security forces shot at a demonstration in Dar'a and many people died. She said the same happened on April 1, 2011, in Damascus, rural Damascus, and Douma. According to Kerber, the demonstrations were, however, mostly peaceful, and only some individual protestors threw stones.

Judge Kerber went on to explain that the Syrian regime reacted to the demonstrations by using several strategies at the same time. The regime claimed that the protests were initiated by foreign countries with the aim to destabilize Syria. The regime denied killings and injuring people. It claimed that the protests were led by terrorists. At press conferences, the regime presented allegedly injured people to demonstrate the protestors' readiness to use violence. Kerber said, at the same time, Bashar Al-Assad apparently appealed to the protestors and announced that reforms will come, ended the decade-long state of emergency, and released prisoners. However, starting at the end of March 2011, the preconditions for a more violent approach by the security forces were established. Kerber said the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC) was already established in March 2011. The cell consisted of the highest-ranking officers, and its task was to directly support Bashar Al-Assad. The members of the cell were mostly heads of Intelligence Services. The cell set the strategy and gave orders on how to deal with the protests. At least since mid-April 2011, it was their aim to violently smash demonstrations in order to prevent the regime from being overthrown.

Kerber said that, in a meeting on April 18, 2011, the CCMC found that 'the phase of tolerance and cooperation [was] over'. It provided detailed orders, declared not to release any detainees, and if necessary, use the military to deal with demonstrations. Kerber said the CCMC met again on April 20, 2011, and found that 'it [was] necessary to start another phase. We have to win this battle by the use of armed violence.' The aim was to smash the protests at all costs: persecute, arrest, kill, and torture every protestor or any one close to a demonstration. Kerber called this "a de facto carte de blanche for the security forces, for their violent actions against protestors." She said that as a consequence, the numbers of civilian casualties significantly increased from March 30, 2011 onward. 200 people were killed by live ammunition on April 23, 2011. A couple days later the regime stormed Dar'a and cut the water and medical supplies. Many people died as a consequence. People also died at demonstrations in solidarity with the people of Dar'a, and some who tried to bring water and food to the citizens of Dar'a were also killed. In total, at least 200 people died. Kerber said that people also died in other parts of Syria by the end of April 2011. There were many raids and arrests in Douma. In the following months, demonstrations involving a six-digit-number of people happened, and state-led repression increased. Kerber concluded that until July 2011, a four-digit-number of Syrians had died due to state-led violence.

[The court interpreters swapped duty.]

Presiding Judge Kerber further recalled that Hama was stormed [by the military] at the end of July 2011 and hundreds of people died. In September 2011, Douma was besieged by the army and many people were arrested, in addition to critical infrastructure being cut. From September 2011 onward, demonstrations became increasingly fortified. The Free Syrian Army (FSA) was also founded, consisting of former military staff who defected from the regime army, and as a consequence, there were attacks on government held areas. The armed conflict between government forces and armed opposition started at the beginning of 2012, said Kerber. At the same time, peaceful, non-violent demonstration continued despite the use of live ammunition and increased violence used by, amongst others, Shabiha militias that increasingly engaged in crushing protests. Kerber said people were arrested and killed. If soldiers disobeyed orders to shoot at protestors, they risked being shot themselves.

Judge Kerber added that despite efforts by the Arab League to mediate, 2012 was characterized by increasing violence. There were still peaceful protests, but the armed conflict grew. Kerber recalled that in February 2012, the regime dissolved a peaceful demonstration in Damascus with the use of tear gas and sound grenades. One person died and dozens were injured. Also in February 2012, Homs was stormed and attacked with missiles multiple times. There was one massacre in this region which the regime claimed was committed by terrorists. The opposition accused the regime and militias. In March and April 2012, 95 civilians died in Idlib because of regime-led violence. Many others were arrested. Kerber recalled that in Houla, the hometown of the Defendant [Raslan], more than a hundred people died by the end of May 2012. 55 more people died close to Hama. At the end of July 2012, the Syrian military used live ammunition against civilians at the Syrian-Jordanian border, at least one person died. Kerber added that in August 2012, more than a hundred dead civilians were discovered in Damascus. They were killed during raids by the Syrian army. Kerber went on to explain that over the course of the conflict, militarization increased. The regime fired cluster and incendiary bombs at opposition held areas, FSA areas, and Damascus and its surrounding areas [Rif Dimashq, as Judge Kerber always said].

Kerber explained that these elaborations and the recreation of events were significantly based on the expert testimonies of Ms. Thurmman, Christopher Engels from CIJA, who also submitted the above-mentioned CCMC documents to the Court, Christoph Reuter and other witnesses.

According to the Judges, the intelligence services played an integral part in quelling the uprising. They were already a central mechanism under Hafez Al-Assad. Kerber explained that there are five Intelligence Services, amongst others, the General Intelligence Directorate [GID]. The Intelligence Services were divided into several Branches. Depending on their mandate, the Branches had their own detention facilities, where people were already tortured and sometimes killed when Hafez Al-Assad was in power. Kerber added that at least Branches 251 and 285 of the General Intelligence Directorate have detention facilities. Judge Kerber explained that Bashar Al-Assad adopted these structures. Since the uprising in 2011, the task, especially of the intelligence services, was to intimidate and exterminate the opposition. Starting in March 2011, people were arbitrarily detained, tortured, and killed. Kerber recalled one witness telling the Court that the government ‘continued torturing people like an old habit.’ Kerber said torture methods consequently included beatings with all kinds of tools and methods, such as with cables, Falaqa (people were beaten on their feet), hanging people by their wrists so that their toes barely touch the ground, a method called Shabeh, German Chair (people were attached to a wooden construction with their spines bent, Doulab (people being pressed into a tire and the beaten), electric shocks, burns, and sexual violence as a means of intimidation, including rape.

Kerber added that the detention conditions at all detention facilities of the General Intelligence Directorate were “catastrophic” and included malnutrition and lacked medical care. Arbitrary violence was a daily routine. Kerber explained that in the course of the uprising, the number of detainees in intelligence services’ detention and dead people increased steadily. While the goal of arrests was previously to gain information, starting in 2012 at the latest, the main goal was to intimidate and liquidate the opposition. The Judges found that the conditions in the detention facilities continued to worsen. People not only died of torture, but starved to death and suffocated.

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to explain that the corpses of those who died in detention were collected at military hospitals. Shortly after the start of the uprising, military photographers were tasked with documenting the corpses. They had to take pictures of the corpses which were often naked or only dressed in under garments and were labeled with numbers. According to the Judges, this practice was to ensure that there was proof that these people were not actually released. From the collection point in Damascus and the surrounding area, the corpses were carried to Najha

[Cemetery] and Al-Qutayfa [Cemetery] by trucks, and “dumped” in mass graves. Kerber added that relatives of the detainees were almost never informed about the whereabouts and fate of their loved ones and did not dare to ask for information. This uncertainty was used to ensure people’s submissiveness.

Kerber explained that the above findings are largely based on the testimony of Garance Le Caisne who also told the Court about the experience of Caesar and his friend Sami. The Court also inspected the Caesar Files. The 26,938 pictures of at least 6,821 people were analyzed by Professor Dr. Rothschild who presented his forensic analysis in Court.

Branch 251, Investigation Division, and Division 40

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the task of the General Intelligence Directorate, of which Branch 251 was also part, was to surveil Syrian citizens abroad and in Syria. Branch 251 was in charge of inner security in Damascus and the surrounding areas. With the beginning of the conflict, the Branch was used to fight the opposition in these areas. The Branch has its premises in the city center of Damascus, in Al-Khatib neighborhood, from which it also got the name Al-Khatib Branch. It is located near Baghdad Street in direct proximity to the Red Crescent Hospital. The premises consist of two buildings with at least three floors each and a yard in-between. There were offices and interrogation room located in these buildings.

Kerber described that in 2011 and 2012 at least one building had prison facilities in the basement, including different community cells and solitary cells measuring 1x2 meters. There was also a common room for the guards in the basement as well as interrogation rooms. According to Kerber, the prison area was extended in early 2012 with more facilities underneath the garden area, to provide more space for the increasing number of detainees. The offices of interrogation officers and other officers were located on the upper floors.

Kerber said Branch 251 was led by Brigadier General Tawfiq Younes in 2011 and 2012. Anwar Raslan was the head of the Investigation Division at the Branch until September 7, 2012. Division 40 was formally subordinate to Branch 251. The Division was in charge of street-operations. It was a rapid intervention force and in charge of raids, running checkpoints, searching houses, and quelling demonstrations. Kerber quoted a witness who told the Court that Division 40 was an ‘enforcement and fight gang.’ Kerber explained that despite a formal subordinate relation to Branch 251, Division 40 enjoyed some independence because it was led by Hafez Makhoulf, a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad. The Division has its premises in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad in Damascus, including its own detention facility. When Division 40 was in service, [its staff was] violently quelling demonstrations, dissolving them by shooting at protesters, hunting down the people who fled the scene, arresting them, blindfolding them, pulling their shirts over their heads, and taking them to the facilities of Division 40 or transferring them to Branch 251. Detainees were insulted, beaten, and humiliated on the way to these facilities.

When detainees arrived at Branch 251, they departed the vehicle at the inner yard of the Branch, said Kerber. They then had to endure the so-called welcome party. Kerber explained that this procedure was only skipped in cases where new detainees arrived alone or in a small group. She said detainees were usually severely beaten by guards with fists and different objects. According to Kerber, some detainees were killed during this procedure. After the 'reception', detainees were taken downstairs to the prison's basement where they had to hand in their personal belongings. They had to completely undress until naked and perform the so-called safety move while naked. Detainees had to squat several times for the guards to frisk their body openings. Most of the time, detainee got their clothes back and only belts and laces were confiscated.

Kerber further described that after that, detainees were usually taken to community cells. However, since April 2011 these cells were so overcrowded that detainees had to take turns sitting down and sleeping, and were only able to stand up. They were only able to sleep when they laid down their head on each other's feet. According to Kerber, this practice was so common that it had its own name: the swords' way [à la swords]. Fresh air only came through a small gap underneath the cell door. The air inside the cell was extremely stuffy and so bad that there was not enough oxygen. Some of the cells had small windows showing to the yard outside. Other cells only had artificial light, which was switched on the whole time, so that detainees were unable to tell day from night.

Kerber added that some of the cells were equipped with toilets, which were inside the cell, without any separation from the rest of the room. Other detainees [who had no toilet inside their cell] were allowed to use the toilet twice or three times a day. Kerber concluded the hygienic conditions at the Branch were "catastrophic." Detainees were not allowed to wash, there were bugs everywhere. Many detainees suffered from skin infections, scabies, and infected open wounds. Injuries were mostly not treated. Food was insufficient and inedible which led to loss of weight and further exhaustion. In addition, detainees were exposed to the constant screams from torture which caused enormous stress together with the uncertainty. Some of the detainees lost their minds and even thought about committing suicide. The Judges considered these inhumane detention conditions to qualify as torture.

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to describe that usually one interrogation officer and one guard were present during interrogations at Branch 251. It was usually the guard who mistreated the detainees during interrogations. They thereby applied the various torture methods described above: detainees' feet were beaten until swollen, they were hung at their wrists, they were exposed to the German Chair, or they were burnt with boiling water. Kerber said that torture was applied whenever a detainee did not answer, or the interrogation officer did not like the answer. According to Kerber, explicit orders to torture were not necessary. Kerber added that at times, male and female detainees suffered sexual violence, including rape, touching and beatings of their genitals, or threats to be exposed to sexual violence and threats of sexual violence against family members. Detainee also had to witness others suffering sexual violence, for example in the hallways, where detainees were sexually insulted, threatened, and harassed. Kerber concluded that in a very few individual cases, detainees were not exposed to physical violence. This was mostly the case when they were famous or prominent figures.

Position of the Defendant within the Intelligence Services and Branch 251, and his Contribution

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that it was not the Syrian regime who was on trial, but the Defendant's individual actions for which he is individually liable. Kerber said she will therefore provide a brief overview of the Defendant's life and career.

Anwar Raslan was born in 1963 in Houla, Syria. After his high school diploma, he studied law at the University of Damascus. In his fourth year at the university, he started a training with the police on December 2, 1986, and continued his studies while doing the training. He became a sergeant with the police and at the immigration office in Aleppo, Hasaka, and Tartous for five years, and he successfully completed his law degree. Starting on August 22, 1992, Raslan attended a training for managers. He was awarded the rank of first lieutenant. As he completed his training as second best in his class, he continued working at the police academy as an instructor. In early 1995, at the age of 32, Raslan was transferred to the General Intelligence Directorate due to his very good performance. He worked at Branch 251 for one year and a half, patrolling the embassy quarter. In mid-1996 he was transferred to Kafar Souseh Branch where he worked as an investigation officer. On August 9, 2008, Raslan was transferred to Branch 251 where he led the Investigation Division. His office was located on the first floor [EN: second floor] of the building of Branch 251. Investigation offices were located on the ground floor [EN: first floor] and the prison was located in the basement where Raslan had another small office. The Investigation Division had thirty to forty employees, including six or seven interrogation officers, transcribers, archivists, guards, and the Prison Director Abu Ali. Kerber said Anwar Raslan was superior to these people. He was in charge of the duty roster, supervising them, and deciding on workflows. His orders were followed by his staff.

Kerber added that the use of torture did not have to be ordered explicitly, since it was part of the five-decade long practice at the Intelligence Services. Raslan was also tasked to coordinate interrogations, especially regarding matters of who is interrogating whom and at what location. He conducted interrogations himself where he had a special interest, for example when the person had an artistic or intellectual background. The results of all interrogations passed his desk. He summarized them and forwarded these summaries to others. He also made recommendations to his superiors, including recommendations to release detainees. According to the Judges, Raslan proved to be a reliable, intelligent, eager technocrat. Due to his performance, he was sometimes called to Branch 285, a Branch specialized in interrogations. On January 1, 2011 he was promoted to colonel, the second highest rank at the Branch, one rank below the head of the Branch. Raslan was also called when important people visited the prison at the Branch. Over the course of the uprising, Raslan was given more competencies since the rising number of final decisions could not be made by a higher position alone. Kerber recalled P56 telling the Court that when Raslan was asked to release a doctor, the person was indeed released after two days. P53 also told the Court that Raslan's power was so great, he was able to release him two hours after he was arrested at a checkpoint once his uncle called Raslan.

Kerber added that Raslan, just like any Syrian, knew that the General Intelligence Directorate tortured and killed people. Nonetheless, Raslan was not dissatisfied with the General Intelligence Directorate, which offered him a social promotion after his transfer. Raslan decided to support the regime. The Judges found that this attitude did not change after numbers of detainees increased and in awareness of the devastating situation at Branch 251. Raslan was informed of deaths happening at the Branch and he knew that guards were torturing detainees outside of interrogations, beat them, and sexually harassed them. According to the Judges, Raslan at least recklessly accepted these circumstances.

Kerber recalled P41 telling the Court that Raslan told a guard to 'cook him until ready.' Raslan considered the demonstrators to be scum and only bothered about their treatment when detainees were arbitrarily beaten and tortured, and it was no longer about the intellectually challenging task of acquiring information. This did not suffice his standards as an investigator. The Judges concluded that Raslan had his last day of work at Branch 251 on September 7, 2012 before he started at Branch 285 on September 9, 2012, where he kept working until his defection in December 2012.

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that it was necessary for her to address Raslan's first plea at this point. One must consider the plea as a partial confession with regard to Raslan confirming that he was the head of the Investigation Division at Branch 251 from 2008 onward. He also detailed that since the beginning of demonstrations, the regular number of detainees at Branch 251 rose from around 200 to more than 1,000. Kerber said Raslan admitted that he himself heard screams from torture, visited the prison, and knew that more and more detainees were transferred to hospitals.

[The court interpreters swapped duty.]

Kerber recalled that in his first plea, Raslan also claimed that he was not responsible for the detention conditions and the torture at the Branch. He claimed and essentially defended himself by saying that he did not agree with the approach of the regime to conduct arbitrary arrests. On the contrary, Raslan said he tried to help detainees wherever he was able to and facilitated their release. He claimed that as a Sunni, he had to listen to what Alawites told him. He further claimed to have been deprived of all his power in June 2011 when his deputy Abdelmon'em An-Na'saan took over his position. Kerber further recalled Raslan claiming that Branch 251 was actually led by Division 40, in particular its head Hafez Makhoul. Raslan stated that the Division independently tortured people at the Branch. Raslan said he tried to be transferred back to the police, however, did not succeed with this demand. He also claimed that he was unable to safely escape together with his family before December 2012. Kerber explained that in his plea, Raslan also addressed individual witness testimonies. The Judges concluded that they do not follow Raslan's plea since there are no sufficient indicators that his allegations are correct.

Kerber recalled that P5, a former security guard at Branch 251 told the Court that Anwar Raslan was the head of the Investigation Division at Branch 251 and that Division 40 was working on the streets and did not conduct interrogations at the Branch. P5 also said it was widely known that An-Na'saan was only Raslan's deputy. Kerber added that there are indicators leading to the conclusion that Raslan kept his position of power at Al-Khatib Branch in 2012, and that his power went beyond the Branch. Kerber recalled P41 telling the Court that he was interrogated, amongst others by An-Na'saan and only when An-Na'saan thought he got all the information from P41 did he call Anwar Raslan. Raslan then gave the order to 'cook [P41] until ready.' Kerber concluded that this confirms that An-Na'saan was not only formally but factually subordinate to Anwar Raslan. Raslan's interest in intellectuals, VIPs, artists, and writers was also confirmed by many witnesses. P49 testified that Raslan interrogated prominent people even after he had allegedly been deprived of his powers. Kerber said according to Raslan's own plea, he interrogated Syrian actress see [TR#31] in March 2012. This actress also explained to the German police that while she was interrogated by Raslan, a guard entered the room and informed Raslan using a code that someone died. The Judges concluded that even at this point [March 2012] Raslan was still in charge of the prison and was informed about what was going on at the Branch.

Kerber also recalled that P16 told the Court that Raslan interrogated her in 2012, not in 2011. Another indicator contrary to the deprivation of power as claimed by Raslan, was the situation in Ramadan 2012, around August 2012, when Raslan was able to get P53 released at a checkpoint by a mere phone call.

Judge Kerber added that Raslan continued to enjoy certain privileges, such as a car, even after his transfer to Branch 285. At the end of 2012, he was a member of the committee deciding on matters of pension and travel for retired officers. Other members of this committee were three high-ranking brigadier generals. According to the Judges, one would not leave such topics to a person who was considered to be disloyal and who was not trusted.

Kerber added that other parts of Raslan's plea were also disproved by credible witness testimonies. She recalled that one witness [P18] credibly described how he tried to get information about P17's brother, something that Raslan continues to deny. Raslan's assertion that P32's sister was beaten by her father so that her headscarf got blood on it, was disproved by P33. Kerber recalled that Raslan met P16 in 2012 and not in 2011, as he claims. The Judges found Raslan's plea to also be inconsistent. For example, Raslan claimed that from summer 2011 onward, he was only tasked with summarizing interrogations. But at the same time, he confirmed that he interrogated P11 in September 2011. He also interrogated [witness from TR#31] in April 2012.

The Judges also found it to “simply [be] incomprehensible that the regime would let a high-ranking officer whose loyalty was doubted remain in a high-ranking position within the intelligence services.” In addition, the Judges found it “incomprehensible that it was impossible for Raslan, unlike for other officers who defected before December 2012, to safely escape with his family.” Kerber said the plea is incorrect in this regard and adjusted to the defendant’s line of defense.”

Liability

Killings

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that after hearing all the evidence, the Judges found that 27 people lost their lives at Branch 251 during the indictment period, due to mistreatment. This number was determined as follows:

Eyad Al-Gharib told the BKA on August 16, 2018, that:

- between May and June 2011, he saw at least ten corpses being transferred from Branch 251
- between July and September 2011, he saw at least one detainee being beaten upon his arrival at the Branch with an iron pole so severely that he immediately died

P51 told the Court how two or three witnesses were taken to the Red Crescent Hospital one night, and how he had to confirm that they were dead. However, P51 was only able to narrow the time frame of this instance to sometime between April 2011 and June 2012. In favor of the Defendant, the Judges therefore assume that this transport of corpses from the Branch was also witnessed by Eyad Al-Gharib.

P4 arrived at Branch 251 on June [REDACTED], 2012, where he was detained in a cell where

- one child died within the first nine days of his detention,
- and 13 other people died over the course of his detention.

P4 counted 13 cases of deaths because he had to leave his fingerprints on documents confirming the death of these detainees. P4 also witnessed one person being beaten on his throat so severely, that he died. The Judges concluded that all 15 deaths can be attributed to the Defendant, despite the Defense Counsel’s concerns relating to this testimony.

P36 was at Al-Khatib Branch for the first time around July 19, 2012, where he saw

- ten people who died at the Branch due to mistreatment and torture.

P36 later saw a detainee from the Branch dying at the hospital from kidney failure.

The Judges found that because the timeframe during which P4 and P36 saw dead people overlapped, one can only count the additional case of death of the detainee dying at the hospital. Kerber added that since one can assume that the patients at this hospital received the required medical care, the Judges found that he did not die from the treatment there but due to the treatment suffered at Branch 251. The treatment at Branch 251 is therefore the cause of death of this person. Kerber concluded that so far, 27 cases of death relating to Branch 251 were determined.

Judge Kerber added that the Judges could not find more cases of death. She recalled that FR17 who did not personally testify in court, told the French Police about two dead people he saw at the Branch.

However, during his interview with the BKA, he could not provide more detailed information due to emotional stress. The BKA interview eventually had to be terminated. The Judges were therefore unable to follow FR17's initial descriptions. Kerber added that FR17 also provided the Judges with several reasons for not testifying in Court. BKA officer Knappmann instead told the Court about his interview with FR17. However, the Judges were unable to examine the witness, especially with regard to his motivations to testify.

Kerber recalled P46 telling the Court about one dead person he saw on his first day of detention at Branch 251 and three or four more dead people he saw during his second time at the Branch. He further testified that he saw two detainees from Branch 251 at Harasta Hospital where they died. Judge Kerber explained that P46's testimony "unfortunately showed a number of content-related contradictions and discrepancies compared to his police interview." The Judges were therefore unable to build a conviction on these statements. Kerber further explained that the Court was told about additional cases of death where the victims showed gunshot wounds. However, the Judges had to assume that these injuries causing death were caused outside Branch 251 and could therefore not be taken into account in this trial.

Torture

Presiding Judge Kerber said the number of people detained at Branch 251 during the indictment period and being tortured at the Branch pursuant to § 7 (1) no 5 VStGB due to the detention conditions, was at least 4,000 as the Prosecutors had determined.

Kerber explained that Raslan himself admitted that the prison at the Branch was always overcrowded. He said instead of 200 people which was the maximum capacity, there were never less than 1,000 detainees. There was no set detention period. Some detainees were held for a couple of days, other were held for several years. Most of the witnesses in this trial were detained for around three weeks. In favor of the Defendant, the Judges therefore assumed an average detention duration of two months. Given the 16-month indictment period, this led to a total of 8,000 detainees held at the Branch during the indictment period. The Judges conducted another conservative assessment and reduced the number of detainees by one half to a total of 4,000 detainees that were tortured at Branch 251 during the indictment period.

Crimes relating to the Plaintiffs

Regarding the time between April 29, 2011, and September 7, 2012, during which the defendant worked at Branch 251, the Judges made the following findings in relation to the Plaintiffs:

[The court interpreters swapped duty.]

P48 was arrested in April or May 2011, at his place of work. The building was surrounded and stormed by security forces. 100 to 150 activists were arrested. P48 was taken inside a bus, his hands were tied behind his back. He was transported to Al-Khatib Branch and insulted and beaten on the way. Beatings continued until he reached the community cell where he could hear screams of torture. He was detained in this cell for around five days and was interrogated twice. During the interrogations, he was forced to lay on his stomach, put his feet up, and was beaten on his feet and back with a four-wired-cable.

P39 was arrested on May [REDACTED], 2011, at a demonstration in Damascus and taken to Division 40. On the same day, he was transferred to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to endure the so-called welcome party. He was beaten and received electric shocks that caused him severe pain. After he was frisked, he was taken to a community cell that had two small windows facing the yard. For four hours, he was exposed to the screams of torture before he was interrogated. The interrogation was conducted by two people, one of them was Anwar Raslan. At first, Raslan was kind because he assumed that P39 was related to a former Syrian President. But when P39 asked Raslan for the reason of his detention, Raslan called a guard and told him to 'get P39 out of here.' P39 was again taken to the community cell. During further interrogations, he was beaten on his back and feet with a cable. P39 was unable to sleep after this incident. He was then taken to a solitary cell. Once, a guard attached electricity to P39's body, poured water over him and tortured him with electric shocks. P39 was detained at Branch 251 for at least ten days. P39 is still receiving psychosocial treatment. He is unable to work, and still suffers from the consequences of the electric shocks.

P34 was arrested at home at the end of July 2011 with his two brothers. They were taken to Branch 251 where they had to undress and were frisked. P34 was taken to a community cell where people had to sleep while standing. It was very hot inside the cell, and one could barely breath. The detainees inside the cell could hear how others were tortured with electric shocks outside the cell. During his interrogation, P34 had to kneel and was beaten on his back with a stick by a guard. After a few days, P34 was transferred to another dirty cell where there were 36 detainees, including P34 and his brother. P34 was held at Al-Khatib Branch for 11 days, and detained for a total of 26 days.

P1 was arbitrarily arrested by the Syrian regime at Damascus Airport in August 2011. After two stops, he was taken to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to endure the welcome party. He had to hand in his personal belongings in the basement, undress, and was frisked. He could already hear screams of torture at this time. He was then taken to a community cell where he was only able to sit down because some other detainees made room for him. P1 was interrogated several times and beaten and kicked during these interrogations. One time, a stick was inserted in his anus and he was threatened that he would not experience life outside ["the Branch"] if he did not cooperate. He was also mistreated outside of interrogations. He was once hanged by his wrists until he fell unconscious. After two interrogations, he was taken to another community cell [solitary cell] that smelled from blood and mold. He was unable to stretch his legs when he wanted to sleep. P1 was detained at the Branch for around two months. He still suffers from nightmares and psychosocial issues and had to undergo surgery on his anus.

P22 was taken from the hospital on August [REDACTED], 2011, allegedly only to be briefly interrogated. He was taken to Al-Khatib Branch where he was put inside a solitary cell with a small, barred window in the door. He had to stay at the Branch until November 2011. P22 was interrogated at least six times, beaten on his feet with cables, and slapped on his ear. P22 explained his relatively mild treatment with the fact that he was not accused of owning weapons. After 25 days, he was taken to a community cell where the number of detainees varied from 20 to 50 people. Detainees were only able to sleep when lying on their side and were given blankets that were covered in lice. Sometimes, he was able to hear screams of torture. P22 was scared but apparently not treated as badly as other detainees.

P50 was arrested at his place of work close to Damascus on September [REDACTED], 2011 and detained at Al-Khatib Branch for around forty days. During this time, he was interrogated for around ten times. At the interrogations, he was forced to lay on his stomach, put his feet up, and was beaten on his feet. One time, P50 was told that he would be beaten 20 times and if the guards heard his voice even once during this procedure, he would be beaten even worse. The solitary cell was so horrible for P50 that he seriously considered committing suicide in detention.

P11 was arrested at a demonstration on September [REDACTED], 2011. He was taken to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to stay for five days before he was taken to Kafar Souseh. On the way to Al-Khatib Branch, he was beaten and kicked. The only light in his cell came from a small window in the door. He was interrogated three times and beaten with several objects.

P41 was arrested in October 2011 in Harasta and taken to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to stay for four days before he was taken to Kafar Souseh and back to Al-Khatib Branch where he then had to stay for at least two months before he was once more transferred to Kafar Souseh and eventually released. At Al-Khatib Branch, P41 was first detained in a community cell where he could not sit down. He was then taken to a solitary cell. He constantly heard screams of torture, especially in the solitary cell. He was interrogated several times. He was always beaten during interrogations and his hands were tied with some kind of belt. P41 still has issues with the nerves in his wrists. One time, An-Na'saan forced P41 to write down his CV. He was given paper and sent back to his cell. When he was taken back to the interrogation room, Anwar Raslan was waiting there alongside An-Na'saan. However, P41 used only one sheet of paper which An-Na'saan read before he gave it to Anwar Raslan. Raslan said 'he does not understand words, show him in a manner he understands and bring him back when he is ready cooked'. P41 was then taken back to his solitary cell where he was forced to stand up for three days. Every time he broke down, a guard came inside the cell, beat P41 up and told him to stand up again. More interrogations followed and he was transferred to another solitary cell. After a short detention at Kafar Souseh, P41 was eventually released in January 2012 before he was arrested once more in February 2012 and again taken to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to stay for two or three weeks and was again interrogated by An-Na'saan.

P12 was arrested on October [REDACTED], 2011 by Division 40 and taken to Branch 251 after a couple of hours. He was detained at the Branch for ten to fifteen days. He was not beaten upon his arrival but had to undress and perform the safety move. He was taken to a community cell where 12 to 20 people were detained when he arrived. Later, 25 people were detained in this cell. Detainees were unable to sit down with only 15 detainees in the cell. The food they were given was sufficient for five people. P12 was interrogated around five times. He had to kneel during the interrogations and every time the interrogator did not like his answer, P12 was subjected to Falaqa, where he was beaten on his feet so heavily that he was unable to walk afterwards. One time, P12 was taken to a room with torture tools. The guard took tongs, opened them in a threatening manner, but eventually nothing happened.

P25 was arrested on February [REDACTED], 2012, and taken to Al-Khatib by bus. He was so severely beaten with an iron pole that he fell unconscious for a moment. After the welcome party, he was taken to an overcrowded community cell where people had to lay on top of each other and where he could hear screams of torture. P25 also witnessed Abu Ghadab beating a detainee with a whip. P25 was interrogated at the Branch and beaten on his feet with a stick from which he still suffers today. He was detained at Branch 251 for ten days.

P19 was arrested in February 2012 with her siblings. She was taken to a solitary cell where there were two sisters alongside P19. She could constantly hear screams of torture and was interrogated on three days. She was not beaten during the interrogations but beaten by the guard on the way to the interrogations. One time, the guard also touched her breast.

P38 was arrested in February 2012 on his way to work. He was taken to Al-Khatib Branch where he had to endure the welcome party for more than one hour. After he was frisked, he was taken to one of the bigger community cells. However, there were around one hundred detainees in the cell, so people could only sit in a squatting position. Temperature and humidity in the cell were high. There were many injured and sick detainees. P38 had to bandage the toes of a detainee who suffered from diabetes. P38 was detained for around 18 days during which he was interrogated ten times at Al-Khatib Branch and was always beaten during these interrogations. At one interrogation, the interrogator told the guard to 'take this animal and teach him in a way he understands.' One time,

P38's wrists were attached to the bars of his cell door in the Shabeh manner, meaning his toes barely touched the ground. P38 was once kicked in his genitals. He still feels the consequences of that today.

[The court interpreters swapped duty.]

P42 was working with the European Union when she was stopped at a checkpoint on March [REDACTED], 2012. Her personal belongings including her ID were taken from her and she was told to come to Al-Khatib Branch the next day. However, P42 was scared and only went to the Branch in late March or early April 2012. She was then interrogated everyday over the course of fifty days, but she was allowed to leave the Branch in between. She also had to stay at the Branch for at least ten days when she was detained in a solitary cell where she heard screams of torture. Her first interrogation at the Branch was friendly. However, she was then taken to the basement where she was mistreated. She was kicked and beaten and had to stand up for hours during interrogations. Her hands were tied, and she hung from the ceiling while she was tortured with electric shocks on her fingers, knees, and breast, and had to endure sexual insults. On one occasion, a guard pressed her face to his lap, but another guard told him to stop.

P30 was working for a Syrian [REDACTED] when he was arrested on March [REDACTED], 2012. He first had to stay at Division 40 for one day before he was taken to Al-Khatib Branch. On the way, he was accompanied by two officers but was not beaten. However, as soon as he arrived at Branch 251, he had to undress, was beaten, and was insulted. He was taken to an overcrowded community cell with around 100 detainees inside. P30 described that he 'was pushed inside the cell and practically stepped on other people.' Detainees had to stand up. The cell was humid. There were lice, and the sick people were unable to breathe so other detainees fanned them with air. The only fresh air came to the cell through a small gap, which was only opened if the guards wanted the gap opened. Detainees smelled newly arrived detainees because they smelled fresh. P30 was detained at Branch 251 for 18 days during which he was interrogated eight times. At his first interrogation, he had to wait kneeling in front of the interrogation room for one hour. During his interrogations, he was beaten and tortured. He was also beaten on the way back from interrogations.

P27 was arrested in May 2012 and taken to Al-Khatib Branch after several stops. He had to endure the welcome party and was frisked. He was taken to a community cell where he had to endure the usual conditions: overcrowded space, humidity, bugs, skin diseases, and other detainees' constant screams of torture.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced a short break to open the windows.

P32 was arrested at a demonstration on May [REDACTED], 2012, on the same day as P33 was arrested. Together with other detainees, she was taken to Division 40 by bus. P32 was interrogated at Division 40 where she had to stay for ten hours before she was taken to Al-Khatib Branch along with her mother and seven other women. At Al-Khatib Branch, P32 could already smell urine and blood when she entered the building. P32 had to undress until naked and was frisked by a female nurse. At first, she was detained in a small community cell together with 17 other women. The blankets they were given were covered with lice. P32 was interrogated several times at the Branch. She had to endure various insults and threats. After one of the interrogations, she was hung in the basement and a hot liquid was poured over her body. One can still see the scar today. P32 was also tied to a plank and beaten. After a few days, she was taken to a solitary cell where the light always shined, and the blankets were also covered with lice. She counted the days by putting olive seeds aside. She suffered from the loneliness so much that she demanded to talk to Anwar Raslan whom she knew from her sisters' detention. She was eventually allowed to meet Raslan, and he told her she would be taken to a community cell again. P32 was indeed at least taken to a solitary cell where her mother was detained. P32 was detained at Al-Khatib Branch for 23 days. Presiding Judge Kerber added that during her testimony in Court, P32's pain was clearly visible and she described sexual assaults by guards. However, the Judges cannot follow these descriptions because they were too different from what P32 told the German Police in her previous interview.

P33, P32's mother, was arrested on the same day as her daughter and taken to Al-Khatib Branch. She was first taken to a community cell, then to a solitary cell after her first interrogation. P33 was insulted and threatened, but not physically mistreated. She was released after 23 days.

P28 was arrested at a checkpoint in May 2012. Upon his arrival at Al-Khatib Branch, he was forced to line up with other detainees. Facing a wall, they could hear sounds of loading rifles. However, they were not executed. After he was frisked, he was taken to a community cell which he described as a grave. The cell was overcrowded, and one had to take turns standing on one foot for several hours. The air inside the cell was bad and when the guards wanted to punish the detainees, they closed the hatch through which the only bit of fresh air came into the cell. The guards also arbitrarily started beating detainees. Most of the detainees suffered from skin conditions, abscesses, and fevers. The cell was dirty, and dirt and lice dripped from the ceiling with condensed water. After around one week, P28 was interrogated and arbitrarily beaten during this interrogation. A month later, P28 was transferred to Najha Prison where he had to stay for one week before being re-transferred to Branch 251. There he was taken to a bigger cell, but it was still an overcrowded community cell. It was one of the cells at the outside border, so one could see the sky. P28 found this cell to be better although he could still hear constant screams of torture. He was interrogated once more before he was transferred to Kafar Souseh from where he was eventually released in July 2012. He is still suffering from tinnitus and psychosocial problems today.

[The audience noticed that the court interpreter's voice was too low. They suggested that he use the built-in microphone and pulled it closer. Sound was better after that.]

P47 was arrested at a park in May or June 2012. He was taken to Division 40 before he was transferred to Branch 251. Only dressed in boxershorts, he was taken to an overcrowded community cell. It was very hot and people had to 'sleep like swords.' After three days, he was taken upstairs but not interrogated. On this occasion, P47 wanted to go to the same cell as his friend. The guard first allowed him to but eventually ran after P47 and beat him until he was back to his initial cell. At a later point, P47 was indeed interrogated. He was beaten and threatened to be killed in case he would not provide information. P47 thought he would die. After seven days, P47 was transferred to Najha Prison.

P44 was arrested by a patrol belonging to Branch 251 in early 2012, together with his uncle [note for the translator: his mother's brother] and cousin [note for the translator: son of another one of his mother's brothers] on their way home. They were taken to Al-Khatib Branch and P44 was beaten on his shoulder and suffered hematomas. After they were frisked, they were taken to a community cell measuring 3x3 meters. The cell was empty when they arrived, but later twenty to twenty-four people were detained in the cell. New detainees arrived every day. The cell was very humid, there was no daylight. After a few days, P44 was released thanks to his family's connections to a high-ranking officer and bribes being paid.

P17's brother was arrested mid or end of July 2012 and taken to Al-Khatib Branch. At the end of 2012, P17 was contacted via Facebook and told that his brother died at Al-Khatib Branch. Another witness, P18, said he met Anwar Raslan at Al-Khatib Branch and asked him for information about P17's brother's whereabouts. P18 was told that P17's brother died from kidney failure. When P18 requested to see the corpse, Anwar Raslan told him to just take any corpse. Presiding Judge Kerber added the Judges could not make secure findings on whether and how P17's brother died.

P46 alleged that he was arrested on June [REDACTED], 2012 in Jaramana where he was hiding at a friend's house after he was tortured before. He further stated that, after he was taken to Branch 40, he was allegedly transferred to Al-Khatib Branch two or three days later. According to P46, he was then taken to Harasta Hospital due to his poor physical condition. At the Hospital, he claimed to have witnessed and suffered mistreatment by medical staff for nine or ten days. According to P46, he did not receive medical treatment at the hospital. He further stated that he was then taken back to Al-Khatib Branch where he had hot plastic poured on him. Presiding Judge Kerber explained that the judges were, however, not able to base a conviction on P46's statements. She said that P46 certainly suffered severe mistreatment, but the Judges could not make affirmative findings. There were too many contradictions in P46's testimony, particularly in relation to his previous police interview.

Legal Evaluation

[The court interpreters swapped duty.]

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that, as detailed above, Anwar Raslan was an accomplice and not a mere aider and abettor. Kerber explained that Raslan had a "significant personal interest in the completion of the crimes. He was a careerist who identified himself with the totalitarian regime and was able to work his way up." The Judges found that Raslan supported the regime as a loyal employee and that "if the regime would have been overthrown, Raslan would have lost his certainly well-paid and privileged position and probably faced repression in the form of persecution and liquidation." Kerber explained that this was not contrary to the fact that, in individual cases, he might have disapproved of the "exuberant brutality and rising number of arrests that complicated his work as an investigator."

Kerber added that Raslan conducted his work in collaboration with others. But he was "not so subordinate that one could consider him a mere small cog or a sole supporter of the regime." According to Kerber, Raslan was a Colonel at an important Division at one of the General Intelligence Directorate's distinguished Branches, Branch 251. "His contribution to the crimes was of significant importance." The Judges found that Raslan oversaw the interrogators who had to follow his orders. This is visible, for example, through the recommendations he made regarding the handling of detainees, including potential releases, that he was able to make. Kerber concluded that, ultimately, Raslan's actions had a significant impact on the overall crime. The Judges found that it was at least partly due to Raslan that the regime was able to suppress the opposition and prevent an overthrow. Raslan was aware of the situation and even after the massacre in Houla where, according to Raslan, some of his family members and friends were killed, he continued his work without visible external pressure. The Judges found that Raslan had knowledge of the overall crimes.

Kerber added that the Judges found that Raslan had the required intent. He knew about the conditions during interrogations and at the prison where he regularly went. He particularly knew about cases of death and that the guards had a free hand to torture the detainees, including through sexual assaults. He recklessly accepted all that.

Kerber said that "the Judges [had] no doubt about Raslan's guilt." He knew that the regime had resorted to increased torture and detention since the beginning of the conflict in 2011. It is not apparent that Raslan was unable to flee at the beginning [of the conflict]. The Judges did not believe Raslan's elaborations on this matter. The defection of countless other intelligence employees indicates that it was indeed possible to safely escape at an earlier time. The Judges found that it was not unreasonable for Raslan to take this personal risk in order to defect. Kerber said the Judges are convinced that Raslan tried to hold on to his position until the last moment, and that the situation in Syria in December 2012, which 'was not easy' as P56 said, when the war was close to Damascus and one could hear shootings everywhere, was the actual reason why Raslan defected.

Criminal Acts

Presiding Judge Kerber summarized that the Defendant, Anwar Raslan, committed the following crimes:

He is an accomplice in committing underlying crimes as part of a systematic and widespread attack against Syrian civilians (§ 7 (1) VStGB). The underlying crimes constitute 27 cases of murder pursuant to § 7 (1) no.1 VStGB. These murders also fulfil the elements of the crime of § 211 StGB [murder] due to the Defendant's base motives. Kerber explained that this was because Raslan was interested in preventing the fall of the totalitarian regime with which he identified himself due to his years-long work. He wanted to fight the regime critics who he called 'scum' and accepted acts of murder to preserve the totalitarian regime and consequently remain in his position as a Colonel at the Intelligence Services, and to keep his wealth of power and privileges.

4,000 people were tortured in his custody, amounting to torture as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 5 VStGB. Kerber added that all 4,000 people were severely deprived of their liberty in violation of general rules of international law, amounting to severe deprivation of liberty as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 9 VStGB.

Further, one person, P1, suffered particularly severe rape and two people, P42 and P19, suffered sexual assault. All three instances amount to sexual violence as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB. Judge Kerber explained that the frisking and undressing of detainees could amount to sexual violence pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 6 VStGB. However, the Judges did not come to this conclusion. The Judges found that frisking, including the frisking of body openings, although it might be humiliating, is a usual procedure in detention. The Judges did not find there to be a sexual connotation. This is in line with the fact that women were frisked by women and were not exposed to male guards.

[Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker returned the courtroom.]

Kerber went on to explain that, along with the above-mentioned crimes, the following crimes were committed in relation to the Plaintiffs:

Rape and particularly severe rape in P1's case pursuant to § 177 (1) no. 1, (2) no.1 and (4) no. 1 StGB (old version).

Sexual assault in cases of P42 and P19 pursuant to § 177 (1) no. 1 StGB (old version).

Kerber added that the actions in violation of the Plaintiffs' rights also amounted to sexual assault of detainees pursuant to § 174a StGB in three cases.

Dangerous bodily harm through the use of a weapon or other object pursuant to § 224 (1) no. 2 StGB (1) and dangerous bodily harm were committed in coordination with another person pursuant to § 224 (1) no. 4 StGB. (2). Kerber explained this was applicable in relation to:

- (1) P48; P39; P34; P1; P22; P50; P11; P41 in three cases; P12; P25 in two cases; P19; P38; and P42 in multiple cases because she was allowed to leave the Branch several times. However, in favor of the Defendant, three cases are considered.
- (2) P30; P27; P32; P33; P28 in two cases due to his transfer to another branch and back to Branch 251; P47; P44.

In cases where detainees were detained for more than a week, severe deprivation of liberty pursuant to § 239 (3) no. 1 StGB was applicable. This was the case for P39; P34; P1; P22; P50; P41 in two cases due to his transfer to another Branch and back to Branch 251; P12, P25; P38; P30; P32; P33; P28. In total it adds up to 14 cases of deprivation of liberty lasting for more than one week.

There were two cases of hostage taking pursuant to § 239b StGB, relating to P1 and P47.

Presiding judge Kerber explained that enforced disappearance as crime against humanity was not applicable in this trial since German law stemming from of § 7 (1) no. 7 VStGB requires, contrary to the Rome statute, an inquiry. This only leaves the cases that Plaintiff Counsel Bahns mentioned in his closing statement: P32 and her two sisters, as well as P17's brother. However, both of P32's sisters were detained prior to the indictment period, one of them on March [REDACTED], 2011, and the other one in late March or early April 2011. Their cases can therefore not be considered. Kerber explained that, for P17's brother, it could not be determined that he died, nor that Anwar Raslan knowingly provided false information to the relatives who made inquiries about P17's brother.

Sentencing

Kerber explained that the German legislator stipulates life imprisonment for murder (§ 211 StGB) and murder as crime against humanity (§ 7 (1) VStGB). The Judges therefore impose this sentence.

The Judges refrained from finding a particular severity of guilt. Judge Kerber explained that one can indeed hold against the Defendant that he is an accomplice in 27 cases of murder and 4,000 cases of torture constituting crimes against humanity. One can also hold the inhumane detention conditions and the length of the indictment period spanning over sixteen months against him. Kerber said it can also be held against the Defendant that he fulfilled the element of the crimes of two murder provisions by committing murder as a crime against humanity pursuant to § 7 (1) no. 1 VStGB and murder as ordinary domestic crime pursuant to § 211 StGB.

However, according to the Judges, one must also hold in favor of the Defendant that the crimes were committed a long time ago and that, as far as the Judges were able to determine, he did not commit any crimes after that. In addition, one must hold in favor of the Defendant that he did not commit the crimes with his own hands and one can only find limited intent with regard to the killings. The Defendant also helped some detainees getting released and treated some of them well. The Judges also found that Raslan was not a keen supporter of the regime. While he did believe in the justification of the regime as an instance of order, he wanted the privileges that came with his position. The Judges consider him to be an opportunist, which they also associated as the reason for his defection. Nonetheless, there is nothing that indicates that he only defected in pretense. Raslan delivered a partial confession and showed some remorse. Weighing in on all these factors, the Judges did not find an exceptional case that required a ruling of particular severity of guilt.

The trial of Anwar Raslan at the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz ended at 3:35 PM.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced the following Judges' Decision:

The arrest warrant of the Investigative Judge at the Federal Court of Justice dated November 18, 2019 and amended on March 20, 2020 is to be upheld.

Kerber asked Raslan and his Defense Counsel Fratzky whether they would renounce to be informed about their applicable legal means. Defense Counsel Fratzky said he renounces. Raslan said he follows his Counsel. Kerber asked Raslan whether that means that he renounces to be informed about his applicable legal means. Raslan nodded.

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to get a rough overview of which Plaintiff Counsels and Plaintiffs wanted to be informed about their legal means. Since no one affirmed the question, Kerber went on to ask each of them individually whether they renounced to be informed about their legal means. Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen renounced and Dr. Kroker renounced on behalf of two of his clients.

The court interpreter intervened, saying that most of the Plaintiffs were confused because he only had time to translate the legal terminology [Verzicht auf Rechtsmittelbelehrung]. He asked Judge Kerber to give him a moment in order to explain to the Plaintiffs what that actually means. Judge Kerber explained that the parties to the case had certain means to legally proceed against this judgment. If Kerber read these means out to them, she would inform them of these legal means. She added that the question she asked only referred to the renouncement of being informed about these means, not the renouncement of using the means. [The interpreter translated everything that Judge Kerber explained.] Judge Kerber went through the list of names of present Plaintiffs and their Counsel. All of them renounced to be informed about their applicable legal means. The Prosecutors also renounced.

Judge Kerber concluded by thanking “the always loyal interpreter for completing today’s mammoth task.”

The Trial of Anwar Raslan at the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz ended at 3:43PM on Thursday, January 13, 2022. The Judgment is not yet final.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: In the press conference following the announcement of the verdict, Anwar Raslan’s Defense Counsel Fratzky said he, his colleague Böcker, and Raslan agreed to appeal the judgment to the Federal Court of Justice.
