

The Trial of Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib

Trial Reports 1-58

April 23, 2022 – January 13, 2022

Syria Justice and Accountability Centre

Material from this publication may be reproduced for teaching or other non-commercial purposes, with appropriate attribution. No Part of it may be reproduced in any form for commercial purposes without the prior express permission of the copyright holders.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 1

Hearing dates of April 23, 24, 27, 28 & 29, 2020

Highlights

Trial Day 1

- Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib appeared in court for the first time
- The charges of the indictment were read out in court, including charges of torturing 4,000 persons at Al-Khatib (Branch 251), which led to 58 deaths
- The proceedings were adjourned early because Anwar Raslan did not have sufficient time to consult with his attorney

Trial Day 2

- A Police Inspector testified as to the main components of his investigation of the Accused
- Several witnesses had named Anwar Raslan in asylum proceedings, alerting the authorities to the importance of investigating him
- Other evidence obtained in the investigation included the Caesar photos, 3 documents signed by Anwar Raslan as head of Branch 251, and media files/texts obtained from Raslan

Trial Day 3

- An expert in conflict research testified about Syrian history, religious makeup and structures of the intelligence agencies and branches
- The expert spoke about a history of torture and mistreatment under Hafez Al-Assad and Bashar Al-Assad
- Many attorneys questioned the expertise of the witness and challenged her on certain facts

Trial Day 4

- Three witnesses from the German government testified as to Anwar Raslan's transit to Germany and his application for asylum
- Proceedings were adjourned until May 18, 2020

Trial Day 1 – April 23, 2020

There was considerable public interest in the first day of the trial with around 50 people waiting outside to enter the courtroom. The Judges, Lawyers and Accused, Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al Gharib, entered the courtroom. The trial began at around 10:00 a.m.

Judges and Parties:

The Chief Judge Dr. Anne Kerber introduced herself and the remaining panel members: Judges Wiedner, Jeserich, Lenz, Kapischke, Zeitler-Hetger and Schlagmann as supplementary judge. Then she asked the Accused Anwar Raslan to pronounce his name.

Judge Kerber introduced the Accused:

Anwar Raslan, born February 3, 1963 in Homs, currently detained in Koblenz, and his defence lawyers Michael Böcker from Berlin and Arne Bodenstein from Karlsruhe.

Eyad al-Gharib, born May 25, 1976 in Damascus, currently detained in Wittlich, and his defence lawyers Hannes Linke from Karlsruhe and Matthias Schuster from Berlin.

The Federal Prosecutor General is represented by senior prosecutor Thomas Klinge and prosecutor Löbner.

Joint plaintiffs are Messrs Hashish, Muqdad, El-Tinawi, Ghair, Al-Kalous, and Mrs Kana with their lawyers, Dr. Patrick Kroker and Scharmer from Berlin. Messrs Fayad and Al-Shaar, are represented by their lawyer Khubaib Ali Mohammed. Mr. Kala is not present, but represented by his lawyer Andreas Schulz. Messrs Jubaiji and Hazem are not present, but represented by their lawyer Manuel Reiger from Stuttgart and Dr. Anna Oehmichen from Mainz.

Arabic-German translators were sworn.

Prosecution Introductory Statement

The prosecution began to give a history of the Syrian uprising, then introduced the two accused and gave a history about them.

The prosecution read the indictment identifying the specific crimes and facts for which the Accused are charged. These include: torture, bodily and mental damage, oppression of the opposition, inhuman conditions in prison, refusal of medical care, beating, killing of detainees.

The prosecution introduced the witnesses that will testify, including the name and history of the witness (date of detention, reason for detention e.g. demonstration, if the witness was transferred to another facility/prison, and the method of torture the witness sustained). [We have redacted the names of the witnesses here to protect their privacy until they have testified].

Some methods of torture included: beating with wooden sticks and cables, electricity, beating after being tied up to a chair, hitting the penis, forcing to swallow a lot of water, and hitting the genitalia so that urination would be painful. One torturer was named as Abo Al-Ghadab أبو الغضب

Accused Eyad Al Gharib denied the charges against him.

The Chief Judge noted that Anwar Raslan did not have enough time to speak with his lawyer, because he was transferred from Moabit prison in Berlin to Koblenz. Court was adjourned to permit the Accused to speak to his attorneys.

The proceedings adjourned at 11:00 a.m. until 9:00 a.m. the following day, April 24, 2020.

Note on Technical Arrangements:

Translation – simultaneous interpretation was provided for the accused through electronic means. An additional translator was seated next to the accused to provide assistance should the accused not understand something.

COVID arrangements – Prior to the start of the trial, the court announced that it had reduced the number of seats available to the public to permit social distancing. Clear partitions were built in the courtroom to separate the parties.

Trial Day 2 – April 24, 2020

The number of attendants was noticeably reduced from Day 1, particularly from the media.

Accused Anwar Raslan sought additional time to consult with his lawyer. Therefore, the proceedings began at 9:30 a.m. with the calling of a witness to testify after taking an oath.

Testimony of Inspector Deußing

Witness Manuel Deußing, a 36-year-old inspector in the criminal police of state Baden-Württemberg, testified as to his investigation concerning Anwar Raslan which began in November 2017. The investigation was initiated because the name “Anwar Raslan” was raised many times during interviews with refugees who were applying for asylum.

Inspector Deußing said that, since 2008, there were detentions in Branch 251 and “problems with the opposition”. Accused Anwar Raslan used to live in Marienfeld-Berlin. A visa to travel to Switzerland was mentioned, but the context was not clear.

Inspector Deußing inquired with the German Ministry of Interior concerning the Accused and the latter confirmed that Anwar Raslan had been an officer in the Syrian government. He worked in Branch 285 as well as Branch 251.

Inspector Deußing also asked about Anwar Raslan to the Commission for Justice and Accountability (CIJA), while the inspector ran a parallel investigation about the structure and the hierarchy in Branch 251. CIJA replied that some documents suggest that Raslan held a leading position in Branch 251 and sent the inspector 3 documents that were signed by Raslan in 2012.

Inspector Deußing testified concerning preliminary proceedings regarding Accused Eyad Al Gharib who was responsible for the arresting group. Prior to his arrest, Eyad was under police surveillance. In court, a photo array of 12 individuals, which included Raslan’s photograph, was shown using a projector. The inspector said that photo array was shown to witnesses abroad and they were able to recognize Anwar. The witnesses were also able to identify Branch 251 on maps. They could also describe the facility from the inside, the number of floors, and other details.

There was a discussion of the Caesar photographs which came to public attention in January 2014. [These photos document the mistreatment of detainees, including torture and deaths, in Syrian prisons between 2011 and 2013]. The German Ministry of Foreign Affairs confirmed 28,000 names of individuals depicted in the photographs.

German authorities obtained and inspected the Accused Raslan's media files and text messages, in which they found awards/commendations from the Syrian government. They also found a diary with the names and phone numbers of Syrian government and opposition individuals.

The inspector asked a translator for help in translating some documents, but the latter was unable to translate certain graphic content.

The remaining parties asked questions.

Counsel Patrick Kroker, victim's representative, asked if there was evidence of sexual violence. The inspector answered that there was mistreatment and he cannot exclude the possibility of sexual violence. Asked again, Inspector Deußing said that nothing comes to his mind at the moment.

Inspector Deußing provided examples of the types of mistreatment in Branch 251, including beating, kicking, hitting with cables and sticks, Falaqa (البقة), Doolab (tyre) (الب), Shabh (شبح) standing for long time and beatings for sitting down, Bisat Ar-Reeh (flying carpet) (بساط الريح) and German chair. Inspector Deußing testified that detainees were tortured with electricity and burned.

Asked whether there were executions, Inspector Deußing replied that nothing comes to his mind at the moment. The questioning of the inspector ended.

The Court announced that on Monday April 27, there will be no proceedings because the witness who was scheduled to testify is ill and it is unknown when he will recover. In the second session, Anwar Raslan was to read a statement, but he did not have enough time to consult with his lawyer due to his transfer from the prison in Berlin to Koblenz. Therefore, the whole day was cancelled.

The proceedings ended at 12:30 p.m.

Trial Day 3 – April 28, 2020

Chief Judge Kerber began the day by telling the audience that taking photos in the courtroom is completely prohibited. Those who violate this rule will be excluded from participation and will be fined up to 1000 euros.

Testimony of Ms. Laura Thurmman

The 1st witness was Laura Thurmman, 30 years-old, an employee of the Federal Criminal Police office. She was nominated by the prosecution to be questioned and is an "expert in conflict research" from Manchester, England.

Ms. Thurmann gave a historical overview of Bashar al-Assad's rule and the current situation, including Syria's religious background. She provided an overview of the use of torture in various countries, including European and Arab conflicts. Ms. Thurmann testified about the history and the situation in Syria, including how Baath party was founded and how Bashar al-Assad rose to power. She said that torture and massacres existed since the beginning of the Baath Party's rule and explained how the government created a climate of fear. In 2000, Bashar al-Assad became the president and promised to make reforms, but he was no different from his father who preceded him, Hafez al-Assad.

Ms. Thurmann testified that since 1973, the Baath party was predominantly Alawite, who are not considered members of Islam. She talked about the Alawite religion and "tension" with Sunnis. The Baath party used the conflict with Israel for its own agenda and suppressed any opposition.

The March 2011 Uprising

Ms. Thurmann testified that the uprising was shaped by a wish for reform from four groups: (1) [monitor did not hear] (2) people who participated in the uprising due to economic reasons; (3) the opposition who were assisted by the Internet; and (4) people who suffered repression from the beginning (the older people). Ms. Thurmann testified that children and young people were detained, which led to demonstrations in the whole of the country. The government used violence against the demonstrations and erected many checkpoints. The Arab league was supposed to help (in the release of the detainees, for example), but did nothing.

In 2011, demonstrations began in Daraa. Children were detained and tortured, which led to a demonstration in the market in Damascus in March 2011. Many demonstrations emerged from mosques, which played an important role. Demonstrations in Daraa that resulted in death and detention, resulting in more (peaceful) demonstrations in Damascus, Duma, etc. In mid-March, there were civilian victims. She said that the death toll rose from 2-3 at the beginning to 100 dead.

Religious Background of Syrian Leadership

Ms. Thurmann testified that Syria consists of 70% Sunnis, 11% Alawites, and the rest are a mixture of Christians, Jews, Yazidis, etc. 90% of the military commanders are Alawite, although there are some Sunnis. Asked to name some Sunnis that were in command positions, Ms. Thurmann identified Hasan Turkmani, علي شحاتة, Ali Mamlouk, Sha'ban Ateyya, مخلوف Makhoul, [this point was revisited later].

In February 2012, some international journalists were killed in Homs.

Asked by the defence how Alawites could manage the government, even though 90% were Sunnis, Ms. Thurmann answered that Sunnis were not favoured by the occupying French who privileged minorities. Asked whether Sunnis held prominent positions in other fields, Ms. Thurmann answered that they could be found in universities, but that Alawites predominated in religious institutes, the Army, and the Baath party. Asked by the defence how 11% of the population could manage to rule by themselves, Ms. Thurmann answered that it was because Alawites controlled the government, Army, and Intelligence. Further, government officials themselves feared punishment.

In order for a Sunni to rise in the government, he must be a member of the Baath party and must not criticize the government. Asked how other minorities, like Christians, could be in the government, Ms. Thurmann answered that Christians and Druzes must cooperate with Alawites in order to obtain positions in government.

Ms. Thurmann testified that the torture methods employed in the 1970s and 1980s are identical to what is being documented right now. Although there is less information about what happened in the past (lack of media in general, etc), the use of sexual violence definitely increased in present times.

The judge gave leave to a Plaintiff Firas Al-Fayyad فiras الفايض to ask the expert questions. He asked in Arabic whether Sunnis who sought to rise in the government needed to show “allegiance/loyalty”, for example, through acts of violence, in order to reach these positions. Ms. Thurmann did not have such examples.

The victim asked about the emergence of the term “terrorism” and whether it was used to describe Bashar al-Assad’s opposition. The expert replied in the affirmative that, “at some point,” the opposition were described as terrorists. Checkpoints and surveillance were used in 2011.

Asked whether specific intelligence apparatuses were specialized in torture, Ms. Thurmann testified that branch 235 “Palestine” had a very bad reputation in torture.

Asked about Asef Shawkat أصف شحات and his family relationship to Bashar al-Assad, Ms. Thurmann said that they were relatives, but said that she was not an expert in family relationships. She did not know what position he had. Asked about the homogeneity of the FSA and if it had Islamist orientations when it was founded, Ms. Thurmann did not know.

Asked about the intelligence apparatuses, Ms. Thurmann testified that there were branches in Damascus and others distributed throughout the country. They are classified, for example, as Military Intelligence Branches 227, 291, 235, etc. and General Intelligence Branch 255 (more of an administrative branch), Branch 251 (she described the property, location), and Branch 285 (she described the property, location). There was torture in Branches 251 and 285.

Ms. Thurmann gave an overview of the Caesar file describing who Caesar is, what he did, and to whom the photos belonged. Asked about the role of the military intelligence, Ms. Thurmann testified that it had cooperated with other apparatuses to repress the opposition. Asked about the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC) and its purpose, Ms. Thurmann testified that it was a group that was founded by Bashar al-Assad and other officers to contain/suppress the demonstrations that rose in the country. The most important sections were the 4th Division and the Presidential Guards.

She did not know whether there were military trials and if the intelligence relates to cases of death in a military context. Asked about soldiers who defected, Ms. Thurmann testified that soldiers were ordered to shoot at demonstrators and there could be torture for units who refused to do so. Defected units were punished and were shot.

Ms. Thurmann testified that demonstrators and those who tried to help them (such as medical staff) were tortured in military hospitals.

Asked about torture methods, Ms. Thurmann described them e.g. Tyre, Shabh, sexual violence, electric shock, Falaqa, flying carpet, German chair, cold water, de-nailing, depilating/plucking out hair, deprivation of medical care, nutrition and the use of toilettes, no treatment for diseases, and medical emergency situations. Death was sometimes the result. Asked about the origins of the term “German Chair”, the expert did not know.

Asked about torture methods specific to Branches 251 and 285, Ms. Thurmann testified that sexual violence, beating, tyre, and child torture were used at Branch 251. Detention and child torture were used at Branch 285. Sexual violence was against both males and females. She also said that Branch 251 was among the most brutal branches.

A Defence counsel recalled that Ms. Thurmann mentioned “Makhlouf” earlier and asked what she knows about Hafez Makhlouf. Ms. Thurmann said that she doesn’t know who he is. She said that maybe she mistook him with “Mamlouk”, because they have similar names but she meant the latter.

Asked whether Alawites have privileges (when applying for command positions), she said that she has no idea. Asked if Sunnis could make reforms and make decisions on their own, or if they have the freedom not to do something, she did not know.

The witness was challenged multiple times by the lawyers noting that as an expert she should have known certain facts of which she was unaware.

The proceedings ended at 2:30 p.m. and adjourned until April 29, 2020.

Trial Day 4 – April 29, 2020

There were about 6 spectators and 4 media present.

The proceedings began at 9:30 a.m.

Testimony of Christine Bohlmann

The 1st witness was Christine Bohlmann, 35-years-old, who works at the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF). She is a part of what is called the “decision centre”, where applications of asylum are being processed. She was responsible for Accused Anwar-Raslan’s case file (but she did not meet him).

The witness spoke very quickly and was asked many times by the translator and the judge to speak slowly.

A copy of his Syrian passport was shown. His father’s name is Abbas عباس. His mother’s name is Ayyah آية. The stated profession was written as “Lawyer” محامي in Arabic. A copy of the application for asylum was shown. A copy of the application for a family reunion was shown. His wife is called [redacted] and his children’s names were read out.

A photo of a visa to Switzerland was shown for February 13, 2014 to February 24, 2014. A photo of a visa to Amman, Jordan was also shown. Accused Anwar Raslan arrived in Germany on July 26, 2014 and applied for asylum according to Residence Act 23 section 2 and 3 on May 18, 2015. He was granted political asylum on July 22, 2015 pursuant to basic law 16a.

Testimony of Witness Rita Drechsler

The 2nd witness was Rita Drechsler, 43-years-old, who works at the Federal Foreign Office / Ministry of Foreign Affairs. She previously worked at the Criminal Police Office in Berlin. She stated that Anwar Raslan is a military officer (contrary to what is written in his passport). Anwar Raslan worked with the opposition between 2013 –2015 and participated in the Geneva conference.

Ms. Drechsler testified that Anwar Raslan applied for asylum through the UN asylum program in Jordan (according to Residence Act 23 section 2 and 3). His daughter, who lived in Turkey, had a baby, so he used a fabricated passport to visit her. He tried to travel to Germany with this passport, but the Turkish authorities in the airport discovered the fabricated passport. [There was a question as to why he fabricated a passport because he could have sought a travel document pursuant to the Residence Act.]

Testimony of Witness Tamara Huss

The 3rd witness was Tamara Huss, 53-years-old, who works at the Foreigners' Registration Office.

A copy of Anwar Raslan's passport was shown with a visa to Germany June 11, 201[3] to September 8, 2014. There was a family civil status book among the documents.

Anwar Raslan also possessed an A1 German language certificate and B1+ German language certificate (passed) among the documents. He also passed an integration course as exhibited by a course completion certificate.

An application for the job centre and how much money he received was read thoroughly.

Procedural matters

There was some discussion about the court schedule in September. The judge suggested a few dates. There was an agreement to fix the dates later.

The proceedings adjourned at 2:00 p.m.

The next trial day will be May 18, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 2

Hearing dates of May 18 & 19, 2020

Highlights

Trial Day 5

- Four witnesses from the German government, including a translator, testified about their interviews with Eyad Al-Gharib during his asylum procedure.
- Anwar Raslan's defence counsel read his statement to the court, denying the accusations, claiming that he had never ordered torture, that he did not have any power, and that he had helped many detainees.

Trial Day 6

- A police chief testified about a letter from Anwar Raslan that described his experiences of being followed by Syrian intelligence in Germany.
- A former researcher and NGO founder testified about her interactions with Anwar Raslan in Germany, and her knowledge about Syria's religious groups and intelligence services.
- Proceedings were adjourned until May 27, 2020.

Trial Day 5 - May 18, 2020

There were about 16 spectators and 14 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of Marco Pütz

The 1st witness was Marco Pütz, a 27-year-old case worker ("Sachbearbeiter" in German) at the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) who interviewed Accused Al-Gharib. A memorandum between the witness, Eyad Al-Gharib and a translator was shown.

According to the witness, Accused Al-Gharib stated that he had travelled from Turkey to Greece in 2016, stayed in Greece, and then moved to Germany in 2018. He travelled by foot and by airplane.

Copies of Al-Gharib's asylum application, asylee registration (dated May 25, 2018), military ID, and resident permit were shown. In his asylum application, he mentioned he was Sunni. A copy of Al-Gharib's wife's ID and asylee registration were also shown.

The prosecutor asked how long the admission interview lasted and Pütz stated that the admissions interview usually lasts about 80-90 minutes.

The defence asked Pütz if he asked Accused Al-Gharib about Branch 251, and Pütz said no.

Testimony of Klaus Wöllner

The 2nd witness was Klaus Wöllner, a 46-year-old decision-maker ("Entscheider" in German) at BAMF who also interviewed Accused Al-Gharib. Wöllner testified that Al-Gharib said that he used to bring people to prison.

The judge, defence and prosecutors asked him to speak clearly, and the judge asked him to speak more slowly.

In his interview with Wöllner, Accused Al-Gharib described the intelligence services' military exercises and their weapons training. There was some confusion regarding the translation of a type of bomb. [the issue was put to the translator of this interview, Ahmad Abdullah, who testified later the same day].

Wöllner said that Accused Al-Gharib told him he worked in Branch 251 (on Baghdad street in Damascus) until 2012. Accused Al-Gharib used to work in the "religions department," where he monitored religious activities, such as Friday sermons in mosques. He worked in various locations between 2010 and 2011 (including Al-Yarmouk camp and Al-Hajar Al-Aswad).

Wöllner testified that when he asked Accused Al-Gharib why he wanted to leave his job, he said he did not want to harm Syrian civilians. He worked in Al-Khatib Branch , فرع الخطيب and then was transferred to division 40, near the president's house, which was under Hafez Makhoul's حافظ مخلوف's command.

According to the witness, Accused Al-Gharib left Syria on December 2, 2013, and applied for asylum through the UN in Greece.

Al-Gharib went to school until the 12th grade, but he did not graduate. He did not serve his compulsory military service, but said he has a military ID because one receives it automatically if they work in the intelligence services.

Accused Al-Gharib said in his interview with Wöllner that he saw people getting beaten, including on their heads. He mentioned that Hafez Makhoul came to Duma once with his car, shot and killed 5 people.

Al-Gharib said that there were ISIS detainees in his department in 2012. Wöllner stated there could not have been ISIS detainees in 2012, when ISIS in Syria was not established yet.

Wöllner testified that Accused Al-Gharib stated he now wanted to fight against the government. Al-Gharib left Damascus, went to Muhasan (in Deir-ez-Zor) and hid there for 6 months while his family stayed in Damascus. Syrian intelligence told to return to Damascus or his family would be harmed. Accused Al-Gharib's family fled to Muhasan by car. Their house in Muhasan was shelled with rockets, though they escaped injury as they spent days at the Euphrates to avoid daily shelling. They then fled to Abu Hasan, but some problems arose in the family and the house was too small for them, so Al-Gharib went back alone to Muhasan.

When Wöllner asked how Al-Gharib's wife used to move around with no ID card, he said that she was using her cousin's ID card as they resemble one another.

Testimony of Ahmad Abdullah

The 3rd witness was Ahmad Abdullah, a 48-year-old translator who works at BAMF and who translated the interview between Wöllner and Accused Al-Gharib. Abdullah described how he translates.

When asked what he does when faced with difficulties in translation, Abdullah said he asks the "client" to repeat what they said and mean. He said he must be sure of what he is translating. Abdullah was asked about the confusion on the translation mentioned in Wöllner's testimony and if he knows what "Strombomben" means. Through Abdullah's translation, Accused Al-Gharib said he was trained to use the "Strombomben" in military training. Note this did not make sense to the judge and the defence team. The defence asked Abdullah if there is a possibility of errors caused by retranslating the term and Abdullah said yes.

Dr. Anna Oehmichen, one of the plaintiff's attorneys, asked the witness where he studied Arabic and Abdullah said he studied in Baghdad.

Testimony of Kerstin Zinsius (Zensius)

The 4th witness was Kerstin Zinsius, a 49-year-old female from the Zweibrücken municipality.

Copies of Accused Al-Gharib's asylum application, family registration and marriage document were shown. His children's names [redacted] were read out.

Zinsius spoke of charges that Accused Al-Gharib faced in Germany as a refugee. In one incident, Al-Gharib hit a child and threatened the child's father that he would chop his head off and break his hand. He was charged with physical abuse and personal/health injury, and he paid the fine. Al-Gharib also faced assault charges for allegedly fighting and beating two Afghans.

His wife's original work ID card was shown and her name [redacted] was read out. The translator was asked to translate it directly from the screen.

Accused Al-Gharib's original military ID card (ID #232512 – D/738606), issued on June 15, 1998, was shown. He was a "volunteer" [not-conscripted] sergeant.

Procedural matters

A lunch recess was called from 12:45-1:45 pm.

Anwar Raslan's statement (read out by his attorneys)

Accused Raslan's defence attorneys presented his statement over the course of 2 hours. At the end of the statement, the Judge asked Accused Raslan if this was his statement, and he responded "Yes" in Arabic.

Accused Raslan explained how he joined the police and intelligence services, how the situation changed after 2011, and how his superior (Tawfik Younis) grew suspicious of him since Accused Raslan released many prisoners and since he was from Al-Houla. Allegedly, Accused Raslan's responsibilities were thereafter reduced, and he said he did not have any power after that.

Raslan addressed each of the plaintiffs and other parties; stating their name, giving a brief summary of each person, and how and/or when the person was detained. Subsequently, Raslan noted conflicting evidence in the plaintiff's and other parties' accusations against him (such as discrepancies in dates and contradictory statements).

Raslan stated that many plaintiffs knew that he was helping and sympathizing with the opposition. Accused Raslan was treating prisoners according to the protocol and offered them coffee when they first came to be interrogated. Accused Raslan met some of them later on in Jordan and Turkey, and drank coffee with them in cafes.

Raslan stated that he helped one plaintiff [name redacted] to be released and helped another to escape from Damascus to Jordan. He noted contradictions between two plaintiffs' testimony for example, he stated that one plaintiff [name redacted] did not see Raslan personally, and only saw a board with his name written on it. He also stated that he did not know two assailants that two plaintiffs [names redacted] claimed had sexually mistreated them. In response to [name redacted]'s claim that there was "shabh" شبح (a torture act where the victims, either standing or sitting down, are tied and suspended), Accused Raslan stated that the prison's ceilings were too high to tie someone and thus, it was not possible for such an act to occur. Further, he noted that one plaintiff helped him get to Germany. Raslan also stated he did not know another of the plaintiffs.

After addressing each person, Raslan said whether he saved each person's contact information in his phone, including their phone number or Messenger, Viber or Facebook contacts.

Additionally, Raslan named multiple persons who could testify that he was supporting the opposition.

Accused Raslan claimed that he did not hit or torture anyone nor did he order that anyone be tortured.

He stated that he participated in the Geneva conference "against Al-Assad." Raslan was in contact with opposition figure Ahmad al-Jarba أحمد الجربا until a few months prior to his arrest by German authorities.

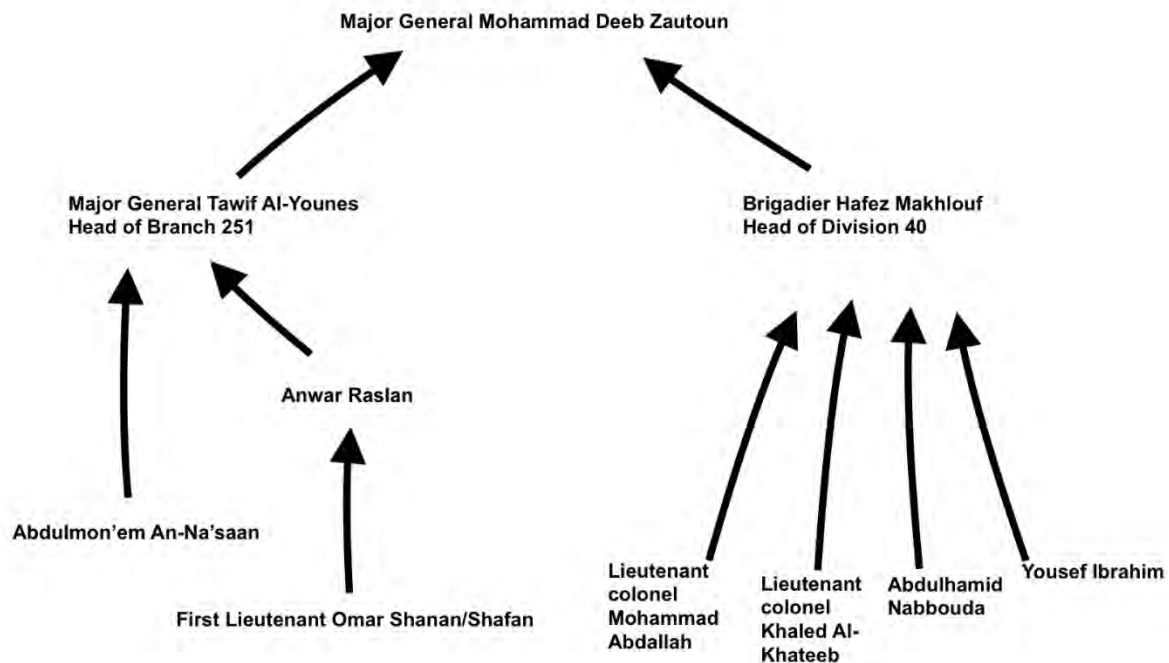

Raslan stated that he travelled from Jordan to Germany, and how he obtained asylum. He went to visit his daughter in Turkey, but was caught in the airport when he was traveling back to Germany using a fabricated passport, and thus had to wait in Turkey for 3 months before being allowed to travel. The passport listed Raslan's profession as "lawyer," but it was not far from the truth as he had studied law.

When he was applying for asylum, Raslan told the authorities that he was from the military, gave them his military ID and stated that many were imprisoned in his branch.

Accused Raslan stated that he wants a democratic Syria, free from dictatorship and sectarianism.

Following the statement, the defence stated that Accused Raslan would not answer any questions regarding the statement, but would answer questions on other topics.

The prosecution and plaintiffs' attorney requested that a sketch, originally drawn by Accused Raslan in Arabic, be shown. The sketch, shown in Arabic and its German translation, illustrated Accused Raslan's place within the intelligence services, and it was noted that there was some mistranslation. A redrawing of the sketch is here:

The proceedings ended at 3:45 pm.

Trial Day 6 - May 19, 2020

There were about 11 spectators and 10 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of Corinna Müller-Durmann

The 1st witness was Corinna Müller-Durmann, a 45-year-old police chief inspector of the Berlin police.

She stated that Accused Raslan sent the Berlin police a three-page letter expressing his concerns that he was being watched on multiple occasions by Syrian intelligence because he defected. The letter asked the police to do something and signed the letter as “Colonel Anwar Raslan.”

The original letter in Arabic was shown, followed by the translated version. The inspector said she asked for the letter to be translated to check that the police’s direct translation is the same as the statements written in the letter. Judge Kerber began to read out the letter and told the translator to stop her if there is a mistranslation.

One of the incidents addressed in the letter involved a time when Accused Raslan was at the dentist. He looked outside the window, saw people looking, and assumed they were part of the Syrian intelligence services. When he left the dentist, he was not being followed. Then, he found 2 people standing between the dentist clinic and the S-Bahn [urban train] station. They entered the train with him. One got off at the station before him and the other one got off at the same station with him. That person followed him for a bit, and then disappeared. When he arrived at his home, he saw an olive car parked close to where he lives. Inside the car was a man with a light beard who started to speak on his phone the moment he saw Raslan. He approached the car to see the license plate number as the car moved away.

Another incident mentioned in the letter occurred in a refugee camp in Germany where 2 people who looked Syrian were watching him before they spoke on the phone.

Testimony of Petra Becker

Petra Becker is a 57-year-old founder of an NGO that supports Syrian refugee children. She lived and studied political science in Syria for 14 years. Previously, she was the head of the German Embassy’s language services in Damascus and researched the Syrian conflict at the Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik (SWP) (German Institute for International and Security Affairs). She left Syria in 2012 due to the war.

Becker met Accused Raslan when he was aligned with the opposition. She said it was interesting to meet him due to his experience in Syria and she was looking for a conversational partner. Becker said that [redacted] and his daughter [redacted] recommended him to the German authorities, but later added that it could have been other individuals.

Becker stated that Raslan asked her to request the foreigners' registration office to help him, but the office suggested that he seek help from the State Criminal Police Office in Berlin. Becker stated that she cannot recall the exact details of this incident.

Accused Raslan told Becker about the events in 2011-12, the intelligence services and Al-Nusra. He also told her about the Al-Houla massacre and that he was under pressure because the intelligence services threatened his family.

He did not tell Becker about the nature of his work with the regime.

The judge asked Becker about her impressions of her discussions with Accused Raslan, and Becker replied that when a researcher speaks with individuals about what happened in Syria, there is a 50-50 chance that the statements are true or false, and she was not sure of what she is being told.

Becker stated that Accused Raslan had called her, asking for help and stating the Syrian intelligence services were monitoring him.

Becker spoke about her background, stating that people call her "Mother of the Syrians," because she speaks their dialect, helps them and brings attention to the situation of Syrian refugees.

Becker said that she was wary because Accused Raslan worked with the intelligence services. When asked if she knew the nature of his work with the intelligence services, she acknowledged that offences are committed in a sector like the intelligence services, but she cannot say exactly what type of offenses they would be.

When asked if she knew how Accused Raslan came to Germany, she said no.

Accused Raslan called Becker on another occasion and asked her to meet him and his wife in a café. He asked for Becker's help in bringing his daughter to Germany. Becker stated she could not help, but he insisted. Becker refused, left the table, and Accused Raslan's wife followed her and asked her "OK. How much do you want?", which was suspicious and disappointing to Becker.

Counsel Patrick Kroker, plaintiff's representative, asked Becker about the regime's stability in 2012, and Becker replied that the regime was under pressure. Kroker asked if she knew about the role of intelligence apparatuses in Syria, and Becker confirmed, stating that this was common knowledge among the people in Syria.

Counsel Kroker asked if she knew about the methods of torture in Syria, and Becker mentioned some methods like Falaqa, the German chair and beating until death. When asked if this occurred before 2011, Becker said yes.

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's defence lawyers, asked whether Becker would be willing to go to the police with him if he felt that he was being followed by Mossad. She answered that she might only if she was an expert in Israeli affairs.

Counsel Böcker asked whether Becker brought German authorities with her to her arranged meetings with Accused Raslan without Raslan's knowledge. Becker asked for clarification, and Böcker clarified by mentioning authorities like BND (the German Federal Intelligence Service). She said that she does not remember such a thing. Böcker emphasized that he was talking about the BND, and questioned how she would not remember such a thing. Becker affirmed that she does not remember any such instance.

Counsel Böcker asked about the Sunnis and Alawites, and the effect of this on power in Syria. Becker asked for clarification, and Böcker gave a past example of the Catholics in Europe. Becker responded and stated that until the beginning of 2011, the population consisted of about 70% Sunnis and about 10 – 12% Alawites. The Alawites occupied key positions as Bashar Al-Assad's father (Hafez) built security and intelligence apparatuses in that manner so other sects do not have a big role.

Counsel Böcker asked for historical context regarding the disproportionate power between the two sects. Becker replied that Sunnis predominantly controlled the economy until the 1950s, which changed after the rule of Al-Ba'th party.

Counsel Böcker asked what it is like when a Sunni and an Alawite met each other in normal life. Becker said that in normal life, it does not have an important effect. The regime was integrating other sects and ethnicities in the system, so they remain loyal to it. She added that Sunnis were surveilled more than others.

Counsel Andreas Schulz, one of the plaintiffs' representative, asked if she knows Asef Shawkat آصف شوكت. Becker said that he is Bashar al-Assad's brother-in-law and that he is an important figure in the regime. Schulz asked if she knows other Sunnis who have high positions in the regime, and Becker answered that these positions are not exclusively for Alawites, as the most important thing is that they have loyalty towards the regime. Non-Alawites are positioned in the regime to maintain stability in the country. When asked if she knows other similar Sunni commanders who have committed offences, Becker responded yes, but said that she cannot give examples at the moment.

Counsel Schulz asked Becker how many individuals were working at the German embassy in Damascus during her tenure, she said 40. Schulz continued to ask Becker if she met someone from BND, but the Judge interrupted him, stating he had gone off course [it was irrelevant].

Counsel Kroker asked Becker if she knew Anwar al-Bunni and his case while working at the German embassy in Damascus, and Becker said yes.

INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH AND DOCUMENTATION CENTRE FOR WAR CRIMES TRIALS

Syria Justice and Accountability Centre

Senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge asked if there were other defected Sunni commanders, and Becker said there were many who began to defect in June and July 2011. Klinge asked if she talked with other defectors and Becker said yes. When asked where she spoke with them, Becker said Turkey and Germany. Klinge asked her if she can mention some of the names of individuals who are now in Germany, but Becker said she cannot remember.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:45 am.

The next trial will be May 27, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 3

Hearing dates of May 27, 28 & 29, 2020

Summary / Highlights

Trial Day 7

- Three witnesses—a police inspector, translator and police high commissioner—testified about their questioning of Eyad Al-Gharib. The police inspector testified that Accused Al-Gharib shared details about his work in the intelligence services and Branch 251's hierarchy, including Accused Anwar Raslan who he said was the head of investigations. During his questioning, Accused Al-Gharib said that 100 detainees arrived at Branch 251 every day. He described torture techniques imposed at the branch such as Shabh and drew a sketch illustrating where detainees who died at the branch were buried. The Defence sought to exclude Al-Gharib's statements from the evidence because Al-Gharib was questioned as a witness and not as an Accused.

Trial Day 8

- A police chief superintendent and a chief inspector testified about their interview with Anwar Raslan. The chief superintendent stated that Accused Raslan spoke about his work in Syria and his experiences in Germany where Accused Raslan felt as if he was being watched by the Syrian intelligence. The second witness, the chief inspector, testified that Accused Raslan shared with her multiple incidents where he claimed the intelligence services were watching him.

Trial Day 9

- A police chief inspector testified about his questioning of Accused Raslan, where he testified that Accused Raslan spoke about his past work in the intelligence services and how he came to Germany. The Judge, Accused Raslan's attorneys and plaintiff's attorneys questioned the witness.
- Proceedings were adjourned until June 3, 2020.

Trial Day 7 - May 27, 2020

There were about 11 spectators and 2 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Matthias Schuster, one of Eyad Al Gharib's defence attorneys, stated that his client was not notified that he was being questioned as a suspect. Therefore, he requested that the statements Accused Al-Gharib provided to Investigators [name redacted], [name redacted], and [name redacted] be excluded as evidence.

Testimony of Manuel Deußing

The 1st witness was Manuel Deußing, a 36-year-old inspector with the criminal police who shared details about his questioning of Accused Al-Gharib.

According to Deußing, Al-Gharib stated he was born in Damascus, and that he lived there and in Muhasan (Deir ez-Zor). When Accused Al-Gharib was 20 years old, he began to work under Kamal Al-Ahmad in Division 40.

Deußing testified that Al-Gharib mentioned a specific incident where 5 people were killed near the grand mosque (الجامع الكبير) in Duma in September 2011. Al-Gharib stated that they were detaining people in Al-Khatib branch, and that someone once got hit on his head and died.

Deußing stated that Accused Al-Gharib and his family came to Germany from Athens in the beginning of 2018 through the UN.

On August 16, 2018, the Office of the Federal Prosecutor interviewed Accused Al-Gharib as a witness, one month after they began Accused Raslan's questioning. The arrest warrant for Accused Raslan was issued three days before the Al-Gharib's questioning began. Accused Al-Gharib was informed about his rights as a witness during his questioning; Al-Gharib was able to understand the translator and provided consent.

Accused Al-Gharib spoke to Deußing about his work background. Deußing stated that Accused Al-Gharib worked at the general intelligence and did an anti-terrorism training. He used to work in Duma and its surrounding area under the Al-Khatib Branch. After the army's takeover of Duma, Al-Gharib was transferred to the "storming" division, and then to Zabadani. He went back to Damascus to work in the "religion" division under the command of Kamal Al-Ahmad كمال الأحمد in Branch 251. Afterwards, he was transferred to Division 40 under the command of Hafez Makhoul حافظ مخلوف. Accused Al-Gharib then defected.

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib to describe the structure of Branches 251 and Division 40; he provided information and [Al-Gharib] drew some sketches [see below].

Accused Al-Gharib said to Deußing that he was in command of a checkpoint in Duma. People who were detained were transported to Branch 251 by buses. Accused Al-Gharib stated that his colleagues beat detainees on those buses.

The Judge asked Deußing about the exchange of information between the criminal police and the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF). Deußing replied information is shared between entities if it is determined that an individual committed criminal offenses or if the person is a member of certain groups.

The Judge asked Deußing about the translation process during the questioning, and Deußing noted that he ensured that there was both a direct translation and reverse translation (whereby the interviewee is asked to confirm the accuracy of the translation).

The Judge asked Deußing about his impression of Accused Al-Gharib, and he said that Al-Gharib was relatively calm. When Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib if he used violence against protesters, Deußing stated that Accused Al-Gharib said that he did not use violence against protestors and that violence against civilians was illegal.

Hannes Linke, Counsel for Accused Al-Gharib, asked Deußing why police conducted their investigation on Syrian intelligence. Deußing replied that following the release of the Caesar report and reports on torture by Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch, the police began investigative proceedings.

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's defence lawyers, asked Deußing to provide the exact year of the reports as Deußing was only mentioning the months. Deußing replied that he needs to refer to his files, but thinks it was in the beginning of 2018.

Counsel Böcker asked Deußing if he remembered the witness Z28 [pseudonym]. Deußing confirmed that this witness told him about the structure of Al-Khatib. Böcker asked Deußing about detention in Branch 251 and Deußing said that brutal torture occurred, but some detainees in 251 and 285 do not experience torture. Böcker asked if Deußing was questioning Al-Gharib as a witness or an accused. Deußing said as a witness, just as senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge instructed him to do.

Deußing stated that Accused Al-Gharib described Branch 251 as well as its religion and students' divisions [division that monitored student activity/colleges]. Al-Gharib mentioned that Accused Raslan was the head of the investigation unit and that Kamal Al-Ahmad was the head of the religion division. Al-Gharib further told Deußing that Branch 251 had multiple checkpoints and that he used to work in one of them.

Referring to Accused Raslan's questioning in July 2018, Counsel Böcker asked whether Deußing communicated with the Federal Prosecutor. Deußing affirmed and stated there was communication with senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge. Deußing called the Federal Prosecutor to ask how to proceed with the questioning, and the office told Deußing to proceed by considering Accused Al-Gharib a witness.

Accused Al-Gharib mentioned to Deußing a torture tactic (used even prior to 2011) that included pouring boiling water over detainees' bodies. Following 2011, Accused Al-Gharib said to Deußing that there was more freedom to use other torture methods. Accused Al-Gharib added that around 100 people were detained at checkpoints on a daily basis, and he identified the location of these checkpoints using google Maps during the questioning.

Counsel Linke asked Deußing about witness 280716 [pseudonym], who was questioned before Accused Al-Gharib and who had claimed that interrogations in Branch 251 or 285 were always conducted without torture. Linke wanted to know if this meant there was a general suspicion of misconduct at 251 prior to Al-Gharib's questioning. Deußing replied by stating that the federal prosecutor handled such matters and his job was to only conduct the questioning.

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib about his duties in Damascus. Accused Al-Gharib replied that he used to research and collect information from mosques, and report if the Imam or anyone else would say anything against the government.

Mr. Scharmer, a plaintiff's attorney, asked Deußing if Accused Al-Gharib had any reaction or admonition during the questioning, but Deußing stated no.

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib about his experience and his reasons for leaving Syria. Accused Al-Gharib answered that the intelligence services have always committed crimes against humanity, and the government discriminates against minorities and based on religion, especially against Sunnis, who were subjected to more punishment.

Accused Al-Gharib also mentioned to Deußing that he did not say everything to the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) during his interview with them, because there was not enough time.

During his questioning with Deußing, Accused Al-Gharib told Deußing that detainees were transported to the Al-Khatib branch via buses, where they were beaten and one of them got hit on his head and died. Accused Al-Gharib said that between May and June 2011, the detainees did not have enough ventilation in their cells. He added that some died and were transported to Al-Mojtahed hospital, مشفى المجتهد, before their bodies were buried in mass graves.

Accused Al-Gharib provided more details on Branch 251 to Deußing. He described Branch 251's hierarchal structure in the order as follows: Tawfiq Younis, أنور رسلان, Anwar Raslan, Kamal Al-Ahmad, كمال الأحمد, Basel Habib, باسل حبيب, Abu Ali أبو علي [i.e. "Father of Ali"] (he said that he does not know his real name). He also mentioned the number of the members in each division. Accused Al-Gharib drew sketches of Branch 251's building, the buses' garage, basement, stairs and the location of where the interrogations were conducted (see sketches below).

During the questioning, Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib whether there were any personnel changes at Branch 251. Al-Gharib replied that if someone was suspected not to be loyal, they were relocated to Branch 295, where it was easier to get rid of him or have him killed.

Accused Al-Gharib also stated to Deußing that some detainees were released in April and May 2011, after they signed that they will not be joining demonstrations again.

Senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge asked Deußing to enumerate some torture methods, which the latter did. Deußing mentioned Falaqa and electric shock. Klinge asked if Deußing can explain what Shabh is and Deußing explained it [hanging a detainee above the ground by only his/her hands]. Klinge further asked if Deußing knows where the individual's hands should be hanged during Shabh, but Deußing answered that no one told him this detail.

Andreas Schulz, a plaintiff's attorneys, asked Deußing to explain the "detainees play." Deußing said that Accused Al-Gharib told him that in the late 2011 (before Arab league delegates came to Syria to see the prison), some members of Al-Khatib branch pretended that they were injured due to being shot by the opposition. They were filmed in Al-Mojtahed hospital as if they were wounded, with the plan to portray to the public that they were victims of armed assaults. This was done with the permission of Tawfiq Al-Younis توفيق اليونس and under the supervision of Habib Fadel حبيب فاضل. Furthermore, other members were acting as alleged detained armed assailants to give fabricated testimonies.

Judge Kerber then started to read the transcript of the questioning.

During the questioning, Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib if he had relatives in Syria, and he stated that he had a sister in Syria.

Accused Al-Gharib elaborated to Deußing about the Hafez Makhoul incident in Duma in 2011 near the grand mosque. Hafez Makhoul came riding his “Hammer-like” Mercedes and shot on the demonstrators. The location of the grand mosque was shown on google earth via the projector in the courtroom. Accused Al-Gharib stated that he saw Makhoul with his eyes shooting on them using an AK-47. Some of the demonstrators were killed, some detained, some wounded, and others escaped. Accused Al-Gharib heard Makhoul saying, “The ones who love Bashar, shoot!” Accused Al-Gharib mentioned that some Alawites started shooting along with Makhoul; he could only identify one of them: Zaydoun Barakat زيدون بركات.

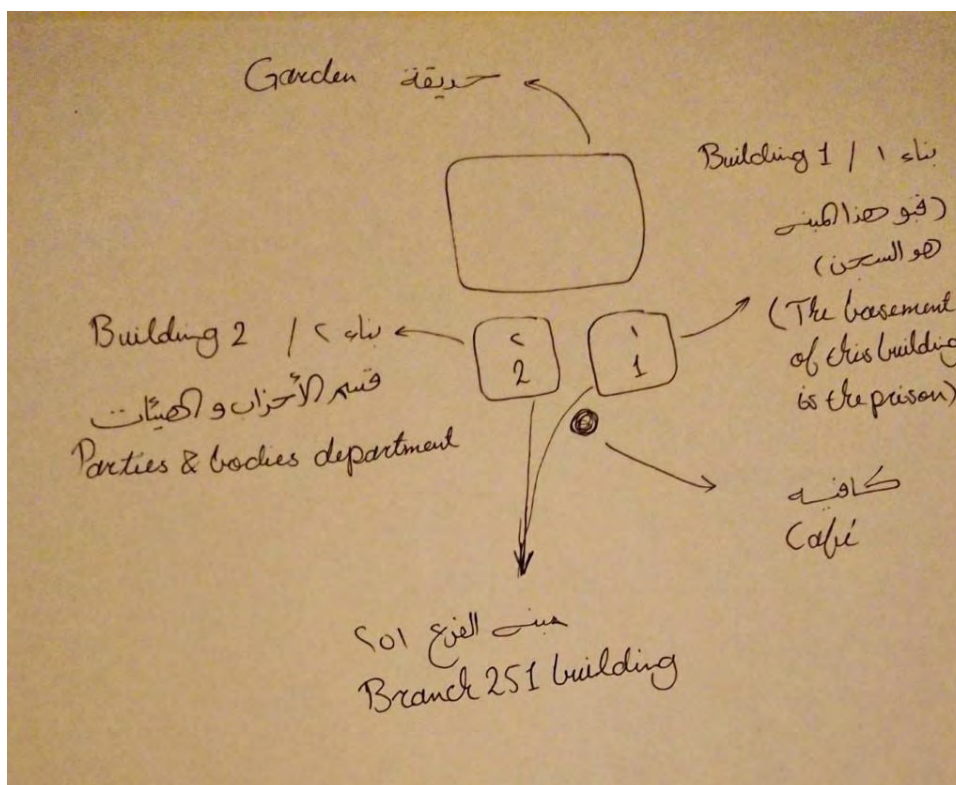

Accused Al-Gharib told Deußing that beatings on the buses were not very aggressive in comparison with the beatings the detainees received when they arrived at the branch. The prisoners’ screaming and crying in their cells from the torture could be heard in the cafe [see the sketches below for a map of the prison].

Accused Al-Gharib described and drew a sketch (in Arabic) of the leaders of the divisions in the order as follows:

1. Head of Branch 251: General Brigadier Tawfiq Al-Younis
رئيس الفرع 251: العميد توفيق اليونس
2. Head of Investigations Division: Colonel Anwar Raslan
رئيس قسم التحقيق: العقيد أنور رسلان
3. Head of Religions Division: Kamal Al-Ahmad
رئيس قسم الأديان: كمال الأحمد
4. Head of Students Division: Basel Mohammad
رئيس قسم الطلبة: باسل محمد
5. Head of Operations Division: Habib Fadel (Abu Ja’far).
رئيس قسم المهمات: حبيب فاضل أبو جعفر

Sketch of a map of Branch 251 (shown via the projector):

Accused Al-Gharib mentioned to Deußing that [name redacted], an acquaintance who used to work in Branch 251, defected on October 11, 2012. Accused al-Gharib told Deußing that he visited [name redacted] once and saw the prison.

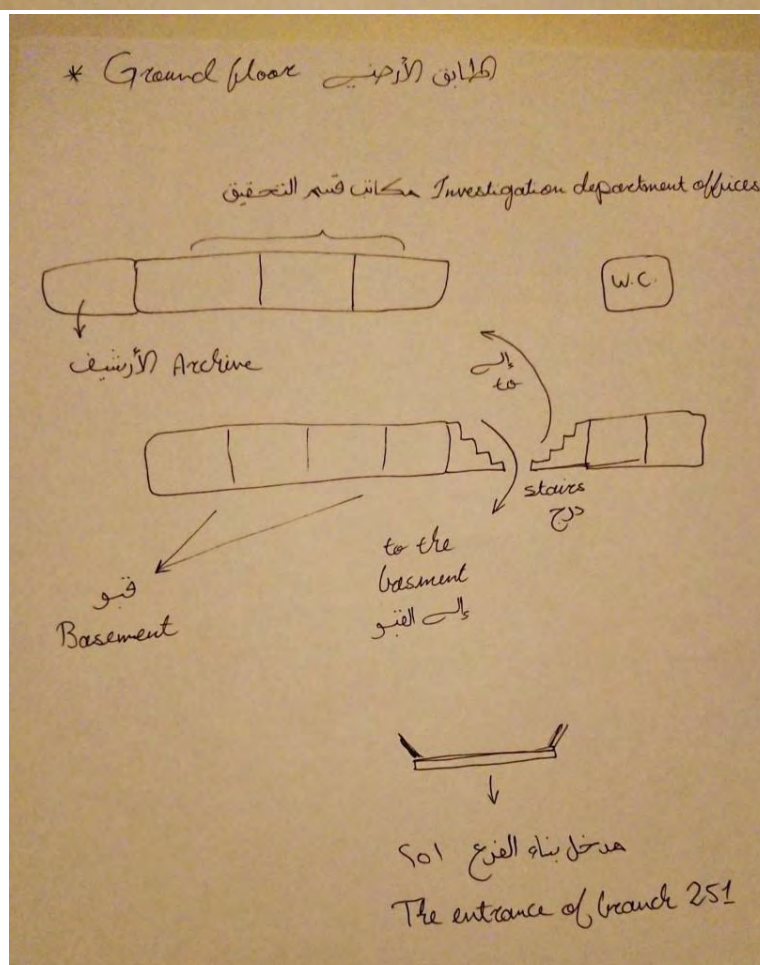

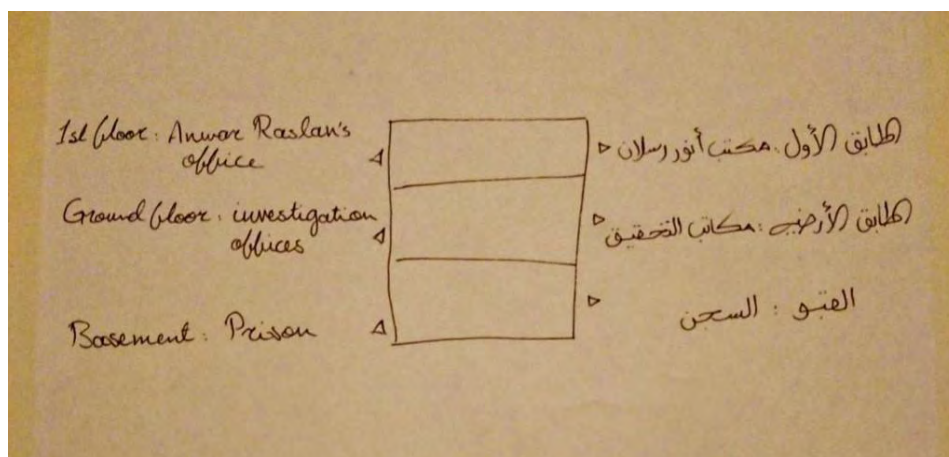

Accused Al-Gharib told Deußing that detainees were delivered to Branch 251 usually on Fridays and some of them left the prison dead.

Deußing stated that he always told Accused al-Gharib that they can take a break during the questioning whenever he wanted to.

A photo of the location of Accused Al-Gharib's checkpoint was shown via the projector.

Accused al-Gharib said to Deußing that around 100 people were detained on a daily basis, and six members of Branch 251 along with 23 members of the presidential guards were working at his checkpoint.

Sketches of Branch 251's layout (shown via the projector):

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib what he knew about Accused Raslan and Al-Gharib said that he only knew that Accused Raslan defected. Deußing asked if he saw Accused Raslan receiving or meeting detainees himself, and Al-Gharib said no. Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib if Accused Raslan was able to punish people who were responsible for torturing and Gharib said he did not think so as Accused Raslan is a Sunni. Accused Al-Gharib denied personally witnessing any interrogation and stated that he never entered Accused Raslan's office.

Accused Al-Gharib stated to Deußing that he once saw Tawfik Al-Younis and Hafez Makhoulf in a car in At-Tal.

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib if Hafez Makhlouf حافظ مخلوف used to report to Ali Mamlouk علي مملوك directly, and Al-Gharib answered no.

Sketch of where detainees in prison were buried:

Accused Al-Gharib stated to Deußing that the detainees who died in prison were transported to Najha نجها cemetery, if their corpses showed signs of torture. Otherwise, the corpses were delivered to Al-Mojtahed المجتهد hospital. He stated that this was done in May and June 2011. The corpses were transported 10 at a time from the basement mainly at night using a pick-up truck.

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib about Caesar [the photographer] and Al-Gharib said that Caesar was responsible for taking photos of the corpses, but that he does not know him personally.

Accused Al-Gharib told Deußing that after he defected, others defected as well and some of them went to Muhasan. [Name redacted] defected from Branch 251 and is in Stuttgart, Germany. [Name redacted] defected from Branch 295 and is in Greece. Accused Al-Gharib stated to Deußing that [name redacted] told Al-Gharib that the car used in the bombing of the Damascus general intelligence building was prepared in Branch 295.

Various photos were shown through the Court's projector, and Deußing stated to the Court what Accused Al-Gharib told him about these photos during his questioning.

- A photo of a corpse taken from the Caesar file was shown, with these numbers on it: 1099; 251 and 4558.
- A photo was shown and Deußing identified the person as Ali Mamlouk علي مملوك.
- A photo was shown and Deußing said that he does not know the individual, but Accused Al-Gharib might have seen the person in the branch.
- A photo was shown and Deußing said that it was Rostom Ghazali, رستم غزالي, but he was not sure (the photo belongs to [name redacted]).

- A photo was shown and Deußing said that he cannot recognize the person in it.
- A photo array of 12 individuals of similar appearance was shown during the interrogation and Accused Al-Gharib was able to recognize Raslan's photo. The photo array was shown in the courtroom.
- A photo of a person was shown and Accused Al-Gharib thought the person was Hafez Makhoulf, but it turned out to be someone else.

Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib if he knows someone in Europe who committed criminal offences. Accused Al-Gharib mentioned an ISIS member called [name redacted].

Senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge asked if he heard about [name redacted], who was mentioned by Accused Raslan as potential witness. Deußing said that this person used to monitor demonstrations and got some videos of some on his phone. The UN tried to contact him; he is considered an inside-informant for them.

Dr. Patrick Kroker, plaintiff's representative, asked if Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib about [name redacted] and [name redacted]. Deußing said that one witness mentioned [one of the redacted names].

Counsel Kroker asked if Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib about [name redacted], who is in Greece. Deußing said that he tried to ask about the important people only. Therefore, he did not bring up [name redacted], because he lives outside Germany.

Judge Kerber asked Deußing about his impression after interrogating Accused Al-Gharib. Deußing replied that Al-Gharib was cooperative and answered questions, and there were no discrepancies with what Accused Al-Gharib stated to the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF), nor were there any contradictory statements that conflict with Accused Raslan's statement.

Testimony of Sami Koca

The 2nd witness was Sami Koca, a 59-year-old translator from Germersheim.

The Judge asked Koca if there were difficulties understanding what was said during Accused Al-Gharib's questioning with inspector Deußing. He stated that Deußing asked Accused Al-Gharib during the questioning if he had difficulty understanding, and Al-Gharib replied no. Koca said that Al-Gharib drew the sketches in Arabic and Koca later translated them.

Testimony of Alexander Frey

The 3rd witness was Alexander Frey, a 32-year-old high commissioner at the Federal Criminal Police Office in Meckenheim.

Frey stated that inspector Deußing conducted the questioning while he took notes. Accused Al-Gharib told Frey and Deußing that he was a commander of a checkpoint and that he detained people. Frey stated that Deußing told Accused Al-Gharib that they needed a break and called the federal prosecutor's office.

Counsel Matthias Schuster, one of Accused Al-Gharib's attorneys, asked Frey when he began to work on Al-Gharib's case. Frey said since March 1, 2019.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:30 p.m.

Trial Day 8 - May 28, 2020

There were about 13 spectators and 2 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Chief Judge Dr. Anne Kerber stated that Mr. Himmler, a translator at Mr Björn Schmidt's interview with Accused Raslan, could not appear because he was sick. Chief Judge Kerber added that Himmler might not be called to testify at a later date.

Testimony of Björn Schmidt

The 1st witness was Björn Schmidt, a 52-year-old chief superintendent at LKA (State Criminal Police Office) in Berlin, who spoke about his interview with Accused Raslan.

Schmidt said that he saw Accused Raslan's criminal complaint (originally mentioned in Trial Day 6) and its translated version by Petra Becker.

Schmidt is responsible for investigating people who have backgrounds in military or intelligence services. Schmidt pointed out that that he was interrogating Accused Raslan as a witness.

Schmidt asked Accused Raslan about the nature of his work. Accused Raslan told Schmidt that he used to work at the intelligence services and that he has a legal background. Accused Raslan said he completed his education with the police, and graduated top three in his class. Raslan said he used to work in Branches 251 and 285 and was mainly responsible for the Ar-Rawda الروضة and Al-Maalki المالكي neighborhoods in Damascus (they were locations of embassies).

According to Schmidt, Accused Raslan conducted surveillance of Islamic organizations until 2007, and was responsible for taking care of members of Iranian Intelligence services when they visited Damascus. For a short period of time (until 2008), Accused Raslan was responsible for the security of ministries and external affairs. Between 2002 and 2008, Accused Raslan used to investigate organisations like Al-Qa'eda since they began existing in Iraq.

Accused Raslan said to Schmidt that he faced pressure from his family, the Al-Houla massacre and the regime. His wife called him once and asked how he could work with the regime.

The witness testified that Accused Raslan fled to Jordan with his family and hid there until 2014. Because Accused Raslan fled, his name was shared with border crossings in case they were able to catch him. Accused Raslan told Schmidt that if he had been caught, the punishment surely would have been death.

The Judge told Schmidt that there was an opposition figure who sent an English translated version of Accused Raslan's C.V. to the German Embassy. The Judge asked if Schmidt remembered the name of this figure. Schmidt said the name was [redacted].

According to the witness, Accused Raslan said that Al-Jazeera conducted interviews with him in Jordan in 2014. He also mentioned that he worked with the opposition and was a delegate for them.

Accused Raslan told Schmidt that he grew suspicious about one of his acquaintances, since the individual was asking Raslan many questions.

Schmidt mentioned Accused Raslan's letter to the police of suspicious activities, originally mentioned in Trial Day 6. Raslan told Schmidt about events that made him nervous, including a visit to the doctor where the doctor asked Raslan about his work in Syria and asked to take a photo with him. In another appointment, Accused Raslan was in the waiting room and looked through the window to find two persons, whom he suspected to be Syrians. The two persons drove away with a car when he got out from the clinic. Accused Raslan mentioned an incident that involved two individuals following him from the doctor's clinic into the S-Bahn [city train]. These individuals were wearing headphones and Accused Raslan was sure that they were member of the intelligence services.

Schmidt said that he does not believe that the Syrian embassy is capable of organizing surveillance operations and that such procedures are unlikely and improbable.

Accused Raslan said to Schmidt that during his training at the police, he was taught to differentiate people based on their ethnic and geographical background through methods such as identifying their face and dialects.

Schmidt asked Accused Raslan if he was in contact with external intelligence services. Raslan replied that he shared information with the Syrian opposition, Jordanian intelligence and American intelligence after he defected. Accused Raslan added that he had data and information on his old laptop, but his children broke his laptop in Jordan, and thus, he lost this data. However, Schmidt did not find this believable and plausible.

The Judge asked Schmidt if he communicated with others regarding the case, and Schmidt stated he was in contact with BKA (Federal Criminal Police Office), the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Petra Becker [a witness who testified on Trial Day 6].

Schmidt said Accused Raslan appeared to be unsatisfied during the questioning, because Schmidt did not seem to believe him. Schmidt found it strange that Accused Raslan waited and did not report the incident that involved two individuals monitoring him immediately to the police, as Raslan could have identified the vehicle license plate.

The Judge asked Schmidt about his view on Accused Raslan's statement about being followed, and Schmidt said that he was skeptical.

The Judge asked Schmidt who specifically he was in contact with at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Schmidt said with Mrs Drechsler.

The Judge asked Schmidt if he knows if Accused Raslan had a role within the opposition. Schmidt said yes, but stated he did not recall exactly what Raslan's role was.

Schmidt stated that people who work in intelligence are generally skeptical and think that they are being watched. Schmidt believed Accused Raslan was overreacting to the situation.

Schmidt said that the case was forwarded to the BKA (Federal Criminal Police Office).

The Judge asked Schmidt his opinion of the translator at the questioning, and Schmidt said that the translator was very good and the translator studied Arabic since the DDR era (German Democratic Republic).

Schmidt stated that he did not understand why Petra Becker, a witness called on Trial Day 6 and a representative of the SWP (German Institute for International and Security Affairs) was involved with Accused Raslan. The Judge asked Schmidt if he had asked Becker about this and Schmidt said no.

Dr. Anna Oehmichen, a plaintiff's attorney, said that she could not find the part that mentioned that the translator studied in the DDR in the transcript. Judge Kerber gave the page number to Oehmichen.

Testimony of Anja Krüger

The 2nd witness was Anja Krüger, a 30-year-old chief inspector at the Berlin police (Directorate 5), who testified about her interview with Accused Raslan.

Krüger said that Accused Raslan mentioned multiple incidents where he claimed the intelligence services were watching him (these incidents were the same incidents mentioned above by Björn Schmidt) and said they were a threat to him. Accused Raslan said he was under pressure as he had family problems. Krüger said that Accused Raslan was anxious and afraid.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:00 a.m.

The Syria Campaign and Families for Freedom attended the trial. At page 12 photos of their demonstration outside the Courthouse can be found:

Trial Day 9 - May 29, 2020

There were about 11 spectators and 2 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of Martin Holtzky

The 1st witness was Martin Holtzky, a 51-year-old chief inspector at the LKA (State Criminal Police Office) Baden-Württemberg, who questioned Accused Raslan. Specifically, Holtzky called Accused Raslan as a witness following an interrogation about incidents that occurred during demonstrations in Hama.

Holtzky explained that when a witness is called, his rights and the official procedures are explained to him. He stated that Accused Raslan agreed to take part in the questioning.

Judge Kerber asked Holtzky about Accused Raslan's personal life. Holtzky said that Raslan said he had 7 children—6 of whom are in Germany. Raslan said he studied law and after his graduation, he joined the police before working in the intelligence services in Branches 251 and 285.

Judge Kerber asked if Accused Raslan mentioned cities that he worked in. Holtzky said that Raslan said that he worked in multiple locations including Damascus and Tartous; Raslan specifically stated that he did not work in Hama.

Holtzky asked Accused Raslan if he has any information about [name redacted] and Branch 320 but Raslan said no.

Holtzky said that Accused Raslan left Syria in 2012 due to the family pressures and the Al-Houla massacre. Raslan stayed in Jordan until 2014, and then went to Germany with a visa issued by the German authorities. Holtzky did not recall the name of the opposition figure who helped Raslan in the visa process. Judge Kerber asked Holtzky if the name [redacted] rings a bell, and Holtzky affirmed that it could be the name of that previously mentioned opposition figure.

According to Holtzky, Accused Raslan stated that there were criminal offences committed in the branches. Raslan added that some detainees died, were transported to the hospital and were photographed.

Holtzky asked Accused Raslan about his tasks in the branch. Raslan said that he was responsible for the interrogation, which Raslan said sometimes was conducted harshly and other times, peacefully. Accused Raslan said that one cannot be courteous all the time in his past position. Accused Raslan claimed that he did not use violence, did not order violence to be used, and that he was trying to avoid violence.

Holtzky testified that Accused Raslan requested to be transferred to the Ministry of Interior.

Holtzky testified that Accused Raslan claimed that no weapons were used to suppress demonstrations before August 2011, aside from batons and tear gas. But afterwards, presidential guards used machine-guns.

Holtzky said that Accused Raslan was communicative, willing to help and had strong knowledge about people, religions and locations in Syria. Holtzky added there were no difficulties in communication. Reverse translation was provided to Accused Raslan. Afterwards, the case was forwarded to the BKA (Federal Criminal Police Office).

The Judge asked Holtzky if he asked Accused Raslan whether Maher Al-Assad and Hafez Makhoulf had any relation to Branch 251. Holtzky said no [he did not ask Raslan].

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's defence lawyers, stated that travelling to Stuttgart (where he had his questioning with Holtzky) was inconvenient to his client.

Arne Bodenstein, one of Accused Raslan's defence lawyers, told Holtzky that after Raslan mentioned that corpses were transported from prison, Holtzky should not have asked follow-up questions as Raslan was being interrogated as a witness [and not as a suspect].

Dr. Oehmichen, a plaintiff's attorney, said that Holtzky mentioned once that 750 corpses were brought to the prison. However, the questioning's transcript stated that 750 individuals were brought alive, but some of them were corpses.

Counsel Manuel Reiger, a plaintiff's attorney asked Holtzky if he checked the authenticity of Accused Raslan's statement with other witnesses. Holtzky affirmed that he did corroborate key points in Raslan's statement.

The proceedings were adjourned at 10:30 a.m. The next trial will be on June 3, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 4

Hearing dates of June 3, 4, & 5, 2020

Note: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

[Information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor].

(Information located in parenthesis is information stated by the witnesses themselves).

Summary / Highlights

Trial Day 10

- Witness and plaintiff [name redacted] [P1], the first plaintiff to testify, spoke about his background, his experiences as a detainee in Syria and how he knows Accused Raslan. P1, a filmmaker, was detained twice, primarily due to his work and footage of demonstrations in Syria. He testified about his interrogations and the abuse and torture he experienced in the Al Khatib Branch, which included Shabh. He also spoke about the Branch's inhumane living and sanitary conditions, as well as the confined living space in the shared cells. Judge Wiedner asked how he knew Accused Raslan. The Witness said he was about 60-70% sure that his interrogator at Al-Khatib was Accused Raslan due to facial features that he remembers and conversations with other prisoners during his detention. Prosecutor Klinge questioned him further about his experiences in Al-Khatib.

Trial Day 11

- P1's questioning and testimony continued. He spoke further about the interrogation tactics used while he was detained, including threats and insults towards him and his family. He mentioned that he saw a child who showed signs of being tortured, and heard the screams of women in the prison. He spoke about his personal health and psychological conditions as a result of his experiences as a detainee. He stated that he believed he could recognize his interrogator's voice and that anyone who works at Al Khatib Branch is aware of the torture and abuse there.
- [Name redacted] [P2], a Syrian human rights lawyer, testified about his experiences as a lawyer in Syria and his experiences in detention. This Witness stated that the regime has detained his family members since 1977. He spoke about his five years in Adra prison, where he was arrested for his human rights-related work in Syria. Using his own experiences and the experiences of his detained clients, P2 shared his knowledge about the Branch 251's hierarchy, noting that it was the main branch that detained, tortured and interrogated detainees, before transferring them elsewhere. He testified how he identified Accused Raslan as the individual who delivered him to court while he was detained in Syria, and stated how he came across Accused Raslan three times in public places in Germany.

Trial Day 12

- P2's testimony and questioning continued. P2 spoke further about Branch 251's hierarchy and noted that Division 40 was under Branch 251, and thus Division 40 followed 251's orders. Using his own experience and his clients' experiences, he described Branch 251's layout, including the underground prisons. He testified about the experiences of female detainees, and more specifically the sexual assault they endured. He stated that a non-Alawite could have a high-rank in the prisons, and stated he was able to distinguish a person's sect or hometown from their dialect.
- The next trial session will be June 24, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

Trial Day 10 – June 3, 2020

There were about 15 spectators and 10 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Chief Judge Dr. Anne Kerber stated that witness Martin Holtzky [chief inspector who testified on May 29 about his questioning of Accused Raslan] sent a passenger receipt that belongs to Accused Raslan. The receipt was shown via the projector and listed Raslan's flights on Eurowings airline between Berlin and Stuttgart.

Counsel Arne Bodenstein, one of Accused Raslan's attorneys, filed an objection regarding the use of Accused Raslan's interrogation from 2017 in which Raslan explained where he worked, mentioned information about detainees and was asked about arrests and torture methods. The defence objected to the interrogation being used as testimony because it assumed that Raslan was being interrogated as an accused (as opposed to a witness), and thus no statements from that questioning should be admitted as evidence. Counsel Sebastian Scharmer, a plaintiff attorney, said that the objection was obsolete [no ruling was issued as it was no longer necessary].

Judge Kerber called upon the first witness, and explained to him that he will be questioned both as a witness and a plaintiff.

Testimony of P1 [Name redacted]

The 1st witness was plaintiff [name redacted] referred to as P1 in Trial Monitoring Report #1], a 35-year-old film director. He testified in Arabic with German translation.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

Judge Kerber asked the witness to introduce himself. He testified he was born in [redacted] province to a mother with Kurdish origins and a Syrian father. His father was an Arabic teacher and his mother was a teacher. He has seven sisters and two brothers. He completed his elementary school education in his home village [redacted], and his junior high/preparatory education in a nearby town called [redacted] because there were not many schools in his home village. He went to high school in [redacted].

Judge Kerber said that she was aware that his father had two jobs. P1 explained that his father studied Arabic literature and was active in the political field. He said that his father wrote pieces, but never published anything due to regime oppression and censorship in the 1980s. He stated that members of his family, specifically three uncles, were detained. He said that this forced his father to collect everything he wrote, burn it and bury the ashes in the house's yard to protect the family. The Witness mentioned that his father switched to teaching, but then left it as his father felt that he was not able to change anything within the community. He said this made his father become depressed, which affected the whole family. He stated that his father's decision to burn his writings and switch professions was needed to save the lives of his family members, and not get involved or entangled with the "criminal" regime.

Judge Kerber asked P1 to explain his father's work in sales. He testified that his father became a dealer in car replacement parts and sanitary ware parts in the town of Khan As-Subul خان السبل.

Judge Kerber asked P1 about his fields of study. He said that he switched between multiple fields of study. He said he first studied law, then switched to acting at the high institute of the dramatic arts, where he was advised by one of his teachers to study film directing. Judge Kerber asked him where he studied directing, and he said Lebanon. He mentioned that he wanted to specialize in cinema, so he went to France to study in English.

P1 also stated that he studied in France for three years. Judge Kerber stated that P1's academic journey lasted for a long time, and she asked him if he served his military service. He replied that he did not serve in the military. He said that he went back to Syria in 2005 or 2006, and applied multiple times for "open learning" [an education program in Syria that allows a wide array of people to enroll in classes. Many men used the program to delay their military service]. He said he always tried to register in universities so he would not join the army and that his family suffered from the Syrian army as it detained family members. Judge Kerber asked him to elaborate further on his education history. He said that he studied media for 3 years, but did not graduate.

Witnesses involvement in the 2011 protests and 1st detention

He testified that at the beginning of 2011, public movements began in Egypt and Tunisia. He added that him and his friends believed that this type of movement would reach Syria sooner or later, and it did on March 15, 2011. Judge Kerber asked him about his experiences in 2011. He mentioned that he took his camera and went to the streets on the first day, where there were short demonstrations. P1 said that he tried to film the demonstrations to inform the world what was happening in Syria. He testified that his filming included footage of how demonstrators were shot at, showed that tear gas was used, that people were beaten with batons, and how individuals at demonstrations were arrested and kidnapped. P1 added that later (he said he did not recall exactly when) he installed a camera in a taxi with the taxi driver's consent during a Friday demonstration in Al-Midan الميدان in Damascus. P1 said they drove through right when security forces attacked the demonstration. He added that shooting occurred. P1 stated that all his films were confiscated after he was arrested in Al-Khatib Branch.

In response to a question from Judge Kerber, P1 also testified that he was detained twice.

According to P1, the first time was at the end of March 2011. He said he was in Dahiyat Harasta ضاحية حرستا [Harasta suburb/outskirts], part of Al-Ghouta, الغوطة but the regime calls it Dahiyat Al-Assad. ضاحية الأسد. He stated that he was in an internet café with one of his friends before he was abducted. He answered that he was detained for a total of two months—he was first detained for one month in the Air Force Intelligence branch, and then he was transferred and detained for another month in another department. He testified that the Harasta Air Force Intelligence abducted him from the café and he was beaten on the way to the branch. He stated that he was fiercely hit by a sharp object (he said he was not sure what the object was, but assumed that it could be a razor) on his face and the back of his neck. He continued and stated that when he arrived to the Air Force Intelligence branch, he was blindfolded and was hit on his face. He said he was not sure how many people were there, but he was certain that there was more than one person. He alleged that the beating was fierce and grave; as a result, he said he could hardly breathe for several days. P1 said that he was taken inside [the building] and went down a number of steps, where he was prostrated on the ground and was beaten by hard and sharp objects.

This was during his first detention. P1 said that there was someone who was killed there as a result of torture and children under ten-years-old.

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's attorneys, intervened and asked P1 if he saw this occurring during the night. Judge Kerber did not allow for questioning and said that questions will be asked later.

Second detention in Branch 251

Judge Kerber asked P1 about the second detention. He said that he was arrested due to materials he had filmed; he said he had a lot of filmed footage. He stated that he received information from a friend that "they" will continue chasing him and that he should be careful. Subsequently, he said he packed his stuff and a lot of his filmed material. He asked his friends if his name was distributed on checkpoints or was on the "wanted list," and his friends said no. He added that at this point, he left Dahiyat Harasta ضاحية حرسنا and moved to Mazzeh Sheikh Sa'd مزة شيخ سعد. He stated that there were demonstrations emerging from a mosque near his place of residence, several people were detained, and the area close to him was raided. He stated that the detainees' heads were covered by their t-shirts and people dressed in army clothes were beating them. He noted that it was a swift operation. P1 testified that his friend gave him a ride to the airport, and following his security check in the airport, a person summoned him. He said that this person and a few others took him to an empty corner, arrested him and covered his head with his t-shirt. He stated that they went upstairs and walked in a hallway before entering a room, where he found his two suitcases open and his stuff rummaged. He stated that they took his hard disk drives, and sorted his film material and his clothes. He said there was a computer that connected his hard drives and played his film materials.

Judge Kerber asked P1 when that was, but he said that he could not remember precisely. He said he could estimate since he remembered he spent his birthday (September) in prison. Judge Kerber told P1 that during a prior questioning, he said that it was in October. P1 replied and said it was in August and not in October, because he spent September entirely in the Al-Khatib Branch.

P1 continued his testimony of his second detention and said that he was transferred to another location, where the person in charge asked him why he was filming demonstrations and which part of intelligence services he was working for. He said the beating then started and lasted for about one–two hours. Afterwards, P1 was transferred via car, where he was also beaten. He testified that there were three other people in the car—one in the front, one on his right and another on his left. He said he used to have long hair, and they were pulling his hair and trying to pull his hair out. He added that one of the persons on his side told the one in the front that he wanted to take some hair. Additionally, he said his head was pushed downwards until he could not breathe, and they were trying to harm him with a sharp object on the back of his neck.

Judge Kerber asked P1 to clarify if the beating occurred in the first or second detention, and P1 answered that it occurred in both.

Judge Kerber asked P1 where he was taken, and he said that he did not know because he could not see around him. He said the car arrived at an unknown location, where he went upstairs and was put in a corridor. He stated that after a while, another detainee came and both he and P1 were prostrated on the floor. P1 said he talked to the detainee and asked him if he knew where they were. He stated the detainee told him that they were in the information branch [branch 255, one of the branches of the General Intelligence Directorate]. P1 said that he asked the other detainee how could he know, and the detainee answered that he was a taxi driver, was giving someone a lift and suspected the passenger could be a member of the security forces. The taxi driver told P1 that the passenger was criticizing the regime and the taxi driver did not defend the regime. Consequently, the security forces member [the passenger] forced the taxi driver to go to the Branch.

P1 said that afterwards, he was taken to a person in charge, who gave P1 a paper and a pen and told him to write down the names of all people P1 was allegedly working with and who P1 was filming material for. P1 said that he told the person the material was for himself, not for someone else. P1 testified that they started to beat him on his face and his lower limbs' muscles. He said he stayed there for about two and a half days, was then transferred by car (where he was also beaten) and arrived to another location, where he stayed for about two days. P1 said he was then transferred again by a car, where he was also beaten, to another location. P1 said he was not placed in a cell, but rather in an office. He said that after that, he was taken to Al-Khatib. When he arrived there, P1 said they pulled him down from a microbus, insulted and swore at him, beat him and went downstairs. He said that individuals at the branch also stole his mobile phone and his luggage so he was there without his belongings but with his passport. P1 testified that people were being beaten and tortured in an inner yard at the branch. P1 said that he was told to keep his head down, he was highly afraid and the screaming was horrifying. He stated that they beat him, took him to a shared cell and his body was smashed and broken.

Judge Kerber asked if the beating was with hands or with tools. P1 stated that the beating was committed via hands during his transportation between locations, while both sticks and hands were used at the Branch.

Judge Kerber asked P1 about the shared cell. P1 said that people were all over each other in a shared cell. P1 testified that there was a person at the corner, who seemed to be about 80 to 90 years old. P1 said that this man called P1 and told him to sit knees to the chest [P1 demonstrated the sitting position to the courtroom]. P1 stated there were also people standing. He added that the elderly man asked multiple prisoners to stand up and give some space to P1 so he could sit down. P1 said multiple prisoners were summoned on the first day, one of whom was a 14-year-old child. After a few hours, P1 said the child was brought back to the cell and his legs were bleeding, and some prisoners tried to stop the bleeding. He testified that there were prisoners, whose leg wounds were festering, and he could see through their faces that they were mistreated and were not capable of moving. P1 said that there were many elderly prisoners and a child. P1 stated that he was not summoned on the first two days. He said that prisoners were summoned on a daily basis; some were summoned and returned while others were summoned and did not return, but rather newcomers entered the cell. He testified that when the prisoners returned, he could see the signs of beating and torture on their bodies and backs like in movies, and he stated that he could not even describe how horrible their condition was.

P1 testified that on the second or third day (he said he was not sure), he was taken to the interrogation. He stated that he was blindfolded, but was able to see from underneath because the blindfolds were made out of a cheap material. On his way to his interrogation, he said that he saw people being tortured. He said that some people were lying on the floor and were being tortured, and others were lying on the floor and were not moving. He stated that he was not sure if they were dead.

Judge Kerber asked P1 which floor the interrogation was conducted, and P1 said that he did not know because he was underground. Judge Kerber asked P1 if he was taken upstairs for the interrogation; P1 said that he always stayed in the underground level.

P1 stated that in the interrogation room, he sat down with his head facing down and there was a person in front of him sitting on a chair with no table between them. P1 said that the person crossed his legs (P1 said he wanted to show P1 that he was relaxed and prideful). P1 said the person spoke with him, did not remove his blindfold and told him that he knows that P1 is a director (P1 felt that the person was feeling powerful at that moment). P1 said that he lifted his head up and saw the person's face. The person was wearing shoes, a formal uniform and a tie. P1 stated that he glanced at a mole and did not know or see that person previously. P1 said that he kept note of the interrogator's mole as his mother had multiple moles and used to tell him that these were fulfilled wishes. P1 said that the person lowered P1's head down and asked P1 whether he saw him.

Judge Kerber asked P1 how he could have seen the interrogator's face when he was blindfolded. P1 answered that he saw him when he lifted his head up, before the interrogator lowered his head down. Judge Kerber asked P1 if he meant that he saw from underneath the blindfold, and P1 affirmed.

The Court took a five-minute break.

Judge Kerber asked P1 to clarify his reference to the mole as P1 did not mention the mole during his prior questioning in Germany. P1 said that he was exhausted at the questioning in Germany; it lasted too long (about 7 hours) and he said he was working on the montage phase of his very tough film at the time. P1 stated that he did mention the features of the interrogator's face during the questioning in Germany, and added that he did not mention details, because he was planning to forget everything during his stay in Germany. P1 said his questioning in Germany began at around 11:30 a.m. (he said he was not sure, but it was daytime), and there were breaks. He said he arrived in Germany after 12 hours of travelling on the previous day. He said his questioner in Germany was wearing a clean white shirt, which P1 said he could not forget, due to the prisoners' abysmal conditions in Syria. P1 testified that though these are small details, they are related to human dignity, which was the reason he left Syria and which is what the German constitution expresses in its first article.

Judge Kerber asked P1 to go back to what happened to him during his second detention. P1 said that the interrogator talked to a person, asked him what P1's profession was, and that person answered that P1 was a cinema director. He stated that another person behind the interrogator said, "this man is specialized in artists" [apparently telling P1 to get ready as this investigator is specialized for artists] like him]. P1 said that the person in the back was speaking with the interrogator using a low tone, which made P1 feel that the interrogator in front of him had a higher rank. P1 stated that the person in the back did not address the interrogator with a name or a title, and P1 believed that it was on purpose to not let him know the interrogator's identity. He said the interrogator continued asking P1 questions about his personal life to confirm P1's identity. P1 stated the interrogator then asked him who he was filming the footage for, told him they knew everything and that P1 should not lie. P1 mentioned that the interrogator told him he has all the power to do whatever he wanted with P1 to get answers. P1 stated that he told the interrogator that he personally filmed and recorded the footage. He said the interrogator asked if someone helped him and P1 answered negatively (P1 told the court that he did not want to embroil anyone with him). P1 said the interrogator asked him which external parties he was dealing with, and P1 told the interrogator that he was a director and working on a film. The interrogator asked him "against the government?" and P1 did not respond (he told the court that he knew that they already knew everything, so it did not make sense to answer that question). P1 stated that the interrogator told him "don't answer" (in a threatening way). P1 said that he tried to raise his head up, but his head was lowered down again without being beaten. P1 said that cursing, beating and torturing were occurring around him. According to P1, it was as if he was being told that this is what would be happen to him, as the interrogator was letting him hear the sounds of torturing and the screams by taking pauses of silence.

Judge Kerber asked if the surrounding torturing, beating and screams were happening in the same room. P1 explained that the rooms were open towards each other and there was an open area behind him. P1 said that sounds were coming from every direction, and torture and interrogations were being conducted around him. P1 said that the interrogator asked him if he liked the President, and P1 responded that he did not know what to answer, because his film footage already answered the question and any answer from him would not help. P1 answered that he did not like the people around him [the President]. P1 mentioned that the interrogator did not respond to his answer, continued to ask if P1 had relations to the committees in Aleppo, Idlib and Damascus, and demanded the names of individuals P1 was dealing with inside and outside of Syria. P1 said he told the interrogator that it was for a film, it had nothing to do with anyone inside or outside of Syria, and that he was not dealing with any intelligence party. P1 said that the interrogator asked him if he was a French or American agent. P1 said that he was immediately afraid when the interrogator asked him that question [it seemed P1 was afraid to be accused of being a traitor], and he told the interrogator that he was a director and worked alone. P1 said that the interrogator told him again, "don't answer" (in the same threatening way). P1 said that the interrogator then called a person to "come here." P1 said he was then taken to the open area, where he was prostrated on the floor among the other people and they began to beat him. P1 said that he did not hear if the interrogator ordered anything, but the beating on the floor began only a moment after his interrogation. P1 said other interrogations occurred and after that specific one, he was taken to the solitary confinement cell.

Judge Kerber asked if the same interrogator conducted the other interrogations. P1 answered that he could guess from the interrogator's voice, clothes and shoes, but he was not 100% certain.

Judge Kerber asked how he went to the solitary confinement cell, and P1 answered that there were small stairs. He added that there were two other solitary cells, then stairs, a toilet and a hallway that leads to the interrogation rooms.

Judge Kerber asked how P1 identified Accused Raslan. P1 said that before his interrogation, he was in the shared cell. He said that prisoners in the shared cell used to share names of interrogators and information. P1 mentioned that he used to know some names but cannot recall them anymore. He said that a prisoner in the shared cell told him about the features of the person who interrogated him, and that Accused Raslan might interrogate P1. P1 added that he was not able to recall details until he got out of the prison, where he began to link the events and experiences he went through. P1 said he saw photos of Accused Raslan before Accused Raslan's arrest and after Raslan became part of the opposition. P1 mentioned that he saw the photo where Accused Raslan was wearing a suit, had a mole and said that it was the face of his interrogator.

Judge Kerber read out what P1 said during his questioning in Germany. She read "I went to him on the third day and he told me that he was Anwar Raslan, the head of the branch." Judge Kerber added that in a previous questioning, P1 answered that he was sure he did not go to the shared cell after that interrogation. Judge Kerber said through these statements, P1 had discrepancies with what he stated previously. P1 stated that he was sure that he went to the solitary cell after the interrogation, but he was not certain if he went to the shared cell prior to going to the solitary cell. He said that he did not sleep in the shared cell that day. He said that it could be that he was brought to the shared cell and stayed there for few hours, before he was taken to the solitary cell. P1 said he was not sure.

Judge Kerber asked if the guards were addressing the interrogator with "Sidi" سيدي [sir/my master]. P1 answered that he did not remember. Judge Kerber asked P1 if there were breaks during the interrogation, and he said no.

Questioning about interrogation methods

Judge Kerber asked P1 about his status after being interrogated. P1 alleged that he was beaten by a cable (he said he does not know its type) on his back and legs during his interrogation. He also stated that they attempted to place pressure on his anus with a fairly hard object. Judge Kerber asked if this was only an attempt, or if the object was placed inside. P1 said that because he was wearing underwear, only part of the object was placed inside.

Judge Kerber asked if the interrogator was present at that time. P1 answered that he did not know, but they were asking him the same questions and were telling him that he must speak.

Judge Kerber asked whether it took place in the same interrogation room, P1 said no as it was in the open interrogation area. He said that his hands were cuffed behind his back with a cable.

Judge Kerber asked P1 whether he was tortured through Shabh شبح. P1 said that throughout the six days, constant torture occurred either daily or every other day, and Shabh occurred on the last day with a cable. Judge Kerber mentioned that it was claimed [Accused Raslan stated this on Trial Day #5, May 18] that there was no place to hang the cable. P1 said that there was a wall, but he did not look upwards and he could not accurately say where it was precisely hanged. P1 stated that whoever could build such a prison for torturing would be able to find a way to tie up the cables. Judge Kerber asked how long Shabh lasted, and P1 said that it lasted for a long period of time. He stated that he remembered having so much pain and still had difficulties in his legs and toes.

Judge Kerber asked if P1 recalled if the introduction of the object mentioned earlier occurred in the Shabh position. P1 said no, as he was on the floor when that occurred. Judge Kerber asked if the object entered inside, and P1 answered that they attempted more than once and when he has on the floor, he felt it inside. He said that this incident injured him and he spent five-six months recovering.

Judge Kerber asked if the beating targeted certain areas of the body. P1 responded that he was beat on his lower limbs and across the body with the cable, as well on his upper limbs and back. He stated that beating was indiscriminately done across the body. He added that there was Falaqa فَلَاقَة [beating the victim on the soles of their feet with a baton, whip or another object], punching and kicking.

Judge Kerber asked how often that person interrogated him, and P1 answered more than three times. Judge Kerber affirmed that P1 stated the same during his questioning in Germany [by the investigator].

Judge Kerber asked if the interrogator was present during the Shabh, and P1 said that he did not know. Judge Kerber further asked what types of torturing methods were used in the interrogator's presence. P1 said that there were beatings and Shabh, but he did not know if the interrogator was present and he did not directly hear him during the torture.

Judge Kerber asked about the torturing methods in the shared cells. P1 said that food was rotten, unhealthy and inedible; the prisoners ate it because they had no other options. He said that in the shared cell they used to drink from the toilet. P1 stated that the solitary cell had harsher conditions for water, food and toilet as there was only one meal per day which consisted of a few olives, potato and a piece of bread that was mouldy. P1 said he could choose between either getting the mouldy piece of bread and the potato, or the mouldy piece of bread with three olives.

Judge Kerber asked about sleeping conditions. P1 said that in the shared cell he used to sleep sitting while others stood. In the solitary cell, P1 said he used to bend himself to sleep. Judge Kerber asked if P1 used to sleep on the bed or on the floor, and he said the floor. Judge Kerber asked P1 how big was the solitary cell, and P1 described it visually using the courtroom as a measurement guide. Judge Kerber said that, according to P1's description it was 80 x 80 cm, and P1 affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked about the toilets' condition. P1 said that there was no toilet in the solitary cell and if he had the urge to use the restroom, he used to knock on the door. He said the guards would come, but they did not take him to the restroom; instead, they would beat him.

Judge Kerber asked if water was available, and P1 said no. Judge Kerber asked how often he used to drink water. P1 said that when he used to go to the restrooms, he used to drink from the toilet. He said that prisoners could only drink until the guards counted to five.

Judge Kerber asked about the air ventilation, and P1 said that the health condition was bad. P1 alleged that no one with respiratory problems would be able to withstand the air there. He added the air was filthy, smelled like blood and mould, and breathing was difficult.

Judge Kerber asked if P1 saw corpses in the cell. P1 answered that there were prisoners who were near death and suffering, and could die in a week. He added that prisoners had ulcers in their feet and bodies, disfigurement on their faces, fractured bones and respiratory diseases. However, he said he did not see corpses in the shared cells. He added that when he used to be taken out in the hallway, he used to see incapacitated people.

Judge Kerber asked how long he stayed in the branch, and P1 answered about two – three months; he said he was certain that he spent his birthday there.

P1 said he was then transferred to the General Intelligence Directorate. P1 said he was released in mid 2012 or July 2012, but he said he was not exactly sure.

P1 also said he was still having problems in his upper limbs' muscles, which became aggravated [by recalling all the events for trial].

Judge Kerber asked if P1 was still receiving treatment. P1 said that he was in treatment recently, but due to COVID-19 and his move to Berlin, his treatment ceased as his therapist was in Copenhagen. Judge Kerber asked if the treatment was over, and P1 said that it was on hold because of COVID-19. He added that that experience caused him daily psychological damage and put him in a state of distrust against people, made anxious about being abducted, and lead to memory problems.

Hannes Linke, one of Accused Al-Gharib's attorneys, asked P1 if this affected his long-term memory. P1 answered that sometimes he has to exert effort to remember. P1 added that he became nervous at work occasionally. P1 said the films he made included harsh scenes, and thus, he was slow in accomplishing his work and faced fears and anxiety due to the footage he worked on. He said this was contrary to his filmmaking experience prior to being detained.

A lunch break was set until 01:30 p.m.

Questioning by the Judges

Judge Wiedner referred to P1's second detention and asked P1 where he wanted to travel before his second arrest. P1 said that he wanted to travel to Dubai as he could stay with relatives there and work.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was renowned in Syria, and P1 answered that several of Syrian newspapers mentioned the films he was preparing. Judge Kerber asked what was the film's topic, and P1 answered it was a documentary about immigrant and displaced people coming into Damascus.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he had anti-government sentiment at that time. P1 said yes but said it was not declared, because Syrians cannot do that [i.e., criticize the government openly]. He added that he was not affiliated with any party or group, and that he was independent.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was asked about his films during the interrogation. P1 said that he was asked who he is making these films for, and if these parties were demanding specific things.

Judge Wiedner referred back to P1's statement that he was transferred to different locations until he arrived at Al-Khatib Branch (following being detained in the airport). Judge Wiedner asked P1 how he knew it was Al-Khatib Branch. P1 answered that he knew from the prisoners inside the shared cell as they talked about the prison, the interrogators and the torture.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 what he was wearing during the interrogation. P1 answered that the interrogator was wearing shoes, classic pants, a suit, a white shirt and a tie. Judge Wiedner clarified and said they meant what was P1 wearing. P1 said that he was wearing pants [underwear]. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he kept the same wardrobe throughout the detention period, and P1 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P1 stated that there was more than one interrogation and asked him about the intervals between them. P1 answered that there were days in between interrogations. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was mistreated during these intervals, and P1 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were any physical signs left after the torture or beating, and P1 answered that he had only psychological problems and nightmares left. Judge Wiedner asked if P1 had signs on his body, and P1 said that he had one on his leg, but it had been a long time since he got the mark and it was not clear. Judge Wiedner clarified that they meant if he had wounds during the imprisonment period, and P1 answered that he had wounds on his legs, bruises on his thigh and an anal fissure.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 whether he was able to walk in spite of his leg wounds. P1 answered that he was struggling and was forced to walk. Judge Wiedner asked if the guards noticed that, and P1 said he did not know. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was limping, and he affirmed.

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P1 stated that the interrogator did not hit him and P1 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 whether he noticed changes in Accused Raslan's features. P1 said Accused Raslan's face changed and that Accused Raslan looked very tired. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he believed that Accused Raslan is the same person who interrogated him. P1 answered that he is about 60 – 70 % sure because he did not see him directly, but rather glanced at some features from underneath the blindfold. He added that when he saw Accused Raslan in the courtroom, he could say that he is certainly the same person.

Judge Wiedner asked if P1 talked with the prisoners, and P1 affirmed. Judge Wiedner asked if they talked about Accused Raslan, and P1 affirmed. Judge Wiedner asked P1 what they said about Accused Raslan and if they described him. P1 said that Accused Raslan was described as short who wears a suit and talks slowly when he starts to interrogate. P1 added that they said that one will be tortured with him and that he has moustache. P1 said that more descriptions of Accused Raslan were shared, but he only recalled those descriptions at that moment.

Judge Wiedner asked if the other prisoners said that Accused Raslan tortured them. P1 answered that they did not state that he directly tortured them, but they stated that "you will be tortured after he interrogates you."

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he searched for information about Accused Raslan after his release. P1 said no and said that he tried to forget. He added that the [Syrian] community is not as open and he did not want to be attacked, abused or bullied for the experiences he endured, specifically rape. He said that he was able to reconcile with himself what happened after about five years, and he saw a psychiatrist during that period.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he heard that Accused Raslan moved to the opposition. P1 said that when he knew about that, he was not interested as he had no faith in the opposition and said that the opposition could not do anything. P1 alleged that many opposition members were working with the regime and some of them stuck to partisan ties. P1 said he was independent.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 when was the first time he saw Accused Raslan's picture. P1 answered that he was reading the news on the internet around 2015 – 2017. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was able to recognize Accused Raslan and P1 answered: yes, immediately. P1 said that when he saw the picture, he matched it with the image in his head of the person who interrogated him, and they were the same person. P1 said that as a Syrian, he knew that some people who used to work with the regime became part of the opposition to establish a good image about themselves [they were acting good].

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was interrogated more than once, and P1 affirmed. Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogation occurred in the basement, and P1 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he could recall the furniture and the equipment in the interrogation area. P1 said that he was blindfolded and was not able to glance at anything.

Judge Wiedner told P1 that he mentioned that there was a desk and the interrogator was sitting on a chair. P1 denied that he mentioned a “desk”, but rather said it was a “table.” He added that he glanced at a table, but did not recall the details as his head was lowered down whenever he tried to raise it up. P1 said that at the moment, he cannot recall the details of the room’s equipment.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if there was a different room where he was mistreated. P1 said that there was a space outside in the hallway. Judge Wiedner asked if P1 meant “space” to be like a yard, and P1 clarified that it was a space inside the building and there was a pillar there. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if all of that was in the basement. P1 affirmed and said that he did not know that there was a ground or other floor. He said that he only knew that he was in prison downstairs.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if his job as a director was mentioned during the interrogation. P1 said that the interrogator mentioned it and expanded his questioning to P1’s associations, relations and political orientations.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if the interrogator was aware of P1’s work, and if the interrogator asked him direct questions about it. P1 affirmed and said that he could understand that the interrogator was aware from the way he was conducting the interrogation. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if they talked about certain films and people. P1 said the questions were particularly about previous films and the film he was working on at the time. P1 said that the interrogator was focusing on the footage and how it was financed. P1 stated that as a Syrian filmmaker, he did not work with the artists association in Syria so they used to seek financing from Europe, as it was the only way to make films and avoid government propaganda.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was assaulted when he did not answer a question. P1 said that when he did not answer a question, the interrogator used to tell him “don’t answer” (P1 described this as a veiled threat). Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he received a direct threat when he did not answer, and P1 stated that the interrogator insinuated once that P1 would not be able to see life outside the prison again. P1 added that the interrogator did not torture him personally.

Judge Wiedner referred to P1 statement that he was not personally tortured or directly threatened by the interrogator, and asked P1 if the interrogator ever told him that he was not satisfied with his answers. P1 said that the interrogator did not tell him that he was not satisfied with his answers, but he told P1 that he has all the capabilities to extract answers. P1 added that the guards were able to behave as they want, and in some moments, there were no guards around.

Judge Wiedner mentioned that during his questioning in Germany, P1 stated that Accused Raslan had a long list of guards that he could use. P1 said that he told the police during his questioning in Germany that the interrogator told him that he has all the power to extract answers from him, but he did not personally state that he got a long list of the guards. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if the interrogator directly told him that he has the power to extract answers from him, and P1 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner referred to how P1 stated that his hands were injured, and P1 answered that it was due to the torture. Judge Wiedner asked P1 what happened. P1 said that his hands were tied with plastic straps, tightened to its maximum and sometimes multiple straps were used. P1 said that these straps were used to cease blood flow and compress the nerves. P1 added that beating on the forearms also caused harm to his hands.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if there was healthcare in the branch. P1 said no and that the branch's only practice was torture until a prisoner lost consciousness. P1 stated that if one was lucky, one could get healthcare from other prisoners. P1 added that there was not even an attempt to show some kindness.

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P1 stated that they used to drink when they used to go to the WC, and asked P1 if there was a basin there. P1 explained that the prisoner had one of two options: either drink water or use the toilet. He said that if one chose to use the toilet, then he does not have the right to drink from tap water, so he had no choice but to drink from the toilet.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 how big the shared cell was, and P1 answered that the police asked him that in the questioning, and he told them that he did not know how big it exactly was but it was approximately 30m<sup>2</sup>.

Judge Wiedner asked how many prisoners were there. P1 said that he could only estimate as he did not count the prisoners in the shared cell. He estimated they were 200–300 prisoners. He added that this was not an accurate number, because some prisoners sat down.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he faced despair or feared death. P1 answered that he had the feeling that he was going to be executed and was hoping that it would come quickly, as the torture was intense and seeing people in that state of being was not easy. P1 said that he used to communicate with the prisoner next to him by knocking. The prisoner had two little girls and was from Al-Ghouta. P1 did not know why that prisoner was detained, but the prisoner mentioned that he was taken when he was gathering people for a demonstration. P1 said he told the prisoner that he was a film director and captured footage, including footage of the President's picture falling down. The prisoner told P1 that he will be executed [because of that] and P1 felt that was going to happen.

Judge Kerber asked if the solitary cell contained windows, and P1 said that there were two in the cell door. Judge Kerber mentioned that P1 stated that there was a window in the cell. P1 clarified and stated that by "window," he meant the door's vision panel and a service hatch at the bottom of the door. Judge Kerber asked if there was light in the cell, and P1 said no and it was dark.

The Court issued a ten-minute break.

Questioning by Senior Prosecutor Jasper Klinge

Senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge asked P1 how he was released after his first detention. P1 stated that he got help from the lawyers [name redacted] [P2] and [name redacted]. P1 was set to be tried in Duma.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P2 had something to do with P1's second release, and P1 said that several lawyers were involved, including P2.

Prosecutor Klinge mentioned that a release certificate was included among the documents P1 handed in when he applied for asylum. Klinge asked if this document related to the first or the second release. P1 said that he did not remember since he handed in many documents, and that it depended on the type of the document Klinge was referring to. The release certificate was shown via the projector showing the release date of February 20, 2012. Judge Kerber mentioned that P1 previously state a different release date, and asked P1 if the one on this document is correct, and P1 confirmed.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he had to sign any document when he was released. P1 answered that he had to sign that page [the release certificate] in addition to another blank one. P1 added that he had signed more blank pages when he was in the Branch.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 about his arrival at Al-Khatib Branch. P1 said that when he arrived at Al-Khatib Branch, his head was covered with his t-shirt and he was beaten. Klinge asked if the beating was inside the branch and P1 replied that it occurred at the outside yard/space. Klinge asked how long the beating lasted and P1 said he was not sure, but it lasted minutes. Klinge asked if tools were used, and P1 said rifles and fists were used for the beating. P1 also mentioned that his head's hair was pulled. Klinge asked how many people were involved in the beating and P1 said that they were multiple people.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P1 had to take off all of his clothes and be naked. P1 answered that at first, he had to be completely naked but he was then allowed to wear his pants [underwear]. Klinge asked P1 if he was frisked while he was naked and P1 affirmed. Klinge asked P1 to depict what happened. P1 said that the person started to inspect his entire body, then ordered P1 to spread his legs apart and held P1's inner part of his leg with his hand, then moved his hand downwards then upwards.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 how the guards addressed him. P1 said he was called by his name when he was in the shared cell, and by his number when he was in the solitary cell. Klinge asked P1 what his number was, and P1 said he did not want to say as it would not be accurate. Klinge asked if other prisoners had numbers and P1 affirmed.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he heard the name Caesar, and P1 answered he heard about it only after Caesar defected. Klinge asked P1 if the regime was known for that [photographing corpses], and he said that he did not know before he researched it. Klinge asked P1 if he found something while researching. P1 said that he tracked stories of people who died under torture and found out they were given a number that was related to the Branch they were in and another number placed on their corpse. P1 stated that additional numbers and symbols were added on the corpses. Klinge asked if there were corpses from Al-Khatib branch among Caesar photos. P1 affirmed and said that he was working on a film about it.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if the guards used to jump around on the detainees' bodies when they were prostrated on the floor. P1 said that he forgot about that and only remembered it after Klinge mentioned it.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 what kind of torture he was subjected to. P1 mentioned Shabh and deprivation of water, food and toilet use. Klinge asked P1 if he heard from other detainees that Shabh was used, and P1 affirmed and said that prisoners in the shared cell mentioned that it was used.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he and the other prisoners used to talk and if so, what they would talk about. P1 said that they used to talk daily about torturing methods and if someone disappeared, they used to predict how he disappeared. Klinge asked P1 if he got the impression from the rest of the prisoners that Shabh was a standard method of torture. P1 answered that according to his talks with prisoners in the shared cells, Shabh was a routine torture method.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P1 was tortured using electro shock, and P1 said that it was used only in the main General Intelligence branch. Klinge asked P1 if he was tortured by it in Al-Khatib branch, and P1 said electric shock existed in Al-Khatib, but it was not used on him.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he knew about Doolab دولااب [Torture tactic that translates to “tire”]. P1 said that he knew about it, but it was not used with him. Klinge asked P1 if he got information that it was used in Al-Khatib. P1 affirmed and said from the prisoners in the shared cell.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he used to scream and P1 said of course.

Prosecutor Klinge mentioned that P1 stated the torturing location was the open space/area and asked if there were other locations for torturing. According to P1’s knowledge, some guards used to torture prisoners in front of or inside their solitary cell, but he had not been tortured in the solitary cell.

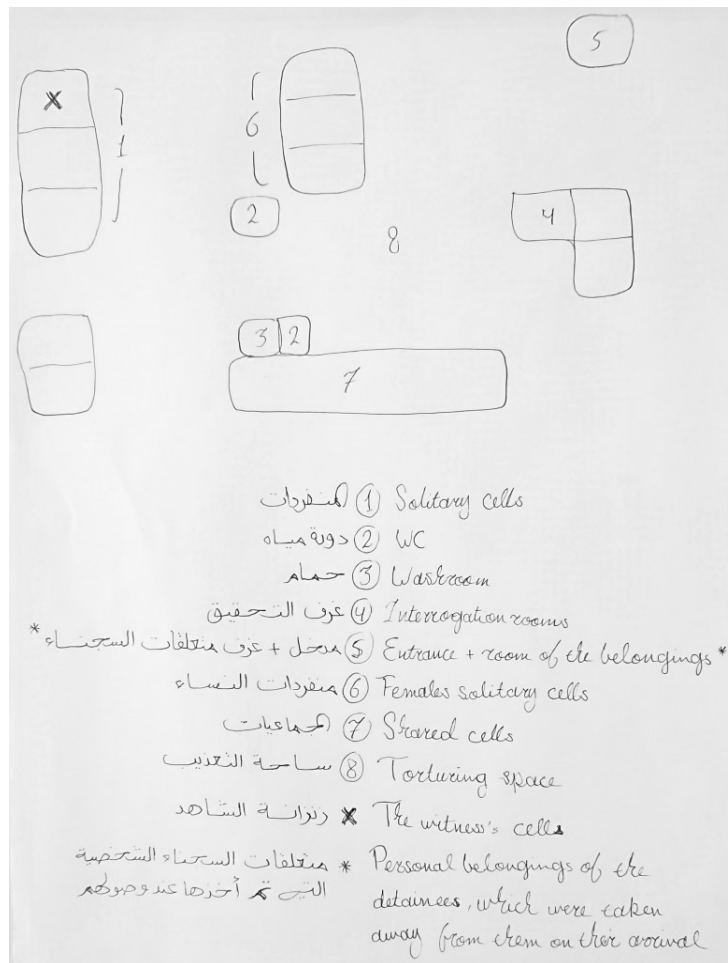

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he saw any children and females. P1 replied that he only heard females and children, but saw one child in the shared cell. Klinge asked P1 if he only heard sounds of females and children being tortured, and P1 affirmed.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if the prisoners in the shared cell used to talk about whether they were sexually mistreated. P1 said that he did not imagine that one would talk about that, because it was a harsh experience to discuss. Klinge asked P1 if he himself talked about it and P1 said no.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 how long he stayed in the shared and the solitary cells. P1 said that he stayed in the shared cell for about around 2 –3 days (from what he remembers) and he spent the rest of his detention period in the solitary cell. Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 which cell was more difficult, and P1 answered that the solitary cell was more difficult as it was complete deprivation and there was no one to speak with.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if cutlery was offered with the meal, and P1 answered that there was a piece of bread and three olives.

A sketch by P1 of the prison was shown via the projector. This is a re-draw of it:

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 if he saw members of the presidential guards or soldiers with uniforms. P1 said no and that he only saw the guards.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P1 to briefly mention how he escaped from Syria in 2012. P1 said that before he was released, a complaint was issued that he was wanted for the military service and therefore, they had the right to detain him until he signed the paper [the release certificate was shown to court] (P1 explained that the paper [the release certificate], was written by "them" and it was not his handwriting). He said that after his release, he went to his village [redacted] to see his family and stayed there for a short period of time. P1 stated that during this time, the regime was conducting a military campaign in that area. P1 said he feared for his family because of his status with the regime, so he left and sneaked into Damascus, avoiding checkpoints. P1 said he stayed in Damascus for around 3 months. After that, P1 testified he left Syria due to threats of re-arrest. He said he arrived in Jordan at night, along with 200 – 300 other Syrian refugees, and stayed in a refugee camp for 4 – 5 days. P1 said one of his Jordanian friends, whom he knew for a while, helped P1 leave the camp. P1 stayed for two months in Amman, and then left to Istanbul. P1 stated that he started to enter Syria and film with the White Helmets, and because of the footage he obtained, he left Turkey (he feared Russia in particular) and escaped to Europe. He applied for asylum in Germany and began the montage of his film about the White Helmets. P1 stated that he tried to forget everything from the past period at that time, because he did not know that he would see Accused Raslan again or that there would be trials related to Syria. Therefore, P1 said he focused on working on his films.

P1 testified that when Accused Raslan was arrested, it was not interesting as he did not believe that something would happen. He said his friends summoned him to testify because they knew that he was detained in Al-Khatib. P1 stated he was hesitant at the beginning, because he was worried that his family may be threatened or harmed. He added that he was also hesitant as he did not think anything will happen and thought that he was dreaming, until he received a letter from the court and gave his testimony with the help of [name redacted]. P1 said that it was not easy as it re-opened wounds that he tried to seal. He said had an intention to forgive Accused Raslan, if the latter confessed to torture, brutality in the branch and that he had the power. However, P1 stated that because Accused Raslan disclaimed the torture, the sexual mistreatment and the beating, he was obliged to testify.

Procedural Matters

Judge Kerber said that the witness will not be dismissed and the session was adjourned to the following day.

Counsel Sebastian Scharmer, plaintiff representative, raised an error in the translation. P1 stated that “prisoners” tried to help the child in the shared cell (to stop the bleeding) after he was tortured, whereas the translation stated that the “guards” tried to help him. The translator Sami Koca explained that both words in Arabic originate from the same stem “سجن” i.e. “imprison.” Judge Kerber asked P1 to repeat his statement, which was retranslated by Koca as “prisoners.”

The proceedings ended at 03:55 pm.

Trial Day 11 – June 4, 2020

There were about 19 spectators and 11 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Judge Kerber asked members of the media to stay inside the courtroom for a bit. She stated that an Arabic media channel took a photo of one of the translators and published it in an article, claiming that it was one of the defendants. Judge Kerber requested the photo to be deleted and asked that if someone knows who published it, to tell the individual to fix this matter. Judge Kerber then dismissed the members of the media.

Testimony of P1, Questioning continues

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was able to recognize Accused Raslan in his questioning in Germany. P1 answered that he was shown a photo array and he recognized Accused Raslan in that line up [the same photo array was shown via the projector in the courtroom]. Judge Wiedner asked P1 if the individual he identified was Accused Raslan, and P1 affirmed. Judge Wiedner asked P1 how certain he was and P1 said he was not 100% certain, but rather 60%.

Transferral and detention in different Branches

Judge Wiedner asked P1 what happened after he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. P1 said that he was transferred to the General Intelligence Directorate in Kafar Sousah كفرسوسة. P1 said that upon the arrival to this branch, there was a “welcome party” for P1 and other prisoners where they were brutally beaten, threatened with weapons on their heads, and the branch’s forces jumped on them while P1 and others were prostrated on the ground. P1 said that after two-three hours, he was brought to the basement, where he was forced to take off all of his clothes. He stated that they went to an open area inside where cold water was poured on them (as they were prostrated on the floor) and they were beaten with cables. Afterwards, P1 said they were ordered to stand up, raise their hands up and face the wall, before they were beaten with cables for one hour. P1 said that the torture was inexpressibly brutal, and mentioned that he became unconscious and almost died.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he saw corpses. P1 said no but he did hear about it from others.

Judge Wiedner asked P1 if he was transferred to another prison afterwards. P1 said that at night, he and other detainees were transported in groups by buses with black-tinted windows. He said they were on the road for three-four hours and that it was completely dark. P1 added that they were blindfolded. He said they got off the busses and entered the state security training camp in Najha نجها, where they were beaten, had their hair shaved off and heard constant shooting in the air.

P1 testified that two weeks later, he was transferred back to Branch 285, where he was tortured. He said he stayed there for 3 weeks, before he was transferred to Adra ادرا prison. P1 said he was transferred to Aleppo for his trial, where he was sentenced for harming the country through his work and for having contacts living abroad. P1 also mentioned that someone from the general intelligence was next to the judge, watching him. P1 said he was brought back to prison. He said that lawyers [name redacted] [P2] and [name redacted] helped to release him, but he also needed to sign many blank pages.

Questioning by Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed, representative for P1

Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed asked P1 how he got from the cell to the interrogation room. P1 stated that he was called by his name in the shared cell, whereas he was called by his number in the solitary cell. Mohammed asked what happened afterwards. P1 said that he was blindfolded and taken to the interrogation. P1 stated that on his way to the interrogation room, he heard voices and saw people lying on the floor (from underneath his blindfold).

Counsel Mohammad asked what happened inside the interrogation room. P1 stated that he used to kneel down and was ordered not to look up. He said that when he was in the cell, the guard used to order P1 to turn around and face the wall so P1 would not be able to see him.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 what was the first thing he heard after entering the room. P1 stated that the interrogator told him that he usually removes the blindfold during the interrogation, but he would not remove it from P1 so P1 would not see him. P1 added that the interrogator had a dreadful aura. P1 said that the interrogator told someone that P1 was a film director, and then a person in the back said that P1 works with artists. P1 said he was asked to explain "artists," and he told them that all directors and writers are "artists."

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 how the interrogator was being addressed. P1 said that the guard who brought him to the room called the interrogator "my master/sir" سيدي. He stated that from the way the interrogator was talking, he felt the interrogator was from a higher rank. Mohammed asked if anything else was said about the interrogator's salutation. P1 said that he did not recall anything else, other than how the guard greeted the interrogator (P1 felt that there was an attempt to cover-up identities).

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 how the interrogator greeted him. P1 said that there was no greeting and the interrogator began directly to ask questions, after he spoke about the blindfold.

Mohammed asked P1 if the interrogator used to say something at the end of the interrogation (e.g. to indicate interrogation ended). P1 said that there was no greeting at the beginning, nor was there a goodbye at the end.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 who accompanied him to the cell. P1 said the guard, but he did not know if it was the same guard or someone else.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if there were instructions or orders given to the interrogator [if the person in the back gave orders to the interrogator] and P1 denied.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if there were severe insults during the interrogation. P1 said that the interrogator used to begin the interrogation "kindly" and then it escalated. However, P1 said that "kind" did not mean that the interrogator was showing human kindness, but rather, it was a type of the kindness that was not expected from guards. P1 said he considered it kindness as the interrogator was speaking without hitting P1. P1 stated that he received insults about himself and his family. Counsel Mohammed asked for examples and P1 mentioned that he was called a traitor to the country, his mother was a whore, his father was a traitor, and that he was a bastard. Counsel Mohammed asked if the insults were coming from the interrogator or the guard, and P1 answered from both.

Counsel Mohammed referred to P1's statement that he saw females and children in prison, and asked if P1 saw them being tortured or saw that they had signs of torture. P1 stated that he used to see torture when he was passing by [accompanied by the guards], but did not personally see children being tortured. However, he said he saw the signs of torture on the child, who was in the same shared cell as him. P1 said that he used to hear screams of females begging and pleading, and could conceive that someone was trying to do something with them. P1 was asked what they were screaming and he answered that he heard "No, No, I beg you sir/my master. May God preserve your children." P1 stated that these screams and sounds were present throughout his detention period in Al-Khatib.

Counsel Mohammed asked if P1's family was threatened. P1 testified that they told him that they would bring his father, mother and siblings. Mohammed asked why would they say such a statement and P1 answered that they said it so he would reveal information. Mohammed asked P1 if the guards or the interrogator said these threats. P1 answered that both put pressure on him. He added that the guards used to threaten him during the torturing or used to come to his cell and ask him "don't you want to speak?"

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if he heard conversations between the guard and the interrogator. P1 said that he did not recall at that moment. He explained that there was huge amount of information that he was trying to remember and needed time to recall all of that. Counsel Mohammed asked P1 about his joints pain, and injuries on his hands and legs. P1 stated that he was constantly suffering from his nerves, hands and legs. He said he visited a doctor in Berlin due to an increase in pain as a result of him struggling to recall events, and the psychological impact that has exacerbated his pain.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if he was exercising. P1 answered that he used to be engaged in sports, but his doctor advised him otherwise.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if he was depressed. P1 affirmed, and said that it was a constant part of his life that he had to cope with. Judge Kerber asked P1 if a psychiatrist diagnosed him or he diagnosed himself. P1 denied being diagnosed by a psychiatrist and said that he used to go to a therapist. He added that he visited a neurologist. Judge Kerber asked P1 if the psychiatrist told him that he was diagnosed as having depression, and P1 said no.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 about his sleep. P1 said that his sleep was poor and that he had constant nightmares about being chased and caught by the police, especially Syrian security.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if he thought about committing suicide. P1 answered that he thought about it several times, but he could not find a method to do it.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 if he would release [name redacted] [P2] from his obligation of breach of secrecy as his former lawyer, and P1 affirmed.

Counsel Mohammed asked P1 about his doctor, and P1 mentioned that he was a neurologist in Berlin.

Counsel Mohammed mentioned that P1 stated that he was afflicted by an injury and underwent surgery due to the sexual abuse he suffered in the prison. Mohammed asked where was the surgery performed, and P1 said Turkey.

Questioning by other Plaintiff representatives

Counsel Sebastian Scharmer recalled that P1 described the interrogator's clothing in Al-Khatib Branch, and he asked P1 if he saw other persons there with similar clothing. P1 said no and stated the guards used to wear comfortable clothes, such as clothes worn in the house.

Counsel Scharmer referred to P1's statement on the previous day that he needs time to recall. Counsel Scharmer asked P1 if he would say that his ability to remember decrease with time. P1 said yes and especially in the current situation [the trial]. P1 then gave an example that he could not sleep the previous day. Scharmer asked if that worsened his mind's ability to recall. P1 affirmed, and said that was because he needed to remember things. P1 mentioned that he had a dream the previous day that his daughter's hand was cut off, and that he could not sleep as he was thinking about his family.

The Court took a ten-minute break.

Counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker asked P1 if his family knew what happened to him. P1 said that when he was abducted from the airport, he disappeared completely and his family had no information about him. He added that his family was shocked that he was still alive.

Counsel Dr. Kroker asked P1 if he could recognize his interrogator's voice if he heard it again. P1 said that he believed so.

Counsel Dr. Kroker mentioned that P1 was asked about other locations of torture in the prison, and asked him to elaborate on that. P1 stated that the guards used to occasionally enter the solitary cells and beat prisoners with cables. He stated that he could hear the cables and prisoners' screams before the sounds stopped when the prisoner fell unconscious. P1 added that he was not able to describe the sounds of beating and screams with mere words, but he would try to one day depict it by the films he would make.

Counsel Dr. Kroker asked Judge Kerber if a voice test was possible. Judge Kerber asked Accused Raslan. Before Accused Raslan replied, Counsel Michael Böcker (Accused Raslan's representative) stated that Accused Raslan was not ready for the voice test, and mentioned that P1 was only 60 – 70 % certain about recognizing the voice.

Counsel Andreas Schulz asked about communications in the cell. P1 stated that in the shared cell, voices were faint and whisper. He said that if someone wanted to communicate with another, he had to be close to him and whisper in his ear. According to P1, conversations were about who would interrogate the newcomers, or who interrogated the old ones. He added that old prisoners told about torture methods and sometimes family topics were addressed.

Counsel Schulz asked if the old prisoners used to provide advice to others. P1 said that old prisoners used to tell newcomers not to talk or raise their voices, not to look at the interrogator if he orders that, how to protect oneself from fatal injuries to avoid death under torture, and not to resist the guards or the interrogator because it would result in him being killed.

Counsel Schulz asked if there were talks about escaping from prison. P1 said that it was advised among the prisoners not to resist or try to act smart, or else one would be executed.

Counsel Schulz asked P1 if he saw non-Syrian personnel in the prison. P1 answered that he could not completely differentiate between people's faces, but people who worked there had Syrian features, according to what he observed from insults and words said by different sects and dialects. He said that he heard Dara'a, Homs and Alawite coastal dialects.

Counsel Schulz asked P1 if he knew whether Accused Raslan did some video interviews in the media (for instance Al-Jazeera). P1 said he did not know, but he heard information that Raslan was uncooperative in helping people after he left Syria. He said that Accused Raslan did not issue an apology statement about his service at the intelligence services. P1 said that it was the least thing that Accused Raslan could have done and it was expected that a man of Raslan's position, who worked in a place with a bad reputation, would issue such statement. P1 stated that he did not hear Raslan's voice after detention [i.e., did not hear Accused Raslan's voice in the media].

Counsel Dr. Anna Oehmichen told P1 that she can imagine how difficult the trial process must be for him. She mentioned that Accused Raslan stated that he did not hit or torture anybody, and he did not order that. Then, she asked P1 whether he believed that such thing as "Raslan did not know about torture" would be possible. P1 answered that his interrogator did not hit him and he did not hear any verbal command of torture from him. However, P1 stated that he was tortured only seconds after the end of the interrogation.

Counsel Dr. Oehmichen asked if the interrogator could be connected to the torture. P1 said that he did not rule out the idea that any person who works at Al-Khatib would be aware of the torture and sexual abuse happening there. Judge Kerber asked P1 if he was stating that the person must have been aware of that. P1 rephrased his answer and stated that he believed that anyone who works in that place is aware of what is happening inside. P1 added that the information was known even outside the branch through released prisoners and those who talked about it.

Counsel Dr. Oehmichen referred to P1's statement that Accused Raslan told him that he had all power to extract answers from him. Dr. Oehmichen asked if Accused Raslan stated that clearly. Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's attorneys, interjected and stated that P1 said "the interrogator" and not "Raslan." Counsel Dr. Oehmichen rephrased the question and said that P1 stated that the interrogator—whom P1 identified later as Raslan—stated that and asked if his interrogator said that clearly. P1 answered that the person's statement was totally clear. P1 said that it meant using all the possible means in Al-Khatib towards prisoners, from torture to killing.

Counsel Manuel Reiger referred to P1's statement that he was tortured after the interrogations in Al-Khatib. Counsel Reiger asked P1 if there were signs of torture or injuries between interrogations that remained visible. P1 stated that when he used to go to the interrogations, it was clear that there were blood, wounds and signs of torture.

Counsel Reiger asked P1 if he was able to differentiate the interrogator's dialect. P1 said that he was not 100% sure, but it was clear that it was a Damascene dialect. Counsel Reiger asked P1 if he would be able to confirm the dialect if the interrogator spoke again. P1 said that he could not affirm that, but noted that it was not an Alawite nor "heavy" dialect. There was discussion between the translator, P1 and the Judges on what a "heavy" dialect is. P1 explained that the interrogator's dialect was not a Bedouin one and gave an example of a Dara'a dialect.

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's defence lawyers, stated that he wanted to address P1's questioning on July 20, 2019, and wanted to know if P1 stated whether the interrogator said that "he was specialized for artists," or if the person in the back said that "this interrogator is specialized in artists.” P1 replied that he did not remember exactly what he said during the questioning, as he was speaking in general and not giving accurate details like he is now. He added that he noticed problematic issues in translating what he had said during his questioning; P1 stated that he did not say that he was tortured in the shared cell, but rather in the open area inside the branch.

Judge Kerber asked P1 if he experienced difficulties with the translation in the courtroom. P1 said that today it was fine, but stated there were mistranslations on the previous day, such as the difference between “guards” and “prisoners.” Judge Kerber asked P1 if he had more examples. P1 said that he said “brutal torture” was mistranslated [the translation was along the lines of “intense”, but our court monitor wrote “brutal” as he heard the Arabic word directly]. P1 said that the translation should describe the brutal expression.

Counsel Böcker mentioned that P1 stated during a prior questioning that he was not tortured on the day of his detention, contrary to what he stated later in the court. P1 said that during the questioning, only one question was asked about this matter and no details were asked about them. However, P1 said that the details he is sharing now are letting him remember and elaborate.

Counsel Böcker asked P1 if he remembered that he gave these answers [in the questioning transcript] and P1 affirmed.

Judge Kerber stated that the questioning was over. When no one had any more questions, P1 was dismissed. P1 said that he wanted to utter a brief statement, but Judge Kerber told him that his questioning was over and he could be dismissed.

The prosecution read out a statement responding to the defence’s objection regarding the application of Accused Al-Gharib's testimony [this was raised on Trial Day #7, May 27]. The prosecution refuted the objection and listed their reasons. The prosecution mentioned that one can incriminate himself during the questioning when one applies for asylum.

Testimony of [name redacted] [P2]

The 2nd witness was [name redacted] [P2], a Syrian human rights lawyer.

Questioning by Judge Kerber

P2 sat in the witnesses’ seats with his attorney Stephan Kuhn. He was introduced as an expert witness.

P2 said he cannot practice his [legal] profession in Germany. P2 said he is the head and founder of a human rights centre in Berlin.

P2 testified that he has been a human rights lawyer since 1986, and decided to become one to defend human rights. P2 said he remained in his profession until he was detained in 2006 and continued until he left Syria in 2014. P2 said he was detained in state security Branch 285 and spent five years in Adra عذرا prison. P2 stated he then returned to Branch 285 for five days, before he was released.

P2 was asked if he had issues with the regime. He answered that it was not an issue, but more about human rights violations. P2 mentioned that the regime has detained his family members since 1977—specifically his three brothers, sister, brother-in-law and sister-in-law. P2 said he was detained in Branch 251 in 1978. He said that in addition to the torture he personally experienced, he became more informed about torture after he was released. Therefore, P2 said he decided to become a lawyer to defend his family members and others whose human rights were violated. P2 stated he became a lawyer in 1986 and his two brothers and his sister were detained again during that same year. He stated that his family spent a total time of 73 years in prison, and for most of that period, his family members were victims of enforced disappearances and nobody knew anything about them. P2 mentioned that his brother was tortured and his hands were paralyzed due to imposition of Shab شبح for periods up to two consecutive weeks.

Judge Kerber asked P2 when his first detention occurred. P2 answered that it was in 1978 in Branch 251. Judge Kerber asked how long it lasted and P2 said one week. P2 explained that he was living in an apartment in Damascus together with his sister. P2 said that “they” raided the apartment at 02:00 a.m. to detain his sister, but she was not home. He said they detained him instead and tortured him to know her location.

Judge Kerber asked P2 about his second detention. He said that it was sometime in 1989 – 1990, and lasted for one or two days in the political security branch. He added he was detained in 1986 in the military security branch for one or two days. Additionally, P2 stated his last detention was in 2006. He said that in the periods between these detentions, he received threats, and would be summoned for daily or weekly visits to the Branch.

Judge Kerber asked about his last detention, and P2 answered that it was in state security management [General Intelligence Directorate] in Branch 285 in Kafar Souseh كفر سوسة.

Judge Kerber asked P2 to speak about his experience. P2 said that he was abducted from the street on May 17, 2006. He said he did not know who abducted him and the “responsible” [i.e. the official] was sitting in the front of the car. P2 said he asked them why they took him; he said they accused him of criminal charges (theft and murder) and put him in cell number 10 or 11 in the branch. P2 said that no one hit him except when he was detained, but they used to get other prisoners out of their cells and torture them there or when they were being interrogated. P2 said they interrogated him at night, while he was blindfolded. He stated that they asked him “Why are you speaking about human rights? What is wrong with human rights?” and P2 answered “Nothing is wrong, they are excellent. The proof is me standing here in front of you.” P2 said he was slapped two times after his answer and was taken back to the cell. He said he declared a hunger (food and drink) strike and spent the whole night with constant torture sounds next to him. He stated that the following morning, he was blindfolded and taken to court by car.

Judge Kerber asked him to elaborate on how he was abducted. P2 stated that he used to drive to his office at 5 – 6 pm. He said his car was in front of the house and he crossed the street for about 20m and reached the car. P2 stated that before he opened his door, a car drove in fast, and two people came out and threw him between the front and back seats. P2 said they sat above him, took his belongings and blindfolded him, before the car drove away fast.

Judge Kerber asked if there was someone in front passenger’s seat. P2 said yes and that person was speaking with him and accusing him. P2 also stated that it was the same person who took him to the interrogation. P2 said that from underneath his blindfold, he saw the legs of one of the persons who hit him and said it was the same person who accompanied him to the court and handed him in to the police there. This same person had to remove P2’s blindfold to give him the ID card and the wedding ring in court. P2 said he was delivered to the same court he used to work in, so he knew all the police officers there. P2 stated that he asked them about the man who handed him in (the person who delivers someone has to sign the release document), and he was told that the person is “Anwar Raslan.” P2 said that he did not remember if Accused Raslan was a major or a Lieutenant colonel then. Afterwards, P2 stated he was transferred to Adra عدرا Prison. He stated that five years after the end of his sentence, he was transferred back to Branch 285 [where he stayed an additional 5 days], but did not see Raslan there.

Judge Kerber asked if the person who was sitting in the front passenger’s seat was the same person who delivered him to court. P2 said that it was the same voice that accused him that he was a criminal. P2 said the voice stayed in his head because he [that voice] accused him with unbelievable accusations.

Judge Kerber asked if the same person was present when he was slapped two times. P2 affirmed and said that it was the same voice that was telling him to go upstairs.

Judge Kerber asked if he could identify the person who hit him, since he was blindfolded. P2 said no.

Judge Kerber acknowledged that P2 stated he was a human rights lawyer and was detained in Branch 285. She asked about his general experience. P2 asked if Judge Kerber meant before or after 2011. She asked P2 to give a brief summary about his experience before 2011, and then elaborate more after that. P2 said that he wanted to explain that detention, torture and enforced disappearances are fundamental to the Assad regime; had it not been for that, the regime would have not endured one year. According to P2, Assad used those practices as a weapon to exhaust the whole nation since the 1970s. P2 said that he knew peaceful people who died under torture or who were detained in 1978 and following the Hama incident. P2 stated that there are still more than 3000 victims of enforced disappearances, and no one knows what happened to them. P2 stated that the regime was intentionally spreading methods of torture to terrorize the whole nation. He also stated that his brothers were members of a communist party in the 1980s and some of them died under torture. P2 said that they [the regime] allege that they were fighting extremists, but they [the regime] were the ones creating them, fighting and killing the society under the pretext of fighting extremists. P2 said that the torture methods and suffering he heard from his siblings, relatives and others whom he defended (including individuals from Iraqi Al-Ba'th party, communists and the [Muslim] brotherhood), he could not imagine that someone here [in court] could imagine what they went through. P2 stated that everyone, who worked in the Syrian security apparatuses, were aware of what was happening, practiced it and benefited from it.

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan’s attorneys, interrupted and stated that they were moving off topic. Counsel Böcker asked for a break to talk with other defence attorneys. Judge Kerber rejected the request and asked P2 to provide short statements starting from 2011. Senior prosecutor Jasper Klinge requested that P2 continue speaking about the 1970s.

P2 stated that his statements were meant to prove that there was systematic torture in Syria. He said that he also wanted to mention that members of the security forces are protected from any crime they commit. Judge Kerber asked him if there is a law that protects them. P2 said that state security law prevents the prosecution from filing a case against any member, contracting party or dealer with state security. Therefore, P2 said that everyone was committing crimes with a clear conscience and was reassured that no one would be prosecuted. P2 added that one would be protected from punishment as long as they carried out orders. P2 said the systematic policy continued until 2011, but before 2011 torture was committed against the opposition to acquire information, whereas after 2011, it was used for revenge. He said they did not care about gathering information anymore as much as they cared for taking vengeance on people who asked for freedom. Judge Kerber asked P2 how he came to that conclusion. P2 said from the testimonies of the individuals he defended. He said that his clients were always asked “do you want freedom?” and their torture continued until death and only for vengeance.

Judge Kerber asked him if there was a difference in the numbers of the detainees. P2 said that he was released from Branch 285 on May 23, 2011, though his sentence ended on May 17, 2011. He said he stayed [an additional] 5 days in Branch 285 and noted that most of the detainees in Branch 285 were transferred from Branch 251. Branch 285 used to detain occasionally, but Branch 251 was the “top” branch that detained. He said that Branch 251 detains, tortures, interrogates, and then transfers. P2 stated that the first three days he was in a shared cell, before “they” noticed that they should relocate him to the solitary cell so he would not talk with anyone. P2 said he saw the detainees’ physical and psychological conditions, in addition to their torture in Branch 285 [P2 meant that individuals used to be detained, interrogated, and tortured in Branch 251 before they were transferred to 285. At Branch 285, he saw their poor condition and saw them being tortured again].

Judge Kerber asked P2 if he talked with the detainees. P2 said that Branch 285 is the central interrogation branch for the state security. He said that Branch 251 belongs to the internal state security and there are 10 branches and 8 additional subunits and divisions in Damascus and rural Damascus that are connected to the Branch. He said that they detained across all provinces, and all of them are under the administration of Branch 251. He said that detainees are transferred to Branch 251 for interrogation. P2 stated that occasionally, 500 detainees were being transferred from all over the country. P2 said that after he was released, he continued his work in defending detainees, which reached the hundreds. P2 said the difference is that there was a chance for the detainees to be transferred to the normal courts and charged for demonstrating in 2011 – 2012, before the court of terrorism was founded in late 2012.

Judge Kerber asked [again] if there was difference in numbers of detainees before and after 2011. P2 said that there was a terrifying difference since there were 3000 – 4000 detainees in Sidnaya صيدنايا and other [prisons] before 2011, and most of them were referred to the state security high court and were sentenced. He stated that after 2011, detentions became daily and the difference in amount is incomparable.

Judge Kerber asked about the torture. P2 said everyone who entered the security apparatuses were tortured. There were “welcome parties.” P2 said the detainee was tortured from the beginning of his detention and on the way to the branch in the car. He stated that when the car arrived [at the branch] they were “welcomed” by a group who beat them brutally, until they reached the cells. P2 testified that “welcome parties” differed from one branch to another. He said that Branch 251 included two residential buildings and because it could be seen from other buildings, the welcome party was swift. He stated that the detainees were beaten while they were running [inside]. P2 stated that they were isolated by walls in Branch 285, and the “parties” could last for a longer period of time and reach one hour.

Judge Kerber asked if one could not be beaten while detained. P2 said never. But P2 noted that mild beating could occur in cases of some old political opposition or well-known activists, whose detention could cause a scene. Additionally, P2 stated that if they were part of the opposition, they could be treated well to get them to join “their” side. He stated that after their release, they would say that they were detained and not tortured.

Judge Kerber asked P2 about the cell and the clothes. P2 explained that in the first five days of the revolution in 2011, he was put in the shared cell for three days. He said the cell measured 5 – 6 x 3 m and there were around 50 – 60 detainees inside. He said that when they slept, one had to lie on his side and not on his back. He said they were adhered to each other during the 3 days and that the detainees knew his name, so they made some space for him in order to lie on his back. However, P2 stated that conditions became inhuman, especially at the end of 2011 and 2012, and he could not describe it as animalistic, because they [the conditions] were even worse.

Judge Kerber asked P2 to describe the conditions. P2 said that there were places where one could not squat. He said that some people used to stand for days and weeks, and some collapsed. P2 testified that the lucky ones were the ones who could support their back on the wall. He said that some people snapped, stopped thinking and acted crazy; some suffocated from the [poor] ventilation; some died and their corpses remained in their places for four days and decomposed. He said there was no health care or treatment; if one sustained a wound, they would contract gangrene after a while. He said that bread used to be served in plastic bags, and prisoners would take these bags to cover wounds. P2 testified that his friend was detained for 27 days in Branch 251 and he saw his friend immediately after his friend was released. P2 stated that his friend’s skin, ulcers and pustules were indescribable. P2 said that his friend told him that 17 people died in his own arms during his 27 days in prison.

Judge Kerber asked P2 about when that occurred, and P2 said that it was in 2011 – 2012, but he could not recall the exact month. P2 said he was certain that it was shortly after he was released.

Counsel Michael Böcker, counsel for Accused Raslan, interrupted saying that he could not understand where P2 was getting his information from and he was confused about the chronology of the plastic bags and P2’s friend’s stories. Judge Kerber explained it to him.

P2 stated that he used to defend accused persons in court. P2 said he used to meet his clients on the way to the court. He said that at the court, they used to wait for their referral from the security branches. P2 further explained that later, they used to visit them [the detainees] in jail, and he did not know many of them. He said that the detainees used to arrive barefooted and wearing underwear. He stated they did not have money did not know how to reach their families if their families were living near Damascus nor did have the possibility to travel to other provinces [if they were from outside Damascus].

Judge Wiedner asked P2 how many persons he took care of [represented]. P2 said hundreds and they reached thousands up to now.

Judge Kerber asked P2 about the food experience in prison. P2 mentioned that the food consisted of bread and potato, and sometimes jam or cream cheese. Judge Kerber asked if the food was sufficient. P2 stated that sometimes the room was full of 50 people and the guards used to come and toss around 20 loaves of bread and 10 pieces of potato.

Counsel Michael Böcker, one of Accused Raslan's attorneys, interrupted and stated that P2 was not giving accurate information in his testimony and it should be disregarded. Counsel Sebastian Scharmer, plaintiff representative objected and told Böcker was acting "cheeky."

P2 stated that his information came from a reality that he witnessed. He said that when a detainee was released, he weighed 40 kg, when he used to be 75 – 80 kg.

Judge Kerber asked P2 if he experienced the story about tossing bread himself. P2 answered that he was given bread and potato. He said he heard the rest from others.

Judge Kerber asked P2 what he knew about Caesar and from where. P2 responded by stating that if an incident occurs involving a military person, then the military police conducts the investigation and documents the corpse. He stated that after the revolution began, many victims died in all branches especially the military ones. P2 said that if he [perhaps the injured party] had a military or a civilian status, the corpses were sent to the military police in Al-Kaboun القابون or to Tishreen military hospital مشفى تشرين العسكري in Harasta. حرستا. P2 stated that the military police's investigation department did not receive an order to stop documenting corpses, as the protocol stated. Therefore, P2 said they took photos of the corpses and archive them, in case the judiciary requested them.

Judge Kerber asked P2 how he knew that. P2 stated that lawyers call the police when an assault is committed by or on a military person. Judge Kerber asked P2 whether he saw photos of the corpses. P2 said that when a case reached the military court, the accused's or the victim's attorney was present there, and these photos were in the case file.

Judge Kerber asked P2 if he himself saw them and whether the victim had identification. P2 said that a friend of him told him that they were occasionally forced to carry the corpses to the toilets. According to P2, in each branch, when the corpses were carried to the toilets, old corpses had numbers on them. Judge Kerber asked if the numbers were written by a pen. P2 affirmed that sometimes it was written with a pen, if the corpse was not worn-out; otherwise it was written on a paper on the abdomen or the forehead.

Judge Kerber asked P2 what was written on the corpses. P2 said numbers and explained that the security branch had a sequence of numbers for each of the corpses. He said that the corpse went to the military police or to Tishreen, where they added a number. He stated that on the corpse, one could find the number of the branch, the number of the corpse and the number of the place where the corpses were collected.

Judge Wiedner asked if a corpse had the number "251," if that meant that the person died in branch 251. P2 affirmed and said that the sequence of numbers, the branch number and other numbers indicate that the victims [corpses] left from that branch, because no branch can add a number of another branch [if person dies in a branch and the corpse was transferred to another place, the number of the first branch cannot be removed].

Judge Kerber asked if there was a law that permitted torture. P2 said no and said that there is an article that punishes torture, but the person who commits it is protected from accountability.

Judge Kerber asked P2 if he met Accused Raslan. P2 listed three times he saw Accused Raslan. He said that he arrived in Berlin on August 28, 2014 and relocated to a refugee camp in Marienfelde, where he stayed until the end of February 2015. He said that he and his wife went to the supermarket and came across another person and his wife. P2 said that he immediately felt as if he knew that [person's] face, but he did not remember much. P2 said that he felt that the other person looked at him and recognized him, but P2 did not have the audacity to go and ask him where he knew him from. P2 said that days after that incident, P2 visited friends who knew that Accused Raslan detained him before and they told him that Raslan was in Berlin. P2 then mentioned that he encountered Raslan again, not far from the refugee camp. Lastly, P2 said that he later found an apartment, and once again came across Accused Raslan in a building supplies shop. P2 said that he told his wife "This is not possible! He is after me, even here." P2 said he did not see Raslan after that.

Judge Kerber asked if the shop was called "Poco" (furniture shop) or "Baumarkt" (a buildings supplies shop). P2 laughed and replied that there is no "Poco" shop in Hermannplatz in Berlin.

P2 said that he knew that Accused Raslan came to Germany the same way he did (with a visa from the German authorities). He said he heard this from [name redacted] and [name redacted]'s wife, who are his friends. Judge Kerber asked P2 if he found it strange that [name redacted] got involved with Raslan. P2 replied that he found this behaviour strange. P2 stated that he did not carry a personal grudge against anybody. Additionally, P2 said he was new in Germany and was not familiar with the laws there. Also, even after P2 knew, Accused Raslan was not his obsession, but rather the victims who were being tortured in Syria.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 why he was detained in 2006. P2 stated he was detained for two reasons; first, he was always denouncing the poor human rights situation in Syria and he wrote an article about a case of someone dying under torture in Sidnaya صيدنايا one week before his detention; and second, the EU financed and founded a centre to train human rights activists in Syria, and he was named the head of the centre. He said that one week after that, the centre was closed and sealed with red wax in March 2006. P2 said he was detained less than two months later and was accused with disseminating fake-news for his report on the torture in Sidnaya and was charged for finding an organization in an unauthorized way and dealing with foreign parties.

P2 said that they did not want information from him in Branch 285, because he used to publish everything in the media [and thus they knew everything about him]. He stated that his charges were issued by the court and the judge, and was in line with the emergency state declared in Syria.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if he recognized Accused Raslan by his voice and P2 said exactly. P2 said the voice was repeated when he wanted to hand him into the court police. He said that they [Syrian security officers] needed to remove the blindfold because he was a criminal felon, and Accused Raslan had his [P2's] mobile phone and his ID card. He said that Accused Raslan also handed the certificate of delivery to the police, and in those two minutes while Accused Raslan was giving P2 his belongings, P2 saw him.

Judge Kerber asked P2 if he was certain and P2 said that he had no doubt. He said that Accused Raslan changed a bit and lost some weight but P2 said that he was certain.

Judge Kerber asked P2 how he knew he was in Branch 285. P2 said that when he was blindfolded [in the car] he kept silent and began to locate where the car was heading to. P2 said he figured out that they were security forces, but did not know which Branch they belonged to. P2 said he had a car and he used to drive that way daily and knew the locations of all branches as he visited all of them either by summons or by imprisonment. P2 said he estimated that they were in Al-Adawi highway أوتستراد

العسكري where at its end was political security branch. P2 stated that the car did not stop and it turned to the left and drove down in a tunnel (Al-Thawra tunnel). نفق الثورة. He said that after the tunnel there is the military security branch on the right and if they drove straight ahead, the criminal [police] would be located there, because the justice palace is there and P2 used to drive to it daily.

Judge Kerber asked P2 if he was exposed to mistreatment. P2 said that he was placed between the seats and they sat above him, but they did not hit him and they took his belongings. Judge Kerber interrupted and asked whether he was beaten in the car. P2 stated that he was not beaten by fists, but the mere fact that he was placed[...]. Judge Kerber interrupted again, stating that in his 2018 questioning, P2 said he was beaten in the car. P2 stated that he said that it is standard for one to be beaten. He stated that if there would be no beating, then it would be due to orders not to beat him from the one who ordered the detention. He said that he was not tortured when he was in the cell like others.

Judge Wiedner asked what he saw or heard that night in Branch 285. P2 said that the sounds of torture and screaming did not stop the whole night, and the sounds of beating were audible. He said that when he was brought out of the cell the following morning without a blindfold, he was taken to the interrogation room to sign his referral. He said he signed it, was blindfolded and the person who was in the car came to him. P2 stated that in that room, there were torturing tools, cables and a tire at the corner.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if he saw someone being tortured in the room. P2 said no and that the room was empty, but the sounds he referred to occurred during the night.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 how long the interrogation lasted in Branch 285. P2 answered five minutes and stated that they did not want information. He stated that they anticipated that P2 would negotiate his release and cooperate with them. However, P2 said that when the interrogator heard his answer [P2's sarcastic answer of the good human rights situation in Syria], the interrogator lost hope [that P2 would cooperate with them]. P2 said he later heard that American and EU leaders, and Amnesty International provided statements demanding his release.

Judge Wiedner asked who interrogated him. P2 answered that he did not know; it was either the head or deputy of the branch, but that person [referring to Accused Raslan] was the one who accompanied him to the room.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if that person stayed in the room during the interrogation. P2 confirmed this and claimed that there was another person present. He said there was only one question, which was: "how are you P2?"

Judge Wiedner asked if there were insults. P2 said that after the slap, the interrogator insulted him and told others to "take him." Judge Wiedner asked who were the others. P2 answered that he did not know, and it was either the head of the interrogation unit, or the head or deputy of the branch.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if the person who accompanied him insulted him. P2 answered that the mere fact that the person accused him of murder and theft, as a lawyer, not to mention a human rights lawyer, was the biggest insult. However, P2 said he did not receive insults from that person in the branch due to orders. P2 stated that even the individual who was torturing others used to open the vision panel, see that P2 had not eaten, and would ask him "why don't you eat?"

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P2 stated that he was transferred again to Branch 285, before he was released from Branch 285 in May 2011, and asked if conditions changed since his first detention there. P2 stated that the conditions became worse. He said that there are a western and a northern building within Branch 285. P2 stated that his first detention was in the western one, but when he was brought back, he was in the northern building. However, P2 stated that nothing changed and the torturing sounds were always audible.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were differences in going after people before and after 2011, and if any specific incidents happened. P2 said that after the beginning of 2011, there were demands in Syria similar to Egypt and Tunisia. He said the first demonstration occurred in Al-Marjeh المرحجة in February 2011. P2 added that the families of the detainees called to assemble to release the detainees, activists and journalists organized a sit-in and the security forces attacked it. He said there were females and children who were beaten with batons and a female activist was pulled across the road from her hair. P2 stated there were well-known people, journalists, females and elderly people who were assaulted. He stated that for instance, five from the [name redacted] family were assaulted and 15 people were detained and later brought to Adra. ادرا According to P2, the regime began to be more ferocious starting from that period. P2 said the regime did not care about certain individuals any more, but was rather expecting a public [broad] movement like Egypt and Tunisia. P2 said there were more ferocity in their detention and torture methods.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were changes in laws. P2 said that the police and the customs were protected by a republican decree from Bashar Al-Assad (either decree 50 or 51, but he said he was not sure because he was in prison). He said they [the regime] were preparing to give the police additionally protection, in case they would commit anything.

P2 said that most of the detainees were either peaceful demonstrators or media individuals, who were treated more ferociously.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 how his clients had been detained. P2 said that all branches used to detain, but state security was the most active in this. He said that Branch 251 was the only branch that had a division in Duma, دوما and there was also Division 40 (under the administration of Hafez Makhoulوف), السيدات As-Sayyeda Zeynab أبو الشامات Abu Ash-Shamat الزبداني, and the Az-Zabadani divisions. He said that all the military branches were in Damascus, but Branch 251 was distributed in all areas, and thus it conducted the widest campaigns.

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P2 talked about Division 40, and asked him to elaborate on that division. P2 said that Division 40 was under the Branch 251, is located in Ar-Rawda الروضة and it was responsible for the Damascus area. He said that Division 40 is a residential building in the most important commercial area in Damascus, and therefore, it was responsible for the security of Damascus. However, P2 said that after 2011, it became responsible for overseeing social media. But he said that division 40 used to detain people without keeping them since it had no places to hold them. He said that division 40 used to detain, interrogate and then send individuals to Branch 251. P2 said that if they needed to re-interrogate someone, then they would summon him again. P2 said division 40 detained his brother in March 2014, because they thought that his brother was him. P2 stated that his brother was interrogated in Division 40, then sent to Branch 251, then summoned again by Division 40 for interrogation, and then sent back to branch 251.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if he had a grudge against Accused Raslan. P2 said it was known that defectors would come out to declare and explain that the regime used them. He said it had been always like that: all defectors would make visual or written proclamations, especially those of high rank. However, P2 said that Accused Raslan did not do that and he did not hear that Accused Raslan defected nor that Accused Raslan was against [what happened to] detainees or protestors.

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P2 stated in his 2018 questioning that Accused Raslan had defected because of the Houla massacre. مجزرة الحولة. P2 replied that he said that he anticipated that Accused Raslan had defected due to such reason, however, Accused Raslan did not say anything.

The proceedings were adjourned at 04:00 p.m.

Below are photos from outside the courthouse. The framed photos are part of a demonstration by Families for Freedom:

Trial Day 12 – June 05, 2020

There were about 14 spectators and 11 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of [name redacted] [P2], Questioning by Judge Kerber Continued

Judge Wiedner referred to P2's statement in his prior questioning where P2 stated that he was beaten on the way [to the branch] when he was detained in 2006, whereas in court, P2 stated he was not beaten. P2 said that what he told the police in his prior questioning was correct. P2 stated that he was expecting to be detained. He added that a few days before [he was detained], other opposition individuals like [name redacted] and [name redacted] were detained. Judge Wiedner asked if P2 was beaten. P2 stated that there was beating and physical violence when they threw him in the car. However, P2 stated that when he was placed between the two seats, he was not beaten. He said that they only beat him when they took him. He said he was beaten as he was being placed in the car and they sat on top of him when he was in the car. P2 said that the car ride between his home and the branch was 15 minutes. He said that what he said to the police was more accurate, because his memory was more recent and fresher then.

Judge Wiedner referred to P2's statement during his questioning on July 20, 2017 that he met a person who was a director during his detention who was not beaten because he was well known and Judge Wiedner asked if that person was P1. P2 said that he was not talking about P1. He said he met P1 after the latter was released and P1 was in a bad state, especially psychologically. P2 stated he meant another detainee, as they [the regime] detained many directors and media activists.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 about his general knowledge of Hafez Makhlof. P2 said that Makhlof was the head of Division 40, which is under the administration of Branch 251. He said that Makhlof's orders came from Branch 251. P2 stated that in Division 40, there were no detention places, and thus, they used to detain and transfer detainees to Branch 251, where the interrogation department was located.

Judge Wiedner asked if Makhlof had connections with higher ranks. P2 said that Makhlof is the cousin of Bashar Al-Assad so Makhlof had a direct connection with Assad.

Judge Wiedner asked if Makhlof could issue orders in Branch 251. P2 said that in the hierarchy, Makhlof was under Branch 251's administration, so Makhlof could communicate with some high ranks in Branch 251 on a personal level, but could communicate not on a functional/work level [Makhlof could call any friends in Branch 251 but he did not have control over work orders in Branch 251]. P2 said that 11 branches in the provinces and eight divisions in Damascus and rural Damascus (including Division 40) are all under the administration of Branch 251. P2 said that it was impossible for a division to have authority over a branch. He added that Makhlof had dreadful aura as a person [but Makhlof did not have authority over Branch 251].

Judge Wiedner asked about how they conducted investigations in Division 40. P2 said that Division 40 had no detention places. According to P2, after detention they used to interrogate and transfer detainees to Branch 251. He said that some of Branch 251's interrogation officers conducted the interrogation in Division 40.

Judge Wiedner asked whether an officer (not from Branch 251) would be able to interrogate detainees, and more broadly, who has authority to conduct an interrogation in that Branch. P2 said that all interrogators were from Branch 251 and it was impossible for someone who is not part of Branch 251 to go and interrogate there.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 how he knew that. P2 said from the administrative hierarchy, and from his and other's reports about it. He said that when detainees used to describe the interrogators, the same descriptions were repeated. P2 stated that detainees always remembered the voices and people who used to torture them like Abu Ghadab أبو غضب and the detainees mentioned that in their testimonies. He said that no one who was detained in Division 40 and then transferred to Branch 251 described another experience.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if he could imagine that a non-Alawite could be in the high ranks. P2 said that there were many Sunnis in the intelligence apparatuses, but there is a difference in regards to heads of branches. He said that a non-Alawite could be of high rank and added that the Sunni in the security apparatuses were more brutal than the Alawite, because Sunnis believed they needed to prove their loyalty. P2 stated that he got this information from the detainees, who said that Sunnis were more brutal with them.

Judge Wiedner asked P2 if he knows other Sunni interrogators. P2 said that there were locations that had well-known Sunnis, including Branch 251 and the military and air force branches. He said that generally, non-Alawite (like [name redacted] who was a Christian), were more violent with him. P2 added there was also [name redacted] who was an Ismaili. He said that both of them worked in the military interrogation branch.

Judge Wiedner asked if P2 experienced the above [if non-Alawites were more violent with detainees]. P2 said that he experienced some of that himself, but he said the majority of this information came from more than 15 – 20 detainees who were released daily.

Questioning by Senior Prosecutor Jasper Klinge

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 how he could tell if someone is an Alawite. P2 said that high ranked officials are well known and lower ranks were identified mostly from their dialect and their way of speaking. He said that Alawites, Christians and Sunnis could share a dialect, but the way of speaking hints that this person is an Alawite (and thus, has an authority).

Prosecutor Klinge asked if some regions had specific dialects. P2 said that there were Alawite-specific dialects, but other people who live among them could also speak the same dialect.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 if he knows the number of officials in Division 40 and Branch 251. P2 answered that there was a large number of officials within the branch because there were many divisions under that Branch. He said that the area As-Sayyeda Zeynab, the Abo Ash-Shamat division, Damascus and rural Damascus were all under Branch 251. P2 stated that "Division" 40 had no considerable weight like 251, which is a "Branch." P2 added as an example, the patrol division was located within Branch 251, and they used to detain people.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 to elaborate on Branch 251's role. P2 stated that the security apparatus was ruling Syria and Branch 251 is the cornerstone in Assad's regime. He said that ministries are formed there, members of the Syrian people's council [parliament] are named there, and the economy is operated there. P2 testified that military and air-force branches are oppressive branches, whereas Branch 251 is the internal state security management and controlled everything. Therefore, P2 said the head of the Branch is a person close to Al-Assad, like Mohammad Nasif محمد ناصيف, Bahjat Suleiman بهجت سليمان and Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس [current and previous heads of the Branch]. He said that the country's administration was passed only to persons who were 100% loyal and that no one from other branches is allowed to enter Branch 251.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if there was a difference between the branches' power before and after 2011. P2 said that they [their powers] expanded. He said that the oppression that occurred [before 2011] was done to help the management, but after 2011 the oppression was dominant and the other branches' authorities increased. P2 stated that before 2011, military security was not allowed to interfere without orders from the president, and the branches were assigned cases. He said that while Branch 251 had the ability to openly detain and investigate, after 2011, all branches could openly do the same.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P2 knew other names for the state security. P2 said he could not be sure of the names, because naming depended on internal correspondence.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 if he knew different names for Division 40. P2 said Ar-Rawda division قسم الروضة, which is an important area in Damascus. Klinge asked about Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, الجسر الأبيض, and P2 explained that Al-Jisr Al-Abyad is a large neighborhood and Ar-Rawda is within it.

A google earth photo was shown via the projector, and P2 was asked to tell the court where division 40 was located. P2 went to the judges' panel and pointed to a building. Then, another photo was shown and P2 pointed to the buildings of Branch 251. P2 returned to his seat.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 if he could describe Branch 251's two buildings. P2 said that the first time he was at Branch 251 was when he was detained in 1978. He stated that after that, he was there only when he was summoned there, without being detained for long periods, and these were in 2005 and 2006. P2 said the branch consists of two residential buildings and normal flats. He said the primary building is the one on the left (P2 said he went there). P2 said there is an underground floor, which serves as the prison. He said that (when he was there in 1978) there were stairs and an iron door on the left. He added there were rooms on the right and left, and the cells were located in the garden in the north-eastern side. The interrogation room was downstairs [underground]. P2 testified that he was imprisoned in the solitary cell, not in a shared one. P2 stated [the office of] the interrogator was in the ground floor and the head of the branch was on the first floor. P2 added that the floor had residential flats that were 200 – 250 m<sup>2</sup>, but he was not certain. He stated that he has not been in the right building, but he remembered that it was a smaller building and both buildings had the same number of floors. According to P2, former detainees stated the garden was expanded and more cells were constructed on the southern and eastern sides.

There was some confusion regarding the garden and the cells. Prosecutor Klinge asked if there were cells both above and underground. P2 explained that the cells were under the street level.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 about CCMC [Central Crisis Management Cell; خلية إدارة الأزمة]. P2 took a while to understand the translation and then said that it was established in March or April 2011 after the revolution began to deal with the demonstrations. P2 said it consisted of several people like the Minister of Defense, Head of National Security, Head of the Military Intelligence Directorate Abdulfattah Qudsiyya, عبد الفتاح قدسية, the head of the Air Force Intelligence Jameel Hasan, جميل حسن, and the Head of State Security Management, Ali Mamlouk, علي مملوك.

Prosecutor Klinge asked what were the CCMC's tasks. According to P2, the CCMC was responsible for the oppression and for attacking the people's movement that asked for freedom and reform. He said the CCMC used to issue orders to all security and military apparatuses, police and media, but the details of the orders were discussed within each branch on its own.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 how he knew about CCMC. P2 replied that he was informed by leaked documents in the media, and it contained orders for dealing with demonstrators, including detaining demonstrators and killing them under torture.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 what orders the cell issued. P2 said that the orders responded to demonstrators with violence, focused on media activists and enforced all the possible means to stop leaked photos from leaving Syria, but P2 said he did not know a specific order.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 when the CCMC was founded, and P2 said after March 2011, maybe in April.

Prosecutor Klinge referred to Caesar's statement that the corpses were transported to Al-Kaboun hospital. He asked P2 if he knew if there were corpses that were transported to hospitals. P2 said that military investigation branch was near Mazzeh [military] hospital, مستشفى المزعة, and therefore, they could transport corpses there. P2 also stated that according to survivors of detention, patients were transported to Mazzeh hospital and were killed by doctors and nurses there. P2 stated that Branches 235, 227 and the state security branch were near Tishreen, تشرين or Al-Kaboun, القابون [hospitals].

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 about sexual assaults in prison to differentiate between his experience and what he heard of. P2 said that he took information directly from detainees after their release. P2 said that sexual assaults were very common for females and males. He said that Al-P1 testimony is something that many detainees have experienced but only few are able to tell what happened with them. P2 said that it was more common with females, starting with stripping them naked in front of the interrogators as well as rape. P2 said he personally helped some of the released female detainees obtain abortions. He said that only few female detainees declared what happened with them and they could have problems with their families. He said that some female victims would come to the courtroom and share their stories.

Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 if it is taboo to talk about female sexual mistreatment in Syria. P2 said that females usually do not speak about it, but they used to tell the lawyers so lawyers could help them with abortions.

Prosecutor Klinge mentioned that Accused Raslan stated he was trained by Russia to fight terrorism like Islamists, Al-Qa'eda and Al-Nusra. Klinge also stated that Accused Raslan mentioned that he was protecting the foreign embassies and diplomats, and he hoped that Syria would be empty from extremists and terrorists. Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 about his thoughts. P2 said that as "his" president admitted [P2 emphasized on translating the word to "his" and not "our" president] that the 2011 demonstrations were peaceful. P2 said there were no such organizations in Syria, and then wondered "which terrorist organizations, was he speaking of?!" P2 then added that Accused Raslan was saying that to gain the western sympathy against the Islamic organization and ISIS, as if he was saying: "I was allowed to do so in order to defend you." Prosecutor Klinge asked P2 if he himself was related to such organizations and P2 answered that he is a Christian.

Questioning by Counsels

Counsel Michael Böcker, Accused Raslan's representative, asked about Abdulmon'em An-Na'san عبد المنعم النعسان. P2 said that he was an interrogating officer in Branch 251 and he was a Sunni without much power.

Counsel Böcker asked P2 if he knew about other ranks in the branch. P2 said that he did not have information about the administrative hierarchy in Branch 251. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if he knew Mohammad Abdallah محمد عبد الله, Khaled Al-Khateeb خالد الخطيب, Yousef Ibrahim يوسف إبراهيم, and Abdulmajeed Nabbuda عبد المجيد نبودة, and P2 said he did not know any of them. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if he knew Mohammad Deib Zaytoun محمد ديب زيتون, and P2 said of course. P2 said he is the head of the political security and after Ali Mamlouk علي مملوك left the position, the former [Zaytoun] became the head of the national security directorate.

Counsel Böcker asked P2 about the roles of Mohammad Deib Zaytoun محمد ديب زيتون, Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس. P2 said that Mohammad Deib Zaytoun was the head of state security directorate, Tawfiq Younes was the head of Branch 251 and Hafez Makhlof was the head of Division 40, which is one of many divisions of Branch 251.

Counsel Böcker asked P2 about the sequence of orders. P2 said that the primary administration was CCMC (Ali Mamlouk and Mohammad Deib Zaytoun), which gave plans to Tawfiq Younes for execution, who gave orders to departments. P2 said Makhlof could communicate with Zaytoun on a personal basis, but for work-related matters, he [Makhlof] communicated with Younes.

Counsel Böcker asked P2 if something [orders, plans etc...] had changed in CCMC. P2 said that the orders were coming and the apparatuses were executing, detaining, torturing and killing.

Counsel Böcker said that P2 stated that he was last detained in Branch 251 and was transported by a bus. P2 corrected Böcker and said that he said that he was detained in Branch 285 and not in 251, and was transported by a car not a bus.

Counsel Böcker asked P2 if Dr. Kroker was present in the 2018 questioning and P2 affirmed. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if there was a photo array, and P2 said yes. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if he recognized someone. P2 affirmed and said that he remembered saying that one or two of the photos belonged to Accused Raslan. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if there was a possibility that he recognized Raslan wrongly. P2 replied that he recognized Accused Raslan.

Counsel Böcker said that P2 mentioned in the questioning that he recognized three photos of Accused Raslan wearing glasses. P2 said that multiple photos were shown with and without Raslan wearing glasses. P2 said that he saw Accused Raslan for two minutes in 2006. He said he glanced at Accused Raslan for seconds 3 times without examining, because he did not want to see Accused Raslan. However, P2 said that Accused Raslan's image was generally imprinted in his memory and thus P2 recognized that it could be Raslan.

A 20 minute break was issued for the translators.

After the break, P2 was not there on time, so Judge Kerber mentioned another witness called [name redacted] and his petition on an appointment of witness assistance. The defence said that it was no problem for them. Plaintiff attorney Dr. Oehmichen mentioned that the witness should testify veiled for victim protection. The prosecution quoted a law saying that as a witness he needs to give his testimony openly and show his face. The prosecution and six plaintiff attorneys did not vote against the petition of witness assistance. Mohammed, plaintiff counsel, suggested that the witness not publicly read out his address.

Counsel Böcker asked P2 about the photo array. P2 said that he was shown six – eight photos. P2 said that three of the photos had close resemblance to Accused Raslan and one of the three photos had the most resemblance. P2 said that the photos were shown one after another. He said he examined the photo, and would tell them to go next. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if he recalled if the photos were being shown until he said to go next, or without him saying to go next, or if he could not recall how it was. P2 said that the photo remained until he told them to go next.

Counsel Arne Bodenstein, one of Accused Al-Gharib's representatives, mentioned that P2 said that he knew [name redacted] was a Christian. Counsel Bodenstein asked P2 how he knew that. P2 said that he knew [name redacted] prior to his detention and that as a human rights activist, he knows the heads of the branches.

Counsel Bodenstein asked P2 if he used to know him [name redacted] before or after his release. P2 said that he knew him before he summoned him. Moreover, P2 said his name was on the plate [i.e. plate on a desk or door]([name redacted], head of Branch 248, military security).

Counsel Bodenstein asked P2 how he identified someone to be an Alawite or a Sunni. P2 answered that he did that through their dialects and from what others have said.

Counsel Bodenstein asked P2 if he heard names of officials that he did not know prior to the detention. P2 denied.

Counsel Bodenstein asked P2 how would he identify someone to be an Alawite or a Sunni using previous knowledge about those individuals. P2 said that some people had relatives/acquaintances who worked in a branch (sometimes as interrogators). He said these people leaked information about their relatives/acquaintances (including names/nicknames and which branch they worked). P2 said that when the detainees were released, they used to mention some names or nicknames e.g. Abu Ja'far. أبو جعفر. He stated that all this data was corroborated to build information.

Counsel Sebastian Scharmer, plaintiff representative, mentioned that P2 talked about sexual assault, and asked about the differences before and after 2011. P2 said that sexual assault had been used against females in Syria since the 1970s and before 2011, it was used more as to get information, as a threat of the physical and verbal violence. He added that after 2011, it was used to humiliate the female detainee and her family, and sometimes they would rape her in front of them. P2 said that there are facts that a female detainee was raped in front of her husband or brother. He said that they had a witness who was in Branch 251 and saw seven-eight female detainees in a small cell naked without an iron door, and anyone who was passing by could see them. P2 said that the witness stated they were taken [used] for service (deliver food and drinks) and that witness saw them naked sitting and covered with menstrual blood due to the lack of sanitary napkins.

Counsel Scharmer enumerated some torture methods like Shabh شبح, Falaqa فلفة and the German chair الكرسي الألماني and asked P2 if these methods were used before 2011, and if their use increased after that. P2 said that all methods were known before 2011 and more brutal methods were added afterwards. P2 gave an example of tying a person to something like a chair with a hole at the base of the chair, and a source of fire like a candle is placed underneath him [the hole], before he was left to die. P2 stated that one used to suffer for a day or two days, and it was impossible to imagine what he went through, before he accepted and surrendered. P2 said that this method was not used before 2011, but after 2011, new methods were used on everyone with no exceptions.

Counsel Scharmer said that he knew that P2 received a prize in 2014 from Germany, and he asked P2 what it was. P2 said that he received two prizes from Germany: the German Judges Prize in 2009, and the German-French prize for human rights in 2014.

Counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker, plaintiff representative, asked about female detainees who were victims of sexual assault and their experience after their release. P2 said that unfortunately, female detainees in Syria suffer torture twice: in prison and when she is released from the people around her. P2 added that when released female detainees speak about their experiences, we know what happened with the others [get a general idea of what others go through].

Counsel Dr. Kroker asked about the charges the female received in the intelligence services. P2 said that the females used to be forced to confess that they seduced officers with sex to kill them and they were participating in demonstrations to have sex with the demonstrators.

Counsel Dr. Kroker asked P2 why he was visiting the intelligence branches, and P2 said that he was forced to visit the branches since he was summoned by them.

Counsel Dr. Kroker said that some people allege that they worked with the regime but did not torture anyone. P2 said that they [he and others] documented people who have information about names and officials. Judge Kerber rephrased the question asking whether it would be possible for someone who worked in the intelligence services to not be involved with torture. P2 said no and that anyone affiliated with the intelligence services either tortured or knew about the torture that occurred there.

Counsel Dr. Kroker asked about the Syrian political situation in 2012 and whether the regime was under pressure. P2 said that the situation evolved and there were many people [pro-government] who wanted to free themselves from the regime. P2 said that in 2011 and 2012, many reacted to authorities' practices and moved away but those who loyal stayed. He said the usage chemical weapons against Al-Ghouta الغوطة was an issue in 2013.

Counsel Dr. Kroker asked P2 about the motivation of defectors. P2 said that ones who were dissatisfied with the regime at that time, defected and declared in statements (and in videos) that that they defected and disclosed that the regime committed crimes, and that they did not agree to that as part of the nation. P2 said that some people lost and left Syria fearing the regime's downfall and others left Syria were delegated by the regime to go and sabotage other parties. P2 testified that there were facts that some defectors in 2011 and 2012 founded armed organizations and returned to the regime to work with them.

Counsel Dr. Anna Oehmichen asked P2 if he was able to identify someone as a Sunni if he was blindfolded. P2 said that he could do that by the person's dialect.

Counsel Andreas Schulz, plaintiff representative, referred to P2's statement that some pro-government people left the regime and returned to work with it. He then asked P2 if he believed that Accused Raslan did the same thing. P2 stated he was not certain based on his information and thus he cannot talk about that topic.

Counsel Schulz asked P2 if he could disclose such information about those defectors. P2 said that he had information and clues, قرائن, but he did not know if it would be considered as evidence.

Counsel Schulz said that P2 posted online that Accused Raslan changed his location, but not the nature of his work, and he asked P2 to elaborate on that. P2 said that Raslan's defence statement was denying the systematic torture in Syria, which complied with what Bashar Al-Assad said in an interview. P2 said that afterwards, P2 wrote that Accused Raslan did not change the nature of his work because that statement was embracing the regime's perspective.

Counsel Schulz asked if the German words "Ermittlungsabteilung" (investigation division) and "Untersuchungsabteilung" (investigation/examination division) mean the same in Arabic. P2 said that the security services did not conduct investigation/examinations "التحري" (investigate people from afar) but perhaps the normal police did. He said that security services directly/physically investigated a person "تحقيق" [includes torture] while "التحري" was done remotely and refers to gathering information "استراق المعلومات" [ex: obtaining and monitoring information without others knowing].

Counsel Schulz asked P2 if there was an attempt to kill him in prison. P2 affirmed and said that he was subjected to two attempted murders in prison by the cousin of Bashar Al-Assad [their fathers are brothers i.e. عم] Numayr Al-Assad. نمير الأسد. P2 stated that Numayr and his group committed huge crimes that shook the country in 2004 – 2005, so Bashar was forced to detain them in order to appease public outrage. P2 said Numayr and his group were from Al-Qirdaha. القرداحة. P2 said that he was put in the same cell and alleged that they attempted to murder him two times, but other prisoners rescued him.

Counsel Schulz asked P2 if he believed that the regime would assassinate opposition members outside Syria. P2 answered that intelligence services did that previously. P2 gave an example and said that they tried to assassinate [name redacted] in Germany in the 1980s, but when they did not find him home, they killed his wife [Banan At-Tantawi بنان الطنطاوي] instead. P2 stated that the regime was a terrorist gang that committed so much inside and outside Syria, and they could do anything.

Counsel Schulz asked P2 how he came to Germany and why he left Syria late. P2 answered that after he was released from prison in 2011, a German official came to Syria. He said that the German official visited P2 in his home and asked P2 if he wanted to travel [outside]. P2 told him that he was banned from travel and his wife had no travel document. He said the official took photos from them and told them that they can come to Germany, but through the German embassy in Jordan. P2 said that he was not planning to leave Syria at that time, but the situation was escalating and the condition of detainees in 2014 was not like before, as it now meant death. P2 gave an example of his friend [name redacted] who was detained in 2012, and until today, no one knows any information about him. P2 stated that there are more than 150,000 detainees, some of them detained in 2011, whom no one knows anything about. P2 said that due to such reasons, he escaped with his wife to Beirut illegally, and the German embassy gave them travel documents there.

Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed, plaintiff representative, asked P2 if there were specialized interrogators. P2 said that there were no specialized interrogators, but rather well known people. P2 said that if a well-known person was to be interrogated, there would be orders to either torture him severely, not torture him or decrease the intensity of torture with him. Therefore, P2 said the guard did not dare to hit anyone whom he was ordered not to hit.

Counsel Mohammed, plaintiff representative, asked how P2 communicated with his defendants as a practicing lawyer. P2 said that in Syria, the attorney was not allowed to speak to or accompany his defendant. P2 added that per law, even in the normal criminal cases, he cannot be present during the investigation [it seems he meant interrogation].

Counsel Mohammed asked P2 if he saw P1 after the latter was released. P2 said that P1 was detained twice, and that he saw P1 after P1 was released from his first detention. He said that P1's release from the second detention was in Idleb, not in Damascus.

Counsel Mohammed asked P2 why P1 was detained. P2 said P1 filmed the brutal regime's crimes and that was the most hideous accusation and charge for the regime, and [the regime] used to detain people only because they were watching Al-Jazeera in their houses. P2 said that reporting what was happening in Syria was the most dangerous accusation.

P2 stated that after he used to leave the justice palace, he would accompany the defendant in front of the judge (the civilian judge at that time). P2 stated that he represented hundreds and thousands of people, and issued many requests to the general prosecutor to determine the fate of some people or to settle some unresolved issues after release (for instance, if one's laptop was not handed in back, if there was a travel ban). P2 said that he could not remember everything.

Counsel Mohammed asked P2 to describe P1's condition when he was released. P2 said that P1 was incomparable to how he looked now. P2 said that P1's clothes showed that he stayed with the same clothes without taking a shower, but the psychological state was the worst. P2 said he could see that P1 was just trying to contend with the situation.

Counsel Mohammed asked P2 where he saw P1. P2 said that he visited him in jail in court. P2 said that anyone could know from the person's state of being how much the person suffered and withstood.

Counsel Mohammed asked P2 if he saw clear injuries or blood on P1. P2 said that he used to meet released detainees daily. All of them had wounds, bruises and mostly fractures. That was the standard condition and not something exceptional.

Counsel Manuel Reiger, plaintiff representative, mentioned that P2 stated in his 2017 questioning that he was tortured with the tire دولاب and asked him if that was the case. P2 denied this and said that he said that there were torturing tools in the interrogation room, including tire. P2 stated that he was not tortured with the tire.

Counsel Reiger mentioned that P2 stated that he was able to identify whether a person was a Sunni by his dialect. Counsel Reiger continued to ask P2 if he knew non-Sunnis from the regime who tried to change their dialects [into a Sunni one]. P2 said that at that time it was the other way around as there were Sunnis who were speaking Alawite dialect to intimidate the people. P2 stated that when people feared the consequences of the chemical weapons attacks in 2013, and threats that America would attack Syria, some people began to hide their dialects [in fear that the regime would be eradicated. He stated that after they were reassured that nothing would happen, everyone went back to their original dialect.

Counsel Michael Böcker said that P2 posted online something on May 18, 2020 [the post that Counsel Schulz referred to earlier], and asked P2 where he got his information. P2 said that he read about the statement [Accused Raslan's statement in court] on the same or the following day of the statement. Counsel Böcker said that it was not direct information. P2 said he got the information not through social media, but rather from people whom he knew personally. Counsel Böcker asked P2 if he spoke with these people directly or on phone. P2 said that it was not a direct contact.

The proceedings were adjourned at 01:45 p.m. The next trial will be June 24, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

Below are photos from outside the courthouse. The framed photos are part of a demonstration by Families for Freedom:

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 5

Hearing dates of June 24 & 25, 2020

[Information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor].

(Information located in parenthesis is information stated by the witness, judges or counsel).

Summary / Highlights

Trial Day 13

- A witness, known as P3, testified about his experiences working in Branches 295, 255 and the Sayyeda Zaynab division. P3 worked in Branch 295's mail department, where he saw documents that listed numbers of corpses and witnessed events related to the transfer of corpses to burial sites. During his court testimony, P3 stated that he saw Accused Al-Gharib once. The Judges and prosecutor Klinge noted that P3 provided contradictory information in a prior statement to the German police. P3 appeared visibly nervous and issues of possible witness intimidation were explored in questioning.

Trial Day 14

- Two officials from the Meckenheim Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) testified about their questionings of P3. One official testified that P3 became reserved during his questioning after being informed of his right to refuse to answer questions if the answers might incriminate him and it became difficult for P3 to answer questions. Both officials stated that P3 said he knew Accused Al-Gharib because they come from the same region in Syria. Prosecutor Klinge stated that the transcript of the prior statement indicates that P3 said he knew Accused Al-Gharib from the intelligence branch, not because they were from the same region.
- P3 continued his testimony in court and explained more about Branch 295's activities and his work in the mail/correspondence department. P3 provided a sketch [a redrawing is provided in this report] of the lists he saw which described the corpses, their hospital number and their branch number. The original lists were not introduced as evidence. He also indicated the location of two mass graves.

Notes from the Court Monitor:

- P3 appeared nervous from the outset of his testimony.
- The witness mixed up "informatics" and "information" many times (He worked in the information department, but he said Informatics department ... etc).
- There were many contradictions in the witness' testimony. But some could be attributed to nerves. He told a journalist (afterwards) that he was shocked because he was not allowed to cover his face during his testimony and his lawyer did not inform him of this limitation.

- P3 tried to avoid looking at Accused Al-Gharib. When Judge Kerber asked if he could recognize the accused, P3 needed to be asked again in a relatively louder tone. Only then did P3 take a swift glance at Accused Al-Gharib.
- P3 changed his statements that he gave at the police and then changed them again after the warning from the prosecution.
- Judges Kerber and Wiedner seemed very frustrated asking questions at some point. Sometimes they used a louder tone in asking questions. Prosecutor Klinge appeared upset at the end of his questioning.
- P3 did not communicate with his attorney (in the courtroom). His attorney was sitting putting his hands behind his head.
- P3 seemed relatively calmer on the second day of his testimony.

Trial Day 13 - June 24, 2020

There were about 7 spectators and 4 media individuals present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

The prosecution mentioned the defense's objection to use of Accused Anwar Raslan's statements from prior questioning in Berlin on October 26, 2017 with Martin Holtzky. The prosecution said that the objection was without merit and that Accused Raslan was communicative and not nervous. [See SJAC's separate article on the admissibility of witness statements].

Testimony of P3

Questioning by Judges: P3's background and work

The first witness today was P3, a 30-year-old from Kiel, Germany.

There was some confusion about P3's age, but the issue was settled on 30 years.

P3 came with his lawyer Mario Tebel. Judge Kerber told P3 that he can communicate with his lawyer anytime and his lawyer can help him if he requires it.

Judge Kerber asked P3 about his job, and he said that he was a sous-chef.

Judge Kerber asked P3 if he knew why he was summoned, and P3 said that he was summoned to be asked if he knew certain individuals.

Judge Kerber asked P3 to tell the court about himself. P3 said that he graduated on November 15, 2010. He worked in the informatics [information] department, then Branch 295, and then Sayyeda Zeynab سيدة زينب, and then he defected from the regime.

Judge Kerber asked P3 where he was from. There was confusion as to where P3 originated from and there were several questions to clarify whether it was a regional city or from Damascus.

Judge Kerber asked what he studied. P3 said that he studied electricity and informatics. P3 said he joined the state security on November 15, 2010. Judge Kerber asked him if he finished his studies, and P3 said no.

Judge Kerber asked P3 where he worked and P3 restated that he worked in the informatics department, then Branch 295's mail department and then was transferred to the Sayyeda Zeynab division.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 about his studies, and P3 said that he studied informatics. Judge Wiedner asked him if he studied in a university or a military facility, and P3 said he finished high school and then studied in a university. Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he studied in a military academy, and P3 said no and stated that he studied in Branch 295. Judge Wiedner asked P3 why he did not continue his studies, and P3 said he applied to continue but was not accepted.

Judge Kerber asked P3 again which branches he worked in, and P3 said Branch 295, then Branch 255's informatics department, and then Sayyeda Zeynab. P3 stated that his whole service lasted about a year and a few months. Judge Kerber asked him when he joined Branch 295, and P3 said that joined 295 on November 15, 2010, did a training course in 255 at the beginning of 2011, worked in 295 until the end of 2012, and then was transferred to Sayyeda Zeynab division, before he left in Ramadan 2012.

Judge Kerber asked him where he left to. P3 said that he went to [redacted], where he was injured by an airstrike, then went to Turkey for treatment, then he went back [to Syria]. P3 said that he was moving between Syria and Turkey.

Judge Kerber asked him about his family. P3 said that he brought them to Turkey in 2015, specifically to [redacted]. Judge Kerber asked P3 if there was a recent incident with his family. P3 said they were under pressure, specifically their health situation was not good.

Judge Kerber asked him about his work in Branch 295. P3 said that 295 is a training branch, located along Dar'a new highway أوتستراد درعا الجديد after the Martyrs Cemetery مقبرة الشهداء, and the head of the Branch is Tha'er Al-Omari. ثائر العمري. Judge Kerber asked him which city the cemetery is. P3 said in Damascus, at the end of Al-Husseiniyyah and Ath-Thayyabiyya. P3 said it was a public cemetery [open to the public], but during the incidents [uprising], the government used the cemetery [took control of it] to bury individuals. P3 said there is another cemetery at Najha housing مساكن نجها.

Judge Kerber asked P3 how he knew that the government used to bury individuals and how he was connected to it. P3 said that out of curiosity he used to read any mail [correspondence] that came to the Branch. P3 said that there were no complete names addressed in the mail, only numbers.

Hannes Linke, counsel for Accused Al-Gharib, raised §55 StPO [which addresses the right of witnesses to refuse to answer questions if it risks incriminating themselves or a relative] and said that asking about what P3 did at the Branch might incriminate the witness.

Prosecutor Klinge said that they wanted to know the witness's activity in the intelligence services. Klinge stated that the witness would be giving information about the transportation of corpses and therefore, there would be no personal culpability. Klinge added that this was hypothetical, because mentioning the Branch's mail is not a crime that is punishable by the law.

Sebastian Scharmer, plaintiff's counsel, agreed with the Prosecutor's statement and requested to continue a deeper conversation about this without the witness being present, as this conversation could influence the witness.

Matthias Schuster, counsel for Accused Al-Gharib, asked to use §55 StPO. Judge Kerber asked whether that was an official petition or a suggestion, and Schuster said it was a suggestion. Judge Kerber said that she agreed with the prosecution.

Judge Kerber asked what else was written in the mail. P3 said that the mail that used to come from hospitals dealt with the dead, and the numbers of the dead on certain dates were addressed to the Branch's management. P3 said that he was curious to read it, but they were officially not allowed to read it.

Judge Kerber asked if the mail used to be delivered open or sealed. P3 said that the mail used to be delivered as a whole file and the Branch's head used to take the mail. Judge Kerber asked if the content in the mail was numbers and what numbers were there. P3 affirmed and said that a number, branches' numbers and registry record were listed.

Judge Kerber asked P3 how he knew that the numbers mentioned in the mail were referring to corpses. P3 said that there were numbers of hospitals like 601 [Mazzeah military hospital مشفى المزة العسكري] or Harasta hospital. مشفى حرستا. The numbers of the hospitals were written, not their names. Therefore, P3 said they used to know if the mail came from a hospital or from somewhere else. Kerber asked if there were other hospitals, and P3 mentioned Hamish hospital مشفى حاميش.

Judge Kerber further asked P3 about the numbers mentioned in the mail. In response to the judges' questions, P3 said the mail [correspondence] had numbers in a table, which included the hospital's number, the branch's number and the corpse's number. Kerber asked if the number was referring to the dead person, and P3 affirmed and restated that there were no names. Judge Kerber asked P3 how he knew that the numbers were referring to corpses and P3 said that the mail that had these numbers was sent before the corpses' burial.

Judge Kerber asked P3 about his task in the mail department, and P3 said that he used to receive the mail, but did not know what was inside it. In response to an additional question, P3 said that he used to receive the mail, deliver it to the Branch's head and told him that this mail came from branch X/hospital X/school X.

Judge Kerber asked P3 if he was in mail department in November 2010. P3 said that he stayed in the mail department until the beginning of 2012 and then went to the Sayyeda Zeynab branch. [P3 seemed to indicate that he stayed in the mail department until the end of 2012, but took a training course in Branch 255 at the beginning of 2011].

Judge Kerber asked if the numbers of dead people changed at the beginning of 2011. P3 said that the numbers increased at the end of 2011, especially in December.

Judge Kerber asked P3 if he himself saw corpses or witnessed the transportation of corpses. P3 said no and restated he was an employee in the mail department, an administrative unit.

Accused Al-Gharib told the court via his translator, that he was not hearing well. Judge Kerber told him to hear the witness directly without headphones. His translator said that the voice of the witness was not clear. Kerber asked the witness to speak clearly using the mic.

Judge Kerber asked P3 if he saw excavator or dump trucks, and P3 said that he saw neither.

Judge Kerber referred to P3's prior statement that there were two cemeteries, and asked him how P3 knew that these were cemeteries. He said that burials had to go through the burial office and there were people specifically responsible for digging, but he did not know who they were. P3 said he also saw the refrigerator trucks.

Judge Kerber asked if the number of corpses was high. P3 said that the highest numbers were in December 2011, but he did not know the total number, only what was reported.

Judge Kerber asked about the daily number of corpses and P3 said that numbers were recorded in intervals and not on a daily basis, and said that once there were 60 – 70 corpses, but it was years ago and he cannot remember. Judge Kerber asked if the numbers reached 300, and P3 said sometimes.

Judge Kerber asked if P3 saw refrigerator trucks. He said that he once saw a truck that came to the branch, but it was empty.

Judge Kerber asked if P3 remembered if corpses were transported to the burial location. P3 said that once he read the mail [which included information on delivery, numbers and when/where/who would do the delivery] and knew that corpses were on the way.

Judge Kerber said that P3 spoke about corpses in his prior questioning, and asked P3 if he saw mass graves. P3 said that he saw cemeteries and people there (at the cemeteries).

Judge Kerber asked if the graves number was normal or high, and if there was more than one person in each grave. P3 said that the cemetery was a "normal" [public] one before the "incidents" [uprising], but he did not see how they buried [during the uprising].

Judge Kerber asked P3 if he saw mass graves or locations of mass graves. P3 denied this.

Judge Kerber asked P3 about the size of the excavators that he saw and P3 said they were small. Judge Kerber asked him to describe its size and he said they were "normal." She asked P3 if they were the size of the table [in front of him in the courtroom]. He said that he could not tell. Judge Kerber reminded him that he should provide correct information, and asked him to try to estimate their sizes. He said that the excavators were not like the ones used in gardens. She asked him how many meters they were, and P3 said that he did not know.

In response to a question by Judge Kerber, P3 affirmed that corpses were transported from Harasta and Tishreen hospitals مشفى تشرين.

Judge Kerber asked if the corpses were transported with dump trucks. P3 denied this, but Judge Kerber said that P3 mentioned this in a prior questioning. P3 said that he saw dump trucks from far away. Judge Kerber said that in a prior questioning, P3 said that he saw a garbage truck unloading corpses. P3 said that he did not mention garbage trucks, only refrigerator trucks. Judge Kerber asked him if he saw how the corpses were transported, but P3 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked if Branch 295's task was to collect information. P3 said that this was 255's speciality, and that 295 was only a training branch.

Judge Wiedner asked which department received the list [of corpses]. P3 said that he was in Branch 295's mail department.

Judge Wiedner further asked about Branch 295's tasks. P3 said that 295 was responsible for training newly enrolled members for one and a half years, and was responsible for the Najha نجها area, specifically the protection and security of the area.

Judge Wiedner asked what relation the Branch had to the corpses. P3 said that the corpses used to come from the branch[s] to be buried in Najha.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 multiple questions about the lists [mail]. P3 said that the mail used to come from hospitals, and then he used to deliver it to the head of the Branch—sometimes by phone, sometimes by mail and sometimes by fax. Wiedner asked what the Branch's head used to do with them, and P3 said that he did not know, because he was supposed to deliver them and go [away]. Wiedner asked P3 if he knew the purpose of the lists. P3 said that he used to read them [peek inside], because there were 15 of his family members who were detained, and so he used to search the lists to know where they [P3's family members] went. Wiedner asked if there were names in the lists, and P3 again said no, only numbers.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were numbers of specific branches. P3 gave examples of 251, 293 and 285. P3 said that he was told that the numbers represented the branches where the corpses came out from. Wiedner asked P3 who told him that, and P3 said his colleagues.

Judge Wiedner asked if hospitals names were in the lists. P3 said that [generally] every hospital had a name and a number. When further asked, P3 said that every hospital and military facility has a number like the branches.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 about the numbers of the corpses. P3 said that the numbers used to come in a table and include numbers of the branches. Judge Wiedner said that was not his question and that he was asking about the numbers of the corpses. P3 said he did not know, because the numbers were mixed up.

Judge Wiedner asked how many were dead and P3 said there were between 50 – 100 corpses listed in two – three mails [correspondence].

Judge Kerber said that P3 stated in a previous questioning that the numbers in the lists were less than the actual numbers of the corpses. She added that P3 said that 100 was written in the list once but there were 300 corpses. Kerber then asked P3 if he said 300 corpses were brought once. P3 affirmed and explained that in his prior questioning, he said the numbers in the lists were not correct. P3 gave an example in his prior questioning and said the lists could say 100, but they could actually bring 300 corpses.

Judge Kerber asked P3 if he remembered what he said about the mass graves during his prior questioning. P3 said that he had stated that he did not know if the corpses belonged to civilians as "they" used to bring all kinds of corpses, and perhaps some were military individuals. He mentioned that those buried in mass graves could include both detainees and military individuals. However, P3 said he was not in the burial location, but nearby.

Judge Kerber asked if there was a secret cemetery. P3 said that there was one for the Iranians and only security forces could enter that.

Judge Kerber asked if there were secret and mass grave cemeteries. P3 affirmed and said that the secret cemetery was above the school [when shown on a map] and he located it during the questioning.

Judge Kerber asked him how he knew that it was a mass grave cemetery and if he remembered what he said during the questioning. P3 said that he could not remember. Judge Kerber read P3's previous statement that there were excavators and burial of corpses from different intelligence branches. P3 affirmed and said that it was the cemetery above the Najha school.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 how often he used to receive mails regarding corpses and P3 said two to three times. Wiedner asked if that means per day or generally. P3 said only these two – three times. Wiedner said that P3 stated in his prior questioning that it was two – three times per week, sometimes less and sometimes more. P3 said that he himself received reports two – three times, but he used to tell his colleagues to tell him if they found names [if they received mails].

Judge Wiedner asked P3 how many colleagues used to work with him. P3 said 12.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he used to write down the numbers of the corpses and P3 said no and that it was prohibited to open the mail.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously stated that he received reports about corpses in April 2011. P3 replied that he did not remember that it happened in April 2011, but rather in January 2012. P3 said that he did not remember the number of corpses.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously stated that he received "reports" in the mail. P3 said that the mail consisted of numbers and pictures.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he himself made tables of corpses/hospital numbers. P3 said no and that it was prohibited.

Questioning by Judges: Threats to P3's family

There were a series of questions about possible witness intimidation, specifically about an individual who allegedly threatened P3 and his family if P3 revealed anything. When P3 was asked about the individual's name who threatened P3's family, P3 mentioned a different name of this individual in comparison to what he stated in his police questioning, where P3 also stated that this individual threatened other families too. Judge Kerber asked if this individual was related to [one of the accused] and P3 said no. Judge Kerber told P3 that his memory was bad

[Additional details redacted].

Counsel Manuel Reiger asked for a break. Judge Kerber agreed.

Before the break, Prosecutor Klinge said that if the witness will continue to change his statements that were given during his police questioning, the prosecution will file a case against him.

Judge Kerber asked P3 if his memory got better, and P3 responded by welcoming questions from the Judge.

Further questions on witness intimidation were asked. P3 rectified his answers to correspond to his statements in the police questioning. [Additional details redacted].

Questioning by Judges: P3's work and his familiarity with Accused Al-Gharib

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he said that he wrote reports. P3 said no and there was a general report and the last count in it was 8000 [probably meaning the count of corpses]. Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously stated during the questioning "I made reports ...," and asked P3 if that was correct. P3 said that he stated that there were 8000 in the report and reports were delivered to the branch.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he was involved with the burial of corpses, and P3 denied this and said that he only dealt with mail delivery.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he was close to the mass graves. P3 said that he used to be in the training field, which is close to them and they could be seen from the training field.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously stated that there was an entry-permit to the cemeteries, and asked P3 if he was given one. P3 said no and said that "they" [those who delivered the bodies] did not come to them.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he was present/directly saw the corpses being transported. P3 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he knew Accused Al-Gharib. P3 said that he saw him once when the mail came and "they" were escorting the refrigerator trucks. When asked if P3 saw Al-Gharib before this moment, P3 said no and said that Al-Gharib was coming from Duma the time that he saw him.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 where he was when he saw Accused Al-Gharib with the refrigerator trucks. P3 said that when they [P3 and his branch] received the mail, they met at Najha crossroad مفرق نجها when Al-Gharib and the convoy were entering. P3 saw Al-Gharib, the escort of the refrigerator trucks and the cars. P3 said the cars count, license numbers and number of people who were supposed to arrive was written in the mail. Under prior police questioning P3 said that he only knew the convey was coming from Duma (as opposed to a specific branch).

Judge Wiedner asked how many escorts there were. P3 said that they were about 10.

Judge Wiedner asked what vehicles were there. P3 said that there were 2 pick-up trucks in addition to the refrigerator truck.

Judge Wiedner asked if the people were armed and what they were wearing. P3 said they were armed with rifles and military vests.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously mentioned during his questioning that they were armed with machine guns. P3 said that he did not remember and it was 8 years ago, but most of the military/security vehicles had mounted machine guns. P3 said that sometimes he memorizes a German word one day, and forgets it the next one [indicating that his memory was bad].

In response to a question, P3 said that he was not at the burial location, but rather opposite to Martyrs cemetery مقبرة الشهداء.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he spoke with Al-Gharib when the latter came. P3 denied this and said that it was not possible for someone to speak with another.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he spoke with his lawyer and whether he was afraid to give statements. P3 said that it was not about fear, but rather about memory. He said that he saw Al-Gharib on that occasion and he mentioned the name "Eyad," and so did his [P3's] colleagues.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he saw Al-Gharib at the cemetery. P3 said that he saw Al-Gharib at Najha bridge. P3 said it was prohibited to go to the cemetery and that P3 and his colleagues went there in the morning only to receive [check] the mail.

Judge Wiedner said this was different to what P3 stated during his prior police questioning. Wiedner asked if the meeting location was at the cemetery, and P3 said no and that it was prohibited to enter it in the first place.

Judge Wiedner asked about the mail and P3 said that it contained the number of vehicles, their license number and the number of persons who will come.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he had contact with Al-Gharib or if he greeted him. P3 said no and restated that he saw Al-Gharib only once. When asked when, P3 referred to that time in Najha. Wiedner asked how he knew that it was Al-Gharib. P3 said that the names of the incoming people were written down [in the mail]. P3 said he did not remember meeting Al-Gharib at Branch 295.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he knew about Al-Gharib's work. P3 said that Al-Gharib worked in Duma and was from Deir ez-Zor.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 how he knew about Al-Gharib. P3 said that Al-Gharib's family name was mentioned and he knew a few members. P3 said that he knew that Al-Gharib was maybe a captain نقيب.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 in which branch Al-Gharib used to work. P3 said that Al-Gharib was in the state security in Duma, and he was asked [during the questioning] whether Al-Gharib worked in Branch 215, and he replied that he did not know if 215 was responsible for Duma.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously stated in his 2019 questioning that Jamil Ad-Dabbous جميل الدبوس was the head of Duma detachment and used to come every now and then. P3 said that they used to come for training but did not know if Jamil's unit was Al-Gharib's unit. P3 told the police that they used to put them in the state security's armory.

Judge Wiedner stated that P3 previously mentioned that there were rumours that Al-Gharib joined ISIS, that he knew a lot about Al-Gharib during the police questioning, and asked P3 about the source of his information. P3 said that he asked about Al-Gharib in the Branch, but he did not know Al-Gharib's [military/group] affiliation.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 identified Al-Gharib during the police questioning as he recognized a person who resembles Al-Gharib and signed that photo. Wiedner then asked P3 how he was able to recognize Al-Gharib after seeing him once. P3 said that he said that the person in the photo resembles Al-Gharib about 90%, but he did not remember. Wiedner asked P3 how he was able to recognize Al-Gharib, and P3 said from his face (from the Najha occasion).

Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he said that Al-Gharib was a warrant officer. P3 said that he did not remember.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously said that Al-Gharib's work was related to demonstrations. P3 said that he did not remember and that Jamil Ad-Dabbous was responsible for Duma.

Judge Wiedner stated that P3 previously said that they [Al Gharib's group] used to forcefully stop the demonstrators and perhaps shoot at them. P3 said that he recalled that it was a general question, and said that there were demonstrations and the administration used to issue orders of quelling. P3 said he was asked [during the questioning] whether he saw Al-Gharib and he said no.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously stated that Al-Gharib was responsible for shooting at the demonstrations. Wiedner asked if there was specific information about Al-Gharib and P3 said no.

Judge Wiedner said that P3 mentioned that the Duma detachment, headed by Jamil Ad-Dabbous (relative of Al-Gharib), was responsible for beating demonstrators, and because Al-Gharib was working there, P3 assumed Al-Gharib was doing the same. P3 affirmed and added that he also said that he recognized Al-Gharib through his last name, since one can do that in the eastern areas.

Judge Kerber asked if P3 had difficulties and problems during the questioning. P3 denied this and said that he was treated well and he offered them help whenever they needed him. Kerber asked if there was a reverse translation and if he signed the copy of the script. P3 said that he revised the script and signed it, but the problem was his memory.

Lunch break

Judge Wiedner asked P3 what he meant when he used the term "after incidents" and P3 said that it meant "after March 14, 2011," when the uprising began. Wiedner asked what happened that day and P3 said that the first demonstration in Dar'a درعا began.

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 was detained himself. P3 said yes and it was in Branch 285, four to five days after the beginning of the uprising. Wiedner asked why and P3 said that his brother was detained so he left the branch to ask what happened with his brother. During P3's absence from work, he was summoned but was not there, and thus, he was detained for 3 days.

Judge Wiedner asked what exactly happened and P3 said that he was interrogated. Wiedner asked if he was mistreated and P3 said that he was put to Falaqa and Doulab (tyre). Wiedner asked if he considered that he was tortured and P3 [reluctantly] affirmed [it seemed like P3 did not consider his experiences as torture; he treated it as if it was normal and disciplinary punishment].

Judge Wiedner asked where he went after his release. P3 said that he was brought back to Branch 295.

Judge Wiedner asked P3 about Branch 255. P3 said he was assigned at 255, the information branch.

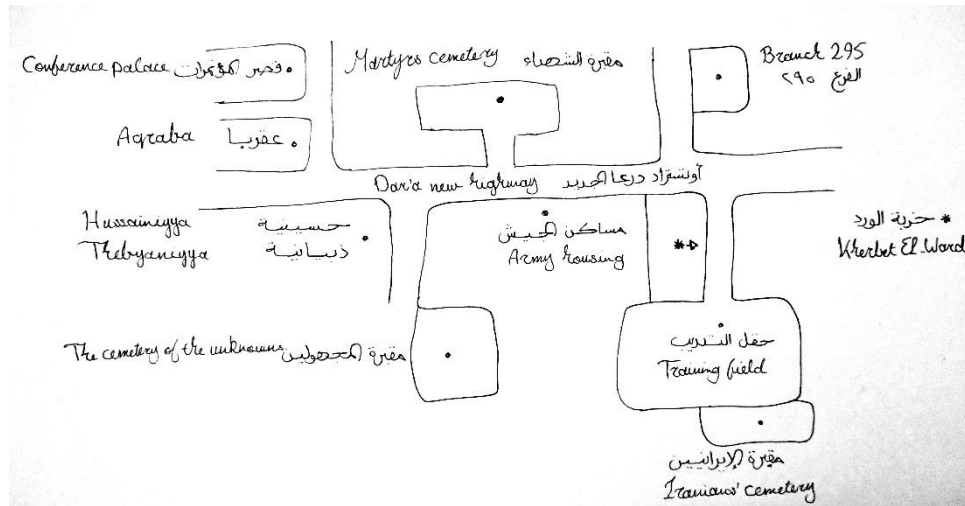

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 was in Branch 251, but P3 said no. Judge Wiedner said that P3 previously said he was in 251 in Kafar Souseh. كفرسوسة P3 said that he does not remember. P3 said that he said during the questioning that he had forgotten many things, and that he said 251, but then corrected it to 255. P3 said that Al-Khatib Branch is Branch 251 and is under the administration of Kafar Souseh.

A photo array that was shown during P3's questioning was shown in the courtroom. Judge Wiedner asked P3 if he recognized Al-Gharib during the questioning. P3 said that he recognized photo number two as Al-Gharib. Judge Kerber asked P3 if he recognized the person in the courtroom as Al-

Gharib [P3 did not look at the accused]. Kerber told P3 that she was asking him to look to his right and tell whether the person in the courtroom to the right is Al-Gharib [P3 turned briefly to the right then quickly to the front] and said that he recognized the person in the photo as Al-Gharib and the person in the courtroom resembles the one in the photo.

Sketch that P3 drew of the area around 295 during his questioning was shown in the courtroom (this is a redrawing):

A satellite photo from google map was shown (see below). Judge Kerber asked if P3 can recognize the location. P3 started to describe locations on the photo: Martyrs cemetery, مقبرة الشهداء, Branch 295, highway to Sayyeda Zeynab, سيدة زينب, Najha crossroad, مفرق نهجا, housing, training field, Kherbet Al-Ward, خربة الورد, Najha officers' housing, مسكن الضباط في نهجا, Iranian cemetery, and the civilian cemetery.

[Coordinates 33.410751, 36.368014]

Judge Wiedner asked where the meeting location for the refrigerator truck was. P3 said at Najha crossroad. Judge Kerber asked where did the truck drive after the meeting. P3 said in the direction of the Iranian cemetery.

A satellite photo of the Kafar Souseh administration branch and a photo from google maps were shown. P3 said that the map shows Branch 295 and started to describe the areas in the Branch.

[Coordinates: 33.407949, 36.383577]

Two photos of corpses from Caesar file were shown. Kerber asked P3 if he can explain the numbers on the bodies and he explained them as the following:

- Photo 1:
  - 1003: Maybe the prison and cell number
  - 227: Branch number
  - 3248: Serial number (could be a number that substitutes the name)
- Photo 2
  - 1099: Maybe the prison and cell number
  - 251: Branch number
  - 4558: Serial number (could be a number that substitutes the name)

Break

Questioning by Prosecutor Klinge

Prosecutor Klinge told P3 that it was nice to have his memory back [in a sarcastic manner] and asked him if corpses were transported before the uprising. P3 said that he does not know, because he began to work at the branch on November 15, 2010 and does not know what happened before then.

Klinge asked if corpses were transported between 2010 and 2011. P3 said he does not know.

Klinge asked P3 when the first transportation he knew of occurred. P3 said that his colleagues told him that at the beginning of Dar'a incidents, there were people who were "martyred" and brought to hospitals. However, he did not know who nor how many there were, because the regime was discreetly working during the Dar'a incidents.

Klinge asked P3 if his colleagues told him about their experience with the corpses. P3 said that they did not speak about the corpses, but only about where they were transported. P3 said that the people who had the best knowledge about this were doctors and military personnel.

Klinge asked if P3 followed up with what happened with the corpses in the refrigerator truck. P3 said that he began to follow up after the last incidents [uprisings].

P3 said that just like his own missing family members, others have missing family members whom they are searching for. P3 said that he would answer any court summon to testify, like he did in this [Koblenz] court, so that people who are searching for their relatives also know the truth.

Klinge asked P3 what he thinks happened to his family members. P3 said that during his work, he used to think that they were in the refrigerator trucks. Klinge asked P3 how he was searching for them, and P3 said that he asked everywhere and anyone who was released from prison about them, but got no information about them.

Klinge asked P3 if his family was pro-opposition. P3 said that some of his family members were previously members of the communist party and participated in demonstrations against the regime in the beginning. They [the 15 people] were detained in April 2011. P3 and his family were pursuing their whereabouts, until they were transferred to Damascus and disappeared.

Klinge asked if there were people who disappeared in 2011. P3 said that three of his family members disappeared, even though there was "nothing at that time" [meaning there were not wide-spread demonstrations or large-scale detentions]. P3 said that he was searching for them in the Caesar photos.

Klinge asked if there was an increase in the number of the corpses or the vehicles. P3 said that earlier during the "incidents," it was not a big number. The record was 100 people [corpses], but he did not know exactly how many were brought.

Klinge told P3 that he said that the number in the report was 8000. P3 said that in other branches the numbers could be high. P3 said that only a few of those detained in 2011 and 2012 were released, and the rest disappeared.

Klinge asked P3 if the numbers of corpses between April 2011 and January 2012 increased. P3 said it increased at the end of 2011 and the beginning of 2012. Klinge asked P3 why he said April 2011 and January 2012, and P3 said because it was the beginning of the uprising and the number of detentions was high.

Klinge continued to ask when the numbers of the detainees and the graves became high. P3 said that his brother and two cousins were detained in 2011 in [redacted], where the numbers were high and the numbers increased in other provinces. P3 said that they used to know the numbers of the detainees, but they did not know whether they were alive.

Klinge asked P3 when he saw corpses being transported. P3 said that he was not 100% sure, but it was between the end of 2011 - beginning of 2012.

Klinge asked P3 which cemetery Al-Gharib and the refrigerator truck headed towards. P3 said that the meeting point was at Najha crossroad. P3 said the number of people and vehicles was in the mail, and there were two cemeteries, one behind Najha housing and the other one was in the training field. Klinge asked P3 which cemetery Al-Gharib and the refrigerator truck went to. P3 said they headed to the interior one in the direction of the Iranian cemetery, but he was not 100% sure.

Klinge said that P3 saw Al-Gharib's name in the mail and asked him about the number of the people (corpses) in it. P3 said about 50 – 60 [stating that Al Gharib escorted about 50-60 corpses in his refrigerator truck].

Klinge said that P3 previously stated that he saw Al-Gharib twice and asked P3 if he remembers the details of the first meeting. P3 said that he mentioned it to the police, but does not remember. P3 apologized because he forgot the one before.

Klinge asked P3 if the name Mohammad Mo'alla محمد معلا rang a bell. P3 said that an escort for the Branch's head was from Mo'alla family.

Klinge said that P3 previously said [in his police questioning] that Mohammad Mo'alla introduced him to Al-Gharib and Klinge asked P3 where this person is. P3 said in Syria. Klinge asked if this person is an Alawite, and P3 said that he is either a Muslim or a Christian as Alawite is not written on the Syrian ID card [they are considered Muslims]. However, P3 said the family name is from Lattakia - Ein El Koroum عين الكروم - اللاذقية and they are Alawites [the village is under Hama's administration not Lattakia, but it is located on the borders of Hama-Lattakia].

Klinge asked P3 if that person introduced him to Al-Gharib. P3 said that he does not remember, but it could be true if he mentioned that in 2019 questioning.

Klinge asked P3 [sarcastically] if he was injured or hit on his head. P3 said that he was injured in 2012 and still has shrapnel in his body.

Klinge said that P3 has [just] said that whatever he said in his 2019 questioning is true. Klinge asked P3 if he agrees with that statement. P3 affirmed and said that at that time [in the 2019 questioning], he said everything he knows.

Kerber said that the session ended, but the witness is not yet dismissed. The questioning will be continued the next day.

The proceedings were adjourned at 03:40 p.m.

Trial Day 14 - June 25, 2020

There were about 8 spectators and 4 media individuals present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of Witness Alexander F. [full name redacted]

The first witness was Alexander F., a 32-year-old high commissioner at the Meckenheim Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA).

Questioning by Judges

Judge Kerber asked Alexander how he met P3. Alexander said that P3 came for questioning on July 24, 2019, during which P3 said that he does not know Accused Al-Gharib or Accused Raslan.

Judge Wiedner asked if the questioning included reverse translation, and Alexander affirmed.

Judge Wiedner further asked about the questioning, and Alexander said that P3 was very forthcoming. Alexander stated that he then got a phone call, after which he then informed P3 of $55 StPO. Alexander said that after he shared this, P3 became reserved and it was difficult for P3 to answer questions. Alexander said that he mentioned this as P3 mentioned trying to keep peace in the demonstrations and torture.

Judge Wiedner asked Alexander about his impression of P3, and Alexander said that P3 was well-informed, but P3 jumbled up many pieces of information.

Judge Wiedner asked how P3 knew Accused Al-Gharib. Alexander said that P3 said that they were from the same region (The prosecution later mentioned the questioning transcript states that P3 said that they knew each other from the intelligence branch, not via the same region).

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a photo array. Alexander affirmed and said that P3 searched through the photos and examined photo number 2. Alexander stated that when P3 finished, he told Alexander that person was Al-Gharib, whom he knew.

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 talked openly about Al-Gharib. Alexander said that P3 talked relatively open about him before Alexander informed him of his $55 StPO right, but after that, P3 was not open anymore and P3 talked more about Branch 295 [the "storming/raid" branch]. Alexander said that P3 was not 100% sure, but he gave an impression that he saw Al-Gharib more than once.

Judge Wiedner asked about the call Alexander received during the questioning, and Alexander said that it was from his superior who told him to keep it short as P3 confused many things.

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 drew the sketch of Branch 295 and surrounding buildings [shown on Day 13], and Alexander affirmed. Wiedner asked if P3 seemed certain, and Alexander said that P3 was relatively good and explained the streets and the cemeteries.

Judge Wiedner asked why P3 and Al-Gharib met [referring to their meeting addressed in Day 13 by P3] and Alexander said that P3 told him that lists needed to be delivered.

Judge Wiedner asked about the branch where Al-Gharib worked. Alexander said that Al-Gharib worked in Jamil Ad-Dabbous's جميل الدبوس branch in Duma's unit, under the responsibility of Jamil Al-Hasan جميل الحسن.

Judge Wiedner asked if codes were used. Alexander affirmed saying that there were codes in messages from both sides [probably meaning between administration (where orders come from) and executive forces (Accused Al-Gharib's unit)] to identify each other. Alexander said that according to P3's testimony, Al-Gharib would have been a first sergeant.

Judge Wiedner asked what P3 said about Al-Gharib's tasks. Alexander stated that P3 said that Al-Gharib was responsible for maintaining peace in the demonstrations, and said that plain-clothed people used to shoot on demonstrations and detain demonstrators. Wiedner asked if Al-Gharib personally participated personally in that, and Alexander said that he did not ask P3 that question.

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 knew about Al-Khatib Branch. Alexander stated that P3 said he heard of it and it is under the general intelligence, and P3 also mentioned Palestine Branch, which is under the military intelligence.

Questioning by Defence and Plaintiff Counsel

Al-Gharib's defense counsel, Schuster, asked if P3's answers were concrete. Alexander said that P3 was sensible, but was beating around the bush.

Schuster asked how P3 got his information, and Alexander said that P3 said he got his information from Branch 251. Schuster asked Alexander if the answer satisfied him, and Alexander said no and that P3 mixed up Branches 255 and 251.

Schuster asked if Alexander reviewed the names provided by P3 during the questioning, e.g. Jamil Ad-Dabbous, and Alexander said no.

Schuster asked if P3 showed Alexander photos of people, and Alexander said that P3 showed him a photo of a person who lives in Berlin, but Alexander had no information about him.

Scharmer, plaintiff's counsel, asked Alexander about his own impression of P3, and Alexander said that P3 was confident but intensely reserved after being told of §55 StPO.

Scharmer said that P3 mentioned that Al-Gharib was 37-years-old at that time and asked how did P3 know that. Alexander said that he did not ask about it.

Andreas Schulz, plaintiff counsel, asked if it was possible for a witness to give an anonymous testimony and Alexander said no. Alexander mentioned that French investigators wanted to question P3 in February, but P3 did not want to testify anymore.

Questioning by others

Judge Kerber asked Alexander about the French authorities' investigation. Alexander said that after P3 did not want to testify anymore, Alexander contacted Prosecutor Klinge to ask how to proceed.

P3 was questioned as to possible witness intimidation and alleged threats he received.

[Information redacted].

Patrick Kroker, plaintiff counsel, asked if P3 changed the information he provided during the questionings, and Alexander said that he could not answer that question. Kroker asked if P3 was uncertain during the second questioning, and Alexander said no. Alexander said that P3 was certain and had no anxiety.

Testimony of Witness Christian K. [full name redacted]

The 2nd witness was Christian K., a 36-year-old police officer at the Meckenheim Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA). Christian testified about a hearing on August 14, 2019. Christian was also the second interrogator (together with Alexander F. ) on July 24, 2019.

Christian affirmed that he informed P3 of §55 and §57 [criminal consequences of an incorrect statement] of the StPO.

Judge Kerber asked if there were difficulties with the translator, and Christian said no. Christian affirmed the use of reverse translation in the questioning.

Judge Wiedner asked why P3 was questioned a second time. Christian explained that this was not an unusual procedure as new questions came up while evaluating P3's first questioning. Christian said the focus during the second questioning was on what matched with the first hearing and if there were similarities with Al-Gharib's hearing. Christian noted that information on the structure of Syria's intelligence services have been contradictory, although the information on P3's own branch was quite plausible.

Christian stated that P3 said he knew Al-Gharib because they come from the same region and added that P3 also talked about the intelligence apparatus' structure, but Christian does not believe that P3's information was concrete.

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 changed his information between both questionings. Christian said that he believes that P3 gave wrong information in the first questioning (e.g. that Division 40 belongs to the military intelligence during the first questioning but stated it belongs to the inner intelligence during the second one).

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 located Branch 251 in Kafar Souseh, كفر سوسة, and Christian said that P3 did that, but P3 said he could be wrong as Kafar Souseh is way before Al-Khatib.

Judge Wiedner asked if P3 was certain when he was shown photos of the maps, and Christian said that P3 was very certain and drew a sketch in the first questioning.

Judge Wiedner asked what P3 said about corpses' transportation. Christian stated that P3 said corpses were transported with excavators in the first questioning, and that P3 mentioned they were digging mass graves in the second questioning.

Judge Wiedner asked about the first time P3 saw Al-Gharib. Christian stated that P3 said that he saw Al-Gharib in 2012, but he was not sure. Christian added that P3 said that Al-Gharib came to Branch 295 for training, and then Mohammad Mo'alla, محمد معلا, who worked in Branch 295, introduced P3 to Al-Gharib.

Judge Wiedner asked about the forces/convoy present at the meeting point in Najha. Christian stated that P3 said that the forces were armed and came with pick-up vehicles.

Judge Wiedner asked Christian about his impression of P3, and Christian said that P3 was talking smoothly and was certain.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know more about the situation with the convoy. Christian stated that P3 said that he [P3] and Al-Gharib met at the Martyr's graveyard for a file handover. Christian added that P3 said it has not always been about corpses and sometimes they would transport ammunition as well.

Schuster, counsel for Al-Gharib, asked if they met more than once outside of Branch 295

Schuster asked if P3 gave fluent, direct answers when talking about the intelligence service's structure or if he needed to think about it, and Christian said the answers were fluent.

Schuster asked if Christian asked P3 about the source of his information and Christian replied that P3 told them his information came from his work in Branch 251 – which seemed to be a typo [he actually worked in 255].

Schuster also asked about a crime security service that P3 has mentioned in the previous questioning. Christian explained that they asked P3 if the crime security service belongs to the police, and P3 said no as it is part of the intelligence. Schuster asked if they could verify this information and Christian said no.

Schuster asked if P3 differentiated between the graves, and Christian stated that P3 said that mass grave 1 was publicly known as all corpses (soldiers and detainees) have been buried there, but mass grave 2 was only for corpses of detainees of branches of the intelligence services.

Schuster asked if P3 knew the direction where the convoy of Al-Gharib headed and Christian said towards mass grave 1.

Judge Wiedner asked if the corpse delivery was a normal procedure or if there have been transports to Branch 295 as well, and Christian stated that P3 said it was not allowed to bring corpses to the Branch.

Schulz asked about P3's work across the different branches, but Christian said he could not answer this as he only knew that P3 said he worked for 255, but forwarded information to other branches.

In response to a question, Christian said that there are further insights concerning the mass graves in Najha. There have been two witnesses: a guard in al-Khatib and a victim/witness of al-Khatib who testified that he received the dead body of his brother from Najha through a bribe.

Scharmer asked if Christian asked P3 about his rank, and Christian said no, but Alexander probably asked.

10 Minute Break

Questioning of P3, continued

Questioning by Al-Gharib's counsel

Schuster asked if P3 studied informatics in a military college, and P3 denied going to a military college.

Schuster asked P3 if he worked in Branch 205 and asked him to explain the course of his study. P3 said that he did not enter 205, but rather 295 on November 15, 2010. P3 said he first did a training course in Branch 255 (information branch), continued in Branch 295 until 2012, and then went to Sayyeda Zeynab, before he defected from the regime and went to his family.

Schuster asked P3 about his work in Branch 295. P3 said that the regime nominates 5 names to apply to be a part of the state security directorate and his name was nominated. P3 applied and took some exams, and then he was accepted and joined 295. He said he later joined 255.

Schuster asked P3 if he was actively working in Branch 295 before he went to 255, and P3 affirmed.

Schuster asked P3 where he studied, and P3 said that he mentioned to the police that he studied 3 years in Homs, then went to Branch 255. P3 said he joined state security for the first time on November 15, 2010. Schuster asked if his studies was related to the intelligence services. P3 said that it was like a military college, an academic college.

Schuster asked P3 if he did a military training in the state security, and P3 said that state security's speciality was training on the use of pistols and machine-guns.

Schuster asked if there were physical trainings, and P3 said that they used to do morning sport exercises with academic lessons. Schuster asked P3 where they used to do sport exercises, and P3 said that it was at the school of the military college, information department.

Schuster asked P3 when he was in Branch 295 and what his work there was like. P3 said that he had full working hours and he used to travel [assuming to his family] on Friday. P3 said they had shifts at work.

Schuster asked about the shift schedules and what P3 used to do in the morning. P3 said that they used to gather at 08:30 am and say the slogan. Schuster asked what was the slogan, and P3 answered [as if it was obvious] "One Arab nation, that has an eternal message" [i.e. Ba'th party slogan]. P3 said they had morning assembly like schools and there was a corporal who used to check the presence/absence of the units. P3 said that Branch 295's head used to join and sometimes his deputies would join as well.

Schuster asked what P3 did after he went to his office. P3 said that the 295 school had about 3,200 students, volunteers, conscripts, officers and non-commissioned officers. Schuster asked what P3 himself used to do and P3 said that he used to join the morning assembly, then go to his office, deliver the mail to the Branch's head, and then distribute the mail to the branch's cafeteria or to any other entity.

Schuster asked P3 if he was a postman and P3 said that the mail is not like regular mail but rather, it was files. P3 gave an example of mail for the kitchen, which would list when items such as meat would arrive. P3 said he used to deliver these mails and if there were any audits, he used to deliver them to the Branch's head to sign them. P3 added that the head used to check who would be standing as guards that day, how many goods would be delivered (Schuster asked if he meant the head of Branch 295 and P3 affirmed). P3 added that a first-class warrant officer was responsible for managing the restaurant, another person was responsible for the repair workshop, another one for the cars that come and go, and the guards had a chief.

In response to a question by Schuster, P3 said that they were around 10 and each one used to go to a certain place (e.g., to the management, to the external mail, internal mail) on a daily basis and then return to the branch.

Schuster asked what time P3 used to finish work, and P3 said that he used to go home after work. Judge Kerber intervened and said that this question was precise and needed to be answered with a time. P3 replied that there were no fixed working times and it depended on when someone was told they could go home.

Schuster asked if P3 used to show up every day at 08:30 am, and P3 affirmed.

Schuster asked if there was a place where the mail was gathered before the distribution. P3 stated that there was a specific place for external mail from management and another specific place for mail for the ammunition stores (armory), and all this was within Branch 295 [each department had its own mail].

Schuster told P3 not to answer in a general way and not to avoid his questions. Schuster then asked P3 if he underwent fitness and shooting training. P3 said that he used to do fitness exercises with his colleagues when he had spare time. P3 said he told the police that he used to exercise with his colleagues and used to teach them lessons (P3 said that he often went outside with others, trained them and gave them lessons in informatics).

Schuster asked P3 to stay in the fitness subject and asked him if there was a special place for training. P3 said that there were two fields for fitness training in the branch, as he showed the previous day. P3 said that there was a specific place for shooting training.

Dr. Anna Oehmichen, plaintiff counsel, demanded that Schuster address the witness directly. Judge Kerber interrupted her and said that she leads the session and that plaintiff counsel should restrain themselves.

Schuster asked if P3 himself used to shoot, and P3 said that he trained for shooting.

Schuster said that he was asking because P3 previously said that he did not do a training and said that the building [building for Iranians only] was built on June 04, 2010. P3 said that as he mentioned previously, it was prohibited to enter that location. P3 added that people from outside [foreigners] used to come to train there, and it provided accommodation for the Iranians.

Schuster asked P3 if he underwent exercise and shooting trainings there. P3 said that he trained in locations within the administration [buildings], but not in the building for Iranians.

Schuster asked how P3 knew that it was built on June 04, 2010, and P3 said that he asked about the building when he came and he was wondering why they were prohibited from entering. P3 said he was told that it was only for the "people from outside." Schuster asked P3 if he asked when it was precisely built. P3 said that he asked and was told that it was recently founded. Schuster commented saying that it was "recent," and P3 affirmed and said that it was a recent building.

Schuster asked P3 to focus and asked P3 to describe what he did at the Sayyeda Zeynab unit. P3 said the Sayyeda Zeynab detachment was responsible for the protection of the shrine. P3 said there were 2 detachments: one under administration of state security and another one under the administration of the military intelligence.

Schuster asked him to answer in general what he did at Sayyeda Zeynab. P3 said he transferred there because he wanted to stay away from trouble and tried to get transferred through a "wasta" [a connection] because the nature of the work [in Sayyeda Zeynab] was more administrative. P3 added that the detachment was located opposite to the shrine.

Schuster asked about P3's tasks. P3 said that the detachment was responsible for the protection of the shrine, its visitors and the security of the area.

Schuster asked P3 which branch he belonged to. P3 said that he still belonged to Branch 295, as his documents were still there.

Schuster stated that P3 said that he was transferred to Branch 300. P3 said that he was transferred at the end of 2012, and Sayyeda Zeynab was under administration of Branch 300, but he did not stay there for a long time. He said he came at the beginning of February 2012 and defected in Ramadan 2012.

Schuster asked what was the specific month he defected, and P3 said he did not exactly know. He added that he was sure that it was on the 28th of the month, because he still remembers that salaries were given at the 30th of the month, and he defected two days before taking his salary [Ramadan 2012 began on July 20 and ended on August 18. So P3 could have meant July 28, 2012].

Schuster asked P3 to view the google maps photos and asked if he remembered the locations of mass graves 1 and 2. P3 affirmed and said that he mentioned both to the police. Schuster said that he was not able to see the numbers and asked P3 to point to them using the laser pointer. P3 said that he was not asked about mass grave number 2 at the police and therefore, did not add it to the photo. P3 then pointed to Kherbet El-Ward and said that number 2 was behind it.

Schuster asked P3 if he remembered what he told the police about the direction Al-Gharib's group took after the meeting. P3 said that the meeting was under the bridge and he said at the police, as well as yesterday [the previous day], that the group went to this direction [see the black arrow below].

Map of the two mass graves P3 identified and the direction of where Al-Gharib's group went after P3's meeting with him:

Schuster told P3 that the direction he was pointing to was different and asked him if the group headed in the direction of number 1. P3 affirmed.

Judge Kerber interrupted and said that P3 pointed the previous day to that direction [see above, red arrow], and then asked if the group headed south towards 2 or west towards 1. P3 said that they headed towards 1, but at the crossroad there is a possibility to turn and head to the west [see below, blue arrow].

Schuster told P3 that he pointed to the south the previous day. P3 said that he said that they were heading to that “direction,” but did not mean that it was the “driving course” [route]. P3 added that he added the numbers only to explain the photo not the directions.

Schuster asked P3 what was his last rank. P3 said that he was a second lieutenant ملازم when he defected.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsel

Schulz said that P3 mentioned that he was mistreated, and asked P3 if he shared that with the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF). P3 said that during his asylum procedure, he shared that he was confined/detained in Syria. Schulz interrupted and said that was not his question, and asked if he said that he was tortured. P3 stated that he said he was hit.

Schulz read a story from P3’s prior questioning, where P3 mentioned an individual, [name redacted] who was detained, tortured and executed because he defected. P3 asked to repeat the name and Schulz said that he did not finish. Judge Kerber repeated the name and continued reading methods of torture that were listed as used in Branch 295: Shabh, water with electricity, hot iron bars, and all kinds of methods.

Judge Kerber asked if it was correct that P3's interrogator in Syria told him that they wanted to show him what happens when someone tries to defect. P3 said that some of his colleagues and the head of the interrogation unit, Isma'il Shadid, إسماعيل شديد, told him that, and then told him that it was not evident that he [P3] intended to defect. P3 said he was beaten and water was poured over him.

Schulz said that P3 mentioned two methods of torture the previous day, but he mentioned more to the BAMF. P3 said that after the first beating, one forgets the other methods of torture.

Schulz asked P3 if he knew Ali Makhlof علي مخلوف. P3 said that the police asked about him and he answered that he is a relative to Al-Assad family. Schulz asked if P3 had something to do with him, and P3 said no. Schulz asked if P3 received reports from him.

Kerber interrupted and asked Schulz if he meant Ali Mamlouk, علي مملوك, and Schulz said yes. P3 said that Mamlouk is the head of state security directorate in Damascus and P3 used to deliver mail to Mamlouk’s assistants.

Scharmer said that P3 told the defence that he was a second lieutenant when he defected. P3 said yes and that he had that rank when he came to Branch 295.

Scharmer said that P3 mentioned that he saw lists with numbers of corpses and hospitals and asked him if he still had visual memory of them and was able to redraw them.

P3 asked for a paper and drew a sketch [below is a redrawing]:

Redraw of P3's sketch of the lists he used to see:

	رقم (٦٠١) number (601)	رقم المستشفى Hospital number
رقم الفرع Branch number	رقم الشهيد Martyr's number	تاريخ Date
٢٥١ 251	٣٤١٥ 3415	٢٠١٢ / ١ / ١ 1/1/2012
٢٢٧ 227	٣٤١٦ 3416	٢٠١٢ / ١ / ١ 1/1/2012

P3 said that there was a stamp of the forensic physician and the date of the death was most probably the delivery date [of the corpse].

Scharmer asked if the stamp came from a forensic physician [a person]. P3 said the stamp stated "forensic medicine," but he did not examine if there was a name of a physician or department in which the physician worked (he did not pay attention to the details when he used to receive the mail).

Judge Kerber asked if the word "forensic medicine" was written. P3 said that it should be there [on the document].

Scharmer asked if the forensic physician also signed other lists regarding weapons and goods. P3 said no and that the forensic physician is a governmental employee—like in Germany—who documents the cause and date of the death.

Scharmer told the translator that he read "Martyr's number" and asked him if "Martyr" could have a different meaning but the translator said no.

Scharmer told P3 that he earlier saw him quivering during some questions and asked him about the reason. P3 said that he wanted to apologize to the judges and the general prosecution, because he arrived at night to Koblenz and did not sleep well.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked if the cause of death was written down in the lists. P3 said that they did not include that in the lists. P3 gave an example that he had an uncle who was detained in 2012 and he and his family kept on following up on him through every branch until they were finally told that his uncle was in Harasta hospital. P3 said his uncle was a diabetic patient and his family went to see how the corpse and the file would be handed. He stated that the family was told to sign a document that stated he died a "normal death." P3 said that only his uncle's belongings were handed, but not his corpse. P3 stated that sometimes in the first 2 lines, "they" write the name of the hospital and followed by the cause of the death on the second line. Sometimes they write "normal death" and sometimes they write nothing.

P3 asked if he can state something, and he was given permission. P3 thanked the court and said that he would come in anytime he would be summoned.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:30 p.m. The next trial will be July 01, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 6

Hearing dates of July 1, 2, 3, & 6, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

[Information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor].

(Information located in parentheses is information stated by the witness, judges or counsel).

Summary / Highlights

Trial Day 15

- P4 testified about his experience as a detainee in Al-Khatib Branch. P4 said he was taken by armed militia members, and was falsely accused of leading operations and possessing weapons. P4 testified about the harsh and cruel living situation in Al-Khatib, including the overpacked cells and inhumane food and water access. He described torture that he endured and witnessed in the prison, including Shabbh. P4 was eventually able to escape his detention by paying a bribe to Adeeb Zaytoun, someone who worked in Branch 251 and who P4 knew before being detained.

Trial Day 16

- P5, the second insider witness in this trial, testified about his experiences as a guard in Branch 251, naming the hierarchy of the branch. P5 identified Accused Raslan in a photo array during police questioning and in court. He testified that Raslan was the head of the interrogation unit at Branch 251. P5 provided a sketch of a map of Branch 251 and provided insight on Division 40, stating that the division had unique features and authority to do what it wants to do, even though it was technically under the command of Branch 251. He testified that he saw certain detainees being beaten, but said he did not see Raslan beat detainees. P5 stated he defected from the government, in part due to the injustice he witnessed.
- Two German government officials testified about P5's police questioning. One of them stated that P5 defected due to the torture he saw.
- Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed read a statement by a previous detainee who claimed that Accused Raslan had power and authority within Branch 251. Specifically, this individual stated that Ali Mamlouk scolded and slapped Accused Raslan for detaining him. Counsel Mohammed argued this could counter the defense's narrative that Accused Raslan lacked authoritative powers.

Trial Day 17

- The questioning of P5 continued. P5 identified Branch 251 via satellite photos and provided further details on Division 40. He said that individuals who were chosen to work at Division 40 were selected through a special process. P5 said that Accused Raslan's face was familiar to him, and testified about an instance where Accused Raslan told personnel to stop beating detainees. P5 also stated he heard screams of pain while he was working at the Branch.

Trial Day 18

- P6, Accused Al-Gharib's cousin, who was formerly detained, testified about his experiences and relationship with Al-Gharib who was a warrant officer. P6 stated that he did not interact much with Al-Gharib as a child, but began to interact more with him as an adult. P6 stated that he became politically engaged with former opposition figures and the uprising. He was detained for ten hours once for attempting to partake in a demonstration and write about it on Facebook which an interrogator referred to as posting "fake news". P6 said that Accused Al-Gharib declared his support for the uprising in front of P6 and others, and provided an example where Al-Gharib warned an individual that they are going to be detained, which allowed that individual to flee and avoid arrest.

Notes from the trial monitor:

- There was a feeling (among the public) that the numbers given by P4 were exaggerated (for example, he said he saw 500,000 corpses in Syria), but P4 stated multiple times that they were not. Additionally, there was a lot of confusion about Abu Ja'far who was identified as a guard at Branch 251. At some point, the judges stopped asking about this.
- P5 denied seeing a corpse, though the judges told him that he said he did in his police questioning. The public was surprised that he saw only one "incapacitated" person and no female detainees during his ca. two years of service. But, P5's statements were concrete in general and he explained matters that arose from previous sessions, such as the definition of "volunteers."
- Judge Wiedner repeatedly expressed that he could not understand how P6 did not find a problem with his cousin serving in the state security, even though P6 repeatedly described branches were "human slaughter houses."

Trial Day 15 – July 01, 2020

There were about 10 spectators and 4 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:45 am and were slightly delayed as the witness was late.

Testimony of P4,

The witness was P4 [name redacted] a 30-year-old roof tiler who testified about his experiences as a detainee in Syria.

P4's detention

P4 began by explaining his view and experiences in Syria. He stated that there is "no country" in Syria as one merely deals with military militias and mafias.

P4 said he was detained, his sister was abducted, and his brother was detained and killed.

P4 stated that he had a hotel in Zayyeda Zeynab سيدة زينب and around 15 – 16 houses, but all his and his family's properties were destroyed.

P4 said he was detained on the first day of Ramadan 2012 [July 20]. He stated that armed individuals, without military ranks, came (most of them were Shiite and the majority were Iranian, Afghanis and Iraqis). P4 said that he used to live in an area that was mostly inhabited by Iraqi Shiites. He said that when he was detained, he knew half of the people who detained him as they used to live in the same area. He said they were members of the following sectarian groups: Hezbollah حزب الله, Asa'eb Al-Haq, عصائب الحق, Abu Al-Fadl Al-Abbas, أبو الفضل العباس, and Zaynabiyyoun. زينبيون. P4 said that the Syrian army was like a "mop" [derogatory term] that used to bring these military groups food [serve them].

A day prior to his detention, P4 said he was in his hotel. He said that three buses arrived from Homs, filled with Sunni women and children who fled from the war. P4 said they stopped at the hotel and asked him for a place to stay and he helped them. He said that an hour after the buses' arrived, problems began and his sister disappeared.

P4 stated "they" stormed the area the following day, which was the first day of Ramadan. He said that "they" came to the hotel's entrance and took water and food [from him]. P4 stated that these people were the same people who detained him afterwards. There were more than 1000 armed individuals (P4 said they did not have the Free Syrian Army there) who were standing on the highway, opposite the hotel.

P4 said that after "they" took water, bread and food, P4 told them that he wanted to get his father, and asked them whether he should go with them or take another route. He said he was on his way to his father and was passing Al-Khomeini hospital مشفى الخميني, orchids and a tree that measured two meters in diameter. P4 said "they" started striking it using three tank shells, causing the tree to evaporate after 30 minutes. P4 stated that they came to him and took him. P4 said they made him stand in front of a wall and shot around the outer shape of his body [to essentially draw this body on the wall via bullets]. P4 said at that point, the torturing "movie" [series of events] went from 9:30 pm to 5:30 am, in which he was beaten. P4 said he was then put him in an armoury, which he thought was a cell, and was taken down to the basement a half-hour later. P4 said that this was at Sayyeda Zeynab crossroad. P4 said that they started to bring in more detained people from the streets, who ranged from 17 to 40 years old, and were neither related to FSA nor were armed.

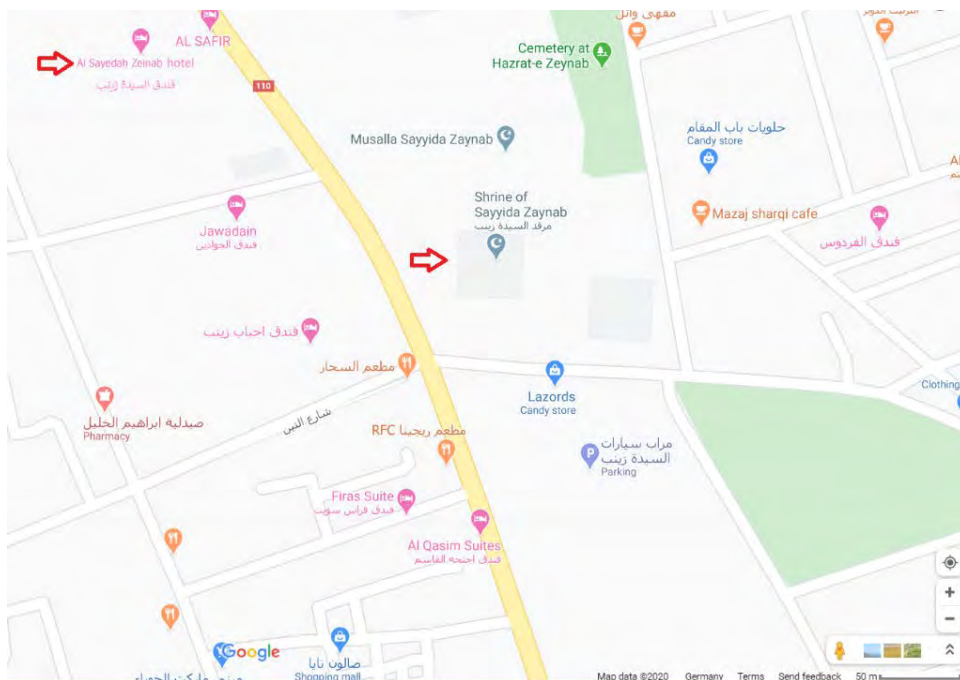

Chief Judge Dr. Kerber asked P4 to show locations on the map. P4 said that he walked an hour as he was beaten with stones, iron and glass. He pointed to a location on the map and said that it contained weapons that could erase Syria [from the map].

[Coordinates 33.434592, 36.347077]

Judge Kerber asked him where his hotel was, and P4 pointed to the Al- Khomeini hospital, the Iranian ambassador's home, and the location of his hotel, called As-Sayyeda Zeynab hotel فندق السيدة زينب. P4 also showed the shrine of Sayyeda Zeynab.

[Coordinates 33.445571, 36.338548]

In response to questions by Judge Wiedner, P4 said this was in the southern area of Damascus and the tree was opposite to Al-Khomeini hospital. P4 pointed to the location of his home.

[The below image was not shown in the courtroom, but P4 probably meant this tree (in front of the hospital on page 2). It is a screenshot from google earth].

[Coordinates 33.434164, 36.346773]

Judge Kerber asked if more people came when he was detained. P4 said that multiple “movies” [The witness constantly referend to incidents of arbitrary detention and torture as أفلام in Arabic] happened aside from his detention. P4 said there were Shiite with weapons and knives who killed anyone [passing]; a few days before Ramadan, these people killed around 450 with knives and swords. P4 also said a helicopter conducted an airstrike with three missiles that killed 580 people. He said that this occurred for three months.

Judge Kerber asked if he was tortured when he was detained. P4 said that he was taken to a state security detachment where he was unconscious for a few days. P4 said that he and the other detainees were in a closed room, and military forces used to return after failed operations and release their anger on detainees [physically]. P4 said he stayed in the detachment for five days, where they used to beat the detainee but did not let him die.

P4's transfer to Al-Khatib Branch

P4 said they were then transferred to Al-Khatib, where he felt that he was in a whole different place underground, unable to tell the difference between day or night. P4 stated that the numbers [of the detainees] were tremendous and unimaginable inside Al-Khatib. He said that upon his arrival, they were “welcomed” for one hour by whipping, electricity, tyres, cables or Shabh. P4 said that detainees then were stripped and frisked, before they were sent to their cells. P4 said “they” used to do whatever they want. P4 said that he did not feel anything and due to the excessive beating, he only wanted to sleep.

Judge Kerber asked why they were not allowed to sleep and P4 said that they detained people to torture them, not to let them sleep. P4 continued that after being frisked, they asked detainees if they wanted to go to the internal, the external or the “24” cells [P4 did not explain what “24” cells were]. Each type of cell has its own atmosphere and a different number of detainees. P4 said that the external one was the biggest cell in the branch and its ceiling was from iron. Thus, P4 said, one gets tortured even when he sleeps as the heat from the sun hits the cell’s ceiling.

P4 remarked that more detainees were constantly put inside the cell, and the guards did not consider that the cell was at capacity. P4 said that when a detainee was told that he had to go for a “tyre” round, he became happy as they could at least go to have some air outside the cell.

In response to a question, P4 explained that they could not see the sun in the cell, but because the ceiling was made from iron, the sun made the cell conditions extremely hot.

P4 added that on the first day, there were 520 people inside the cell; the guards counted them three to four times per day and 15 – 20 people were brought in every now and then. He added that one cannot imagine the numbers inside and that there was no place for sitting down. P4 gave an example of the truck that one sees on the highway filled with pigs over each other, then said that that is what was done to them. P4 said that if one is a Syrian, then his dignity, honour and money belong to the country.

P4 remarked there were huge numbers of people inside the cell and they once reached 800. (The witness said that he was shaking [inside the courtroom]). He stated that there was no air, and people used to sleep above each other, among them were corpses. P4 told the judges that all this was reality and told them not to think that it was imagination.

Judge Kerber asked how big was the cell. P4 said that it was 10 – 12 by 5 meters.

P4 spoke about the food and water conditions. He said that the food was a piece of potato dipped in diesel or cooked in diesel (he was not sure). P4 said the external cell had no water and they drank from the toilet, but the amount was scant. P4 said that there were six people in charge who used to open or close the toilets according to their mood, or maybe they had orders, but P4 did not know.

Judge Kerber asked how he knew this was in Al-Khatib Branch. P4 said someone [apparently a prisoner] told him this after 15 days. He said he became certain later on as he went once to the interrogation and found someone upstairs whom he knew was working in Al-Khatib.

Judge Kerber asked if he had a chance to look outside the window. P4 said that there was no window.

Judge Kerber asked about the interrogation. P4 said that he was taken once to the desk in the corridor where the interrogator made the detainee confess something that one did not do. P4 said it was upstairs and that they were left standing in the corridor for around five minutes. He said there were corpses on the ground, women, three children with him in the external cell, and a 70-year-old man with a missing eye whose left hand and right leg were amputated.

Judge Kerber asked how old the children were. P4 said that one was seven or eight, one was ten and the other was thirteen or fourteen. P4 said that one or two of them died, because one of them was young and he had problems before coming to prison. P4 added that the older people were hardly breathing.

Judge Kerber asked about his stay in the external cell. P4 said that he stayed there for nine days before he was taken to the internal cell, which was more difficult. P4 said that the walls of the internal cells were all made from cement, and the door was only opened when they wanted to put prisoners inside. P4 said that they made a hole in the ceiling above the door with a motor [motorized fan] to let air in, but it did nothing. He described the sweat as being 70 cm high. P4 said he stayed there for around 20 days and the number [of prisoners] was no less than 480.

Judge Kerber asked about the cell's size and P4 said that it was five by five meters. Kerber asked how could that number of people fit inside. P4 described it similar to macaroni being cooked as people were all above each other.

In response to Judge Kerber, P4 said that everything about the internal cell was awful, except that there was a toilet. He added every two weeks there were two soaps for the whole cell and the guard used to swipe the soap over the head [of the prisoner] and asked for the next one [prisoner].

In response to Judge Kerber, P4 said that there was almost no food. Most of the days, it was a piece of diesel-flavoured potato and they were offered jam every 10 days. That was served on a plate with two spoons for 50 people. Kerber asked if they used to share food and P4 said that they used to fight and beat each other.

Judge Kerber asked about P4's health condition in prison. P4 said that he was not able to see for a while due to the beating. He was offered to go to the hospital, but he refused and was scared. He added that it was not "they" who offered that, but prisoners told him that they were going to the hospital and asked whether he wanted to come along. He said that they went and never came back.

P4 stated that when he was detained, he had 3,660 Syrian pounds that were taken and held by officers [money and belongings that should be given back to prisoners upon their release]. P4 asked a military officer in the prison to take money that he had as part of his belongings and bring him an eye ointment. P4 said the military person went away for an hour and came back with a black ointment that could have been automotive grease, which he used.

Judge Kerber asked if he had money in prison. P4 said that prisoners used to ask the torturers for something during the beating. Kerber asked where the money was and said that she could not understand that he had money in prison. P4 said he had money when he was detained that the prison confiscated. He added that as he mentioned before, he was not living in a country but rather among mafias, and "they" [the prison authority] used to take the prisoners' belongings [for themselves]. P4 knew people who entered the prison with items such as cars but after they were released, they had nothing.

P4 said he handed over three mobile phones when he was detained, but was given back only one when he was released. Judge Wiedner asked if they returned the money to him after he was released, and P4 said no and that he was given a mobile phone, his keys and his ID card.

Judge Kerber asked about health conditions related to the skin. P4 said that the cell was closed "like a tuna can," and no air or sun entered. He stated that a rash used to appear on the body and then started to eat the meat [of the skin]. He remarked that there was a Tunisian in the prison with him who had that in his leg and his toe disappeared.

Judge Kerber asked if he was interrogated when he was in the internal or external cell. P4 said when he was in the internal cell, he was taken to the third floor. P4 said that he was put in the kitchen and peeked for five minutes under the blindfold right and left, and saw many corpses and the color red when he looked at the cell area.

Judge Kerber asked what happened in the kitchen. P4 said that he stayed around for half-hour or an hour on the floor in a prone position and was not allowed to look around. He said that was the only time he felt the sun above him, but did not see it. P4 said he did not know what was happening, but he was hearing shelling sounds. When asked if the windows were open, P4 said that it was sunny.

Judge Kerber said that P4 previously stated in police questioning that he looked through the window, saw trees and a street, and concluded that it was Al-Khatib Branch. P4 said that he remembered that question and stated that he answered that he was on the floor, the window was there and he saw the top of buildings outside, but he was not able to stand up. He confirmed that he was in Al-Khatib, because it is located on Baghdad street in Downtown.

There was some further confusion about P4 looking from/through the windows, but P4 clarified that he did not stand next to the window, but rather looked through the window. P4 described that he was on the floor, two meters away from window with his hands tied up, but he could still see through the window. He added that in Syria, people know the neighbourhoods from the shape of the buildings.

Judge Kerber asked what happened afterwards. P4 said that he stayed there for about a half-hour or an hour. P4 said that there seemed to be a high-ranked officer outside and because of him, the interrogation was delayed. After that, P4 said he was taken to an interrogator, called Abu Ja'far أبو جعفر, who could be a lieutenant colonel and told P4 to confess everything. P4 told him that he did not do anything, but it is not allowed to say that one did not do anything.

Judge Kerber asked whether the officer working in the branch whom he knew was his relative. P4 said that the person was not a close relative, rather a "far/indirect" cousin from the same tribe.

Judge Kerber asked about his name, and P4 said that he did not know. Kerber asked if the name was Abdallah As-Salam عبد الله السلام and P4 said yes, but that was not Abu Ja'far أبو جعفر [note that it seems Abdallah As-Salam is also nicknamed Abu Ja'far, so there are two individuals that go by Abu Ja'far]. P4 added that no one calls the other one by his name in the branch, but rather by the nickname.

Judge Kerber asked if that aforementioned person interrogated him as well. P4 said no and that six months after he was released, that person quit, and is now selling falafel in Istanbul.

Judge Kerber asked if he was able to take off the blindfold and see from underneath it. P4 said no and that he would have been beaten. He was able to only move it a bit.

In response to Judge Kerber's questions, P4 said it [the office] was approximately 20 m<sup>2</sup> and there was a desk, a couch and cables on the ground. He said that he did not see anything on the wall, and there was no laptop but he saw a monitor.

Judge Kerber asked P4 whether Abdallah As-Salam or Abu Ja'far interrogated and beat him. P4 said that he knew that Abu Ja'far interrogated him, because a person came during the interrogation and addressed the interrogator by "Abu Ja'far" and asked him to come for breakfast.

15 minute break

Judge Kerber asked what happened after the interrogation. P4 said that when he entered the office, the interrogator told him to confess three things. P4 told him that he did not do anything and they know everything about him already. P4 said he was then beaten for two minutes and his interrogator forced him to sign a paper and stamp his fingerprint on another blank paper. Then, P4 said the interrogator stamped it, called somebody who took P4 downstairs, beat him with the cable and finally took him to the cell.

Judge Kerber asked if the accusation was that he participated in three military operations, and P4 affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked about the interrogation. P4 said that he mentioned names of people he knew from the Assad forces, but not names from the Free Syrian Army. He said he was shown a video of a demonstration with people from his neighbourhood. P4 told them that he did not know the people in the video and that he did not have contact with his neighbours, because he was only concerned with his work. P4 kept avoiding the questions until the interrogator called a person [like a guard] to come, and then P4 knew that the interrogator was done with him.

Judge Kerber asked if he was accused of possessing weapons. P4 affirmed and said that he was interrogated twice. He [the interrogator] wrote on the paper that P4 had PKS, RPG and a tank for weapons, and was even accused of having explosives in his shoes. P4 found it strange and told him that he was a civilian.

Judge Kerber asked if there was an accusation of possessing weapon in that interrogation [where he was shown a video of the demonstration] and P4 said no.

Judge Kerber asked what the three things were, that he was asked to confess. P4 said that he was told to confess three things [he was told to make up and confess crimes/charges].

P4 said the interrogation lasted less than an hour. Judge Kerber said that P4 said in a prior questioning it was approximately two hours, but P4 denied this.

Judge Kerber asked if he said Abdallah As-Salam interrogated him and P4 said he did not know if it was that person or someone else. P4 added that after he was released, he spent 6 months looking for the person and used to wait outside [the branch] for any person to get out, so that P4 could talk to him in private and get answers, but he could not, because they used to be released in groups.

Judge Kerber asked if he knew his relative was working in the branch before his detention. P4 said no and that he knew only after he was released. P4 added that he said in the police questioning that he knew that his relative was in Al-Khatib and that he was called Abu Ja'far, but did not know if he was the same Abu Ja'far, the interrogator.

P4 said that Abdallah As-Salam was not in Syria, but in Istanbul. Judge Kerber told P4 that this answer was different from what he said in the questioning. P4 said that in the questioning, they brought a German lady who spoke broken Arabic and they spent two hours editing the transcript after the questioning.

Judge Kerber asked if he signed the transcript and P4 affirmed. P4 said that all numbers and reports he mentioned were true and not exaggerated.

Judge Kerber said that P4 said that a cousin of Abdallah As-Salam was in prison. P4 said that when he was in the interrogation, he recalled that Abdallah As-Salam was in the branch. And when a person came in and said "Abu Ja'far, come for breakfast," Abdallah As-Salam came to P4's mind. Therefore, P4 told "him" [the interrogator] that his cousin was downstairs. The person asked P4 about the name of the person downstairs and P4 told him [redacted]. Then he [interrogator] brought papers for P4 to sign and called the guard to take him outside. P4 said that he and [redacted] entered the prison together and got out together, but Diyaa' was not interrogated.

Judge Kerber asked if P4 remembered the name of the head of Al-Khatib. P4 said no, but when he was taken outside the room, he met a person whom he knew in the corridor "Adeeb Zaytoun أديب زيتون". P4 said that he knew that person before the detention. P4 used to work in [redacted] and that person used to secure licences for construction for them [probably meaning his family]. When P4 heard Zaytoun's voice, he left the guard and ran towards the person and told him who he was. The person recognized him, because they had a lot of business between each other. P4 said he took P4 to his office and brought him food. Then, they began to bargain how much money he wanted from P4. They agreed on 10 million Syrian pounds (approx. 100,000 USD).

When asked to describe the office, P4 said that it was like a villa and there were photos of Bashar "the dog" and his father "the pig." Judge Kerber told him to avoid such comments.

P4 said that he got out after 12 days and went to another branch. P4 said they were taken to Najha نجه. Perhaps it was a villa, not a branch, and there were two floors full of rooms underground. P4 said there was no air or light, and described it as a new horror movie with new terrifying people. P4 added that it was a big cell with people inside whose hair and beards were all-white. All of the detainees were there for a long time. No one was allowed to get close to their cell.

Judge Kerber asked if P4 was beaten or tortured in Branch 251. P4 said that everybody was beaten and no one slept without getting beaten. He said that when there were no people for the interrogation, two - three [guards] used to open the door, get in the cell and beat [prisoners] inside [the cell].

Judge Kerber said that P4 said that a child died inside the prison, and P4 clarified that he said children, not a child.

In response to Judge Kerber's questions on deaths in Al-Khatib, P4 said that many died, every day. He added that there were corpses inside his cell and outside in the corridor. Among them were 13 dead people in the cell to which P4 fingerprinted/signed that they died a normal death.

Judge Kerber asked why he had fingerprinted the bodies. P4 said that he was forced to. He said he and other prisoners were carrying the corpses outside the cell to be taken away, and he was carrying the last corpse when he was called. P4 fingerprinted 13 blank papers, the same number of the corpses.

Judge Kerber asked how he knew that they would be registered as "normal death" and if something was written on the papers. P4 said that the papers were white and nothing was written. P4 said that they did not die by themselves [i.e. they did not die a normal death]. They used to come dead from Madaya مضايا and Ghouta غوطة who had a "special" treatment of torture [in the branch]. P4 said his friend in the cell was hit by an iron cable on his Adam's apple and died after 10 minutes. P4 said that this person was not part of the 13 corpses.

Judge Kerber asked how many corpses were on the floor. P4 said that he did not count them, but more than 10.

Kerber asked again how many died. P4 said many died and they used to sit terrified from the sound of torture. He added that someone could have a heart attack while sitting, and that they [he and the prisoners] did not count.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner said that P4 stated in a prior questioning that a child died and asked follow-up questions. P4 said that he was the youngest, around seven years and that he died while they were sitting when the child was in his father's lap. P4 said "they" took the child to be interrogated and he was gone for around an hour or more. P4 stated they brought him back [to the cell] and took the father, who was beaten and returned to the cell as a different human. The child sat in his father's lap. P4 said he forgot exactly what happened, maybe he slept or left the cell, but he woke up and asked about the child, and was told that he was "finished" and died. P4 said he did not see the dead child, but he saw the father crying and was told he died. He did not know what caused the child's death. He said this occurred in the external cell.

Judge Wiedner asked if P4 witnessed others who died. P4 said that many died and that when someone died, they did not realize that, because when they used to sleep, they did not know who did not wake up [and who died]. P4 said that prisoners used to tell the guards when someone died and the guards used to tell them it is "normal".

Judge Wiedner asked if they used to bring the corpses outside. P4 said that they were told to put the corpses in the corridor.

Judge Wiedner said that he was not asking for concrete numbers and asked if P4 saw dead females. P4 said that during his whole detention period, he saw one dead pregnant woman. P4 said this woman was not part of the 13 corpses mentioned earlier.

He added that there was a service hatch طاقة [or gap] at the bottom of the door, through which they used to watch the corridor and see people. P4 said they were not allowed to see through this. P4 said that there were two prisoners placed at the door who used to take anyone who used to look outside to be beaten.

Judge Wiedner said that P4 stated in his questioning that his friend was tortured and died. P4 told the judge that he could be meaning [redacted name] an imam of a mosque. P4 said that this person's uncle was a minister. P4 said that he told the police that [redacted] was detained with him and tortured. P4 said that this person was not a friend, but rather his cell mate.

P4 said though they could not see, they could hear sounds - specifically sounds of torture.

Judge Wiedner asked how big the window was. P4 said that it was big and inside the cell.

Judge Kerber asked if P4 saw or heard the torture. P4 added that due to the large number [of detainees], there was not enough space and the external cells used to be a garden previously that was closed with iron. Therefore, the windows remained on the doors and the place was used for torturing. P4 said they were called external cells, because they were outside the prison.

Judge Wiedner said that P4 said that he saw a person who was being tortured. P4 said that he saw with his eyes and detainees used to be hanged like sheep and were tortured together.

Judge Wiedner said that there is a problem with what was said to the police. P4 said that one cannot enumerate everything that occurred within his 45 days of detention.

Judge Wiedner asked if P4 could estimate the dead people during the period of his detention (P4 said that he wanted to show something on the maps, but he was asked to answer the question). P4 said that the numbers were big and he could not estimate, because detainees were constantly brought. He said he was sure that half of the people who were released, were killed.

Judge Wiedner said that P4 said that around 100 died. P4 affirmed. He said that because he himself saw this and others told him. P4 said that he saw 500,000 corpses in Syria. He said his house was next to [redacted] cemetery which was a desert before that. Everyday a bulldozer and a truck were used to bury bodies.

In response to questions on torture, P4 said every method was used, from beating, swearing and insults. P4 said they did not use their hands/fists as that that would not have hurt, and they used cables instead.

Judge Wiedner said that the name Abdallah As-Salam came up during the police questioning and asked P4 how this name is relevant. P4 said that he was an interrogator.

Judge Wiedner asked if two persons interrogated P4. P4 said only one. He added that he told the police that if Abdallah As-Salam interrogated him, he would not have paid 10 million Syrian pounds to get out of prison, because Abdallah As-Salam would have gotten him out for free [he would have been P4's "wasta"].

Judge Wiedner asked if P4 saw the interrogator. P4 said no and that he would have been beaten if he had tried. P4 said that the interrogator stood behind him. P4 added that if detainees knew who worked in the branches, they [detainees] would have killed them [interrogators] after being released.

In response to questions, P4 said he stayed in Branch 251 for approximately 34 days. P4 said he then went to Najha, where a new series of torturing and killing had started. He said water was available but there was no food. P4 said he was there for around six to seven days before being released and transferred to Al-Khatib where he fingerprinted a paper. He was given a mobile phone and his keys back, even though he originally had three mobile phones and 3600 Syrian pounds when he was detained.

Judge Wiedner asked how he looked like when he was released. P4 said like the microphone [thin].

Judge Wiedner asked how P4 handed over money. P4 said that 3 days after his release, he went personally and handed it over to that brigadier general; he went to the person's house in [redacted].

One hour break.

Judge Wiedner asked questions related to Shabh. P4 said the first time he endured Shabh was in Sayyeda Zeynab and it lasted for five to six hours. P4 said he was only beaten and whipped in Al-Khatib. P4 said that many others endured Shabh; some of them from the hands, others from the feet and some with tyres. A person from Madaya was beaten on his feet until they became extremely swollen [P4 described it with his hands].

Judge Wiedner asked how did P4 knew that there was Shabih in Al-Khatib branch. P4 said that Syrians know the mafia branches and the torturing methods that exist there. More specifically, P4 said that he saw it, and there were prisoners with him who were tortured with Shabih. P4 said that when he used to go outside to get tortured, he used to see people on the floor and a few were hung up. Due to the huge numbers, five to six were [hung] together [in the same area]. Judge Wiedner asked from which body part they were hung, and P4 said from their hands with handcuffs or cables and the hands were up for 13 – 14 hours. P4 said they were hung on the wall like “laundry.” P4 added that the one who was hung from his feet was recognized [by the prisoners], because his legs used to be blue and as big as the screen [the projector].

Judge Wiedner said that P4 said that every day people died and P4 affirmed.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsel and Judge Wiedner

Andreas Schulz, plaintiff’s counsel, said that P4 stated “ Menschen-Spülen / Human sink” during his police questioning and asked P4 to clarify. P4 said that he did not understand. He said he was asked what he knew about Al-Khatib, and he answered that it was a human massacre, as it is known that anyone who enters the prison will most probably not get out.

Patrick Kroker, plaintiff counsel, asked P4 how he was frisked. P4 said they took off everything, even his underwear and they made him sit on the ground. He said “they” put their hands between the buttocks to search if one was hiding something like a razor.

Counsel Kroker asked about P4’s psychological experience and if he spoke with a psychiatrist. P4 said that nothing happened to his psychological condition, but he cannot sleep at night. P4 paused a bit then said that he did know about alcohol in Syria, but currently he drinks on a daily basis.

Counsel Kroker asked if that behaviour was related to what he experienced in detention. P4 said certainly, and added that he was not able to deal with his family for 14 days after he was released. P4 asked [Kroker/the court] to imagine that he only went to toilet twice during a 45-day detention. He said he weighed 100 kg before his detention, but was 46 kg when he was released. P4 said that he has changed entirely and became a different person.

Counsel Kroker asked about P4’s prior statement that he was shaking, and asked if that happens often. P4 said that it happens when he feels dizzy. He added that when he is among 50 people, as he is in the courtroom, he cannot sit down [stay]. He said he was not able to participate in a language course, because he cannot sit among many people and despite the many Arabs living in his area, he could not make friends. He added that at work, which consists of three people, he always stays alone. P4 said that if he gets angry and wants to hit someone, he does not stop until he sees red (blood).

Judge Wiedner referred to P4’s statement that he delivered money to Zaytoun, and asked him if he knew Zaytoun’s position in Branch 251. P4 said that he only knew his rank. P4 stated that he did not previously know where Zaytoun used to work and only saw him by coincidence.

Judge Weidner asked if P4 heard from other detainees that Zaytoun was there. P4 said that he did not ask, and added that anyone who is not an Alawite or a Shiite has no value.

Judge Wiedner said that P4 previously said that Zaytoun used to give orders from time to time, and that Zaytoun was addressed as “معلم” [boss]. P4 said that in the questioning he did not know if he was working in Al-Khatib or in Division 40, and added that all branches are connected to each other.

Judge Wiedner asked how P4 knew that Zaytoun was always there on Tuesdays and Thursdays, when P4 saw him only once. P4 said that on Tuesdays and Thursdays, there were “tornadoes and earthquakes” [torture increased, big incidents happen in the branch and everybody is on alert]. When further asked by Wiedner, P4 said that when a detainee was taken to be beaten and then returned, that detainee shared with the prisoners what he saw and heard. From what these detainees said, P4 stated they insinuated that a high-ranking official was present on those days.

Judge Wiedner asked how P4 knew that it was Tuesdays and Thursdays specifically. P4 said that on those two days, they experienced higher levels of torture. Additionally, there were nine guards who tortured on those days (in comparison to the usual two or three). P4 said this was from his experience, and added that if he wanted to share what happened in these days exactly the same way as he lived through them, he would fall unconscious [probably meaning that he could not relive it].

Dr. Anna Oehmichen, plaintiff’s counsel, asked if there was an increase in the number of corpses between 2011 and 2012. P4 said that every day, there was digging and trucks that could have been coming from the branches. Before his detention, P4 said he used to see it because it was on the way to his home and in front of his house. After his release, he said he was not able to see it anymore as they built a wall. However, P4 said he could see the bulldozer in action and trucks (sometimes civilian and sometimes military ones), because they used to bury the people who died in war. P4 said that before March 2011, civilians were allowed inside but this changed following September 2012.

In response to Dr. Oehmichen, P4 affirmed that the translator in his police questioning spoke broken Arabic and that he did not lack sleep or had a tiresome journey to the police prior to his questioning as it was near his home.

In response to a question by Dr. Oehmichen, P4 affirmed that he has a sleeping disorder, and said that he slept at 03:30 a.m. and woke up at 05:00 a.m. before testifying today.

Dr. Oehmichen asked if he was able to concentrate during the police questioning, and P4 said yes but the questioning started at 8:00 a.m. and ended at 6:00 p.m.

P4 testified that in the external cell, there were three persons in the toilets and three at the door. He said these persons were like security as the torturer used to come every hour asking for people for whipping. P4 said that the prisoners feared these six persons, because these six used to deal with the torturer. Their food was different and they used to get cigarettes. P4 said three of the six were commanders in the Free Syrian Army.

Plaintiff Counsel Schulz asked about the old and the new detainees. P4 said that new prisoners were fearful as they did not know what would happen with them. He said that when a newcomer used to enter the cell, they would see prisoners who did not resemble the humans as their bodies were like “mosaics,” burned with cigarettes and stabbed with pens [full of “colors” and injuries]. P4 said that no detainee had the energy to fight one another; a detainee used to enter the cell broken and only wanting to sleep.

Khubaib Ali Mohammad, plaintiff counsel, asked if there was female sexual mistreatment. P4 said that he used to hear women's voices in the corridor, but did not know what was happening with them. Mohammad asked if someone reported about rape, and P4 said that such a thing was not done in front of them and the females were not imprisoned with the males.

Plaintiff Counsel Mohammad asked if there was male sexual mistreatment. P4 said that there was, though he did not see it.

P4 said that his sister was also detained in state security in Kafar Souseh. كفرسوسة. He said she was released after three months and returned home as a cocaine addict.

Plaintiff Counsel Mohammad asked if he witnessed that or if he was presuming that there was sexual mistreatment against males. P4 said that it was not a presumption and all testimonies are documented and the videos are on YouTube. P4 added that he was told when he was released.

Judge Wiedner asked if P4 himself saw the pregnant woman in the corridor. P4 affirmed and said that he saw her dead on the floor, when he was going to the interrogation.

The defence asked for a break and a 15 minute break was issued.

The defence had no questions.

Activist Khaled Baraka خالد بركة in cooperation with Adopt a Revolution Initiative, The Syria Campaign, Families for Freedom and ECCHR, hosted an event outside the courtroom. Below are some photos (the windows of the building shown in some photos are the windows of the courtroom where the trial is taking place):

Trial Day 16 – July 02, 2020

There were about 12 spectators and three individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of P5 [name redacted]

The first witness was P5 a 37-year-old engineering graduate who is currently unemployed.

Questioning about P5's background and Branch 251

P5 testified about his background and his military service in Syria. He said he studied engineering in [redacted], worked as a teacher and then began his military service in May 2010. He said he completed training from June to November, and then was transferred to the "Inner Branch" [this is the more accurate and official name of Al-Khatib/251. It was the first time someone in court referred to the Branch by this name] where he stayed until he defected on August 5, 2012. He said that he defected for many reasons, including the existing injustice which he witnessed that he could not do anything about. He said it was better that one stay away from trouble.

Judge Kerber asked what P5 did. P5 said that he personally had not gotten in trouble, but the detainees were treated cruelly and beaten. P5 said that he and his colleagues could not do anything about it, so they decided to flee.

Judge Kerber asked what he was doing in the branch. P5 said that he wanted to mention some incidents. He said that when demonstrations occurred, people were beaten and taken to prison. P5 said he used to witness detainees who got out from the vehicles being continuously beaten until they enter the prison. He said that the Branch's yard is close to the prison.

Hannes Linke, counsel for Accused Al-Gharib, raised §55 StPO [which addresses a witness' right to refuse to answer questions if it risks incriminating them]. Prosecutor Klinge agreed to this and Judge Kerber informed the witness about the admonition.

P5 addressed Judge Kerber saying that he wanted to say that he was worried about his family in Syria, and not about himself, as a few of his family members in Syria go to regime-controlled areas, which could cause them trouble. Judge Kerber said that he still needs to provide information.

Judge Kerber asked how long the beatings lasted and which tools were used. P5 said that the beating occasionally lasted half or quarter of an hour. He said it depended on when the responsible officer used to come to let the detainees in, and that the beating was done by the prison personnel members. عناصر When asked if beating lasted for four hours, P5 said that it could have, but generally it was less than that. P5 said the duration depended on the officer. P5 testified that normal and electric [stun] batons were used more than once. P5 said he knew that batons were electric as a detainee would immediately fall on the ground after merely placing it on the body.

Judge Kerber asked about detainees who got out from the buses. P5 said that the detainees got out with their t-shirts on their faces, so they would not see anything until they arrived in the branch. He added they were beaten continuously from the moment they were detained until they arrived to the Branch's yard. P5 said that they were beaten on every possible location on the body.

Judge Kerber asked if he saw what happened inside the prison and if he heard something. P5 said they used to hear prisoners' voices as there was a basement and small windows opposite the yard.

P5 said he heard loud screams and the sounds of people being tortured. Judge Kerber asked if he recognized some words, and P5 said the screaming was mostly sounds of pain and suffering.

Judge Kerber asked about the hierarchy of Branch 251. P5 said Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس was the head of the branch, and there were divisions under the branch. When asked about other names, P5 mentioned the following: Lieutenant Colonel Kamal كمال, Head of Religions Division; Lieutenant Colonel Ahmad أحمد, Head of Economy Division; Brigadier General Mohammad محمد, Head of Parties' Division [political parties]; Lieutenant Colonel Basel باسل, Head of Media and Universities Division (whom P5 had forgotten during his questioning, but recalled it later), and Colonel Ahmad أحمد, Head of the Communications Division.

Judge Kerber asked who P5 recognized on the photo-array during his 2018 questioning, and P5 said Colonel Anwar Raslan. P5 said he knew Accused Raslan from his time at the Branch. Kerber asked what Raslan's rank was, and P5 said he was a Colonel عقيد, then a Brigadier General. P5 testified that Raslan was always there during P5's service.

Judge Wiedner asked what Accused Raslan's position was, and P5 said Raslan was the head of the interrogation unit. Wiedner asked if there was an officer with Raslan and P5 said the deputy of the division was Major Abdulmon'em رائد عبد المنعم.

Judge Wiedner asked about Division 40. P5 said that it was under the administration of the Inner Branch [Branch 251] and Colonel Hafez Makhoul حافظ مخلوف was the head of that division.

Judge Wiedner asked more about Accused Raslan. P5 said everybody who served at the Branch knew Raslan, and P5 confirmed that the person sitting on his right in the courtroom was Raslan. P5 said that Raslan was a colonel. P5 said that anyone knows that the head of the interrogation division had responsibilities in the prison. When asked if Raslan used to interrogate, P5 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked what P5's tasks were. P5 said that he was a non-commissioned officer who was responsible and part of the [security] guards. He said their task was watching over the branch. He added that they knew the officers in the branch, and would see detainees when they would come. P5 said that he did not enter the prison, but his colleague did and he told P5 how badly detainees were treated.

Judge Wiedner asked if the beating done in the external yard was executed by orders, or if the prison personnel did it on their own will. P5 said that regarding the branch's personnel, "volunteers" [explained by P5 later in his testimony] were the ones who used to beat the detainees and there was no officer there. P5 said that when the officer arrived, he ordered to bring the detainees into the prison. P5 added that officers used to be home at night or the early morning, so detainees who arrived then used to be beaten until the officers arrived at the prison.

Judge Wiedner asked about the officers' names. P5 said the officers who were responsible for the prison were the head of the interrogation division and his deputy. Wiedner asked if P5 meant Raslan and Abdelmon'em (respectively), and P5 said yes. P5 said he did not see other officers.

Judge Wiedner said that P5 mentioned Kamal كمال during the questioning. P5 said that was correct, but he was not related to the detainees. P5 stated that in the police questioning, he said that Lieutenant Colonel Kamal used to communicate with security personnel by radio transceiver when people went to demonstrations, but P5 did not say that Kamal was related to the prison.

Questioning about Accused Raslan

Judge Wiedner asked if P5 saw an officer beating detainees himself. P5 said that he only saw Lieutenant Colonel Basel doing that. Judge Wiedner asked if he said that Accused Raslan beat detainees. P5 said (in fact) no.

Judge Wiedner asked what Accused Raslan did when he arrived. P5 stated people from Duma دوما and Harasta حرستا were brought in and were being beaten. He said that when Colonel Raslan came, he prevented them from being beaten and told them to get the detainees inside to begin the interrogation. P5 said that he does not know what happened with the detainees later.

Judge Wiedner asked what P5 was told about what happened with the detainees. P5 said that he has honestly forgotten many things since he came to Germany, but he would try to remember. Weidner repeated, and P5 said he did not know.

Judge Wiedner asked how Accused Raslan was as a leader (if he was brutal, for instance). P5 said that when they were standing outside [of the branch], Raslan was the only person who used to greet them as lower ranking guards. P5 said that this was how Raslan used to treat him, but he did not know how Raslan used to treat the detainees.

Judge Wiedner said that P5 previously stated that Accused Raslan was pretending to be good in front of P5 and his colleagues. P5 said that he has just said the same thing, that he did not know how Raslan used to treat the detainees.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was possible that Accused Raslan would not have known what was happening in the branch. P5 said that he stated this before and would repeat it: The head of the division [meaning Raslan] was certainly acquainted with everything, but the head of the branch [meaning Tawfiq Younes] was responsible for everything.

Judge Wiedner asked what he [Raslan] should have known what was happening in the prison. P5 said Raslan should have known [تعذيب أو شو بصير], but he was not 100% sure, because the head of his branch (Tawfiq Younes) was cruel. P5 said that the interrogation was conducted by officers, which was secret information no one could be aware of. P5 said that even if he did not see it with his own eyes, it was known between colleagues that officers conducted the interrogation, not lower ranks.

Judge Wiedner asked if the Inner Branch has other names, and asked for details about the branch. P5 said Al-Khatib, 251 and perhaps previously Al-Maysat الميسات were known names for the branch. P5 said that it is a security branch under the general intelligence. He said that during the uprising, every branch was responsible for an area from Damascus, and the Inner Branch was generally responsible for Duma دوما, Harasta حرستا and Eastern Ghouta الغوطة الشرقية.

Judge Wiedner asked if the branch's activity increased after the uprising. P5 affirmed and said that the number of the personnel عناصر was between 80 – 100 persons before the incidents [uprising] and the number doubled after, as the reserve was called.

Judge Wiedner asked when he witnessed the beatings. P5 said after the uprising, but he doesn't remember. He said that he thinks it was in late 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was change in the number of detainees and what changed in the branch. P5 said that not all the detainees were at Branch 251, as there are other divisions such as Division 40 in Duma [either meaning Division 40 regulated Duma or there is a division of Division 40 in Duma], in Sayyeda Zeynab, سيدة زينب in Zabadani, زيداني all of which are under the administration of the Inner Branch. P5 said that he does not know if Division 40 has a prison, but they most probably do as it is a security branch.

Judge Wiedner asked when these prisoners were detained, and P5 said the prisoners in the antiterrorism division were detained before the uprising.

Judge Wiedner asked for details about the prisoners of Branch 251. P5 said they were from Duma, Harasta, Al-Midan, Saqba, سقبا and Hamouriyeh, حمورية. He stated that all of that is called Eastern Ghouta. P5 testified that they were detained because of the demonstrations in the beginning of the uprising.

Judge Wiedner asked if Branch 251 was responsible for detaining. P5 said it depended on where detainees were taken (If detainees were brought to Branch 251, then its personnel [عناصر] detained them. If detainees went to Division 40, then its respective personnel members were responsible).

Judge Wiedner asked about Division 40. P5 said that when he and others were in the training, a person came to choose people to work in Division 40. He said that these chosen people had specific physical characteristics and their background (and family background) should be clean. He said that if everything was ok, then the person would be selected. P5 said that he does not know what the tasks of these selected people were, because it was not his division. Judge Wiedner said that P5 previously stated in the questioning that individuals from Division 40 used to come and work with them in Branch 251, and that people were not allowed to gather in mosques and in Al-Midan, الميدان. P5 acknowledged this.

Judge Wiedner asked P5 to elaborate on "volunteers." P5 said "volunteers" were not selected. P5 said in Syria there are two groups: the first is the compulsory military service and the second one is the "volunteers", who are people with high school certificates, who complete a training. P5 said that these "volunteers" would be sorted into police, army and intelligence services, and stay in the service for long periods (30 – 35 years). P5 said "volunteers" existed even before the uprising.

Judge Wiedner asked if P5 saw corpses. P5 said that he saw a vehicle once at the prison's door at night, and a person was put inside it, but he did not see corpses. P5 said he did not know if this person was alive or dead; he wanted to enter the branch to go to the personnel [عناصر] housing, but one of the volunteers kept P5 back.

Judge Wiedner asked about this specific individual brought to the prison. P5 said that he previously mentioned this person was elderly as this person was overweight and was wearing Gallabiyya, جلابية. When asked, P5 said he does not know if this person was dead or alive. He added that when people were cruelly beaten, a vehicle from the nearby red-crescent hospital used to come and take these people. P5 said that person was taken by vehicle with no ambulance siren, so he told the police that he could have been dead, because it was not an ambulance. Judge Wiedner said that P5 previously stated that the person was 60-years-old and was dead. P5 said that he has not changed his statements; he knew that person was elderly through his clothes and he did not know whether he was dead, but said that he could be as it was not an ambulance.

Judge Wiedner said that P5 previously stated that corpses were transported at night, and asked P5 if he saw or heard about that. P5 said that he did not see anything else other than the person mentioned above. He said they used to “hear” torture and not “see” it, and if these [transport] operations happened, the volunteers would not tell P5 and his colleagues.

Judge Wiedner asked how the injured were transported. P5 said that the Red Crescent was close to the Inner Branch, and it used to come and transport the injured.

Judge Wiedner asked about prisoners’ condition at their release. P5 said that there is lack of hygiene inside the prison so prisoners were in a dire condition and dirty when they are released.

Judge Wiedner referred to P5’s previous statement that many detainees were once brought. P5 said that an occasion occurred an early morning (around 5 – 6 am), presumably from Ar-Rifa'i mosque جامع الرفاعي in Kafar Souseh, كفرسوسة where many who were demonstrating inside the mosque were brought. P5 stated that this Ar-Rifa'i incident occurred during Ramadan 2011. P5 also remembered and mentioned a second incident that occurred in Al-Hasan mosque جامع الحسن in Al-Midan. P5 said that demonstrators were brought daily from Duma.

Judge Wiedner said that P5 previously said that 20 – 40 demonstrators were brought from Duma once, and P5 said that was correct and apologized if he forgot.

Break

Questioning about Division 40

Judge Wiedner asked about Division 40 and Hafez Makhoul. P5 said that Division 40 is a well-known division under the command of Makhoul, and under the administration of Branch 251. P5 thought that everyone knows that Makhoul is Bashar Al-Assad's cousin [their mothers are sisters ابن خالة], and Division 40 has its weight in Damascus. P5 said that Division 40 is located in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض in Damascus and is close to Bashar Al-Assad's palace. He said its personnel [عناصر] are chosen selectively and they have a higher number of personnel compared to other divisions. P5 affirmed his previous statement that the division has the freedom to do whatever it wants and has great authority; although it is lower ranking than a branch, the division has its own unique features.

Judge Wiedner asked if Division 40 personnel can conduct interrogations in Branch 251. P5 said no, and he had no knowledge of that.

Judge Wiedner asked if Hafez Makhoul has authority on Branch 251. P5 said that the head of Division 40 has a powerful security control and is harsh. P5 stated that when Makhoul is assigned a mission, he does not take orders (unlike other officers). P5 gave an example that when Division 40 wants to suppress demonstrations, its personnel [عناصر] go without referring back to the Branch. However, when they bring demonstrators [detainees], they bring them to the Inner Branch.

Judge Wiedner asked if they [Division 40 personnel] used to only bring detainees, or if they also had tasks within Branch 251. P5 said he saw that they used to only bring detainees, in addition to patrolling and manning checkpoints. P5 said that when Division 40 personnel used to bring the demonstrators, they beat them, but they did not interrogate them.

Questioning about Branch 251 continues

Judge Wiedner asked about the position of Sunnis and Alawites. P5 said that unfortunately, any Syrian knows that Alawites occupy the large majority of sensitive positions in the security branches and in the army. He added that the oppressive regime began to discriminate between Sunnis, Shiites and Alawites.

Judge Wiedner asked about Accused Raslan. P5 said that he assumes and is 80% sure, based on Accused Raslan's name, that Raslan is Sunni. Wiedner asked if Raslan could have authority being a Sunni. P5 said that he does not know, but he told the police in his questioning that the majority of the information that used to come to the officers was from the head of the branch [Younes].

Judge Wiedner questioned P5 about which officers used to conduct interrogations. P5 said that the person who was responsible for the interrogation was the head of the division [Raslan] or his deputy [Abdelmon'em]. P5 said Abdelmon'em would conduct the interrogation if Raslan was not here. He added that the head of the branch [Younes] would conduct the interrogation perhaps if the person was important [in his questioning, Judge Wiedner assumed Younes was the main interrogator, followed by Raslan and then Abdelmon'em. Thus, there was some confusion here. When Wiedner addressed this confusion, P5 clarified that Younes only interrogated "special" individuals].

Judge Wiedner asked how P5 knew that. P5 said that he previously told the police about the branch's entrance and exit. He said that if he wanted to go to the cafeteria or the accommodation area, he needed to pass by the yard. He said that P5 and his colleagues used to see the head of the branch going out and heading right to the left many times (because the prison was in the basement). He said that because of that, they knew that he was going to the prison. P5 confirmed that he was speaking about Younes, and that he did not see other officers.

A sketch of a map of Branch 251 was shown with the projector (below is a redrawing):

Judge Wiedner asked where detainees were beaten. P5 said that most of the time, it was at entrances one and three. He said the vehicle that used to bring detainees used to stay at the main door [indicated by red star]. P5 said that building 1 had a basement with an armament division, a maintenance division and the branch's communication/operator division of the branch.

P5 stated that the first floor contained the head of the branch's office, and opposite to it was the record office; the second floor contained the head of the economy division's office and opposite to it was the media division; the third floor to the right contained the parties division and another division under administration of an officer that P5 forgot about [there was a lot of confusion regarding the naming of the floors i.e. basement, ground floor and 1st floor].

P5 drew a sketch of the prison floors was shown (below is a redrawing):

P5 said that the head of the interrogation division was in the ground floor above the prison, and five steps down is the prison [it seems P5 meant that the detainee would take five steps from the street level to enter the first level, where Accused Raslan's office was, and then 5 steps to go to the ground floor/basement/prison].

Prosecutor Klinge said that P5 said that there was a window. P5 said that the wall [blue >> symbol] was two meters high which contained the building's entrance, and windows were at the bottom of the wall. P5 said they were small holes with iron ["grate/شبكة"].

Prosecutor Klinge asked how many floors there are above the prison. P5 said that one needs to take 5 steps to go to the head of the branch and his deputy/vice-head. There is another floor for the head of the communication division and the financial office (on the third floor). The second floor was a flat for the branch's head.

Prosecutor Klinge asked about the second building. P5 said that he thinks that the building with the head of the branch is higher, but perhaps both buildings have the same height.

P5 said that there is a cafeteria with two residential buildings above it. Prosecutor Klinge asked if one could jump over the wall [red line]. P5 questioned how one could get there in the first place. P5 knew that there was a two meters high black door along the wall, but did not remember if it was continuous.

Prosecutor Klinge asked about the external wall's height and if it was secured [blue dashed line]. P5 said that the buildings around the branch were residential and high. The branch was in between them and there was a garden [green tree symbol] behind the parking space.

P5 said that there were about 200 to 300 meters from checkpoint [blue X] to the entrance. Regarding the top entrance, P5 said it resembles the checkpoint of the railway in Germany. After the incidents [uprising], the checkpoint was moved to the left of As-Sanabel restaurant. مطعم السنابل. If someone was coming from Al-Qosour, القصور, he was not allowed to enter. At the third entrance, there were forces [عناصر] with a device to inspect the entering cars.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if Raslan had a private parking space. P5 said he remembers that his car was navy blue or black and was parked directly opposite of the door [green !]. Wiedner asked where Baghdad street was, and P5 pointed to a point on the map [blue !].

Michael Böcker, counsel for Accused Raslan, asked if P5 himself was inside the right or left building. P5 said that he went to specific divisions if colleagues invited him [ex: if colleague was working in the records department, then they used to invite him to go to his office].

Counsel Böcker asked if P5 entered the interrogation division. P5 said that he did not enter the building, but they used to pass by that place when they used to receive their salaries. Thus, he knew these divisions and everyone who received money entered it.

Counsel Böcker asked if P5 was in the other building, where the head of the branch's office is. P5 said no, and it is impossible for anyone to enter it unless they worked there.

P5 provided the structure of the general intelligence directorate in Kafar Souseh [P5 added an * when listing the External and Internal Branches]:

- Interrogation Branch فرع التحقيق
- Communication Branch فرع الاتصالات
- Storming Branch فرع المداهمة
- Remote Sensing Branch فرع الاستشعار عن بعد
- Information Branch فرع المعلومات

*External Branch [279]: the former head was major general Bahjat Soleiman اللواء بهجت سليمان

*Internal Branch :

- Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس, the current head of the branch (from Hama and resides in Damascus)
- The Office manager, General Secretary Joseph جوزيف
- Division 40, headed by Hafez Makhoul حافظ مخلوف (in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض)
- Religions division, headed by Lieutenant Colonel Kamal مقدم كمال
- Interrogation division, headed by Colonel Anwar Raslan عقيد أنور رسلان and Abdelmon'em عبد المنعم
- Parties division, headed by brigadier general Adnan or Mohammad العميد عدنان أو محمد
- Economy division, head lieutenant colonel Ahmad مقدم أحمد

- Media division, headed by Mohammad محمد عقيد [This part was not heard clearly]
- Media and universities division, headed by lieutenant colonel Basel المقدم باسل

P5 was dismissed, and his questioning resumed the next day.

One hour break

Testimony of Brücken

The second witness was named Mr. Brücken, an inspector at the criminal police.

Brücken described the questioning conducted by French police one day in 2019, from 10am to 4pm. He said the police notified P5 of his rights. There was a translator and P5 was shown a photo array and satellite images.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened. Brücken said that P5 recognized a face and said that it reminded him of a person, but P5 could not recall the name. Only when the police mentioned the name of the person in the photo, P5 remembered.

Judge Wiedner asked if Brücken was involved in the procedure of the questioning and he said no.

Judge Wiedner asked Brücken to speak about the French questioning. Brücken said that it went according to French protocol. Wiedner asked about the translation. He said that except for P5's testimony, everything was in French. Brücken said he knew a little bit of French and there was a German translation after the questioning.

Judge Wiedner asked about Brücken's impression of P5. He said that P5 was intelligent, learned and was able to read a little French.

Defense counsel Böcker asked if Brücken knew about the branches. Brücken said no.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a reverse translation to Arabic. Brücken said yes and P5 signed it, but Brücken did not know if edits were made later.

The witness was dismissed.

Testimony of Kathrin Mittendorf

The third witness was Kathrin Kathrin Mittendorf, a decision maker at the Federal Office for Migration and Asylum (BAMF).

Kathrin M. testified that P5 left Syria with his family. She said P5 joined the military service and witnessed torture, which was why he defected. Kathrin M. stated that P5 worked as a security guard in Branch 251 and his wife witnessed torture by ISIS. She said that P5 did not give specific information on his guard duties, and it seems that he was a lower rank.

Judge Wiedner asked Kathrin M. more specific questions about what P5 said. Kathrin M. said that P5 mentioned two names, but she could not remember them. She said that P5 stated that there was torture and mentioned other information, but she could not remember it. Kathrin M. said that P5 defected by smuggling his ID card in a medication package, and taking it with him when he left work in the evening. She said he was not inspected as he was working for a long time. She stated that he then went to his hometown to leave Syria, where he waited for 5 days until he received his salary.

Judge Wiedner asked about P5's hometown. Kathrin M. said that it was under the control of FSA and that ISIS was there as well.

Judge Wiedner asked if she remembered the interview and Kathrin M. said no. Kathrin M. said that the translator was Mr Yousef يوسف and the sketches were also translated.

Plaintiff Counsel Sebastian Scharmer asked if P5 used to wear a uniform at the military service. Kathrin M. said no, he used to wear civilian clothes [plain clothes].

The witness was dismissed.

Statement from S1 [redacted], read by Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed

Plaintiff Counsel Mohammad read a statement of S1, a resident in [redacted] and requested that he be summoned as a witness.

Counsel Mohammad outlined that S1 was the Imam of a great mosque in Syria. On April 25, 2011 there was a demonstration and S1 was detained and tortured in Branch 251. As a result, a mass demonstration with more than 10,000 demonstrators took place in Duma. To stop the demonstrations, Ali Mamlouk released S1 after one week. S1 wrote that Accused Raslan was present, and that Mamlouk scolded and asked why he [Raslan] arrested "this good man [S1]." Mamlouk slapped Raslan on his face and stated that Raslan needed to apologize to S1 Two years later, Raslan called S1 from Jordan and wanted to apologize for everything, because "now we [they] are on the same side." S1 replied that "only God forgives," and hung up.

Counsel Mohammad said this could prove Raslan's involvement in the chain of command, and disprove Raslan's testimony that he did not torture, and did not give orders to torture and arrest. S1 could testify that Raslan could indeed arrest people, otherwise Mamlouk would have asked Tawfiq Younes [note: Raslan was smiling in court].

Counsel Mohammad outlined that Accused Raslan was mainly and independently responsible, which is indicated in the 2013 phone call where Raslan said that they would "now be on the same side." Counsel Mohammad said that this indicates that before 2013, he was on the regime's side and knew what he was doing at that time.

S1 has been in since 2019 and told Counsel Mohammad that he is personally available to testify. Currently he is in [redacted] and has a [redacted] status which allows him to stay in and obtain a one-time exit only. This is why the ability to return needs to be approved, and it could be allowed in an individual case (this was the case in a French trial).

The testimony of S1 could essentially disprove the statement of the defendant.

Accused Raslan wanted to say something about this, but his Counsel (Böcker) stopped him and stated that this evidence would not prove anything and would not be acceptable – contrary to the Mohammed's petition.

The proceedings ended at 2:45 pm.

Trial Day 17 – July 03, 2020

There were about 11 spectators and 2 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Counsel Mohammad read out his statement again and it was added to the protocol.

Question of P5, continued

Prosecutor Klinge showed satellite images (shown below) and asked P5 if he could recognize anything. P5 said it could be an image of the branch, but it was not clear and he was not able to identify the streets.

P5 wondered if the square at the top was Al-Qosour square ساحة القصور or Al-Abbasiyyeen square ساحة العباسيين, and said that it was probably Al-Qosour square.

The image was zoomed-in (see below) and the street's name appeared:

P5 said that “now” he can identify it. He said that if that is Baghdad street, then the Branch should be in the street behind it. P5 pointed to the building below the trees (on the top of the image) as the Branch. Another image was shown:

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P5 recognized anything, and P5 recognized Al-Abbasiyyeen square [top-right] and located the Branch precisely using that square.

Prosecutor Klinge asked how many vehicles used to deliver detainees to Branch 251. P5 said that sometimes it was one to three vehicles, and mainly on Fridays as the demonstrations took place then. P5 said that before the uprising, they seldom saw detainees but after that, delivery of detainees was every two days. If P5 had a shift, he would see the delivery, otherwise he could not. Klinge asked if there was an escalation from April 2011 to 2012. P5 said yes, the number increased certainly, but how much precisely he did not know. P5 said in March 2011, demonstrations in Damascus and rural Damascus began, but the number [of demonstrators] was not big at the beginning. However, P5 said that the numbers increased as days passed.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if the detainees used to be beaten when they were delivered and if there were “welcome parties.” P5 stated that he would speak on what he witnessed. He said that detainees were brought once on a Friday, part of them came from Duma. P5 said they were taken out of the vehicles and stood in front of the wall in the branch’s yard. He stated they were beaten by the personnel [عناصر] and were taken downstairs to the prison.

Prosecutor Klinge, recognizing it is not pleasant to describe, asked P5 if he could describe the beating. P5 said they came with a white vehicle that was not big (it could fit 15 – 20 people inside, but the number was bigger than that). He said the personnel [عناصر] got off and one person [from the forces] stood by the vehicle’s door. The detainees’ heads were covered with their t-shirts and there were signs of beating on them (it seems they were beat in the vehicle) and blood from their noses. The person standing by the door was beating everyone getting off the vehicle and telling them to queue facing the wall. They beat these detainees, indiscriminately, including using electric [stun] batons which made them fall immediately to the ground. This was accompanied by swearing and insults. Then, Accused Raslan came while the detainees were standing before the wall. P5 said that Accused Raslan told them to stop the beating and asked why they were beating them. P5 stated that Accused Raslan told the forces to bring the detainees downstairs to the prison to be interrogated and then they would know if someone was guilty.

Prosecutor Klinge asked more questions regarding the treatment of detainees. P5 said the beating was harsh. He stated that the person who was standing by the vehicle’s door was using his hands to hit. He said there were the forces who were getting the detainees off the vehicle and the one by the wall. P5 said that he previously stated that these were “volunteers” [explained by P5 on Trial Day 16; not a “volunteer” in the traditional meaning] and added that they receive salary. P5 said that an officer could not start off as a volunteer. He said the non-commissioned officers’ (NCO) ranks are known, the officer needs a university certificate, and the NCO reaches a rank, after which he cannot get promoted.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if there were windows in the head of the branch’s office that overlooked the inner yard. P5 said that he thinks that there was [a window], but that was eight years ago [he could not remember precisely].

Michael Böcker, counsel for Accused Raslan, pointed out that his client was not the branch’s head.

Prosecutor Klinge then asked specifically about Accused Raslan’s office, the head of the division. P5 said that the head of the branch is different from the head of the division, and Raslan was the latter. P5 said that there may be a window, not overlooking the yard but he was not sure.

Prosecutor Klinge asked how often P5 used to see Raslan. P5 said very often as he served the military compulsory service for about two years in Branch 251. P5 said that Raslan was still there when P5 left.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if Accused Raslan's authority was cut back or diminished [after the uprising]. P5 said that these matters concerned the high-ranked officers and he does not know.

P5 stated that he wants to explain something. P5 testified about something that he did not mention the previous day as he was not asked about it. P5 said that during the time he was in the branch (maybe in 2012, but P5 did not remember), an officer (who was a second lieutenant or a lieutenant) came [to the branch] and became the deputy of the interrogation division, or interrogator. He might have become a vice-head and Abdelmon'm became the head. P5 would recall the name of this officer, if someone mentioned it.

Prosecutor Klinge asked about the difference between the general intelligence directorate and the state security. P5 said that what they learned in training was that the general intelligence directorate "is" the state security branch and it includes all the branches that were mentioned on the screen [referring to the previous day]. Klinge asked if Branch 251 belongs to the general intelligence or the state security. P5 said that what they learned is that the Inner Branch [251] is responsible for the country's internal affairs. P5 said that the branch pursues anyone who interferes with the country or who undermines the region.

Prosecutor Klinge asked what the major intelligence services are. P5 said that in Syria, there is the air force, military and general (state security) intelligence; each branch has its speciality.

Questioning about Division 40

Prosecutor Klinge asked about the characteristics of personnel specifically chosen for Division 40. P5 said that about a month and a half before his six-month training ended, around 40-45 people were chosen by the third class warrant officer المساعد (before an individual came) and P5 was among those 45. P5 said the selection was not specific (e.g. if someone was tall or something). Then, the 45 people went to the headquarters [مركز القيادة] in the training centre. Then an individual/person came and the third class warrant officer and told him that these are the people we chose "Sidi." سيدي It appeared that the person was of a military rank, and the person started to choose from the group. P5 was not chosen, as there were taller people. They [P5 and the unchosen people] got upset and wondered about why they were not selected, as they just wanted to finish the course. P5 said 20 – 25 persons were selected in the first phase and then, 11 – 12 persons were selected from that group. P5 said they asked those who were not chosen in the second phase why they were not selected; those not chosen said that they were asked about their fathers' work and whether they were members of the party [Ba'th] or not. P5 said if any trainee's relatives had problems with the country, he was rejected.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if then one should be pro-regime. P5 said that he does not know if one should be pro-regime, but rather one should have a clean background.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if after the uprising began, people were transferred from 251 to Division 40. P5 said that no officers were transferred and thinks that no personnel were transferred because Division 40 personnel were [vetted and] chosen in advance.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if Division 40 personnel used to transport corpses. P5 said that he did not see corpses and he does not know about division 40, because it is in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, a different location.

Questioning about Accused Raslan, other officers and Branch 251

Prosecutor Klinge said that P5 recognized Accused Raslan and asked whether he recognized Accused Al-Gharib. P5 said that the face is familiar and perhaps he saw him, but the facial features have changed.

Prosecutor Klinge said that P5 mentioned Abdelmon'em previously and asked if P5 meant Abdelmon'em An-Na'san. عبد المنعم النعسان. P5 said yes, probably.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P5 knew Omar Shannan. عمر شنان. P5 asked if he is an officer and said that he is probably a second lieutenant from Aleppo due to his dialect.

Prosecutor Klinge said that P5 stated in the questioning that "there is nothing that was not allowed to do. Heads were hit against walls and blood splashed. He heard that many died in prison." Klinge asked if P5 knew what happened with the detainees. P5 told Klinge that he did not say that many died, but he suspected only one person to have died. He said that they were massively beaten and he heard sounds and screams but the only person he saw was the one wearing the Gallabiyya. P5 said that was the only non-moving [incapacitated] person he saw.

Prosecutor Klinge said that P5 said in the questioning that he heard that many died in prison. P5 affirmed this, as personnel [عناصر] used to talk to each other and say that because of the torturing, many may die. But, P5 said this was an assumption. He reiterated that they were not allowed to enter the prison in the first place.

10 minute break

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked about Abdelmon'em's rank and his relation to Accused Raslan's. P5 said that Abdelmon'em is a lieutenant-colonel, مقدم, and he was the deputy of the division. Counsel Scharmer asked if lieutenant-colonel was subordinate to colonel and several ranks below brigadier general. P5 said that lieutenant-colonel is higher than major.

P5 enumerated the ranks in the following (ascending) order: Second Lieutenant ملازم [one star]; First Lieutenant ملازم أول (two stars); Captain نقيب (three stars); Major رائد (an eagle); Lieutenant-colonel مقدم (an eagle and a star); Colonel عقيد (an eagle and two stars); Brigadier general عميد (an eagle and three stars). He said the following ranks do not exist in the security branches/general intelligence services: Major general لواء, Lieutenant general, Colonel general عماد أول and Field Marshal فريق.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer referred to P5's prior statement of how Accused Raslan came and told personnel to stop beating detainees, and asked him if he could estimate when that happened. P5 said this was during the demonstrations in 2011 and he could not tell exactly when, but perhaps after six or seven months. Scharmer asked if it was seven months after the beginning of the uprising in March 2011, and P5 said yes.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked if the "volunteers" he mentioned were from Branch 251, Division 40 or both. P5 said Branch 251 has many divisions and other divisions delivered to Branch 251, as it is the main branch. P5 said that occasionally, volunteers from the branch, division 40 and other divisions would go to demonstrations. P5 said that frankly he does not know which branch was involved in the specific demonstration mentioned above.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked P5 if the volunteers stopped the beating when Accused Raslan told them to do so. P5 said yes certainly as they were “volunteers” and he was an officer.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said that P5 said that there were “iron spider-web” windows overlooking the inner yard and asked if they overlooked the outer side. P5 said that the windows overlooked the inner side, only within the branch and not the residential buildings.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said P5 to verify this statement from this prior questioning: “there were small windows for air at the bottom, but he did not know how it looked inside. When people arrived at the prison, Raslan and his deputy were in their offices. Sometimes, Raslan and his deputy went downstairs to the prison, probably because there were rooms for the interrogations. Otherwise, P5 heard that interrogations were upstairs. P5 heard screams of pain and begging as well as insults.” P5 said this statement was correct.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked P5 to verify this statement: “P5 was never in prison and always heard screams.” P5 said that he used to hear screams when he used to cross the branch’s yard and head to the restaurant or housing, but not “always.” P5 said he meant in the time he was in the branch, and “often/غالباً” but not “always.”

Plaintiff Counsel Mohammad said that P5 previously stated “there is nothing they were not allowed to do” and asked if that includes sexual mistreatment. P5 said no, he did not witness that; rather, he meant that all methods of beating were exercised on detainees.

Plaintiff Counsel Kroker mentioned that P5’s previous statement “that it would not be exaggerated to say that it was their daily business and the branch was proud about the delivery of many detainees, they would have boasted about it” and added that “P5 did not see corpses, because there was a warning.” P5 said that this warning was in regards to an incident with his colleague, who took a photo. P5 said that colleague was scolded and went down to prison, as photos were not allowed to get outside. P5 added that it is known that all security branches are secret; one was not even allowed to tell his family about his service and the names of the officers.

Plaintiff Counsel Kroker asked if there were females among the delivered detainees. P5 said that he only once saw females who were delivered. He said there was a demonstration in Arnous square ساحة عرنوس in Damascus and he heard from his friends that the female detainees were released, but he does not know for sure.

Michael Böcker, counsel for Accused Raslan, asked if P5 heard or was told that people were interrogated in Raslan’s office or the deputy’s office. P5 said he was a normal staff member [عنصر] and questioned who would tell him that. P5 explained that when he and others used to pass by the Branch’s yard, the prison was on their left side. He said the blindfolded prisoner and the guard used to take the five steps upstairs, then five steps to the interrogation division. He said that anyone who was passing by the yard and looked left would see that the prisoner was heading to the interrogation. In response to a further question, P5 added that he saw them heading to the interrogation, but the interrogation itself was not conducted in front of him.

Judge Wiedner asked if Accused Al-Gharib’s face was familiar from the time of P5’s service and if P5 could estimate the time period. P5 said that it was eight years ago and the face is familiar, but he was not 100% sure. In response to a further question, P5 said that there was a photo array in his questioning, and he said that face was familiar, but not that he knew the person [Al-Gharib].

Judge Kerber asked what were the condition of detainees taken to be interrogated. P5 said that they were exposed to beating [it appeared that they have been beaten].

Counsel Mohammad read out his statement again. Judge Kerber asked if that was a suggestion or a petition, and Mohammad said that it was a petition.

Proceedings were adjourned at 11:30 a.m.

Trial Day 18 – July 06, 2020

There were about 6 spectators and 3 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Testimony of P6 [redacted]

The witness was P6 a 45-year-old dentist and writer who resides in Berlin.

Judge Kerber asked P6 if he is a relative of one of the accused, and P6 said that Accused Al-Gharib was his cousin.

P6 began to speak about his experience in Syria, but was interrupted when one spectator from the press took photos inside the courtroom. Chief Judge Kerber saw him and summoned him to the judges' panel. She was upset and demanded that he delete all photos immediately. Kerber then handed the phone to an IT personnel. Kerber reiterated that taking photos and recording of any kind are prohibited in the courtroom, and individuals can be fined. She did not fine this individual as she did not know if he was present when she first gave the warning, but this person may not be allowed to bring his phone inside again. Kerber apologized for the disruption.

P6'S background and detention

P6 resumed and said that he said he took an interest in Syrian political affairs at an early stage. He stated that after Hafez Al-Assad died, he attended political discussions during what was known as the "Damascus Spring" (2000 – 2001), especially with [redacted]. P6 said that he and colleagues established a small forum that addressed various cultural and political topics, and he began to build relationships with ex-opposition figures (some personal friends and other acquaintances). P6 said he began to write about Syrian affairs in 2007, including secularism. When the uprisings in Egypt and Tunisia began, P6 said that he, like many others, was excited about the possibility of it reaching Syria. He said he participated in the first demonstration from the beginning on March 25, 2011 in Duma, and participated in other demonstrations as well.

P6 said he was detained on April 8, 2011 for about 10 hours. He said there was an unsuccessful attempt for a demonstration at Ar-Rifa'i mosque جامع الرفاعي in Kafar Souseh, كفر سوسة and the security and shabiha forces dispersed the demonstrators. P6 and his friend headed to Al-Baramkeh البرامكة and entered an internet café. P6 said he attempted to write a small report online about the demonstration, but security forces came to the café and detained them. He added that two taxis and other vehicles were waiting for them.

P6 stated that one month after the incident, the café manager told P6 that a security personnel [عنصر أمن] was following them, went inside the café, spoke to the manager and asked him if it was possible to monitor what they were doing. The security personnel was able to monitor the activity and when P6 posted the article on Facebook, the security personnel came and they were taken (via cars) to Palestine branch, where the interrogation lasted from 02:00 pm to 12:00 am. P6 said that he preferred to begin the questions; he could share more details, but did not know if it was important.

Judge Kerber asked if he was handcuffed. P6 said that he was handcuffed in the café and was taken to the car. A security personnel [عنصر أمن] came and told the officer that P6 closed his Facebook account before leaving. Therefore, P6 was taken from the car and inside the café to open his account. P6 said that in the car, they were asked about their names and professions. P6 said that he was a dentist and a journalist and his friend was a philosophy teacher and a journalist. He stated that security forces got surprised and felt that they got a valuable “catch.” P6 testified that they were told not to be afraid and that it was a routine investigation. They were transferred three to four times between the Branch’s floors and asked simple questions to get information, before being taken to the main interrogation.

P6 said that the interrogator described himself as a “young man,” said he was a college graduate, and it would be a friendly talk. The interrogator began to ask P6 about his political affiliations, why P6 was interested in the demonstrations and why P6 was publishing fake-news on Facebook. P6 told the interrogator that he was not a member of any party; he was merely interested and the uprising was necessary. P6 said they took his Facebook’s account information, but fortunately P6 abided by the known safety instructions: each Thursday, he deleted anything that would cause harm if leaked.

P6 was transferred to another captain’s office. He said he was asked if he was from [redacted]. The new interrogator added that many of them from there are educated and are officers in the army, and asked why P6 was involved and interested in vandalising actions. P6 said he did not get beaten then; he was only sworn and insulted at. P6 testified that when they were transferred between the rooms, there were two to three detainees next to the wall with their hands behind them, and personnel [عناصر] used to swear at them or beat them when they passed by. P6 said they were told by personnel [عناصر] that these detainees were informants, and that P6 is different and should not be afraid.

P6 testified that around midnight, perhaps the Branch’s head on the seventh floor spoke with them for about 10 minutes and gave them a lecture about patriotism and democracy. P6 said that they were monitoring their page [could be Facebook page] and that their friends were publishing about their detention. Therefore, the official asked them to tell the truth and that they would be treated respectfully. P6 stated that the official said if they faced any problem to come to him. Then, they were released.

Judge Kerber asked how P6 knew that it was Palestine Branch. P6 said that he lived for two years in the area and thus, knew that it was a security area. He said he also heard that the Patrols [Branch 215] and Palestine [Branch 235] branches were there.

Questioning about Accused Al-Gharib

Judge Kerber asked various questions about P6’s relationship with Accused Al-Gharib. P6 said they did not grow up together as P6 and his family were living in a different province and he used to meet relatives only in summer. P6 testified that he does not have information as to how Al-Gharib was as a child. He said that he and his family used to go to [redacted], and Al-Gharib and his family were in [redacted]. P6 said that they used to go for around one week to the village [redacted] in the two month-long summer vacation.

Judge Kerber asked about Accused Al-Gharib’s education and work background. P6 said he does not know if Al-Gharib passed baccalaureate/high school , بكوريا but knows that Al-Gharib did not continue his studies. P6 said that after high school, Al-Gharib volunteered in the security forces and the Ministry of Interior, but he was not sure.

P6 said that his actual relationship with Accused Al-Gharib started in 2001 after P6 finished college and flag [military] service. P6 opened a dental clinic in the area where Al-Gharib was living (in [redacted]). Al-Gharib was there, along with many relatives from [redacted]; that is why P6 opened his store there. P6 said that he occasionally met with Al-Gharib as Al-Gharib used to sometimes come with a relative or with his wife to P6’s clinic.

Judge Kerber asked if Accused Al-Gharib shared details with P6 on his work. P6 said that Al-Gharib said that he was a sports trainer in Najha and then worked in the religions division. P6 said that Al-Gharib mentioned an incident. P6 said there was a new movement [group] in the society called “emo,” and Al-Gharib gave P6 a report about that movement [group]. P6 recalled that it included an interview with a mosque sheikh, a Christian cleric and a university professor in psychology. P6 said that is what he knew about Al-Gharib's work in the religions division.

Judge Kerber referred to P6's 2019 questioning, where he was asked about Al-Gharib's political position. P6 testified that he previously stated that Al-Gharib clearly declared his support for the uprising in front of P6 and others from the beginning. P6 did not mention the following in the questioning of September 2019: Al-Gharib came once to P6's clinic (perhaps to bring his son to treatment) in February or March 2011, two – three weeks prior to the uprising. P6 asked Al-Gharib about the security forces, and Al-Gharib said that they were put on alert completely. P6 stated that Al-Gharib said that they knew that an uprising would happen, and "God willing," it will happen.

Judge Kerber asked about Accused Al-Gharib's actions in the security forces and in the religions division. P6 said that he has no idea and Al-Gharib did not tell him. Kerber said that P6 stated in a prior questioning that Al-Gharib said his work was not routine since the beginning of 2011 as his work changed and he started to work overtime from March 2011 onwards. Kerber noted that P6 just said that Al-Gharib did not tell him, and reminded P6 that his duty was to speak the truth.

Judge Kerber asked again, what Al-Gharib was doing. P6 said that Al-Gharib's duties were clear, and added that he does not know his daily routine or details. P6 said they [religions division] used to go out on Fridays to monitor where demonstrations were anticipated to emerge from. P6 said that is what he knew and that is what he witnessed in other demonstrations from the shabiha and security forces.

Judge Kerber asked how Accused Al-Gharib was feeling inside the branch, and if there was tension between Sunnis and Alawites. P6 said that Al-Gharib mentioned an incident, but does not know if it occurred frequently. P6 said that Al-Gharib was with two of his colleagues, and one of these two heard that the detainees' vehicle [arrived]. P6 said that when this person heard the bus, he took the baton and went to participate in the "welcoming party" to beat the detainees. P6 stated that Al-Gharib was very angry, because it was not [the person's] task and was not required from him. P6 said this happened maybe in Al-Khatib, but he only knew about that by following the ongoing trial.

Questioning about Division 40

Judge Kerber asked about Division 40. P6 said that he does not know the Division's work, but Al-Gharib mentioned Hafez Makhlof حافظ مخلوف more than once, talked about his cruelty and tyranny, and mentioned the shooting incident in Duma. As far as P6 remembered, he said that Makhlof got out of his 4x4 car and put his foot on the car's door step and started shooting. P6 said that he heard that from Al-Gharib. P6 said that he does not know how Al-Gharib knows this and he did not ask him.

Judge Kerber asked if P6 knew if Accused Al-Gharib worked in Division 40. P6 said that he does not know. Kerber asked him to remember, but P6 said that he does not know at all. Kerber asked one more time and P6 said he does not remember; Al-Gharib only talked about Makhlof and mentioned that he threatened the forces [العناصر] and asked loyalty for the regime. P6 said that was what he recalled, but he had no information if Al-Gharib was in Division 40. P6 said that he read and heard that Makhlof is the head of the Division.

Judge Kerber asked about Division 40's reputation in Syria. P6 said that he does not know, but said that generally, all branches and divisions are human slaughterhouses that kill and torture people. P6 said that therefore, a division controlled by Makhlof, is a true hell.

Judge Kerber said that P6 stated in his September 2019 questioning that "the regime had no trust in Al-Gharib anymore. He had office work, which was a sign that the regime did not trust Sunnis. Al-Gharib told P6 that he was transferred to Division 40 in July 2011." P6 said that he does not remember these details, nor does he remember the relation between Division 40 and Branch 251.

Questioning about Accused Al-Gharib, continued

Judge Kerber asked about the service weapons. P6 said that Al-Gharib told him that the weapons were withdrawn from them [after the uprisings], and that they did not have weapons as before.

Judge Kerber asked about the time-frame. P6 said that it is difficult but recalls that it was in summer. He said that Al-Gharib mentioned that he felt aligned on the basis of religion and sectarian groups. Judge Kerber asked if that was related to the withdrawal of weapons. P6 said maybe and that Al-Gharib told him that there was doubts and mistrust, and the atmosphere was tense. P6 said that the weapons were withdrawn and only given when there were demonstrations, but he did not remember.

P6 testified that Accused Al-Gharib told him once that there was a decree to detain an activist involved in the demonstrations, maybe in [redacted] P6 said that Al-Gharib told him that Al-Gharib sent a warning through a relative of that person, who told that individual he had to flee or hide. P6 said this occurred around May - August 2011, but it was difficult to remember.

P6 also testified about his friend who was warned. He said that his memory regarding the details of the event was not clear (especially about where he heard the information; whether it was directly from Al-Gharib or from another relative), but it did occur. P6 said that he was told that there was a decree to detain that individual, and they knew that P6 knows that individual. P6 said he was asked to warn her, but told them that the individual was basically hiding and was not going to her house regularly. P6 said her name was [redacted].

P6 said that he wanted to mention a small detail that he knew from Accused Al-Gharib's brother. He said that no one from P6's family or from Al-Gharib's family knew that P6 was going to testify. However, Al-Gharib's brother [redacted] called P6 when they were searching for P6's two cousins in the Caesar photos. P6 told him that there was a witness who was going to testify anonymously in Al-Gharib's case. He said that Al-Gharib's brother got surprised and said that this witness could testify in favour of Al-Gharib. P6 knew this information about this witness through media. Al-Gharib's brother called P6 and told him that there was a piece of information and was wondering if they could prove it, that Al-Gharib knew that there was an ambush for [redacted] and that she was going to be detained from a commemoration of someone's death [عزاء] and that she was going to visit in the "camp" in Al-Qadam, القدم in Al-Yarmouk camp مخيم اليرموك. P6 said that Al-Gharib tried to reach her through the area's mayor to warn her [مختار المنطقة]. P6 said that information was from Al-Gharib's brother a week ago.

Judge Kerber asked how they ended up at [redacted] story during their conversation. P6 asked if he could bring his phone inside the courtroom in order to show the WhatsApp [conversation] history and how they ended up mentioning [redacted]. Kerber allowed it and asked the security guard to bring the phone. P6 said that it was in box number 6.

Judge Kerber said that until the phone arrives, she wanted to ask what Al-Gharib's rank was. P6 said third or first class warrant officer [مساعد أو مساعد أول].

The phone was delivered and Judge Kerber asked the witness to approach the judge's panel and show how they ended up speaking about [redacted]. P6 said that there was a voice call that happened with Al-Gharib's brother which addressed how they could prove that Al-Gharib tried to reach out for [redacted] and if that could be in favour of Al-Gharib.

The phone's screen was shown through the projector. A WhatsApp conversation dating back to June 24 was shown. P6 started to read out the conversation.

"Hallo, how are you? Are you busy/free?"

"Do you remember appearance of [redacted] my cousin, son of my uncle [redacted]?"

"Yes, I know the image"

"Is this the image?" [a corpse image was shown in the conversation]

"I saw the photos yesterday and was suspicious, but no one was really him"

"I search for [using] the ear and the nasal bone"

"It is close, but not his photo"

"[redacted] is brown and this one is lighter"

P6 said that they continued discussing the photo. Then, he scrolled down the conversation. P6 said: "Today there is a witness testifying anonymously concerning Eyad" [اليوم فيه شاهد مخفي بخصوص إياد]. Al-Gharib's brother answered that he was surprised. P6 asked him if he got an idea who the witness would be and Al-Gharib's brother said no. P6 told him that he read on Facebook or somewhere else that there would be an anonymous witness and maybe he would testify in favour of Al-Gharib. (there was a journalist from Levant who was covering the subject). He told P6 that he remembered an important thing and they talked about the [redacted] incident and then he asked P6 if they could reach [redacted] and ask her if that story happened.

Judge Kerber told P6 to take his phone back and go back to his seat. Kerber asked P6 if he was already planning to show that conversation prior to testifying, and P6 said no.

P6 asked if he could read out a testimony about a detainee in Al-Khatib branch who was detained in August 2012 for six months. The testimony was written in September 2016 and P6 shared it on his page [could be Facebook] in December 2016. P6 thought that the testimony could be of benefit, because it was about Al-Khatib and the conditions inside it.

P6 said that he wanted to clarify a point and stated that he completely supports the victims and justice. He said he is standing with Al-Gharib, but that does not change his position [of supporting the victims]. P6 wanted to read out the testimony before the court to describe to the horrible circumstances inside Al-Khatib.

Judge Kerber said that P6 stated that Al-Gharib was a sergeant major in his police questioning. P6 said that it could be a mistake in the translation.

Judge Kerber asked about Al-Gharib's defection. P6 said that Al-Gharib defected at the end of 2011, after P6 was released. P6 said that he personally knew that Al-Gharib was talking about defection since August or September, and they were advising him to take his time and arrange his family situation first, because defecting is not easy. After Al-Gharib defected, P6 did not see him. One or two months later, P6 said he heard that Al-Gharib travelled and he has not seen Al-Gharib until today [the day of the testimony]. He said they spoke twice: once on the phone in July 2018 when P6's mother died and then when Al-Gharib was released the previous year, as P6 called him to congratulate him.

15 minute break

Judge Kerber asked P6 about his background and education. P6 spoke about Al-Gharib's education and said he does not know if Al-Gharib graduated in [redacted] or [redacted]. He said the school was in [redacted], but he does not know where the final high school graduation exam بكوريا was held.

Judge Kerber asked if P6 knew whether Al-Gharib did a training or a military service. P6 said that he knew general information – that someone does a six-month training course when they volunteer in the security or military [field]. P6 gave an example that he did his military service between 2001 and 2003 as a doctor. He used to learn military science/knowledge and do sport exercises.

Judge Kerber asked if Al-Gharib joined the army or the security forces. P6 said that he does not remember Al-Gharib volunteering in the army. He knew that Al-Gharib was in the state security and does not know if state security was under administration of ministry of interior. P6 does not know the functional attribution/description, whether they were soldiers or have different names.

P6 said that he has no idea if state security is part of the intelligence services. Judge Kerber asked about state security. P6 said that the Syrian state security has two roles: (1) theoretically, it is supposed to protect the state and keep the people safe, but (2) in reality it monitors its own people and helps keep the regime in power.

Judge Wiedner said that P6 stated he was with the opposition, then asked if P6 did not have a problem with his cousin working for the state security. P6 said all he knew was that Al-Gharib was a sports trainer in Najha. P6 said he knew that Al-Gharib's intention was not to harm or damage anybody. Additionally, P6 said that during his work in his clinic, many people from the security forces and the army used to come, and many people from his village, relatives or acquaintance were in the army or the security forces. He said they used to know who was embroiled in certain obscenities [سفالات] and who was not (he meant before the uprising). He said there were many or some people whom they knew were corrupt or were harming people and therefore, they did not deal with them. Therefore, if P6 knew that Al-Gharib was a bad person at that period during his work, P6 would have not dealt with him.

Judge Wiedner said that he did not understand. He stated that P6 was detained after the uprising, and that Accused Al-Gharib's work was not routine anymore as Al-Gharib was monitoring mosques and witnessed detentions. Judge Wiedner asked if P6 did not have a problem with this [i.e. was it not contradictory].

P6 asked if the question could be repeated, because he wanted to comment on the routine issue.

Judge Wiedner repeated the question. P6 said that he talked in February with Al-Gharib about the status of the security forces and Al-Gharib said that they were put on a complete alert. Regarding this issue, security forces used to bring junior employees from the country departments in March and April. These employees were [used] to prevent demonstrations or to do pro-regime marches. P6 said the whole regime was on alert, not only the security forces. Everybody who knew P6, knew that P6 was participating in demonstrations. However, P6 said he (and also many other relatives of Al-Gharib) were not afraid that Al-Gharib would report them.

Judge Wiedner asked how security forces dealt with demonstrations. P6 said that the first demonstration he joined was on March 25, 2011 in Duma. A pro-regime march of 100 – 200 people carrying the president's photos came from the other side. He said they knew that these people [marching] were employees and simple workers.

P6 said there was certainly violence from security forces against the demonstrations in May or late April after his detention, and he stayed home around four weeks out of fear. Then, he said he went to Kafar Souseh to participate in a demonstration. They were waiting at the square opposite to the mosque for the demonstration to get out [of the mosque] so that they could join it. At that time, the security forces closed the grand mosque's door, scattered demonstrators and forbade recording. Fifteen minutes later, a 24 passenger bus came. A group of military forces or soldiers wearing uniforms and carrying batons got off [the bus] and assaulted the demonstrators. P6 said they beat and detained people, but P6 does not know how many.

Judge Wiedner said that P6 experienced that situation and yet had a cousin who worked in the security forces and then in division 40 that has a bad reputation. Wiedner then asked if he did not find that a problem. P6 said that Al-Gharib declared to P6 clearly that he supported the uprising.

Judge Wiedner further asked P6 about this contradiction. P6 said that Al-Gharib did not mention participating [in such actions] or detaining demonstrators. Wiedner asked if P6 asked Al-Gharib about that. P6 said no, he does not remember. P6 did not look at Al-Gharib that way and therefore, P6 was considering Al-Gharib as part of the uprising, not against demonstrators. P6 said that Al-Gharib declared that he was with the uprising.

Judge Wiedner again asked about this contradiction [of how Al-Gharib was with state security and the uprising at the same time]. P6 said that he did not see a contradiction provided that Al-Gharib was helping demonstrators and detainees. He said that even if Al-Gharib did not help demonstrators and detainees, it is enough for one to declare [his support for the uprising] or to be known that one is anti-regime [that would get someone in big trouble].

Judge Wiedner said that he was understanding this less and less. Wiedner stated that P6 remarked that branches are slaughter-houses, but P6 was still satisfied because Al-Gharib was ideologically on the other side. P6 said that he apologized and said that he thinks that the question format was not correct. P6 assumed that Al-Gharib was on the side of the uprising and was not looking at Al-Gharib as an accused.

Judge Wiedner said that P6's cousin is a defendant in the case and is accused of detaining demonstrators and delivering them to Al-Khatib. He asked P6 if knowing this would be surprising for P6. P6 said that he did not know that, nor did Al-Gharib tell him that he was personally participating in this charge. P6 said that he wanted to clarify a point: in spite of him knowing Al-Gharib, they did not used to meet daily or weekly. P6 said he was speaking based on the limited meetings.

Judge Wiedner said that P6 was treated well during his detention in Palestine Branch, which was not the usual case and asked about the reason. P6 said that he was detained on April 8, 2011, which means in an early time of the uprising. In P6's opinion, the plan of the regime in that time period was to limit violence. They were using a certain level of violence, which one could see in the numbers of martyrs who fell [died] on Fridays. Every two weeks, a certain number fell [died]. After that, the number rose. Therefore, more and more violence was used. P6 was lucky that he was not beaten but only sworn at.

Judge Wiedner asked P6 if he had advocates [in the security branches] and if he mentioned that his cousin worked for the state security. P6 said no; he did not mention that, but when he was detained and they took his Facebook account, many friends asked a lot about P6 and his friend who was detained, and wrote that they were missing and maybe detained. He said that is what the branch's head told them.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a translator and a reverse translation during the police questioning. P6 said yes. P6 said there was a misunderstanding with the translator but they worked on it and there were no technical problems.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if a person called [redacted] was in their family. P6 said no.

Matthias Schuster, Counsel for Al-Gharib, said that P6 said in the police questioning that people from his region were increasingly joining the state security. P6 said no; he said that around 500 people from [redacted] were officers in the army - some in security forces or other departments, but not "all" or even "most" of them in security forces.

Counsel Schuster said that P6 said that other family members reported about Al-Gharib's desertion. P6 said that on the first or second day [after he deserted], [redacted], Al-Gharib's older brother, visited P6 in the clinic and told him that he submitted a notice that Al-Gharib was missing. That was the common excuse used to cover the desertion to avoid being pursued (either missing or abduction). P6 said that Al-Gharib's brother came to P6 to the clinic and told P6 that he submitted a notice [بلاغ] was translated as "Vermisstenanzeige" i.e. "missing person report", but not in the newspaper or media. P6 said Al-Gharib's brother also said that dozens submitted such reports.

Counsel Schuster said that P6 said that it was not in a newspaper nor in media and asked if Al-Gharib's brother went to the branch. P6 said that he does not know.

Plaintiff counsel Sebastian Scharmer said that P6 said that they had a conversation with the brigadier general and the latter told them to come whenever they have a problem. Scharmer said that it sounds like a job offer. P6 said that the security forces [عناصر الأمن] who took them were speaking with each other that they would take them to the brigadier's general's office and then they would be released. P6 said that of course it was a job offer; it was obvious. At that moment, P6 and his friend only wanted to go home. This may not help the case, but it was funny: at that moment, the brigadier general (after his offer) asked them if they lost something from their belongings at the detention.

P6's friend said that he bought a new USB/flash drive and lost it. The brigadier general asked how much did it cost and put his hand in his pocket, as if he was looking for money. P6 said that the situation was funny, because that branch (and other branches) are human slaughter-houses and that behaviour was caricature-ish in that field [it was "funny" as who would ever think that a head of a branch would have some conscience to tell him that "if they lost something because of us, then we must compensate them"]].

Counsel Scharmer asked if P6 accepted the "job offer." P6 said of course not.

Judge Wiedner asked P6 questions about Accused Al-Gharib's background. P6 again remarked that his relationship with Al-Gharib started later in life, when he opened his clinic.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:10 p.m. The next trial will be July 29, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 7

Hearing Dates: July 29, 30, & 31, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 19 – July 29, 2020

- P7, a 30-year-old man, testified about his detention at Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh branches and being falsely accused of funding the Free Syrian Army (FSA). Over approximately three weeks, P7 was strip-searched, repeatedly beaten on his feet, subjected to torture by cables, and had gasoline poured over him. His testimony specifically sheds light on the harsh conditions facing detainees in Al-Khatib Branch, including: overcrowded cells, poor sanitation, inadequate meals, limited access to water, and dire medical concerns. P7 was released on the day that the Syrian National Security Bureau was bombed. There was some dispute as to whether P7 was detained at Branch 251 or another branch.

Trial Day 20 – July 30, 2020

- P8, 39-year-old man, also testified about his detention at Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh branches. Over the course of four interrogations, P8 was questioned about his affiliation with demonstration coordinating committees. He sustained beatings, particularly to his feet. Moreover, P8 estimated that four people died during his time in the jail, including one man who was deposited next to him in a courtyard. At Kafar Souseh, guards named a torture device after UN Special Envoy Lakhdar Brahimi which they used to beat detainees.

Trial Day 21 – July 31, 2020

- P9 was a government employee who owned an internet café in Syria. He was detained on orders of a brigadier general, then held in the Fourth Division. Much of his testimony focused on his first interrogation in which his interrogator allegedly recognized him. P9 explained how his status as a government employee likely led to his release. He suggested that Defendant Raslan could possibly be the man who interrogated him. When P9 was asked to attempt to identify Raslan in court, Raslan waved to him. There was a question about the fairness of photo arrays the police used to see whether P9 could identify Raslan's photograph.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Day 19 of Trial – July 29, 2020

The audience consisted of twelve spectators and six members of the media. Proceedings began at 9:30AM.

Testimony of P7

P7 is a 30-year-old male. He works at a restaurant and attends a B2 language class. He was summoned as a witness and is unrelated to the defendants.

P7's Detention

P7 explained that, in July 2012, he was detained from between 3PM-4PM on Nisreen Street (شارع نسرين) in the Damascus district of At-Tadamon (التضامن) by pro-Regime Shabiha. He thought that he might die at any moment. P7 said that he was detained because his identification card indicated that he was from Aleppo. The Shabiha looked at his identification card and asked what he was doing in Damascus. P7 told them that he was born in Damascus and that his identification card was issued there too. The Shabiha flipped P7's t-shirt over his head and instructed him to keep his head down. He was then beaten while unable to see the aggressors.

P7 was taken to the basement of a building, and was hurled into a cell with such force that he fell on other individuals. Either diesel or gasoline was poured on the detainees.<sup>2</sup> P7 recalled that the Shabiha began to talk amongst themselves. "It seemed as if a person's conscience had woken up, but another person told him no, he wanted to throw the cigarette." The Shabiha then led the detainees outside of the cell to a seemingly airless corridor where they stayed for approximately two hours. During this time, the Shabiha asked the detainees who needed water and gave some to the detainees. They also asked who was willing to pay money to be released from detention. Several individuals offered between 100,000-200,000 SYP. P7 noted that those people who were released were not seen again.

Around 2AM-3AM, the Shabiha brought a vehicle in which they sought to transport 29 individuals.<sup>3</sup> The Shabiha then formed two queues, each with ten people, spanning the space from the detainees to the vehicle. Detainees had to pass between the queues of Shabiha who beat them until the detainees boarded the vehicle. P7 recalled that the vehicle smelled as if it was used to transport meat. En route to the next location, the vehicle stopped by three checkpoints where, each time, three military personnel entered the vehicle and beat some of the detainees "as a way to let off steam."

The vehicle arrived at Al-Khatib Branch<sup>4</sup> and the detainees were escorted downstairs, strip-searched, then escorted to their cells.<sup>5</sup> P7 recalled seeing many people when he entered his cell; there was no place for him to sit on the floor, and people lost their spot if they stood up. He stayed there for two weeks.

---

<sup>2</sup> P7 could not recall whether the substance poured on the detainees was diesel or gasoline. Later in the proceedings, Plaintiff's Counsel Oehmichen refers to gasoline.

<sup>3</sup> P7 recalled that the number of individuals (29) is based on what he overheard the Shabiha discuss.

<sup>4</sup> Al-Khatib is also known as State Security Branch 251.

<sup>5</sup> P7 specifically recalled the staircase where the detainees were frisked, as well as a door to the left. He went through a corridor, then turned right. The Trial Monitor noted that P7 used his hands to describe the scene.

During the first week, P7 was taken to an interrogation room where he was forced to kneel on the floor with his head down and his face covered. There were two people in the room: an interrogator who stood in front of P7 and a guard who stood behind P7. When the interrogator was unsatisfied with P7's answers, the guard hit P7 with a cable. On one occasion, the interrogator asked P7 why he was in detention, to which P7 responded that he lived and worked in Damascus, but was detained because [his identification card stated that] he was from Aleppo. P7 believed that the interrogator wanted him to provide a false confession. He told the interrogator to check his criminal record and that he would accept his detention if the record indeed showed a criminal history. He was eventually led back to his cell.

P7 went on to describe the prison conditions. According to him, detainees could not differentiate between day and night, or whether they were sitting or standing. The bodies of some people were covered in rashes,<sup>6</sup> including the body of a boy. They were granted access to a toilet once per day. People had to queue in advance if they wanted to use the toilet, which was difficult for the elderly inmates who reminded P7 of his father. Detainees were also forbidden to shower. P7 mentioned how one person went to the toilet and poured water on himself because he was "disgusted with himself" and was subsequently beaten as punishment. P7 recounted that food was given to the detainees on a tray meant to serve 15 people, but was only sufficient to feed three people.

Two weeks after P7 arrived at Al-Khatib, he and other detainees were taken by bus to a different branch in Kafar Souseh (كفرسوسة). P7 recalled that the transfer took place around 2PM on a hot day. He also remembered being barefoot. The detainees were taken to a yard where forces [عناصر] awaited them. When the forces saw the detainees from afar, they rushed toward the detainees and began to beat them. P7 noted the confusion he felt during the attack; he found it strange that the detainees were taken to this branch. P7 was then taken to his new cell, which he described as being relatively more spacious than his cell in Al-Khatib.

He recalled overhearing a conversation amongst the forces, who were hovering near the cell, in which they asked each other why the detainees were brought to the branch. They said that P7 should be one of them. P7 was then beaten by one of the forces. He noted that the aggressor was approximately 1.5m [4'9 ft] while P7 is 1.92m [6'3 ft]. P7 felt that the force had a grudge against him, but did not know why. They stayed in that place for three hours then were taken back to the branch.

They remained at the branch for two or three days, then were taken outside to the branch's yard. According to P7, the goal of the forces was to nurse the detainees back to health, but only to the extent that the physical signs [of torture] were concealed. As such, they were given food and saw a doctor.<sup>7</sup> They were also asked if anyone wanted to make a phone call. P7 did not accept the offer, however, because he did not feel safe.<sup>8</sup> They were then taken to the yard where they spent the night. P7 said that it was an indescribable feeling to sleep with his legs stretched out.

The next day, the detainees were told that they would be released. His wallet and money were returned, then P7 walked through the street barefoot, horrified at his appearance. P7 was unaware that the Syrian National Security Bureau was bombed on the day of his release. P7 arrived home to his family and told

---

<sup>6</sup> P7 used the Arabic word "حبوب" to describe the skin condition that he saw on his fellow inmates. It was defined by the Court's translator as "rash," but was later recognized to be "chicken pox" (see note 11).

<sup>7</sup> P7 testified that he lost 12kg (around 26 lbs) during his detention.

<sup>8</sup> Detainees often suspected that the recipients of their calls would be tracked.

them “may God not preserve me, if I stay in this country” [meaning that he would not remain in Syria]. He left Syria on May 20, 2013.

Judge Kerber’s Questioning

Judge Kerber noted P7’s statements that he was not detained by military forces. She asked if P7 remembered the number of Shabiha, whether they were armed, and if they wore uniforms. P7 explained that the Shabiha were wearing military uniforms.<sup>9</sup> He went on to say that “[w]e [Syrians] know them. They are not official volunteers,” and that “these people used to loot the private properties of civilians.” They were pro-regime and had no jobs. They entered that field and acquired authority to control. In terms of weapons, P7 said that they had AK-47s.

Judge Kerber asked what P7 saw when he was taken to the square. P7 said that his head was covered by his t-shirt and was positioned downward, otherwise he would have been beaten.

Judge Kerber addressed P7’s testimony that he was shocked because he never saw such a large tank in reference to the vehicle he rode in with the other detainees. P7 acknowledged this to be true.

Judge Kerber asked if P7 saw 300 forces there. P7 said that he saw around 200 to 300 forces [عنصر].

Judge Kerber asked how P7 was beaten while he was stopped at At-Tadamon. P7 said that he was beaten with hands, legs, and with the buttstocks of rifles.

Judge Kerber asked for the name of the second branch at which P7 was detained. P7 did not know the name of the second branch and noted that there are many branches in Syria that are simply numbered.

Judge Kerber asked if P7 knew the branch’s number. P7 did not know the branch’s number. He only knew that it was located in Kafar Souseh.

Judge Kerber asked if P7 knew where he was detained prior to his transfer to Kafar Souseh. P7 said he was in Al-Khatib.

Judge Kerber asked how P7 knew he was in Al-Khatib. P7 explained that Al-Khatib is in a neighborhood called Al-Qosour in which there is a well-known shop that sells fruit salads. He often went to the shop with his friends.<sup>10</sup>

Judge Kerber asked if other detainees told P7 where they were being held. P7 said that none of the other detainees discussed where they were because they were each afraid that an informant was among them. P7 explained that they were detained on Nisreen Street and went to Al-Khatib. He then asked if he could re-enact his actions when he got off the vehicle. [He knelt down and turned his face to the left] and said that he turned his face leftward to glance at a building.

---

<sup>9</sup> When answering this question, P7 initially referred to “civil defense” (الدفاع المدني). In his next sentence, P7 said “national defense” (الدفاع الوطني). The Court Monitor interpreted the usage of “civil defense” in the first sentence to be a mistake on the part of P7, and that he meant to say “national defense.”

<sup>10</sup> The Court Monitor noted the confusion surrounding this question. P7 said that he saw the area during the time when the detainees were being transported to the second branch, and that he could tell from the buildings that it was a residential area in Al-Khatib. But Judge Kerber meant to ask P7 about his recognition of the area in which he was finally released, Kafar Souseh.

Judge Kerber noted P7's statement that Al-Khatib was well-known to Syrians and that a detainee told him that it was Al-Khatib. She asked if that statement was correct. P7 clarified that he recognized the area and was told about the name.

Judge Kerber asked about the number of people in his cell. Defense Counsel Böcker, interjected and asked that the text be read aloud. Judge Kerber granted permission. Counsellor Böcker said that a satellite image was shown to P7 during a previous questioning. At that time, P7 was asked if he was able to recognize the buildings in the image. Böcker asked for P7's answer. P7 said that Syria did not have GPS back then. His logic told him that when he sees similar thing that is not available/working for the public, he could not recognize it and actually was not able to say what it was. However, it is a nice place and one can recognize the area without a GPS.

Judge Kerber asked again about the number of people in P7's cell. P7 said that he was more shocked by the condition of the people in his cell, not so much the number. He was a 22-year old healthy person. But when he saw the condition of others, they were different. He could not give a definite number of people, but he thought there were many people, perhaps around 300 individuals. P7 demonstrated how he used to sit down in his cell by squatting and holding his shins with his arms against his chest. He mentioned that some people slept on the laps of others. The cell was so crowded that a person would lose his spot on the ground if he stood up.

Judge Kerber asked about the number of toilets. P7 remembered three toilets. They were at the right corner upon entering the door. If someone wanted to use the toilet, he needed to queue in the line where people were waiting, sitting, and standing. Some detainees had been imprisoned for six months and had deteriorating health, so they had the right to sleep lying down to stretch their legs.

Judge Kerber mentioned P7's testimony about skin rashes. She asked if detainees had broken limbs. P7 did not see any broken limbs. [In relation to the rashes] He said that, in Syria, the rash is called chicken pox.<sup>11</sup> He did not see any blood.

Judge Kerber asked P7 if he saw corpses. P7 said no.

Judge Kerber asked about the food. P7 said that the food was given to the detainees on a tray which was placed on the floor. Whoever wanted to eat, ate. Meals consisted of potatoes, bulgur, and stale bread.

Judge Kerber noted that P7 was beaten. She asked where and how he was beaten. P7 said that he was beaten during interrogation, at Al-Khatib, and when he was frisked. "The guard who takes someone inside, greets him with beating." During the interrogation, he did not see the interrogator who beat him because his head was down. Whenever P7 said something with which the questioning interrogator did not agree, P7 was beaten with a cable on his toes [soles of his feet]. When the interrogation ended, the interrogator instructed P7 to sign a document which he was not permitted to read.

***

---

<sup>11</sup> Later in the proceedings, the translator clarified that P7 mentioned "chicken pox" but that he did not originally translate the word correctly.

[10-minute break in proceedings.]

***

A YouTube video was shown. P7 commented that YouTube video #1 depicts Baghdad Street.

A note from the Trial Monitor: the building that appears in YouTube video #1 at 00:05 is located here. If one clicks on the photo of “Al-Khatib Laboratory” in the link, one will find the photo of the same building (same staircase and balconies). If one watches the extended version of the video here, one would clearly see at 00:01 the fruit salad shop (Ramez) that P7 was speaking about. In addition to the previous explanation, one can see at the original video at 00:29 a street sign that indicates that Bab Touma and Baghdad Street were on the left. These two points mean that this was not Baghdad street, but rather Morshed Khater.

[Coordinates 33.519945, 36.311260]

YouTube video #2 was shown. P7 recalled reaching a point where he was not allowed to continue by vehicle.

A note from the Trial Monitor: the building that appears in YouTube video #2 at 00:00 is the same building here. If one clicks on the photo of “Star center radiographic Specialist” in the link, one will find the photo of the same building (same banner and appearance). The radiology center and the roundabout are both to the right side of the videographer, which means that the course of the movement was as shown below.

[Coordinates 33.521858, 36.310198]

Judge Kerber asked P7 if he recognized the entrance. P7 said that, [after he was released],<sup>12</sup> he remembered visiting the area often. He did not know that a branch was located there.

Judge Kerber asked if YouTube video #2 showed Al-Khatib Branch. P7 could not be 100% sure. He said that it is [now] 2020 and he did not research the subject matter. He also mentioned that his psychological condition after he was [released from detention] was so bad that he hated the country where he was born.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked how long P7 stayed in Al-Khatib. P7 could not remember the number of days, but guessed that he was there for two to three weeks. The detainees could not differentiate between day and night. There was a yellow light that was always turned on and it was underground. When the detainees felt tired, they slept.

Judge Wiedner asked P7 if he was unable to estimate the time because he could not see daylight. P7 confirmed that he could not see daylight.

Judge Wiedner asked P7 if he was interrogated in Branch 251. P7 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner noted P7's claim that he was interrogated at Al-Khatib. He then asked if the interrogation was on the same floor or if he went upstairs. P7 remembered that one person held him while another person dragged him. He and other detainees went seven steps up stairs, were placed in a room, then were interrogated one-by-one. He did not see the interrogator who questioned him or the person behind him who beat him.

Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogation occurred on the same floor as P7's cell. P7 was interrogated on a different floor than his cell.

---

<sup>12</sup> P7's words were "بعد ما طالعونا من المكان" which literally translates to "after we were taken outside the place," but the phrase is correctly understood as "after we were released."

Judge Wiedner asked if he was interrogated in a different building than his cell. P7 was interrogated in the same building as his cell, and that the interrogation room was approximately one floor away from his cell.

Judge Wiedner asked P7 to clarify whether P7's claim that he was beaten on his "toes" meant that he was beaten on the soles of his feet. P7 said that by "toes," he meant that he was beaten on the soles of his feet, which is where the interrogator concentrated the beating. He thought he might be shot and killed, in which case his [suffering] would end and he would be relieved.

Judge Wiedner asked if P7 wanted to die as a result of the beating. P7 said that he wanted to die because of the insults and the treatment. He characterized the people detaining him as ignorant, and he mentioned that insults against his family were more humiliating than the beating.

Judge Wiedner asked if P7's feet were swollen and if they had lasting damage because of the beating. P7 said that his feet swelled and they recovered in two or three days. He did not have lasting damage. However, his hands were tied by a plastic cable which left a mark visible for two months.

Judge Wiedner stated P7's claim that there were two persons present: an interrogator and a guard. Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogator gave orders or instructions to beat P7 and if they were communicating with each other. P7 did not know because his head was down. He knew the interrogator was in front of him and the guard was behind him based on where he heard the interrogator's voice and how he received the beating.

Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogator gave instructions to start or stop beating P7. P7 did not hear any orders, but suggested that the interrogator could have communicated with the guard using gestures.

Judge Wiedner asked if the detainees used to discuss amongst themselves the beatings or torture. P7 said that he used to hear that people should not speak to other detainees while in prison because informants were disguised as prisoners in order to collect information. If he was told something, he replied with "okay."

Judge Wiedner asked what the detainees talked about. P7 said that, on his second day, an [obese] person entered the cell. The other detainees were sad because seven people had to stand up when the [obese] person sat down.

Judge Wiedner asked how the person got to Al-Khatib. P7 explained that the [obese] person told P7 that he was selling vegetables when a demonstration passed by him. He was detained alongside the demonstrators. P7 also described another newcomer who was missing an eye and a leg, and for whom P7 felt pity. He was overwhelmed, especially by the elderly detainees who reminded P7 of his father.

Judge Wiedner restated P7's claim that some detainees were incarcerated for six months. Judge Wiedner asked P7 how he knew this to be true. P7 said that he was told that some detainees were there for six to eight months, so they were allowed to lay down and stretch their legs. He did not know where that rule originated.

Judge Wiedner asked if other detainees talked about torture. P7 said no, but he could hear sounds [of torture]. He did not know where the sound came from.

Judge Wiedner asked if P7 thought torture was happening. P7 noted that beating did not happen aside from the person who took a shower [with toilet water, as mentioned above].

Judge Wiedner asked P7 if he was able to see what happened outside of his cell. P7 said he heard sounds, but he did not know where they came from because of an [adjacent] corridor.

Judge Wiedner asked if this happened often. P7 said that he could hear the sounds from time to time, not constantly.

Judge Wiedner asked P7 if he saw corpses. P7 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked P7 if he recognized the defendant. P7 expressed that he wished that he knew someone, but if there was someone who was sitting next to him on the bus, he would not be able to recognize that person.

Prosecutor Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge restated P7's claim that he was beaten twice, then asked P7 to describe the first time he was beaten. P7 described how the first time was when the detainees arrived to the branch and entered the prison. They were stripped naked, instructed to bow, frisked, then put their clothes back on. The detainees were then handed over to the warden<sup>13</sup> who slapped them indiscriminately "as if he was telling them to fear him."

Klinge asked if it was only the warden or whether there were others. P7 said he was only aware of the staff members, not the manager.

Klinge asked how many people were beaten. P7 explained that he was beaten. The detainees were told to take off their clothes, frisked, then were handed over to the warden [guard] after they put their clothes back on. The detainees could not keep their shoelaces and belts; P7 was later informed that such objects were kept so they could not be used to commit suicide.

Klinge asked if he was beaten by anyone other than the [guard]. P7 said that the [guard] beat him in front of the cell, then pushed him inside. He was relieved because the beating ceased [when he was back in the cell].

Klinge asked if P7 was mistreated when he arrived [to the branch] or only when he was in front of the cell. P7 clarified that the branch was in a residential area, so detainees were not tortured in the yard. Rather, they were taken downstairs.

Klinge asked for confirmation that, in September of 2018, P7 said that his feet were swollen and that the guard would pull P7's feet whenever P7's drew them into his body [away from the guard]. He also asked if P7 was barefoot or wearing socks. P7 said yes, the beating was on the soles of his feet. He was flinching his feet toward his body, but the guard pulled them back. He was barefoot and was wearing sandals when he was detained.

Klinge asked what tool was used [to beat P7's feet]. P7 guessed that the tool was a quadruple cable.

---

<sup>13</sup> P7 used the word سجان. Though it generally translates to "guard," the Court translator used "warden."

Klinge asked how many people were in the cell. P7 guessed approximately 300 to 400 people. He said that it was an unforgettable scene, but he was unable to count the people.

Klinge confirmed that P7 previously gave the same answer. P7 reiterated that [the number was] approximately in that range. There were so many people that an individual would lose his place if he stood up.

Klinge asked if there was a change in the detainees and whether the guards had shifts. P7 did not know because he could not differentiate between the guards and the detainees.

Klinge asked how often detainees were called into interrogation. P7 said that he was only called once.

Klinge asked about the other detainees [whether they were interrogated more than once]. He also asked how many people were called each time. P7 said once or twice per day. However, he did not know if they were the same people or different people. Around 15 to 20 people were called each time.

Klinge asked about ventilation in the cell. P7 said that the cell was humid, but the thing he liked best was drinking water. He dipped his bread into water to satisfy his hunger and thirst for a longer time. He ate a few bites of a potato, but generally did not know what he was eating.

Klinge restated P7's claim that 200 to 400 people were inside and could not take a shower. He asked P7 if there was a stench. P7 said yes, the problem was that the people with [rashes] used to greet him [with handshakes]. He did not want to be rude to them [by refusing to shake their hands], even if it resulted in his own infection.

Klinge asked if P7 was still suffering the consequences of detention. P7 said yes, he gets angry whenever he remembers what happens to him, mostly because of the humiliation, not the beatings. He served two years in the army to get a passport. If one wants to get a passport in Syria, one must postpone studies or do compulsory service. He served in order to get a passport valid for six years.

Klinge asked if P7 had sleeping disorders. P7 noted that what he went through was nothing compared to what happened in Al-Ghouta due to the chemical [weapons]. People were besieged in Zabadani and Ghouta, including children with their families. He did not experience these incidents, which helped him forget what happened to him. People died of hunger. A rocket fell and killed an entire family. He wondered how he could think about himself. It is impossible for him to go back [to Syria] and live with such people.

Klinge said that he understood why P7 did not want to live with such people. He then asked if all 200 to 400 detainees were released. P7 said that only 15 to 20 people [were released]. [The guards] brought a box with the detainees' personal belongings and gave them back to each person.

Klinge asked if P7 knew the reason for their release. P7 did not know, and he did not think he would get an answer if he asked. He just wanted to go home.

Judge Wiedner asked about the condition of the other detainees after interrogation. P7 said that there was no blood. The pain was internal. If they were beaten, [the signs] would be under their clothes and was not apparent.

Klinge asked if P7 could see signs on people's faces. P7 said only on one or two people.

Klinge restated P7's claim that detainees appeared to be depressed and beaten after their interrogations. There were signs [of being beaten] on their faces and hands, but no other visible signs because detainees were clothed. Additionally, some of the detainees could be spies. P7 said that he used to hear that some people were sent [to prison] and would ask about the reasons why others were there.

Klinge asked if P7's statements regarding the signs of beating on detainees' faces were correctly recorded. P7 said yes, there were [bruises] from hits by elbows or hands.

Defense Counsel Böcker Questioning

Böcker asked about the release situation and the two to three days spent in the branch. P7 said that the detainees were in Al-Khatib then were put on buses. Their hands were tied by cables. When they arrived to Kafar Souseh, they were beaten for around four hours.

Böcker asked if P7 stayed in Al-Khatib for two to three days after [the beating]. P7 confirmed.

Böcker recalled P7's testimony that, the day before they were released, the detainees were asked [by guards] if they needed anything. Counsellor Böcker asked if the people who were released were the 15 to 20 people [P7 previously mentioned]. P7 explained that he did not examine everyone, but the people who were in the yard were not taken back [to the branch].

Böcker asked if [the guards] wanted to create a "good mood" by letting the detainees sleep in the yard. P7 affirmed and noted that they even brought the detainees apples to refresh them.

Böcker asked if the detainees talked about their release at night and what happened the following day. P7 said that the detainees speculated that they would not stay in the yard, so they prayed for their release. The following day, [the personnel] waited until [their shift] ended around 3PM or 4PM. They gave the detainees their belongings and released them.

Böcker mentioned that an incident occurred the day that the detainees were released. He asked P7 if the detainees were talking about it. [P7 did not understand the question and it was repeated]. P7 said that the guards did not talk. The detainees speculated about what would happen and if they would be taken to another branch. They were afraid of Sednaya (صيدنايا) [prison] because they heard that whoever goes there does not leave.

Böcker asked about the subject of P7's interrogation. P7 noted that the [questioner] asked why P7 was in the area [of Damascus]. The day he was detained, he was dressed in his work clothes. He explained to the interrogator that he was bringing stuff to his workshop. He had 7,000 SYP [130 USD] on him. [The forces] suddenly appeared and closed off the area. He was accused of financing the FSA. P7 told the interrogator to look at P7's appearance and noted that he was wearing the same work clothes the day he was detained. The interrogator perceived P7's tone to be mocking. The guard started to beat him. P7 told the interrogator to ask whatever questions he wanted. He had P7's identification card. If he found anything [in regards to P7's criminal record] even going back ten years, then he should not release P7.

Böcker asked if the 7,000 SYP played a role in the accusation. P7 did not think so. Before someone is detained, they already have an accusation ready.

Böcker noted P7's previous mention of 18,000 SYP. P7 testified that his friend was with him.

Böcker asked if the accusation was that the money was for financing the FSA. P7 confirmed.

Böcker asked if there was anything on social media, Facebook, or his mobile phone. P7 said that he did not have a Facebook in 2011 and his phone was a Nokia [meaning that he did not have a smartphone].

Böcker asked if P7 meant the summer of 2012. P7 said that he meant the summer of 2012.

Böcker asked if P7 was questioned about his mobile phone during interrogation. He was asked if the phone was returned to him, to which he responded that it was not. The phone was new and was taken from him at Nisreen Street, not at the branch.

Böcker asked if the mobile phone was a topic of the interrogation. P7 said no.

Defense Counsel Fratzki Questioning

Fratzki asked if P7 was arrested in the afternoon. P7 confirmed.

Fratzki asked if P7 was relocated at 3AM at night. P7 said that he was relocated around that time. It was dawn.

Fratzki asked how long the drive lasted. P7 said that did not [notice] the duration of the drive: maybe half an hour because they stopped and the personnel would board the vehicle to beat the detainees with batons. They did not drive directly. [The drivers] told [checkpoint personnel] to get in to let off steam [by beating the detainees].

Fratzki recalled P7's testimony that the ride was 40 minutes. P7 said this was approximate.

Fratzki asked if it was dark when they arrived. [P7 asked for clarification as to whether Fratzki was asking about the vehicle. Fratzki said "outside"]. P7 said yes.

Fratzki asked how P7 was able to recognize Al-Khatib [if it was dark outside]. P7 said that there was light near the building. He used to live in a [working class (منطقة شعبية)] area. The building was nice and there was light.

Fratzki asked if P7 had been there before and if the building had special architecture. P7 explained that he used to go there with his friends to eat fruit salad. The buildings in the area resemble each other and he thought the area was beautiful.

Fratzki asked how far the area was from P7's home. P7 said that it was around half an hour during a traffic jam.

Fratzki stated that it was dark outside, but there was a light, and P7 recognized Al-Khatib because of the architecture. P7 clarified that he did not recognize the branch. He recognized the area. He later learned that the branch was Al-Khatib.

Witness Counsel and Plaintiffs' Counsel Questioning

Plaintiff's Counsel Oehmichen asked if P7 received any release documents. P7 explained that he did not receive any release documents, just his wallet with 300 SYP. He was happy [with the money] because he could go home with it.

Oehmichen asked P7 about his feelings when gasoline was poured on him. P7 said that there was a person who he could not forget from this time. After the person poured gasoline on the detainees, the person said, “that is the end. They will be set on fire and soon everything will be over.” P7 also did not forget how he was pushed into his cell and fell on people. He weighed 100kg (220 lbs) and fell on someone who told him to “get off of him for God sake.”

Oehmichen asked if the two people [who poured gasoline on the detainees] talked to each other. P7 noted that one person asked the other person why he did that. P7 said that everyone has his own country,<sup>14</sup> like the cigarette man. He closed the door and wanted to throw the cigarette and they would have been reduced to ashes. “A war of nerves.”

Plaintiffs’ Counsel Scharmer asked if the order [of locations] was Al-Khatib then Kafar Souseh then Al-Khatib. P7 confirmed.

Scharmer asked about the reputation of Al-Khatib. P7 said that it is a branch in the middle of the city. It is an air-force branch. Syrians fear it, but they do not know what happens inside.

Scharmer asked if the interrogator was addressed as “sidi” (سيدي). P7 said that he was not concentrating. P7 was beaten and reacted with no emotions [ببرودة أعصاب].

Scharmer asked P7 if he recognized other rooms. P7 did not know. He could only see his feet while he walked.

Scharmer asked if the detainees were sexually abused while they were naked and frisked. P7 said that he did not see that.

Follow-up Questioning

Defense Counsel Böcker asked P7 to confirm what he said about Al-Khatib and the air-force branch. P7 confirmed that Al-Khatib is an air-force branch.

Böcker asked if there were multiple intelligence branches within the vicinity of the fruit salad shop on Baghdad Street. P7 said that there were officers and detachments.

Böcker asked if there were two branches in the area. Plaintiffs’ Counsel Scharmer objected to the question. Judge Kerber overruled the objection and allowed Böcker to continue asking the question. P7 said that he did not know [if there were two branches in the area]. Whenever [Syrians] saw a detachment, they turned around and went back; [they] feared the army. P7 said that he did not need to hide anything. He wished to speak and share more.

Judge Kerber asked how many buildings were in the branch. P7 did not know.

Judge Kerber asked how many floors were in the building. P7 guessed that there were four floors. However, he did not know how many underground floors there were in the building.

Judge Kerber wanted to be sure which prison P7 was detained. She recalled P7’s testimony that there was a yard between the administrative building higher than the prison and the prison [itself]. P7 said that the prison only had one upper floor and a basement. The administrative building had four floors. There was a yard outside with a metal roof, so the surrounding buildings could not see anything.

---

<sup>14</sup> “Everyone has his own country” is a colloquial expression meaning that everyone makes their own decisions and is not bound by rules.

***

[The sketch below was created by the witness and shown to the courtroom.]

***

***

[The witness was dismissed.]

***

The Court announced that during the third week of August, a witness will testify over a two-day period. The required equipment will be prepared by that time, and questioning will occur via video.

The witness was advised by his physician not to travel to Koblenz due to health issues. Judge Kerber asked if there were any worries about conducting the testimony over video. Böcker asked if the witness was in Berlin, which Judge Kerber confirmed. Böcker expressed his interest in having the witness come to court, but he did not have further comments on the matter. Judge Wiedner explained that they are in contact with the regional court.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:30 PM.

The next hearing will be on July 30, 2020 at 10:45 AM.

Day 20 of Trial – July 30, 2020

The session began at 11AM after a fifteen-minute delay. Defendant Eyad Al Gharib entered the courtroom in handcuffs. His handcuffs were removed for the proceedings and replaced at the end. The audience consisted of five spectators and two members of the media.

Testimony of P8

P8 is a 39-year-old male who works for an NGO helping Syrian refugees. He was summoned as a witness and is unrelated to the defendants.

P8's Detention

P8 said that he was detained in 2012. He was returning to his home in Damascus, which is close to Al-Khatib Branch. In order to get home, he had to pass by a checkpoint near the branch. He was detained at the checkpoint when the personnel saw his ID card. He is originally from Idlib and was born in Duma. The demonstrations began in these cities. He was then detained in Al-Khatib. Before 2011, he did not have any [problems]. He studied French literature and worked at an insurance company for five years. In 2011, the demonstrations began and he [briefly] worked as an aid volunteer.

Judge Kerber asked when P8 was detained. P8 said he was detained on the fourth or fifth of September in 2012 at 1AM.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 estimated September 4th. P8 clarified the date as September 5th because it was already night.

Judge Kerber asked how P8 knew about Al-Khatib. P8 said that Al-Khatib was well-known to people. It was about a ten-minute walk from his house. When his car was confiscated, he had to go to the branch to retrieve it, though his car is still with them until now.

Judge Kerber recalled P8's testimony in which he stated that he was detained at 2AM. She asked if he was detained at 2AM or 5AM. P8 said 1AM or 2AM, not 5AM. Five was the date.

Judge Kerber asked what happened after P8 was detained. P8 said that he was taken three or four steps down to a basement where he was turned over to a [branch official]. The official took his belongings, including his identification card, belt, and shoes. P8 took off his clothes and was frisked from top to bottom. He was then escorted to the "external sleeping room." He did not remember the size of the room, but it was full of prisoners. There were more than 200 people. There was one tap and one toilet. Light was on 24 hours a day, so the prisoners did not know if it was day or night. He said that he could speak about many details from that month.

Judge Kerber asked P8 to speak freely and recalled P8's testimony that he stood in the cell. P8 noted that the norm was for newcomers to stay at the end of the cell, so as not to lean their backs against the wall. Every person had one floor tile (بلاطة) on which to sit, if they were even able to sit.

Judge Kerber asked about the size of the floor tile. P8 said that it was the same as in the courtroom. Judge Kerber noted that the size of the floor tile in the courtroom was 40x40cm. P8 explained that the cell was cramped. People who were standing were waiting for an opportunity to sit down. One of the most difficult things at the beginning was the sweat. The floor was covered in sweat and one could not sleep. If one wanted to go to the toilet, he had to wait three to four hours to get his turn because of the number of people. When one wanted to walk, he stepped on people, not the floor. In the first week, he did not eat. The food was potatoes and tomatoes. Access to water was regularly cut and the detainees were unable to drink water or use the toilet for long periods of time. Sometimes, when a detainee was so thirsty that his mouth was too dry to eat or swallow, "the ones with us inside" would give water drop by drop. They had a single water bottle for everyone.

P8 continued that there was only one fan, so the job of the people standing was to wave their clothes in the air. Many people lost their minds because of the lack of sleep and food. After two to three days without sleep, one starts to hallucinate. There were many people who were injured in demonstrations, and they had a designated section against the wall where they had more than one floor tile on which to rest.

P8 went on to say that, after the first week, he was called into interrogation. He was blindfolded with his hands cuffed behind his back as he knelt on the floor. The first question was whether P8 knew a specific person [P8's friend. Name is redacted]. P8 said no, and the interrogator slapped him. P8 explained that when he disappeared, his family and friends did not know where he was, so they created a Facebook page called "Freedom to P8." One person who 'liked' the page was P8's friend—a photographer/videographer and a media [activist] for the demonstrations. He was wanted for this reason. The interrogation started with the question about P8's friend. They beat P8 for an answer. P8 wanted to tell the interrogator that he knew his friend in order to stop the beating, so he said that he knew his friend from university.

P8 testified that he was then taken back to the external cell [where he was held before the interrogation]. After one or two days, he was asked for the passwords to his Facebook and email accounts. At first, P8 could not recall his passwords. He was taken upstairs, then was interrogated and beaten again. The interrogators put a laptop in front of him so he could remember his password and type it. After the interrogator typed the password and accessed P8's Facebook account, he was able to acquire knowledge on the activities, as well as special information, related to the demonstration coordinating committees (تنسيقيات). The interrogators ran an investigation on the names of the people who were administrators of the committees. They wanted names and information. P8 denied knowing anything and was subsequently beaten.

In one interrogation, there were two interrogators. P8 had to lay on the floor and raise his feet. The interrogators used a belt made of black rubber with metal wires called a "tank belt" to beat P8 on the soles of his feet. They did not stop beating P8 until he gave them names. At times, P8 was unable to bear [the pain], so he gave them fake names. P8 was interrogated three or four times. Each interrogation was focused on names and individuals. One time, the torturing and beating were so fierce that P8's handcuffs ripped off. They [bound] him with a wooden object.

Judge Kerber asked how P8 was fixed. P8 said that the first time, his feet were [bound] with a rope or a rifle belt. One person bound him while another person beat him. The second time [after the plastic handcuffs were torn], the interrogators used a piece of wood with two circular holes that opened and closed onto P8's feet.<sup>15</sup> They tried to get names. In one interrogation, P8 was forcefully laid onto the floor. The interrogator cocked his gun, put it against P8's head, and told P8 that he would be shot and thrown in the garbage if he did not say any names. P8's feet became inflamed from the heavy beating. His right foot was three times bigger [than his left foot]. He got a black ball in his metatarsus because of the beating. The signs of beating are still visible.

Judge Kerber Questioning

Judge Kerber noted that P8 was interrogated several times. She asked if P8 recognized the room where his first interrogation occurred and if P8 waited somewhere before the interrogation. P8 said that the first interrogation pertained to Fadi Zaydan. Two prison guards came to P8, pulled him [out of the cell] and took him to the interrogating officer in the room.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 went upstairs when he went to the room. P8 confirmed that all four interrogations were upstairs. The first and second [interrogations] were not downstairs.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 waited in a room [before he was to be interrogated]. P8 remembered that the first time he was interrogated, he sat in a place that resembled a kitchen. He was there with four people. It was the first time he saw sunlight and felt air. Prison guards used to pass by and beat anyone who raised their head.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was able to see light, despite being blindfolded. P8 confirmed. He said that when one felt that no one was around, one could raise his head. This was a dangerous move because one would get beaten if a prison guard saw him. Therefore, one would raise his head and lower it quickly.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 fell asleep. He remembered that he took a nap. Judge Kerber asked about the reaction of the guards. He did not remember if he was beaten awake, though he was beaten with a cable on his back. Judge Kerber asked why P8 fell asleep. P8 said that he fell asleep because he felt the fresh air and it was difficult to sleep in the external dormitory. He noted that it was [peaceful] sleep. He waited for half an hour, and [the space] was quiet, so he fell asleep.

Judge Kerber said that P8 went to a room where there was an officer. She asked how the room looked and how many people were there. P8 said that two people brought him to the interrogating officer who the guards called "sidi." Usually the place was tidy when he entered. It appeared to be a special office. That was apparent from underneath the blindfold.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 recognized the type of chair. He did not remember. Judge Kerber recalled P8's testimony that the chair was black leather. P8 confirmed and said that he thought the chairs were black leather. But he was not absolutely sure.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 heard an officer give an order to beat P8. P8 said that the interrogator was the one who initially hit P8.

---

<sup>15</sup> P8 likely referenced a mode of torture called the "flying carpet" (بساط الريح).

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was slapped in the face. P8 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 stayed in the same room or was taken to another room. P8 said that he was taken back to his cell.

Judge Kerber recalled P8's prior statement that there was no accusation against him. Then he was taken to another room where the "real torture" took place over thirty minutes while P8 was asked about the Facebook page. P8 did not remember the chronology; [the events] were after one another.

Judge Kerber asked if the tank belt and the quadruple cable were the same. P8 explained how they were different. The quadruple cable was used by one of the guards, Abu Ghadab (أبو غضب). Judge Kerber asked P8 to describe the quadruple cable. P8 said that it was like the single cable. Four cables are put together and affixed.

Judge Kerber asked if the next interrogation was conducted in a different office. He remembered that he was taken to a different floor where two people interrogated him. He was interrogated multiple times. P8 did not know to which interrogation Judge Kerber was referring.

Judge Kerber recalled P8's testimony that the office was a salon. She asked if it was bigger and nicer. P8 said that when the last interrogation was over, there was no beating. They were just talking to him.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was injured. He said that his feet were already swollen.

Judge Kerber recalled P8's testimony that, during his last interrogation, the interrogator was polite. She asked how long the interrogation lasted. He said that it lasted half an hour to an hour. He could not remember.

Judge Kerber recalled P8's statement that he was taken back to the cell and had to wait in the corridor where he saw other people. She asked if P8 was blindfolded. He explained that when he was taken to the corridor and his feet were swollen, he was not blindfolded. He stayed there for five to seven days. The corridor was one-meter wide. A [guard or officer] who called names passed by him. P8's legs were stretched out. He had been sleeping, so he did not retract his legs when the [guard or officer] passed by him. The person woke up P8 and beat him.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 received medical treatment for his feet. P8 said that when his foot got severely inflamed, doctors came and gave him an injection in the kitchen.

Judge Kerber asked about the health of the other prisoners. P8 said that he previously mentioned injuries and hallucinations.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 saw corpses. P8 said that he saw a corpse when he was outside. Usually, when someone died in the cell, the detainees would knock on the iron door and yell out that someone died. It was forbidden to knock on the door unless someone died. When P8 was outside [in the corridor], the detainees knocked on the door and yelled that someone died. The personnel took the corpse and put it next to P8. It was blue and yellow. The dead person was skin on bones—exactly like the dead. He was wearing only underwear and had relieved himself in it. After a while, the corpse was taken. They eventually took P8 [back into the cell]. During that month, the detainees yelled four times that someone died. The people who were probably dead, did not return. Sometimes, if a person was sick, he was treated and brought back to the cell. P8 said that the circumstances he went through during that month without sleep, water, or food made him wish for death.

Judge Kerber asked P8 to describe the corpse, including his age. P8 said that while the personnel were carrying the corpse, the corpse's back appeared broken. He was skin on bones. He was blue with prominent bones. P8 did not remember if the corpse had a lot of hair.

Judge Kerber asked about the corpse's age. P8 said that he was young.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was in the corridor the four times when the detainees yelled out that people died. He said that he was inside [the cell].

Judge Kerber asked if P8 witnessed bodies being carried outside or if he only heard the calls [from the detainees to the guards]. P8 said that when the detainees called, they carried the person to the [cell] door and knocked on the door.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 saw or heard anything. P8 saw bodies being carried to cell door, knocking on door, and bodies being taken out of cell.

Judge Kerber asked if the carried persons came back or were only sick. He did not remember.

Judge Kerber asked if the prisoners said that "someone died" when they knocked on the door. P8 confirmed.

[Judge Wiedner intervened to ask two questions]

Judge Wiedner asked if the incidents when the detainees knocked on the door were at the beginning, middle, or end of P8's detention. P8 explained that his detention in Al-Khatib lasted four weeks. In that period, it was difficult to determine whether he was in his first two weeks or his last two weeks. However, he thought that the corpse in the corridor was in his third week.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 witnessed anything at the beginning of his detention. P8 did not understand the question. Judge Wiedner asked if there were any deaths at the beginning of his detention. P8 did not remember.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was taken to another prison. P8 confirmed. He said that at the end of the month, his name was called. He was blindfolded and his hands were cuffed behind his back. The officers initially did not ask him to sign anything. But before he was taken to the bus which transported him to the Kafar Souseh (كفرسوسة), an officer came to put P8's fingerprint on a paper, the contents of which P8 did not know. After that, he was taken by bus to the central administration in Kafar Souseh.

Judge Kerber asked how P8 knew that he was in Kafar Souseh. P8 explained that the prisoners who were there for longer periods of time told him that he was at Kafar Souseh where there was higher administration and more interrogations.

Judge Kerber asked if the conditions in Kafar Souseh were better or worse than Al-Khatib in terms of medicine, food, sleep, space and beatings. P8 noted that the methods of torture were different at Kafar Souseh. When the detainees entered, they were "greeted" [beaten]. They were constantly beaten and insulted until they arrived to their cell. He recalled having a boxing glove in his belongings. A prison guard told him, "do you box? I'll teach you how it is done." P8 was blindfolded, and his legs and feet were bound.

He was punched in the face repeatedly. As a result, he became dazed and fell to the ground. After that, he and seven other detainees were taken to a solitary cell.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 meant a small cell. P8 confirmed and explained that the cell fit one person if the person laid down. The food was scarce and there was no light. It was quiet and the detainees were not allowed to talk to each other, unlike at Al-Khatib. They were allowed to use the toilet once or twice per day. They had 10-20 seconds to relieve themselves before they had to go back to the cell. On the way to the toilet and on the way back to the cell, the detainees were beaten by the guards. The guards beat them with a tool called “Al-Akhdar Al-Ibraheemi” (مي الأخضر الإبراهيمي)—an iron pipe wrapped with green material and was [named] after the U.N. Special Envoy to Syria. They used to ask the detainees, “do you want the help of Al Akhdar Al-Ibraheemi?”

Judge Kerber asked if the tool was used for beating. P8 said they were beaten with it when they went to the toilet.

Judge Kerber asked about the size of the solitary cell. P8 remembered that there were seven people inside and they used to sit 2,2,2,1. It fit three people sitting.

Judge Kerber asked if the detainees sat down in a squatting position. P8 confirmed that they were squatting [sitting down and hugging their knees].

Judge Kerber asked about the width of the cell. P8 said that when he leaned against the side wall, he had to raise his legs onto the opposite wall.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was beaten when he got out of the cell to go to the toilet. P8 confirmed that he was beaten while going back and forth from the toilet to the cell.

Judge Kerber asked if P8 was tortured during the interrogation in Kafar Souseh. He said that he was beaten on his way to the interrogation room. To go to the interrogation room in the big building, he had to cross another building and a yard. When he got to the big building, he went to the second or third floor to see the interrogation officer. On his way there, he was beaten by seven or eight people.

Judge Kerber asked if the detainees were tortured with “falaqa” (فلقة) in Kafar Souseh. P8 wondered if what was done to him was called “falaqa”.

Judge Kerber recalled P8’s statement that he was not tortured with “falaqa,” but that other detainees were tortured with it. P8 said that the detainees were transferred from the solitary cell to a bigger room. Sometimes, they were punished inside the room. The prison guard entered and they stood up. They faced the wall and “were above each other.” The punished person was beaten behind them in “falaqa” position.

Judge Kerber asked P8 to compare the condition of the detainees in Al-Khatib versus Kafar Souseh. P8 noted that when he arrived to Kafar Souseh, his foot was already inflamed and swollen. When the doctors came to Kafar Souseh, the injured detainees were taken to see them. He recalled that a doctor changed the dressings on P8’s wound while a prison guard simultaneously beat him. Sometimes the detainees were given antibiotics and Ibuprofen. The guards used to open the hatch and toss the tablets [into the cell]. If fifty people needed medicine, only four or five were given some.

Judge Kerber recalled P8’s statement that Kafar Souseh had more space, better food, and the cells could sleep 70-80 people inside [compared to Al-Khatib]. P8 confirmed. He was in different places in Kafar Souseh. The conditions depended on whether he was in a solitary cell or a shared cell. He was in four different places that differed from each other.

Judge Kerber asked if that was what P8 witnessed. P8 confirmed that the conditions were better.

Judge Kerber asked about the duration of P8's detention and the [nature] of his release. P8 said that he was in Kafar Souseh for approximately two months, then he was transferred to a military court. After that, he was transferred to Al-Qaboun Branch (القابون) for a few days.<sup>16</sup> Then the detainees were taken from the military and security branches to a [district] authority (Adra عدرا).

Judge Kerber asked about the timing. P8 remembered that it was before the new year around December 29, 2012. The New Year passed when he was in Al-Qaboun. Shooting started and he was transferred to Adra.

***

[One-hour break]

***

Judge Wiedner Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked if the detainees were given back their clothes which were removed. P8 said that they were given their clothes back. Judge Wiedner asked if the clothes were returned at the beginning or after P8 was transferred. P8 said this happened at the beginning. Judge Wiedner asked if that means P8 wore his clothes, not only wearing his underwear. P8 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked about the rest of the detainees. P8 explained that many of them were only wearing their underwear because it was hot. They used to carry their clothes on their shoulders. Some people lost their clothes because of the crowdedness.

Judge Wiedner asked what P8 meant by "external cell." P8 noted that the actual name was "external dormitory." It could have been a garden or a parking lot before it was turned into a prison cell.

Judge Wiedner asked how P8 was brought to the cell. P8 said that, after his personal belongings were taken, he was led past two or three rooms "like the ones in a house," then through a long corridor. The dormitory was at the end on the right side.

Judge Wiedner asked if the external dormitory was within the building or outside of it. P8 confirmed that it was within the building.

Judge Wiedner recalled P8's testimony that the cell was an empty space between the buildings with a roof, like a garage. It had a wall of bars and another wall with interrogation rooms. P8 confirmed and noted that the wall to the left had a long window, and the interrogation rooms were on the right.<sup>17</sup>

---

<sup>16</sup> Al-Qaboun Branch (القابون) is a military police prison.

<sup>17</sup> P8 described the scene such that, when one entered the cell, the cell door was behind him. See the sketch below.

Judge Wiedner asked if the cell was on the ground floor or if it was underground. P8 thought that the cell was underground. He could hear people walking [outside of the window].

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 could see the street. P8 said that he could not see the street and that the window was two meters high.

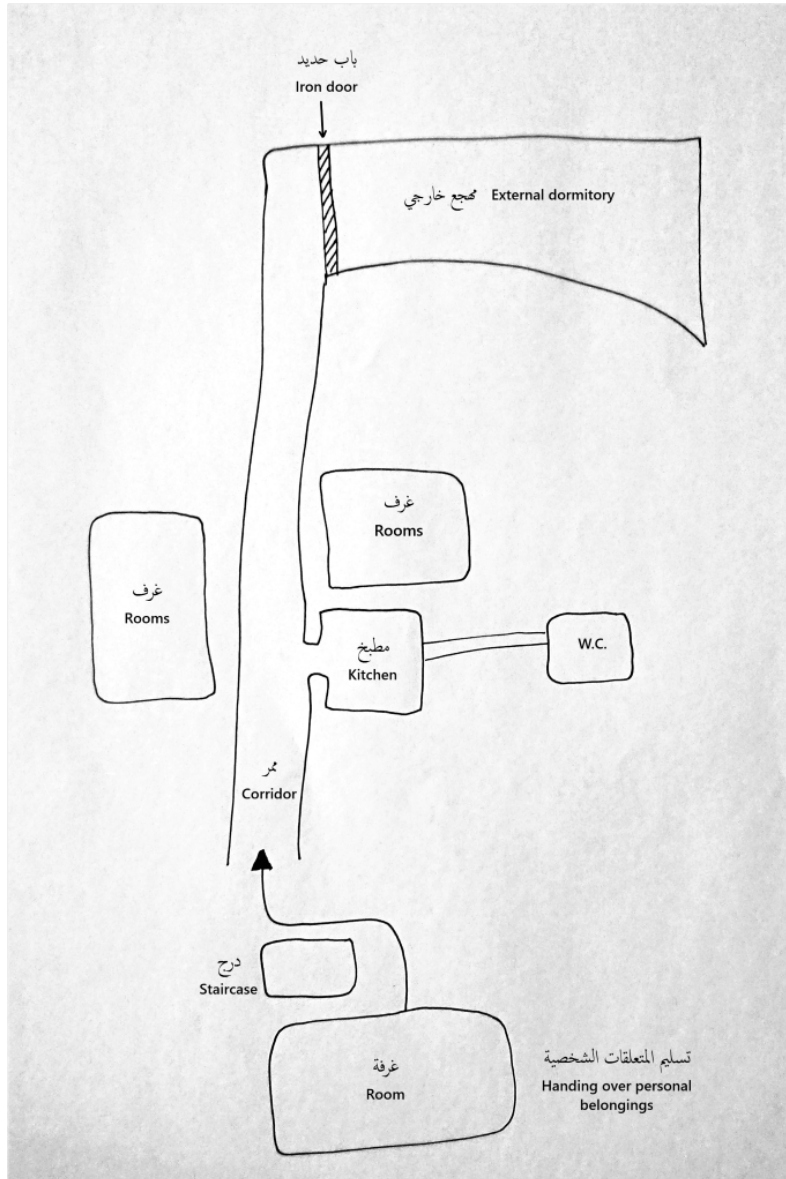

Judge Wiedner asked what was behind the bars. P8 said that it was difficult to see. The glass was thick and opaque. There were iron bars and dirt.

Judge Wiedner asked about the light. P8 explained that occasionally, he felt that there was a faint light. Not much light entered—just enough to distinguish between day or night.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 could see behind the bars. P8 said no, because the window was too high.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 meant that he could not see above the wall in order to see what was behind the bars. P8 noted that there was a long window on top of the wall, and the street was on the other side.

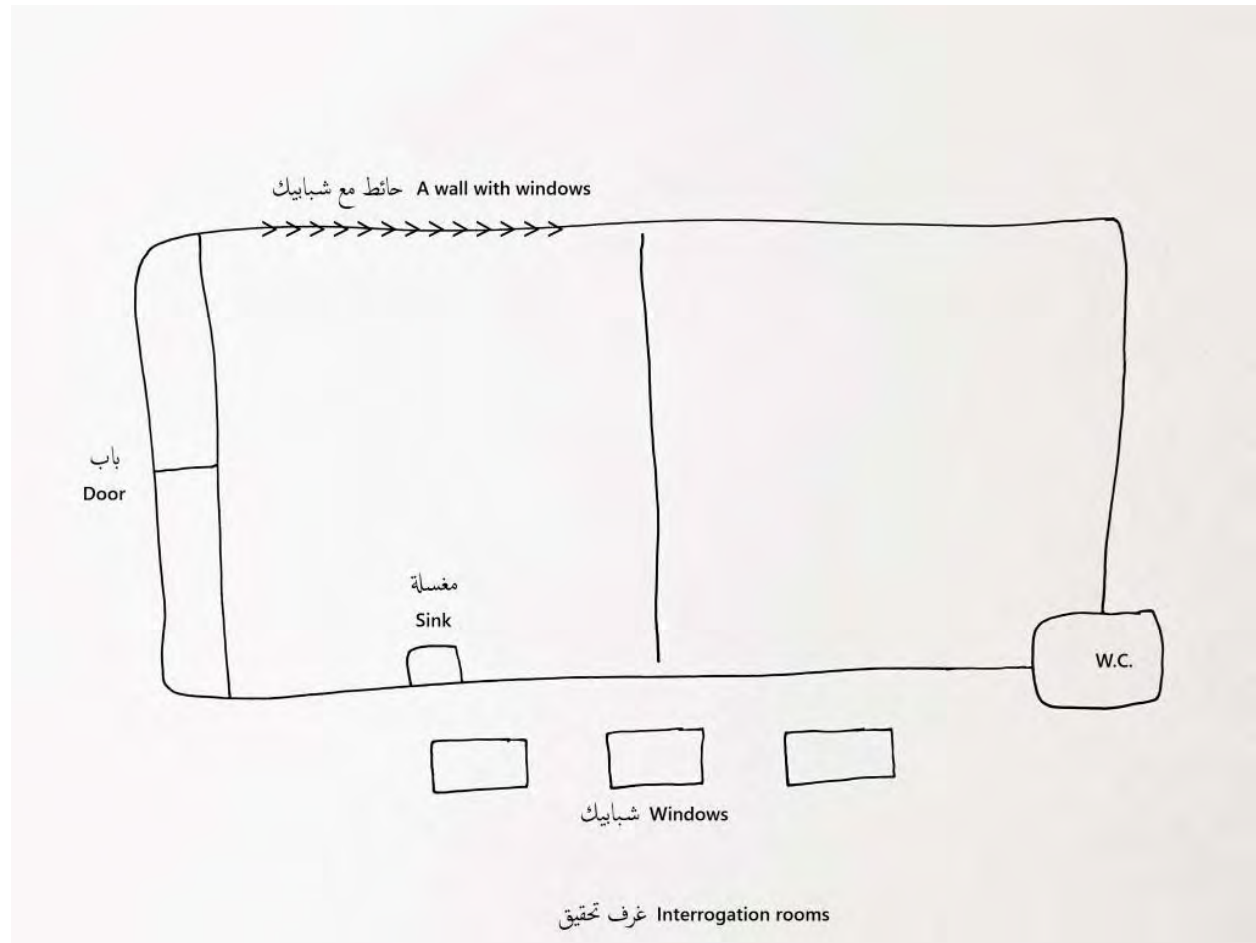

Judge Wiedner asked P8 if he remembered the sketch which P8 drew during questioning. He said that he remembered the sketch.

Sketch #1 by P8.

Judge Wiedner asked P8 if the scene he drew was underground. P8 thought so because he was brought downstairs [underground] when he was brought to the branch in the beginning.

Sketch #2 by P8.

Judge Wiedner asked if the top wall [marked in the sketch as >>] was on the side street. P8 said that they felt so in prison.

Judge Wiedner asked if air got into the cell from the outside. P8 said that air got into the cell from the outside, but air was scarce and he could hardly breathe. The place with the most air was at the door because air entered from the gap underneath the door. There was a fan that did not work. Everything else was closed.

Judge Wiedner asked if the other detainees showed signs of mistreatment when they got back from interrogations. P8 said that the detainees mostly showed signs of beating on their body, including red lines.

Judge Wiedner asked if people were bare-chested or if there were signs of beatings on their upper and lower body parts. P8 said that many people were not fully dressed, so he could see their bodies.

Judge Wiedner asked about the physical condition of the other detainees. P8 said that they mostly had wounds and skin fissures.

Judge Wiedner asked if detainees had open wounds. P8 confirmed that many detainees had open wounds, including him [his feet].

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 had lasting injuries after his foot inflammation. P8 said yes, the signs on his foot are still there. Judge Wiedner asked if P8 has any impairments. P8 said that he does not have any impairments; there are only indications of the wound and the inflammation.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 had any other [side-effects, including psychological]. P8 said [he suffered from side-effects] related to what he witnessed. He never could have imagined that such brutality was only 10-minutes away from his home. The fear remained for a long time after he was released. He even stayed away from the police because of his fear. He still gets flashbacks from that time.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 can sleep. P8 said that he could sleep now, but he could not at the time when he was released. He was afraid to stay home alone and he was scared anytime he heard someone walking up the stairs. When the door to his [apartment building] opened and closed, he was scared that someone was coming to detain him. He would sit alone in the corner of the room.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 could hear the sounds of people being tortured. P8 got emotional and Judge Kerber issued a ten-minute break. Judge Wiedner asked the question again. P8 confirmed that he heard people being tortured. The sounds of beating came from the right side of his cell. Most of the torture was of women. There was beating and screaming the whole time. P8 said that the detainees witnessed the whole procedure until [the female detainees] confessed. This was very difficult.

Judge Wiedner asked how often that happened and for how long it lasted. P8 said that this was not constant. He remembered that it happened three or four times.

Judge Wiedner asked P8 to look to his right. He then asked P8 if he recognized one of the accused. P8 said that he did not recognize anyone.

Prosecutor's Questioning

The Assistant Prosecutor asked about the torture methods P8 and the other detainees endured. P8 did not remember what other people told him, but he remembered what he witnessed: the quadruple cable and the tank belt. The detainees did not talk about other methods, nor did P8 tell others the ways in which he was tortured.

The Assistant Prosecutor asked about Shabh (شبح) [method of torture]. P8 remembered that Shabh happened in other branches. He said that it was common and was done on the cell door. He did not know if it happened in Al-Khatib. However, he knew that Shabh happened in the air-force [branch]. He knew this because when P8 was detained [other than in Al-Khatib], Shabh was performed on him the worst way—from behind. They stood him up on a chair, bound his hands behind his body, then used a rope to tie P8's hands to the ceiling. They pulled the chair from beneath P8 so he fell down. He dangled in the air and could not touch the ground. Then he lost consciousness. They poured water on him. His shoulder was dislocated.

The Assistant Prosecutor asked if P8 experienced sexual violence in Al-Khatib. P8 said that he did not experience sexual violence. He asked if P8 heard if sexual violence happened to others, such as females, in Al-Khatib. P8 said no.

Defense Counsel Böcker Questioning

Defense Counsel Böcker noted that P8 underwent multiple interrogations. He asked if P8 could provide a timeframe in relation to when his foot was treated. P8 said that his foot was treated two weeks after it was beat. He explained that someone had to be in bad condition and scream if he needed treatment.

Böcker said that was not his question and clarified that he meant to ask when P8's foot became inflamed after detention. P8 said that two weeks passed when his foot was fully swollen and inflamed. They treated people with injuries in the kitchen. In the third week, he rested in the corridor. He was in his cell during the fourth week. P8 was in Al-Khatib for a month, then he was transferred to Kafar Souseh.

Böcker asked if P8's foot took two weeks to get worse and then another two weeks to be treated, so until the end of P8's detention. P8 said that it was approximately in the third week. Böcker asked P8 to provide a timeframe in relation to his interrogations. P8 said this was in relation to his third interrogation, as far as he could remember. In his fourth and final interrogation, P8 recalled that his foot was bandaged and treated.

Böcker asked if the treatment was before P8's final interrogation. Oehmichen asked if it was the first or last interrogation. P8 noted that it was the last interrogation.

Böcker asked if P8's foot was bandaged before the fourth interrogation. P8 said yes, approximately.

Böcker asked how much time passed between the treatment and the fourth interrogation. P8 said around two days had passed.

Böcker asked how long it took for him to be released after his fourth interrogation. P8 estimated one week, and the total time he spent [detained] was one month.

Böcker noted that P8 was in the bus when [the guards] realized that P8 had not signed [the paperwork], so then a person came [to P8]. P8 said that before he was transferred to Kafar Souseh, his fingerprint was put on papers while his hands were tied behind his back.

Böcker asked if that happened when P8 was inside the bus. P8 said no, he was on his way to the bus. This happened before he left the branch. He stood and waited five to ten minutes before he was taken to the bus to Kafar Souseh.

Böcker asked if there was a conversation between P8 and the person who took P8's fingerprint. P8 said no, he was facing the wall. The person took P8's fingers, put them on the ink pad and then on the papers.

Böcker asked if P8 was given an explanation of the papers. P8 said no.

Böcker recalled P8's testimony during police questioning when he said that he was not beaten in the fourth interrogation, and that the interrogators tried to discuss with him why he went to the demonstrations and about his Facebook content. Böcker asked if that was an interrogation situation. P8 did not understand. Böcker asked if those who tried to have this discussion with P8 were guards or interrogators. P8 clarified that the discussion was with interrogators.

Böcker recalled P8's testimony during police questioning that the room was clean and did not look like a room where torture occurred. Böcker asked why P8 had this impression. P8 explained that the room was bigger and different from the previous rooms.

Böcker recalled P8's testimony during police questioning that he was interrogated by two people. He asked P8 if one interrogator was superior to the other. P8 said that they talked about general things and examined his Facebook profile and Facebook friends. One of the interrogators identified the appearance and surname of P8's female friend. The interrogator then told the officer that she appeared to be from the officer's region.

Böcker asked how the interrogators talked with each other and if P8 recognized that one was superior to the other. P8 said yes, maybe one was superior to the other one.

Böcker asked if P8's response was based on concrete knowledge. P8 said no, it was just a feeling.

Böcker recalled P8's testimony during police questioning that he did not remember if he sat down or was forced to kneel during interrogations. P8 said that he did not remember sitting.

Böcker recalled P8's testimony during police questioning that the last interrogation was calmer and that the interrogators spoke in a softer, more polite tone. P8 said that this was the situation during the last interrogations at both Al-Khatib and the Air-Force [Branch]—after the previous interrogations, the beatings, and the forced confessions. "It was as if they were trying to give the impression of being good people." Böcker responded that P8's answer was too complicated and he did not understand. Böcker recalled P8's testimony that the interrogators were calmer and softer during the last interrogation. P8 confirmed. He remembered that the interrogators were in a good mood during the last interrogations.

Böcker recalled P8's testimony that the branch was ten minutes away from P8's home and that P8 knew the area. He then asked P8 if the Air-Force Branch was close to Al-Khatib. P8 did not remember.

Defense Counsel Fratzki Questioning

Fratzki asked if P8 could locate the Air-Force Branch on a map. Prosecutor Klinge interjected and noted the existence of many air-force bases and, as such, Fratzki should specify. Judge Kerber ordered Fratzki to specify. Fratzki then asked P8 if there was a facility of the air-force nearby. Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer objected on grounds that Fratzki asked the same question as Böcker. Fratzki asked if there was an air-force branch close to Al-Khatib. P8 said no, in another area.

Fratzki asked if the Air-Force Branch was in a different neighborhood. P8 said that there was Al-Khatib neighborhood and Al-Abbasiyyeen neighborhood. The Air-Force Branch was probably there.<sup>18</sup>

Fratzki asked at which air-force branch P8 was detained. P8 said that he was detained at the air-force branch on Al-Mazzeah highway near Al-Mazzeah airport. P8 noted that the branch is very well-known.

Judge Wiedner asked if P8 knew that abuse occurred in Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh prior to his detention. P8 said that he knew abuse occurred in these branches before his detention. He explained that he is from Duma City for which Al-Khatib Branch is responsible, so many of his friends who were detained for demonstrating were held and tortured there. They told P8 about their experiences.

---

<sup>18</sup> It was unclear to the Trial Monitor whether P8 meant that an air-force branch was in both neighborhoods or just in Al-Abbasiyyeen.

Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogators' polite tone during the fourth interrogation created a good mood. P8 said that it did.

Klinge asked for satellite images to be shown because P8 knows the area. P8 said that the image was not clear. He asked if the titles and street names could be shown. The image was then zoomed-in.

P8 remembered that the branch was two buildings past Murshed Khater Street, and there was a garden. After P8 was released from prison, he went there to get his car back. P8 pointed to a location at which there was a guard.<sup>19</sup>

Klinge asked P8 to locate Baghdad Street, Tahrir Square, and Red Crescent Hospital. P8 first located Baghdad Street, followed by his house, Tahrir Square, and Red Crescent Hospital which he noted was close to Al-Khatib. P8 pointed to a garden [marked in the image above with a green arrow].

The image was further zoomed-in.

<sup>19</sup> The Court Monitor was unable to see where P8 pointed.

P8 said that the image resembled Al-Khatib's garden.

Fratzki asked what the square next to Al-Khatib was called. Fratzki recalled P8's testimony that he lived ten-minutes away from Al-Khatib. He then asked P8 to identify his house. P8 first pointed to Al-Farouq Mosque (جامع الفاروق) then to his house. A green rectangle was placed on the satellite image to mark P8's house. Judge Kerber asked P8 to confirm that the rectangle was his house. P8 confirmed.

Böcker asked P8 how he concluded that the interrogators wanted to create a good mood during the last interrogation. P8 again explained how one of the interrogators referred to P8's female friend who was from the same area as the other interrogator, and how they both laughed. Normally, the interrogators shouted, swore, and beat P8. They never laughed, which is why P8 had this impression.

Böcker asked if the reason why P8 reached his conclusion is that the interrogators laughed. P8 said that there could be other [reasons] but he did not remember.

Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer asked if P8 was told why his foot was treated with an injection. P8 said no, the treatment was done in the kitchen which was 2x2m. There were four or five detainees in the same room along with two to three medical professionals. P8 was unsure if the medical professionals were doctors or nurses. A medical professional took a look at P8's wounds and told P8 that he needed an injection. He gave P8 an injection and told him to leave. P8 was afraid because he did not know what was injected into his foot. The whole procedure only lasted minutes.

Plaintiff's Counsel Reiger asked if P8 recognized any dialects during the interrogations. P8 only recognized a dialect from southern Syria during the fourth interrogation. Reiger asked from where in southern Syria was the dialect. P8 said it was from As-Suwayda (السويداء).

Reiger asked if P8 recognized any clothes. P8 did not remember.

Reiger asked if P8 saw shoes. P8 did not see the interrogators' shoes, but he remembered the shoes of Abu Ghadab (أبو غضب) who normally wore pajama [sport suit] and sports shoes.

Reiger asked if P8 saw something in the interrogation room. P8 could not remember.

Böcker asked if P8 recognized a southern dialect from one of the two interrogators. P8 confirmed. Böcker then asked which interrogator. P8 did not understand the question. Böcker repeated the question. P8 reiterated that there were two interrogators, and one of them had the southern accent.

The proceedings adjourned at 3:30 PM.

Day 21 of Trial – July 31, 2020

The audience consisted of eleven spectators and three members of the media. Proceedings began at 9:30AM

Translator Ismail was late for the proceedings due to traffic, so accused Eyad's personal translator filled in until Translator Ismail arrived. Judge Kerber informed accused Eyad that he may interrupt whenever he needs to speak to his translator.

Testimony of P9

P9 is a 43-year-old male who is unemployed.

P9's Detention

P9 said that the demonstrations started peacefully in his area in 2011. The army in Az-Zabadani (الزبداني) waged a campaign and demonstrators were detained. He had an internet café and also served as a government official. He always woke up early to check on his internet café before going to his government job.

One day in the summer, he noticed that all the shops were closed and [the streets] were completely quiet, which was unusual. P9 was driving his car when a soldier pulled him over to the right. The soldier instructed him to stand off to the side. He then took P9's identification card. During this time, other soldiers entered P9's shop [he was close enough to see what was happening]. P9 told the soldier who stopped him that soldiers entered his shop. Then he asked if he could go there. The soldier agreed.

P9 went inside the internet café. The soldiers told him that they had been looking for P9 since the morning; the brigadier general wanted P9. They took P9's car and closed his shop. There was a small state security center in Az-Zabadani. The soldiers brought P9 to the brigadier general, who was the leader of the campaign. The brigadier general informed P9 that he was a fugitive. P9 asked the reasons for which he was considered a fugitive. The brigadier general told P9 that he had let Israel into Syria.

P9 was put into a car and taken to the Fourth Division which the people of Az-Zabadani refer to as “the suicidal division.” P9 found many people there. They were loaded onto green buses, then were taken to Al-Khatib Branch. The detainees entered the branch, were gathered together, instructed to take off their clothes, and were frisked. They were then taken to the external dormitory. P9 was given the belongings that were inside his car. P9 was in detention for four days before he was interrogated. He was released two or three days later. There was a holiday during those few days. This was P9’s first experience in detention.

Judge Kerber Questioning

Judge Kerber asked which holiday took place during the two to three-day period before P9 was released. P9 did not remember, but recalled that it was summer. After the holiday, he was released.

Judge Kerber recalled P9’s testimony during police questioning that the events surrounding P9’s first detention occurred in August 2011. P9 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if P9 was abused. P9 confirmed and noted that all his fellow detainees were treated violently, though his first detention was better than his second detention.

Judge Kerber asked how and where he was abused, as well as which objects were used. P9 explained that the detainees were abused before they were put onto the buses, as well as when they were inside the bus. Everybody was humiliated in the Fourth Division.

Judge Kerber recalled P8’s testimony during police questioning that P9 was beaten until he reached his cell at the Fourth Division, in which there were fifty other detainees, then he was transferred to Al-Khatib Branch. P9 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked how P9 knew that he was in Al-Khatib. P9 said that he recognized the area once he was released and was outside [of the building].

Judge Kerber asked if P9’s clothes were returned to him after he was frisked. P9 recalled that the detainees were returned their clothes, but the soldiers took everything that was in P9’s car.

Judge Kerber asked P9 about the size of the external cell. P9 described it as a bit spacious and new, “as if they were prepared to bring people there.”

Judge Kerber asked P9 about the toilet. P9 said it was new. Judge Kerber asked if it was underground. P9 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked P9 about food at Al-Khatib. P9 said that he was not given food on the first day. The soldiers were humiliating and shouting at the detainees. He noted that his handcuffs were removed at the end of the day. During the second day, however, the detainees were given food and were treated better.

Judge Kerber asked P9 if the food was sufficient. P9 recalled that on the second day, the officer told the detainees that he bought food with his own money because there was no food for them. Judge Kerber asked if P9 had to pay for food. P9 said no.

Judge Kerber asked P9 about the manner in which he was interrogated. She also asked about the subject matter of the interrogation and if P9 was abused. P9 needed Judge Kerber to clarify whether she was referring to the interrogation he underwent prior to his release [after the holiday]. Judge Kerber noted that P9 only testified that he was interrogated once.

P9 stated that he was blindfolded and handcuffed. He walked upstairs and entered an iron gate. Then he entered an office. The military personnel (عسكري) forced him to kneel. The office was completely quiet. It felt as though P9 could hear pages turn. The interrogator asked P9 for his name, age, and whether P9 was a government official. The interrogator asked the personnel to remove P9's blindfold and the handcuffs, and to let P9 stand up. The interrogator said that he wanted to look at P9. He figured that he could recognize P9 if he actually worked at the governate building. The interrogator continued to speak calmly. He stated that he might recognize P9, but he could not remember how. The interrogator asked P9 if he knew why he was brought to Al-Khatib. The interrogator's face seemed troubled by what was happening. The interrogator asked P9 in which office he worked. P9 explained that he worked in the follow-up (متابعة). The interrogator then asked if P9 knew a specific person [name redacted]. P9 responded that Akkash was his manager. The interrogator told P9 that Akkash had a big file and was wanted, but he had thus far evaded detention. The interrogator continued to ask P9 questions about his internet café and his activities. The interrogator signed a paper and told P9 that he would be released. P9 asked if he would be released that day. The interrogator said no, after the holiday. P9 asked the interrogator why Akkash was wanted yet had not been detained. The interrogator did not answer P9's questions.

Judge Kerber asked P9 if he was beaten during interrogation. P9 said no. On the contrary, the interrogator was calm. P9 had also asked the other detainees who were interrogated by the same person about their experiences, and they felt the same way.

Judge Kerber asked if P9 knew the name of his interrogator. P9 testified that he did not initially recognize Defendant Raslan's photo because he was exhausted during questioning. With time, however, he started to identify Defendant Raslan. He looked at published photos on the internet. P9 thought that the interrogator was Defendant Raslan, but he wanted to make sure.

Judge Kerber asked P9 to look to his right. She asked if P9 recognized anyone [Defendant Raslan was waving at P9]. P9 asked for permission to ask the defendant two questions to make sure [that he could identify him]. P9 first asked the defendant if he knew Mohammad Akkash. Böcker interjected and asked for a five-minute break.

After five minutes, Böcker stated that the defendant would not provide a voice sample. Judge Kerber obliged. She then asked P9 if he recognized Defendant Raslan. Plaintiff's Counsel Oehmichen interjected and said that the defendant had already raised his hand [to identify himself]. Fratzki said that P9 would have previously recognized Raslan. Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer disagreed.

A photo-array was shown.

Judge Kerber said that P9 did not recognize Defendant Raslan during police questioning. P9 recalled that he only saw Defendant Raslan once during his interrogation at Al-Khatib, at which time the defendant was thin. "Colonel" was written,<sup>20</sup> but P9 did not remember his name. P9 saw a photo of the defendant on the internet in which the defendant wore a black suit and was thin. P9 started to think that Defendant Raslan was his interrogator after he saw the internet photos.

---

<sup>20</sup> It was unclear to the Court Monitor where "colonel" was written.

Judge Kerber asked P9 if his family was still in Syria. P9 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if anyone reached out to P9 to discuss what he would say during testimony. P9 said that he did not tell anyone that he was going to testify. He feared for his family. Judge Kerber asked P9 if someone reached out to his family. P9 said that he could not ask them over the phone and, even if he did, his family would be too afraid to talk. The government confiscated his house. Judge Kerber asked P9 to share where his family lives. P9 said in Damascus. Judge Kerber asked P9 if someone reached out to him on social media. P9 said no.

Böcker asked for the photo-array to be shown. He then asked P9 if he noticed that the photos were manipulated. P9 said that he did not remember.

Böcker said that the photos might have been manipulated so that they all show the same feature, except for one photo. P9 asked Böcker to repeat the question. Böcker clarified that the photos were altered so that they looked similar based on specific characteristics. P9 said that the mole caught his attention. Böcker asked if P9 talked with the interrogator during police questioning about the mole. P9 said no. He stated that the interrogator showed him the photos, and P9 told him that he did not know. Böcker asked if the interrogator, out of fairness, told P9 that the photos were manipulated. Klinge interjected and clarified that the pictures were not manipulated; they were dummies.

Judge Kerber asked how the other detainees felt who probably were not interrogated by Raslan. P9 said that the treatment during his first detention was better than the treatment he faced in his second, third, and fourth detentions when he could hear torture. The windows of [the interrogation rooms] were close to the detainees' [cell], so they could hear everything. They were on edge because they knew that they would each have their turn.

Judge Kerber asked if [these events occurred during] P9's second detention. P9 struggled to remember, but he knew that it was the beginning of 2013 when he was released because he found a video on the internet in which the detainees were gathered at the Damascus police headquarters (the video provided documentation of the detainees' release). He found extracts from the video, but not the full version. P9 recognized people in the video, but not all of them. He did not appear. There was a person in the video who was holding an agenda with "2012" written on it.

Judge Kerber asked how [the video] could help [create a timeframe]. P9 said that it was the beginning of 2013. It was cold and there was snow. Judge Kerber asked if that was the time of his detention or his release. P9 confirmed that it was the time of his release from detention. There were around 150 people at a gathering center from which they were released.

Judge Kerber asked about the duration of P9's second detention. P9 said that he forgot many things when he was released. He was unable to remember the appearance of his family members. He could not specify the time. Many things were missing. He was detained at the end of 2012.

Judge Kerber said that there might be a typo in P9's identification card because it says that he arrived to Germany in 2012. Then she asked if P9 received a confirmation document that accurately states the date of his arrival. P9 said that, on the day he testified, he only had his identification card with him. However, he had a document at home which shows when he entered the refugee camp on January 22, 2015. Judge

Kerber asked if she could look at P9's identification card. P9 handed it to the courtroom guard who gave it to Judge Kerber. The date was not written on the identification card.

Judge Wiedner Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked P9 about his occupation before he was detained the first time. P9 said that he had an internet café and was a government official. He worked in the follow-up (متابعة) office, which was under the administration of the governorate. His office used to process any decree that was issued by the governor to ensure that it reached the proper institution. He was also the head of the computer division of the department of vocational training centers.

Judge Wiedner recalled P9's statement when he was questioned by the Federal Office for Migration and Asylum (BAMF) whereby P9 said that he was involved in construction. P9 confirmed; the follow-up office managed the blueprints of squatter areas. Additionally, if there was a meeting, P9 contacted the parties to invite them.

Judge Wiedner recalled P9's testimony that he supervised people and that part of his work involved maintaining contact with the local community. P9 confirmed, but clarified that decisions were ultimately decided by his manager who gave instructions.

Judge Wiedner asked if P9's treatment during his first detention had anything to do with his occupation as a government employee. P9 recalled that the interrogation was calm, he was treated well, and he did not undergo mental or physical torture. Indeed, he believed this was because he was a government employee who usually received special treatment. P9 informed the interrogator of his employment during his first interrogation.

Judge Wiedner noted P9's previous testimony that he went into the interrogation room blindfolded, and that the interrogator knew him because P9 had processed an application for his daughter. P9 said that the interrogator remembered him from seeing him around the governorate building. However, P9 did not recognize the interrogator.

Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogator came to P9's place in Az-Zabadani. P9 said not to his shop, but to the governorate building in Damascus where documents, such as licenses and permits, were issued. The head of police was also in that building. Judge Wiedner did not understand if he understood P9 correctly. Böcker noted that P9 already said that he could not remember Raslan. P9 said that he had not seen him before.

Judge Wiedner asked whether the interrogator came to P9's office. P9 did not remember if he saw the interrogator. However, his face was familiar.

Judge Wiedner asked if P9 remembered when he was questioned by BAMF. P9 said in August 2015. Judge Wiedner recalled that P9 was asked about his first interrogation in Al-Khatib. Judge Wiedner wanted to know if P9 remembered what he said back then. P9 did not remember his answer, but he told them everything he experienced.

Böcker said that he did not understand. Judge Wiedner said that P9 was questioned twice at BAMF. What P9 just testified to would have been the same testimony that he gave to BAMF.

Judge Wiedner recalled P9's testimony to BAMF in which he said that he was lucky that his interrogator recognized him. P9 also acknowledged that he gave a permit to the interrogator's daughter. He stated that he was arrested by accident and was released the next day. P9 said that, when his blindfold was removed, the interrogator recognized him from going to his office.

Judge Wiedner asked if P9 remembered the permit. P9 did not remember the [interrogator's daughter] or the permit because he had many clients, so he could not remember all of them. P9 also worked with a member of the executive office for the construction sector, concerning permits for buildings, schools and kindergartens.

Judge Wiedner reiterated that P9 was treated well during his first detention. He then asked if P9 saw other detainees with signs of abuse. P9 explained that in the place where they were detained, the windows overlooked the interrogation rooms. P9 overheard interrogations and torture. He also witnessed other detainees being beaten. However, it was the best year to be detained, because the torture was less. During his second detention, there was more torture and it was worse.

Judge Wiedner asked about the injuries P9 saw during his first detention. P9 said that the other detainees were unable to walk when they returned to the cell. A tire (دولاب) was used to torture people. The new detainees showed signs of torture on their backs.

Judge Wiedner asked if P9 saw dead bodies. P9 said no, but among the detainees were children. Judge Wiedner asked how old were the children. P9 said 10 – 14 years. Judge Wiedner asked if P9 saw females. P9 said no.

Prosecutor Klinge asked if P9 was truthful during his interview with BAMF. P9 explained that he told BAMF everything he had witnessed without any additions.

Klinge asked if P9 testified that the interrogator wanted a permit for his daughter. P9 said that the officer saw him and recognized him. What made P9 think that he potentially issued the permit, though he was still unsure, was that he used to work on the construction of schools [which was related to the daughter's permit].

Klinge asked if P9 meant that he was unsure at that time, or if he was unsure now. Böcker objected. P9 said that his condition was very bad when he was released. He recognized his name as a number and he could not remember his family. "They" instructed him to "leave the country [...]". P9 went to Germany and was unable to remember details. He just knew that [for his government job] he made a permit, but he did not know if the permit was for the interrogator's daughter or relative.

Klinge said that P9 mentioned the interrogator's daughter in November 2018, three years after he was first questioned by BAMF. At that time, P9 stated that "the interrogator knew him because he issued an application for his daughter." Klinge noted that P9's statements were translated and that P9 signed the reverse translation. P9 said that he always spoke generally, including about torture. P9 acknowledged that he might have said the statement regarding a permit for the interrogator's daughter or relative. He knew that he processed something for the interrogator. Many incidents happened and he wanted to focus. P9 did not know if the translator [during the questioning] made mistakes, because even at the police, he noticed that "accused" instead of "witness" was written.

Klinge said that was not correct and P9 was cautioned [informed of his rights] and questioned as a witness. P9 said that, at the end of the questioning, the translator saw and told the policeman that he [the policeman] wrote “accused.” P9 also felt that he was [questioned as] an accused person.

Klinge found it surprising that P9 was able to recognize Defendant Raslan from photos on the internet, even though he only saw the defendant once. P9 said that he did not recognize the men in the photos, but they all had a mole on their face. He noted that Defendant Raslan’s face was wide, but it was thin back then. That is why he was not 100% sure when he saw the photos on the internet. Therefore, he wanted to ask the defendant two questions.

Klinge asked P9 to describe the photo he saw on the internet. Böcker noted that this question was already asked. Judge Kerber allowed the question. P9 said that he saw Defendant Raslan in a photo in which the defendant looked thin and was wearing a suit. P9 reiterated that he was not 100% sure if the defendant was his interrogator or if he was in Defendant Raslan’s office.

Klinge asked P9 to describe the photo. P9 said that Defendant Raslan was not wearing a military uniform. He was wearing a formal suit. P9 said that he had been visiting a psychiatrist for six months in order to regain his memory. So when P9 saw Defendant Raslan in the photo, he assumed that the defendant was the person who interrogated him.

Klinge asked if P9 would release [his psychiatrist] from [doctor/patient confidentiality]. P9 said that he did not know. Klinge said that the release is voluntary decision. P9 said that he did not know if he was allowed to share [certain] information [with his psychiatrist]. P9 did not have a problem releasing the information, but noted that he did not discuss the details of his detention [with his psychiatrist] aside from his nightmares. But if there are questions for [the psychiatrist], then P9 had no problem [releasing the information]. Klinge asked for the psychiatrist’s name and where he worked. P9 gave the information.

Klinge expressed that he was perplexed because there was a notification that one of the witnesses who testified was approached on the internet by someone who said that he should retract his statement. Klinge asked P9 if anyone had similarly reached out to him. P9 said that no one put him on pressure or talked to him about the subject.

Klinge asked if P9 was contacted by anyone on Facebook. P9 said no. P9 expressed that he was afraid that he or his family would be threatened, so he was dealing with [his testimony and the trial] in complete secrecy.

Klinge asked P9 if anybody knew that he was in court. P9 said no. He reiterated his fear for his family, and he noted that he came to court alone.

Klinge explained that Germany is devoted to representative criminal justice and to uncovering crimes. This necessitates the cooperation of victims. If they do not speak the truth, then [getting justice] becomes difficult, if not impossible.

Böcker interjected and said that this would be offensive. Klinge objected. Judge Kerber demanded that Böcker should be able to express himself.<sup>21</sup>

After a fifteen-minute break in the proceedings, Linke asked P9 if he recognized Defendant Raslan because of his mole. P9 said no. Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer objected on grounds that the recognition of a mole was not confirmed thus the question is inadmissible. Böcker objected for the same reason as Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer.

Judge Kerber asked Linke how he wanted to proceed. Linke asked to keep his question. Judge Kerber approved. Linke called for a court decision. After a ten-minute break, the Court upheld Judge Kerber's decision.

Böcker asked P9 if he spoke with other detainees who were interrogated and whether there were other building construction workers among them. P9 said that when people returned to the cell after interrogation, they were immediately asked about what was discussed during interrogation. There were no other construction workers.

Judge Wiedner wanted to rephrase Linke's question. Judge Wiedner asked P9 if he felt that Defendant Raslan was his interrogator simply because of Raslan's mole. P9 said that Raslan's mole was not what made him sure.

Böcker did not understand. He asked P9 whether he was sure or not. P9 said that he did not pay attention to the mole and that he only saw the interrogator once.

Plaintiffs' Counsel Scharmer recalled P9's testimony to BAMF in 2015 that he was blindfolded, handcuffed, interrogated, told that he would be released the next day, and then released the next day. Scharmer asked P9 how he was released the next day if there was a holiday. P9 clarified that he did not say he was immediately released. When P9 talked about the calm treatment at his first interrogation, the translator did not translate that part. Also, when the BAMF interrogator asked the question again, the BAMF interrogator told the translator that she did not tell them that.

Scharmer asked P9 how he knew that [the BAMF interrogator told the translator that she did not tell them] [if P9 did not speak German]. P9 said that he knew because the BAMF interrogator said that, and then repeated the question. The translator was interrupting P9, and he felt that he was being treated like an accused person.

Scharmer asked how P9 knew that it was not translated. Scharmer asked if P9 understood [the BAMF interrogator and translator]. P9 said that he wanted to postpone his testimony and that he wanted to have an attorney present. Judge Kerber asked P9 why. P9 said that he could not answer the questions, and he traveled for twelve hours without sleep. He was afraid to give statements, and he would be more comfortable if his attorney was present.

---

<sup>21</sup> The Court Monitor noted the tension between the parties. Plaintiff's Counsel Oehmichen calmed down the situation by suggesting witness counselling. Judge Kerber thanked her for the suggestion, but declined.

Judge Kerber told P9 that he was only being asked to tell the truth. P9 said that he was telling the truth, but that the questions were increasingly difficult and he could not understand them well.

Scharmer added that he did not have many remaining questions, but he did not have a problem if a witness wanted a lawyer; there could have been differences in P9's statements and this was the first time that Scharmer heard that the P9 traveled for twelve hours without sleep.

After a five-minute break, Judge Kerber asked P9 if he drank water. She then stated that his request for an attorney was declined because it was not obvious that P9 was unable to assume his rights without a lawyer. Judge Kerber told P9 to tell the truth. She then allowed Scharmer to continue with his questions.

Scharmer did not have further questions.

The witness was dismissed.

Scharmer and Kroker asked to give a statement in the next session.

Böcker suggested that the original photo-array in 2017 should be acquired. In a petition to the Federal Criminal Police, Deußing asked for a photo-array on Raslan. The photos would not make him understand the reaction of the prosecution. Böcker suggested to use the original files electronically and to get the responsible person as a witness. Judge Kerber replied that the photos were of dummies, so Böcker would need the person who designed them. Böcker said the photos would be enough.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:20 p.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 8

Hearing Dates: August 12 &amp; 13, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 22 – August 12, 2020

P10, whose identity and personal information were kept confidential, testified on the hierarchical and administrative structures and methods of interrogation in branches 251 and 285. He was working in the Syrian intelligence service for over 20 years and testified that branches 251 and 285 have the worst reputation regarding the treatment of detainees. Torture was a matter of course, but sometimes guards who received orders were “creative” in their techniques. P10 describes the severe conditions in these detention facilities such as insufficient health care, inadequate meals, overcrowded cells, poor sanitation and torture during interrogations. The General Intelligence Directorate had 30,000-50,000 employees in Syria and reported directly to the President; 2,500-3,000 worked in Branch 251. He said that Raslan had less power than an Alawi because he was Sunni and that if he failed to follow orders he would have been prosecuted or killed. Several documents from Branch 285, signed by Raslan, were identified by P10. Corpses of those who died in the Branches were transferred to the hospitals where they were thrown in the hospitals’ garden, since the cooled mortuary was already full. Vegetable refrigerator trucks stored the corpses and when their numbers increased, the corpses were thrown on the ground in the sun to decompose. The public prosecution and the military police prepared false death certificates, indicating death of natural causes. The numbers of corpses and their origins were recorded. Then, the corpses were brought to mass graves. It was very rare that the corpses were handed over to their families. Since P10’s family in Syria was already threatened and the judges found that there are reasonable grounds to believe that he and his family’s lives and safety are at risk, P10 did not need to provide any specific personal information, such as his name, precise occupation in the intelligence services or his date of arrival in Germany, during the hearing. This led to several interruptions of the hearing, during which the judges had to decide on the admissibility of certain questions.

Trial Day 23 – August 13, 2020

P10 questioning was continued, mainly focussing on specific codes for and instances of torture at Branches 251 and 285. P10 also testified that military staff in the intelligence service would not dare to disobey orders or even quit out of fear of being tortured or killed. Contrary to his previous testimonies, P10 stayed rather vague regarding Raslan’s position and career.

Day 22 of Trial – August 12, 2020

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Before the witness entered the courtroom, Judge Kerber explained that due to concerns about the witness's safety, he would not reveal any personal information and would appear partially disguised to obscure his identity. The witness then entered the courtroom from another entry than other witnesses before him. He was wearing a wig and a fake beard and was accompanied by his counsel, Mr. Obst (O.). There were also two additional bodyguards in the court room. One was sitting in front of P10 and one was sitting at the back of the room, near the spectators. Mr. Kägebein appeared as replacement for Al Gharib's Defence Counsel Linke. Plaintiff counsel Reiger was not present while plaintiff counsel Mohammed was replaced by Attorney Demirkan.

Testimony of P10 "Z 280716"

P10, for the above-mentioned concerns about his safety and in accordance with §68 (3) StPO,<sup>2</sup> did not reveal his name, age or any other personal information. For identification purposes he received the number "Z 280716". When Judge Kerber asked whether P10 is related to one of the defendants, Obst said he will not provide any information on this.<sup>3</sup> Admonitions were read out and P10 was informed about his rights as a witness.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber asked if P10 held a position in the administration of the Syrian government. P10 said he worked in the government's intelligence administration for 21 years.

Judge Kerber said that P10 stated in his previous questioning that he worked in the administration. O: N/S.

Judge Kerber asked P10 about his knowledge of Branch 251. P10 said Branch 251 is one of the central branches in Damascus governorate. According to P10 it has multiple names: "Branch 251", "Al-Khatib" and "inner branch". P10 said this security branch is in charge of Damascus and its rural suburbs. P10 stated that this branch has many specialised divisions: e.g. interrogation division, student division, workers division, studies division, economical division, patrols division (anti-terrorism), external division, and detachments located outside the facilities of the branch in more rural areas.

Judge Kerber asked whether the branch and its divisions have prisons. P10 affirmed. Judge Kerber asked where these prisons are located. P10 said they are located within Branch 251 in the interrogation division. There are also temporary detention facilities outside the branch's building.

Judge Kerber asked where these prisons outside the branch were. P10 did not understand the question.

---

<sup>2</sup> If there are reasonable grounds to believe that revealing the identity, place of residence or whereabouts of the witness would endanger the witness's or another person's life, limb or liberty, the witness may be permitted to not provide personal information or to provide such information only in respect to a previous identity. However, if this is the case, the witness shall be required to state at the main hearing, in what capacity the facts he/she is came to his/her knowledge.

<sup>3</sup> "N/S" (no statement) will be used throughout this report for every instance Obst declared on behalf of P10 that he will not provide information in accordance with the relevant provisions in the German Code of Criminal Procedure.

Judge Kerber said that P10 mentioned the prisons and the temporary detention facilities and asked P10 where they are located (e.g. on which street). P10 said the central prison of Branch 251 is the big one inside the branch. The temporary detention facilities are located in the external divisions.

Judge Kerber asked P10 where the central prison is. P10 said it is on Al-Khatib street in Damascus, close to the Red Crescent hospital.

Judge Kerber asked P10 if he visited and saw the prison of Branch 251. P10 denied.

Judge Kerber asked P10 about his knowledge regarding the conditions in Branch 251. P10 said he could explain in general terms, because the interrogation system is the same in all prisons of the Syrian government. However, the methods of torture<sup>4</sup> differ according to the branch. P10 added that Branch 251 has one of the worst reputations in Syria.

Judge Kerber asked since when Branch 251 has this reputation. P10 said it is an old reputation, which continued to exist during the incidents [uprising] until “now” [these days].

Kerber asked P10 to talk about the conditions in Branch 251 in general. P10 said it is commonly known that since Mohammad Nasif محمد ناصيف took charge of Branch 251 and was the head of the branch, it was considered to be an independent administration, although it was formally under administration of the central administration – unit 1411. Administratively, it [Branch 251] is subordinate to it [central administration], but it is effectively independent because of the mere power of its head.<sup>5</sup> P10 added that he thinks that the branch is continuing with the same power, because high-ranking officers take command of it. After the former major general لواء [Nasif] retired, he became the vice-president for the legal issues<sup>6</sup> and died later. Several officers succeeded him [as head of Branch 251]: Major General لواء Bahjat Soleiman بهجت سليمان, who was later transferred to Jordan as an ambassador. He was directly followed by Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس, who is still [in command] until “now” [these days]. P10 added that Younes is one of the worst criminal officers in Syria.

Judge Kerber said the judges are concerned with the conditions in the prison of Branch 251. P10 said, as he mentioned previously, all interrogation methods are similar for all prisons.

Judge Kerber asked P10 to briefly describe these methods. P10 said in all countries, it is always the case that the accused is innocent until proven guilty. However, in Syria, the accused’s guilt is rarely actually proven. In Branch 251, there are several methods. First of all, the detainee is usually referred from another area to interrogation at Branch 251 (one does not need to be from the same the area [under administration of the branch]). This is also how Branch 285 works, which usually gets referrals from other provinces. Regarding Branch 285, it is a central branch for interrogation and is centred in Damascus (the administration), but also Branch 251 gets referrals from other provinces like Branch 285. The reason for that (referrals from outside) is because the branch has topics that are also dealt with at other branches e.g. Al-Qamishli القامشلي Branch and the topics of information in Al-Qamishli [at] which [the interrogation] stopped, are similar in Branch 251. Therefore, the interrogation is continued in Branch 251, because it is the “owner” of the information [صاحب المعلومات] and has absolute authority

<sup>4</sup> P10 explicitly used the word torture.

<sup>5</sup> P10 later testified that the same is the case for Division 40. It is formally a division within Branch 251 but because of the mere power of its head, it has a special position among the divisions of Branch 251 and in some cases exceeds its formal powers by skipping Branch 251.

<sup>6</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: His formal position was Deputy Vice-President for Security Affairs, however P10 said “legal” not “security”.

[صلاحيات مطلقة] and multiple methods.<sup>7</sup> Usually and before the Syrian revolution, there were interrogation divisions in the branches of the provinces and many detainees were referred from there to the branch [251], even during the revolution, because it [Branch 251] is known for its bad reputation that no one is interested/concerned if somebody died there.

Judge Kerber asked what methods of torture were applied and if there were orders to torture. Böcker interrupted, saying that he does not understand if P10 was talking in general or specifically about Branch 251.<sup>8</sup> Judge Kerber repeated her question. P10 said there certainly were orders.

Judge Kerber asked P10 who gave the orders. P10 said عنصر العسكري military staff and العسكري prison guards receive their orders from the head of the interrogation division, who in turn receives his orders from the head of his branch. The head of the interrogation division is also the one requesting the detention or referral [of a detainee] to a court or a different detention facility. That request usually comes in the form of a formal printed paper and is made to the head of the branch, who takes the final decision, usually following the request. P10 asked if [the court] would like him to speak about torture methods [Judge Kerber asked him to elaborate on this before Böcker interrupted].

Judge Kerber asked P10 about the interrogation in Branch 285. P10 said he could not hear the question [The technical problem was fixed].

Judge Kerber asked how interrogations were carried out in Branch 285. P10 said Branch 285 is a central interrogation centre in Damascus within the big administration building and has many interrogation offices and interrogators. It has two big prisons: the northern one and the southern one. Many high-ranking officers took command of it. P10 asked whether [the court] would like him to mention names.

Judge Kerber repeated her previous question, asking how interrogations were carried out. P10 said that when prisoners are detained, they are blindfolded. During the interrogation sessions, their hands are cuffed and sometimes the feet as well. In some cases, prisoners are suspended from the ceiling in chains, so that their toes barely touch the floor. There are several methods of interrogation<sup>9</sup> like دولاب [tyre] and فلقة Falqa [beatings on the sole of the feet]. Occasionally, electricity was used during interrogations. Interrogators become passionate and creative [يتفنن] when they received orders: using boiling water or putting out cigarettes on the detainee's body. Occasionally, detainees have to wear shoes with nails on the inside and are forced to stand in them. P10 said there are other disgraceful methods, which he was embarrassed to talk about but he would mention them out of necessity: a detainee's penis is tied with a string and the other end [of the string] is tied to a metal bed or a nail. The detainee is then fixed (either cuffed or hung) and forced to drink a lot of water in order to urinate. P10 said the methods are sometimes worse. He says he knows about a person, whose name he does not want to mention, who was raped with a wooden stick.

Judge Kerber asked if this person was a male or a female. P10 said it was a man.

<sup>7</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: although P10's example was very vague, he most likely meant that if someone was detained at Al-Qamishli city for threatening the national security, this information is being shared with Branch 251, since it is within their responsibility and the interrogation will be continued at Branch 251.

<sup>8</sup> The Trial Monitor was not able to note the answer to this question.

<sup>9</sup> P10 said interrogation, not torture and did not further elaborate on the details of these methods.

Judge Kerber asked if there were attempts to drown people, something like waterboarding which is known from America. P10 said he already mentioned the use of boiling water, in other instances a detainee's head was put in a water barrel.

Judge Kerber asked who was giving orders. P10 said he has to provide some explanation. He explained that when the revolution began, intelligence apparatuses were "released in an absolute manner" and every division's commander and the ranks below began to act on their own consideration, since, following the orders to shoot at demonstrators, it no longer mattered whether somebody died in prison. Regarding the orders, P10 said they were given from the higher to the lower ranks. The head of the regime reinforced martial law in Syria after 2 – 3 months [of the beginning of the uprising]. This law was still in place previously but before that [uprising] claimed to be suspended. When it was reactivated, security and military forces were given an absolute free hand to do whatever they wanted to do to [people] opposing the regime and consequently treated traitors according to martial law.

Judge Kerber asked whether P10 remembers a particular decree on that. P10 said that 3 months or less after the uprising, orders to quell demonstrations by any means were issued, allowing the use of bullets. P10 said that at a certain point (P10 cannot remember when exactly this happened), brigadier general Maher Al-Assad العميد ماهر الأسد gave orders to shoot at anyone who was there [demonstrators]. P10 said the situation worsened, as the whole world knows.

Judge Wiedner intervened asking P10 when the revolution began. P10 said March 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked when the orders were approximately issued. P10 said the orders did not reach him, rather the leaderships and their forces. According to P10 the orders were issued around the end of May 2011.

Judge Kerber asked whether detainees were handcuffed and brought to the interrogation by a guard. P10 affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if interrogations were conducted by someone other than a guard. P10 said they were conducted by an interrogator.

Böcker asked if P10 himself attended an interrogation. P10 affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked who gave orders to use torture during interrogations. P10 said the head of the interrogation division, according to the established hierarchy.

Judge Kerber asked if the orders were given verbally or by using signs. P10 said verbally.

Judge Kerber recalled P10 saying that the guards received orders from the head of the interrogation either directly [verbally] or using signs. P10 affirmed.

Judge Kerber said that P10 previously stated that "the interrogating officer had a free hand to use any possible means to achieve the goal, which was coded as 'do whatever is necessary'. For the patrol's division and Branch 285, it meant that every means was allowed and the goal was to detain the person". P10 affirmed.

Judge Kerber continued recalling that the orders were either given verbally in person or by phone. P10 affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked whether the same was the case for Branch 251. P10 affirmed again.

Judge Kerber recalled P10 saying that Branch 251 had one of the worst reputations and that there were prisons and interrogations in Branches 251 and 285. Judge Kerber further said the judges heard that detainees were transferred from Branch 251 to 285 and asked why this happened. P10 referred to his previous statement saying that Branch 285 is a central interrogation branch in Damascus at the national Syrian level. P10 stated that for most of the detainees, a summary (of their interrogation) was issued to the director of the general intelligence directorate e.g. Ali Mamlouk علي مملوك previously. If he was not satisfied with the result of the interrogation, he would issue a written order to refer them [detainees] to the central branch [285] in order to proceed with the interrogation.

Böcker asked who this person was. P10 said it was the director of the general intelligence services in Damascus.

Judge Kerber asked about the composition of personnel regarding Sunnis and Alawites. P10 said that usually within the security services and armed forces, 80 – 90% of the personnel are Alawites. This percentage differs from one branch to another. P10 said that he was talking about the officers and employees (volunteers), not the decision makers.

Judge Kerber asked the same question now referring to the high-ranks. P10 said they are Alawites.

Judge Kerber asked if there are only Alawites, or if there are Sunnis too. P10 said there are certainly Sunnis and Christians, however the majority are Alawites.

Judge Kerber asked whether there was tension between the high ranks. P10 said maybe.

Judge Kerber asked whether P10 knew the name Anwar Raslan and his rank. P10 did not want to talk about it, however he said that through his [P10's] service, Raslan's name, rank and duty station are known to him [P10].

Judge Kerber asked what Raslan's last rank was that P10 remembers. P10 said colonel عقيد.

Judge Kerber asked whether it is correct that Raslan worked in Branch 285. P10 did not understand the question.

Judge Kerber asked in which branch Raslan worked. P10 said that to his knowledge, Mr. Raslan<sup>10</sup> worked in branches 285 and 251 for a long time.

Judge Kerber asked P10 to provide a time-frame for that. P10 said he would talk in an approximate manner, not specifying. Raslan began in Branch 251 (he was originally a police officer). After that, he was transferred to the general intelligence directorate [285]. In the beginning, he worked in Branch 251 (P10 remembers one instance in 2006 where Raslan was present at this branch). However, in 2008, as P10 thinks, Mr. Raslan worked in Branch 285 and was later transferred to Branch 251 in 2009 – 2010.

Judge Kerber asked what position Raslan held in Branch 251. P10 said he was the head of the interrogation division.

***

[15-minute-break]

***

---

<sup>10</sup> P10 explicitly said „Mr.“

Judge Weidner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked which intelligence services there are in Syria. P10 said there are four: the general intelligence directorate , [إدارة المخابرات العامة] the military intelligence directorate , [شعبة المخابرات العسكرية] the political security directorate [شعبة الأمن السياسي] and the air-force intelligence. P10 said that two of them are official [self-administered]: the general intelligence directorate and military intelligence directorate; actually, three are official [self-administered], including the air-force intelligence. As for the political security directorate, it is under administration of the ministry of interior.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know more about the General Intelligence Directorate. P10 said that it is independent (not administered by any ministry, rather by the republic presidency directly). However, it is called a military unit, although it is independent. It has the number 1411.

Judge Wiedner asked how many employees it contains. P10 asked whether Judge Wiedner meant the directorate as a whole. Judge Wiedner affirmed. P10 said there are approximately 30,000-50,000 employees.

Judge Wiedner asked if this number includes all of Syria. P10 said yes.

Judge Wiedner recalled P10 saying that Ali Mamlouk was the director of the General Intelligence Directorate. P10 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked until when this was the case. P10 said that after the bombing of the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC) in 2012, the former head of the national security office, major general Hisham Bakhtyar [اللواء هشام بختيا] was killed and Ali Mamlouk was assigned in his position.

Judge Wiedner asked when this happened. P10 said approximately 2012.

Judge Wiedner asked who came after him [Ali Mamlouk]. P10 said someone from Zaytoun زيتون family.<sup>11</sup>

Judge Wiedner asked if it was Deeb Zaytoun. [ديب زيتون]. P10 affirmed and said he [Deeb Zaytoun ديب زيتون] was the first assistant to Ali Mamlouk.

Judge Wiedner asked if P10 knew about a committee which was founded after the beginning of the uprising. P10 asked whether Judge Wiedner was referring to the administration, or to the country [national] level.

Judge Wiedner said to the Syrian level. P10 said that it was called crisis cell management. [إدارة خلية الأزمة]. [The translator said CCMC].

Judge Wiedner wanted to know if P10 actually said that [CCMC], or if he meant that. Judge Wiedner repeated the question and P10 answered he said crisis cell management.<sup>12</sup>

Judge Wiedner asked who its [the CCMC's] members were. P10 said the head of the national security office, major general Hisham Bakhtyar who was killed, was the head [of the CCMC]. Other members were the heads of the 4 security apparatuses: Ali Mamlouk, Asef Shawkat [أصف شوكت] of the military

<sup>11</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P10 said "from beyt/bait Zaytoun بيت زيتون", which means "family of Zaytoun" in Syrian dialect. "Beyt" means "house" in standard Arabic. It was translated as "Beyt" and the judges probably thought that the first name was "Beyt". Hence, the following question

<sup>12</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P10 said "crisis cell management" but from the context it is clear that he meant the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC).

[intelligence], the minister of defence and Jamil Hasan جميل حسن, head of the air-force [intelligence]. P10 added that there are multiple names which he forgot.

Judge Wiedner asked when and why the CCMC was founded. P10 said that it was founded by a presidential decree, in order to manage the crisis. The revolution was considered a crisis and [the cell] was supposed to come up with suggestions on how to eliminate the movement [uprising]. Security committees in other provinces derived from the cell.

Judge Wiedner asked whether the cell gave concrete orders to the intelligence services. P10 said of course.

Judge Wiedner asked P10 to provide further explanation. P10 said that one of the circulated announcements [تعاميم] was issued and publicized through the security apparatuses. The orders were sensitive when they were first issued, ordering to detain all people, [deal with] committees and social media and silence them by any possible means. There was another order in form of a request from the central management. It was directed to the security branches in the provinces, ordering them to summon all dignitaries and merchants (civilians), in order to put them under pressure and therefore, putting pressure on the people around them.

Judge Wiedner asked P10 what he meant by “summon”. P10 said that they [dignitaries and merchants, including religious personalities] were summoned to the security branches. Some of them were personally summoned by Bashar Al-Asad.

Judge Wiedner asked if the cell issued orders to use violence against demonstrations. P10 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P10 to elaborate further. P10 said that he previously mentioned journalists, civilian committees and doctors, who used to help people in field hospitals. [The orders] were to detain and eliminate them (take necessary actions اجراء اللازم) [meaning to do anything].

Judge Wiedner asked how the duties in Branches 251 and 285 changed after March 2011. P10 said there was a big change. These two [branches] had absolute free hand before the incidents [uprising]. After the people’s movement, their powers increased. Within the branch, the number of detainees significantly increased. Everybody on the street (at the time of demonstrations) was detained.

Judge Wiedner asked whether the methods of interrogation changed. P10 affirmed saying that the interrogation “became crazy with these people” [detainees]. Sometimes, a cell measuring 4x4m had more than 200 people inside, who stayed there for several days undergoing torture, but not being questioned.

Judge Wiedner asked in which branch this happened. P10 said that this happened in general.

Judge Wiedner said that P10 however, described a specific cell. P10 did not understand the question. Judge Wiedner asked if the cell P10 described was in Branch 251 or 285. P10 said that prisons in general are similar. There are also solitary detention cells measuring 1x1.5m, which is the general image of overcrowding in all branches in Syria.

Judge Wiedner said that P10 mentioned the conditions in Branch 285 and asked if that counts for Branch 251 as well. P10 said they were roughly the same but Branch 285 was worse to the degree that, in case an interrogator kills someone, it would be considered normal.

Judge Wiedner asked if P10 meant Branch 285 or 251. P10 said that Branch 251 is bad, 285 is worse.

Judge Wiedner recalled P10 saying with regard to interrogations in Branch 251 that “Branch 251 has the most brutal torture methods, the procedure is similar to Branch 285”. P10 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked about the differences in torture between branches 251 and 285. P10 said that the methods are nearly the same, but the torture would be more intense in Branch 285.

Judge Wiedner said that P10 previously mentioned that Branch 251 had more freedom to act. P10 said that he mentioned that major general Mohammad Nasif took command [of Branch 251] since he was a first lieutenant ملازم أول or a نقيب captain (a low rank).

Judge Wiedner asked P10 to repeat the name. P10 said Mohammad Keir Beik Nasif محمد خير بيك ناصيف or Mohammad Nasif Keir Beik (either way is fine). Regarding his importance to the regime’s head, it derived from his Alawite sect. He, his father and grandfather are Alawi religious people and his religious stand is more powerful than the president of the republic [Syria].

Judge Wiedner mentioned that P10 said earlier that people close to the president took command of Branch 251. P10 affirmed. He added that the head of the branch was the major general [Nasif]. The high-ranking officers were Alawites and from Alawi villages. Previously, Hamad Zayd حمد زيد, an Alawite, was Nasif’s deputy or [Nasif’s] office manager.

Judge Wiedner asked whether Raslan is an Alawite or a Sunni. P10 said he [Raslan] is a Sunni from a village where a massacre happened. Alawites and the regime slaughtered many people there.

Judge Wiedner asked where this happened. P10 said around 2011 – 2012 in Al-Houla الحولة village.

Judge Wiedner asked if being a Sunni affected Raslan’s occupation. P10 said it did. He swore by god that he is convinced that Raslan was not from the absolute important people, because he is a Sunni. P10 does not know what exactly Raslan did, but he was the head of the interrogation division. However, if an Alawite colonel were in his position, he would be more powerful.

Judge Wiedner asked about a hierarchy among guards, interrogators and officers in Branches 251 and 285. P10 asked whether the question was relating to the interrogation division. Judge Wiedner repeated the question. P10 said there is possibly a hierarchy. He said that there is a hierarchy between the head of the branch and his deputy/vice head (who may be the head of a division). According to P10, some divisions are more important than others. Since he is talking about the branch and the interrogation division, P10 concluded: the head of the branch is at the top, superior to the head of the interrogation branch, who is superior to military and civilian interrogators, who are in turn superior to the guards.

Judge Wiedner asked if the head of the branch and his deputy knew what was happening in the branch. P10 said they certainly knew however, there were some secret topics, which only the head of the branch knew. Nonetheless, in general, they knew.

Judge Wiedner asked if they gave orders. P10 said the orders are, of course, from the head of the Branch.

Judge Wiedner mentioned P10 previously said “the head and his vice were informed. They gave green light through known phrases/codes. After the beginning of the riots, officers had more freedom and could partially torture without orders, because the situation was chaotic”. P10 affirmed his statement, adding that this was particularly the case after the outbreak of the Syrian revolution.

Judge Wiedner asked about Division 40. P10 said it is under the administration of the inner branch, 251. It is called the patrol's or anti-terrorism division, previously headed by Hafez Makhoulوف حافظ مخلوف. According to P10, it is one of the very bad divisions, especially under Makhoul's command. It [Division 40] conducted detentions even outside Damascus, in other provinces and had absolute powers, since Makhoul is the cousin of the president.

Judge Wiedner asked how Branch 251 and Division 40 cooperated in terms of tasks. P10 said that the speciality and duty of this division is patrols within Damascus city. Sometimes, when there is a wanted person for Branch 251, Division 40 detained and delivered him to Branch 251. P10 said he knows that Division 40 went beyond its responsibilities and authority and opened an interrogation division by itself.

Judge Wiedner said that he did not understand. P10 said that Makhoul is the head of Division 40 and because of his rank and closeness to Bashar, he [Makhoul] considered himself more important and higher than Tawfiq Younes. Therefore, any wanted person for Branch 251, Division 40 used to detain and torture him, then refer him [to Branch 251]. Occasionally, it exceeded Branch 251 (which Division 40 belongs to) and referred [detainees] to Branch 285.

Judge Wiedner asked how many employees Division 40 has. P10 said that he does not know. However, there were similar divisions (to Division 40) where P10 used to work. Possibly around 150 – 200 persons. The number increased after Makhoul took its command.

Judge Wiedner asked if Division 40 has offices in Branch 251. P10 said the head of Division 40 has an office at Branch 251.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were dead bodies in branches 251 and 285. P10 said there were many dead bodies. However, P10 did not see [dead bodies] with his own eyes, but rather saw them in the news, after the Caesar Files were revealed. P10 heard from many friends around his place of residence, whose relatives died there [Branches 251 and 285].

Judge Wiedner asked whether Division 40 transferred corpses to Branch 251. P10 assumes this was the case.

Judge Kerber intervened to ask whether corpses were brought to Branch 251. P10 said that this is correct, even though he did not see it. However, the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) showed him photos demanding explanation for the numbers [of corpses], and there were many corpses from that division (P10 affirmed that he meant division 40).

Judge Kerber said it seems strange to transfer corpses to Branch 251 to store them there. P10 said that, as he previously mentioned, Makhoul considers himself to be more important than Younes. He was not afraid of people dying at his division. However, he considered the corpses as garbage and a responsibility that he rather throws on someone else (He was not afraid, but why take responsibility?).

Judge Wiedner asked what the goal of interrogations in Branch 251 was. P10 said, to be precise, at the time of the beginning of the movement [uprising], the number of the detainees was high. Therefore, the goal was to lock people up like sheep in the farms. The accusations were already prepared before he [a detainee] arrived. When one was detained, his accusation was ready, he just had to sign it: affiliation with foreign parties like Saudi Arabia and Qatar. One was also forced to confess his participation in demonstrations for money. They did not need interrogations, but mere retribution and detention.

Judge Wiedner reiterated P10's answer from a previous questioning where P10 stated that e.g. a Christian was forced to confess that he was the leader of an Islamist terrorist army. P10 affirmed, again mentioning that the accusations were already prepared and only had to be signed.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were "real" interrogations, where one actually wanted to get information. P10 said that this was the case, explaining that in some instances people were interrogated in order to obtain information about locations, field doctors or medicine (donor of medicine or of the money used to buy medicine).

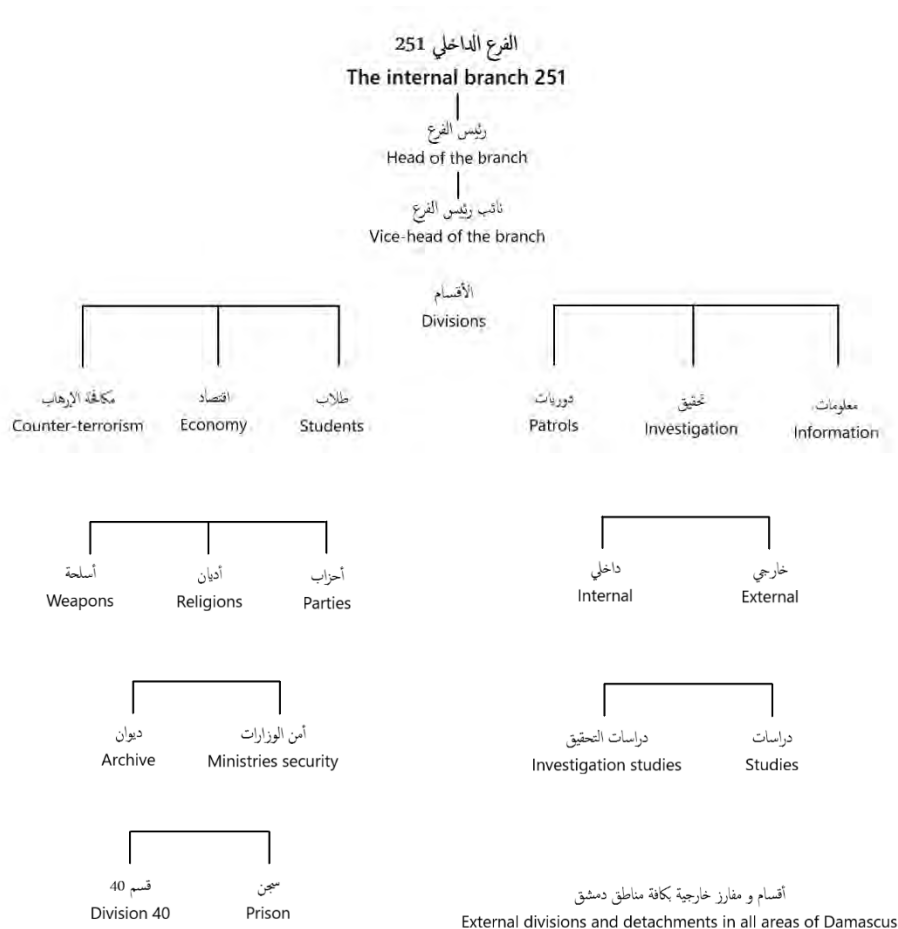

Judge Wiedner asked whether this information also included opposition members on social media. P10 said that this was of course the case, explaining that he referred to them [opposition] as "committees" at the beginning.

Judge Wiedner asked whether corruption was involved in the release [of detainees]. P10 said yes, in some cases.

***

[Below are recreations of sketches made by the witness and shown in the courtroom.]

***

P10 said that the “studies” division is different from the “investigation studies” division, as the latter studies persons who are to be detained and those already in detention.

Böcker asked if P10’s workplace is not on the organigram. O: N/S.

P10 said that the number of rooms is actually higher than what he drew, since this is only an estimation. He also added that there could be other divisions which he cannot remember.

Böcker asked again if P10’s workplace is not on the organigram. O: N/S.

Böcker wanted to know why Obst replied that an answer to this question could draw conclusions about P10’s identity. Böcker said that in his opinion, the question is admissible. Judge Kerber rejected the question as inadmissible. Böcker demanded a court decision.

***

[75 minute break in proceedings – lunch/decision on admissibility of Böcker’s question]

***

Judge Kerber said that the judges did not reach a decision, since it was not clear whether Böcker was referring to his question on Branch 285 or 251. Judge Kerber explained that the witness is not obliged to provide personal information on his occupation in the Syrian government. Böcker depicted the conversation again.

Prosecutor Klinge stated that in accordance with §68(3) StPO, P10 is not obliged to answer questions due to concerns about his and his family's safety. Böcker said that this paragraph would not be applicable.

***

[20 minute break in proceedings for court decision]

***

Court decision:

Judge Kerber's decision was upheld by the Bench. P10 does not have to provide personal information and information about his occupation within the Syrian government and his workplace, since this information would permit conclusions on his identity. The requirements of §68 (3) StPO are given. The Syrian intelligence service already threatened P10's family in Syria with detention, should he not return and searched his flat. P10 and the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) take this threat seriously. Should P10 be detained by the Syrian intelligence service, he would be in danger of being abused until death. Böcker's question was clearly enhancing this danger and is consequently inadmissible.

Böcker asked for a transcript of the decision and asked whether it is correct that the information P10 provided today derives from the fact that his workplace is located in the structure of 285. O: N/S. Böcker restated his question, Judge Kerber rejected it. Prosecutor Klinge said that according to the previous court decision, this question does not need to be answered.

***

[20 minute break in proceedings]

***

Court decision:

Kerber's decision was upheld by the Bench. Following the previous decision, it is sufficient that P10 described that he got his information from the fact that: he was present in at least one interrogation, saw the prison, worked within the intelligence administration for approximately 20 years. Böcker's question was rejected.

Prosecutor Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge asked how many employees there are in Branch 251. P10 estimates around 3,000-5,000 including external divisions.<sup>13</sup>

Klinge asked about the number of employees in the interrogation division. P10 said that it is a big branch. There are around 50- 100 people who work there in different shifts. The interrogation division has special patrols which are different from the patrol's division. Occasionally, the interrogation division conducts detentions or seeks the assistance of other divisions.

---

<sup>13</sup> P10 corrected this number the following day, as you can see from the report below.

Klinge asked whether the interrogations were round-the-clock, due to shifts or if there were fixed interrogation times. P10 said round-the-clock.

Klinge recalled that during his questioning by the police in November 2017, P10 mentioned documents which were signed by Raslan. Klinge asked about the content and date of these documents. P10 said, as far as he remembers, it happened in 2008 – 2009, since he cannot remember very well. Raslan was the deputy of the interrogation division at that time and Mohammad Barakat محمد بركات was the head of the division. When Barakat was transferred to another branch, Raslan might have been the interim head and signed the documents.

Klinge asked what the content of the document was. P10 said they were summoning warrants for investigation/interrogation that were addressed to another branch, ordering the other branch to detain certain people. Maybe they were detainees in Branch 285 and “they” confessed on “them”.<sup>14</sup>

An Arabic document was shown (recreated below).<sup>15</sup>

يرجى الاطلاع وإقرار ما ترونه مناسباً
Please examine and endorse what you deem appropriate

عميد ركن* رئيس الفرع 285 Brigadier general* Head of branch 285	عقيد أنور رسلان Colonel Anwar Raslan	رائد حسن إسماعيل Major Hasan Isma'il	رائد خلدون الكصيري Major Khalidoun Al-Kusairi	ملازم أول عباس تلم First lieutenant Abbas Tammam
	[توقيع] [Signature]	[توقيع] [Signature]	[توقيع] [Signature]	[توقيع] [Signature]

قرار السيد اللواء مدير إدارة المخابرات العامة
The decision of mister major-general director of general intelligence administration

Klinge asked P10 whether this is the same signature as Raslan's. P10 said he cannot say anything for sure, since he does not remember very well.

A second document was shown (recreated below).

<sup>14</sup> P10 meant that detainees at Branch 251 mentioned detainees from another branch during their interrogation, as to why Branch 251 sent for them.

<sup>15</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: the German translation was: “Stabsbrigadegeneral”, however there is no accurate translation”, i.e. staff brigadier general, which is not accurate, because “Rukn ركن” has no accurate translation (even in English).

يرجى الاطلاع وإقرار ما ترونه مناسباً
Please examine and endorse what you deem appropriate

عبيد ركن* رئيس الفرع 285 Brigadier general* Head of branch 285	عقيد أنور رسلان Colonel Anwar Raslan	رائد حسن إسماعيل Major Hasan Isma'il	رائد خلدون الكصيري Major Khalidoun Al-Kusairi	ملازم أول عباس تمام First lieutenant Abbas Tamam
	[توقيع] [Signature]	[توقيع] [Signature]	[توقيع] [Signature]	[توقيع] [Signature]

قرار السيد اللواء مدير إدارة المخابرات العامة
The decision of mister major-general director of general intelligence administration

موافق على الفترة رقم 2، 3، 5، 6
و عدم الموافقة على 1، 4
I approve paragraph number 2, 3, 5, 6
with disapproval of 1, 4

Klinge asked whether P10 can decode the signatures. P10 said that he could only read the names but not the signatures.

A third document, a transcript of a witness interview, was shown.<sup>16</sup>

Klinge asked if P10 could assign the initials. P10 said that they are bit different, but the handwriting is the same.

A fourth [handwritten] document was shown signed as “The Syrian, colonel Anwar Raslan السويي العقيد أنور رسلان”.

Klinge asked how a Sunni with the rank of a colonel should behave in the intelligence service dominated by Shiites, in order to get promoted. P10 said that he should basically never say “no” and has to execute all orders, otherwise, he would get in trouble.

Klinge asked how a Sunni can get into such a special branch. P10 said that one should be “منبطح [obsequious] and accept all orders. He should never say “no”. If he does, they would not let him in in the first place.

Klinge asked about the general conditions in prisons, such as medical care and food. P10 said that before the revolution, the numbers [of detainees] were not as high. Additionally, detainees in the intelligence services were deprived of all civilian rights and treated like animals. If one got injured and tortured, he was not taken to hospital until his soul was about to come out [almost died]. However, after the revolution, he would be left until his soul comes out [actually died]. There is no personal hygiene. One cannot go to toilet unless the prison guard gives permission. Sometimes, one urinates on himself. Therefore, due to overcrowding, lack of hygiene and oxygen, they [detainees] suffocated.

<sup>16</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: it was probably the transcript of Raslan’s interview by German authorities.

Klinge asked what happened to the corpses. P10 said that he told the police about locations of mass graves, where they were buried. Of course, the corpses were transferred from the security branches to the hospitals. They [corpses] were thrown in the hospitals' garden, since the cooled mortuary was already full. Most of the hospitals used vegetable refrigerator trucks to store the corpses and when their numbers increased, the corpses were thrown on the ground in the sun to decompose. Then the public prosecution and the military police got involved by preparing false death certificates, saying that it was a natural death, and writing the number [of the corpses] in tables along with numbers indicating where they came from. They [also] wrote these numbers on stickers and put them on the corpses. Then, the corpses are brought to the mass graves. It was very rare that the corpses were handed over to their families.

Klinge asked if P10 knows the locations of the mass graves. P10 said that he knows, but unfortunately, if he discloses this, it would draw conclusions on the location of his work place.

Defence Counsel Böcker's questioning

Böcker recalled P10 saying that one can have problems if not following orders and asked what trouble a Sunni would get in. P10 said that if a Sunni officer or a non-commissioned officer would reject orders from Alawite commanders, even illegal ones or personal favours, or if he was asked to do something (e.g. if he is a head of a security intelligence apparatus and his boss asked him to release a detainee), he could be referred to the army, a decree to transfer him to the army could be issued, or a decree to transfer him to another unwanted remote location, or if the person [the Sunni] was weak [in regard to his rank], he would be fired.

Böcker asked whether that would put this person or his family in danger. P10 said that before the revolution and because this procedure was routine, there was no danger on the family. However, after the revolution, if one does not abide by the instructions, one and his family would be accused of treason.

Böcker gave an example: if one was told to sign a document and refused, what would happen? P10 said that it depends on the severity [خطورة] of the situation and the subject [topic]. For example, if one is a goods smuggler... Böcker interrupted saying that he did not meant a smuggler but a member of the Free Syrian Army or a terrorist organization. Obst said that it should be the witness's wording. P10 said that certainly, if the accused belongs to a terrorist organization or Al-Qaeda, he would certainly not dare and could not reject signing. Or regarding our case (the Syrian revolution), the whole nation was accused of being terrorists. A regime accused its people of being Al-Qaeda.

Böcker asked if an individual case would be of high relevance. P10 said of course.

Böcker asked whether the document had to be signed, otherwise, the person would be accused of treason. P10 affirmed.

Böcker recalled P10 saying that he was present during an interrogation in Branch 285 and asked if it was only once or several times. O: N/S.

Böcker asked on what right P10 is relying on in not answering. O: N/S.

Böcker asked whether it was to §55 StPO.<sup>17</sup> O: N/S.

Klinge said that P10 does not need to answer the question.

Böcker asked for what reasons it was possible for P10 to be present during an interrogation. O: N/S.

Böcker asked how P10 knew that the head of Division 40 had an office in Branch 251. Obst asked for a break to counsel his client.

Böcker said he had a general question: Where did P10 get his information which he illustrated today from? O: N/S

Kerber said that the witness could leave, but was not yet dismissed. The questioning would continue the following day.

***

[5 minute break in proceedings]

***

Klinge's assistant, Mrs. Holz/Holtz read out [for about 40 minutes] a statement responding to Raslan's testimony in which he suggested certain people to testify as witnesses in his case. It was said that these were not formal requests to present evidence, but rather suggestions. Raslan named people who supported him or whom he had supported and "could be" summoned as witnesses. His request was not obvious and specific, therefore the judicial procedural requirements of a formal request to present evidence are not met. The testimonies of those people from previous hearings also confirm systematic torture. The proposed witnesses should not be summoned to testify in this case. Every one of them was mentioned with an explanation on why they are not required to testify in this case [names redacted].

Böcker confirmed that Raslan did not formally request to present evidence, they will give a statement on that in the future.

The proceedings were adjourned at 4:15 p.m.

The next hearing will be on 13 August 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

Day 23 of Trial – August 13, 2020

Hearing began at 9:30 am with about 6 spectators and 2 individuals from the media present. Witness Deußing [German police inspector heard on day 7, 27 May] was summoned for 1pm but did not need to appear since there were no questions. Mr. Kägebein appeared as replacement for Defence Counsel Linke. There were again two additional bodyguards, one sitting in front of P10, one at the back of the room, close to the spectators.

---

<sup>17</sup> Right to withhold information in cases where it would lead to criminal investigations against witness himself or one of his relatives.

P10 wanted to make a statement: He made a mistake regarding the number of the employees in Branch 251 the previous day. There are 2,500-3,000, not 3,000 – 5,000 as he said the day before.

Defence Counsel Böcker's Questioning

Böcker asked about P10's request for counselling that was mentioned the previous day. O: N/S. Böcker asked why P10 would not answer. O: N/S.

Böcker recalled P10 saying that "Tawfiq Younes is one of the worst criminal officers in Syria" and asked how he arrived at that conclusion. P10 said he can give an example of this brigadier general's practices without specifying the location. To prevent further questions, P10 said he did not work in that place [where Younes was working]. P10 recalled that there was a joint mission between Younes's duty station and the place P10 was working. P10 witnessed how Younes conducted the interrogation with a detainee during the mission, which [the interrogation] took place in the woods. When Younes did not get an answer from that person, he shot him in the leg to force him to speak.

Böcker asked if blindfolds and handcuffs were used regularly. P10 said in most cases.

Böcker asked if there were orders to do that and if so, who issued these orders. P10 said the use of blindfolds and handcuffs was the regular system. The interrogated person should not see the face of the interrogator.

Böcker asked where these orders came from. P10 said he does not know. P10 served there for 21 years and that [use of blindfolds and handcuffs] was always the usual way of interrogation.

Böcker summarised that it is consequently a rule "cast in stone" and nobody knows why. P10 affirmed.

Böcker recalled P10 saying that after the revolution, every officer could do what he wanted. Böcker then asked how P10 knew this. P10 apologised and clarified that he did not say that any "small" employee could do what he wanted, but rather that after the revolution, there were some employees who committed transgressions during the martial law period.

Böcker asked how P10 knew that. P10 said he was there and saw it.

Böcker summarised that martial law was mandated, deactivated and then reactivated. He then asked what the juristic starting point was. P10 referred to his previous answer and said that during Hafez Al-Assad's time, the country was governed by martial law. After that, in a way or another and to give the impression that Bashar's regime was democratic and new [حديث العهد], there was a decree to suspend<sup>18</sup> martial law in the country. However, it was only on paper and the practices from the previous regime continued.

Böcker asked when and by whom the decree of the repeal was issued. P10 said the ones issuing such decrees are the president and the national security office. P10 did not know when exactly the decree was issued.

Böcker asked for an approximate time. P10 said at the end of the reign of Hafez Al-Assad.

Böcker summarised that the decree was only on paper, however not implemented and then activated. P10 affirmed.

---

<sup>18</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P10 said رفع but most likely meant "repeal".

Böcker asked when and how martial law was reactivated. P10 said on the 1st day a person went to a demonstration [started demonstrating].

Böcker asked whether P10 is talking about mid-March 2011 and how the intelligence services knew that martial law was reactivated. P10 said it was reactivated by circulars and orders from the administration and the directorates of the intelligence services, the national security office and the presidential palace. Sometimes, they came as individual orders from the brigadier general Maher Al-Assad to quell the demonstrations by any means, even using gun-fire.

Böcker asked about P10's education/training. O: N/S.

Böcker asked when P10 came to Germany. O: N/S.

[Böcker then started to mention random words like "asylum" and "Federal Criminal Police Office" (BKA) without formulating a question. Witness counsel Obst always said: N/S.]

Fratzki said that P10 mentioned that Younes shot someone in the leg and whether P10 heard that and was nearby. O: N/S.

Fratzki said he understood that P10 was standing next to Younes and asked if that was correct. O: N/S.

Fratzki said the question is admissible in his opinion. Obst replied that it could cause problems for his client.

Fratzki asked if Obst meant §55 StPO<sup>19</sup>. O: N/S.

Fratzki said that he would count it as §55 StPO. Obst said that everything has been said.

[Böcker mentioned technical tools which might be necessary to hear the shot, however the exact question remained unclear to the Trial Monitor] O: N/S.

Böcker said that probably to a much later time, he would like Deußing [German police inspector heard on day 7, 27 May] to testify on it if he is allowed to testify on this subject.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Scharmer cited Raslan saying that "one cannot stay polite during the interrogations. Some went peacefully and some with violence. Armed groups were interrogated strictly". Scharmer referred to "codes" that P10 mentioned the previous day and asked whether it is a code when the colonel said "strict". P10 wanted to ask a question himself. Scharmer said usually he cannot, but if P10 did not understand the question, he can ask to clarify. P10 then asked whether the accused referred to a specific instance where certain methods were used, because they [the interrogated persons] were armed groups. Scharmer said that it was complicated. Böcker intervened, saying the witness should know that "No" was the correct answer. Scharmer said that this was his question and he himself wanted to communicate with the witness.

Scharmer said Raslan mentioned "strict interrogations" in his previous questioning by the German police and wanted to know if this term would be considered a code by a colonel. Scharmer asked P10 whether the question was clear. P10 said that "rough methods" [صارمة و حادة] means to use any available means to cause death [of the interrogated person]. P10 had a comment on the previous question on “armed groups”: During that period, there were no armed groups until 2012, according to P10, even “the criminal president Bashar Al-Assad” admitted that.

---

<sup>19</sup> Right to withhold information in cases where it would lead to criminal investigations against the witness himself or one of his relatives.

Kroker asked about the treatment of detainees in Branches 251 and 285, if “welcoming party” was a household term. P10 affirmed, explaining that it meant that from the time someone gets arrested on the streets or from his house, he gets hit by hand or a rifle’s butt and kicked until he arrives at the branch. When he gets off the car, going to the interrogation division, he gets beaten and receives insults from the lowest to the highest employee. The person is forced to take off everything [clothes] and gets beaten until reaching the cell. By doing this, they [employees at the branch] have not even started yet. That was only their “Hello”.

Kroker asked how the detainees were frisked and if that was done while being naked. P10 said usually, the detainee is ordered to take off his clothes. If he has a belt, it would be taken away. Rings and personal belongings were stolen (and the shoes). This was the practice before the revolution (during the revolution, it was worse). The shoelaces are also taken away. The detainee gets dressed after the body inspection. Any sharp objects, money or gold are confiscated. The detainee is then put in the cell by different means, depending on the case.

Kroker asked if body openings were searched for hidden objects. P10 said it would depend on the case of the detainee. P10 gave an example: If someone was detained because of drugs or if someone is known to be aggressive and is suspected of hiding sharp objects like a razor blade in his anus, then it is possible [that body openings are searched]. At his [P10’s] duty station [عنا] they used to “play” with the anus using a broomstick. This method was used later during the revolution to humiliate detainees without inspection.

Kroker recalled P10 saying that there are methods which he is ashamed to mention, like tying up the penises of two detainees and force them to drink water. Kroker then asked whether P10 knows other methods. Obst objected saying that his client did not say “two penises” and the translation was wrong.

Kroker asked whether there were other violent abuses of the detainee’s genitals. Böcker intervened, saying that this question has already been asked. Kroker said he wants to know if there were different cases in that regard. P10 said he can give an example of his relative who was detained in Branch 285, without mentioning names [P10 sighed]. They used the same previous method that P10 already mentioned and cut a piece of his [relative’s] penis using pliers.

Schulz mentioned a report about infiltrated members of the intelligence services in 251 and asked whether they were in the cells to watch detainees. P10 affirmed.

Schulz asked P10 to provide more detail. P10 said that when it was concerning a political figure, a big opposition figure, or a person related to external organizations for example, then, officers and non-commissioned officers could enter the cell [disguised] to build a relationship with these people in order to get information.

Schulz asked whether some detainees were turned over [changed sides] by that. P10 said this was certainly the case.

Böcker asked whether P10 made assumptions or knows this for a fact. P10 said he wants to answer this question against his counsel’s advice, in order to show the filth of the intelligence services: When the regime wants to recruit a person, especially when he has a clean background [sheet] e.g. a political oppositionist, they would make up random accusations to find an opportunity to get him in prison. There, they pressure him with obscene photos, accusations of foreign affiliations, or threaten him with his family [threaten to injure/kill the family]. They could inveigle a detainee's children to prison (using drugs [frame them with drugs]) to pressure him. These are the methods of the regime, yet one finds many people who love to deal with the regime [work for them] in exchange for services or material goods.

Böcker wanted to clarify whether "turned over" and "certainly detainees too" means that detainees spied on each other. P10 said that he already explained how [detainees were spied on]. It did not happen to all detainees, but rather to specific people, in whom they [the regime] are interested.

Böcker then asked what was used to pressure people. P10 said they pressure a detainee with something like a printed paper which is called a "link-up letter (a contract) (كتاب ارتباط عقد) which is a declaration made by this person (as a threat) that he is linked to them [the Syrian government]. The person gets a number and becomes an agent مندوب to that apparatus, with a personal photo, signature, monthly salary and rewards. This paper was like a sword on the person's neck and they would expose him [if he does not abide].

Böcker asked if they [people being blackmailed] were detainees. P10 said some of them were detainees, others were put under pressure with "temporary accusations" (like affiliation with a specific political or terrorist organization).

Böcker asked if this happened to already detained people, meaning that they signed the paper in detention. P10 affirmed

Böcker asked how P10 knew. O: N/S.

Böcker referred to P10's previous statements on "strict interrogations" and people being tortured to death, because they belonged to armed groups, but that there were no armed groups at that time. Scharmer interrupted Böcker and said these were false allegations. Judge Kerber clarified that P10 saying that "there were no armed groups" referred to something that Al-Assad said.

Böcker asked for P10's opinion on this statement. P10 said regarding Raslan's statement about strict interrogation methods with armed groups, there were no armed groups (he said he means back then until 2012). However, until 2012 and according to the statements of "the criminal regime", there was none. Of course, Bashar Al-Assad said in interviews with foreign media, that "There is nothing happening in Syria, we only have evil striplings" صبيان صايعين. On the other hand, he was shelling people with tanks and throwing barrels on them.

Böcker said that he was asking about P10's knowledge, not what Al-Assad said. Böcker asked whether P10 was saying that there were no armed groups in 2012. P10 affirmed, there were no armed groups in 2012.

Böcker asked what was after that [2012]. P10 said "Dear Sir, people wanted to get rid of the regime, after how much they bear."

Böcker asked P10 to explain that statement. P10 said his answer would be sufficient.

Böcker asked what that means. Obst said that Böcker can ask questions if he has some.

Fratzki asked whether there were no armed groups in 2011. P10 said that in 2011, there were no armed groups.

***

[10 minute break in proceedings]

***

Judge Kerber told that a video hearing from Berlin was announced, which will be streamed in Koblenz. Böcker [information redacted] asked if the defence lawyers were not allowed to be present in Berlin, Judge Kerber affirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P10 whether it was possible that an officer who did not agree with his work, is able to quit or be transferred. P10 said when officers ignore or refuse to follow orders, they would be transferred to remote places.

Judge Wiedner said that he was referring to someone's own wish. P10 said that if one was an intelligence officer, he would definitely not dare to say so [ask to be transferred]. If one wants to submit a resignation due to health problems or in exchange for a civilian work, one could apply for that and his request could be accepted or not.

Defence Counsel Questioning

During the break, Fratzki did some research on armed groups and described an armed storming of a government-held checkpoint in June 2011 in Jisr Ash-Shoghour with 80 (or 120) deaths. Fratzki asked if that is correct and known. (On P10 request, Fratzki specified the location, saying it happened in Jisr Ash-Shoghour) P10 said that it is a smuggling area, where one could pass through Aleppo or Lattakia. They [the attacking group] could be shabiha [smugglers] from the regime (from Al-Assad family). That was an old term, not a recent one. The news might have mentioned that they were such smugglers [i.e. armed], so that the regime claims them to be terrorists and people attacked it [the place].

Fratzki asked P10 whether he knew armed groups in 2011. P10 said that he has no knowledge of the existence of armed groups in June 2011.

Fratzki summarised that P10 worked in the intelligence services for 21 years and yet does not know about 120 deaths. P10 replied that Fratzki understood him correctly and that there were no armed groups in June 2011.

Fratzki asked when the first battalion was formed. P10 said he does neither remember nor know.

Fratzki asked if it was on 9 September 2011. P10 said he does not remember.

Fratzki asked when the incident regarding cutting off someone's genitalia happened. P10 said he could give an estimate time. It happened to one of his relatives, a peaceful demonstrator with a wife and 2 daughters, in September 2011.

Böcker referred to Judge Wiedner's question and asked P10 to explain what he meant by "does not dare to submit his resignation". P10 said that if someone was in the official army, all changes are possible. One could submit a normal resignation, or request a transfer to a place close to his family.

Böcker said he was referring to an intelligence services officer, not an army officer. P10 referred to his previous statement, saying that one does not dare and he is sure that no one in the intelligence submits such a request, since all of them are beneficiaries and want to work [there], due the privileges that one gets working in the intelligence services, privileges that even a prime minister in Europe does not get.

Böcker asked P10 to explain what he means by “does not dare”. P10 said it means someone, in one way or another not disagreeing with the ruling system of the regime.

Böcker asked: then what? P10 asked Böcker to clarify. Böcker asked, in case someone no longer want to work with the regime, would it have negative consequences and put this person in danger. P10 said that one would be endangered. If one was either a military person in the army or in the intelligence, he would be interrogated and asked why he wants to quit and so on, except if one is “supported” [is backed by important people مدعوم], then positive reasons would be noted. P10 wanted to emphasize that due to the benefits, no intelligence officer requests to resign, unless one has the attributes of prophets.

Böcker said: “or he is suicidal”. P10 said during his long-standing service, he did not see a single official resignation, but only cases of transfers to army or police. Usually it happens if “his smell emerged” [طلعت ريحتو] and he couldn’t be covered, then he would be relegated.

Böcker asked whether it would be worse if a Sunni wanted to resign. P10 said that if one was a Sunni, they dispense with him [they don’t care about him]; it is a minus one. However, he would be subject to prosecution [يتعرض للمساءلة] and be accused of treason. P10 provided another example: any member of Al-Ba’ath party in Syria (a civilian, not an officer or a military person) who deactivates his membership, would be subject to prosecution [يتعرض للمساءلة] by the security and intelligence services and his documents [file] would be referred to them.

Böcker asked if that was a comparison between Al-Ba’ath party and the Sunni, who would be subject to prosecution [يتعرض للمساءلة]. P10 affirmed, saying that if one is a Sunni, they would prefer to dispense with him, but he would still be subject to prosecution [يتعرض للمساءلة].

Follow-up Questioning

Scharmer asked P10 whether he knows about cases where an officer was promoted although he was not loyal to the regime, e.g. a colonel. Böcker said that the question is not fair, but he will not complain. Scharmer replied that if he does not want to complain, he should let him move on with the question. Böcker complained and said that in “our” case [Raslan’s case], there was no promotion. Judge Kerber allowed the question. Scharmer recalled P5 [day 16, 2 July] saying that Raslan was promoted to the rank of a brigadier general and repeated his question. P10 apologised and mentioned that the question was incorrect: How would a colonel in the regime not be loyal? P10 said even he himself had to show loyalty when he was working, otherwise, P10’s “neck would fly” [would be killed].

Oehmichen asked whether it is realistic, when a colonel describes that he already disagreed with the regime in June 2011 and was therefore reported. (Oehmichen had to repeat the question on P10’s request) Oehmichen explained: Given the case someone was not loyal to the regime, releasing detainees, being from Al-Houla is it realistic to say that there would be complaints to the head of the branch (Younes) about the release of detainees. P10 said if he [the person releasing detainees] was suicidal and valiant, he would release them. P10 is convinced that Younes would refer him [person releasing detainees] to Branch 285, because he would be suspended from work immediately due to rejecting orders. P10 said to be precise, after he [the person] would be suspended, humiliated and accused, he could be referred to interrogation and could be let off unpunished [forgiven], but they would ask something in return for that (more work). There were two options, we could consider the 2nd one [give the person the benefit of a doubt], although it would be dangerous [to release detainees/ignore orders].

Klinge quoted Raslan saying that in June 2011 he fell from favor because he was not on the regime’s line, he was deprived of his responsibilities, but stayed in the same position. Klinge asked whether this would be possible. P10 said, assuming they forgave him for his behaviour and left him as a head of the interrogation division, they would probably assign him as an officer subordinate to the head of the branch, that is to say a minion [position with no importance].<sup>20</sup> لا شغلة ولا عملة. Because how would the head of the interrogation division have statements of the interrogation passing him, without signing them.

Scharmer asked if it was officially known that Raslan was promoted to a brigadier general at the end. P10 denied.

Böcker asked how P10 would have known if that was the case or not. O: N/S.

Witness P10 was dismissed.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:40 a.m.

The next trial will be on 19 August 2020 at 09:30 a.m.

---

<sup>20</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P10 did not mention Raslan's name while giving this example.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 9

Hearing dates of August 19 and 20, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 24

- P11, a 35-year old man, testified about his detention at Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh branches. Over 16 days, P11 was beaten repeatedly on his back, legs and feet. His testimony describes overcrowded conditions where detainees did not receive medical treatment and suffered from injuries from beating and contagious viruses. He shared that his interrogator had a calm voice that he believes he could recognize today. P11 was not told of his criminal charge, “looking for demonstrations,” until he appeared before a court. He was released after the brief court hearing.

Trial Day 25

- P12, a 41-year-old software engineer, testified about his detention in Division 40, Branch 251, and Branch 285. His testimony reveals details about the crowded conditions in the cell and the beatings and intimidation interrogators would use to extract information. He was once questioned by a high-ranking interrogator and said he would be able to identify the person’s voice. P12 provided sketches of his cell and the layout of Branch 251, including the corridor where detainees were beaten and left to kneel for several hours. P12 also documented security forces using live ammunition on demonstrators, however, that evidence was destroyed to protect him after he was arrested. P12 was active in early demonstrations and publicly advocated for human rights through blog posts.

Trial Day 24 – August 19, 2020

There were about 10 spectators and 11 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am. Federal Public Prosecutor Christian Ritscher from Karlsruhe appeared for Prosecutor Jasper Klinge.

The proceedings began with a discussion of an interlocutory order from the federal court regarding trial monitors’ request for access to Arabic language translation. The High State Court had denied a motion for access to Arabic translation as well as a motion for reconsideration. The issue was appealed to the German Constitutional Court along with a request for preliminary measures. The Constitutional Court granted preliminary measures stating that Arabic translation should be provided to Syrian accredited media.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

The decree arrived the evening before the trial day and Chief Judge Dr. Kerber noted it that morning. Judge Kerber asked if there were accredited Syrian journalists among the spectators who needed headphones for translation. The trial monitor raised his hand [even though he is not accredited, because he wanted to say that he was one of the applicants]. The court guard came with headphones and asked for media accreditation. Mrs. Michelle Trimborn from ECCHR informed the guard of the situation, who in turn conveyed the information to Judge Kerber at the judges' panel. Judge Kerber came to the spectator's area and Mrs. Trimborn explained the situation. Judge Kerber refused and said that one must be accredited to receive the headphones. Mrs. Luna Watfa, a non-accredited Syrian journalist, talked with Judge Kerber and asked for headphones, but Judge Kerber refused again for the same reason. Judge Kerber returned to the panel and said that she does not even want to start simultaneous interpretation, but it was the decision of the federal court. She said that the [trial monitor] was not accredited and therefore, would not be provided with a translation device. She said that the interlocutory order does not refer to non-accredited spectators.

The full interlocutory order was read out. The petition was filed by SJAC's trial monitor and Mr. Mansour Al-Omari.<sup>2</sup>

Testimony of P11

The witness decided to testify in German and was counselled by Patrick Kroker. The witness is not related to the accused.

The witness was a 35-year-old apprenticed musician and medic.

Judge Kerber asked P11 to talk about his detention. P11 said that, on September 30, 2011, he was in Duma with two friends looking for demonstrations. There were none, however, because the army was in the streets. After that, P11 and his friends were seen by uniformed army, who came and blindfolded them and flipped their t-shirts over their heads [to cover their faces]. Therefore, P11's experience was more acoustic/auditory rather than visual. They were beaten on the streets until the first bus arrived, in which they were taken to another small bus that took them to Al-Khatib, where he stayed for five days. He was interrogated three times and was beaten. Food was scarce and there were human rights crimes. He was brought to the central administration in Kafar Souseh, كفر سوسة, where he stayed until October 16, 2011. He was brought to court and was released afterwards.

---

<sup>2</sup> The problem, and reason for this complaint, is that oral proceedings may neither be streamed live nor recorded before German criminal courts (section 169 subsection one sentence two of the Gerichtsverfassungsgesetz, or GVG). Therefore, it is impossible for people in Syria to watch the trial. They rely on accessing trial information in Arabic-language media. However, media representatives are only spectators and not parties to the proceedings. The translations of the court-appointed interpreter are transmitted via headphones directly to the parties in the proceedings. Under "normal" conditions representatives of the Arabic-speaking media could call in "whispering interpreters" (normally at their own expense). Due to the pandemic, and therefore necessary distance regulations, this is currently not possible in the courtroom. The media representatives therefore requested access to the judicial translation system. The presiding judge in Koblenz dismissed the application on the ground that such access requires additional technical equipment that must be maintained and, in particular, disinfected. Furthermore, it would not be possible to ensure that no unauthorized recordings are made. The only thing that, according to the judge, is possible is that a fluent German speaker records the testimonies. The media representatives could use these protocols and have it translated at their own expense. A constitutional complaint against this was filed. No final decision has been made. The issued order is merely a provisional measure preventing the constitutional complaint from becoming worthless, as the constitution-conform condition can no longer be reproduced if the trial has ended. It now obliges the presiding judge to "make appropriate arrangements within the scope of her authority to conduct the proceedings to enable accredited media representatives with special reference to the Syrian conflict to monitor the German-language proceedings with the help of their own arrangements or by making use (for a fee) of the court's translation system provided or by other means in the Arabic language."

Judge Kerber asked how P11 knew that it was Al-Khatib. P11 said that he heard that information from other detainees in the cell. The second time he heard it was when he arrived at Kafar Souseh. He heard a military [person] saying "Here comes the group of Al-Khatib."

Judge Kerber asked if he recognized the accused from back then in Syria. P11 said no.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked P11 to speak about his civic involvement and to give an overview about his career. P11 said that he was relatively active in the revolution since March 2011. P11 studied medicine from 2002 – 2008 and studied music from 2006 – 2011. He worked as a volunteer army doctor in Al-Yarmouk camp, Palestine hospital.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 graduated. P11 said no. He did not do his last exam, because he did not want to join the army [compulsory military service].

Judge Wiedner asked P11 if he would be more comfortable testifying in Arabic. P11 said that he would try in German and if he needs help, he will ask the translator.

Judge Wiedner noted from P11's testimony during police questioning that he did not complete his study on purpose, because he did not want to serve in the army. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that P11 did not serve in the army. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 about his experience in the demonstrations. P11 said he participated in his first street demonstration, a sit-in, in Duma on March 25. He called his friend [name redacted], who is a doctor, an ex-communist and an ex-detainee. After that, he participated in other demonstrations in Al-Midan, ركن الدين Rukn Ed-Deen and Hama حماة at the end of June (maybe July), one week before Ramadan in 2011. He tried to help using his medical knowledge.

Judge Wiedner asked how the regime dealt with the demonstrations at the beginning. P11 said that the police reacted harshly against the demonstrators. They were even shooting and some [people] fell.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was live ammunition. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked when the security forces began to use violence at demonstrations. P11 said that, unfortunately, there were no demonstrations without violence. He did not witness demonstrations where one could freely demonstrate against the regime.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was aimed shooting or shooting in the air. P11 said that in 2011 in Jdaydet Artouz جديدة عرطوز he treated a demonstrator who was shot in the upper leg and had removed the bullet at home.

Judge Wiedner asked if he saw demonstrators being detained. P11 confirmed. They were beaten with sticks and weapons, blindfolded, and their hands were cuffed to their front or usually behind their back.

Judge Wiedner asked if that was P11's own detention or others'. P11 confirmed he was talking about others. The demonstrators' heads were shoved down in the car.

Judge Wiedner asked which security forces were doing this. P11 said that he cannot classify them. Judge Wiedner asked if [the forces] were wearing uniforms. P11 said not always.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 knows what happened with the demonstrators. P11 said that he heard stories that they were tortured and some of them disappeared. P11 said that all of that was conjecture, because there are no official reports. The intelligence services do that, and no one can ask them or hold them accountable.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was detained 4 times. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 where he was detained. On August 8, 2011, P11 was detained by the military intelligence services, Palestine branch for 23 hours. Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was abused. P11 said only lightly. He was slightly beaten. P11 said that the second detention was in Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh from September 30, 2011 to October 16, 2011. The third detention was on September 13, 2013 for six days by Jabhat Al-Nusra in Palestine camp مخيم فلسطين. Judge Wiedner recalled that the police questioning transcript stated "September 12." P11 said that it could be, but it was for 6 days. He was kidnapped from the street, rather than detained. The fourth detention was from January 1, 2014 to February 25, 2014 by the military intelligence services, Palestine branch. Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was abused. P11 said slightly, but that was a special story.

Judge Wiedner asked when P11 left Syria. P11 replied that it was March 16, 2014.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 to further explain the security forces who detained him. P11 said that he saw people in uniforms with Kalashnikovs. At the street crossing, he saw people in "half-uniforms" (same colour but without insignias) and wearing sport shoes, whereas, armed forces wear boots. Syrians know that these people are not from the army, but rather Shabiha or intelligence services.

Judge Wiedner asked if they were paramilitary. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if they were part of a specific intelligence services. P11 said that Damascus and its suburbs were divided into districts, for which an intelligence apparatus was responsible. Duma (where P11 was) and Az-Zabadani الزبداني were under the responsibility of Al-Khatib, state security. P11 added that it was a common knowledge.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was abused on his way to Al-Khatib. P11 said that the transport was divided into four phases: Phase 1, on the street, in front of the bus; Phase 2, in the bus; Phase 3, in between the two bus rides; and Phase 4, in the second bus. P11 said that he was abused in all four phases, especially on the street. Their shirts were flipped over their heads, while they were insulted and kicked. P11 saw two people getting beaten before their heads were covered with their t-shirts. Seeing this, P11 did that by himself [flipping his t-shirt over his head]. When they saw him do that, they said "that son of a who** knows already about the situation." P11 felt so much pain, because he was beaten in the chest, which was already broken.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 if his rib was fractured. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were consequences of his injury. P11 said that he was not able to cough during his detention. He was a smoker, so the mucus collected in his lungs and lead to pneumonitis. The doctors in prison would ask who had a problem, then say that they were not there to relieve pain. After his release, P11 sought treatment.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was treated during his detention. P11 said that he was not treated nor was he examined. In the bus, the seats were two next to each other. P11 remembers that someone stepped over him in the bus. P11 was on a seat with his head down. Next to him was his friend. Their hair was set on fire with a lighter (it sounded like that). The armed people started laughing and saying, "They are burning." Another person said that he would put out the flame. P11 believes that the latter urinated on them. P11 was beaten on his back with a metal object or a military helmet.

Judge Wiedner asked if that was in the first or second bus. P11 said that he was on the first one.

Judge Wiedner noted that in the police questioning, P11 said that it was in the second bus. P11 said maybe it was. He apologized saying it was nine years ago.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 to describe the second bus. P11 said that it was a 24-passenger bus, smaller and more modern. It was common knowledge that these busses belonged to the state (mainly to the intelligence services). P11 could differentiate it from the sound of its engine.

Judge Wiedner recalled that in the police questioning, P11 said that he was certain that the second bus did not belong to the army but rather to the intelligence services. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened next. P11 said that they entered a lit hall, and it was evening.

Judge Wiedner asked if they got off in an inner yard. P11 said that he does not know and lost track of time because he was blindfolded. They were then brought to the hall.

Judge Wiedner asked if they were brought directly to the hall in the building. P11 said that there were officers and tables where they had to put their belongings.

Judge Wiedner asked if they were not abused immediately at their arrival. P11 said yes [they were not].

Judge Wiedner asked whether they remained on the same floor or went downstairs. P11 said he had to put everything that was in his pockets on the first table and his belt and shoelaces on the second one. At the third table, he had to take off his pants and underwear and squat/crouch down.

Judge Wiedner asked if that was to search body orifices. P11 said yes. They wanted to search if someone was hiding something. They only inspected and he was not touched.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 if he stayed naked. P11 said no. He was permitted to put his clothes back on as well as his shoes minus the laces.

Judge Wiedner requested P11 to describe what happened next. P11 said that he was taken to a cell with others, but his friends went to another one. P11 does not remember how many detainees were in the cell, because it varied every day. It was approximately 9 – 10. P11 clearly remembers that the floor had tiles with some blankets on it. Other detainees helped him lie down. P11 felt as if there was a stone under the blanket. Other detainees helped him look for it but found nothing. P11 lay down again and still felt the stone. His fellow detainees examined his back and told him that there was a swelling from the beating.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 had open wounds. P11 said that he does not know. Most of the beatings were on the back. Judge Wiedner noted that in P11's police questioning he said that he was worn out, had a lot of pain, and had open wounds on his back and head. P11 said that he did not know.

Judge Wiedner asked if other detainees had injuries. P11 said that he does not remember if it was in that cell or in a different one, but there was someone with injuries in Kafar Souseh.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 if he heard noises or screams from the outside. P11 said that there was something like a window with small holes in it through which some light used to get inside. P11 remembered that there was a cat.

Judge Wiedner asked if the window was at the top of the cell and the cell was in the basement. P11 said that he does not remember if he went downstairs to a basement. P11 saw a [building] corner through the window. Judge Wiedner asked again if the window was at the top. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 saw the cat. P11 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked whether P11 saw the whole cat or only its legs. P11 said that he does not remember, but the window was above the ground level.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 heard noise or screams. P11 said no, he does not remember hearing that in that cell.

Judge Wiedner asked if he heard that later in Al-Khatib. P11 said that he does not remember.

Judge Wiedner asked about the general and sanitary conditions and if water was available. P11 said that he remembers that food was scarce. One time, dinner was a potato and a quarter loaf of bread. Another time, it was 7 – 8 olives. P11 said that during his time in Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh, he lost 17 kg of weight. P11 said that he does not remember the toilet and water in Al-Khatib, however, in Kafar Souseh, there was water and a toilet in the cell.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was always in the same cell. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 about his interrogation. P11 said that “they” were interrogated three times in five days. P11 said that he was saying “they” [we], because he was with two of his friends. P11 did not see the other two in the first two interrogations. All three of them went to Kafar Souseh.

Judge Wiedner asked where P11 was interrogated and if there was a staircase. P11 said that he does not remember if there was one [staircase]. It was on the same floor. The prison guard was shouting and ordered them to face the wall. He called for their names and then blindfolded them. The prison guard grabbed P11 by his arm and took him to the interrogation room. P11 does not remember the three interrogations. P11 had to wait in a hallway facing the wall. The prison guard knocked on the door and said “Sidi [Sir], the prisoner is here”.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 witnessed something while waiting in front of the room. P11 said that he was not allowed to ask questions. He was told that in the cell one must lie down on his abdomen and raise his feet up to receive the blows.

Judge Wiedner recalled that in P11’s testimony to police he said that while he was waiting and before his turn, another person was being interrogated in the room and P11 heard screams and the sounds of beating. P11 said that he remembers that it was at the third interrogation and does not remember that it was at that time [first interrogation].

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that P11 heard it once. P11 confirmed. It happened in one of the three interrogations, but he was not 100% sure that it was the third one.

Judge Wiedner requested P11 to describe how the first interrogation was conducted. P11 said that he was brought into the room and there was an officer (P11 was not sure because he was blindfolded. He was describing what happened from what he perceived acoustically) with a calm voice who told him to lay on his abdomen, raise his feet up, and answer questions. When that person did not like the answer, he called another person Abo Ghadab أبو غضب or Abo Azab أبو عذاب. P11 does not remember if there were more people in the room. The executioner did not talk and was only beating. The interrogator asked P11 if he would talk or if Abo Ghadab should keep beating. P11 was beaten. P11 said ok and he would talk, so the beating stopped. Then he was beaten again, he talked, then it stopped, and so on. P11 used to give them burnt names, which were already known.

Judge Wiedner asked what P11 meant by burnt names. P11 said names for people like [name redacted], whom P11 knew was already detained, so that the beating stopped. The interrogator knew [name redacted]. He tried to find restatements to harm people the least possible. P11 does not remember how many times that cycle was repeated, or how long it lasted.

Judge Wiedner asked if the beating was on the soles of the feet. P11 said that yes and on the heel, on the leg, and on the same place [repeatedly]. It was on purpose and they knew they were good at what they were doing.

Judge Wiedner asked what the name of that method is. P11 said Falaqa فَلَاقَة.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were consequences. P11 said that he was not able to walk because of his swollen feet, and he had a lot of pain.

Judge Wiedner asked about the tools. P11 said that he remembers that it was neither wooden nor metal. Perhaps it was plastic, but P11 was not 100% sure. The detainees used to talk among each other about the quadruple/tetra/fourfold cable, water pipe, tank belt (which he does not exactly know) and in the branch there was “Al-Akhdar Al-Ibraheemi الأخضر الإبراهيمي” the green water pipe.

Judge Wiedner asked if others talked about what happened with them. P11 said yes, it was systematic and did not happen only with him.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were orders for beatings. P11 said that the interrogator ordered the prison guard, saying, “Beat him.” Judge Wiedner asked if P11 heard that. P11 said yes, the orders were given with a calm tone. It was not an angry tone.

***10-minute break***

Judge Wiedner repeated the question of if there were orders for beating. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were also beatings without orders. P11 said that he does not remember.

Judge Wiedner noted that in the police questioning in 2019, P11 said that during the first interrogation, there were not always direct verbal orders, yet there were beatings. P11 said yes, maybe.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 about the accusations against him. P11 said that he first heard it in court: “Looking for demonstrations,” which was not a crime according to the criminal law. P11 perceived that torture<sup>3</sup> was not for the purpose of getting information, but rather as a means of punishment. They tried to make it a systematic process in order to intimidate the people from the regime to not sympathize with the opposition.

---

<sup>3</sup> See Text box below

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was told about his accusation during the interrogation. P11 said that he does not remember. He was not asked real questions.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 about the special subject in the third interrogation regarding his two friends. P11 said that he was able to see from underneath the blindfold. P11 saw only bare feet, they could be [name redacted]. P11 could hear [name redacted] voice while he was being beaten. He [name redacted, P11's friend] got outside and P11 was brought inside. It was a psychological horror. They were not allowed to talk to each other.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 saw injuries on other detainees. P11 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 saw corpses. P11 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked how they were transported. P11 said that a prison guard came to the cell and called a few names. P11 thought that it was for an interrogation, but the guard told him to bring his shoes with him. They were not blindfolded and all three [P11 and his two friends] met at the corridor. They were maybe 15 – 20 in total. Their hands were tied behind their backs and their heads were between their knees. Afterwards, they were taken to Kafar Souseh. There, a military person said, "This is the group of Al-Khatib."

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 then concluded that it was Al-Khatib and if he talked with others about it. P11 said yes, that was an assumption. No one was 100% sure that they were in Al-Khatib. They found out when they arrived at Kafar Souseh and heard that statement.

Judge Wiedner asked how P11 knew that it was Kafar Souseh. P11 said that when they were registered it was written on the paper: "General Intelligence Directorate – Kafar Souseh."

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 knows the status of both branches. P11 said that Al-Khatib belongs to the state security. Kafar Souseh is central and higher in hierarchy.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was beaten in Kafar Souseh. P11 said that he does not remember if he was beaten during the interrogation, but the problem was in the cell. P11 was taken to an office. He was able to see the floor and the tiles were better, which is why he assumed that it could be an office. P11 lay down on his abdomen immediately and raised his feet up. The people in the room laughed and said, "No, no, sit on the floor." The detention was difficult because the cell measured about 3.5m x 4m with 89 detainees. At the door, it was written 103 or 107. The method of sleeping was "Tasyeef" تسيف ["swording"] - sleeping on the shoulder. They were like sardines - their backs to the wall and one's head to another's feet. There was not enough space.

Judge Kerber asked for clarification on the term P11 mentioned [Tasyeef]. P11 said "Tasyeef". People say, "Sleep on your Sayf," meaning on the shoulder. Judge Wiedner clarified that there was not enough space for everyone. P11 confirmed. People used to stand several nights and wait for others to wake up. The lights were on the whole time.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 if his family knew where he was. P11 said no. No one knew where they were and there were no attorneys.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 was apprehensive. P11 said yes. He did not know if he would die or what would happen to him in the future. There were no legal procedures or laws, nor rights for the detainees. There was a prisoner in Kafar Souseh who had an open wound in his leg with a fracture and they were sitting next to him the whole time. He was moaning the whole time from pain and apologized to others for the sounds.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 still suffers from that experience. P11 confirmed. It was not a pleasant one.

Judge Wiedner asked if P11 has physical consequences. P11 said no. He only had a broken rib. P11 said that because of the COVID-19 situation, he remembered something about Kafar Souseh. They had blindfolds with “ش N” on them (it is like شمالي northern) and P11’s left eye started to get itchy. The same happened with other detainees and their left eyes were red and itching. P11 asked for a doctor and said that there was an infection. When one came, P11 showed him his eye and got very close to the doctor on purpose. The doctor was shocked and quickly backed up. P11 looked at the doctor and knew that it was bad. P11 was released after 17 days and his friends after 34 days. His friends told him that a quarantine was imposed, because the infection spread through all cells. P11 said that an outbreak of viruses and diseases would happen in such cells. P11 wondered about the current situation with COVID-19, which could be a death sentence.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 if that means that it is still the same now. P11 said yes, that it seems so.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 to describe his release. P11 said that the prison guard came to the cell, called P11’s name, and told him to bring his shoes with him. P11 was then transferred by bus to the justice palace. P11 did not know about anything. He was in the court jail waiting, when attorney [name redacted] came. In the courtroom, the [female] judge smiled and asked P11 if he was looking for demonstrations. P11 looked at Attorney [name redacted], who told P11 to say “No.” P11 said “No.” After that, P11 was simply released without a guilty verdict.

Judge Wiedner asked P11 to look to the right and see if he could recognize the accused. P11 said no, but he was glad that the accused was getting a fair trial in a fair court, not like in Syria. He said that he is hoping for a fair decision and thanked the court.

The Definition of "Torture" in German Law:

There is no written uniform definition in German law of what torture is. Nevertheless, the regulations in Germany cover the requirements of the United Nations Convention Against Torture (UNCAT).

It would probably be difficult to create a special specific offence of torture in German law. The German law system mainly uses general clauses instead of specific provisions for individual cases. In view of the vastness and indeterminacy of some of the terms contained in Article 1 of the UN Convention against Torture (UNCAT), it seems hardly possible to formulate an offence based on the wording of that Article that simultaneously satisfies the requirements of certainty (so called Bestimmtheitsgrundsatz) to be placed on a criminal norm in Germany. Moreover, such a special regulation would suggest reversal conclusions and thus favors the emergence of regulatory gaps. Ultimately, the decisive factor is whether the general criminal provisions are already capable of covering torture.

In regular German criminal law acts of torture are covered by the offences of bodily injury (sections 223, 224, 226 of the Strafgesetzbuch, so called StGB), and in particular bodily injury in office/as an official (section 340 StGB). Even though the torture does not necessarily need to have the goal of obtaining information, blackmailing or extortion of testimony (section 343 StGB) is also conceivable. Only the latter provision includes psychological maltreatment.

In the Völkerstrafgesetzbuch (Code of Crimes against International Law, VStGB) acts of torture are mentioned in section 7 para 1 No. 5 as a Crime against Humanity and in section 8 para 1 No. 3 as a War Crime. However, neither of these two provisions offers a legal definition. In section 7 the torture is explained in more detail but not conclusively. Psychological maltreatment, for example, largely matches the UNCAT, some other things are missing. The prevailing view in the literature is that torture cannot be conclusively defined, but will be "recognized" when it has occurred. This also makes it possible to capture new methods of torture later on.

When it comes to procedural rules, the Code of Criminal Procedure (StPO), in section 136a prohibits the use of evidence where information has been obtained by the authorities through so called prohibited interrogation methods. Although some torture methods such as abuse, sleep-deprivation, cruelty or the forced use of drugs are mentioned here, they are not explicitly named as torture.

Evidently, apart from 2001 (before the VStGB came into force), there was no Federal Supreme Court decision or ruling in which torture was once defined in more detail by the judges. However, this ruling explicitly refers to the UNCAT (see: Federal Supreme Court, 21.02.2001 - 3 StR 372/00 para 24). Since this decision was made before the VStGB came into force it has no binding effect for the ongoing proceedings. Therefore, it will be quite interesting to see how the OLG Koblenz will later define torture in its judgment when it has to rule on the alleged crimes.

Questioning by Prosecutor Ritscher

Prosecutor Ritscher asked if there were children and female detainees in the branch. P11 said that in his cell there were only men. P11 did not see any children or women.

Prosecutor Ritscher asked if there was sexual abuse. P11 said that he did not experience it himself and does not know about others, because they did not talk about it.

Prosecutor Ritscher recalled that P11 said that he was beaten with Falaqa and asked if there were other methods. P11 said that he heard about Shabh, شبح where one is hung from his hands or ankle for several hours or days. P11 also heard about electric shocks, but he did not see either [methods].

Questioning by Defense Counsel Michael Böcker and Plaintiff Counsel

Böcker asked if P11 had read the transcript of his police questioning on August 22, 2019. P11 said that he had only read it that day [of the questioning] and signed it.

Böcker asked if P11 was told about the content of it. P11 said that he had not been.

Kroker asked how big the cell was in Al-Khatib. P11 said that it was approximately 2x3m and they were able to lie down.

Kroker asked how many detainees there were. P11 said about 9 – 10.

Kroker asked what P11 did with his hands when he was lying down in the interrogation with his feet raised. P11 said that he did not mention that he was a musician. He used to put his hands under his chest. Hands and fingers are important to the musician. If they were damaged, it would mean the end of the music career.

Kroker recalled that P11 said that he could remember the voice of the interrogator and described it as calm. P11 said that all three interrogations were conducted by the same person and he could recognize his [the interrogator's] voice.

Kroker asked if P11 could recognize it nowadays. P11 said yes.

Kroker asked if Raslan was willing to give a voice sample. Böcker shook his head and Kroker said that they could see Böcker shaking his head [refusing the request].

Plaintiff Counsel Sebastian Scharmer pointed out that being a musician means that P11 has a good ear for sounds and [musical] instruments. He asked P11 if voice recognition counts as well. P11 confirmed that he is able to recognize voices.

The witness was dismissed.

***

Böcker requested to read out a petition that he and his colleague, Defense Counsel Fratzki, wrote, but had not yet signed – an application on repeating the taking of evidence from the beginning. Accredited media representatives with special relations to the trial/ Syrian conflict would be allowed to get Arabic interpretation starting today [due to the preliminary measures ordered by the German Constitutional Court]. This was not available trial days one to 23. Only physical attendance was possible, so an understanding was withheld.

Prosecutor Ritscher said that a statement on that is reserved.

Scharmer stated that the trial takes place in public, but it is not for the public, so proceedings did not have to be repeated.

Al-Gharib's Defense Counsel Schuster said that there would be many difficult legal issues, but he agreed with Raslan's defence.

Scharmer said that tomorrow he might give an explanation on §257 (2) StPO.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:35 p.m. The next trial will be August 20, 2020 at 09:30 a.m.

Trial Day 25 – August 20, 2020

There were about 12 spectators and 8 individuals from the media present. The proceedings began at 9:30 am.

Judge Kerber asked if there were accredited journalists among the spectators who needed Arabic translation. There were none. [Starting this day, this will be a routine question].

Mr. Kägebein appeared for Al-Gharib's Defense Counsel Hannes Linke. Mr. Ritscher and Mr. Polz represented the prosecution. P12 was counselled by Mr. Sebastian Scharmer and invited by Plaintiff Counsel Kroker.

P12's Testimony<sup>4</sup>

The witness was a 41-year-old software engineer who founded a small IT company in Germany and is unrelated to the accused. He was summoned as a witness.

Judge Kerber asked P12 to speak about his career in Syria and his experience with the regime. P12 said that he was born and grew up in Aleppo. He moved to Damascus to study at the university where he studied program/software engineering. P12 graduated in 2004 and worked in his speciality field. He started some political activities in university. In 2007, he founded a personal blog to write about politics. He said that it was not a platform [as it was translated], but rather a "blog". He used a pen name to write about Assad's regime. In 2008, he began other social activities. He was active in writing about the rights of women, children, and people with disabilities, using his real name. Until 2011, he was writing about politics and other subjects using a pen name. In 2010, BBC Media Action Corporation, which specializes in media development, contacted him. They had a program for journalists and bloggers in Syria. From 2010 to mid-2011, he worked as a technician and a trainer in that program.

Judge Kerber asked about his detention experience. P12 said that there were several activities in 2011. On October 24, 2011, he was detained at a restaurant behind the Syrian Parliament along with a [female] journalist who was a student in his program. They were detained in Division 40, which belongs to/is under the administration of Branch 251. He stayed in Division 40 for several hours and was transferred to Branch 251 the same night. The interrogation originally focused on his activity with BBC and the questions branched out (in the interrogation). After 10 – 15 days, he was transferred to Branch 285, where he stayed 10 – 15 days. The total duration was 25 days, but P12 does not know which branch he stayed at for 10 days and which branch he stayed at for 15. Later, he was transferred to the civilian court and Adra Prison. سجن عدرا He stayed there for about 15 days and then was released by the judge.

Judge Kerber asked how P12 knew which branch he was at. P12 asked if Judge Kerber meant when he was detained at Division 40. Judge Kerber clarified at every place: Division 40, Branches 251 and 285. P12 said that at the beginning, it was Division 40. P12 had an office close to Division 40, approximately 50m away. When he was detained, he was not blindfolded, so he knew where he was. When he was transported, he was blindfolded. He concentrated on the road as the car was moving and the distance was not that far. He was aware of his location when he arrived at Branch 251, as it is well-known in Damascus.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked how P12 was brought to Division 40 and if Branch 251 was in a different location. P12 said that he was sitting in "Aroma Café" restaurant with a [female] journalist. He received a call on his phone from an anonymous number. When he answered, they immediately hung up. After a few minutes, two people came to the table and asked him if he was [name redacted] and P12 said yes. They told P12 to come along without a movement [making a fuss] and they made sure that he brought his laptop with him.

---

<sup>4</sup> P11 and P12 are joint plaintiffs.

Judge Wiedner asked if they were wearing uniforms. P12 said that they were plain-clothed, but it was known that security forces wore plain-clothes. After that, they [the detainees and the security forces] went downstairs (they were on the 2nd floor initially). [Downstairs] There were six to seven members of the security forces making it a total of around ten [members of the security forces]. One of them asked P12 for his car keys, without asking about the car's location. P12 considered it probable [assumed] that he was surveyed/monitored/watched and that it was an ambush. Two to three cars were waiting for P12 outside. They took P12 and the journalist [with the car]. The person in the front [seat] looked like an officer. He greeted P12 sardonically/cynically and told him that he [P12] is their neighbour. The car moved about 500m to 1km, which was the distance between the restaurant and the division. Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was blindfolded. P12 said no. He entered Division 40 with his eyes open.

Judge Wiedner asked if the location of Division 40 was different from that of Branch 251. P12 confirmed, but said Division 40 was under administration/belongs to/ was subordinate to Branch 251.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 could describe Division 40. P12 said that it was possible to enter it from two locations: a higher location from a main street, where one could take the staircase down to reach the division, and from a side street. P12's office was on the side street [apparently, P12 was describing using gestures].

Judge Wiedner asked how P12 knew that it was Division 40. P12 said that the whole area knew that Division 40 was there. It is well-known and not something new.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to describe his experience there. Once inside, P12 said, he was put in an empty room with a chair. They immediately took his laptop. They went outside for a few moments. P12 had a flash memory with him, which he swallowed. There was a lot of information on it. A person stayed with him [in the room] for a time period. After around half an hour, he was summoned and taken to a person who could be an officer or an official who had P12's Facebook account open. He asked if P12 was an oppositionist and P12 said yes. He saw a [business] card of a Syrian oppositionist and asked P12 if he knew that person. P12 responded that he had gotten to know him in Egypt. The interrogation did not last long with only a few questions and then he told P12 to leave. P12 was taken back to the room for approximately an hour (his whole time in Division 40 was 2 – 3 hours).

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was abused there. P12 said no, never.

Judge Wiedner asked if he was blindfolded in Division 40. P12 said no.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12's testimony in the police questioning said that he was blindfolded when he was brought.

Scharmer said that Judge Wiedner's above question should be retracted, because there might be confusion otherwise. P12 said that he was not blindfolded in Division 40. The first time he was blindfolded was when he was transferred from Division 40 to Branch 251.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 knew through his activity who the head of Division 40 was. P12 said that it was unofficial knowledge from reports that Division 40's main task/duty was storming and detaining on behalf of [for the sake of/ i.e. for] Branch 251. At that time, the manager [head] of the division was Hafez Makhlof حافظ مخلوف.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to explain who that person is. P12 said that he is the brother of Rami Makhlof, رامي مخلوف, a major Syrian businessman, and the cousin [Bashar's mother and Makhlof's father are siblings. Note for the translator: [ابن خال بشار] of Bashar Al-Assad.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 about his arrival at Branch 251 and if he was beaten. P12 said that he was blindfolded in Division 40 and put in the back seat of a car with a [security] personnel to his right, another one to his left, the driver, and a person next to him [in the front seat]. At the same time, P12's hands were tied behind his back. On the way, they were mocking P12 saying that he was a media personnel/individual, but they did not beat him. P12's concentration was on the road, because he expected that he would be taken to Branch 251. He was concentrating to know where he was heading. It was not a far distance - a few kilometres away, so he knew that it was Branch 251. He used to go back and forth on that road daily.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was directly in the building. P12 said that he does not know how, but he found himself inside a building.

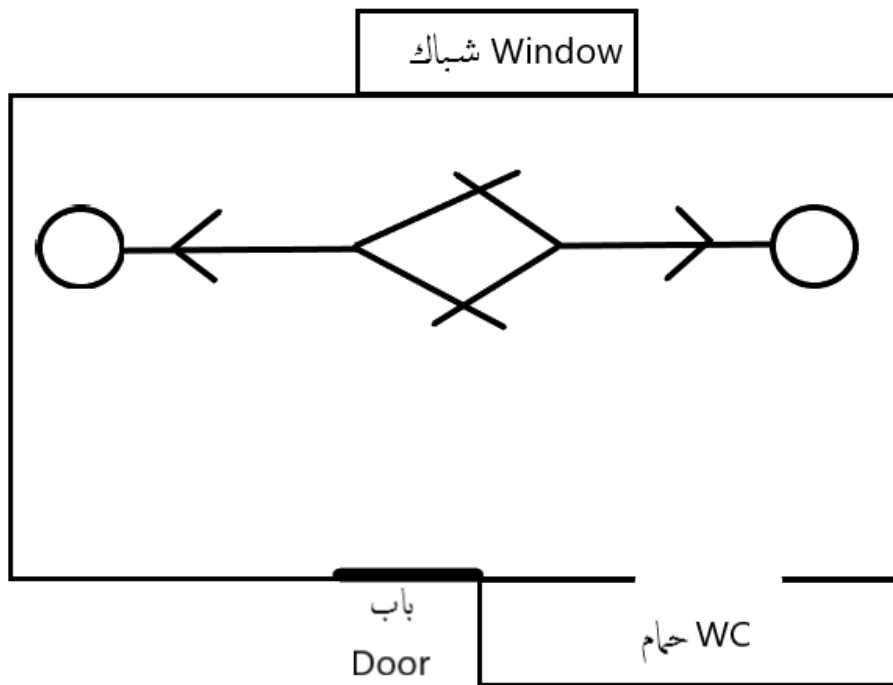

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 went upstairs or downstairs. P12 said that he was initially taken downstairs a few steps. There was a small room, where he had to take off all his clothes. They searched all P12's belongings and P12 did the "security movement" crouching down and then standing up. They took his personal belongings, even his belt and wallet. P12 put on his clothes and went downstairs a few steps to the cell.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to describe the cell, its size, and how many detainees were there. P12 said that it was 2.5 – 3 meters in length and 2 – 2.5 meters in width. When he entered the cell, there were 12 – 15 people. After a few days, there were 25 people.

Judge Wiedner asked about the air. P12 said that the cell was underground and completely sealed/closed. There was a window, which was closed with iron plates/plaques/sheets. There was a small toilet inside the cell. The [cell] door was made of iron and had a hatch through which the prison guards used to talk with them ["us" the detainees]. The door at the bottom had small holes that they called ventilation holes.

Judge Kerber said that the following was a sketch made by P12 and asked P12 to explain it.

A sketch was shown

P12 said that he drew the room [the cell] with the iron-plated window. He also drew how two people's legs interlocked, if two people wanted to sleep. That was the best position for sleeping, because with the increase in numbers [of detainees], they began to sleep in shifts. There was a small toilet which they also used for taking showers. The door was not accurately drawn, because it was reaching the wall.

Judge Wiedner asked what P12 meant with "sleeping in shifts." P12 said that when they exceeded 15 people, they were not able to sleep all at once. Therefore, they began to rotate/shift. They used to sleep two hours and then change/alternate/substitute [with others]. There was no way to lie down on their backs, but rather they had to lay on their sides.

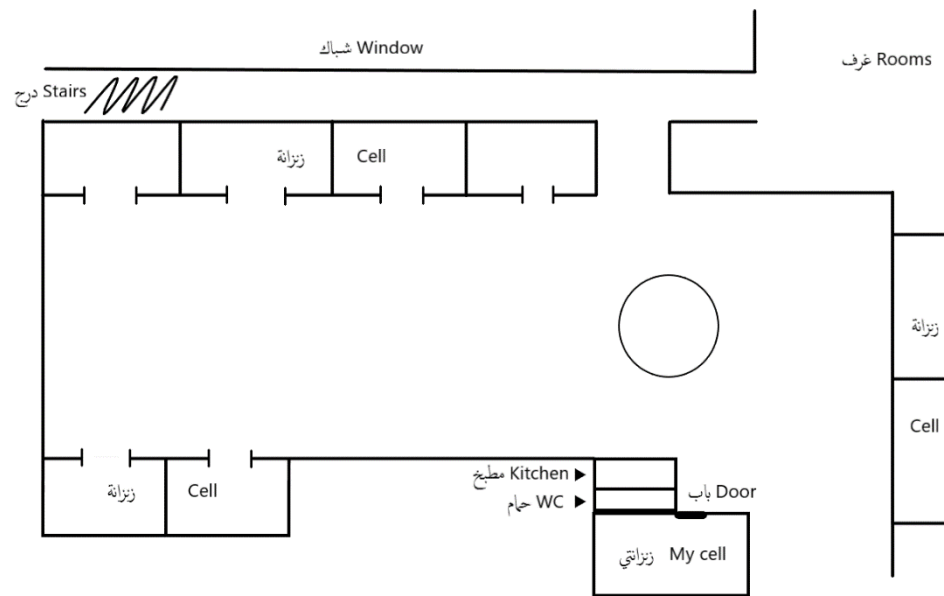

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a shower or if they used the water from the toilet. P12 said they used water from the toilet. There was a hose tied to a tap, but there was no soap.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 stayed in the same cell the whole time. P12 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 about food and water. P12 said that they drank water from the toilet. The food was scarce and there were two meals per day. The amount of food that was given for 15 people, barely sufficed for five people. It was mainly bulgur or boiled rice. They sometimes added another component/ingredient, such as red stock/sauce for example. Breakfast was a few olives and some jam, just a little amount for every person, and bad quality [Tahini] Halawa/Halva.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 could describe the cell and where the interrogation was conducted.

Another sketch was shown

P12 said that he saw torture in the corridor. The circle is where the interrogations were conducted and, sometimes, in the rooms behind the circle. On the bottom left, there are cells that he used to hear female voices coming from.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was daylight in P12's cell. P12 said no, never. They did not know if it was day or night. They used to estimate the time by the food, e.g. breakfast meant that it was morning.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to recall the question he was asked when he first entered the cell. P12 said that the moment he entered, they [the prisoners] asked him what the time was. They were accustomed to asking this to every newcomer. One of the worst experiences was to lose the perception of time. Asking the prison guards the time was one of the punishable taboos. P12 asked if the spectators could imagine 10 days or 11 months (in his second detention) without knowing what time it was. It was clear that it was systematically done. P12 visited [was detained in] several branches and it was always the same.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was light in the cell. P12 said no, never.

Judge Wiedner asked if the cell was always lit. P12 asked if Judge Wiedner meant artificial light. Judge Wiedner confirmed. P12 said that it was lit 24 hours a day.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to describe his interrogation. P12 said that the main method used to interrogate him was to summon him outside the cell. P12 had to take off his socks and face the wall towards the kitchen. He was then blindfolded and his hands were cuffed behind his back. P12 then walked into the circle, where the interrogation took place. P12 always had to kneel, as the interrogator sat in front of him and the prison guard behind him. Then, he would begin to interrogate P12. P12 was once tortured before he was interrogated. Every time the interrogator was not pleased with his answer, P12 was tortured.

Judge Wiedner asked how P12 was abused. P12 said that during the interrogation, he had to lie down on his abdomen and raise his feet up behind him. He was beaten on the feet and sometimes on his back.

Judge Wiedner asked what tools were used. P12 said that sometimes it was a very thick military belt and sometimes a braided quadruple/tetra/fourfold electric cable.

Judge Wiedner recalled from P12's testimony during police questioning that P12 received 20 blows to the feet. P12 said yes, in each time [P12 could have meant: each interrogation or each round. It was translated as the first option].

Judge Wiedner asked when P12 was beaten. P12 said that he was once beaten before the interrogation as a kind of intimidation. The remaining times he was beaten during the interrogations.

Judge Wiedner asked about the information P12 was asked for. P12 said that at the beginning of his interrogation, he was asked about his work at BBC Media Action. Their focus was on the nature of his work there. It was obvious that they knew the details already. P12 asked Judge Wiedner what the question was and laughed (P12 forgot the question).

Judge Wiedner asked about the abuse and the subject of the interrogation. P12 said the torture was correlated to his work, although he was not hiding any information. He knew that they knew everything already, but the interrogator was very stupid and did not know what "password" and "email" meant [P12 pronounced them in English i.e. [باسورد و إيميل] and thought that P12 was concealing information. The interrogator once swore at P12, because a mark/sign/symbol appeared on P12's name.<sup>5</sup>

***15-minute break***

Judge Wiedner repeated that P12's interrogations were not in a room, but rather in the corridor between the cells. P12 confirmed. Most of them were there, only a few were in rooms.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a desk. P12 said that they once took him to the office of the head of interrogators or some higher-ranking officer. The regular interrogator was next to P12.

Judge Wiedner asked if he [the interrogator] was standing or sitting. P12 said that the regular interrogator was standing next to P12, but the higher-ranking officer was sitting in front of P12.

Judge Wiedner asked if that was in the corridor. P12 said no, only in the room.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were two people, an interrogator and a person who beat detainees. P12 confirmed that that was typical.

Judge Wiedner asked whether there were orders or instructions to give beatings. P12 said that when the interrogator did not like the answer, he used to give an order to the prison guard who was behind: "This one [P12] does not want to talk. Deal with him. تصرف معه."

Judge Wiedner asked how they [the two people] talked with each other and about the conduct/attitude between them. P12 said that the prison guard was calling the interrogator "Sid" [my master/sir].

Judge Wiedner asked how many times P12 was interrogated. P12 said that he did not accurately remember, but, about five times.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was abused each time. P12 said no, not every time. There was at least one time when he was not tortured but only intimidated.

---

<sup>5</sup> It was unclear to the Court Monitor what exactly P12 meant in this explanation. One possible translation could be "He insulted him that his name would have been published."

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was beaten on the soles of his feet or somewhere else. P12 said that every time it was the same method.

Judge Wiedner asked how that affected/impacted his feet. P12 said that when they used to go back to the cell, it was difficult to walk and they were not able to stand. There was blue discoloration, redness, and swelling. They used to go directly to the toilet to pour some water [on the feet] and move [around] in order to let the blood flow.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to clarify what he meant by moving. P12 said that it was common practice to do so [move], as they learned from each other what they should do to alleviate the pain. They used to stay in pain the whole night.

Judge Wiedner asked if others' situations were the same. P12 said that there were some [detainees], whose situations were similar to his, but there were many with worse situations.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12 said during the questioning that the pain was barely bearable. Detainees did some exercises to help their blood circulate. Others' feet were bleeding, and some were beaten 100 times on their feet. The walkway to the toilet was an ordeal. P12 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner recalled from P12's testimony during police questioning that he was once taken to a room with torturing tools. P12 said that he was once taken to a room with a table inside it. He was sitting and the interrogator was sitting next to him. The main goal that day was to extract the names of P12's partners at work. In the room, there was an electric device and many beating tools – dozens, like cables, military belts, and batons. During the interrogation, a prison guard holding pliers entered. They [we] used to hear that they [pliers] were used for removing the detainees' finger and toenails. He [the prison guard] entered and was doing "this" [P12 mimicked opening and closing pliers with his hand] with it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was blindfolded back then. P12 said no, he was not blindfolded and saw everything. It was intimidation, but he was not tortured.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 about rings. P12 said that perhaps he saw rings, but he was not sure about that moment.

Judge Wiedner recalled P12's testimony during police questioning that in the room there were rings on the wall to hang detainees from their hands. P12 said that he saw the ring scene in many branches, but he was not sure if he saw them at that moment as well.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 saw signs of injuries on other detainees or if P12 heard about them. P12 said that he saw torturing procedures. In one case, there was someone who was being tortured in the corridor and then entered the cell. His two knees were bleeding and inflamed. One of them [a knee] was so damaged that they saw the bone. The main torturing method in the corridor was to have the detainees kneel (on their knees) for hours and days. The prison guards would beat them the whole time and pour water on them. When the person re-entered the cell, they remained in that position for a long time.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were specific objects for the beatings, such as cables. P12 said in some occasions, the quadruple/tetra/fourfold electric cable had open endings (the metal was apparent). Occasionally, he [the prison guard] used to beat with [these] endings on purpose.

Judge Wiedner asked what the effect was. P12 said when one was beaten with it, it pulled flesh with it.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was medical care or doctors. P12 said that, for the injuries themselves, there were none. However, there was a person who used to come routinely more than once a week. He used to open the [cell door] hatch and ask if anyone was sick. If someone said that he was sick, then the person would give him paracetamol or an antibiotic, but sometimes the person gave nothing, and sometimes, the one who answered [that he was sick] would get beaten.

Judge Wiedner asked what questions the other detainees were asked in the interrogations in front of the cell, as well as why they were beaten. P12 said that the questions were mainly about demonstrations, if they [the detainees] were armed, if they attacked security forces, and about the names of people.

Judge Wiedner asked if some detainees were tortured with electric shock or were hung from their hands. P12 said no, at least not in Al-Khatib.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was group punishment. P12 said that it was possible if they were talking with each other and the prison guard heard them and sometimes, there was group punishment without a reason. The prison guard would enter the cell and tell them to face the wall. They would stand up and face the wall, then he would beat them collectively and randomly. Sometimes, they would lie down on their abdomen and raise their feet up and he would beat them.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12 said that he was interrogated by a high-ranking officer. P12 confirmed, saying that he remembers. One time the regular interrogator took P12 and they walked the corridor to another room. The regular interrogator was standing to the right of P12 and the higher-ranking officer was sitting in front of P12 at [behind] a table. The latter began by asking P12 about his affiliation with the "17 April" [movement] and indirectly insinuated that P12's wife was detained. P12 replied right away that yes, he was affiliated with them. He asked P12 about one of the statements/declarations on P12's laptop. P12 denied that he made that and said that his friends made it. He [the higher-ranking officer] ended his questions by telling the interrogator next to P12, "You will extract names from him [P12], or you will be in his [P12's] place".

Judge Wiedner asked how P12 knew that the person was a high-ranking officer. P12 said it was because the regular interrogator was addressing him as "Sidi".

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was beaten there. P12 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were children or elders among other detainees. P12 said that the ages varied. He does not remember children, but there were two detainees around 17. There were all ages, up to 70.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were children. P12 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were women. P12 said that he heard female voices and saw women from the door's hole. When P12 was transferred to another branch, there was a lady with him in the car.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 saw corpses. P12 said no.

Judge Wiedner recalled P12's testimony during the police questioning that there was a prison guard as a detainee. P12 said that that person was working at the same branch, but P12 does not remember if he was a prison guard. That person was with them in the cell and, once, was hit in the face.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 why that person was there. P12 said that he [that person, the detainee] headed to a prison guard [an actual one] to speak with him directly. The [actual] prison guard told him

[the detainee] that he was a prisoner at that time, not a colleague. Judge Wiedner clarified his question asking why the person was detained. P12 said that he does not remember.

Judge Kerber recalled P12's testimony during police questioning that it was "because of refusing/disobeying orders. His name was [name redacted]." Judge Kerber then asked why he refused orders. P12 said that he remembered that his name was [name redacted] when Judge Kerber mentioned it, but P12 did not remember the reason. He was most likely a normal employee, not a prison guard.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12 was then transferred from Al-Khatib and asked P12 to describe what happened afterwards. P12 said that he was transferred from Al-Khatib when the subjects in the interrogation branched out. The last time he was interrogated in Al-Khatib, it was by an officer from a different branch for five minutes. Two days later, P12 was transferred to Branch 285 and was interrogated there with new accusations.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 knew why he was transferred. P12 said that he is not sure, but Branch 285 was usually<sup>6</sup> the central interrogation branch in Syria. When the cases branched out and new files were opened, especially regarding P12's acquaintance with opposition leaders in Damascus and rural Damascus, he was transferred. Concurrently, there was an initiative by the Arab League as an attempt to find a political solution and release detainees. P12 was not sure, whether it [the reason that he was transferred] was because of the initiative, or because of the branching out of the interrogation.

Judge Wiedner asked where Branch 285 is located. P12 said in Kafar Souseh كفر سوسة.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 was abused there. P12 said that he was abused right away, once he entered the prison.

Judge Wiedner asked about detention conditions in Branch 285. P12 said that once he entered, he had to take off all his clothes and was totally naked. They took his belongings and frisked him. At that time, P12 was not allowed to wear his clothes again, did not enter the cell, and was left in the corridor. He remained standing facing the wall for a whole day. They switched on a cooling air conditioner and every now and then, they poured water on him. They allowed him to go to the toilet once and gave him five minutes to eat. One or two times, he had to lay on the floor, and they stepped over him. The following day, they brought him to the cell. At that time, he was beaten but in the context of group punishment.

Judge Wiedner asked about the reason for P12's release. P12 said that he cannot be sure. P12 knew later that there was a brokering/intermediary by the Arab League from Nabil Al-Arabi نبيل العربي [the head of the league]. Three years later, P12 was once again taken to Branch 285, where he was interrogated by the same interrogator who told P12, "You are still alive? Haven't we killed you yet? The likes of you should not live."

Judge Wiedner asked how long P12 was imprisoned after that. P12 said that the second detention was three years and five months.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12 said that it was from February 16, 2012 to July 17, 2015. P12 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 when left Syria. P12 said 15 – 16 days later.

---

<sup>6</sup> The Court Monitor thought that word "usually," in this context, was used as a filler word.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 still suffers from health side effects. P12 said that “until now,” he is being treated. He has a problem in his knee and in his back because of the beating. He also has some marks on his feet, because of inflammation.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were other effects. P12 said no, these were all the effects.

Judge Wiedner asked P12 to look to his right and say if he recognized one of the accused. P12 said no, but he can recognize the voice of the person who threatened “his” interrogator [P12 meant the high-ranking interrogator who threatened P12’s regular interrogator.]

Judge Wiedner asked Böcker if Accused Raslan would give a voice test. Böcker replied that he would not give a voice test and that from now on he perceives this question as an imposition. He stated a general explanation for the whole trial that Raslan will not give a voice test.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12 was engaged with the opposition and in demonstration in 2011. P12 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked when P12 participated in demonstrations. P12 said that early March 15, 2011, he was there, close to the Umayyad mosque in Damascus. Later, P12 participated [in demonstration] where he used to live, e.g. in Harasta حرستا, where he was almost killed when a bullet passed near his head. P12 participated in a demonstration in Al-Qaboun, the day a massacre happened against the demonstrators.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened. P12 said they were moving in the demonstration. There were ten thousand people holding banners and chanting against the regime. They arrived at a place where the soldiers and the security forces of the regime were on top of the buildings. They started shooting at the demonstrators with live ammunition. P12 was almost killed in that demonstration as well. Unfortunately, a 70-year-old man was killed. P12 had asked him [previously], if he was not afraid to die. He told P12, “It’s ok. I want freedom for my children and grandchildren.” P12 got emotional and asked for a break.

***5-minute break***

Judge Wiedner asked when the violence by the security forces against demonstrators approximately started. P12 said that from the first day, the regime used violence. However, live ammunition was used two weeks later (in the areas/places where P12 was).

Judge Wiedner asked when that was. P12 said at the beginning of April, [the use of] live ammunition [started] (in the areas/places where P12 was).

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 saw corpses, other than the ones he mentioned. P12 said that he did, especially in Al-Qaboun where the massacre took place. P12, also, saw at least two in Harasta, one [got shot] in his chest and another one in his neck. Sometimes, P12 filmed/took photos [the Arabic صور word could mean either one, but probably, P12 meant filming] of security forces shooting at the demonstration. P12’s goal was filming/taking photos from the side of the security forces, to document that they were shooting live ammunition at the demonstrators.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 saw arrests and riot control squads. P12 said he saw them all the time and dozens of times. One time, there was a full military storming/raid of Harasta, where P12 used to live. There was a complete combing of the streets and buildings.

A satellite image was shown.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 recognized it. P12 confirmed. It is Branch 251, the main entrance, and the Red Crescent hospital.

The image was zoomed-in.

P12 said that that is the location of Al-Khatib branch. P12 said that not all the buildings belong to the branch, as most of them are residential. The slanting/sloping street at the bottom [see the red line] is the main entrance close to the Red Crescent hospital. The buildings that P12 indicated [blue circle] with a pen [during the police questioning] are Al-Khatib branch.

The prosecution asked if the material of security forces shooting at the demonstration, filmed by P12, are still in P12's possession. P12 said no.

The prosecution asked if it was taken away from him along with his laptop. P12 said no. The filming [same note as above] was done by a secret camera that resembles a pen. When P12 was detained, his wife destroyed everything that could have harmed him.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P12 said that he was taken to the "head of the interrogation." Judge Wiedner asked P12 if he remembers his name or rank. P12 said that he does not precisely know his rank, but his rank was higher than P12's regular interrogator. P12 does not know his name.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12, himself, or other detainees were sexually abused. P12 said that he heard a lot about these matters, and he has friends who experienced it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 himself experienced that. P12 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked if P12 knows details about others' abuse. P12 said that one of the methods was using a glass bottle and sometimes a stick. Sometimes, they tied the penis to a weight. Sometimes, they scalded the penis with hot water.

Judge Wiedner asked if that was in Al-Khatib or in Branch 285. P12 said that he was told that after they got out of the detention in Adra <sup>عدرا</sup> [he meant after the release from Adra prison]. That was not in a specific branch. P12 did not see that [sexualized violence] during his detention period.

At 12pm, the topic of a break was brought up. Scharmer said that the witness would like to continue the session.

Questioning by Defense Counsel

Böcker asked if the prison staff in Al-Khatib was detained. P12 said that a detained employee was with him.

Böcker asked if P12 knew what that person did wrong. Judge Kerber said that she had already questioned the witness on that point. Böcker took back his question.

Fratzki said that the translator told him that there might have been a part missing in the translation, concerning the interrogation in Branch 251 and that the interrogator came from another branch. Fratzki asked where the interrogator was from. P12 said that two days before he was transferred, he [that interrogator] came from a different branch and interrogated P12 for a short time. Two days later, P12 was transferred.

Fratzki asked if it was correct that the interrogation was in Branch 251, but the interrogator was from a different branch. P12 confirmed.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsel Kroker

Kroker asked if the sexual abuses of P12's friends happened in Adra or if P12 could not assign the abuse to a branch. P12 said that the matter was talked about in Adra Central Prison and all of them [P12 and his friends] were detainees in different branches. Each one spoke about his experience, but P12 cannot correlate each case with a specific branch.

Kroker asked if it was, however, in the branches of the intelligence services. P12 confirmed.

Kroker asked if the detainees in Branch 251 talked about where they were detained. P12 said that they talked about how they were detained in Al-Khatib branch and all of them knew that information.

Kroker asked how P12 was addressed. P12 said that he was addressed by name.

Kroker asked if P12 recalls names or nicknames of prison guards. P12 said that the most famous prison guard who was executing collective punishments was called "Abo Ghadab أبو غضب". There was another one with an odd/strange/weird name, "Memati ميماتي". P12 only recalls these.

Kroker asked if there was Razan Zaytouneh. P12 said that he does not remember.

Kroker asked if P12 was detained by himself on February 16, 2012. P12 said no, he was detained along with 15 people from the Syrian Center for Media and Freedom of Expression (SCM).

Kroker asked about the head of SCM. P12 said it is Mr. Mazen Darweesh مازن درويش.

Kroker asked if he was detained with P12. P12 said yes, they were detained together.

The witness was dismissed.

***

Plaintiff's Counsel Scharmer gave an explanation/declaration on the grounds of §257 (2) StPO: Questioning of the defendant and the right to make a statement after the taking of evidence.<sup>7</sup>

A partial summary of P11's statement yesterday, who gave clear information on Branch 251, was given:

- 1) It was the same interrogator in all 3 interrogations;
- 2) He heard his voice;
- 3) He has a good ear.

Unfortunately, Raslan does not want to give a voice test, but the accused stated in his testimony through the translator that he interrogated P11 without mentioning any circumstances. Raslan confessed that he did the interrogations, and it was the same person three times. This person gave direct and indirect orders to torture.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:15 p.m.

The next trial will be August 19, 2020 at 09:30 a.m.

---

<sup>7</sup> After each co-defendant has been examined and after evidence has been taken in each individual case, the defendant shall be asked whether he has anything to add.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 10

Hearing Dates: August 26-27, 2020<sup>1</sup>

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:*Trial Day 26 – August 26, 2020

- Riyad Mossallam Saif, a 73-year-old man from Damascus and member of the political opposition to Bashar al-Assad, testified that he helped bring Anwar Raslan to Germany by loaning him money he needed to leave Jordan and seek asylum in Germany. Saif detailed his background as a wealthy clothing manufacturer turned politician, and explained how the government forced him to resign from politics. He stated that he was a key opposition figure during the Damascus Spring and that he supported defectors, like Raslan.

Trial Day 27 – August 27, 2020

- During the second day of Saif's testimony, he described how he learned about Raslan through his son-in-law, and that he wanted to support the defection of a high-level security official. Saif explained that he hoped Raslan would provide information about an important opposition leader who was detained under Raslan. He described how Raslan did not provide any information, nor did he pay back Saif's loan in full.
- Throughout the testimony, serious translation errors led to confusion and likely created difficulties for the judges and other lawyers in assessing the credibility of the witness.

Day 26 of Trial—August 26, 2020A note from the Trial Monitor:*

Saif and his translator appeared by video from Berlin. The translator spoke Egyptian Arabic which Saif appeared to understand. But it was unclear whether the translator actually understood everything Saif said. Almost no questions were correctly translated for Saif from German into Arabic. Nor were his answers correctly translated from Arabic into German.

Another problem was that information was lost when questions and translation overlapped. Many times, the judges interrupted the translator with questions, but the translator continued to speak so she could finish saying what the witness said. The translator stated that she did not know anything about the case's background. She did not know about Al-Khatib, and she asked who was Al-Assad.

---

<sup>1</sup> [Information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor]. (Information located in parenthesis is information stated by the witness, judges or counsel).

The translation issues created an atmosphere in which Saif was perceived to be avoiding the Court's questions. At the same time, Saif was confused as to why the Court repeatedly asked him the same question. In actuality, the translations of questions and answers were just wrong.

The translators in the Koblenz courtroom did not correct the Berlin translator's mistakes. During a break on the testimony's first day, they mentioned that they did not want to belittle their fellow colleague by correcting her. Only one comment was made by the Koblenz translators when they were asked if a specific translation was correct.

Spectators in the audience were angry about the translation issue and felt that they could not take notes properly, so some did not attend the second day of hearings. Only some of the many translation errors are described in this report. Unless noted otherwise, this report summarizes Saif's original testimony as heard in Arabic.

Saif talked a lot about himself. He gave short answers to questions, then continued speaking about his personal life and accomplishments. He repeatedly stated that he did not know Anwar Raslan personally and was unrelated to him. His voice was unclear because of his health issues.

The audience consisted of nine spectators and eight members of the media. Joint plaintiff P1, his wife, and his daughter sat amongst the spectators. Before starting, Judge Kerber noted that the court should consider Saif's health condition and take breaks during the testimony. Saif was represented in Berlin by Mr. Johannes Honecker who sat to Saif's left. Mrs. Nasr-Steiner served as Saif's translator and sat to his right. Saif's wife was present in Berlin, but was not visible on the screen in Koblenz. The proceedings began at 9:55AM.

Testimony of Riyad Mossallam Saif (رياض مسلم سيف)

Riyad Mossallam Saif is a 73-year-old former businessman from Damascus.

Background

Saif lived in a deeply-rooted neighbourhood in Damascus and belongs to a conservative middle-class family. From childhood, he was not ordinary. In his district, there were 15 children between the ages of 11 and 13 who started a self-funded organization. Children contributed five piastres every day. Their goal was to offer free services to the district's needy mothers. Saif was the leader and treasurer of the group.

When he was 13 years old, Saif worked for a shirt manufacturing company. He was paid one lira per day for the first three-and-a-half months. He was then offered a position to work after school for one lira per hour. He was employed at the company for three-and-a-half years. During this time, Saif and his two brothers saved 2,800 lira per month. One of his brothers was a teacher. The other brother worked at the shirt manufacturing company too. This was the beginning of their own small workshop called "400 Clothes." It expanded and became the biggest clothing manufacturer in 1975.

Saif came to Germany for the first time in 1975. He had money and wanted to open a branch of his company there. He had 58.000 German Marks in his pocket. One year later, he was the biggest importer in Syria. He had open credit and could pay back after 90 days or more, which enabled him to multiply his profit ten-fold. Saif also exported Adidas products to the world, but he was not fully paid by the company.

In 1990, and after the Soviet Union fell, Saif lost millions of dollars and had no income because he lost his contracts. In 1994, his situation improved. He became a member of parliament fortuitously. He was never interested in politics and did not read the newspaper. He was only interested in his work.

In 1980, his company opened a new branch with 320 workers. In 1984, the British Pound devalued and Saif lost a lot of money. The workers found out that the company lost money, and they decided to decrease their wages by 20%. Saif suggested that the workers increase their production by 20% and keep the wages the same. They did that for about 6 – 7 months. The value of the Pound increased again, which was in the company's favour. The contracts increased by 8%. The company recovered, compensated its workers, and offered them remedies and bonuses. The workers were happy because they made 50% more than they would have made at other companies.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber asked Saif about his project on bribery and corruption that conflicted with the government. Saif said of course it did.

Judge Kerber asked Saif when he was in parliament for the opposition. Saif said 1994, when he was at his peak. His son and daughter also had factories and they earned millions of dollars. He fortuitously got into parliament, but his main motivation was to generalize his experience over Syria. At a certain point, He had a "school of Saif" where steps were followed by dozens of companies across Syria.

Judge Kerber asked Saif to clarify that he ran for office in 1998, and that the trade union and government were against him. Then in 1998, he quit his job as a businessman. He unexpectedly received 184,500 votes, and occupied the top position in the opposition. Saif confirmed this information.

Judge Kerber noted that Saif's son disappeared. She asked if Saif knew who kidnapped him. He confirmed that his son disappeared in August 1996. He was 100 or 99% [was translated into 199%] sure that it was the Makhoul (مخلوف) family. Saif was their main enemy. The Minister of Finance, demanded a daily report on what was done against Saif. He paid 10% in arbitrary taxes (ضرائب مفتعلة).

Judge Kerber asked if Saif initiated the Damascene Spring. [The translator did not know what "Damascene" meant, and translated it to "Arabic Spring"]. Saif said that his history is engraved in his mind and he is proud of that. He said that there was Gandhi, Mandela (P said that his wife was laughing) and he is the third. He does not lie or exaggerate.

Judge Kerber asked if Saif initiated the Damascene Spring [translated again to "Arab Spring"] after Hafez Al-Assad (حافظ الأسد) died. Saif clarified that it was the Damascene Spring.

Judge Kerber asked how Saif came into conflict with the Regime. He said that he was with the opposition and demanded economic reform and [the end of] corruption. After four years, he was bankrupt (in 1998) and lost everything because of the regime. Saif's business stopped. The 17th election was in 1998. He decided not to run for a political office, and he withdrew from politics. Riots started in Syria and the young ophthalmologist [Bashar al-Assad] came back from Britain to make radical changes. Saif was not allowed to do television interviews for a year. Then there was an economic catastrophe in Syria. The prime minister was a farmer and wanted to produce a million tons of cotton.

Judge Kerber asked Saif to speak about his conflict with the regime and his detention. Saif said that he was cornered from all sides during the 1998 election. He anticipated getting 8,000 votes, but he actually got 184,000. There was a ballot box in Damascus that was unopened. It contained votes for him. He believed that there were other boxes with uncounted votes. Saif became a member of the opposition and demanded an end to the political monopoly of the 1998 election campaign. He had a 1000m<sup>2</sup> yard in a strategic location where he organized nine dialogue sessions on topics that were important to the Syrian people. For the first time, a large number of Syrians were having discussions. Saif told people not to be afraid to talk, which affected the number of votes he won during the Damascene Spring. About three or four weeks before Hafez Al-Assad died, Saif was in a meeting when a member of the opposition, a well-known film director, invited Saif to his house along with 10-12 other people. This meeting was the start of the Damascene Spring. Saif did not participate during the first week, but he participated during the second week. The meetings were open to public participation. After three or four weeks, they moved to Saif's office. As a member of parliament, Saif had a large office downtown. After ten meetings in his office, someone suggested that they submit an application to become a civil society organization. Saif reached out to the president [unclear if he spoke to the Syrian president or the parliamentary president] and the intelligence service, but was rejected.

Judge Kerber asked Saif to return to the subject of his detention. Saif said that if Bashar Al-Assad was reasonable, then he would have taken advantage of the Damascene Spring. The important thing is that Saif founded a forum that gathered Syrians in his house, and people in the streets were listening. Intelligence officials surrounded them. After a few sessions, the number of intelligence officials decreased because they came to record and found that nothing was secret. With the success of the national forum, dozens of forums started to emerge in Syria. People were exercising their freedom. Bashar saw this and was terrified. He issued a decree to indirectly stop all fora. He said that anyone who wants to start a forum had to share information with the intelligence services three weeks before the start of the forum. Information included: the speakers, the number of attendees, and the subject of the forum.

[5-minute break]

Judge Kerber asked Saif if he was detained on September 05, 2011, where he was detained, and for how long he was detained. Saif said that he established a forum without the permission of the intelligence services. He was warned from the highest levels that he would be detained and that these orders came from Bashar Al-Assad. Saif invited Dr. Borhan Ghalyoun (برهان غليون), a famous Syrian professor, to give a lecture at Saif's forum.

Judge Kerber asked Saif to answer as specific as possible. She said that they were running out of time. Saif said that he was explaining why he was detained. 400-500 people gathered [and participated in the lecture]. The following day around 12PM, the head of the Damascus Police told Saif that the Minister of Interior invited Saif for a cup of coffee at [the minister's] place. When Saif arrived, the minister was not there and the director of the minister's office ordered for Saif to be arrested. Saif was sent to Adra (عدرا) and was sentenced to five years in prison on charges of: sedition, attempt to change the ruling system, and undermining national sentiment. Along with Saif, the forum's administrative council (11 people) were imprisoned. One member of the group was the dean of the faculty of economics. He was sentenced to 10 years on the same accusations because he was an Alawite.

Judge Kerber recalled Saif's statement during police questioning that he was detained for five years in a single cell at Adra, and that he had all that he needed. Saif confirmed and said that [detention] was like a 5-star hotel. There were international reports from the European Parliament [about Saif's detention]. Germany and Europe were concerned [about him].

Judge Kerber said that Saif was detained again on February 14, 2006 and then experienced Al-Khatib Branch. Saif confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked Saif to tell the court about Al-Khatib Branch and the intelligence service. Saif stated that on February 14, he was detained for hours. Members of the intelligence service came to his house at night. They ordered his son to take them there. They slammed the door open and looked for Saif. He was hearing-impaired and was not wearing his hearing-aid, so he did not hear them when they knocked on the door. The intelligence officials thought that they had the wrong address. They wanted Saif at all costs, so they ordered his brother and nephew to help find him. It was snowing and freezing at 5:00AM. After being arrested and taken to the branch, Saif was outside for 3-4 hours, then interrogated. They told him to [end his political career] and stay away from the media. They also told him not to deal with the Kurds. By that they meant that Saif should not defend the Kurds. He was known to be a friend of the Kurds. They took him back to his home around 11:00PM, but Saif did not promise them anything. From that day forward, there were intelligence officials at his house, office, and car who followed him everywhere. When Saif and his wife went to public places, the intelligence officials sat near them. Sometimes, he paid for their table because they watched him 24 hours a day in two shifts [Saif said this sarcastically]. Saif was summoned to Al-Khatib every day for months for different reasons. One time, he was told that he received an email from Abdelhaleem Khaddam (عبد الحليم خدام) the former Vice President who defected from the regime. Saif was threatened seven or eight times that he would be taken downstairs to the prison. He was detained for 4 – 5 hours and was exhausted, but he was not scared. He was only humiliated once on February 14 when two officers talked to him with vulgar language and one of them slapped him. Saif thought the person's hand was quivering because he knew Saif was famous and that the Americans and Europeans were following his situation.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked Saif to talk about the intelligence service and its tasks [the question was incorrectly translated to Saif]. Saif explained that its goal was to make him stop his political activity. He went on to say that Hafez Al-Assad overpowered his other opponents in the Baath party with the help of the intelligence service. Saif mentioned someone who wrote Hafez Al-Assad's biography and said that, on the day Hafez took charge of the Air Force, he assigned [the biographer] to organize the Air Force.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif about the tasks of Al-Khatib Branch. Saif said that Al-Khatib was called the internal branch. One of its important tasks was to control the merchants of Damascus. The Branch's founder was Mohammad Nasif, one of the five people who were close to Assad and who had complete authority. Nasif was responsible for assigning people to the Ministry of Economics. Saif knew about Al-Khatib Branch before the revolution, but noted that the Branch changed after the revolution.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if torture was used during interrogation. Saif said that he saw tools (cables and batons) used for torture, but he was not personally tortured.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he saw places where people were hung. Saif confirmed and said that he was once blindfolded and taken to another branch where he saw detainees facing the wall. He could tell that they stood at the wall for a long time because they were shifting [their weight] from one foot to the other and were in agonizing pain. Saif stayed at the second branch for one night. He believed that the intelligence service made him watch the torture so he would feel threatened and stop his activism.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he was talking about his experience in 2006. Saif said that he was talking about the period from 2007 to the beginning of 2008. It was an important event in Syrian history. When he was released from prison on January 18, 2006, the Damascus Declaration was already established in 2005. Saif was one of the first signatories. When he was released from prison, he was active in the media.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he knew where Al-Khatib Branch was located. Saif said that it was in the area of Al-Khatib Avenue (جادة الخطيب) which is parallel to Baghdad Street. He was taken there dozens of times.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif about the beginning of the Syrian Revolution and the demonstrations. Saif said that the revolution started on March 15 [2011] in front of the Ministry of Interior. There was a sit-in to support the families of detainees. He was there with his daughter. They both participated in the sit-in and saw the intelligence services break up the sit-in with violence, then detain the protesters. The head of Al-Khatib came to the sit-in in his car. He asked Saif what he was doing there. Saif said that he was there to show his solidarity. The head of Al-Khatib did not like Saif's answer and warned Saif before he left.

Judge Wiedner noted that Saif mentioned Brigadier General Tawfiq Younes (توفيق يونس) during police questioning. Saif said that he saw Brigadier General Tawfiq Younes many times. One time, Younes called Saif and told him to come to him. Saif spoke to Tawfiq as if Al-Assad's reign ended and said, "Mr. Brigadier General, the time before Al-Bo'azizi (البوعزيزي) is not like the time after him." Saif meant that the Arab Spring was moving forward.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if violence was used on March 15, 2011. Saif said that females were beaten and their hair was pulled. People were dragged to [intelligence service] cars. Around 30-40 people were detained. People were also beaten with batons.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he participated in demonstrations after that day. Saif said yes. He waited impatiently for Fridays when people demonstrated. It was a pleasure. On May 7, five or six people from the intelligence service assaulted him with batons and beat him on his head, back, and legs. He bled and was taken to Adra where he was not treated or given medicine. His underwear and clothes were bloody. He entered a prison cell that was filled with detainees who were involved in the revolution. Someone took his pants off and gave them to Saif. He stayed there for ten days. It was an opportunity to see what was going on in Dar'a (درعا) because hundreds of people came from Dar'a every day. The detainees were barefoot and showed signs of beating. When Saif talked to them, they all seemed determined to return to the demonstrations.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif who beat the protestors. Saif explained that they were part of the intelligence service, as well as "Shabiha." He did not know if the "Shabiha" were paid, but there were a lot of them. They wanted to show people that they were Alawites. In Al-Midan (الميدان), there was a small area full of Alawites. They organized marches where they threatened the [pro-opposition] demonstrators and held placards. They had cleavers, sabres, knives, iron rods and other harmful tools. They used to sing rhymes like "Oh Bashar, don't worry. You have people who drink blood."

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if there were orders to violently break up the demonstrations. Saif did not think these orders were made during the first six weeks. Afterwards, they raised the violence level bit by bit. The second time they assaulted Saif was a murder attempt. They specifically came after him and beat him in a deadly way. He protected his head with his arm which lead to a fracture. Mesh'al Timmo (مشعل تمو) [a member of the opposition] died that day. Later on, there was news that Saif and Timmo were on the wanted list. That is how Saif knew that (probably the security forces) wanted to kill him.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif about the orders of the intelligence services in March 2011. Saif did not know anything about the people, but he wanted to give an example. There were weekly demonstrations from Ar-Rifa'i (الرفاعي) Mosque. The intelligence service wanted to prevent the demonstrations every Friday. Saif knew from his relative who used to work there [in the intelligence service] that people were paid to go to the demonstrations with sticks with Syrian flags attached that could injure people. Some people were recruited from the demonstrators.

[Saif said that he might get hypotension. Lunch break.]

Judge Wiedner noted Saif's statement that he did not know about the Government's orders to act violently in 2011. Saif said that was not correct and that he was one of the victims.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were orders from above. Saif said that the Al-Assad Regime was built on highhandedness, violence, and autocracy. Bashar Al-Assad was responsible for everything. No one acted without Bashar's orders. There were statistics about the victims of violence in the daily demonstrations, and one could feel that it was systematic.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were security apparatuses that dealt with the intelligence services. Saif said of course. There was a national security apparatus under Bashar Al-Assad's command. In Syria, there was no ability to breach orders.

Judge Wiedner asked if the Central Crisis Management Cell meant anything to Saif. [CCMC was not translated and Saif did not understand the question.] Saif said that he does not know and he does not care. Before the revolution, his first detention was like a five-star hotel. During his second detention, however, all of humanity's wickedness was practiced on him. When he was sick, they were creative. Saif was put in a cell with 30 criminals who were sentenced because of violence.

Judge Wiedner asked if Saif was talking about Adra. Saif clarified that he was talking about his second detention from 2008 to 2010. He was in Adra. Saif had cancer and they were "creative" to distress him. The other prisoners tried to oppress him. Once, in the middle of the night, he was attacked because he had a stainless-steel spoon, which was forbidden. Another time, Saif was released from the hospital and was bleeding. He wanted to change his underwear, so he washed it and wore it again. Saif was accused of instigating the prisoners to revolt. All vices were used against him. The last day that he was in prison, he was taken to a meeting with the high intelligence officers. 24 hours earlier, he was put in a solitary cell full of insects, dirt, and filth. He could not see light. They woke him up at 10:00AM. He was blindfolded and taken to the meeting. The Brigadier General of Al-Khatib Branch said that he was speaking in the name of Syria and that they [the Brigadier General and the rest of the officers] were there as officers with the responsibility to protect Syria. He said that Saif wronged them, but he would turn a new page. The Brigadier General said next time, Saif will be accused of being a Mossad agent, so Saif should take them seriously and not make mistakes. Saif resigned from his position as Secretary-General of the Damascus Declaration. He was psychologically broken.

Judge Wiedner asked if Ali Mamlouk (علي مملوك) and Tawfiq Younes were there. Saif said that Mamlouk was there. Saif recognized him by his voice. Younes presented himself as the Brigadier General. Both were surely there.

Judge Wiedner asked when Saif left Syria. Saif got emotional and a break was issued.

[5-minute break]

Judge Wiedner asked when Saif left Syria. [There were translation issues at this point. Saif started to explain why he left Syria. Wiedner tried to direct Saif's answer, but the translator kept translating Saif's statements instead of Judge Wiedner's questions.] June 13, 2012.

Judge Wiedner asked where Saif went. Saif said that "they" shot at his room. The United Nations called him and told him to leave Syria. He travelled to Cairo, then Germany.

Judge Wiedner asked how Saif knew Raslan. Saif said that he does not know Raslan well. His son-in-law called Saif. The son-in-law learned from his friend about a colonel in the intelligence service who defected and lived in Jordan, but who wished to apply for asylum in Germany [referring to Raslan]. The brother of the friend's business partner was with the intelligence service. Whether this person was detained at the intelligence service or whether he worked there was unclear.] Raslan helped get this person out [unclear if Raslan helped the person get out of prison or Syria]. Raslan was supposedly from Al-Houla (الحولة) which witnessed the first massacre after the revolution started. More than 100 people were killed. Three-fourths or two-thirds of the people killed were children or women.

Judge Wiedner asked when the massacre happened. Saif said in 2012, maybe in May or April.

Judge Wiedner asked when Saif heard that Raslan was in Jordan. Saif thought that he got the information in August 2012, but he did not know the exact date. He sent the information to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Six months later, the Ministry called Saif and asked for Raslan's phone number. Saif called [name redacted] in Amman who said that Raslan was in Geneva with Ahmad Al-Jarba (أحمد الجربا), the head of the Coalition. Saif was in Germany at this time. He was working for the opposition coalition between Germany, Istanbul, and Cairo. His residence was in Germany.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif how he found out about Raslan and what his experiences were with Raslan. Saif had little information. He and Raslan both supported the defection of officers and members of the intelligence service. Raslan was supposedly important and had useful information. Raslan alleged that he interrogated the head of the Coalition, Ahmad Al-Jarba. Indeed, Al-Jarba was jailed on criminal charges. Raslan insinuated that he knew about Al-Jarba and wanted to "trade" information. When Raslan came to Germany, Saif saw him once. Raslan visited his house, along with Raslan's wife and children. Saif tried to get information from Raslan about Al-Jarba, but Raslan did not reveal anything. Information about Al-Jarba was important because he occupied a sensitive position. Saif recalled that Raslan was financially strained. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs approved Raslan's trip to Germany, but refused to pay for his plane ticket. Saif lent him $2,000 which Raslan was supposed to repay when he arrived to Germany. Raslan repaid $1,000, then never saw Saif again. Saif did not ask for the remainder of the money. Saif coincidentally met Raslan in Gaziantep, Turkey.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif what was known about Raslan's activities in Syria. Saif only knew that Raslan was a security officer. He did not even know Raslan's name because Raslan was an interrogator at Al-Khatib. Saif never met Raslan personally and did not know him.

Judge Wiedner recalled Saif's statement during police questioning that Raslan was the head of the interrogation unit which was an important position in Syria, but that Saif did not know when. Saif said that Raslan was a colonel.

Judge Wiedner asked if Saif learned why [the translator said "when"] Raslan defected. Saif did not know. He only knew that Raslan was in Jordan.

Judge Wiedner asked if Saif knew Raslan's confession. Saif said that Raslan is a Sunni from Al-Houla where the massacre happened. Some of his wife's family were among the victims. The family pressured him to leave. That was the allegation of Raslan and the people who knew him.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was special for a Sunni [the translator did not say Sunni] to be in Raslan's position. Saif said that he did not have information about that.

Judge Wiedner noted Saif's statement during police questioning that Raslan did not want to work at the intelligence service anymore. Saif said that he learned this information from his son-in-law and friends.

Judge Wiedner recalled Saif's statement during police questioning that Sunnis occupy weak positions. Saif confirmed and said that the high-level people in Syria, especially in the intelligence service, were Alawites. Sunnis occasionally got high-level positions. Supposedly, Sunnis committed brutal torture to get the support of Alawites. Alawites did not want their hands dirty, so they chose illiterate or mentally-ill people to torture for them.

Judge Wiedner asked if Saif knew whether Raslan was in contact with the opposition while he was in Syria. Saif said no. He only knew that Raslan went to Jordan and contacted Al-Jarba and accompanied him to Geneva.

Judge Wiedner noted Saif's statement during police questioning that he learned from Al-Jarba that Raslan secretly gave information to the opposition. Saif said that Raslan was with the Syrian delegation in Geneva. Raslan alleged that the hotel where the opposition was staying was owned by the Assad family. Saif did not know if this information was correct.

Judge Wiedner asked about the Geneva II Peace Conference. Saif said that the opposition coalition was headed by Al-Jarba. Perhaps Raslan was working with him, but the opposition coalition in Syria was in contact with Al-Jarba at this time, not with Raslan.

Judge Wiedner recalled Saif's statement during police questioning that "Saif could not imagine that Raslan was friendly during interrogations. He would not be able to afford this. What should Raslan as a Sunni and as the head have done? He would not have served tea and biscuits. It was unusual that he was in this position." Saif said that he had nothing to correct.

Judge Wiedner asked how Saif received Raslan's English CV. Saif said that Raslan wrote it and sent it.

Judge Wiedner asked how Raslan's CV was given to Saif. Saif said that his grandson [daughter's son] received an email. He and his wife gave the email to the German Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The CV contained information about Raslan and had documents and personal IDs.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he had indirect contact with Raslan in order to prepare for Raslan's trip to Germany. Saif confirmed that he had indirect contact with Raslan from August 2012 to February 2016 [incorrectly translated to 2013]. This started when Saif received the documents via email in August 2012. Six months later, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs asked about Raslan's phone number. Saif called Amman to get Raslan's phone number and was told that Raslan was in Geneva. After that, there was no contact until Raslan arrived to Germany. Saif recommended that Raslan come to Germany because he encourages officers to defect and because Raslan had important information about Al-Jarba.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he met Raslan in person. Saif met Raslan at Saif's home in Berlin. A few days after his arrival, Raslan visited Saif with his wife and children. He tried to get information from Raslan, but he could not.

Judge Wiedner asked for the camera to be directed toward Raslan. He asked Saif if he recognized Raslan. Saif was not 100% sure, but he thought the person was Raslan.

Raslan's CV was shown. Judge Kerber asked Saif if he recognized the document. Saif said that the document was Raslan's CV. Judge Kerber asked if it was the same document that Saif gave to the police and if the signature belongs to him. Saif confirmed.

The second page of the CV was shown.

Judge Wiedner asked Saif if he gave other documents to the police. Saif said that he gave the police Raslan's CV, documents, personal IDs, and copies of passports.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were texts or statements about Raslan. Saif did not know what this had to do with him.

Judge Wiedner recalled Saif's statement that Doc.2B was a 2012 report on the conditions of detainees in Al-Khatib and a detainee was willing to testify that the conditions in the branch were relatively good. Doc.2C and Doc.2D were about a detainee connected to Eyad Al-Gharib.

Saif's wife tried to talk to Saif, but Judge Kerber said that she was not allowed.

[Several documents were shown which Saif provided to German police investigators.] A document about [name redacted] was shown. Saif said that his signature was on the document, unless it was fabricated. [A portion of the document is below.]

-----

[Name redacted]

Testimony for God and History

I was detained by the regime in the beginning of 2012 at Branch 251 or so-called Al-Khatib Branch. I was interrogated on the basis that I used to move weapons and smuggle defecting members of the military. I was arrested in Damascus by the Branch, and I stayed there for five months. I was then transferred to Al-Jawwwiyah [Air Force Intelligence] and from it to Sidnayah. I testify, and I will be asked about what I say in front of God. I am not interested in making statements to human beings.

There were three officers at the Branch. The first was Colonel Anwar Raslan, the other was Colonel Ibrahim al-Hariri, and the third was Colonel Ahmad Nuh. I testify before God that when the officer on duty was Colonel Anwar Raslan, I used to receive food in full, and there was no torture or abuse. Jailers would complain of this day. My file was initially handled by Colonel Anwar Raslan. Despite the proven charge, he only spoke with me in legal terms. He did not attribute anything to me and did not use foul or abusive language and he did not insult me. He would only say: "We arrested you with a weapon in your possession, so there is no room for you to escape. No one can help you. You can help yourself and make the situation less painful for yourself." He reiterated: "[name redacted], you are a rights person. You are a human being. No one is infallible. Spare yourself the pain, and I promise you to help you by referring you to the judiciary. I can offer no more help other than this." It is as if he was saying to me: Excuse me because my hands are tied.

To be honest, when Colonel Anwar was on duty, the situation was comfortable for every detainee. Let anyone who says otherwise confront me. However, when Ahmad Nuh was on duty, the situation was hell for us. The same goes for the other criminal, Ibrahim al-Hariri.

(...)

We were around 300 detainees at the Branch when the colonel was on duty, and it was Eid day. We were impatiently waiting for him to be on duty.

Fear God and do not believe everything that is said.

Your brother, [name redacted]

-----
Judge Kerber clarified that the judges only wanted to know if Saif gave this document to the police. Saif said that he was not able to read it. The document was enlarged. Saif said that it was a statement on Facebook, but he did not know the content. It was by [name redacted] and it discussed how "some among us actually act against Syrians." Saif said that he gave it to the police, but he did not agree with it.

Judge Kerber asked Saif where he got the document from. Saif said that he got the document from Facebook. Many people wrote that they supported or opposed Raslan. When the circle expanded and the trial went public, there were new witnesses. Saif did not write the post, and he did not know who did.

Judge Kerber asked if Saif published the post on his personal Facebook account or another Facebook account. Saif said that he does not have a Facebook account.

[A second document was shown. It related to P6 and was found online.]

-----
A few days ago, and with a great shock, [I learned about] the issue of the German authorities' detention of the defecting officer Anwar Raslan, alongside the defecting officer Eyad Al Gharib. The reason for this shock is that I had personal and close knowledge of Eyad Al Gharib because we are relatives and friends.

Based on this knowledge, I would like to clarify a few points, in which personal aspects somehow overlap with humanitarian and legal aspects.

From the beginning of the Syrian revolution, Eyad announced to us, friends and relatives, his clear support for it and enthusiasm about it. He had told us repeatedly about many incidents and details that used to take place at the security branch where he used to work and to which he was a witness without participating in them.

In late 2011, Eyad confided in us that he intended to defect from the regime and join the ranks of the revolution. Given the advice by family and friends not to rush things, Eyad waited for a few weeks to secure his family and children. He traveled to Dayr az Zawr and made a complete break with the regime at the beginning of 2012. I still remember very well that day on which Eyad's brother went to report his disappearance and that he feared that he could have been abducted by one of the armed groups. That was the common pretext at the time to cover up the defection so that the security forces would not come after the family of the defector and persecute it.

In 2013, Eyad chose to leave Syria for Turkey to live there at one of the refugee camps in Harran with his family, especially since he has a female child who is ill and unable to move and needs special medical care, which was not available as it should be in the liberated areas of Dayr az Zawr. Eyad lived there for three years under difficult and harsh circumstances and experienced very miserable material conditions. This prompted him in the summer of 2014 to send his child, who is not more than 11 years old, with his maternal uncle to cross the sea and walk for a whole month in the forests of Central Europe in the hope that the child, once he arrives in a safe place, would reunite the family and rid them of this ordeal, which is experienced by millions of Syrian refugees in neighboring countries. However, what happened is that the promised and awaited reunion did not come despite the fact that almost two years had passed since Eyad's child traveled and arrived in Germany. Given this despair and under the pressure of his daughter's medical condition, which started to get worse, and with the open European borders, Eyad crossed the sea with his family in the spring of 2016 in the hope of reaching Germany and reuniting the family again. Unfortunately, the borders were then completely closed in his face, again, and in the face of all the refugees who got involved and crossed the sea at that time. Eyad and his family were stranded in Greece for almost two years to go through a new round of suffering and cruel living at the camps of refugees stranded there. Finally, in April 2018, Eyad and his family arrived in Germany after all this hardship.

In Germany, Eyad provided his testimony about his work in the security service to the German authorities during the questioning sessions, which every refugee is subjected to before obtaining the right to asylum and residency.

I will also report an incident that Eyad experienced before the revolution, and I was a witness to it in 2009.

Eyad wanted to buy a house in one of the suburbs of Damascus as he used to live in a rented house. He started making efforts to secure the first payment for the purchase through loans and borrowing from relatives and friends. Eventually, he collected around 500,000 Syrian pounds (around 10,000 dollars at the time). He was unfortunate as he fell into the claws of a fraudulent real estate broker (I met this fraudster at the time because I, too, wanted to buy a house. He showed me an apartment to purchase, but his procrastination of Eyad made me suspect him and give up the idea of buying the house from him or through him). This fraudster sold him an apartment with forged and incomplete papers after taking the first payment and spending it after a long journey of procrastination and false promises. Eyad woke up to the naked truth, which is that he was a victim of a scam and a fraud. The issue was over after strenuous efforts and negotiations involving religious and family figures close to the fraudster. The brother of the fraudster compensated Eyad with another apartment instead of the lost one.

I am reporting these bits and pieces to state some simple and clear facts about Eyad and this case.

Eyad did not defect from the regime because he coveted positions or material or moral gains. He did that out of his full belief in the revolution and its justice, according to what he thinks and believes in.

Eyad did not take advantage of his security job and resort to force and intimidation when he was subjected to the incident of fraud (this is despite the fact that one of his superiors suggested to him intervening to persecute the fraudster and intimidate him. Eyad rejected this because he simply wanted his right without getting involved in problems and complications of this sort).

Eyad could not provide his testimony and the information he knew about the security branches and their criminality during the past six years because, quite simply, the journey of becoming a refugee at camps and the harsh material conditions he faced and the illness of his daughter did not leave time for him to rest and breathe before thinking about providing his testimony.

I am not here in the business of defending Eyad regarding the case in which he is detained as this is the specialization of justice and the judiciary. I will wait for the German courts to have their say in this regard after examining the evidence and documents and speaking to the witnesses. I am writing (while I am full of shame because I am reporting personal and private details of Eyad's life) to champion true justice, which holds the actual criminals accountable and restores rights to their owners and does not seek to achieve small and fake victories or is satisfied with offering quick sacrifices for self-satisfaction instead of pursuing the road of justice, which I see as long and arduous and in which files and books will be opened pertaining to millions of people over the past 50 years.

Finally, I totally side with victims and justice, no matter what the outcome of this long road is.

-----

Judge Kerber asked if Saif gave the police this document. Saif said that he does not embrace the document.

Judge Kerber asked if Saif gave the document to the police. Saif confirmed.

[A third document was shown. It was the second page of the previous document.]

Judge Kerber asked if Saif gave the third document to the police. Saif confirmed.

[10-minute break]

Saif was asked if he was still perceptive. His wife was asked if she thinks that Saif was able to continue testifying tomorrow.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:45 PM. The next trial will be August 27, 2020 at 9:30 AM.

The audience consisted of 12 spectators and 7 members of the media. The proceedings began at 9:30AM. Saif continued to testify.

Questioning by Mrs. Holtz

Prosecutor Klinge's assistant, Mrs. Holtz, asked Saif if he knew Anwar Al-Bunni (أنور البني). Saif said yes.

Holtz asked Saif if he talked with Al-Bunni about Raslan. Saif said that Al-Bunni was his friend. They did not talk about Raslan, but Saif knew that Al-Bunni accused Raslan. He thought that Al-Bunni had a perspective view.

Holtz asked Saif to tell the court about Al-Bunni's perspective. Saif said that Al-Bunni was certain that he recognized Raslan and that Raslan personally assaulted him. He did not know more.

Holtz noted Saif's statement during police questioning that he could not imagine Raslan being nice during interrogations, and that Raslan is Sunni and was watched by the Alawites. Holtz then asked Saif if he found it strange that Raslan reached his position as a Sunni. Defense Counsel Böcker interjected and asked for the question to be specified.

Holtz asked Saif to describe the interrogation. Saif did not know exactly, and he spoke generally. Saif said that the act of torture, or ordering a subordinate to torture, should be considered a crime against humanity that cannot be waived.

Holtz asked Saif if Raslan ordered his subordinates to commit torture. Saif said that torture was done automatically. Many people confessed to a crime that they did not commit because they were tortured. [For example,] a politician was under unbearable torture. [The security officials] insisted that the politician knew someone whose name they wanted. The politician said "okay" and agreed to meet the person in a specific place. He went into the street and pointed to a random person. He just wanted the torture to end. The politician was a moral person, but he did something immoral because he was tortured. Saif's nephew told him that a detainee was arrested because his name was found on a list [at the place of] a terrorist. All the people on the list were detained, including Saif's nephew who was 17-years-old. The nephew was detained for 13 years. Saif's nephew told him about an incident in prison when two prison guards laughed at an inmate then [one of the guards] pressed his foot against the inmate's testicle until he died.

Holtz wanted to know what happened in Al-Khatib. She understood from Saif that people were tortured during interrogations at the branch. Saif confirmed, and said that torture depended on the accusation. Every intelligence branch committed torture.

Holtz asked Saif if he could explain who conducted torture and how it was conducted during interrogations. Saif said that officers gave orders to their subordinates. Sometimes officers who were sadists committed torture themselves.

Holtz asked if Saif got this information from his experience with Raslan. Saif said no, he did not remember Raslan from Syria. He experienced torture, but not from Raslan. If anyone said that there was an intelligence branch in Syria where torture did not happen, they were wrong. No one was held accountable for the death of a detainee by torture. Caesar's photos were sufficient proof of the Regime's torture and intelligence service. Human beings [in Syria] had no value. [Saif's family] knew this because Saif's brother was tortured for three years and the family was happy when he was executed because he was relieved from torture.

Holtz asked Saif if he experienced Al-Khatib after March 2011. Saif said no, only a long time ago when he was a member of the Damascus Chamber of Industry. He won the election and eight out of the 12 members of the Chamber wanted him to be the [leader]. He needed one more vote to win. Holtz interjected and asked if this event occurred after 2011. Saif said that it happened in 2006. Holtz clarified that she wanted to know if Saif experienced Al-Khatib after 2011. Saif said no.

Holtz's colleague noted Saif's statement from the day before [day 26 of trial] that the intelligence service's job is to get information for the Regime. He asked Saif to talk about each apparatus (General, Military, and Air-Force). Saif said that, in general, Al-Khatib focused on the businessmen of Damascus. It is unrelated to the Air Force. Al-Khatib does internal security and is responsible for what happens inside Syria.

Questioning by Defense Counsel Böcker

Böcker asked if Saif was feeling well or if he needed a break. Saif said that he was feeling well.

Böcker asked if Saif knew about [the situation in] Al-Khatib [after 2011] from other people or from personal experience. Saif said that he knew about Al-Khatib from a different time.

Böcker recalled Saif's statement from February 2019 in which he said that his memory was weak. Saif said that his memory is not strong, but there are some matters that he cannot forget. Böcker then asked Saif if he was 100% sure that everything he said was correct. Saif confirmed.

Böcker noted that the police asked Saif about Al-Bunni, and Saif told them that Al-Bunni was the only person from whom he heard negative comments about Raslan. Böcker asked Saif if he remembered saying that. Saif confirmed and said that Al-Bunni is a deeply-rooted opposition lawyer who is trustworthy.

Böcker explained on [day 26 of trial] Saif mentioned one document in English and three documents in Arabic, and that Saif recognized his own signature on all of them. Böcker asked if Saif remembered the content of the documents other than the CV. Saif said yes.

Böcker asked if one of the documents defended Raslan. Saif said that only one document defended Raslan. Hundreds of accusations surfaced after news spread of Raslan's arrest. Victims began to speak out. Böcker asked the same question again. Saif confirmed. [This happened two more times.] Saif added that there were 100 complaints and only one person defended Raslan.

Böcker asked Saif if he had any other documents about Raslan that he did not give to the police. Saif said no.

Böcker asked Saif if he remembered how he got [one of the] documents. Saif answered that he saw it on Facebook and the post caught his attention. [Böcker repeated this question several times. Each time, Saif repeated his answer.]

[10-minute break to answer the question.]

Holtz said that the question was answered. Kerber repeated the question and ordered a break to answer.

[15-minute break.]

Böcker asked if Saif could answer his question. Saif said that the document was the only one that defended Eyad and Raslan. The general consensus on social media was that Raslan was bad. If he had a bad feeling about Raslan, he would not have recommended Raslan. If it was proven that Raslan committed a crime, then Saif would certainly be against Raslan. Saif wanted to [cooperate with the police].

Böcker asked if someone gave Saif the document or if Saif downloaded it. Saif said, “then who?! My secretary?!” Böcker repeated the question. Saif said that it was a long time ago and he did not remember.

Böcker noted Saif’s statement that he gave the documents to the police to [make copies]. Böcker then asked why Saif kept the [original] documents in his possession after [he gave copies to the police]. P stated, “where did I keep them?!” then asked Böcker if the document was so important that Böcker wanted to know why Saif kept it. Böcker said it was important and he wanted to know. Saif said that the document was not important to him. He put the papers in a file, then gave the file to the police as an example of people who were defending Raslan. Böcker asked how long the document remained with Saif. Saif did not remember because it had no value to him.

Böcker asked about [name redacted] and whether he was a friend of Saif’s son-in-law. Saif said that [name redacted] was his son-in-law’s friend of 20 years. He was a businessman who he did not know personally.

Böcker asked for the name of Saif’s son-in-law. Böcker then asked for Saif’s son-in-law’s address. Saif spoke to his attorney and did not share the address.

Böcker noted Saif’s statement during police questioning that his son-in-law’s friend (through Saif’s son-in-law) was the person who told Saif how Raslan helped people after the Al-Hola incident. Saif confirmed, and said that he would not have helped Raslan but for Raslan’s help after the incident.

Böcker asked Saif to solve this puzzle for him: Saif was not the person who called Raslan in Jordan—the first name of the person who called was [name redacted]. Böcker asked Saif if he remembers the call. Saif said that the call was based on the request of the questioner who wanted information.

Böcker recalled Saif’s statement that his wife gave documents to the police. Böcker asked if Saif’s wife called [name redacted]. Saif did not think so. He and his wife only wanted Raslan’s phone number and address. Maybe they called their son-in-law.

Böcker recalled Saif’s statement during police questioning that, based on what Saif read, there were three commanders in the branch. Böcker asked if this statement was correct. Saif confirmed that the three commanders’ names were mentioned in the single document that defended Raslan.

Böcker recalled that Saif was asked about the unstrict conditions, Saif answered that he indirectly learned about the conditions through his son-in-law who was informed by [name redacted].

Böcker asked Saif if he knew [name redacted] and if Saif had information about him. Saif said that [name redacted] was the person who wrote the article, but Saif did not know him.

Böcker asked Saif if he thought Raslan was scared of the Regime. Saif said that he did not have contact with Raslan after Raslan came to Germany. Before Raslan came to Germany, Saif and [name redacted] concluded that they should help Raslan because his life was in danger, which was not uncommon under the Regime. Saif conveyed the reasons for his decision [to help Raslan] to the German Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The relevant information was given to him by his son-in-law.

Böcker recalled that Saif was previously asked what he knew about Raslan's situation in Jordan. At the time, Saif answered that Raslan was threatened. Saif said that Raslan told the friend of Saif's son-in-law that he was threatened. It was probable that Raslan felt that the Regime was watching him.

Fratzki asked Saif if he verified the information given to him by his son-in-law. Saif said that he did not have a way to verify the information.

Fratzki recalled Saif's statement that he met Raslan at his house. At the meeting, Raslan asked for Saif's help, but Saif lost trust in Raslan. Fratzki asked if the reason Saif lost trust in Raslan was because Raslan never paid him back. Saif said no. He understood if Raslan could not pay back the money because of financial hardship, but Raslan should have called him and apologized.

Fratzki asked again if Saif lost trust in Raslan because of the money. Saif said that money had nothing to do with it.

Judges Kerber and Counsel Oehmischen agreed that Saif answered the question: money did not play a role.

Questioning by prosecution and plaintiffs

Plaintiff's Counsel Reiger asked why Saif did not trust Raslan. Saif said that he started to distrust Raslan when Raslan's victims came forward. Perhaps he holds some responsibility because he should have researched Raslan more. Saif blamed his son-in-law and his son-in-law's friend who were both shocked by the news.

Reiger asked Saif if he had any information which showed that Raslan pretended to defect. Saif said no, though it was unreasonable to suggest that Raslan stayed in the intelligence service but [publicly stated] that his family forced him to defect.

Mohammad [P1's lawyer] asked Saif if he had a Facebook account and if he used it actively. Saif confirmed that he had a Facebook account. He was not active, but he had thousands of friends.

Mohammad asked if Saif saw anything on Facebook that supported Raslan. Saif only saw one example which he brought. He did not see anything else and was not interested.

Kroker asked what information Saif expected Raslan to reveal. Saif said that he expected [to hear] the truth of what happened in detention.

Kroker asked if Saif was disappointed when he did not receive a response from Raslan. Saif said that Raslan dodged him. Saif wanted to help Raslan because Raslan was a high-level security officer. Saif had hope that Raslan would give him beneficial information, but Raslan did not.

Kroker recalled Saif's statement that torture was widespread in the security branches and it was unbelievable that Raslan was friendly during interrogations. Kroker asked Saif if he was referring to the time before or after March 2011. Saif clarified that he meant since March 1963. Since Hafez Al-Assad came [into power], the intelligence service tortured Syrians.

Böcker noted Saif's statement that he did not get information from Raslan. Böcker asked if Saif made a deal with Raslan. Saif said no. He helped Raslan come to Germany because Raslan was a high-ranking official and Saif wanted information.

Böcker noted that Saif expected Raslan to give him information, but that Saif did not demand information be provided [in exchange for helping Raslan come to Germany]. Saif said that before Raslan came to Germany, Raslan told Saif that he was going to expose the Regime's practices.

Böcker asked Saif to clarify whether [exposing the Regime's practices] was a condition [to Saif helping Raslan]. No, and the Europeans did not demand this either.

Böcker asked how and where Saif expected to receive information from Raslan. Saif said when Raslan arrived to Germany and came to speak with him [at his home]. But Raslan did not provide any information.

Böcker noted Saif's statement from [day 26 of trial] about Al-Jarba. Saif explained that Raslan interrogated Al-Jarba, and Raslan insinuated that he had valuable information on him. He wanted this information because Al-Jarba was the head of the Coalition.

Böcker asked Saif if he really did not receive information from Raslan, or if he just could not say that he received information from Raslan. Saif said that Raslan was employed by Al-Jarba as a member of the opposition. Al-Jarba took Raslan to Geneva.

Böcker asked if Saif was sure that Raslan worked with Al-Jarba. Saif explained that he talked with Raslan in Gaziantep for about ten minutes. Raslan thought that the opposition needed a security apparatus. Raslan and another person were thinking about establishing it. Raslan cited the opposition's hotel [in Geneva that was allegedly owned by Al-Assad's relatives] as an example of why the opposition needed an intelligence apparatus.

Böcker asked Saif if he knew whether Raslan gave information as a witness. Saif did not know.

Böcker mentioned Saif's son-in-law, as well as his son-in-law's friend. Böcker wanted to know who helped whom. Saif said that the friend (through his son-in-law) asked him to help Raslan leave Jordan and seek asylum in Germany. The brother of the friend's business partner was a prisoner under Raslan. Raslan eventually released the man, who became an important connection.

Böcker asked Saif if he got this information from his son-in-law's friend. Saif confirmed.

Böcker asked if Saif got this information directly from his son-in-law's friend. Saif said no (the information came from his son-in-law who was told by his friend).

Böcker asked Saif if he knew how his son-in-law's friend left Syria. Saif did not know.

Böcker recalled Saif's statement that his son-in-law and son-in-law's friend were family friends for 20 years. Saif said that he was not concerned [with this topic]. He was more concerned about the people who were slaughtered by Russian aircrafts.

Böcker asked how his son-in-law's friend left Syria. Saif said he was not concerned about that.

[A break was issued for Saif and Honecker to discuss if they wanted to correct any statements.]

Honecker said that she did not want to correct any statements.

Saif thanked the German justice system and said that Syrians would never forget [this case]. Judge Kerber said that Germans would not forget [this case] either.

P1 said that he wanted to give a statement. He was granted permission. P1 said that he knew about the Facebook post that was signed by [name redacted]. The post was circulated after P1 gave his testimony to pressure him to withdraw his testimony. It was posted on a page that supported Raslan.

All documents were shown, including two posts from day 26 of trial and Raslan's CV.

Ploz read a statement about the Arabic translation concerning Böcker's petition to repeat days 1-23 of trial. She described the trial process, then explained why repeating the trial process is not necessary.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:25PM. The next trial will be on September 02, 2020 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 11

Hearing Dates: September 2-3, 2020<sup>1</sup>

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:

Trial Day 28 – September 2, 2020

- Manuel Deußing, an inspector for the German Federal Police Office (BKA), was part of the team that initially investigated torture in Syria connected to Anwar Raslan. He explained how he delved into reports by Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, and received confidential information from the Commission for International Justice and Accountability, including a classified interview conducted with Raslan in 2012.
- Henning Lindemann is a criminal chief inspector for the BKA. He explained how, prior to Raslan's arrest, he studied and summarized a Human Rights Watch report entitled Torture Archipelago which detailed specific detention facilities in Syria, their locations, and methods of torture used on detainees.

Trial Day 29 – September 3, 2020

- Alexander Frey, a high commissioner for the BKA, made the call to officially arrest Eyad Al-Gharib. He described Al-Gharib's distress and shock during his first moments in custody.
- As a chief commissioner for the BKA, Hans-Jürgen Schneider testified how he was supposed to drive Al-Gharib to the examining magistrate in Karlsruhe, but how a turn of events led to Al-Gharib's proceedings being held in a health clinic.

Day 28 of Trial—September 2, 2020

The audience consisted of four spectators and five members of the media. The proceedings began at 9:30AM.

Testimony of Manuel Deußing

Manuel Deußing is a 37-year-old inspector for the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) in Meckenheim.

Questioning by the Judges

Judge Kerber asked Deußing how his investigation was related to NGO reports. Deußing said that he and his colleague evaluated a Human Rights Watch (HRW) report published in December 2017 about the Caesar photos. They tried to arrange a meeting with Caesar but were unsuccessful. The report was based on interviews with former detainees, their family members, and defectors. Photos in the report were categorized into three groups: (1) detainees, (2) soldiers, and (3) crime scenes. According to HRW, detainees had a code consisting of three numbers: (1) the detainee's number, (2) the branch, and (3) the examination. Most of the victims were from Branches 215 and 227 operated by the military intelligence service. Some were from the air force intelligence branch, the fourth division, and Sednaya (صيدنايا) prison. The report said that Caesar was a photographer who worked between May 2011 and August 2013 in the military hospitals of Mazzeh (المزة) and Tishreen (تشرين). Caesar could not obtain all the photos because there were missing numbers. This was confirmed by forensic physicians.

---

<sup>1</sup> [Information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor]. (Information located in parenthesis is information stated by the witness, judges or counsel).

Judge Wiedner asked Deußing if he could describe the procedures following a person's death. Deußing said that corpses lay there for two or three days before they were transported to military hospitals.

Judge Wiedner asked when the corpses were given numbers. Deußing said they were given numbers in the military hospital when they were examined by forensic physicians.

Judge Wiedner asked about the official cause of death. Deußing said heart failure and respiratory arrest.

Judge Wiedner asked about the real cause of death. Deußing said that HRW's report re-evaluated the Caesar photos and found that many people died from violence, like beatings and suffocation. Deußing said that the next report was "It Breaks the Human" by Amnesty International in 2016. The report was based on interviews with 60 people. Deußing and his colleague made a summary of it.

Judge Kerber clarified that the report was published on August 18, 2016.

Deußing said that the detainees were brought before military courts. Sometimes, trials only lasted for a few minutes. The statements of informants were accepted as facts. There were several military prisons in Syria, including Sednaya and Tadmor (تدمر) [palmyra], in addition to the intelligence service's detention facilities. The conditions facing detainees were bad. They had little food, no medical care, and faced "welcome parties." The Amnesty report discussed the methods of torture used during interrogations, including: Falaqa (فلقة), Doulab (دولاب), Shabh (شبح), Flying Carpet (بساط الريح), fingernail removal, and beating with plastic sticks or electricity cables. Amnesty International coordinated with other NGOs to come up with an estimate of 50,000 deaths between 2011 and 2015.

Judge Wiedner asked about the reported causes of death. Deußing said suffocation and overcrowding, to which Judge Wiedner confirmed with a quote from the transcript.

Judge Wiedner asked about food and drinks given to detainees. Deußing said that nutrition was insufficient and detainees were not allowed to start eating until the guards said they could eat. Sometimes, detainees had to sit for long periods of time in front of food.

Judge Wiedner said that most of the cases were from Sednaya where many people died from malnutrition. He then asked about medical care. Deußing said that it was insufficient. Judge Wiedner said that Amnesty International did not report on medical care and that "five or six detainees died regularly every day due to torture and infection. Faeces lay in the cell and caused diseases to develop."

[Three pictures depicting methods of torture were shown. Deußing described them.]

[Picture 1: Doulab]

[Picture 2: Shabh]

[Picture 3: Flying carpet]

Judge Wiedner asked if electric shocks were used. Deußing confirmed and noted that water was applied before electric shocks.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked if psychological mock execution was used. Deußing said yes.

Deußing wanted to add something from the HRW report. Caesar photos depict the situation in Al-Mazze (المزة) and Tishreen (تشرين) military hospitals. They also referred to Harasta (حريستا) Military Hospital. In interviews with people who worked at Al-Khatib Branch, interviewees suggested that corpses were transferred to Harasta Hospital. However, HRW could not find the hospital in Caesar's photos. Deußing said that he made an information request to CIJA [Commission for International Justice and Accountability] after Raslan was first questioned by the State Office of Criminal Investigations (LKA) in November 2017. The request was for information regarding Raslan, Branches 251 and 285, the structure of the Syrian intelligence service, and crimes committed by the Syrian intelligence service between 2011 and 2012. Deußing also interviewed CIJA representatives who saved and smuggled documents out of crisis areas.

Judge Kerber asked about the investigation Deußing conducted. Deußing said that the first report addressed Raslan, Branch 251, and Branch 285. CIJA provided the second report in April 2018 which was given the codename "Czech." Deußing had the impression that CIJA dealt with Raslan before. He asked CIJA about the source of their document. CIJA had an interview signed by Raslan dated October 2012. Deußing received the final report in July 2018. CIJA used code names to protect their informants. Deußing asked whether it would be possible to interview the informants, but the Federal Prosecutor's Office said no because most of the informants were in Syria and Turkey.

Judge Kerber asked Deußing if he knew about the founding of the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC). Deußing said that there was a government resolution which created CCMC. Its function was to coordinate the efforts of the Syrian intelligence service and the military against the demonstrators. Its members were high-level officials. CCMC announced its first resolution on April 24, 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked if the “Czech” report was drafted because of BKA’s request. Deußing said no. BKA was surprised how detailed the report was. However, after consultation with the Federal Prosecutor’s Office, they requested specific information from CIJA.

Judge Wiedner asked if the documents were given to CIJA digitally or personally. Deußing said that CIJA invited his team to a meeting where the documents were given to CIJA.

Judge Kerber then turned to Deußing’s proposals stemming from his investigation. Deußing explained that HRW had another report called “If the Dead Could Speak.” He and his team made written requests to the Federal Prosecutor’s Office asking for permission to make more requests about the case. They were granted permission to submit requests to HRW and Amnesty International. HRW published a report on torture as well. The Federal Prosecutor’s Office did not grant permission to summon victims as witnesses.

Judge Wiedner asked if he received a response from HRW or Amnesty International. Deußing said no.

Judge Wiedner asked why CIJA was willing to respond, but HRW and Amnesty were not. Deußing said that he did not receive a response from them.

Judge Wiedner noted that Deußing’s suggestion to put forth the CIJA request was made on February 15, 2019 and the final request was submitted by the Federal Prosecutor’s Office on March 6, 2019. Deußing said that CIJA’s response and its assistance was expected because it is an NGO that aims to help national authorities. Regarding HRW and Amnesty International, Deußing said that he could only speculate. They did not respond to the request and Deußing did not ask again.

Judge Kerber asked if the reason why Deußing did not pursue access to CIJA’s witnesses was because the witnesses were located in Syria and Turkey. Deußing confirmed and said that the witnesses were either abroad or unwilling to be questioned.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked how the photo-array of Raslan that was shown to the witnesses was created. Deußing explained that the BKA in Baden-Württemberg has a special department responsible for [creating photo-arrays]. Deußing sent them a photo of Raslan, then received the templates with dummies.

Judge Kerber asked for the meaning of “dummies.” Deußing said that he does not know, but they are not real people.

Judge Wiedner asked how dummies had birthdates. Deußing did not know how these were made.

Böcker wondered how non-living people could have birthdates. Deußing did not know.

[The witness was dismissed.]

[10-minute-break]

The second witness was Henning Lindemann, a 33-year-old criminal chief inspector at the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) in Meckenheim.

Testimony of Henning Lindemann

Judge Kerber asked Lindemann if he knew about the HRW report entitled “Torture Archipelago” published on July 3, 2012. Lindemann confirmed and said that he summarized the report in a note.

Judge Kerber recalled that this report was used as a source in the “structural investigation” of crimes committed in Syria. Judge Kerber then asked how Lindemann summarized the report’s content. Lindemann noted that he [was working as a criminal inspector and] was a candidate for criminal chief inspector when he translated and summarized the report. The report was based on interviews with victims and perpetrators (torturers), and all interviewees and detention facilities were listed in the annex of his note.

Judge Wiedner recalled a paragraph from the summary of the report which said that one method of torture was to burn people with acid. Judge Wiedner asked Lindemann if this was correct. Lindemann confirmed, but noted that he does not remember every method of torture described in the report.

Judge Wiedner referred to the annex of Lindemann’s note [on the HRW report] which listed several intelligence branches, including Branch 285 and Al-Khatib Branch. It also listed regional branches, other relevant places, heads of branches, and methods of torture used in these branches. Judge Wiedner recalled that Branch 285 was in Damascus and that Ali Mamlouk was the director of the general intelligence service. Judge Wiedner said that sexual and gender-based violence and torture (including the use of electricity) took place at Branch 285. Judge Wiedner noted that some branch officers were mentioned in the report. He asked Lindemann if he and his team could identify the head of Branch 251 based on the HRW report. Lindemann mentioned Ali Mamlouk (علي مملوك) and Ibrahim M’alla (إبراهيم معلا), but said that they could not identify the head of Branch 251 based on the report.

Judge Kerber asked if there were further questions for the witness. There were none and the witness was dismissed.

The judges started to read aloud a 2011 report of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic.

[Lunch break]

The judges continued to read aloud the 2011 report of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic.

The judges read aloud part of a 2012 report of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic.

[The building’s alarm went off, so the session was stopped and everybody was instructed to leave].

Trial Day 29 – September 03, 2020

The audience consisted of seven spectators and four members of the media. The proceedings began at 9:30AM.

Testimony of Alexander Frey

Alexander Frey is a 32-year-old high commissioner at the Federal Criminal Police Office in Meckenheim.

Questioning by the Judges

Judge Kerber asked Frey if he was familiar with the day's topic. Frey said yes, it concerns the arrest of Al-Gharib on February 12, 2019.

Judge Kerber asked Frey to tell the Court what happened in his own words. Frey said that he contacted the Foreigners' Registration Office and asked them to summon Al-Gharib. Frey did not want to arrest Al-Gharib at his home because he did not want Al-Gharib's children to see. The office agreed, then summoned Al-Gharib on February 12, 2019 at 8:00AM. Frey and a colleague informed Al-Gharib about the Federal Prosecutor's Office preliminary proceedings. Frey's interpreter translated the first two pages of the arrest warrant to Al-Gharib who was surprised by the charges. Al-Gharib was searched, as was his apartment. Al-Gharib was handcuffed. His hands were in front of him and were covered by a jacket. He smoked a cigarette and was driven to Zweibrücken Police Station, followed by the Federal Court of Justice [in Karlsruhe]. He arrived at the Federal Court of Justice between 11:00AM and 12:00PM. At 1:00PM, Al-Gharib's legal counsel arrived and accompanied him to a room where they could talk privately. After that, Al-Gharib was brought before the examining magistrate, then to the detention facility in Zweibrücken.

Judge Kerber asked Frey if Al-Gharib was informed of his rights. Frey confirmed and explained that Al-Gharib was given a paper in Arabic informing him of his rights. The paper was not read aloud. An interpreter was present.

Judge Kerber recalled Frey's statement that Al-Gharib was surprised by the charges. Judge Kerber asked if Al-Gharib verbalized that he was surprised. Frey explained that Al-Gharib looked surprised. He kept saying that there was a misunderstanding and that he did not do anything.

Judge Kerber asked if Al-Gharib was cooperative during the arrest. Frey said yes.

Judge Kerber asked if Al-Gharib was informed of his rights in Karlsruhe. Frey said that Al-Gharib was asked if he wanted to eat something. Judge Kerber clarified that her question referred to the beginning of the trip. Frey asked for clarification. Judge Kerber quoted the police transcript which said, "Al-Gharib was brought to Karlsruhe by officers Schneider, Hofbauer and Frey. At the beginning of the trip, it was explained to him that he had a right to avoid self-incrimination. During the trip, the search warrant and the other documents were translated to him." Frey confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if Al-Gharib made any statements. Frey said that Al-Gharib repeated that there was a misunderstanding. On the way to Karlsruhe, Al-Gharib seemed convinced that he would be going home afterwards. After Karlsruhe, Al-Gharib was distraught. On the way back, he repeatedly said that he did not do anything.

Judge Wiedner asked if Al-Gharib was calm, friendly, and cooperative. Frey said yes, but Al-Gharib was distraught.

Judge Wiedner asked if anybody was informed about the arrest. Frey said that Al-Gharib wanted to call his wife, but he did not have his cell phone and did not know her number. Eventually, Al-Gharib's sons were informed.

[The witness was dismissed.]

Testimony of Hans-Jürgen Schneider

Hans-Jürgen Schneider is a 47-year-old chief commissioner at the Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) in Meckenheim.

Schneider said that he and his colleagues went to Zweibrücken police station on June 24, 2019. They intended to take Al-Gharib to the examining magistrate in Karlsruhe. Al-Gharib's son served as the interpreter. Al-Gharib said that he felt ill. He was then transferred to a local clinic. After some tests were performed, the magistrate decided to hold the procedure at the clinic, so the magistrate drove there from Karlsruhe. The arrest warrant was upheld. Al-Gharib was taken back to the detention facility in Zweibrücken.

Judge Kerber asked about Al-Gharib's behaviour. Schneider said that Al-Gharib was cooperative and his family members were there.

Judge Kerber asked if Schneider spoke about the matter with Al-Gharib. Schneider said that they did not, according to his recollection.

Judge Kerber quoted the minutes which said that "during the entire procedure, Al-Gharib was not questioned as a suspect and said nothing with regard to this matter." Schneider confirmed the quote.

Judge Wiedner asked if Witness Frey was with Schneider in Zweibrücken. Schneider confirmed and noted that they did not have an interpreter which is why Al-Gharib's son had to translate. Then Al-Gharib said he had health issues.

Judge Wiedner asked if Al-Gharib had symptoms. Schneider said no. Al-Gharib complained about heart and respiratory problems, but he smoked.

Judge Wiedner asked if Schneider was familiar with the case. Schneider said yes.

Judge Wiedner asked if Schneider was aware that this was Al-Gharib's second arrest. Schneider said that he was aware. He was present at the first arrest.

Judge Wiedner asked how Al-Gharib reacted. Schneider said that Al-Gharib was confused, but cooperative.

Judge Wiedner asked if Al-Gharib said anything to him regarding his case. Schneider said no.

[The witness was dismissed.]

Judge Kerber announced the schedule for the upcoming sessions, then the judges started to read aloud parts of a Human Rights Council report and a report of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees.

[Lunch break]

For approximately 50 minutes, the judges continued to read aloud parts the Human Rights Council report and report of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees.

Judge Kerber mentioned that a verdict in Al-Gharib's case could be reached by the end of the year.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:35PM. The next hearing will be on September 09, 2020 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 12

Hearing dates of September 9 and 10, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 30 – September 9

- P14, a 55-year-old man, testified about his experience working as a civil servant, supervising burials of corpses from the state security apparatus, including from Sednaya Prison. He details the gruesome condition of the corpses with faces disfigured by acid and decomposing as well as the lack of sanitation for the team of civil servants that unloaded the bodies into the graves. His descriptions allude to torture in the prisons and hospital-directed deaths. As a supervisor to this team, P14 sheds some light on the record-keeping practices for mass graves and the secrecy surrounding the corpses and mass graves. Although the witness testified with a disguise to protect his identity, he walked outside the courtroom and spoke with his attorney without the disguise.

Trial Day 31 – September 10

- P14 continued his testimony showing a sketched example of the burial records, indicating numbers and locations. He also identified on a map the Al-Qutayfa and Najha cemeteries where he worked and described their surrounding locations. P14 clarified questions about which hospitals sent corpses to be buried in mass graves and the security codes that were assigned to the hospitals and prisons. The defense attempted to get more clarity on P14's job before the Syrian conflict, however, P14 did not answer those questions in public as he was concerned about revealing his identity.

Trial Day 30 – September 09, 2020

The proceedings began at 9:30 am. There were about 9 spectators and 5 individuals from the media present.

Chief Judge Dr. Kerber asked the translator to translate what she was going to say [as she does routinely]. She asked if any accredited Syrian journalists needed headphones for Arabic translation. One of the spectators raised his hand. Judge Kerber asked him to introduce himself. He said that his name is Tarek Khello طارق خَلّو and that he works for a German media channel. Judge Kerber pointed out that he was speaking with her and understood her in German, so she asked why he needed headphones. He said that he would not understand everything in German. Judge Kerber told him that he needs to meet with her during the break because she wanted to know whether he was related to the person who filed a second case regarding the Arabic translation. [Khello was given a headset after this conversation. He was the first accredited journalist to receive a headset for translation. He also received a headset the following trial day, however, he was the only person to receive the headset.]

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Defense Counsel Fratzki entered an administrative objection and disagreed on the use of certificates, UN reports and the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) report on September 2 and 3. There would not be an immediacy through a direct witness, it was only indirectly read out and was therefore objected to by the defense lawyers.

Senior Prosecutor Jasper Klinge reserved a right to respond later.

Judge Kerber said that on August 4, the witness decided that he would not give personal information. The witness wanted to conceal his face because he was threatened.

The witness P14, code-named Z30/07/19, entered the courtroom with his attorney Bernhard Docke from Bremen.

Linke mentioned concerns because he wanted to see the witness' facial expressions.

Judge Kerber asked if Linke knew about the threat against the witness' family in Syria. Linke replied that it would not change his opinion the fact that facial expressions are not visible.

Judge Kerber allowed P14's partial disguise. Even if he would have played only a secondary role within the system, there was still a threatening situation for the witness.

Linke objected and demanded a court decision.

***15 minutes were given for the decision. In total, there was a 30 minute break.***

The court decided to allow the partial disguise. He was a former member of a governmental office and is worried about his family in Syria and his relatives had already been threatened.

Linke wanted the decision in writing and asked for a 30 minute break.

***35-minute break***

Linke objected to the decision (remonstration): the person would be sitting in the front and cannot be seen by the people behind him. There were no film recordings or photographs. A threat would not be given regarding his identification. Facial expressions are valued as recognition of evidence and a mask would prevent this. Linke mentioned §68 (3) III StPO.<sup>2</sup>

Klinge responded that §68 (3) III StPO would apply when a witness gets threatened. If plaintiff lawyers ask questions, he might reflexively turn around and show his face.

---

<sup>2</sup> If there is reason to fear that revealing the identity or the place of residence or whereabouts of the witness would endanger the witness' or another person's life, limb or liberty, the witness may be permitted not to state personal particulars or to state particulars only of an earlier identity. However, if so asked at the main hearing, he shall be required to state in what capacity the facts he is indicating became known to him. Documents establishing the witness' identity shall be kept by the public prosecution office. They shall only be included in the files when the danger ceases.

Fratzki said that plaintiff lawyers could sit in the front and this argument would not count.

***Break***

The court did not change its decision.

Linke said that he could not see the witness and that his lawyer should move a bit backwards.

Testimony of P14

P14 is 55 years old. He was asked if he wanted to answer whether he is related to the accused. P14 responded no. Judge Kerber clarified whether he meant that he does not want to share the information or if he is not related to the accused. P14 said that he wanted to proceed and he is not related to the accused.

Judge Kerber said that P14 was questioned twice by the German police. He was asked about his occupation at the burials of possibly murdered people. Judge Kerber asked what could he say about this. P14 said that he used to work in the Damascus governorate [P14 probably meant the Damascus Governorate building, because it is common to say “governorate المحافظة” to refer to the building itself [مبنى المحافظة] as a civil worker [servant, but he used the word “worker”]. When the Syrian crisis began, 20 officers from the intelligence services were relocated to P14’s place of work [فرز] at them]. P14’s [original] task/work was to conduct traditional burials (the one with prayer), but after that, the officers forced them to go to Tishreen and Harasta military hospitals ( . مشففي تشرين و حرسا العسكريين ). There, they found big cargo trucks [lorries]. P14 and his coworkers were forced to take the trucks, accompanied by intelligence services forces/personnel, to bury “them” [“corpses”]. There were so many corpses, gathered/collected from all intelligence branches: military, Al-Khatib, political [security], and several other branches. They [the corpses] were taken to an unknown place, where there were already big excavations/diggings/holes [the words in Arabic are similar to each other, حفريات and حفر ] that were about six meters deep. From the lorries, they put the people [corpses] in the holes. The corpses used to come twice a week from the hospitals while the corpses from the Sednaya صيدنايا executions used to come on the same day [of the execution]. The number of corpses was big from 2011 to 2017 and the workers had no vacation. In some cases, high-ranking officers were present at the burials and they [P14 and his colleagues] were not allowed to come close to the area. This happened two or three times a month when the subject matter was classified/secret. P14 and his colleagues were not given papers/documents to know the exact number of corpses (they were given approximate numbers). They (we) used to see in civilian hospitals how the killing... [P14 did not finish his sentence].

Judge Kerber asked whether P14 saw the hospitals killing people or heard of it from others. P14 said that they were taken to Al-Mowasa المواساة and Al-Mojtahed المجتهد [hospitals] where the refrigerated trucks and the corpses were collected and they [P14 and colleagues] took them [the corpses]. A person in the hospital told P14 that they killed five people on that day, but P14 did not see that himself.

Judge Kerber repeated that P14 mentioned 2011 – 2017 and asked about the month. P14 said from October or November, he does not remember exactly.

Judge Kerber asked if P14 meant in 2011. P14 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked P14 to describe the refrigerated trucks. P14 said that the trucks used to come and park/queue up and the corpses were collected in them.

Judge Kerber asked about the truck's size. P14 said that they were similar to cargo trucks, so about 11 meters.

Judge Kerber inquired about the number of corpses. P14 said that it was not always the same numbers, but they were huge numbers.

Judge Kerber asked for an approximate number, as P14 had given during police questioning. P14 said 500 to 700 corpses.

Judge Kerber asked if he counted them. P14 said no, he did not count them himself.

Judge Kerber asked if the numbers were always in the hundreds. P14 said that it depended on what the officers told them. They told them to write down estimates like 200 or 500.

Judge Kerber asked about P14's task. P14 said that he had a notebook with the inventory/list [عملية الجرد].

Judge Kerber asked if he registered the documents. P14 said that the corpses were gathered from all of the military hospitals and branches, such as from the military branches Palestine 120 – 150, the Air Force, the military security, the area branch [Branch 227], Company 215, etc. They used to receive corpses from all of the branches of the Syrian regime.

Judge Kerber asked what P14 registered/wrote down. P14 said that they used to register the branches and the number of corpses next to them. When the corpses came, they had stickers on their heads and chests with numbers on them. They [the corpses] came naked and they [P14 and colleagues] saw the numbers and symbols [on the stickers] from far away. The corpses from Sednaya executions were buried on the same day [as the execution] but at night. The burials were in three areas: sometimes in Al-Qutayfa القطيفة and sometimes in Najha, نجها while the Air Force [intelligence] used to bury the corpses in the same branch [as the execution].

Judge Kerber asked if they counted using the numbers on the corpses or in the documents. P14 said that the numbers were in the documents and they did not use them to count.

Judge Kerber again asked what they registered/wrote down. P14 said they just wrote the name of the branch.

Judge Kerber asked if there was anything else. P14 said the name of the branch and the number.

Judge Kerber asked if P14 meant the number of corpses or the number on the foreheads of the corpses. P14 clarified that they wrote the number of corpses.

Judge Kerber asked P14 about Division 40. P14 said it is state security like Al-Khatib branch. Corpses came from the State security administration, Division 40, Al-Khatib branch, Palestine branch, the political security branch, the area branch, Company 215, the patrol's branch, and they [the corpses] even came from the Air Force administration.

Judge Kerber asked which branch most of the corpses came from. P14 said that he used to hear officers saying that on particular days [“today”], the state security was really working [meaning: today, the state security is “going ham”].

Judge Kerber recalled that P14 saw the trucks in front of the hospitals and asked if he went inside the hospitals as well. P14 said that they were accompanied by civil workers. Mobile phones were not allowed, nor were they allowed to speak with each other. [The corpses] from Sednaya Prison’s executions were obviously from the same day [the people were killed on the same day they were being transported; i.e. fresh]. There were two or three cars with bodies that came twice a week.

Judge Kerber asked how they were transported to the graves from the hospitals. P14 said that a patrol [of cars] used to come to take them [P14 and his colleagues] from their workplace.

Judge Kerber asked where they were taken to. P14 said to the burial locations: Najha and Al-Qutayfa.

Judge Kerber asked how big the graves were and if they were six meters deep. P14 said that the excavator’s driver told them that he dug six meters deep each day and the bulldozer’s driver said that he made a mountain of dirt [soil].

Judge Kerber asked if P14 saw that. P14 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked about the length and the width of the hole. P14 said that it was long, about 100 to 300 meters.

Judge Kerber asked about the width. P14 said 3 or 4 meters to 10 meters [P14 was estimating and indicated he meant “something like that”].

Judge Kerber asked if P14 saw the corpses being buried. P14 said that he was standing about ten meters away, because of the smell. The refrigerated truck used to come, they would open its [rear] door, the workers would climb into the truck, and then they would push/shove the corpses out.

Judge Kerber asked whether the corpses were carried [to the graves] or dumped [like unloading a sand truck]. P14 said dumped and the bulldozer backfilled it.

Judge Kerber asked how many graves there were. P14 said that the bulldozer leveled the ground/land and cleared a large surface area. That area is dug up. For example, the diameter of the hole was 4000 – 5000 meters [The translator said “square meter,” however, the witness used the word diameter it was implied].

Judge Kerber asked if the hole was closed/filled up in one day. P14 said it took more than one day to be filled, sometimes over a month. They used to dig and backfill repeatedly. P14 said that the holes were not aligned with each one in a certain place.

Judge Kerber asked P14 to describe the appearance of the corpses and if, for example, they were skinny. P14 said that the workers who unloaded the corpses told him that there were apparent signs of torture on the corpses. The facial features were erased/wiped out and there were bruises and redness on them. The corpses from Sednaya had marks from a rope wrapped around the neck. The corpses were intact, but the abrasions appeared new/fresh and there were signs of electrical currents on their bodies and their fingernails had been extracted.

Judge Kerber asked if P14 personally witnessed that. P14 said that he did get closer to the corpses from Sednaya because they did not smell.

Judge Kerber asked if P14 saw bruises. P14 said that he saw with his own eyes the corpses from Sednaya and the injuries/condition of the bodies.

Judge Kerber asked if that has had negative impacts on him. P14 said that he used to always stay far away from the corpses [during his work]. Even after P14 came to Germany, he is still having nightmares. Even during the police questioning, an ambulance had to come for him (due to low blood pressure and diabetes).

Judge Kerber asked if P14 needed a break. P14 requested a short one to smoke a cigarette.

***15-minute break***

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked P14 how he got started in this work. P14 said that he was a normal worker until security officers came and told him that he had to come with him. They told him to bring several other workers with him. P14 then gave them [the officers] the full names of 14 workers.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 knows the names of the security officers. P14 said yes, he knows them.

Judge Wiedner asked P14 if he was willing to disclose the names. [P14 discussed with his attorney.] P14's attorney said that they would have gladly given the names, but the answer would expose the identity of the witness.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P14 mentioned the names during the police questioning and wondered whether he should quote/recollect what P14 said during the testimony.

P14's lawyer, Docke, asked for this not to be discussed at the main trial.

Defense Counsel Hannes Linke suggested excluding it from public.

Docke said that the question could be answered if it was asking if the names were correct without repeating them in the public main trial.

Judge Wiedner retracted his question. Instead, Judge Wiedner asked if the officers told him to bring his coworkers with him. P14 said that they [the officers] came to the place where he and his colleagues used to do civilian work. They went to their [P14 and colleagues] manager/boss and then chose workers to bring with them. P14 said that he was unable to work unloading the corpses, but some of the workers accepted/agreed to do this. The security officer told P14 to stay and serve as a supervisor to the workers and to take them there [to the work location] and to bring them back [i.e. drive them back and forth].

Judge Wiedner asked if the nature of the work was explained to them. P14 said that he did not understand the question.

Judge Wiedner reframed the question asking if P14 was told what he would work on. P14 said that, in the beginning, their [P14 and colleagues] manager/boss told them that the officers had corpses and that P14 and his colleagues needed to bury them (in a traditional way).

Judge Wiedner asked P14 to describe a typical working day. P14 asked if the question could be clarified.

Judge Wiedner said that P14 seemed to be at the gravesite often. He asked P14 how many times a month he was there. P14 said that he was at the gravesite whenever there were burying procedures. They gave P14 one of their cars so that he did not have to stop at checkpoints.

Judge Wiedner asked what type of car. P14 said that it was a 14-passengers vehicle – a Nissan Sunny.

Judge Wiedner asked what P14 did with that car. P14 said that he drove it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 used to drive the workers. P14 confirmed but said he didn't drive them for long distances. For example, Damascus to Al-Qutayfa is 30 to 40 kilometers, or Damascus to Najha is about 15 kilometers.

Judge Wiedner made a remonstration (refreshed the witness' recollection with a prior statement), quoting "An employee came to his office, he received a list and a car without a license plate and images of Assad." P14 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked how many people were with P14. P14 said 8 to 12 and, sometimes, they [the officers] used to bring workers of their own. It depended on the number [of corpses] that needed to be buried.

Judge Wiedner asked how long the burial work lasted. P14 said that they used to go to work around 4 or 5 am and come back at 8 or 9 am. P14 said that by 10 am, they were done [the work was finished].

Judge Wiedner asked if they were accompanied by an intelligence services' bus. P14 confirmed that there was a security bus with them.

Judge Wiedner asked if the vehicles went inside [could enter] the burial location and if it was fenced and guarded. P14 said that the area was within/a part of a military camp/compound. [قطعة عسكرية]. P14 said that the compound even said that no civilian was allowed to enter, except for them [P14 and colleagues], because their vehicles were known.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were checkpoints before reaching the burial location. P14 said that there were two of them.

Judge Wiedner asked if the checkpoints were occupied by soldiers. P14 said that there was a checkpoint on the way to the crossroad of the burial site with a colonel عقيد and had his forces/personnel [عناصر]. However, P14 and his colleagues were allowed in because they [the checkpoint's forces] recognized that the vehicle belonged to the officers.

Judge Wiedner asked if the burial sites were enclosed. P14 said that Al-Qutayfa Cemetery was surrounded by a two to three-meter-high mound/hill. Najha Cemetery was surrounded by a seven to eight meter wall and had a gate.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 was present at multiple sites. P14 said he was at Al-Qutayfa and Najha. They were not taken to the Air Force branch, but the bulldozer's driver [at one of the cemeteries] told them that they used to bury corpses there [in the branch].

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that P14 was not present at other burial sites. P14 confirmed and said he was only at Al-Qutayfa and Najha cemeteries.

Judge Wiedner questioned P14 about other locations. P14 said that there were burial sites in other intelligence services [branches] that they knew about.

Judge Wiedner made a remonstrance - "Other graveyards that belonged to the air force, secret graveyards, also the military airport in Mezzeh" and asked if P14 went to those sites. P14 said that they did not enter them, but at the Air Force branch and Al-Mazzeah airport, مطار المزة, they used to bury corpses underneath the runway (according to the bulldozer driver).

Judge Wiedner reminded P14 that in the police questioning he said that there were secret cemeteries in Al-Mazzeah. P14 said that he was not present there, but the bulldozer driver told them this.

Judge Wiedner asked who provided P14 with that information. P14 said that the person who told him about it used to dig there [the airport/branch in Al-Mazzeah], but the secret burials were between 12 to 1 am. They were in Najha Cemetery and were always accompanied by DShK-mounted vehicles. There were around 20 squads of intelligence services outside [It is unclear what P14 meant by "outside", but it is assumed he meant outside the hospital/branch where they were loading the corpses].

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 was present during any of the secret burials. P14 said that he was present in the secret burial, but they were not given information nor papers [documents]. P14 used to just drive the workers back and forth and did not know where the corpses came from. A brigadier general or higher [rank] was present.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 was present in Najha and the Air Force branch. P14 said that he used to drive the workers back and forth. Regarding the Air Force branch, it was utterly forbidden for anyone but the gravedigger to enter.

Judge Wiedner asked how often P14 used to go to the cemeteries. P14 said that the burials of corpses from Sednaya Prison were twice a week. The refrigerated trucks from Tishreen and Harasta [hospitals] arrived once or twice a week and each time there was either one or two refrigerator trucks.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was four times a week, for example. P14 said that they worked each Monday and Wednesday or Thursday (burying the corpses from Sednaya prison). Twice a week for Tishreen and Harasta hospitals as well. He was referring to the gathering of the corpses from the branches, except for Al-Mojtahed and Al-Mowasa [hospitals], which were gathered twice or thrice a month.

Judge Wiedner asked how P14 knew where the corpses came from. P14 said that the information was in the documents. It stated, for example, Palestine branch and the number and there were 10 to 15 branches of the military security listed.

Judge Wiedner asked P14 when the officers used to take the lists. P14 said after they finished the burial. They [ "we" ] knew that the papers were with them [he said us] and the officer took the papers with him. He was relocated [فرز] to their workplace so that no information leaked outside. He used to put them [the papers/documents] in his closet.

Judge Wiedner asked where the list came from. P14 said it came from the officers who accompanied the refrigerated trucks.

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct the list was from someone in the security vehicles who accompanied the workers. P14 said that when the refrigerated trucks left Tishreen and Harasta [hospitals], either they [the convoy of refrigerated trucks] preceded “us”, or “we” preceded them [to the burial site] [Either the convoy of refrigerated trucks arrived at the location first, or P14 and the workers arrived first]. However, they [the refrigerated trucks] were accompanied by their own security forces and officers.

Judge Wiedner asked what P14 did with the lists. P14 said that he did not do anything with the lists at the [burial] location. He did not need to do anything.

Judge Wiedner asked what P14 used to register/write down. P14 said that the officer with the logbook used to tell them [P14 and colleagues] that these [numbers of the corpses] were from the Palestine Branch and these were from another location. “We” [Syrians] have three branches of state security: Al-Khatib, Division 40, and state security administration/directorate, which is large.

Judge Kerber asked what happened with the logbook. P14 said that he and his colleagues used to register/write down the information in the logbook when there was a security officer with them. Then he [the officer] took the logbook and left with the logbook.

Judge Kerber asked if P14 made that logbook. P14 said no, they, the intelligence [personnel] made it, but they used to calculate in front of P14.

Judge Wiedner recalled that during the August 14, 2019 police questioning, P14 said “I had a register with me, the employees gave me a paper with numbers that I registered, approximately DIN A-3.” Judge Wiedner asked P14 what he used to write. P14 said that he used to write numbers, for example, 300, 400, or 1000. He wrote down the numbers on papers and made copies of them. The workers with P14 used to help in writing down/registering, but P14 had an office inside.

Judge Wiedner asked P14 if he had an office at the cemetery. P14 said no, it was within the governmental service/department where P14 was employed.

Judge Wiedner asked what P14 wrote down. P14 said that it depended on what numbers he was told. For example, he [the officer] would tell P14: “Palestine branch, write down 400, Division 40 [It was translated to 50, but Kroker mentioned that there was a mistake in the translation] and, write down 100 – 200.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 wrote down/registered dates. P14 said not consistently [not all the time], for example, 5/5 [May 5] was only the day of the burial.

Judge Wiedner reminded P14 that in the police questioning he said it was day – date – number. Corpses had numbers and he noted them. In every truck there were around 700-750 corpses, always two to three trucks, far away. There was a paper with numbers and P14 registered the numbers. P14 said that when the refrigerated trucks came and the burials began, P14 used to stand far away because of the bad smell. P14 said that he stood by that car [or truck], as they [corpses] used to come from several branches, but the corpses from Sednaya Prison had a number and a symbol.

Judge Wiedner asked if the numbers and the symbols were on the corpses. P14 said yes, and sometimes on the refrigerated trucks, in which they were gathered.

Judge Wiedner asked where the numbers or symbols were on the corpses. P14 said, on the forehead and the chest. For example, on the forehead, a sticker said 215 and a symbol or it said 227 and a symbol.

Judge Wiedner asked what specific symbols were on the corpses. P14 said that he does not know. It was a secret that only "they" knew.

Judge Wiedner asked how he knew about them from a distance. P14 said that the people who used to unload the corpses used to tell him. But the corpses from Sednaya had no smell [did not stink], therefore, P14 would get closer. He could see from a close distance the corpses being unloaded.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 saw the corpses from Sednaya. P14 said yes, he was fairly close to the cars, but not the refrigerated trucks.

Judge Wiedner asked if the workers had safety equipment for protection. P14 said that they put [face] masks on, but not always. The officer did not give them anything, not even alcohol. P14 said that some of the workers, (two), were afflicted by serious diseases and some of them [the workers] died.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were rooms to change clothes. P14 said that they [the workers] did not change clothes, but only wore aprons which they left at the cemetery to wear the next time. They washed their hands with water and soap and had delicate/thin medical gloves.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P14 said there was a room with a water closet and a changing room in the area and that P14 did not take anyone with him who was not wearing clean clothes. P14 confirmed saying that there was a room in Najha Cemetery. In Al-Qutayfa, it was a wall (a room with no ceiling). In Najha, water was available for washing. They [we] used to take water gallons to Al-Qutayfa, and when the workers took off their aprons, they poured water on themselves.

Judge Wiedner asked how far P14 was when the corpses were unloaded. P14 said that sometimes he was 10 to 20 meters away, but he was able to see.

Judge Wiedner recalled that during police questioning, P14 said, every week there were trucks with 700 corpses with pathogens and stench. And that he did not have a face mask like the others. In the questioning he said the smell stayed in one's nose/ head, as it was very extreme and as soon as doors were opened, you could smell it 100 meters away. There were rivers of blood and maggots and he could not eat in the first days. P14 confirmed.

Böcker asked if the quotation/remonstrance started with "every." Judge Wiedner said no.

***Lunch break***

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 saw the marks indicating the cause of death (strangulation) on the corpses or if someone told P14 about them. P14 said that the cause [of death] in Sednaya was execution and the burials were on the same day.

Judge Wiedner asked if someone told P14 that they were executed on the same day. P14 said the officer who brought them, and even the workers who brought [or carried] the corpses, said that they [the corpses] were warm, not cold.

Judge Wiedner asked what the officer said. P14 said that the officer claimed that the execution was at 12:00 am, midnight, and the burial was between 4:00 am to 5:00 am.

Judge Wiedner asked if the officer told P14 about executions. P14 said yes, once, one of the officers told him. One time, one of the executed was still alive and on his last breaths. The officer ordered the bulldozer to run him [the dying person] over.

Judge Wiedner said that that was in regards to the warm corpses and questioned if P14 knows the cause of death of the other corpses. P14 said that the workers were the ones who unloaded the trucks, but P14 was far away from them because of the strong smell. When they [the workers] got off, they talked to each other and told “us” [P14 and others] that some of the corpses were worn out and some of them had no [facial] features. That is what the workers mentioned [about the corpses] from the refrigerated trucks that had a [bad] smell. They also said that there were numbers on the foreheads and chests.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 was told the cause of their death. P14 said that the officers did not speak about the matter, but the workers used to say that there were bloated corpses, decomposed corpses, and bony corpses. However, they said that the facial features had completely vanished/disappeared.

Judge Wiedner recalled that during the questioning P14 had said that a chemical substance was used on the faces. P14 said yes, similar to an “acid substance” [مِية نار أو أسيد “Fire water” is a commonly used word by people in Syria to describe nitric or sulfuric acid] that they used to put on the faces. The workers said that there was no way that nothing had been poured on their [corpses’] faces.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was used only on the face or also on the body. P14 said just on the face. The rest [of the body] was decomposing.

Judge Wiedner asked what P14 meant by saying they were broken up. P14 said that by “broken up,” [مكسرات] he meant dissolved, with a mucus material dripping from them and they had worms in them. P14 said that when a security person [عنصر أمن] was with them [P14 and his colleagues] at their workplace, they cooperated [worked/helped] with him and wrote down the numbers and the branches. Just by the mere discussion, P14 used to be unable to eat or drink anything for two to three days, not to mention the smell [P14 meant that when they talked about the corpses at work, he was so disgusted, that he was not able to eat]. By the end [in the last days/ after a while], they got used to it [the smell] like one does a perfume. Regardless of what they did or how much they washed at home, the smell remained nesting in their noses. P14 said that he thanks his God that he is staying in Germany for a while, but he still has nightmares at night.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were signs of abuse on the corpses. P14 said that the workers used to talk amongst each other that there was blueness [bruises] on his [the corpse] back, chest, fingernails, or toenails. Some of the corpses were even handcuffed behind their backs. The corpses from Sednaya were handcuffed with plastic [strands] or with standard handcuffs.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P14 said during the police questioning that “on the corpses, there were signs of beating: blue, old ones and red, recent ones, and there was a cut off penis. Sometimes, the signs were on the back and sometimes on the legs.” P14 confirmed. The 11-meter refrigerated trucks were loaded from the back to the front and when the doors opened, the ones [corpses] that were at the door had been there for no more than two days [not more than two days had passed since the corpses were placed at the door. They were fresh]. When they [the workers] opened the doors of the refrigerator, they said that they saw red or black signs [of beating]. The corpses’ refrigerator was sealed airtight and when it was opened, it was as if one had opened a gas cylinder.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 saw that himself. P14 said that he saw that from a distance and also was told that.

Judge Wiedner asked how they used to unload the corpses. P14 said that the procedure of unloading the corpses was [as follows]: when the refrigerated truck stops [parks], it was elevated from the front and the workers get on it and pull/drag the corpses so that they [the corpses] fall into the hole [grave] haphazardly. For example, if the hole was 100 meters, they used to bury corpses in 10 meters and the other 90 meters was left open. They used to fill a section of the hole and then backfill it. The surface area of the land was very vast.

Judge Wiedner recalled that during police questioning P14 said that they used to backfill the entire hole [grave]. P14 said yes, some of the holes were 50 meters, some were 100 to 200 meters, and some of the holes had 20 burials [20 دفنة means 20 burial procedures, digging and back filling] until they were completely backfilled. They used to call the hole a “line” and they would say “that line was filled up/done.” Some of the lines were long and had 50 to 60 burials [burial procedures]. The bulldozer and the excavator were always there.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were female corpses. P14 said that occasionally the workers would say [that they saw] a woman with her children. P14 said that he once saw a case where a woman was hugging her child. P14 saw that the woman and the child were dead. On that day, P14 had a [nervous] breakdown, more than raping and killing [He meant that he broke down after seeing that, even more than he would break down after a rape or murder case].

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 personally saw that. P14 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked whether the workers said that there were child corpses. P14 replied that they said there were women and girls.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 needed a break. P14 said no. Judge Kerber assured P14 that he can choose whatever is best for him. P14 said that he would carry on.

Judge Wiedner said that P14 knew the numbers of the corpses asking how P14 arrived at these numbers in the lists. P14 said that as he previously stated, a security person [عنصر أمن] was assigned to their [P14 and his colleague's] civilian governmental service/department where P14 had an office. The security officer used to come with the papers and P14 used to help him. He [the officer] transcribed the numbers to P14 and P14 wrote in the papers something like Palestine Branch, area branch, patrol branch, Al-Khatib Branch, Division 40. That security person [عنصر أمن] would photocopy the file while the big logbook was being filled out with numbers. He [the security person] put the logbook in the closet and took some [papers] to the work manager and his boss.

Judge Wiedner asked if he was talking about the record of the buried. P14 said that they used to fill out the logbook after the burial was over (for the refrigerated trucks from Tishreen and Harasta military hospitals).

Judge Wiedner asked if the numbers were the numbers of the corpses that came from the hospitals. P14 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were numbers for Al-Khatib Branch in the lists. Defense Counsel Michael Böcker said that P14 would not have said it with the list's labelling.

Judge Wiedner said that yes, P14 had mentioned and repeated his question. P14 said that they got papers from security personnel [عناصر أمن] at several branches. In each burial, they found Palestine Branch, Al-Khatib Branch, etc. Syria's military security has ten branches, state security has three branches, and the air force has two branches. Numbers were written down, but P14 does not remember the numbers precisely. Al-Khatib could have been 100 or 200.

Judge Wiedner asked whether the number or the name of the dead was written down. P14 said that when the papers came, they said: "Palestine 150."

Judge Kerber explained that the question was whether the name of the dead was written in the list/logbook or its number. P14 said 247, 293 military security.

Judge Kerber asked about Al-Khatib. P14 said that he did not hear a number, but he heard someone say "We received 100 from Al-Khatib..."

Judge Kerber asked if Al-Khatib had a specific number. P14 said that he thinks that it was 247.

Judge Kerber asked if number 251 means something to P14 but assured P14 that if he did not know, it was not a problem. P14 said that a long time ago, he used to memorize the branches and their numbers.

Judge Kerber said that she was asking only about Al-Khatib's number. P14 said that they only said "Al-Khatib, state security. Division 40, state security," etc. These were different from the military security, Palestine, or the area branches.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 remembers a specific number of corpses from Al-Khatib. P14 said that he does not know a specific number.

Judge Wiedner asked for an approximate number. P14 repeated as he said in the beginning, that in September, October, or November 2011 the security [personnel/forces] who took P14 and his colleagues back and forth did not tell them anything. After that, they slowly began to know the workers and trust them more. P14 said that he could say 100, but it could turn out to be more than that. Therefore, P14 could not say a number. But the important thing is that the burial was one million, or one and a half million, maybe 4 million. Every week, the land that was dug and filled was big/vast. "We used to guess/speculate/estimate in our mind: if the hole is six meters deep and the whole surface area of the land was used for burials" [then, the numbers would be as they estimated].

Judge Wiedner clarified that he did not mean the whole count, but rather how many from Al-Khatib in 2011 and 2012. Böcker interrupted and said that he understood from P14 that there was no differentiation between the state security branches.

Judge Wiedner said that he would get to state security soon but he was asking specifically about Al-Khatib - about the number of dead in the registry/record/logbook from Al-Khatib from 2011 and 2012. P14 said that they [the corpses] used to come from branches, including from Al-Khatib but not all the time, about twice a month and sometimes only once. Additionally, Al-Khatib was the one most associated with civilian hospitals; like Al-Mojtahed and Al-Mowasa, not just Tishreen and Harasta.

Judge Wiedner asked if the classifications of the branches were written. P14 said that they were written on the paper from the security personnel [عنصر الأمن]

Judge Wiedner asked if the number of the dead was written. P14 said there were no names, only numbers.

Judge Wiedner asked what number, whether 5, 10, or 500, was written on the paper for Al-Khatib. P14 said that he does not remember.

Judge Wiedner recalled that in the police questioning P14 said a number of names from the state security. P14 said that he did not understand the question.

Judge Wiedner said that P14 said that there was no exact information as the lists were often mixed. 50,000 names were from the state security alone (2011 and 2012), so about 25,000 names per year. P14 said that state security has three sections: Al-Khatib, Division 40, and the state security administration.

Judge Wiedner asked if the state security administration had a number [was coded by a number]. P14 said that it had a number, but he does not remember it.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was 285. P14 said that they used to say "251, state security", but he does not remember. However, P14 remembers the rest - names and numbers.

Judge Wiedner made a remonstrance - "How many names from al-Khatib? Of 25,000 names from the state security: 1) about 10,000 came from Al-Khatib 2) about 10,000 from Division 40 and 3) 5,000 from the administration; each in 2011 and 2012. From 2013 on, the numbers increased". P14 asked if Judge Wiedner meant numbers or corpse counts. [Apparently, P14 was confused between the number of the branch (like Al-Khatib = 251) and the number/count of the corpses].

Judge Wiedner recalled from P14's testimony that he said, "3,500-5,000 corpses from Al-Khatib and Division 40 together."

Judge Wiedner then made another remonstrance/recollection: "He would have seen corpses with the symbol of Al-Khatib, 10, 15, 20. Of 700 corpses, 10 or 15 came from the state security, maybe Al-Khatib".

Judge Wiedner said that those numbers would be far apart from each other. P14 said that he was shown photos during the police questioning and he said that each branch has a code/symbol. The security person [عنصر الأمن] at work told P14 that "this number and this letter" means Al-Khatib, because he [the security person] knows these things.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 could give approximate numbers from Al-Khatib. P14 said that he would say the whole state security.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 had just said only a part of the state security. P14 said yes, the state security contains three branches. Al-Khatib belongs to the state security. The numbers [the count of corpses] increased, and sometimes, they were not able to count [the corpses].

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 remembers a number from Al-Khatib from any day [at any time]. P14 said that in a year, [the number was] 3000 to 4000 or 5000, but he cannot say exactly. P14 said that "they" knew that one of the civilian workers leaked information, so, they took him [the civilian worker] to Al-Khatib and imprisoned him. The worker stayed at Al-Khatib for around a month, more or less, and then was released. He [the imprisoned worker] told P14 that when a person dies in the prison, they wrap him with a blanket and leave him among “us” [the prisoners]. P14 said that that person kept working with them until 2017, and P14 could say his name. P14 said that he mentioned the names of the workers [in the police questioning] and the rest of the information/data is with Mr Docke [P14’s lawyer]. P14 said that, overall, he thought one million or one and half a million corpses, considering/thinking about what the workers told him. There could be three million or less. However, by looking at it, it gives a hint/suggestion that the numbers were big.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 meant between 2011 and 2017.

Plaintiff Counsel Manuel Reiger pointed out that there were two hecklings from the accused [Raslan] and he wanted to know what Raslan had said.

Böcker said that there was no heckling in the main trial. Böcker also said that if the witness wanted protection for himself and his family, he should not walk around the court building while being unmasked and talking to his lawyer.

Judge Kerber said that they would talk about it soon.

P14’s attorney said that his client’s blood pressure had dropped and he was unable to continue. P14 was asked if he needed an ambulance. P14 said he did not.

The proceedings were adjourned at 03:00 p.m.

The next trial day will be on September 10, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

A note from the Trial Monitor:

Tarek Khello, a Syrian journalist informed the court reporter that when Eyad was preparing to go outside the courtroom, he looked at Tarek and said in relatively loud voice [so that Tarek hears him]: “Thanks for your efforts [meaning the court] and the efforts of the German government, which is fighting the Hitlers.”

Trial Day 31 – September 10, 2020

The proceedings began at 9:30 a.m. There were about 9 spectators and 5 individuals from the media present.

Police Officer Knappmann will not come but will be summoned again.

Mrs. Frier will not be summoned again.

The prosecution seeks to give a statement on [name redacted].

Klinge also mentioned a statement of Deußing regarding the Caesar case.

Judge Kerber said that the Caesar photos will be electronically available.

***20-minute break because the witness had not yet arrived.***

A sketch that P14 made during the police questioning was shown.

Surface area of the burial location

Ahmad Mohammad

مساحة الأرض تبع الدفن

أحمد محمد

1
51
63
100
120
70
60

[Spectators were worried that the name at the top right was the name of the witness, but it was clarified later that it was a random name].

P14 said that in the list, it was written like: "X branch 51, Y branch 63..." [P14 was just giving an example].

Judge Kerber asked how the land surface area is related to the lists. P14 said that he was answering a question during the police questioning and he was drawing randomly, then, P14 told the police that there were letters.

Judge Kerber asked if the lists contained codes/symbols. P14 said that it was the same [he was just drawing randomly], but P14 did not know the codes/symbols. Only the security branches knew them. P14 added that the Latin letters were written by the police. P14 gave an example 40 د [S 40] (د = أمن دولة) [S = State security]]. [Therefore, it is assumed that P14 meant by S 40: State security, Division 40].

Judge Kerber asked if it was correct that the order was: number of dead / the branch / the division. P14 confirmed. During the burials of the corpses from Tishreen and Harasta, there were six to ten documents. For the corpses in the refrigerated truck, there were documents as well, sometimes five. Every document was from another branch.

Another sketch that P14 made during the police questioning was shown.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 knew the “list with detainees” meant corpses. P14 did not understand the question.

Judge Wiedner asked P14 which institutions the lists came from. P14 said that he did not know the number of detainees and only the approximate number of corpses.

Judge Wiedner asked what the sketch was and what the branches had to do with the burials. P14 said that the police asked him to write down the names of the branches where the corpses came from. P14 said that each branch has its specialty and told the police about the fourth division saying that the burial was there. P14 said that he added “police شرطة” after “criminal جنائية” [It is common in Syria to call the criminal police by the adjective alone, جنائية without saying “police.” He added “police” after that to clarify to the German police in the interrogation that by “criminal,” he meant “criminal police.”], because it is the civilian wing. The political security police and the military security police are independent authorities and interfere in everything, even in the woman and children [The trial monitor does not know what was meant by that statement].

A satellite image was shown.

[Coordinates: 33.736029, 36.598190]

P14 said that he was shown this photo from Google and he was told to point to Najha and Al-Qutayfa Cemeteries.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 saw Al-Qutayfa Cemetery in the photo [In the courtroom, Judge Wiedner indicated the photo and said “here”]. P14 said that he could recognize [its location] if he saw the Arabic writings.

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 wrote the note on the photos [the note was in German]. P14 said that he only knows Arabic. The police wrote it [the note].

Judge Wiedner clarified that P14 said that he was unable to see Al-Qutayfa Cemetery on the map. P14 said yes, he said that it was in a different area than Najha. They are in different directions.

Judge Wiedner said that another photo would be shown in a moment, but he was asking about the one that was currently being shown. P14 said no, he could not indicate the location.

Another satellite image was shown.

[Coordinates: 33.41637557,36.37156671]

P14 said that that place is close to Najha, Afamyia أفاميا hotel [The trial monitor believes that the name of the mentioned hotel was a slip of the tongue because it is located in Damascus. Whereas, the actual hotel that he meant, mentioned in the following question, Ebela, is close to Najha. “Afamyia” seemed to be at the tip of his tongue], Damascus Airport Road [highway]. It was around ten kilometers away from the airport. Whereas, Al-Qutayfa is a mountainous and desert area.

Judge Wiedner asked if Najha Cemetery was visible to P14 on the map. P14 said “now no”, but he knows that when he was in the cemetery, he was able to see Ebela إيبلا hotel.

Defense Counsel Böcker asked what direction the airport was located from Damascus, for example, north or south. P14 replied that Damascus International Airport is about 15 to 17 kilometers east of Damascus because it is surrounded by the Eastern Ghouta الغوطة الشرقية.

Böcker asked the same question about Al-Qutayfa Cemetery. P14 said that Al-Qutayfa Cemetery is in the direction of Homs حمص.

Böcker asked if P14 meant north. P14 said that it was in the direction of Homs International Road [Highway]. However, Al-Qutayfa Cemetery is 40 kilometers from Damascus.

Schuster recalled that P14 said that he saw a hotel on the map and asked what the name of the hotel is. P14 replied that it is Ebela.

P14 asked for a ten minute break, but Scharmer had only one question. He asked where P14 saw the hotel in Al_Qutayfa district. P14 showed him where he saw the symbol of a hotel, but did not want to determine whether it was Najha or Al-Qutayfa.

***A 10 minute break was given and extended for another 10 minutes due to a German-wide alarm)***

A zoomed-out satellite image was shown.

[Coordinates: 33.736029, 36.598190]

Judge Wiedner asked if P14 recognized anything. P14 said no, it was difficult.

Plaintiff Counsel Sebastian Scharmer asked if the image could be further zoomed-out to show the area in relation to Damascus.

[The image was zoomed out]

P14 said that it is not apparent, because it a desert and barren/waste area. They used to enter a long dirt road to go to the cemetery.

Questioning by Senior Prosecutor Jasper Klinge

Prosecutor Klinge recalled that during the July 30, 2019 police questioning concerning the beginning of P14's occupation in October/ November 2011 P14 stated: "In May or June in 2011 they would have first been commissioned to keep the minutes about the corpses. Twice in July 2011, but this was the first time in Al-Qutayfa." P14 said yes, he had said that at the beginning of their work, they [P14 and the workers] had not been trusted but they were taken to work. During the first and second phases, they did not know anything.

Klinge asked if July 2011 was the first time P14 was in Al-Qutayfa. P14 said not exactly, but approximately, yes.

Klinge asked which hospitals collected the corpses. P14 responded that as he had said the corpses were from Tishreen and Harasta military hospitals, and from Al-Mowasa and Al-Mojtahed, which were civilian hospitals. P14 said that the corpses were gathered from these four hospitals.

Klinge recalled that P14 also mentioned Hospital 601 in the questioning and asked P14 if it had a name. P14 said that Hospital 601 is like Tishreen and belongs to/is under the administration of it [Tishreen]. Its name was 601, but the corpses were collected from Tishreen.

Klinge asked about Al-Mazzeħ المزة hospital. P14 said that Al-Mazzeħ hospital is Hospital 601.

Klinge asked if it is the same as Tishreen hospital. P14 said that Tishreen Hospital has a different location than Al-Mazzeħ's.

Klinge asked if corpses were also gathered in Al-Mazzeħ. P14 said that Al-Mazzeħ Hospital is a military one like Tishreen and Harasta, whereas, Al-Mowasa and Al-Mojtahed were civilian hospitals. The corpses were gathered in it [By it, P14 seems to be referring to Al-Mazzeħ Hospital].

Klinge asked how P14 knew that the corpses were gathered in Al-Mazzeħ. P14 said that on the way there [It is not clear if P14 meant Al-Mazzeħ or "the cemetery" by "there"], they used to say "we received from X hospital..."

Klinge asked if P14 only heard this information, but did not see it. P14 said that Hospital 601 is a small hospital and he does not imagine that a refrigerated truck could park in it, but they sent small cars from 601 to Tishreen [hospital].

Klinge asked if P14 was there personally. P14 said that he, himself, was not present.

Klinge asked where P14 used to meet the officers. P14 said they met in Tishreen Hospital, because the officers who used to accompany them had offices there.

Klinge asked if the meeting point was in the cemetery. P14 said that usually he used to drive the workers from his civilian working place to the hospitals, and then they'd drive to the burial location but sometimes they met at the burial location. It was either they [the convoy of refrigerator trucks] preceded "us", or "we" preceded them.

Klinge clarified that it was not in the hospitals where P14 saw the officers. P14 said that he saw them and waited for them at the hospital until they got out [P14 may have meant that he waited for the officers to leave their offices, or that he waited for the officers to exit the hospital to accompany the trucks]. P14 had workers with him.

Klinge asked for whom he was waiting. P14 said the officers who accompanied the corpses.

Klinge asked if P14 remembers the locations of mass graves other than Najha and Al-Qutayfa which he mentioned in the police questioning. P14 said they received no documents from the fourth division of Maher Al-Asad ماهر الأسد, and the Air Force branch in Al-Mazzeah used to bury at their [own] place.

Klinge asked if P14 only heard that from others. P14 said that the bulldozer's driver used to tell them [P14 and colleagues] that they [the bulldozer driver and his colleagues] dug in Al-Mazzeah Airport to bury corpses.

Klinge told P14 that he mentioned Al-Husayniyya الحسينية. P14 said that the Al-Husayniyya area is where Najha cemetery is. It [Al-Husayniyya] is a residential area.

Klinge said that the two accused are sitting on his right side and asked if P14 recognizes anyone. P14 said that he does not know.

Defense Counsel Hannes Linke

Linke asked P14 what his job was because Linke did not understand. P14 asked Linke to repeat the question.

Linke asked what P14's job/task was back then. Scharmer said that "back then" should be specific. Linke clarified since 2011. P14 said that they were civilians under the administration of "Damascus" to bury the normal dead.

Linke recalled that P14 said that he went to school until 7th grade and asked if that was correct. P14 confirmed.

Linke asked if P14 completed any training/education after that. P14's attorney said that no statement would be given.

Linke replied that P14 had answered that in the police questioning. P14's attorney said that was in private rather than in public.

[Böcker and Scharmer responded, but the trial monitor did not hear what they said. However, it appeared that they agreed with Linke that the question should be answered.]

Linke asked P14 to respond yes or no if he did any training/education. P14 said that he did not understand the question. Linke asked if P14 went to college after school. P14 said no.

Linke asked what kind of training/education P14 did after graduating from school. P14's attorney said that no statement would be given.

Linke asked if P14 did any training/education for truck/lorry driving. P14's attorney said that it had no factual connection to the subject and they do not want to give information about P14's biography, because it would lead to exposing his identity.

Klinge said that the questions that the police asked would be innocuous and could be answered.

Plaintiff Counsel Anna Oehmichen said that the question should be answered but not in public.

***A short break was taken to let the court decide.***

Judge Kerber said that the question would be allowed.

Linke asked if P14 was a truck/lorry driver after school. P14 confirmed.

Linke asked if P14 did military service after that. P14's attorney said that no statement would be given and it would be the same problem with any question where Linke pointedly asked for personal information.

Linke responded that he does not want to know P14's CV just his tasks since 2011. P14's lawyer said that he should get back to that question then.

Linke asked if P14 was an administrative officer after his military service. Böcker said that the defence team was having a problem understanding P14's job and how he was meters away from the burial and worked on the documents. P14's attorney said that his client's job/task was to drive the workers, and in his [P14's] office, he worked on the lists and the registries/records/logbooks. Partially administration, partially driving to the mass graves.

Judge Kerber asked P14 if that was correct. P14 confirmed.

Linke asked if P14 was an administrative official. Scharmer objected and said that the question was already answered.

Linke said that he wanted to know the period of time. Scharmer responded that Linke should then time-frame his question.

Linke asked if P14 worked with [name redacted]. Linke started talking about secret tasks of that officer, but Klinge intervened and said that what Linke did would not be right, as those subjects would not have anything to do with the trial subject.

Linke said that he wanted to know for whom P14 worked before 2011. Scharmer said that the question was already answered. Judge Kerber agreed with Scharmer.

Linke said OK, and asked if P14 was responsible for making the lists. Judge Kerber asked P14 if the question was clear. P14 said yes, he [P14] and a security person [عنصر أمن].

Linke asked if that was in P14's office. P14 confirmed.

Linke recalled that P14 said that the numbers in the lists referred to dead and asked P14 how he knew that.

Judge Kerber said that Linke should quote from the record [remonstration] (Judge Kerber asked Linke to quote from the police-questioning-transcript what P14 said). Linke agreed and said that he gives this task to Judge Kerber, but then asked from where P14 had the information for the lists. Judge Kerber said that P14 answered that the previous day.

The witness was dismissed.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:00 p.m.

International Research and Documentation Center

Syria Justice and Accountability Centre

The next trial will be September 15, 2020 at 09:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 13

Hearing Dates: September 15 & 16, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 32 – September 15, 2020

Mazen Darwish, head of the Syrian Center for Media and Freedom of Expression (SCM), testified on the situation in Syria leading up to 2011 and after the start of the revolution in 2011. He also told the court about his own experience as a detainee of the Intelligence Services as well as physical and psychological torture he experienced. Darwish provided legal background on the competencies and practices of the Syrian Intelligence Services.

Trial Day 33 – September 16, 2020

P15, [name redacted] a 50-year-old male testified on Raslan's personal background as well as on two meetings and several phone calls between them. He said in 2012, Raslan provided information and advice on the situation of his cousin, and seemed to be moved by people being tortured. He also said that Raslan was the reason why his journey to Germany was delayed, as Raslan told him that there might be a chance for him to return to Syria based on talks in Geneva. Ultimately, Raslan advised P15 to come to Germany from Turkey. Although P15 came into court in a disguise and expressed concerns for the safety of his family in Syria, the court denied his request to testify with protective measures.

Day 32 of Trial – September 15, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30 am with 10 spectators and 3 members of the press in the audience.<sup>2</sup> Attorney Bodenstein was present as a replacement for Raslan's second defense counsel Fratzki. The prosecution was represented by prosecutor Klinge. Plaintiff counsels Mohammed and Kroker were not present, while attorney Bahns and Rothmann appeared as plaintiff counsels.

Defendant Al-Gharib entered the courtroom accompanied by a court security guard as usual. However, today he was handcuffed. When he passed one of the other guards on the way to his seat, he spat on the chair next to the guard and cursed him in Arabic. He told his translator not to translate what he just said.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

<sup>2</sup> No accredited Arabic speaking members of the press were present.

Testimony of Mazen Darwish مازن درويش

Before the witness, Mazen Darwish, entered the court room, presiding Judge Kerber explained that he will testify for two days. She explained that he was detained in the air-force intelligence branch, however today his testimony will focus on the structure of the intelligence system in Syria. Kerber said she got the transcript of Darwish's questioning by the German police from June 30, 2016. She handed a copy to all parties and ordered a break to allow everyone to have a quick look at it.

***

[10-minutes-break]

***

When Darwish entered the courtroom, judge Kerber greeted him saying that they already know each other from previous sessions. Admonitions were read out to Mazen Darwish, 46-years old head of the Syrian Center for Media and Freedom of Expression \(SCM\), who lives in Paris.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Kerber asked Darwish about the structure of the Syrian regime and wanted to know how he came into conflict with the regime. Darwish thanked Judge Kerber and said he thinks that what happened in Syria was a natural result of the structure of the ruling system and the government. It started in 1958 with the union between Syria and Egypt (United Arab Republic). Jamal Abd An-Naser's جمال عبد الناصر [former president of Egypt and president of the Union] provisos broke up the political parties in Syria, disbanded the parliament and abolished the entire independent press. According to Darwish, Syrians agreed to sacrifice democracy for the Union, but it only lasted for 3 years and eventually led to the authoritarian regime in Syria. Darwish further explained "we" lost the union while keeping the dictatorship. During 1961 and 1963, the situation was not stable either. The situation slightly improved compared to the time of Abd An-Naser, however society did not recover its spirit. Darwish said this was the reason for the coup of the Al-Ba'th البعث party on March 8, 1963. The first decree of the new government was to declare a state of emergency and a new epoch began in Syria, based on the principle of a one-party state [تقوم على مبدأ الحزب الواحد]. They [Al-Ba'th] started to eliminate all other parties. Once they dislodged the Naseris [supporters of Abd An-Naser] and the communists, an internal conflict within the Al-Ba'th party began. Darwish further recalled that the first internal coup took place in February 23, 1966. Civilian Ba'this were banished and an absolute authority of the military people [العسكريين] was established. Through this first coup, Hafez Al-Assad حافظ الأسد became the Minister of Defense. In 1970, Hafez Al-Assad staged a coup against the "group of the coup of February 23" and monopolized power. This was when the era of Al-Assad began in Syria. Darwish explained that Hafez Al-Assad was more pragmatic than his predecessor and quickly received international acceptance. Already months before his coup, he gained a good reputation as the Minister of Defense when he ended military support by the Syrian army for Palestine in its conflict with neighboring countries. The first phase of Al-Assad's state began in 1973, when he proclaimed a constitution which provided almost absolute power to the president. According to Darwish, Art. 8 of the constitution was particularly critical as it said that the Al-Ba'th party leads state and society. That was the moment when the mechanisms of controlling the Syrian society started and the security apparatuses were given a free hand to substitute for state institutions. The government and its institutions were appointed to apotheosize the individual (Hafez). Darwish explained this with an example from his own childhood.

He said he was born in 1974 in Nablus, Palestine and went to Syria for the first time when he was 6 years old. He was a normal child and was spoiled by his family. When he arrived in Syria and entered first primary grade at 6.5-years-old, his name became “reconnoitering comrade Mazen”. Darwish said he further joined the organization “youth of the revolution شبيبة الثورة”, as all Syrian children did at the age of 12. According to Darwish, Hafez Al-Assad started indoctrinating children before he attacked the civilian [worker’s] unions [نقابات], especially after the armed clash with the military unit of the Muslim brotherhood and before the security apparatuses committed the Hama massacre in 1982. Darwish recalled the massacre in Hama, where the labor associations (in addition to physicians and engineers) were massacred due to their objection and in order to suppress the syndicates and to modify the law in favor of the Al-Ba'th party.

Judge Wiedner asked when that happened. Darwish said the massacre in Hama was committed in 1982 with dozens of civilian victims, approximately 16,000 to 60,000, however there are no official records of the exact number. According to Darwish, these massacres helped to quell the whole Syrian nation, not only in Hama. The massacres also highlighted the importance of the security apparatuses in protecting Hafez Al-Assad’s government. This is the reason why they were given a free hand during the 1980s/90s. When Hafez Al-Assad died in 2000, Syrian society was exhausted, it had no life. Darwish said there were no political parties, active civilian society, media or parliament, nor any shape of democracy. Darwish said there were some attempts by organizations and human rights advocates, however their influence was very limited “and everything was closed in their face.” After Hafez Al-Assad died, there was a handover process in which his son Bashar was introduced as open-minded with western education and well prepared to take over, ever since his older brother Basel باسل died. The situation was a caricature: the first son was being prepared to be bequeathed power, but died in a car accident. Then quickly, the other son was brought from London to be prepared. Darwish said this made evident that there was no country in the real sense but rather a “family property” which was handed from one heir to another. Darwish said that the beginning of Bashar Al-Assad’s reign was quite obscure, as he was 34-years-old while the constitution required the president to be at least 40-years-old. Consequently, the constitution had to be amended in order to comply with the son of Hafez Al-Assad. The parliamentary procedure of amending the constitution took only 10 minutes. Darwish further explained that Bashar Al-Assad started a propaganda campaign of reformation and fighting corruption with his inauguration speech. Indeed, there was some room for change in Syria, however not due to actual legal changes but due to security forces turning a blind eye to certain things. In that phase, Syria witnessed the establishment of cultural and political forums, but without any powers. In September [2000], Syria witnessed a re-liberation of the committees of defending democracy and human rights, but it did not last for long. In February 2001, the government returned to its former state: members of the people’s council who wanted to shed light on corruption practices, like Ma’moun Al-Homsi مأمون الحمصي and Riyadh Saif رياض سيف were detained. Additionally, by the end of August 2001, detentions of activists started and cultural and political forums were closed with the exception of the Al-Atasi الأتاسي forum. Darwish said that the Iraq war which started in 2003 was a turning point. It was expected that America “would continue to Syria after it is over with Iraq.” He added that Colin Powell issued some requests to the Syrian government, however it responded by “using the terrorism card against America”, in an attempt to abort a new Middle East as the US suggested. The Syrian government and apparatuses encouraged the religious machinery and religious leaders, to encourage the youth “to struggle” [do Jihad] in Iraq. This practice reached its peak with a gathering point in the city center of Damascus, in the area of the old “Damascus International Fair”. From there, buses were carrying jihadi youth from Damascus (accompanied by security forces) to the Iraqi borders. Darwish further recalled that by 2004, Syrian society regained some vitality which was correlated with regional developments in the area. On March 8, 2004 and based on a request from the human rights committees, a group of activists (around 100) demonstrated against the state of emergency and 68 of the peaceful demonstrators were detained. Darwish explained that in 2003, the Syrian association for human rights was founded, which published reports and data [on numbers of protestors, detentions etc.] from organizations inside Syria. He further recalled that on March 21, 2004, the Arab-Kurdish conflict started in northern Syria regarding a Kurdish nation. Around 300,000 [Kurdish people] were deprived of Syrian citizenship and prohibited from using their language. Darwish said one could find books in any language in Syria: Chinese, German, English. However, Kurdish language was prohibited and one could not find any book in Kurdish. This was one form of national and ethnic conflict which the government conducted, aiming to tear down Syrian society. In 2005, with the assassination of Rafiq Al-Hariri, رفيق الحريري the Syrian government felt international pressure. Syria consequently withdrew its forces from Lebanon which gained the status of a sovereign country with an Arab and international blessing. According to Darwish, the rapprochement between the Syrian government and the "Iranian project" also started during that phase. The rapprochement already started during the times of Hafez Al-Assad, but certain boundaries could not be crossed at that time. After 2006, and what was considered a victory of Hezbollah over Israel, Syrian forces, army and special forces were opened - under the label of "benefitting from the party [Hezbollah]" - to direct infiltration from Iran and the revolutionary guard. Instances of converting to Shia Islam and cases of Iranian propaganda started. Syria consequently became a part of "the Iranian project." In 2008, labelled as "prohibition and futility of the project", a "re-declaration of an international re-normalization" started by the Syrian Minister of Foreign Affairs visiting his German counterpart, the French president Sarkozy visiting Syria and even receiving Bashar Al-Assad and his wife at the Elysée palace. During that time period, the regime detained everyone who was left from the political opposition of the Damascus Declaration, and after that, the signees of the Damascus-Beirut Declaration. Darwish said by doing so, Bashar Al-Assad effectively put an end to political life once again and re-normalized relations with international society, accompanied by granting the security services a free hand. This happened at the expense of the government apparatuses, with bigger economic problems of privatization based on corruption between the government and affiliated groups. Darwish said corruption in Syria was present ever since the time of Hafez Al-Assad. Darwish said it was "a parallel shadow economy", however Bashar Al-Assad tried to privatize corruption, and so "we" reached 2011: the phase of the Arab spring.

Judge Kerber interrupted Darwish, saying that the translator wanted to swap.

Kerber continued by asking Darwish to talk about 2011. Darwish said that if he may, and before addressing 2011, he wanted to mention some aspects of political control [by the Syrian government]. As an example, he said that in 2005 labelled as "the judicial reformation", Bashar Al-Assad breached all judicial conventions by issuing a decree, legislative decree 95/2005, which decided to expel 81 judges, in breach of the constitution and the laws he himself issued. Darwish said the decree provided respective authority to the council of ministers within 24-hours (meaning the council has the right to expel any judge, without reasoning). Darwish said this is an example for how the country is run and for the hegemony of the president with his legislative rights. He said it also indicates that the actions of the security services are not mandated by the government, but rather by the president himself. Darwish recalled that some of the judges tried to file a complaint with the higher constitutional court, however the court did not hear them, as in accordance with the constitution, the president assigns its members. Another example, according to Darwish, is provided by the information branch in state security Branch 285, which blocked hundreds of websites. One of the websites was An-Nazaha النزهة, which decided to take legal steps. A trial was held on May 13, 2007 at the administrative court (case No. 40/10-06-11). The judges found that they had no information on who was responsible for blocking these websites (knowing that the Ministry of Communication is in possession of the relevant technical devices, however this was the official response from the attorney of the Ministry of Communication via the court). Darwish further recalled a third instance that he witnessed himself: A journalist, Habib Saleh, حبيب صالح, was detained because of an article he wrote. The investigating judge referred his case to the judge at the criminal court on December 1, 2008. Darwish said he and Habib's lawyer Mohannad Al-Hasani مهند الحسني went to meet the respective judge, Judge Ahmad Al-Bakri أحمد البكري, at the Justice Palace in Damascus to ask him about Habib's case. The judge said that there is no need for asking, because Habib was already sentenced to three years imprisonment when he came from the security [forces]. Darwish said this was before his case was even heard and that the judge told them that Habib was brought by the state security. After many hearings and a lengthy trial, the sentence was indeed 3 years. Darwish concluded that all the instances which he just described are small examples of how the state is controlling the judiciary.

Kerber acknowledged Darwish's explanations and reminded him that they wanted to begin talking about 2011. Darwish said there are hundreds of thousands of examples on all aspects of life in Syria. He said that with the beginning of the Arab spring at the end of 2010 in Tunisia, the youth had new aspirations and felt a wave of freedom. Darwish said that specifically with the departure [was translated as "death"] of Ben Ali بن علي from Tunisia and demonstrations in Egypt, social media began to support Egypt and Libya, while not covering the fact that Syrian demonstrations were quelled by the security services. In February [2011], Darwish said he joined a demonstration in front of the Libyan embassy. The political security service Al-Jibbeh الجبهة Branch, and the inner Branch of the state security intervened. Darwish recalled that they could see how the respective forces detained and hit demonstrators. On February 5, 2011 there was a call for the day of Syrian anger. The call suggested a sit-in in front of the parliament in Damascus and at Sa'dallah Al-Jabri square ساحة سعد الله الجابري in Aleppo. There were no gatherings of people, but Darwish recalled that at that time (ca. February 2), he was summoned by the Inner Security Branch (251) where he realized that there were other people like the author Akram Al-Bunni أكرم البني, Faye Sarah فايز سارة and Anwar Al-Bunni أنور البني, who were interrogated by Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس. Darwish said he was taken to the third floor where he heard that they were accused of instigating people in the streets. Darwish said the security services assumed that there would be a people's movement in Syria for which they prepared. The country was divided into sectors, each of them administered by an intelligence service Branch. After February [2011], the movement on the ground began. Darwish said that a group of protestors was detained during a demonstration in old Damascus on March 15. On March 16, there was a call for a sit-in in front of the Ministry of Interior in order to release the detainees due to "freedom of expression and opinion". Darwish said he participated in this peaceful demonstration in front of the Ministry of Interior. However, dozens and maybe hundreds of security forces came and started beating people, even families, in a very brutal manner. More than 34 women and men were detained. On March 18, kids in Dar'a درعا wrote social media captions, like "Your turn has come, oh Doctor إجاك الدور، يا دكتور" and "Freedom حرية" on walls. The kids were detained and tortured by security forces. The Intelligence Services reacted with violence to the events of March 18, which was an essential turning point. Darwish said they started detaining people and he himself was detained again on March 28. According to Darwish, there was a live ammunition shooting on demonstrations and "falling of martyrs."

Demonstrations of solidarity with what happened in Dar'a began to expand in Banyas بانياس and rural Damascus ريف دمشق. Demonstrations were peaceful, demanding freedom and democracy by using certain slogans. However, the security forces' response was very violent. Darwish said he thinks that the government decided to push the society towards violence and extremism.

Kerber asked whether Darwish knows more about such a decision. Darwish responded that the government chose to respond with military means to the people's demands instead of political solutions.

Kerber concluded that there was consequently no direct decision. Darwish said it was rather some kind of "orientation". Detentions of peaceful demonstrators were accompanied by the release of Al-Qaeda detainees and detained extremists, particularly those from Iraq. The security forces pushed the youth systematically towards violence. There was widespread arbitrary detentions of people, regardless of whether they did anything, especially in areas that opposed the regime. These young people were put in inhuman circumstances of torture. Their religious and moral beliefs were affronted in detention. At first, the [detention] periods were not long: days, weeks or a month. According to Darwish, the detentions were workshops to produce violence. Many former detainees told him personally after their release that they would rather die than be in detention again. Darwish said this practice of violence led the youth from a peaceful [way] towards sectarianism [ethnic division] and violence. The behavior of the security forces was in line with the terminology of the president and his media advisor Bothayna Sha'ban بثينة شعبان, as the president said in his first speech on March 30 [2011]: "If you want it to be an open war, then let it be an open war". Darwish said this was end of March, when everything was still peaceful. The president immediately went to use a language of war and reminded the public that the regime fought a war against the Muslim brotherhood in Hama حماة and Aleppo حلب for six years and succeeded. Darwish said some young people and groups reacted with violence, sometimes in an organized manner. One part of the violence was a form of self-defense, another part originated from extremists and terrorist organizations that were released [from prison], not to mention the smuggling of weapons into Syria. And then, according to Darwish, Syrian society arrived at an "explosion point". At that time, "we" [Darwish and his colleagues] were in human rights organizations. In April 2011, the Violations Documentation Center [VDC] was launched and he and his colleagues started to document terrifying violations on a daily basis. They were detained and eye-witnessed the violations that they were documenting.

***

[15-minutes-break]

***

Kerber said that she wanted to know more about the general situation and asked Darwish if he derived his information from his work at the VDC. Darwish thanked Kerber, explaining that he is a Syrian citizen from a political family. His father was arrested and persecuted for several years. His mother was detained for one year at the Palestine Branch [Branch 235 of the Military Intelligence Directorate]. Darwish said he got his knowledge from these circumstances as well as from an early stage when he studied at the faculty of law and was interested in human rights. In September 2000, he joined organizations and commissions for human rights and was consequently expelled from the bar association [نقابة المحامين] in Lattakia in 2002. In 2004, SCM was founded and licensed in France. In 2004 they started publishing annual reports in cooperation with other organizations: e.g. in cooperation with UNESCO and UN Habitat in 2006; a monitoring report regarding the parliamentary and presidential referendum in 2007; a report about censorship of the internet and control of digital space by the regime and the security forces in 2008; a report on the travel-ban in 2009, 417 cases of travel-ban by the security forces were documented. Darwish said that this was his and his colleagues' daily work for over 16 years, resulting in his detention and more than one shut-down of their office. Darwish further explained that he and his colleagues founded the Violations Documentation Center in 2011 as one of the projects of SCM, which today contains over 400,000 records about violations by the government, ISIS, al-Nusra and others.

Kerber wanted to know who or what belongs to "security forces". Darwish did not understand the question. Kerber recalled Darwish mentioning "security forces" and asked who they are. Darwish said there are four Intelligence Services in Syria: the oldest one is the Military Intelligence Directorate (MID), which was founded in the 1950s; followed by the General Intelligence Directorate (GID) (publicly referred to as "state security"), which was founded in the 1960s. The Political Security Directorate and the Air-Force Intelligence Directorate are the most recent, founded in the 1970s.

Kerber concluded that all directorates existed before 2011 and asked whether detentions and torture only began in 2011. Darwish said this was the systematic behavior of the Syrian security forces, whether it was arbitrary detentions, forced disappearances, torture or unjust trials whose "arm" [conducted by] is the state security court. Such conduct was always there. According to Darwish, only two things changed after 2011. Firstly, the number of victims significantly increased. Before 2011, detentions were directed towards a narrow group, the political opposition and surrounding circles. So, the numbers of people suffering from such conduct were less. After 2011, the number of the victims increased to millions. Darwish concluded that this was the first change. Secondly, he said, things changed with regards to torture. Darwish said he was detained before and after 2011. Torture was used to obtain information, when the detainee provided all the information he had, torture ceased. After 2011, it became a form of punishment, revenge and a means to get rid of oppositionists and not used to obtain information e.g. Darwish explained that after his third arrest, he was transferred to the fourth division. He and his colleagues were at Al-Mazzeah airport. مطار المزة. Most of them were transferred there. Darwish said he stayed there for six months. He further recalled that there was a torturing program twice a day for all detainees without asking them questions.

Kerber wanted to know when that happened. Darwish said it happened between April and October 2012 adding that the prison guards did not even know their [detainees'] names. Therefore, a human rights defender was tortured the same way as a combatant and a person who got there due to confusion of names.<sup>3</sup> Darwish concluded that this was one aspect of the evolution of torture as a means of revenge and elimination of oppositionists.

Kerber asked whether it was publicly known in Syria before 2011 that torture was part of the Intelligence Services' work and whether one could know what he might have to do when joining the Intelligence Services. Darwish affirmed that it was publicly known adding that it was public knowledge at least since the 1980s and precisely after 1982 and after the elimination of the military movement which belonged to the [Muslim] brotherhood. Darwish added that the pretense of a combat situation was used to eliminate the society in general. He and his colleagues were circulating news and information e.g. on the storming of Tadmor تدمر prison where thousands of detainees were shot. He said the entire Syrian society knows about arrests and torture by the security forces under the pretense of an emergency, especially that oppression by the security forces was not only directed against the [Muslim] brotherhood, but hundreds of left-wing organizations were arrested and tortured. He explained that this happened amongst others to the communist labor party, the political office of the communist party and the Naseris [Jamal Abd An-Naser's supporters]. Darwish said thuggery and torture "were for all", and the regime conveyed that image to the society as a means of intimidation and repression. He said it was constantly present in everyday life.

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the trial monitor: In Syria it is not unusual that a person gets arrested or even tried due to him having a similar name as a wanted person.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Wiedner asked whether it is correct that what happened in the detention facilities of the Intelligence Services was publicly known before 2011. Darwish affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether the methods of torture were also known. Darwish affirmed, adding that it was part of everyday life, as he already mentioned.

Wiedner recalled that there was a turning point in 2011 and asked if the tasks of the security forces changed after the revolution. Darwish said he does not think that the tasks changed, rather the quantity of victims. However, even before 2011, the role and tasks of the security forces were to control the society and the state's affiliates, oppressing the other and preventing any shape of opposition to the government at any cost, which included torture, detentions and killing.

Wiedner wanted to know whether there were qualitative changes as well. Darwish said that the main torture methods like Doulab [tyre], Shabh, flying carpet, and use of electric shocks already existed before 2011. All of these means existed and were used. After 2011 and due to the high numbers [of detainees], health conditions [in detention facilities] worsened. The solitary cell which was previously used for one prisoner, now held 6 to 7 people. Darwish recalled that when he was detained prior to 2011 and until March 2011, he was alone in a solitary cell in Branch 215, however when he was detained again after less than a year, the solitary cell in the Air-Force Intelligence Branch was the same size, but they were 7 [prisoners] in there. He explained that the high number of detainees caused severe health conditions, which resulted along with torture and the absence of medical care, in increasing numbers of deaths and killings. Darwish concluded that this was not a result of changing the methods, but rather changing the number of detainees.

Wiedner asked Darwish whether people died in detention facilities of the Intelligence Services before 2011. Darwish affirmed, explaining that this was particularly the case between 1976 and 1988 as a result of the conflict with the [Muslim] brotherhood; fighting professional associations; and fighting the left-wing communist movements. Darwish affirmed that "everything existed."

Wiedner wanted to know more about the differences specifically compared to the situation from 2001 to 2011. Darwish said this period was different from 1976 to 1988. Opposition movements were not the same and only a certain class of people was arrested, usually human rights advocates, and politicians. Darwish said the only exception was North East Syria where different forms of violations existed due to the unique standing of the area. With the arrival of Bashar Al-Assad in 2000 in the first phase, the regime tried to make the oppression look nice, “as if they were putting makeup on the face of tyranny.”

Wiedner asked if there were torture victims before 2011. Darwish affirmed, explaining that there were however, fewer. Syrian human rights organizations, like the Syrian committee for human rights provided daily reports on the number of torture cases and deaths from torture, but the number was smaller.

Wiedner asked Darwish whether he has knowledge about the situation in the General Intelligence Directorate and Al-Khatib Branch prior to 2011. Darwish said he knows Al-Khatib Branch very well, it is one of the most important Branches in Syria and basically involved in everything. It was led by one of the persons whom Hafez Al-Assad trusted most.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether Darwish was talking about the General Intelligence Directorate or Al-Khatib. Darwish said he was talking about both, explaining that “the center” [SCM] once got permission from the Ministry of Culture to hold an event in 2008 in the cultural center of Al-Mazze. [Darwish showed the relevant document in court]. The event was publicly announced and diplomatic officials were invited. However, an employee [عنصر] of Branch 251 was sent to the location of the event only 15 minutes before it was supposed to start. The employee then informed them that the event has been cancelled, despite the official approval from the Ministry of Culture. Darwish said this is only one simple example to explain the involvement of the Intelligence Services and their power.

Wiedner asked Darwish to provide more general information on Branch 251. Darwish said he can provide some stories from before 2011 which he experienced himself as head of SCM. For example, a member of the German parliament from the Green party officially visited Syria with the permission of the Syrian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker interrupted saying that Darwish should not read from written documents. Darwish explained that these documents are the official authorization for the conference [ندوة] and a notice issued by a governmental body to cancel it.

Kerber explained that there is no need to include these documents in the minutes.

Böcker said he only wants to clarify whether these documents are actually the documents Darwish was talking about or simply notes.

Kerber repeated her sentence.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer intervened by saying that the cancellation of the event could be of interest.

Darwish said the documents were copies and he can provide them to the court.

Böcker said he also want to have more precise information on these documents.

Kerber said Darwish should first continue with his testimony before the court will have a look at the documents and respective translation.

Wiedner continued by asking Darwish about the tasks of Branch 251 and what the public knows about these tasks. Darwish said he will answer this question right after finishing the story about the cancellation of the [SCM] event. Darwish said the German member of parliament, Omid Nouripour was “legally and officially” present in “Their [SCM’s] headquarter in Al-Mazzeah Western Villas on May 15, 2008 when two patrols from Branch 251 came and demanded to attend the event. When Darwish refused to let them join, they forced SCM to end the event. Darwish further mentioned that several travel bans were imposed on him, one from Branch 251, despite the fact that his children were in a European country where he consequently could not visit them. Another incident happened at the end of 2010 when Darwish, pressured by friends, wanted to re-register with the Damascus bar association. Darwish said his supervisor was Khaleel Ma’touq خليل معتوق (who has been missing until today), with whom he registered as a trainee in 2010. The bar association council voted 15 votes in favor of taking Darwish back as a member, and a day was scheduled for him to take the oath. Darwish recalled that when he arrived at the bar association in Damascus, the head of this regional association, Jihad Al-Lahham جهاد اللحام apologized to him on behalf of the association, saying that an official from Branch 251 called Mahmoud Ra’d محمود رعد, came to him the previous day to inform him that Darwish was not allowed to register again. Darwish said the same person, Al-Lahham, later became president of the people’s council [parliament] and concluded by saying that Branch 251 interfered with everything and even with personal relationships of people, in addition to its role in oppressing the opposition and the formation of opposing opinion.

Wiedner asked whether this answer would be Darwish’s description of the tasks of Branch 251. Darwish replied that this Branch was one of the most important Branches in Damascus surrounding area. Its strategic tasks are maintaining security in Damascus and surrounding areas, in a security- not military related sense. The Branch has divisions that control all aspects of life: economy, religion, political parties and students. It is involved in everything, even in the president’s government and the election of the people’s council [parliament], in addition to its “regular” tasks.

***

[lunch-break – Al-Gharib was handcuffed before he was guided out]

***

Wiedner recalled Darwish citing Bashar Al-Assad: “If you want it an open war, then let it be an open war” and asked how Darwish knew about that. Darwish said that it was part of a public speech by the president.

Wiedner asked whether the speech was on demonstrations. Darwish said he assumes it was directed towards the peaceful demonstrators.

Wiedner further recalled Darwish saying that the Inner Branch [251] was present at demonstrations and asked whether they were uniformed and from where Darwish got this information. Darwish said he already mentioned earlier that before 2011, the Inner Branch summoned him several times e.g. on September 13, 2009.

Wiedner specified that he was asking about the Branch’s presence at demonstrations and whether Darwish recognized them or how he knew that it was the Inner Branch [251]. Darwish said from his personal experience, Brigadier General Tawfiq Younes اللواء توفيق يونس was there [at a demonstration] opposite the parliament. He further recalled that already 3 days earlier, Younes arrested Darwish and interrogated him in his office. Some employees [of the Inner Branch العناصر] summoned and interrogated him as well. Darwish said he knows what they look like and even knows the names of some of them.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Darwish joined any demonstrations in the spring of 2011. Darwish affirmed, adding that he participated in almost all the demonstrations.

Wiedner asked Darwish to describe the kind of assaults [by the Intelligence Services] and the turning point, when the situation became more violent and weapons were used. Darwish recalled a sit-in in February 2011 in front of the Libyan embassy where the security forces filmed the demonstrators. Darwish said he does not know the reason why, but in an instant, security forces took their batons and demonstrators shouted “a traitor, is the one who kills his people”. [خاين ياللي بيقتل شعبه] Some people got arrested, but most of them escaped. On March 16, [2011] there was a call to protest in front of the Syrian Ministry of Interior, time and location were announced in advance, and people started gathering. Darwish said that within the first 15 minutes, there was no reaction from the security forces, but the moment that pictures of the detainees were held up, security forces got active, ripped the pictures and assaulted “us” by beating. He added that the beating was sheer torment and recalled that Dr. At-Tayyeb Tizini, one of the most accomplished philosophy teachers at Damascus University, was beaten with batons. Darwish said he himself was bleeding from his head when two officials caught the doctor and slammed him against a light pole. Arrested people were taken to the South Area Branch, which belongs to the Military Intelligence Directorate. Darwish said months later, there was an attempt for another sit-in, this time at Al-Abbasiyyeen square. ساحة العباسيين A big group of demonstrators tried to get over there from Duma. دوما Darwish said he also participated in the demonstration, where live ammunition was shot.

Wiedner wanted to know the exact month. Darwish said he thinks it was in June.

Wiedner asked if people got shot. Darwish affirmed, saying that some were hit by a bullet, some even died. After this episode, in February 2012, Darwish said he was detained for 3.5 years.<sup>4</sup>

Wiedner wanted to know whether this was Darwish’s first encounter with firearms at a demonstration and whether it happened again. Darwish said that it was the only time he experienced live ammunition, however after that demonstration, his participation in demonstrations became less, whereas during the first phase in February and March [2011], he participated in almost all demonstrations in Damascus and the surrounding area.

Wiedner asked whether there were no shootings then. Darwish said at least not in the demonstrations in Damascus. However, in Dar’a for instance, there were, but he himself was not there.

Wiedner wanted to know since when weapons were used [against demonstrators] and from which point in time it happened on a regular basis. Darwish said later there were other parties. For example, in Jisr Ash-Shoghour, جسر الشغور there was shooting from other groups on a security building.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether the shooting was initiated by the security forces or “the rebels.” Darwish said it was initiated by another party which he cannot specify. There were clashes in front of the building during which security [forces] responded [fired back].

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It was translated as 3.5 months instead of years.

Wiedner wanted to know which security forces used live ammunition: police, army or civilian for example. Darwish said in February, the sit-in was in particular locations and therefore, they were able to see the forces and identify them. Essentially, he identified people from Branch 251 and the Political Security – Al-Jibbeh الجبة Branch. Darwish added that only a small number of people he was able to identify were from the Military Intelligence Directorate. However, at demonstrations where live ammunition was used, he was not able to identify specific individuals. They were a mixture of military forces and intelligence Branches.

Wiedner asked whether Darwish was familiar with the term “Division 40”. Darwish said he has no personal experience with it and was never arrested by them nor detained in their facilities. However, through his work in documenting violations and through his colleagues in the centre [VDC], who were arrested by the Division, he is familiar with it.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly Darwish knows about Division 40 and its tasks. Darwish said he knows that it is part of Branch 251 and is headed by the colonel (and perhaps later, the brigadier general) Hafez Makhoul حافظ مخلوف. Due to the relationship between him and Bashar Al-Assad, there is a bigger significance to that division.

Wiedner asked Darwish to specify this significance and the tasks of Division 40. Darwish said to his knowledge, the tasks of Division 40 (or division of the city (Damascus)) are part of the tasks of Branch 251, however Division 40 was responsible for a certain geographical area. However, as Makhoul is its head, the Division interfered in assigning ministers and businessmen and their deals [transactions].

Wiedner said this would not answer his question about what was Division 40’s purpose. Darwish said that its tasks were part of the tasks of Branch 251.

Wiedner asked Darwish to look at the defendants to his right and tell him whether he met them before. Darwish denied this was the case.

Wiedner recalled that in his interview with the German police, Darwish mentioned terrible things about his detention, however these things did not happen in Al-Khatib. Wiedner asked if that was correct. Darwish affirmed.

Wiedner asked Darwish to list where he was detained. Darwish said he was first detained in the Area Branch ,[227] فرع المنطقة which belongs to the Military Intelligence Directorate. His second detention was at Branch 215, the third one lasted for 3.5 years and was initially at the air force [Branch] in Al-Mazzeah airport, مطار المزة, then at the fourth division, followed by an air force [Branch] and state security – central interrogation branch.

Wiedner wanted to know where Darwish experienced torture. Darwish said he was tortured at Al-Mazzeah airport, fourth division, air force administration and state security – central interrogation branch.

Judge Kerber now wanted to have a look at the documents which Darwish mentioned earlier.

Darwish said the first document is from the Ministry of Culture, doc. No. 311, and was addressed to the Arabic Cultural Centre in Al-Mazzeah. It includes the permission to host a conference on “Press and the Freedom of Expression” on August 25, 2008 which was organized by Darwish. The document has the signatures of the Director of the Cultural Centre, Najib As-Sousi, نجيب السوسي and the assistant of the Minister of Culture, Mohammad Turkey As-Sayyed, محمد تركي السيد.

Kerber asked the translator to confirm. The translator affirmed.

Darwish said the second document is a press announcement from the Committee of the Defense of Human Rights, titled "Syrian authorities continue to crack down on freedom of expression".

Kerber wanted to know whether this document was related to the first one. Darwish said it was a press announcement on the cancelation of the conference.

Kerber asked the translator whether he can confirm that. The translator affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know whether the prohibition of the event was also written in a document or only happened verbally. Darwish said the press announcement was speaking about the prohibition.

Prosecutor's Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge wanted to know whether Darwish heard about one of the defendants back in Syria. Darwish said he heard of Raslan.

Klinge asked what Darwish heard. Darwish said that Raslan was the head of the interrogation unit in Branch 251.

Klinge asked whether Darwish heard or was told about the conditions there or about Raslan. Darwish said he had colleagues who were detained in the interrogation division in branch 251. He further has knowledge about Branch 251 through the Documentation Center [VDC].

Klinge wanted to know whether that was before or after March 2011. Darwish said it was after March 2011.

Klinge asked what Darwish's colleagues said about the detention conditions. Darwish said during the first phase in March and April [2011], they talked about torture methods, in particular Doulab and general mistreatment. After April, they reported even more torture and higher numbers [of detainees]. Darwish said he and his colleagues began to document cases of death under torture.

Klinge asked whether Darwish knows names of people who died under torture at Branch 251 between 2011 and 2012. Darwish affirmed.

Klinge asked Darwish to provide these names. Darwish presented a folder, saying that it contains documents on one of the victims, [name redacted]. The folder includes: the testimony of a defector from Branch 251, a certificate from Harasta military hospital مستشفى حرستا العسكري, and a video recording from the victim's brother addressed to the court in Koblenz. All materials indicate that [name redacted] Al-Khleif يامن الخليف died during his time at Branch 251. These documents also show the chain of custody<sup>5</sup> and are for the court. Darwish added that the documents were translated into German for the court.

Plaintiff counsel Dr. Oehmichen pointed out that Darwish mentioned “chain of custody”, which could also be translated as “chain of command”.<sup>6</sup>

Klinge wanted to know what exactly the documents show and where Darwish got them from. Darwish said he brought several documents, the first one contains names of the commanders from Branch 251 and the administrative structure as well as names of 93 people who work there.

Klinge wanted to know from where Darwish got the document. Darwish said it was prepared and made available by the litigation department of SCM and also the Violations Documentation Center [VDC] department, using testimonies of defected members [عناصر] (two from Branch 251) and open-source material. The methodology and the names are in the document and were translated into German.

Klinge concluded that the document is consequently not an original from the Intelligence Services but was made by Darwish’s organization. Darwish affirmed, adding that the document was prepared at SCM, based on available information. He went on to explain that the second document is about the detainee [name redacted] and contains a certificate from Harasta hospital which indicates that the detainee arrived there dead from the Branch. This document also provides a chain of custody and is verified [authentic]. Darwish said there is also a testimony from the brother of the detainee, who says that, based on the information he received from someone working at the Branch, his brother died at Branch 251.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer had a question regarding the translation and wanted to clarify whether the person died in the Branch or Harasta hospital. Darwish said the person was already dead when he arrived at Harasta hospital.

Prosecutor Klinge went on to ask whether the certificate from Harasta hospital is an original, a copy or a summary. Darwish said that it is a copy of the original, adding that the chain of custody would indicate how SCM got it.

Klinge wanted to know how the testimony of the victim’s brother was presented. Darwish said the brother’s testimony was documented in a video and is a message addressed to “the justice of the court.” He is currently in Greece and willing to testify in court.

Klinge asked when the person died. Darwish said according to the certificate, he arrived at the hospital on August 27, 2012. He was transferred and medical procedures were attempted for resuscitation in addition to electric shocks [defibrillator], but there was no response.

Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker intervened by complaining that the documents should not be discussed right now during a public session and that Klinge’s questions on the documents would be inadmissible as it is not clear where the documents came from, what exactly they include and how Darwish got them.

---

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translator asked Darwish, what the Arabic term “سلسلة الحيازة” means. Darwish said [in English]: “chain of custody”. The translator did not mention the term when he translated Darwish’s statement.

<sup>6</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: This translation seemed to have caused confusion later, because what Oehmichen referred to was “chain of command” which Darwish provided later as a separate document as well.

Prosecutor Klinge said he did not know about the documents, Darwish and the SCM collected the information and the documents should be shown in the public main procedure.

Böcker requested a break, saying that the parties to the case received a transcript of Darwish's interview with the German police (in addition to a transcript of an interview from the prior day which the parties already received) only today and no one knew about today's "surprise box". He said those would be heavy documents that should be made available first, before discussing them in a hearing. Böcker said he has no questions on the documents today but requests an additional hearing, as at this point, it would be some kind of "whisper down the lane" and "surprise box".

Klinge said that the material is possibly evidential and therefore Darwish should explain what he brought with him today. Regarding the transcripts, Klinge explained that the first transcript is from July 29, 2017, the transcript of July 30, 2017 was not added to the case file, as it was only part of the structural investigation.<sup>7</sup>

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer tried to say something when Böcker interrupted him, saying that he is not accusing anyone, however Darwish was summoned to provide an overview rather than reading out specific documents.

Presiding judge Kerber said that prosecutor Klinge wanted to get the content [of the new documents] described, which would be understandable. Darwish's documents would therefore be put on record and surely not addressed tomorrow, however the witness could be summoned again.

Scharmer proposed that since Klinge already clarified the origins of the documents, the judges should ask their questions on the documents and then Darwish can be summoned again so the other parties can ask their questions.

Kerber asked Darwish what exactly he wanted to hand over to the court, how many documents he has and provide a short description. Darwish said he would like to submit nine files:

1. Chain of command [structure of hierarchy]
2. Death certificate from Harasta hospital
3. Death certificate from Harasta hospital
4. Death certificate from Red Crescent hospital
5. Note to the head of Branch 251 regarding a conflict between the Branch's interrogation division and the forensic department at Harasta hospital about corpses of detainees
6. Two-page long chart on deaths inside Branch 251, which includes numbers of cooling entities in the mortuary [برادات] and number of corpses
7. Locations of four mass graves
8. Series of telegrams between the security branches and the central administration regarding a detainee who died in custody at Branch 251. He was apparently an employee at the Ministry of Oil. The telegrams also include descriptions of his arrest, his death at the Branch and suggestion to transfer him to the military police and to bury him in a known location. The series further includes the response from the central administration in Damascus which agreed to the proposed procedure and requested to notify the national security office, since the person was an employee in the Ministry of Oil. This correspondence describes how a peaceful detainee transforms into one of the Caesar photos.

---

<sup>7</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Since 2014, the German Federal Prosecutor General is conducting a so-called "structural investigation" (Strukturermittlungsverfahren) into crimes committed in Syria since 2011. Such an investigation is not related to specific case or instance but aimed at collecting evidence in a larger context which can then be used in specific cases.

9. 103 photos of detainees who died at Branch 251 from the Caesar files.

Darwish added that all documents were translated to German, indicate a chain of commanders involved and their ranks. The rest of the documents all include a chain of custody. Lastly, there is a copy of the Centre's [SCM] license which shows that the Centre since has been working on the fight against impunity, documenting violations and collecting evidence, ever since 2004.

Judge Kerber asked whether Darwish needs the documents back. Darwish denied, saying they are copies for the court.

Kerber announced that she received a total of 12 documents which are formally added to the minutes. She went on to ask Darwish about the content of the CD he provided. Darwish said it includes

1. Structural framework of Branch 251 and names of employees
2. video message from the brother of the detainee [name redacted] to the court with German translation.
3. 103 Caesar photos

Kerber ordered a 15-minutes break, so the translators could help to evaluate the documents.

Raslan's plaintiff counsel Böcker wanted to know whether there will be more documents. Judge Kerber forwarded the question to Darwish, who replied that regarding this particular case, these were all documents, however with regards to other cases, he provided other documents to "other courts" like IIIM.

***

[15-minutes-break]

***

Judge Kerber asked the parties whether anyone had comments on the documents and suggested to continue the hearing as planned initially and in case questions on the documents arise, Darwish can be summoned again.

Prosecutor Klinge continued by recalling that Darwish mentioned that live ammunition was used against demonstrators in Dar'a and asked when the use of firearms during demonstrations in 2011 began. Darwish said the first time he himself experienced the use of firearms was at the attempted sit-in at Al-Abbasiyyeen square when people wanted to come from Duma. However, the first time that he documented shootings on demonstrators through SCM was on March 18. Darwish said he spoke publicly about it on TV and as a result, was arrested on March 22.

Klinge asked where the first shooting at demonstrations happened. Darwish said in Dar'a.

Klinge asked whether firearms with live ammunition were afterwards used on a regular basis and whether Darwish documented anything. Darwish said the first shooting on demonstrators was documented in Dar'a, afterwards in rural Damascus. It then became "normal" on a daily basis. Starting in April, SCM documented violations in a database.

Klinge asked when it [use of live ammunition against demonstrators] became daily. Darwish said it mainly happened in areas outside Damascus e.g. in Dar'a and then in Duma. He said he and his colleagues documented shootings on demonstrators specifically on Fridays. In Homs, they first documented shootings on demonstrators in April and as the days went by, shootings expanded.

Klinge wanted to know whether Darwish heard about CCMC. Darwish affirmed.

Klinge asked what Darwish knows about it. Darwish said he has no first-hand information, but he and his colleagues used to hear that a unit was established from the crises management unit and includes a group of high-ranking officers. He recalled that later, when he was in prison, an explosion happened and some officers died.

Klinge asked when and why it [CCMC] was founded. Darwish said with progressing demonstrations and the inability to control them, this unit was founded as a tool to handle demonstrations. As he heard, it has more powers than "normal bodies". It was authorized to suppress demonstrations with military means and to conduct negotiations and consultations.

Klinge asked Darwish about the members of CCMC. Darwish said some of the prominent names were: Jamil Al-Hasan جميل الحسن, Asef Shawkat آصف شوكت, Ali Mamlouk علي مملوك as well as the Ministers of Defense and Interior.

Klinge asked whether Darwish has knowledge about specific decrees regarding the CCMC. Darwish said he heard about it but has no evidence. He only heard what was circulating in general.

Klinge wanted to know what was generally being said about the cell. Darwish said he heard rumors that there were two movements inside the cell: one in favor of violence and military decisiveness, which was led by Jamil Al-Hasan. The other one in favor of combined military and political action, Asef Shawkat was part of this movement.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker wanted to clarify some confusion surrounding the term "chain of custody" and its German translation. He asked Darwish what he meant. Darwish explained that he himself used the term "سلسلة الحيازة" and felt that it was not translated well. That's why he used the English term "chain of custody".

Böcker wanted to know what he meant by that. Darwish said that during their work, specifically in the Violations Documentation Center [VDC], they used a special methodology to preserve evidence and take testimonies of witnesses regarding certain evidence. Usually, with every piece of evidence, they have a special format, which explains how the evidence found its way to the Centre.

Böcker asked whether Darwish meant “chain of command”. Darwish said when he talked about the “chain of custody”, it was related to the tracking of evidence. However, one of the documents was actually on the “chain of command and rankings at Branch 251”.

Böcker wanted to know whether it is correct that Darwish was never detained at Branch 251 of the GID but at Branch 285, however not prior to 2015. Darwish said he was not detained at Branch 251. He was transferred from Adra [prison] to Branch 285 (state security – central interrogation branch) in May 2015.

Böcker recalled Darwish mentioning that they started documenting cases of torture after April 2011 and wanted to know whether Darwish himself or other people were involved in the documentation. Darwish explained that starting in April, they realized that the numbers of violations was bigger than the capacity of the Centre [SCM], therefore they founded the Violations Documentation Center [VDC] as one of the Centre’s [SCM’s] projects. Darwish said he was involved in it together with a big group of employees including Razan Zaytouneh رزان زيتونة and Ayham Ghazzoul أيهم غزول, the latter of whom died under torture and is on one of Caesar photos. Today’s pieces of evidence were compiled by members of the strategic litigation project.

Böcker asked whether Darwish was personally involved in the documentation. Darwish affirmed, adding that he manages the SCM and both projects.

Böcker went on to clarify that he knows that Darwish is the head of the SCM and the projects, however his question is whether Darwish was directly involved in compiling one of these documents. Darwish asked for clarification what Böcker meant by “direct intervention”.

Böcker explained that among the documents seems to be a list with names. He asked Darwish whether he was involved in creating this list or if he got help. Darwish said that there is one list of names which refers to the “chain of command” at Branch 251 and that the methodology of creating this list is also attached to it.

Böcker said he simply wants to know whether Darwish was the one who compiled the list. Darwish said the question is very complicated and perhaps, if Böcker would have a look at the document, it would become clearer to him.

Böcker again asked if Darwish was involved in compiling the list. Darwish said that Böcker can find his signature on the documents on which Darwish, amongst others worked.

Böcker wanted to know why Darwish brought these documents to the hearing today but not to his hearing with the German police. Darwish said that at the time of his hearing with the police, the subject matter was his personal detention. Branch 251 was consequently not of interest, whereas “today”, he was summoned for this particular reason.

Böcker went on to ask Darwish technical questions on the Caesar files, whether he knows how they were created. Darwish said the pictures are available open source, the source is also attached to the CD. He said according to Caesar’s [the photographer’s] statements, the pictures were taken from 2011 until defection in 2013.

Böcker wanted to know if Darwish knows how many photos were taken in 2011 and 2012, as they are of particular interest in this case. Darwish said the question is legit, however he cannot provide a timeframe. It would be possible to provide a time frame by analyzing the metadata of each file.

Klinge intervened asking Böcker how he would know that there is only a single file from 2011, as he just mentioned. Böcker replied that only one picture from 2011 is included in the case file. Klinge explained that this would only be the current state of knowledge. Böcker affirmed, explaining that this is why he wants to ask Darwish whether he knows anything else. Darwish said he cannot answer this question and suggested to seek help from experts. Böcker concluded that he now has an answer to his question: “that Darwish cannot answer the question”.

Al-Gharib’s defense counsel Schuster asked Darwish about the school system in Syria, about Hafez Al-Assad controlling children (youth organization of the Baath party), and asked Darwish to provide more information in this regard. Darwish said that in Syria, this system is still in place, until today. There is the concept of “people organizations” المنظمات الشعبية and by definition, they are generic organizations associated with Al-Baath party. The first one is “The Baath pioneers طلائع البعث” organization for children between 6 and 12 years. Then “The Revolution’s youth شبيبة الثورة” organization for the age group between 12 and 18. After 18, there is “The National Union for Syria’s Students” which includes the students in the universities and institutions.

Schuster asked whether the membership in “The Baath pioneers” organization was mandatory. Darwish affirmed, explaining that it is mandatory as the children at age 6, when in first grade are simply not asked, the same is the case for the “The Revolution’s youth شبيبة الثورة”, both are mandatory and membership is consequently “automatic”. Darwish said the same is the case with the “The National Union for Syria’s Students”.

Schuster wanted to know whether that would be some kind of political indoctrination or what the purpose of those youth organizations would be. Darwish said in his opinion this practice is not unique. Totalitarian regimes employ the same method: North Korea, Russia and all the totalitarian regimes. They are political organizations in the sense that children are indoctrinated with ideologies which are then reproduced. One can see this in curricula, in songs or in the curriculum of the socialist national education which was a subject that remained with him for 6 years [starting in 7th grade], including exams on it. The curriculum talks about the values and principles of Al-Baath party. Darwish said the subject was even present at university, in law school when he specialized in public international law.

The proceedings were adjourned at 03:40 p.m.

The next trial day will be September 16, 2020 at 09:30 a.m.

Day 33 of Trial – September 16, 2020

The proceedings began at 09:30. There were about 14 spectators and 3 media representatives present.

The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Haferkamp. Attorney Rothmann appeared as replacement for Plaintiff counsel Mohammad. Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker was not present.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker said he wanted to give Raslan an empty calendar and showed it to Judge Kerber who approved it. The calendar was then given to Raslan.

Continuation of Mazen Darwish's testimony

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge recalled that the use of firearms in Dar'a on March 18 was documented and that later, in April 2011 firearms were used in Duma as well. Klinge asked Darwish to provide some more explanation on that. Darwish said that with the beginning of the demonstrations in Damascus and then in Dar'a, news started to spread through social media and other media channels. Youth movements began to communicate and gather under the heading "coordination". He explained that especially in Duma, there was historically a form of political movement. Demonstrations started in order to show solidarity with Dar'a, especially since Syrian forces sieged Dar'a, in addition to the use of firearms against demonstrators. Demonstrations usually happened after Friday prayers especially in front of Duma's Grand Mosque جامع دوما الكبير. Darwish said the slogans were the same peaceful ones, essentially showing solidarity with Dar'a. He further recalled a shooting where more than one person was killed.

Klinge asked when that happened. Darwish said the situation escalated at the beginning of April. It started on one of the Fridays, when demonstrators "fell" [were killed]. That Friday, security forces arrested many demonstrators and took many corpses with them. According to Darwish, there was an overlap between political and military levels [in responding to the demonstrations]. Darwish further said that some detainees were released and [the collected] corpses were handed over to the families. Among the government's conditions [for handing over corpses] was that the funeral should take place swiftly with a shortened procedure. However, the funerals took a general nature.<sup>8</sup> Darwish said that some of these negotiations with families were conducted by Branch 251.

Klinge wanted to know where Darwish got his information from. Darwish said he and his colleagues were documenting violations during that time. He said they were contacted by people [families] who had to negotiate with the regime. The Violations Documentation Center [VDC] had an office in Douma until the end of 2013, which was directed by the lawyer Razan Zaytouneh. After her abduction, the work continued until 2017. Darwish said their information came from the ground.

Klinge further recalled a demonstration in Douma on April 29, 2011 which was quelled by the use of firearms and asked Darwish to further elaborate on that. Darwish explained that they [VDC] documented that incident with a list of the victims, arrested people and in addition they also stored testimonies on that event.

Klinge asked about the numbers of arrested and dead people. Darwish said that at least dozens of people were arrested or hurt and they have names of eight people who were killed.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said that Darwish would be a lawyer and an expert on the Syrian legal system and asked whether torture and murder is prohibited in Syria and if there are groups that grant themselves immunity [from criminal prosecution for the use of torture]. Darwish explained that legally, torture is prohibited by the constitution. Syria ratified the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel,

---

<sup>8</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It is not clear whether Darwish meant that funerals became a regular practice as there were so many dead who needed to be buried or whether the funeral took place as usual, contrary to what families were told.

Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment \(CAT\) [in 2004], however refused to sign the Optional Protocol which allows for external examination [of detention facilities and measures taken to prevent torture]. He added that all of that is however, theoretical. In reality, torture and kidnapping [خطف] exist and are covered by law, in particular with regards to security forces and police, before or after 2011. Darwish said this started with the Legislative Decree 14/1969 which grants immunity for members of the state security. It is not possible to file a complaint against them regarding torture procedures, enforced disappearances or any other violation. This was also confirmed by Art. 74 [of Legislative Decree 549/1969] which states that it is not allowed to prosecute a worker of state security, or those assigned or loaned to contractors directly in front of the judiciary. Darwish said this also applies to volunteers or contracted civilians. In addition to that, another Legislative Decree was issued in 2008, which expanded immunity from prosecution to the rest of the security organs: political security, police and inner security. However, the worst thing to happen in that regard was in 2011, when the government ceased “the suspension of working with the state of emergency [martial law]” and The President of the Republic via Decree 55/2011, granted the security forces the status of “judicial police”, الضابطة العدلية, which means detention can be extended for 60 days without referring a person to judiciary. In practice, that Decree gave security forces the opportunity to detain, torture, conduct enforced disappearances and kill within a period of 60 days (not more than that). Darwish said, members of the security forces are also protected on a financial level, as the law of “oversight and inspection الرقابة والتفتيش” prevents any form of financial oversight over the security forces. He said that these [laws] were some forms of exemptions that security forces enjoy.

Scharmer recalled Darwish saying that torture was practiced before and after 2011 and asked Darwish whether he knew about sexualized violence at the GID, in particular Branches 251 and 285. Darwish affirmed that it existed and people heard particularly from the Muslim Brothers whose families and women were subject to sexualized violence and detention as a way of exerting pressure on them. After 2011, Darwish and his colleagues received reports about such violations concerning men and women. Darwish said they had female colleagues who were detained in Branch 251 and faced some kind of sexual harassment and in a broader scope, they also documented cases of rape concerning men and women.

Scharmer asked whether these were individual cases or if it was systematic. Darwish said that the problem was that shortly after the start of the demonstrations, security forces were given a free hand to do whatever they wanted and were granted a legal blanket (Darwish referred to Decree 55). They were free to do whatever they wanted without any restrictions imposed on the officers, whether it was torture or other forms of sexual violence. Darwish told the court that he was detained, along with his wife and female colleagues from the Centre. The first question he was asked by the interrogator was “Since you’re a lawyer: In your opinion, if your wife is raped, do you have the right to divorce her without paying the deferred dowry?”. Darwish said that certainly, he was not interested in knowing the law. It was a means to let him know that “your wife could be raped here”. Darwish said it [sexual violence] was systematic and was used.

Scharmer recalled Raslan’s vitae: he comes from a Sunnite village, worked for the state security since 1995, became an officer in 1996, was the head of the interrogation unit at Branch 251 since 2008 and probably became a brigadier general shortly after. Scharmer asked Darwish whether he thinks, from what he knows, that it is realistic that such a person was not involved with torture or murder in 17 years. On Scharmer’s comment that this question might sound strange to Darwish, the latter thanked for the question and replied that it is not strange at all. He said that in his opinion, the fact that an officer belongs to a certain ethnicity, has no effect on this topic, he keeps exercising his job. Darwish wanted to “elaborate a bit” further: the security forces are controlled by officers from the Alawite sect. A part of the control mechanism is the loyalty or ethnical affiliation. However, that approximation is incomplete. There are 3 other aspects that need to be taken into account: Firstly, it is generally known what the security forces do and what their function is. When a person volunteers to offer his services in that Branch freely, it means that he, in advance, agrees to be a part of this system and accepts to exercise these practices. Secondly, there are sectors in the government which only accept people whose loyalty and affiliations are known e.g. security forces [branches], scientific researches sector [department] (which belongs to the army) and the army sector [department]. Every person accepted by these sectors [departments], was scanned: the person himself as well as his beliefs and his affiliations. He would not have been accepted, without proof that his loyalty is guaranteed. Darwish said he thinks that one should read the security bodies and their ethnic composition in this regard.

Scharmer said that in 2008, Raslan became the head of the interrogation unit and asked if this would be possible without knowing about torture or using it. Darwish denied, saying it would never be possible.

Schulz recalled Darwish quoting Al-Assad the previous day “If you want it an open war...” and asked whether this speech can be found on the internet. Darwish said that there is a special website for the Republic Presidency which contains all speeches. He thinks that it could even be recorded on television and one is able to obtain it.

Schulz asked if it is still available online. Darwish said he assumes that one can access it via internet, but he does not know the specific link. However, he can hand a copy of the speech to the court.

Schulz wanted to know the name of the relevant website. Darwish said it is called “[web]site of the Syrian Republic Presidency”.

Schulz asked if Darwish has knowledge of any word/picture/audio recording of Raslan. Darwish said he has no information in that regard.

Schulz asked about Assef Shawkat. Darwish said that Assef Shawkat used to be a high-ranking officer within the Syrian Intelligence Services, husband of Bashar Al-Assad’s sister and one of the members of CCMC.

Plaintiff counsel Dr. Oehmichen said that “bar association” (Anwaltskammer) was translated and later “Labor Union Chamber” (Gewerkschaftskammer), and asked Darwish to explain the meaning of those terms. Darwish said he meant the bar association branch in Damascus [فرع نقابة المحامين في دمشق].<sup>9</sup>

Dr. Oehmichen recalled Darwish saying that until 2011, torture was used to get information, and asked whether there was then a difference in quality, number of people being tortured and if it was no longer used to get information. Darwish affirmed, saying that torture was a tool to extract information. One of the developments was that after 2011 and in addition to extracting information, it became a tool for revenge, killing and to shatter the will and mind. He said it became independent from any regulation. Darwish recalled him and other people being subject to “Shabh” [hanging from ceiling with feet barely touching the floor] in old Al-Mazzeah airport prison. Darwish said he was not able to see anything, but heard a hanged person [مشبوح] next to him telling the interrogator to let him down because he wanted to confess that he possessed weapons. The interrogator told the person that he did not want [to lower him]. The person told the interrogator that he wanted to tell him about crimes he committed and that he murdered people (the person only wanted to be relieved and be lowered). The interrogator responded in cold blood: “I don’t want information. Stay there hanged [مشبوح] until your hands are torn up and then die”. Darwish said he simply did not want any information at all.

<sup>9</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translator explained that the word “chamber” would not be used in Syria, but rather (labor) union.

Dr. Oehmichen wanted to know whether Darwish knows about any other Decrees which would be relevant to this trial. She asked if Darwish has juristic knowledge about decrees that could be relevant for the trial. Darwish said he thinks that these [the ones he previously mentioned] were among the most important laws by the President of the Republic, that gave a “protection blanket to the security forces.” However, there are additionally dozens and hundreds of Administrative Decrees. Darwish added that the most important thing is silence, an unwritten rule which makes all these practices possible.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker asked Darwish about Jisr Ash-Shughur and wanted to know whether he knows something about an incident in June 2011. Darwish said that was exactly what he previously indicated: that in the first months, there was a shooting on the security forces. That was the clearest incident and happened in June, 3 months after the demonstrations began. An armed group of civilians (not sure exactly who) shot at a security center [building] in Jisr Ash-Shughur, besieged it and killed a group of security forces. The latter fired back in a crossfire.

Böcker asked whether June 5 until June 7 [2011] would be logical. Darwish affirmed, saying that the siege lasted from the evening of one day until afternoon of the following one.

Böcker wanted to know whether the number of 120 killed members of the Syrian security forces would be correct (this would not be a scientific source but an accessible source). Darwish said the number 120 is, in his opinion, too big and exaggerated. The site that had been attacked was a detachment that belonged to the security [forces] and was in a peripheral area. In that type of detachment, it is difficult for more than 20 to 30 people [عنصر] to find space.

Böcker wanted to know whether some of those 120 people might have been killed by their own people while defecting, so not only forces fighting against civilians but against their own members. Darwish said he already mentioned that there was a crossfire, both parties killed each other and the clashing lasted for hours.

Böcker said he was not talking about reciprocally killings only but also security forces killing their own people while defecting. Darwish said he now understood the question and said that that he heard that some of the forces [عناصر] wanted to defect and were demonstrating [he most likely meant demonstrating against the shooting]. Their colleagues consequently shot them in order to prevent them from defecting. However, Darwish said he cannot confirm this information.

Böcker asked how the Syrian system (state security) treated their members if they were not 100% loyal and/or refused orders, before 2012. Darwish said ultimately, the nature of the regime does not accept anything but absolute loyalty. He assumes that the regime would not deal permissively with people who refuse or breach instructions [orders].

Böcker said given the case that someone’s perspective on history from 1958 was different in 2008, if someone like this realizes in 2011 that he does not want to continue, what would he do, would he go to Al-Assad and resign or what would be his options. Darwish said first of all, it has to be clear that he does not judge the intentions of people and is not in a position of prosecuting anyone. He assesses the events from a legal and documentative aspect. Again, the regime is not forgiving with those who do not show loyalty. Each case, person or location is different and must be examined specifically. Darwish added that he can only talk about things in general and hopes that any additional issues would be left for the justice of the court.

Böcker asked whether it was possible for someone to defect in 2011 without harming himself or his family. Darwish said he already answered this question.

Böcker denied, saying that he did not understand and repeated his question. Darwish said he already mentioned that the regime is not forgiving in such cases.

Böcker wanted to know what exactly Darwish meant by that and what the reaction of the regime would be. Darwish said he thinks he answered that question as well: it differs from one case to another, each case, person or location is different and must be examined separately.

Al-Gharib's defense counsel Linke asked if the Syrian criminal law knows "obstruction of justice". Darwish said the translation was not clear.

Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether this term exists in Syrian language. Darwish affirmed.

Linke asked again whether this concept existed in Syrian law. Darwish affirmed.

Linke went on to ask about "obstruction of justice in office". Darwish affirmed again.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer had one more question regarding Jisr Ash-Shughur, saying that Böcker told the version of the regime while he himself wants to tell the version of the BBC. Böcker interrupted complaining that this would not be true and he did not say that.<sup>10</sup>

Scharmer repeated the question, saying that according to the BBC, defected members of the security forces themselves attacked the detachment. He asked Darwish which version was right. Darwish said that the truth could be something else. In a country with neither press, freedom nor judicial investigations, it is really difficult to specify which story accurately tells what really happened. However, BBC Arabic and its office in Damascus has good connections with the Syrian government and its security bodies. Darwish said the relevant journalist at the time is still there today and has better connections than Darwish.

Böcker asked whether it is possible that one's own people shoot you. Darwish said he heard that question, adding that this story [version] exists and he cannot verify it.

The witness was dismissed.

Böcker referred to yesterday's confusion about the translation for "chain of custody" and "chain of command". Judge Kerber said what Darwish meant was "chain of evidence". Prosecutor Klinge said that the term is also mentioned in Darwish's documents, maybe this would clarify it. Böcker said he only wanted to know if this topic was completed. Judge Kerber affirmed.

***

10-minute-break

***

Testimony of P15

The witness entered the courtroom wearing a face mask and a cap. Judge Kerber asked him to take them off. P15 asked if he could keep them on and said that he has a brother in Syria who was detained twice by the Intelligence Services and is afraid that something bad would happen to him.

---

<sup>10</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: There was a dispute about the remonstrance between Scharmer and Böcker for some time. When they stopped, Darwish asked whether the initial question was for him.

Judge Kerber said before P15 says anything, she has to inform him about his right and duties as a witness.

Kerber asked whether the situation of P15's brother was related to P15's testimony in court. P15 denied, adding that his brother is the last family member who is still in Syria and was taken [detained] twice by the Intelligence Services.

Kerber asked why he was detained. P15 said that they [the intelligence services] asked him about P15.

Kerber wanted to know whether the questions to his brother were related to P15's testimony or the fact that he is no longer in Syria. P15 said the latter was the case.

One of the Plaintiff counsels, Dr. Oehmichen wanted to intervene, however judge Kerber stopped her.

Kerber concluded the Intelligence Services did not go for P15's brother because of the trial. As witnesses are only allowed to be disguised in certain cases, P15 has to take off his cap and mask. P15 again asked the court whether there was a possibility of him staying disguised, as his brother is under surveillance. Judge Kerber denied saying that there would be certain "rules of the game" in a criminal trial and told him to take off his mask and cap.

Again, Dr. Oehmichen tried to intervene by asking whether Kerber thinks that the Intelligence Services would differentiate [between arresting P15's brother in relation to P15's testimony or the fact that he lives abroad]. However, Kerber interrupted her and asked the witness for his name and age.

P15 said that his name is [name redacted], he is 50 years-old.

Kerber asked P15 about his occupation. P15 asked if he could rather not answer. Kerber denied adding that the question was about his current occupation in Germany, not in Syria.<sup>11</sup> P15 said that in Germany, he is unemployed.

As part of the witness instruction and last question on the formalities, Kerber asked if P15 was related to the accused. P15 denied.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Kerber said that P15 told the BKA that he knows Raslan and asked him to tell the court about it. P15 said that "Mr. Raslan" is a "son of the region" [from the same region P15]. The main contact P15 had, was with the brother of Raslan's wife. The first time P15 met Raslan was in 2005 when one of Raslan's relatives [P15 said either: 1- "the father of his mother" or 2- "His father or his mother"] died. P15 went to console the family and got to know Raslan on that occasion.

Kerber said that the court is interested in Raslan. P15 said that he met him at the condolence gathering and then after 2005 for the second time. P15 recalled that he was in Damascus with one of his relatives when he spoke to Raslan on the phone and went to meet him. P15 said that he does not remember where exactly they met but they drank a cup of coffee [and sat] for no longer than 30 minutes. P15 said he left and never saw him [Raslan] again, only sent SMS on Eid or certain occasions. He said that this was their entire relation, via phone.

Kerber wanted to know what they talked about in the café. Plaintiff counsel Scharmer corrected and said that P15 did not say café, he just said they met for a coffee. P15 said they met in the office. He could not remember the subject, but "it was greeting and stuff like that."

---

<sup>11</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P15 mentioned his profession back in Syria but it was not translated in German due to an overlap between translation and the judge talking. So, it might have been overheard.

Kerber asked P15 if he knew what Raslan's occupation was. P15 of course he knew that Raslan was an intelligence officer.

Kerber asked what P15 wanted from Raslan. P15 said he did not want anything at all. P15 explained that he saw Raslan at the condolence gathering where he gave P15 his number. It was a friendly visit and P15 did not want anything.

Kerber wanted to know whether P15 wanted something from Raslan. P15 denied adding that neither did he have in mind to ask anything at all.

Kerber asked whether P15 mentioned his cousin to Raslan. P15 said that this was in 2012. P15 told the court that his cousin [son of the sister of P15's mother]. was arrested and P15 did not know where his cousin was. Nobody was able to know where he was. P15 added that maybe during Ramadan 2012 [began on July 20 and ended on August 18], P15 talked with "Mr. Raslan" on the phone from P15's home and in presence of his cousin's family. P15 said he called and told Raslan that his cousin has been missing for a while and the family is desperate and does not know anything about his fate. Raslan took the name of the cousin (that was shortly before Iftar [breaking the fast]) and once he noted some information about him (date of birth), he asked for some time and told P15 to call him back after 1 or 2 hours. After Iftar, P15 talked to Raslan who said that unfortunately, P15's cousins' situation was not that good, (he was in an interrogation [تحقيق] situation or something like that) and according to Raslan, needed a lawyer to defend him. The situation was too unfortunate. Raslan said a certain phrase which P15 wanted to share: "something that bleeds the hearts (or the heart, P15 was not sure) شيء يدمي القلوب/القلب".

Kerber asked what Raslan meant by that. P15 said that until today, he does not know. Perhaps Raslan was just comforting a sad person. Only Raslan himself knows. P15 confirmed that this was exactly what happened.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Wiedner wanted to know when the condolence gathering took place. P15 said that he cannot provide a timeframe with dates, because he did not write them down to testify [in the future], but he thinks that it was in 2005.

Wiedner said that P15 also mentioned that year during the police interview and then asked whether P15 knew about Raslan before [2005], since he was in contact with the family. P15 said that in fact, he wants to emphasize that he only knows Raslan from meeting him once. The second meeting, did not last for more than 30 minutes. It was in 2005 or 2006, P15 said he does not remember exactly but the dates were close to each other.

Wiedner said his question was rather whether P15 knew what Raslan used to work, before they met in 2005. P15 said he knew the brother of Raslan's wife, who told him that someone in Raslan's family died, so P15 went to the condolence and sat with them. Another of Raslan's brothers-in-law (P15 was not sure of his name, maybe [name redacted]) has a wife who is a gynecologist in the area and is called [name redacted] who has a good reputation. P15 said that these were the only members of the family whom he knows, adding that it was a simple, not a very deep relationship.

Wiedner wanted to know where Raslan originally comes from. P15 said he is from a village under administration of Homs, Al-Houla حمص، الحولة.

Wiedner asked P15 to specify the village. P15 said it is called Taldou تلدو.

Wiedner confirmed that P15 said the same thing during his interview with the BKA. He went on to ask P15 about Raslan's occupation. (P15 and Wiedner clarified that Wiedner was talking about 2005 and before). P15 said Raslan worked as an intelligence officer.

Wiedner wanted to know what he did before that. P15 said that as far as he is concerned, Raslan was a police officer.

Wiedner recalled P15 telling the BKA that Raslan was "a trainer in the police faculty". P15 affirmed.

Wiedner asked what Raslan's rank was. P15 said that perhaps he was a lieutenant-colonel مقدم, however he is not entirely sure.

Wiedner again quoted from what P15 previously told the BKA, where he said that Raslan was a "captain, but also not sure". P15 said at the time of the condolence gathering, Raslan was a lieutenant-colonel مقدم, but when he was working with the police, maybe he was a captain نقيب. P15 said he can only make assumptions as he did not ask Raslan about that matter.

Wiedner recalled that after that, P15 met Raslan only one more time for a coffee, and asked where that was. P15 said it was in Damascus in Raslan's office. He said he does not remember the exact location. However, he recalls that Raslan's office was not on the 1st floor.

Wiedner asked P15 to describe the situation and wanted to know whether P15 had to pass a security check before entering Raslan's office. P15 said "of course there was no control", however at the door, P15 was stopped (P15 does not know if they talked it over with Raslan) "We"<sup>12</sup> were asked about our names.

Wiedner asked in which year that happened. P15 said it was in 2006 or 2007, he did not remember exactly.

Wiedner recalled P15 telling the BKA that this happened in "2007 or 2008". P15 said "maybe."

Wiedner asked P15 to describe the office. P15 said that he went to have a coffee, not to take photos of the office. However, as far as he remembers, the office was normal, neither big nor small. P15 added that he does not remember much.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P15 knows the geographic location and the function of the building. P15 denied, adding that he does neither remember the location nor its name. However, P15 remembered that the office was at the State Security Intelligence Branch.

Wiedner quoted from P15's interview with the BKA during which he mentioned "the Inner Branch" in this context. P15 the BKA asked him about the Inner Branch but he did not know the name.

Wiedner wanted to clarify what P15 meant by "state security" and asked P15 what he knows about the Intelligence Services. P15 said all the Intelligence Services in Syria "are the same subject." He said that the members of the Intelligence Services would not know more about that.

Wiedner asked if Raslan was wearing a uniform [when they met for coffee]. P15 denied saying that Raslan wore civilian clothes.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan was still occupying the same position, when P15 contacted him in 2012. P15 affirmed that he called in 2012 and that Raslan was definitely still in the same position. P15 said he did not know where Raslan was working, but he knew that he was an Intelligence Officer and P15 was hoping to get information about his cousin. Raslan helped P15 by saying that his cousin's situation was not good and that he needed a lawyer. P15 said "that was everything."

---

<sup>12</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P15 said "we" although it did not become clear during his testimony whether he was there alone or accompanied by anyone.

Wiedner asked if P15 had the feeling that his cousin was detained in an area within Raslan's responsibility or whether Raslan got the information from somewhere else. P15 said that he does not think that his cousin was with Raslan, since he was arrested by the Military Intelligence Directorate. P15 added that this is his evaluation of the matter, however he does not have any details.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan spoke about the physical condition of P15's cousin. P15 said that Raslan answered briefly in 3 words saying that his [cousin's] situation was not good and that he needed a lawyer, preferably one who is specialized in "such cases." P15 said he in turn, told his cousin's brother who was present [when P15 called Raslan].

Wiedner recalled P15 telling the BKA that "Raslan said that the cousin was arrested at a checkpoint and that his condition was very bad because of torture". P15 replied that this section was not about his cousin. Wiedner affirmed that he accidentally quoted the wrong passage and apologized. P15 said that, when P15 mentioned his cousin and Raslan told him about his [cousin's] situation, right after Iftar [breaking the fast], P15 called Raslan back who then told P15 about the specialized lawyer. This was when Raslan mentioned that incident [which Wiedner just quoted].

Wiedner wanted to know more about what happened at that incident. P15 said that Raslan said that a detainee was brought to him from one of the checkpoints. He was beaten by "the forces of" the checkpoint so much that his body was hurt, so he was unable to stand up and his condition was very bad. P15 said that this is what happened and after that, Raslan said "something bleeds the heart", however P15 does not know whether Raslan meant his cousin or everyone, only Raslan would know.

Wiedner asked P15 what happened with his cousin. P15 said that "until today", nothing is known about him. He recalled that his cousin was an awesome young man who studied veterinary medicine at college.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the fate of P15's cousin. P15 said that no one knows anything. "They" sent his ID card and a death certificate to his family. P15's aunt visited her son in Sednaya صيدنايا prison for no more than 5 minutes. P15 said he thinks that she visited him twice. The third time, they gave her a death certificate and sent the ID card back to the governorate. P15 said that indicates that he was dead.

Wiedner asked whether the cause of death was mentioned. P15 said in general, "they" make up a cause of death e.g. heart attack or something like that. He added that the regime does not admit killing anybody.

Wiedner quoted P15 telling the BKA about a "heart attack" as cause of death. P15 affirmed.

Wiedner went on to ask P15 whether he remembers Raslan's rank, when he contacted him concerning his cousin. P15 affirmed, saying that Raslan was a colonel عقيد.

Wiedner asked whether P15 knows when and why Raslan stopped working with the Intelligence Services and why he left Syria. P15 said that in general, he does not know anything about Raslan, his work or personal affairs.

Wiedner asked if P15 contacted Raslan again regarding P15's own situation. P15 affirmed, saying that he called Raslan in Turkey, as P15 was told that Raslan was in Germany. P15 told him that he wanted to go to Germany but Raslan did not encourage P15 to do so. P15 recalled that he was living in a camp in Turkey at the time. He said that [Raslan's] discouragement referred to the possibility that there might be a solution soon and “we” could go back home [to Syria]. P15 said that Raslan was the reason why P15’s journey to Germany was delayed.

Wiedner asked when this happened. P15 said in 2014, but he does not remember exactly, maybe at the end of 2014.

Wiedner wanted to know where Raslan got that information about Syria’s situation from and what he was doing at that time. P15 said that he was told that Raslan went to Geneva and might have more information about Syria than himself. Raslan literally advised P15 that ‘there is no need [to come to Germany]. If P15 is not in need for a source to eat, then it is better to wait, as something might change in the near future.’

Wiedner asked if P15 contacted Raslan again. P15 said that he called him and asked him if there was still hope. He told P15 that it could take a long time and encouraged P15 to come to Germany.

Wiedner asked when that happened. P15 said it was in 2015.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P15 and Raslan had contact in Germany. P15 affirmed, saying that they were in loose contact (occasional reassurance and stuff like that).

Wiedner asked if the contact was in person or via phone. P15 denied personal contact, adding that they only met twice and only asked from time to time how things were going.

Wiedner asked if they called each other in Germany. P15 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan spoke about his personal situation in Germany. P15 said that Raslan once told him about his health condition. He had issues with his stomach, went to the hospital and had a surgery. P15 recalled that Raslan said that his matters were fine and that he was working as a security [guard] and had a driver’s license. They talked about the general situation in Syria which everyone talks about. P15 said he wished Raslan and others good health.

Wiedner mentioned that P15 was detained once and Raslan worked for the Intelligence Services. He asked P15 to evaluate whether Raslan was critical or loyal to the regime. P15 said that September 16 [same as the day session] is the anniversary of his detention. He was arrested in 2012 at 07:00 in the evening and stayed there for 45 days.

P15 asked for a short break.

***

10-minute break

***

Wiedner said that P15 does not have to talk about his own experiences in detention, but rather assess on which side Raslan stood. P15 said that he does not know what he should say. They did not talk about this subject. P15 said for him, so long as Raslan left the regime, he “practically moved to the other shore.”

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker mentioned that P15 was at Raslan’s office between 2006 and 2008 and ever since only had contact via phone in 2012. Böcker recalled P15 saying that Raslan worked at the same duty station during that entire time. P15 asked if Böcker meant the identical position or only Inner Security.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer complained that P15 said the opposite to what Böcker just quoted.

Böcker asked P15 to describe Raslan's work in 2012. P15 said that he does not know anything about his work, it was Raslan's sole concern.

Böcker wanted to know whether P15 knows anything about Raslan's workplace. P15 denied.

Böcker said they however talked on the phone in 2012 when P15 told Raslan the story of his cousin, and consequently wanted to know if they did not talk about Raslan's occupation. P15 said that he and Raslan spoke about P15's cousin, because Raslan was an Intelligence Officer and they [P15's family] hoped that he had information. However, regarding Raslan's workplace, P15 does only know that he worked at State Security. P15 added that nothing more was of interest for him.

Böcker quoted from P15's interview with the BKA during which he said that "Raslan asked me to call back after 2 hours, then Raslan said that the situation would be difficult, my cousin would be heard in front of a military court, which notoriously only happens in exceptional cases". P15 asked Böcker to which specific sentence he is referring. Böcker went on to ask P15 whether Raslan mentioned the term "notoriously" or if P15 did. P15 said that he himself used this term.

Böcker asked whether P15 said that to the police. P15 said that he did not understand the question.

Böcker asked how P15 knew that military court would be equivalent to a special case. P15 said that he does not know that wording and does not remember that sentence.

Böcker again quoted parts from P15's interview with the BKA where P15 said "[the context of the phone call was repeated], the call shows that Raslan was affected by the situation. P15 had the feeling that Raslan had compassion for the story of the young man at the checkpoint. P15 was surprised that a member of the Intelligence Services would talk about it and condemn it on the phone, though his phone might be controlled [bugged]". P15 affirmed the statement.

Böcker asked P15 about his perception of Raslan's attitude. P15 said that there is no need to repeat because he already answered that. Regarding the phrase "Bleeds the hearts", P15 added that when one hears that, one can feel that the person who is talking is touched by what is happening. This would be how P15 perceived the situation. However, whether Raslan was touched by what happened to P15's cousin, or by everybody, P15 does not know. P15 added that when he hears such words from someone, he feels that the person is touched by something.

Böcker recalled that P15 was afraid of deserting because his family and himself are rather supportive of the government (both [P15 and Raslan] working in the state apparatus). Böcker then wanted to know whether P15 asked Raslan if he could get his cousin out of prison or both of them with pooled forces. P15 asked if the question was regarding [name redacted] [was translated to "my cousin"]. Böcker affirmed. P15 said that he called Raslan who answered as P15 already told the court.

Böcker clarified that he wants to know whether P15 called Raslan with the aim to ask him about a "detour" for his cousin. P15 asked if Böcker meant that whether P15 wanted to ask Raslan about [name redacted] what his situation was and things like that.

Böcker denied saying that he wants to know whether P15 thought of something like "Can you just release him?". P15 denied, explaining that what he had on his mind was to ask Raslan about his cousin<sup>13</sup> and get relevant information. That was everything they spoke about.

---

<sup>13</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Many times, instead of saying a name or "my cousin", P15 used the term "the young man".

Raslan's second defense counsel Fratzki asked if P15 still remembers the interview with the BKA from 2019. P15 said that he might have forgotten some specifics, but in general he remembers.

Fratzki asked if P15's hearing was retranslated into Arabic. P15 affirmed.

Fratzki asked how long it took. P15 asked if Fratzki meant the interview. Fratzki said that he meant the retranslation. P15 said that he does not remember, however it did not take long.

Fratzki asked if there were corrections. P15 affirmed that there might have been some corrections.

Fratzki asked if it lasted 3.5 hours. P15 denied.

Fratzki said that "here" [BKA interview minutes], it says that the retranslation lasted from 4pm to 7:30pm. P15 said that this might include the computer work, but that it didn't last that long.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Schulz asked if P15 remembers the question "when did Raslan defect from the regime?". P15 affirmed, adding that he remembers that it was at the end of 2012 and the news he saw on TV. However, he does not remember on which channel.

Schulz further quoted from P15's interview with the BKA during which he said that he found out [about Raslan's defection] via TV, at the end of 12/2012, on Al-Jazeera". P15 said that it might have been Al-Jazeera as they were broadcasting, along with other channels such as FSA [Free Syrian Army] channel and Safa صفا channel.

Schulz said that P15 said that he would have read about it in the "news thread" and asked what "news thread" means. P15 said that an officer was with the regime and then defected and joined the other side.

Schulz asked if "news thread" means the text [banner] under the TV picture. P15 affirmed Plaintiff counsel Scharmer recalled that P15 had the feeling that Raslan was touched by the situation (phone call) and asked P15 whether he had the same feeling in 2006, that Raslan would be somehow touched. P15 said "by what should he be moved in 2006 – 2007?" P15 added that they were talking about 2012.

Scharmer affirmed, adding that he still wants to know about the situation in 2006 when they had a coffee together. P15 said on the contrary, they were laughing back then, in a good mood, "nothing worth mentioning."

The witness was dismissed.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:40 p.m.

The next trial will be October 01, 2020 at 09:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 14

Hearing dates of October 01, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

- P16, a 38-year-old woman, testified about her detention and interrogations in Division 40 and Al-Khatib. She identified the accused, Anwar Raslan, as one of the interrogators in Al-Khatib and talked about meeting Raslan in Jordan after he defected. P16 described the beating that she and other detainees experienced and the lack of hygiene available to detainees – although Raslan was sympathetic and did not beat her. She said state security used sexual violence as a torture method and shared stories from other detainees detailing rape and harassment. She was asked about prior statements where she said she was treated well at Al-Khatib. In addition, she laughed uncomfortably during her testimony. The witness described her meeting with Raslan and discussed the political implications of senior officials defecting from the Syrian government.

Trial Day 34 – October 01, 2020

The proceedings began at 9:40 am. There were about 14 spectators and three individuals from the media present.

[Name/information redacted] petition on plaintiff representation was withdrawn because he was already heard in the Netherlands. [No further information on this petition was provided during this or previous court sessions.]

Mazen Darwish's documents from his earlier testimony were handed out.

The hearing of witness [name/information redacted] will be on the first and second of December. Mrs. Hille and Mr. Knappmann, who led the hearing, will appear on December 2.

P16 appeared with her lawyer Mrs. Otto-Hanschmann from Frankfurt (Main).

Chief Judge Dr. Kerber told P16 to tell them when she wants to take a break. P16 thanked Judge Kerber.

Judge Kerber gave her instructions and informed her about her rights as a witness.

Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammad was not present.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Trial Monitor's Note: P16 consistently laughed throughout the session, even when talked about herself being sexually harassed. The witness was in good spirits. She used the phrase, "Young men and girls" شباب "وصبايا" a lot, however, it has been written simply as "men and women" throughout the report.

Testimony of P16 [name/information redacted]

P16 is 38-year-old woman who lives in Paris. She said that she was a journalist in Syria. In France, she is learning French. She is not related to the accused by blood or by marriage.

Judge Kerber asked her to talk about how she came into contact with the regime and about her detention. P16 said that she comes from a big family of nine siblings and her parents. She started her political activity in the communist party in Syria in 2001. Between 2001 and 2011, many friends were detained while distributing data on labour (or martyrs) day. When the revolution began in 2011, they had an idea of how the regime would deal with opposing movements. Her first detention started on May 2, 2011 and lasted until May 16 (2 weeks) in Al-Khatib Branch. The second one started on April 12, 2012 and ended on April 19 (one week). This detention was also in Al-Khatib Branch.

Judge Kerber asked how P16 was detained and what she experienced. P16 said that the first detention was from a women's demonstration in the centre of Damascus. When one speaks about demonstrations, one would think of thousands of people, but there were only 30 girls. P16 was the only girl that was detained because she was filming/taking photos [The word in Arabic can mean both, but probably, she meant filming]. Initially, she was taken to Division 40, which is known as Hafez Makhloof's حافظ مخلوف division. Some young men were taken from the street and "we" were beaten together. On the same day, they were taken to Al-Khatib Branch. When P16 arrived, she had to wait in the corridor for a long time – approximately four hours.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 was sitting. P16 said no, she was standing and facing the wall.

Judge Kerber asked if it was for four to five hours. P16 confirmed. Of course, there were many members/forces/personnel bringing people [detainees], passing by [the corridor], and smacking the detainees. That was something normal/ordinary/regular, not because of orders, but rather because they could do so.

Judge Kerber asked if they used hands or tools. P16 said that they were hit mostly by hand, but once it was with an electric stick. P16 had the feeling that they were testing it out. P16 did not know when the first interrogation started. The questions were about her and her family, in addition to another line of questioning, like who sent her and who paid her money to demonstrate. She was blindfolded and her hands were cuffed behind her back during the interrogation. When she was asked stupid questions, she laughed so, she received a smack on the back of her neck. Afterward, she was taken to the solitary cell. P16 said that she does not know if she should elaborate.

Judge Kerber asked her to please continue. P16 said that it was a room "as big as the table here" [she referenced a table in front of her in the courtroom], maybe a bit bigger. It was like a grave. No more details.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 can estimate the size. P16 said that she thinks that it was 1.8 by 1.7 meters. In fact, she was interrogated five times on the first day, and there were always threats of torture and rape - "Now, we will give you to the members/forces/personnel [عناصر] to act [deal with you]". P16 was preparing herself psychologically for what to do in such a situation. That was all that happened on the first day. She stayed for three days in the solitary cell, from Monday to Thursday, and was not summoned for interrogation. However, there were three things worth mentioning: One, the sound of the people who were being tortured. Two, going to the toilet only once per day. Whenever she was taken to the toilet, “they had to try/test their muscles”, calling her “you who**”, “you cu**.” She received kicks, slaps, and smacks on the back of her neck. [She said رفسة which is a “kick”, more to describe the animal’s kick. Also, شلوت which is a kick especially targeting the buttocks. The translator did not know what it meant and there was some discussion about it.]

Judge Kerber asked whether P16 received blows or was being touched. P16 said she was only beaten. The harassment was in Division 40 when they were beaten all together, and, intentionally and unintentionally, they were grabbing sensitive areas.

Judge Kerber asked if that happened in Division 40, but not in Al-Khatib. P16 repeated that it did not happen in Al-Khatib, but in Division 40.

Judge Kerber asked how P16 knew that she was in Al-Khatib. P16 said that one night, before her transfer to another branch, there security forces stormed the Al-Tal التل area and they arrested many people from there, almost everyone who lived there. They arrested a 60-year-old woman and put her with P16 in the cell and she told P16 that [about the security forces storming the area].

Judge Kerber asked what food the detainees received. P16 replied, olive and bread.

Judge Kerber asked if it was enough. P16 said that she does not know because she did not eat. As P16 previously said, she was preparing herself for the worst. It was one loaf of bread.

Judge Kerber asked P16 about her second detention. P16 said that it was from a sit-in in front of the Syrian parliament within/as a part of the “Stop the Killing” campaign. The security forces were there and knew that they [the protestors] were coming. Before they [“we”] began, they [the security forces] charged at/attacked the protestors and detained young people and girls. P16 and a woman (P16 did not want to mention the name) were beaten like crazy in the street. She [the unnamed woman] was wearing a hijab that the security forces took off and then they ripped up her mantle [Jilbab/coat]. They detained 40 young men and girls. It was the same scenario [as the first detention]: they were taken to Division 40 but the beating was more savage/fierce. Due to the beating, they had welts for ten days. They [sexually] harassed a lot, in an exaggerated way/way too much.

Judge Kerber asked P16 to elaborate. P16 said that she was talking about young men and women. With the girls, they grabbed P16’s and another woman’s breasts in a “disgusting way.” They had the power/strength, but “we” did not [they were powerless/helpless].

Judge Kerber asked if that was in Division 40. P16 said yes. She does not know how to continue/go on.

Judge Kerber recalled that P16 was in Division 40 and was taken to Al-Khatib. Judge Kerber then asked how P16 knew that and what happened. P16 said that when they were transferred from Division 40 to Al-Khatib, they were put in a small van. They were shoved inside without blindfolds, so one could see the streets.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 recognized Al-Khatib visually. P16 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked what happened afterward. P16 said that at the branch's door, the famous Abu Ghadab أبو غضب and another person called Abu Shamleh أبو شملة greeted/welcome them with four or five slaps following the beating in Division 40.

Judge Kerber asked if that happened in Al-Khatib. P16 confirmed. They separated girls from young men. An officer in official clothes [This was translated to "official uniform", but the wording she used can mean "a uniform or a suit." (P16 does not know [is not sure] whether he was an officer) came and threatened them directly and distinctly saying that they are who**s and need bringing-up/rearing. He [the "officer"] said that they will inform their [P16 and the detainees] parents and will rear/bring them up [This was translated to educate/raise].

Judge Kerber asked how they would raise them [P16 and detainees]. P16 said by beating.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 was also talking about rape. P16 replied, of course, there were always threats of rape like, "Here, we have members/personnel/forces who have not seen their wives for a long time."

Judge Kerber asked if they were threatened with rape on every occasion. P16 said yes.

Judge Kerber asked how P16 knew the names of the torturers like Abu Ghadab and the other one. P15 said that they were Abu Ghadab and Abu Shamleh. "We" were living with them. They [the members/personnel] used to call each other by those names.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 knew them from the first detention. P16 said that in the first detention, she became acquainted with Abu Shamleh and with Abu Ghadab during the second detention.

Judge Kerber asked what happened afterward. P16 said that they were searched and were naked, but a female searched them.

Judge Kerber asked if the body orifices were searched as well. P16 said of course. They had to squat three times to make sure they weren't hiding anything (P16 said that she does not know what she would hide in her body). P16 said that the noticeable thing from the place where they [P16 and other female detainees] were inspected by that woman (P16 does not know if she was a nurse) was its stench. It stunk there and there were traces on the wall (P16 does not know if it was blood). However, P16 felt that the marks were from [signs of] beating and torture. She could see some tools.

Judge Kerber asked what tools were there. P16 replied, cables and sticks.

Judge Kerber asked if they were hung on the wall or bundled together. P16 said no, they were on the floor.

Judge Kerber asked what happened after the body search. P16 said that they were interrogated and, as usual, blindfolded. When they were not pleased with the answer, the detainees were beaten. P16 thinks that it was the third day when she met Anwar Raslan for the first time. Of course, she did not know who he was.

Judge Kerber asked P16 to look to the right and say whether she recognized Raslan there. P16 said yes.

Judge Kerber asked what he did. P16 said that they took her from the solitary cell, blindfolded, and climbed several stairs (P16 does not know how many floors). They arrived at the office and when they entered, she heard Raslan's voice telling the security personnel [عنصر] that he had told them a thousand times to not bring the detainees blindfolded. The security person took the blindfold off. Raslan asked her to sit down and to choose a seat [i.e. to sit down where she wanted]. In the beginning, he did not ask questions. Then he asked if she wanted coffee. She was terrified and said no thanks. After that, he asked general questions about P16's family. He was nice/kind in general. She stayed in the office for about 15 – 20 minutes. Before he called the security personnel to take her back to the solitary cell, they talked for two minutes about what was happening in Syria. P16 remembers that she said that she did not believe that the army went on the street to kill people and he shook his head. [She did not specify whether he shook his head (left to right), or nodded up and down. It was translated to "nodded."] He called the security member/personnel to take her back. P16 asked him [Raslan] if she could smoke a cigarette in the corridor and he agreed. He told the security person to give her a cigarette to smoke in the corridor before he took her back [to the cell].

Judge Kerber asked what happened next. P16 replied that nothing happened. The following day she was transferred to another branch where she, along with two other women, stayed in a cell in Kafar Souseh كفسوسة. From there, she was referred to the [Syrian] court and was released after three days.

Judge Kerber recalled that in a previous questioning/hearing, P16 explained why she was not treated badly. Judge Kerber asked if P16 remembered what she said. P16 said in fact no [she did not remember], but that was probably because the "Stop the Killing" campaign had momentum at the international level. Kofi Annan was in Syria and it was obvious that "we" were peaceful activists. Some friends and lawyers seized the opportunity of Annan [being there in Syria] to increase the pressure to release them.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 identified a dialect during the interrogation. P16 said that the question was perplexing/ disconcerting because everyone in that corps speaks one dialect.

Judge Kerber asked which dialect. P16 replied the Syrian regime dialect.

Judge Kerber asked if P16 could specify. P16 said that it is obvious that Judge Kerber knew the answer.

Judge Kerber replied that the answer should be public. P16 said that she reserves to mention the term that Judge Kerber wants.

Judge Kerber asked if Raslan speaks a regional dialect. P16 said no.

Judge Kerber said that P16 had said that before [The court was not informed when P16 had said this, but perhaps Judge Kerber was referencing the police questioning]. P16 asked if Judge Kerber was talking about Raslan or the whole regime.

Judge Kerber said she was asking about Raslan. P16 said that she knows that one who lives in Damascus, speaks the Damascene dialect. However, one who lives in Damascus knows if someone comes from another place and P16 knew that he came from another place.

Judge Kerber asked where does he come from. P16 replied, Homs.

Judge Kerber asked where in Homs. P16 said that she does not know.

***5-minute break***

Judge Kerber asked if P16 met Raslan after her detention. P16 said yes, in Jordan. In fact, until that time, P16 did not know his name, but one of her acquaintances was also a defector from the Syrian regime and showed her his [Raslan's] picture. The acquaintance asked her if she remembered that person and she said no. He told her to recall Al-Khatib. P16 then remembered and asked him why he asked. He told her that he [Raslan] defected and is in Jordan. P16 said that she was curious [The translation was "She had the pleasure to meet him there twice"].

Judge Kerber asked how the meeting was. P16 said it was a bit surreal. [There was confusion in translating the term. It was translated that Raslan did not seem normal.] P16 said that it was not normal. She was sitting with her jailer drinking coffee. In fact, they talked about generalities more than details. The meeting lasted for an hour or an hour and a half and after that meeting, she had not seen him again.

Judge Kerber told P16 to tell the court whenever she needs a break or they can proceed on. P16 said that we can carry on.

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked P16 about her activities in the communist party and if she noticed arrests or chases. P16 said that when Bashar [al-Assad] took leadership, he tried to have political openness at the beginning, which coincided with the Palestinian Intifada [uprising] in 2000. So, there was a fine/ok political movement and demonstrations against America and Israel were part of general Syrian propaganda. However, starting in 2002 or 2003, he [Bashar al-Assad] changed his mind and said to himself, "What do I have to do with this [why should I be concerned]?" There were detentions for most of the activists. During "our" communist activity, they detained many [people/members] who were distributing leaflets. One of them stayed in a solitary cell for 30 days alone and told "us" when he was released.

Judge Wiedner asked if the arrests were conducted by the intelligence services. P16 said that the comrade who was detained in 2006 was important to her personally and therefore, his story was important to her. Based on orders from the party, he reserved all the information and did not share information with others [He did not talk and give information in the detention/interrogation]. This information was considered special to the leadership.

Judge Wiedner asked where he was detained. P16 said that he did not mention where.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P16 was detained in Division 40 and asked if she can describe where it was. P16 clarified if Judge Wiedner meant Division 40. Judge Wiedner confirmed. P16 said it is in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, البحر الأبيض which is a street in an area called As-Salehiyya الصالحية.

Judge Wiedner asked if she knew that Division 40 was there and how. P16 said that she knew because when they were taken from the demonstration to the branch, they were too many people and not enough blindfolds. They could see where they were heading.

Judge Wiedner asked if she knew before her arrest that Division 40 was there. P16 said that she did not know that it was called Division 40, but she knew that it was a branch of the intelligence services. In Damascus and from the beginning of the demonstrations, one could see checkpoints and fortifications around the branches and therefore, one could recognize/distinguish them.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 could describe the building of Division 40. P16 said that there was a big iron gate and a space [yard] that was surrounded by residential buildings. They were able to see balconies.

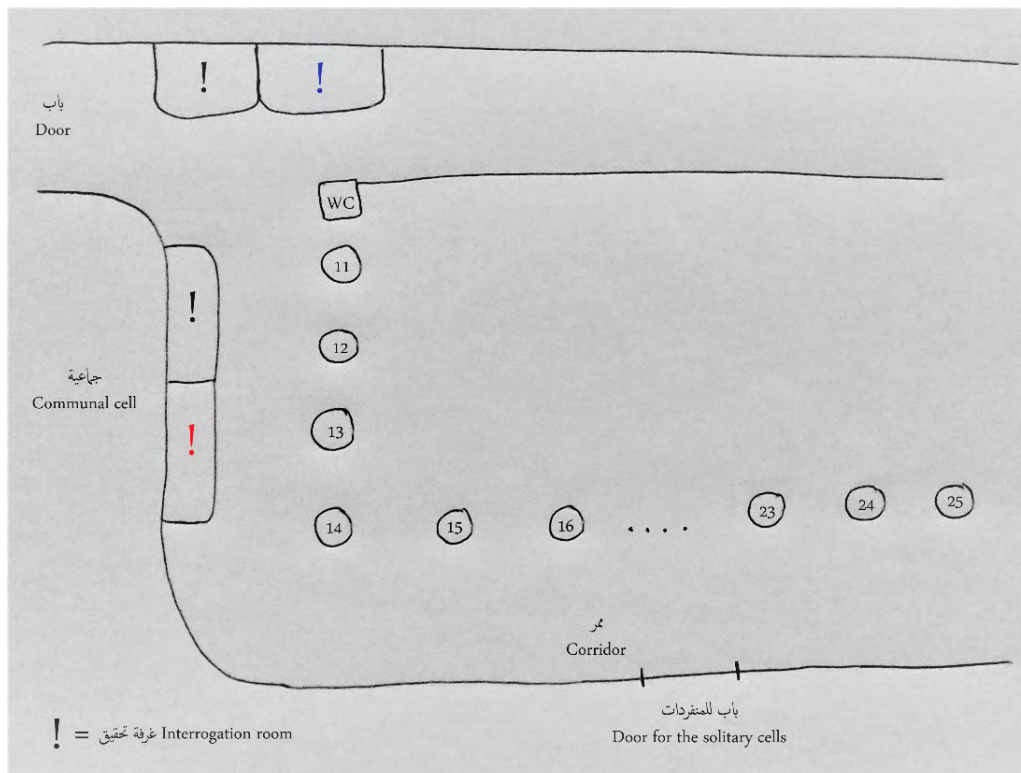

Beyond that, there was a normal building (like the residential flats). Both times, they were beaten on the third floor.

Judge Wiedner recalled that she went to Al-Khatib after Division 40. Judge Wiedner asked if she remembered her arrival, and where she was brought and where the cells were. P16 said that she drew a sketch of the branch and handed it in, but she could try to recall it again.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 could describe it first and if she went downstairs, as well as to describe the blows and the situation. P16 said that the sounds of beating are always/constantly audible/heard. "Morning" we [the detainees] don't differentiate day from the night there, but only know it is morning because they [the prison guards] play Fayrouz [a singer] and one can hear her and the sounds of the beating together/simultaneously.

Judge Wiedner said that P16 mentioned the downstairs and asked if she meant the basement. P16 confirmed. When they arrived at the door of the branch and after the welcome party by Abu Shamleh, they went downstairs (she does not know how many stairs, but it was underground). When going downstairs, there was a corridor on the opposite side. There were three or four gates/entrances, which P16 thinks were solitary cells.

A sketch was shown.

P16 mentioned that she was in cell numbers 23 and 25. She recognized the interrogation room [blue exclamation mark] from the smell of the toilet, [in the room] where she was interrogated. P16 said that she was beaten on the way to the toilet (back and forth). P16 said that the sounds [of torture] used to come from the shared/communal cell to the left. P16 said that in the corridor at the bottom there were beds for the guards/personnel. P16 added that below the door there was a solitary cell, number 13, where a friend of P16's [female friend] was detained since the 1980s. This friend was the woman who was brought to P16 [P16's cell]. They left the window open so that she could see her children being beaten in the interrogation room [red exclamation mark]. When she cried so much, she was brought to P16 [P16's cell].

Judge Wiedner asked how old the children were. P16 said that she [the woman] did not say. She was 60, so maybe her children were 20-year-olds.

Judge Wiedner asked if men and women were segregated. P16 said that she was segregated and did not hear about mixing men and women, at least according to what she heard from her female friends about Al-Khatib.

Judge Wiedner asked if underground means that there was no daylight. P16 replied, never.

Judge Wiedner asked if the lights were turned on. P16 said that the lights were turned on and off two or three times (P16 was not sure), but it happened at least once. They turned the lights off and someone collapsed. He was banging on the door like crazy saying that he "would tell everything and wanted to be let out" and the whole branch could hear him. Apparently, he could not breathe.

Judge Wiedner asked if the man responded this way because of the small size of the cell. P16 said yes, she thinks so because they were already living in horror and it felt like being in a grave. One lost all his senses and contact with the outside world. One cannot see anything and only hears people being beaten. P16 said that she thinks that some people don't have endurance and so they collapse.

Judge Wiedner asked if solitary cells were as she described them. P16 said yes, the numbers in the sketch are all solitary cells.

Judge Wiedner then asked if there was a second woman with her in this solitary cell. P16 confirmed and said that the woman was brought into P16's cell during the first detention.

Judge Wiedner recalled that there were interrogations in the interrogation rooms and asked what P16 perceived from others. P16 said that she does not know how to describe that. The sounds were terrifying for sure. "We" in the solitary cells were able to hear the cables hitting skin. The sounds of the young men who were beaten were abnormal. There was one person who lied to them to make them stop only to take another breath and promise to tell them everything. They asked him what he wanted and he said that he does not have anything to say.

P16 asked if it was possible to take a break. Judge Kerber asked for how long and if ten minutes was enough. P16 said yes.

***10-minute-break***

Judge Wiedner asked if there were tools to hang someone/something, like rings or hooks. P16 said the smell was remarkable. P16 was afraid and therefore, could not differentiate whether that room was for beating [or something else].

Judge Wiedner asked if she cannot remember clearly. P16 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P16 to describe a typical interrogation situation, but not with Raslan. P16 said that in all the interrogations that were conducted underground, she was always blindfolded and her hands were cuffed. She could recognize/differentiate the voices of the interrogators, but could not see them. However, it was remarkable that one could see from underneath the blindfold that all of them were wearing sports shoes. One could recognize that there was more than one person by the voice. There was always a member/person behind her who was responsible for beating her when they were not pleased with her answer. One time, she was taken to the interrogation and heard a person who was being tortured in the (same) interrogation room. When she entered, she could not see anything and someone was pulling her from her arm and therefore, she stepped on the person [who was being tortured] and he was pulled/dragged outside. She told him "I am sorry." From underneath the blindfold, she saw him being dragged outside.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was task sharing in interrogations. Did the interrogator do the beating as well? P16 said that no, the interrogator never hit her. It was the responsibility of the person behind her.

Judge Wiedner asked if the beatings were ordered. P16 said that she does not know, but she felt that when he [the interrogator] did not like the answer, it was reflected/indicated to the member [person behind her] and then she was beaten.

Judge Wiedner asked what they [the interrogator] wanted to know. P16 said that they asked about her and her brother, [name/information redacted], multiple times and in fact, he was detained in 2013 through the present time. There were questions about the family's financial situation and where was her father working, about her affiliation with the communist party, and about what the party's activities were and who was responsible for the party.

Judge Wiedner clarified that Raslan's office was not in the basement. P16 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 could estimate how many stairs/ floors she had to go up when going to the interrogation. P16 said that she had previously mentioned a second or third floor. She went up many stairs but that was her personal estimate, because she was blindfolded and her perception could maybe be mixed up.

Judge Wiedner asked if she was alone with Raslan or if there was another person with them. P16 said no, it was just them [P16 and Raslan].

Judge Wiedner recalled that at the beginning of the interrogation he [Raslan] told her to take off the blindfold. Judge Wiedner asked if someone else was there. P16 said the member/security personnel who brought her upstairs from the solitary cell was there.

Judge Wiedner asked what Raslan was wearing. P16 said that sometimes memories get mixed up [she sometimes does not remember things correctly], but maybe he was in official military clothes.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were symbols/signs on his epaulettes/insignia. P16 said that she does not remember, but she thinks that there was an eagle and two or three stars.

Judge Wiedner responded that P16 said "an eagle and two stars" in the police questioning.

Judge Kerber showed an image of some insignias.

(c) Wikipedia - https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Military\_ranks\_of\_Syria

Judge Wiedner asked P16 to describe Raslan's office. P16 said that, as she mentioned previously, in comparison with other offices, it was luxurious/upscale. There was a table [desk] made from expensive looking wood, a library [book shelves] and of course, Bashar al-Assad's picture.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a couch/armchair. P16 said, of course.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 was beaten before [she was brought to the office]. P16 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if one could notice that she had been beaten. P16 said that she showed signs, as her t-shirt was ripped and her hair was unkempt [She had physical indications that she had been beaten].

Judge Wiedner asked if she had marks on her face or if there were swellings. P16 replied, no.

Judge Wiedner asked if someone could hear screaming sounds from the office. P16 said no, never.

Judge Wiedner asked P16 what the purpose of the interrogation was and observed that she had described a friendly atmosphere. P16 said, correct. She does not know the reasons for the interrogations. They interrogate when they want – sometimes the questions were stupid and sometimes they were deep. It was their job.

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan wanted certain information from her, or if she was asked general questions. P16 said that he [Raslan] asked her one question about Al-Ghouta الغوطة. She was scared when he asked that, because she was detained both times from a demonstration, not because of her name. She was wary/cautious and used a pseudonym/alias during her activities in Al-Ghouta. When he [Raslan] asked that, she felt that she was exposed to them (in Al-Ghouta). However, she denied that and said that she had connections there and that she had been there.

Judge Wiedner asked when P16 met Raslan in Jordan. P16 said it was in December 2013 or January 2014. She does not remember. She does not even remember when she left Syria.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 recalls the intention of that conversation and why Raslan talked to her. P16 asked if Judge Wiedner meant the first or the second time.

Judge Wiedner clarified he meant in Jordan. P16 replied that he [Raslan] did not ask to see her. There was a mediator who asked her if she would like to meet Raslan. [It was unclear if she was referring to the mediator asking her or if Raslan asked through the mediator]. She agreed and went immediately to a public café in Amman.

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan remembered her. P16 said that she thinks so.

Judge Wiedner asked what they talked about. P16 said that he [Raslan] told her that when he asked her about Al-Ghouta [when she was detained], he was looking for a route/way from Damascus to Al-Ghouta to secure a way to sneak his family out. P16 responded to Raslan, "You are asking me about Al-Ghouta inside an intelligence services branch?!".

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 asked Raslan for his position/opinion on the system/regime. P16 said that they did not go into details. She was still surprised from meeting Raslan and she is not an inquisitive/nosy person in general.

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan apologized or showed remorse. P16 said no, not in a direct way. The meeting was more as if they were friends.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 saw dead people during her detention period in 2011 – 2012. P16 replied, no.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 heard reports/stories about dead people. P16 said of course.

Judge Wiedner asked P16 to elaborate. P16 said that there is a story about something that happened and P16 talked with the concerned person who asked her not to mention names and details. However, she shared one detail. His [this person's] brother was detained in Al-Khatib and he had direct contact with Anwar [Raslan] to negotiate how he [the brother] could be released (P16 can't tell [details]). After a while, Anwar [Raslan] called him and told him that his brother died and asked him to come to take the corpse. He [the person] went to a military hospital (P16 does not know which one) and they offered him four corpses with signs of torture on them. None were his brother. When he [this person] objected, they told him to choose one [of the corpses] and take it.

Judge Kerber asked when Raslan started to not want to support the regime. P16 said that according to him [Raslan], he did not have a chance to defect earlier and was not able to do so before he could secure his family.

Judge Kerber asked if he talked about his defection with P16. P16 said yes, but it was a quick conversation and was over in two minutes without details.

Judge Kerber recalled that P16 said that "he would have started to support the opposition when the Assad system threw bombs on civilians." P16 confirmed.

Questioning by Senior Prosecutor Klinge

Senior Prosecutor Jasper Klinge recalled that Raslan said in his statement at the beginning of the trial that [Klinge made several quotations/remonstrations]:

- "He [Raslan] and P16 met in April 2011". P16 said that was not true. Klinge asked if P16 was sure that it was in 2012. P16 said yes, April 2012.
- "She worked for BBC". P16 said that was not true.
- "She was in an office with several people." P16 said that she thinks that Raslan was talking about another person.

- “[A] 3x3 meter office, that she would come from Ma’raba ,معرية, Damascus and was a Christian”. P16 said, no.
- “She would have called the chief of Branch 251 and asked him to release her, she only talked about press freedom.” P16 said that was not true.

Klinge asked if they met in 2014 in Jordan. [Name/information redacted] called her and they met in Tila Al-Ali in a café. P16 said yes, she thinks that the place was Tila Al-Ali تلاع العلي.

Klinge asked if May Skaf مي سكاف was there too. P16 said that May Skaf was not there.

Klinge asked if P16 knows May Skaf. P16 said, of course. They lived together in Jordan.

Klinge made a quotation/remonstrance: “He would have recognized her right away and thought she wanted to thank him, but it was not like this, she did not say a word. May Skaf was there.” P16 said that May Skaf was not there.

Klinge asked if P16 talked to Raslan personally. P16 confirmed.

Klinge asked if P16 had the impression that Raslan had the power of order in his office in April 2012. Defense Counsel Michael Böcker intervened asking, “What do you want to do with the answer?”. P16 answered saying that when one is in such a situation, one anticipates the worst. Anyone who works in the intelligence services has authority/power. Mr. Raslan was not an ordinary person, he was the vice-head. He surely had a certain authority/power.

Klinge asked if his orders were conducted/followed. P16 said that she does not know the type of orders he gave.

Klinge refreshed P16’s memory by quoting: “[...]Told you a thousand times to take off the blindfold.” P16 said that it was the only order [that she heard?]. Any officer might say that to any member/employee.

Klinge asked how employees/members addressed Raslan. P16 said that the member/personnel/employee did not usually speak. He knocked on the door and entered. The most common thing that he repeats is “Yes, sidi سيدي” and “At your command, sidi أمرك”.

Klinge asked about the general condition in Al-Khatib and the methods of torture. P16 said that one cannot see anything. She described the room where the detainee’s clothes had to be taken off because that was the only thing she saw. She could only describe [torture] from the sounds of the people and young men, especially regarding the amount/magnitude of torture.

Klinge asked if others described torture. P16 replied, of course. There is “Shabh”, where one is hung from the hands to the ceiling with toes touching the floor with random/indiscriminate beating on the body and face. There is “Doulab” [tyre] that P16 did not see, but she heard that the detainee is folded up into two halves [forward fold]. P16’s friend was detained for three months and when he was released, he was not able to walk for six months. There are electric sticks with adjustable degrees of intensity. P16’s friend described to her that they used to pour water [on the detainee] then use electricity, so that he shudders/flinches. These were the people who made it through. Some friends were martyred [died]. There is also the torture of putting out cigarettes on the body. A person who now lives in Paris cannot walk, because of the beatings on his knees and cigars were put out on him. He is one of P16’s friends.

Klinge asked if P16 was talking about Al-Khatib or in general. P16 said that one of them was in Al-Khatib (the person with Shabh). He was detained twice in Al-Khatib. He is a physician and the worst thing he was subjected to was Shabh.

Klinge recalled that P16 was detained in a solitary cell in 2011 and 2012 and asked if she saw shared/communal cells as well. P16 said that during her way back and forth to the toilet (sometimes they did not put the blindfold on well) and according to the map [the sketch she drew], she heard sounds of young men who were speaking and crying. Inside the room where the beatings took place (mostly torturing), there were multiple people.

Klinge asked about the hygienic conditions. P16 said that she was surprised by the question [found it strange] and asked "which hygiene." The blankets were full of insects, cockroaches were everywhere, and there was no soap in the toilet.

Klinge asked if P16 or others had skin diseases. P16 responded, of course. One of her female friends suffered from that for a long time.

Klinge asked when that was. P16 said that she cannot specify which detention that was because she [the friend] was detained several times. However, in the Air Force branch in Al-Mazzeḥ, المزة the friend was tortured (she [the friend] does not like to speak about the details) and had psychological and physical damages. She talked about the lack of hygiene and how if a wound was open, no one treats it and it putrefies. She showed P16 a scar that was caused when they hit her with the whip and it left a mark.

Klinge asked if P16 received medical care in Al-Khatib. P16 said that she did not need it, but she did not see it either.

Klinge asked if she saw injured people. P16 said that blood was everywhere. In the corridor, young men were in the squatting position facing the wall and their upper body was free [of clothes/bare skin] and she could see everything.

Klinge asked if P16 could describe her way to the toilet, such as how long it took, how many people were in the corridor, what kind of blows and how many blows had they received. P16 said that the whole process of going from the solitary cell to the toilet and returning took three minutes. While passing through the corridor (it depended on the blindfold [whether it was positioned well]), in one glance, she saw groups of people: some who had been whipped; some beaten with iron [most likely bars]; and some beaten with the four-fold cable. That one came as a sting [Meaning, she could feel the lash stings on others' bodies].

Klinge asked if there was a difference between the detentions in 2011 and 2012. P16 said that the numbers of the demonstrators in 2011 were high, and so were the detainees. They had to put the detainees in schools and they even used the rooms in Al-Abbasiyyeen العباسيين stadium. There were thousands of detainees from the streets. P16 thinks that the detention in 2011 was to intimidate people so they would not take to the streets [for demonstrations], but the systematic detentions were also directed to/involving the peaceful activists who appeared at the beginning of the revolution. Later, many of these (peaceful activists) were killed during 2011, because the regime could not detain 10,000 people. Therefore, they killed the three or four people who had organized the demonstrations.

However, in 2012 when the demonstrations decreased, the number of dead increased, because the detainees were less (the percentage of dead increased).

Klinge recalled that P16 was in al-Khatib in 2011 and 2012 and asked if the torture methods changed, as well as whether conditions deteriorated or did not change. P16 said that the sounds were the same and did not change: the same intensity, pain, horror, and fear. P16 was lucky that she was not exposed/subjected to such type of torture.

Klinge said that P16 was beaten on the upper floor of Division 40 and asked if she could further describe that and share how and for how long was she beaten. P16 said that at the beginning, they were put together (40 young men and women) in a van for 12 passengers and there were no blindfolds. They were loading [detaining] people from the street. When they arrived at Division 40, there were two people with pump-action shotguns. After that, they were queued in a line and walked. When “we” got out [of the van], it was apparent that the members/personnel were put on alert. The beating and torturing began the moment “we” got off. They had tools, sticks, small-sized whips, and of course they also beat with their hands and feet. They were beaten all the way upstairs. There was a young man who tripped while going up the stairs and fell, then the member/personnel who was in front of him kicked him. When he [the detainee] was pulled up again and was put among “us”, (there was sexual harassment, beating and verbal harassment), the members/personnel continued to beat him. He was totally naked because of the beating and P16 thought that he would die. It lasted for about an hour.

Klinge asked how the situation was and if they were standing facing the wall. P16 said that the detainees were on the floor and were stepped on. P16 does not know, but after the third blow, one would fall down on the floor. They continued the beating though using tools and hands and they spat on “our” faces one by one.

Klinge asked if their [the forces’] faces were masked. P16 said no, “we” were able to see everything.

Klinge asked if she could recognize their faces. P16 said that one could see the faces, but she does not know if she can recognize anyone.

Klinge asked if P16 recognizes the other accused, Eyad. P16 said that she does not know anyone.

Klinge asked if she was still wearing the clothes in Al-Khatib that were ripped in Division 40. P16 said, yes.

Klinge asked if she kept the clothes on. P16 said that she did not understand the question.

Klinge asked if P16 entered Raslan’s office wearing these same clothes. P16 said of course and responded, saying “Where would I go to change them?”

Klinge asked what the clothes looked like. P16 said that it was a white t-shirt, ripped “here” and “here” because she was being pulled from “here.” [It was difficult to see from the spectators’ gallery where she was pointing.] She had on the same clothes [as she was wearing in Division 40].

Klinge asked how the clothes were ripped. P16 said that they were somehow like “this” but more open, because “it” [the ripping] started when she was detained from the street. The ripping did not happen in a single moment.

Questioning by Prosecutor Ritscher

Prosecutor Christian Ritscher asked if P16 remained in the same clothes and if one could see that they were ripped. P16 confirmed.

Ritscher recalled that P16 mentioned swellings that stayed for ten days and asked where they were located. P16 said they were on her neck, her back and "here" ["Here" was translated to leg, however our trial monitor could not see where she pointed]. She had bruises on some areas of her body.

Ritscher recalled that the Palestinian woman [the woman that P16 shared a cell with briefly] was treated unequally brutally and asked what happened to her. P16 said that she does not know if she [the woman] agreed to mention her name, as P16 did not ask her. P16 said that she [the woman] is Palestinian and had a son who was detained for seven or eight years and she was detained three times. They were racist against her, because she was Palestinian and was considered a guest [Or foreigner; The term "guest" was used to denote that she should act "politely"], and because she was a hijabi.

Ritscher recalled that P16 said that the woman was treated brutally and asked what happened to her in Al-Khatib. P16 said yes, she does not remember completely. She [the woman] was interrogated twice and when she came back, she was crying hysterically. When she passed by P16's cell, P16 hear her cursing "curse their father, dog". After that, because "we" each spent three nights in the solitary cells in Al-Khatib, "we" later met/gathered together in the same cell. She told P16 about the racism against her and how she was beaten.

Ritscher asked if P16 recalls that in the third interrogation she said that there were electric shocks. P16 said that it was a stick that is not big. It feels like all of it is placed on the neck.

Ritscher asked why it was used and what they wanted to know. P16 said that regarding the question of why they used it, she does not know.

Ritscher asked if it was used several times. P16 said that her body shuddered/flinched after one or two times and she did not know how many more times they used it. However, P16 does not think that it was used more than twice.

***Lunch break***

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan talked about the regime. P16 said that according to her memory, he did not give details about the subject, but he said that during her interrogation in Al-Khatib, he was trying to get information about whether she was going to Al-Ghouta. Therefore, as P16 mentioned previously, that was mentioned when she met him.

Judge Wiedner interrupted asking if P16 meant in Jordan. P16 confirmed. Therefore, he [Raslan] justified his question [about Al-Ghouta] by explaining that he was hinting to her that he wanted a safe route/way out of Damascus, concerning his defection.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P16's recollection saying "No he did not apologize and she does not know if he regretted that and he had no other option in the first place." P16 said yes, she mentioned that in the report [the police report]. That is correct.

Judge Wiedner asked if she meant that he did not have a choice and that he worked for the opposition. P16 said that when one works with the regime in the security [field], it is not easy to leave. P16 believes that the revolution gave people a chance to object to the regime's practices. Many military and intelligence service officers defected when they had the chance. However, some people were sent by the regime to the opposition regarding weapons and similar matters. P16 does not have any idea about the intentions of Mr. Raslan. The last point P16 wanted to mention is that the people who defected in 2011, appeared in media and videos [declared their intentions on video], and did not leave Syria, but instead worked for the revolution from inside Syria. However, Mr. Raslan did not do that.

Judge Wiedner asked if P16 was under the impression that she believed Raslan's defection. P16 said that her feeling at that moment was that she was excited that people were leaving the regime and joining the revolution. The revolutionaries in general were not supported by the great countries in the world which were letting the regime kill people day and night. Therefore, they were excited for any person leaving the regime, because that would empower the revolution.

Ritscher asked if relatives of P16 were officially informed about her detention. P16 replied, of course not.

Ritscher asked if P16 could inform them. P16 said, of course not. She asked during the beating to talk to her mother to tell her that she was not going to go back home. They mocked her request saying, "Where do you think you are?"

Ritscher said that P16 talked about her injuries and asked her if she remembers that. P16 said that things are a bit conflicting and she does not remember. Moreover, she does not like to talk about the subject as she does not want to live through the pain twice.

Ritscher refreshed P16's recollection quoting, "She was injured in Al-Khatib. She had injuries on her neck. In Division 40, her head was hit twice against the wall and her nose was bleeding. There was no treatment. Intimate hygiene was impossible". P16 responded that the statement was correct.

Ritscher asked if hygiene was unavailable even during menstruation. P16 said that she knocked on the door and asked for feminine hygiene products, but they laughed at her. She used her socks.

Ritscher recalled that P16 was blindfolded outside the cell, but also saw people standing at the wall. He asked if all of those were men. P16 said that she pointed out during the questions that sometimes they put the blindfold on poorly. She could always see from underneath the blindfold.

Ritscher asked if P16 could recognize if the people who had bare upper bodies and injuries were men or if there were also women. P16 said that in the corridor they were all men.

Ritscher asked if there were men and women in the solitary cells. P16 said that the person who started banging on the door when they turned the electricity off was a man in a solitary cell.

The defense had no questions.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsels

Plaintiff Counsel Sebastian Scharmer mentioned the threats of rape and insults like, "you are who**s." He asked P16 about the consequences rape would have for a woman in Syria when the family is informed about it. P16 said that many women who were subjected to harassment or rape in the Syrian prisons were also subjected to social ostracization after imprisonment. The Syrian nation/people are generally conservative. The honor of the woman means a lot to the family and rape means disgrace. There is a famous film about women who were raped in prisons or [military] campaigns during revolutionary times and came out later in audio and video and told "us" about their terrible experiences. Even P16's Palestinian female friend had her husband divorce her because he thought that she might have been raped. He did not know [if she had been raped]. He did not have the mental or social ability to support her [his wife]. P16 said that she is lucky that she comes from an open-minded family. P16 said that she does not know if that answered the question.

Scharmer said that knowing that detainees should not talk after detention, how should it be interpreted when members/personnel say that they would inform the detainees' parents. P16 said that of course, that is a form of blackmail and harassment/disturbance. P16 had female friends who did not tell their parents what happened to them in prison.

Scharmer asked if sexual violence is a method of torture. P16 asked if his question was about the intelligence services in general.

Scharmer confirmed, yes, since 2011. P16 replied, of course. This concerns men and women. A friend of P16, a young man from Deir ez-Zor دير الزور told the media how they used to rape him and the size of the stick that they inserted in the anus. He was tied up and cuffed and was not able to defend himself. Of course, rape is the worst type of torture.

Scharmer asked if P16 heard about the other 40 women after their arrest and if they have also been in Al-Khatib. P16 said that they were 40 women and men. The women were eight then five then three: [P16 and] the Palestinian and the other one who remained until the end. They spoke about verbal harassment and threats of rape and did not say more details.

Plaintiff Counsel Manuel Reiger asked if P16 asked Raslan about her brother when they were in Jordan. P16 said no, she did not ask him.

Reiger said that in her police hearing, P16 said that she guesses/conjectures that people who leave the system still had contacts in the prisons. Reiger asked if Raslan still had contacts when he was in Jordan. P16 said that she does not know.

Reiger asked where she got that guess/conjecture. P16 said it is because she knows people who defected and remained in contact [she did not mention details], because not all people who are with [support] the opposition defected. Not all of them have the courage to leave. Sometimes, when we want to ask about information or in media, "we" ask these friends and they know people [contacts]. However, P16 does not have information about Mr. Raslan.

Plaintiff Counsel Andreas Schulz said that he did not hear her answer before and asked if P16 believed Raslan that he had truly defected. P16 said that she cannot give a clear yes or no. She believed that he defected because many people were leaving the regime and thought that this would weaken the regime. Therefore, she was happy and excited that another one left the regime, hoping that they give information to benefit the revolution. So, P16 does not know whether Raslan gave information that convicts /condemns/incriminates the regime.

Schulz asked if Raslan might have only defected 'from the outside' to trace or investigate the revolution [as an informant]. P16 said that she did not have that feeling. Her feeling was positive towards the subject.

Defense Counsel Michael Böcker asked for the year of the movie that P16 had mentioned earlier, which is called "Syrie – Le Cri Etouffé." P16 replied that it was maybe 2017 or 2018, but it talks about the destiny of women from 2011.

Böcker asked who made the movie. P16 said that it was a French woman whom P16 met in [real] life, but she does not remember her name. P16 knows the Syrian woman who made the contact between them.

Böcker asked if the director was detained in Syria as well. P16 said that the director of the movie is French.

Böcker replied, "So she was never detained in Syria." P16 said that she has no information on that.

Böcker asked when the time of documenting ended, 2011? 2012? P16 said that Böcker should watch the movie to get more information and to see how these women are scattered on earth and "these" [regime officers... etc] are still in power/position. They [the women] don't care about dates.

Scharmer asked if it is correct that P16 had the information about sexual violence in the general intelligence services from different sources (for example by talking to other women) and from the movie. P16 replied, 100%.

The witness was dismissed.

Judge Kerber said that the following day's session was cancelled [because the questioning was finished].

***10-minute-break***

Judge Kerber read out a rejection of the defense's petition to repeat days 1-23 for the public because Arabic translation was not available for Syrian reporters.

Judge Kerber said that she found a news article about Kofi Annan's visit. Scharmer said that he found one titled "Kofi Annan meets with Al-Assad" from March 11 [2012]. Judge Kerber said that her article was from March 10 and wondered if they were the same article. Scharmer said that it might be a different one, which mentions the "release of the political detainees."

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:40 p.m.

The next trial will be on October 6, 2020, at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 15

Hearing Dates: October 6, 7 &amp; 8, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 35 – October 6, 2020

A plaintiff, P17, a 52 year-old man living in Germany appeared as a witness before the court. He described his own detention by the Syrian intelligence service as well as the search for his brother, a doctor who was detained by the intelligence service in July 2012, brought to Branch 251 and has been missing ever since. His family expended huge sums in order to gain information from officials as to his brother's fate. Branch 251 offered the corpse of a stranger to the family, claiming it was P17's brother. When they refused it, they were threatened. Their captors would also provoke fights amongst detainees.

Trial Day 36 – October 7, 2020

P18 was allowed to conceal his name due to concerns about the safety of his family in Syria. However, defense counsel noted that he did not conceal his identity outside the courtroom and later accidentally spoke the full name of P18 in court against the court's order. He confirmed his cousin's testimony about the search for their brother/cousin and provided further information on the contacts which the family used to get into Branch 251 and arrange a meeting with Anwar Raslan. He spoke about two visits to Branch 251. During one meeting, Raslan urged him to take any corpse and stop the search. The witness also spoke about countless corpses in Tishreen and Harasta hospitals with numbers and codes on their chests, showing signs of torture as well as shots through their heads.

Raslan's lawyer read out a short statement, confirming that Raslan was approached about the missing person, but denying that he had any information regarding his whereabouts or that he met with P18.

Trial Day 37 – October 8, 2020

Christoph Reuter, a 52 year-old German journalist appeared as a witness and expert to provide background information on the changes in civil society as well as within the intelligence service in Syria from 2011 onwards. He also testified about the context and content of two interviews he conducted with Anwar Raslan in 2012 and in 2015, who he said had a photographic memory. Reuter also provided insights into Raslan's motives for deserting and his opinion about the Syrian intelligence services, based on how Raslan appeared in these interviews as well as on corroborating statements from other sources. He said the reputation of the general intelligence (of which Branch 251 formed a part) was that it was less brutal than air force and military intelligence which both had a worse reputation. Raslan told him how the Syrian Government staged attacks against itself that it blamed on jihadist organizations in order to paint itself as the victim.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Day 35 of Trial – October 6, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30am with 6 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience.<sup>2</sup> Plaintiff counsel Reiger was represented by Attorney Bessler.

Testimony of P17 [name redacted]

P17, one of the plaintiffs, a 52 year-old man working as an author and living in Germany was accompanied by his counsel Mr. Bahns. Admonitions were read out and P17 was informed about his rights as a witness.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Kerber asked P17 to provide information on his person, position in and relationship to the Syrian Regime. P17 made clear that he is not a witness but a plaintiff. He accused Raslan of detaining his brother [P17's missing brother] and never providing any information on his whereabouts. He further said that according to his information, Raslan is responsible for killing his brother respectively torturing him to death. P17 said considering this, his relationship with the Regime would be obvious.

Kerber told P17 that as a witness, he should answer the questions put to him. P17 said that he was arbitrarily detained twice, once by the air-force intelligence service and once by the "so-called" military intelligence service. He said that both times he witnessed arbitrary torture and grave atrocities he had never seen before.

Kerber asked why P17 was arrested. He said because he is an author and participated in demonstrations.

Kerber asked when he was detained. P17 said that the first time he was detained by the "arbitrary" air-force intelligence from May 3, 2012 until May 10, 2012 and the second time from July 17 [16], 2012 until July 29, 2012.

Kerber wanted to talk about the second detention and asked P17 what happened and what he experienced. P17 said he saw corpses in the corridors.

Kerber asked where this was. P17 said it was at Hama airport, however that did not happen during his second detention. There he saw how hot water was poured over a woman. During his first detention he was tortured himself and all his neighbours saw the scars on his back.

Kerber asked P17 to describe his detention. P17 said that during his first arrest, he was tortured in a car. He was beaten with cables on his hands and back, so his back was bleeding when they arrived at the prison. P17 said he was put into a room measuring 4x5m with around 75 people inside, some of them alive, others dying. P17 said there was only very little to eat, a piece of bread and four olives in the morning. He said that the amount of food in the evening was not sufficient for a human being. P17 said that they were only allowed to use the toilet once a day and were brutally beaten on the way to the toilet. He said that detainees were allowed to use the toilet for only 10sec and that there was dirty water around the toilet. P17 said on his way to the toilet he saw seven bodies that died under torture and two people hanging from the ceiling, probably close to death. He said that “middle east newspapers” in London also reported about his case and the case of Dr. Ahmed Taleb Al-Kurdi أحمد طالب الكردي. According to P17, Reporters Without Borders covered his own detention.

---

<sup>2</sup> No accredited Arabic-speaking journalist who requested access to translation was present.

Kerber said that P17’s direct experiences are more valuable. P17 said that he did not experience torture during his second detention however witnessed torture, he could write an entire book about this but will keep it short.

Kerber said P17 is a plaintiff because of his brother and that he has siblings. P17 said his father has five children of which he is the oldest. He studied economics and holds an MA in management sciences. He was the head of administration in the opera but quit his job in 2007 because of all the corruption there. P17 said he went back to his hometown because he did not want to participate in the corruption. He published two books, articles and newspapers. P17 said that his home was ethnically diverse and that three different ethnicities were living under one roof: his father is Ismaili, his mother Sunni, his wife and brother-in-law are Ismaili and his sisters-in-law are Allawi. P17 said that his family is culturally diverse and that all of them are doctors. His brother [name redacted, missing since 2012] graduated at the top of his class.

Kerber wanted to know if P17’s family is also politically diverse and whether there are opponents as well as supporters of the Regime. P17 said that they are all against the Regime and that no one with the least reason would be on the side of the Regime and repeated that everyone in his family is against the Regime.

Kerber asked what position P17’s [missing] brother held and where he worked. P17 said his brother wanted to go to the U.S. to continue his studies, so they travelled to Jordan for his brother to take a test to go to the U.S. which he passed with 95 out of 100 credits. However, in the meantime before his departure P17’s brother changed his mind. He started working in the department for internal medicine (cardiology) at Al-Mojtahed hospital. During this time, he lived with Eyad Shbat إياد شباط, a doctor and informant for the Syrian intelligence service. P17’s brother told him that he got into a fight with his flatmate, that was two days before his arrest. They [P17’s missing brother and his flatmate Eyad Shbat] argued because Eyad Shbat was in favour of the “elimination” of peaceful protesters and [P17’s missing brother] was against it. P17 said that they heard from doctors at the same hospital that Eyad Shbat told the director of the hospital, who had direct connections to the intelligence services, about this. His brother was then detained in Branch 251.

Kerber asked how P17 knows about this. P17 said it was a coincident that he and his brother were arrested on the same day; P17 by the military intelligence in [information redacted] and his brother by the state security directorate in Damascus. The first time after P17’s brother was arrested, his siblings were searching for him, that is where he [P17] got his information from, since he was detained himself. P17 said that his brother [name redacted] can provide more information, he is currently in [information redacted]. P17 asked the court to hear his brother as a witness and plaintiff. He [P17’s brother] is a doctor who served in the military and saw many, many things. P17 said he could explain better.

Kerber said that P17 is now summoned as a witness and asked whether his brother [name redacted] told him about the search for their brother [name redacted]. P17 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner intervened asking P17 whether other family members like [name redacted] were also involved in the search and reporting about [P17's brother's] search for [P17's missing brother's] corpse. P17 affirmed, adding that his cousin accompanied his brother.

Kerber asked whether P17 himself made attempts to search for his brother. P17 affirmed.

Kerber asked what kind of attempts P17 made. P17 said he contacted Abu Akram أبو أكرم [pseudonym]<sup>3</sup> on Facebook who told P17 and his brother about the last moments of their [missing] brother at Branch 251.

Kerber asked whether this is the chat which is on the case file. P17 affirmed and said that his brother [name redacted] was part of the chat since he is a doctor and asked the judges whether he should read it out.

Kerber told P17 to summarise it. P17 said [Abu Akram] told them that their brother was beaten. A detainee called [name redacted (abbreviated as 'D1')] woke P17's brother up for breakfast and beat him [Abu Akram] was then called by [name redacted], an employee at Branch 251 from Safita صافيتا who told [Abu Akram] to sign a declaration that [P17's missing brother] died a natural death. After the death of P17's missing brother, ventilators were installed in the prison. P17 further recalled that he was told that [Abu Akram] disappeared. P17 said he is not sure whether the information is reliable, it might all be a "game" by the intelligence service to cover actual information about the death of his brother. P17 further said that many [detainees] witnessed that his brother was tortured and abused. [Abu Akram] had contacted [name redacted (abbreviated as 'C3')] who via another person was in contact with Anwar Raslan [in Jordan] to ask him about P17's brother. [C3] received information directly from Anwar Raslan saying that P17's brother most likely died under torture. P17 said he saw one of the deserters from Branch 251 on TV. He smuggled a list of names of dead people and the number of their corpses out of Branch 251. P17 said he is not sure whether this list is a reliable source but it also has the name of his missing brother listed at number 71. The family then tried to get more information through their contacts but they were always told that [P17's missing brother] was dead, they [family] should be quiet and stop asking about him. A UN employee who was in contact with friends of the family then told them that the Syrian Government sent them an answer on [P17's missing brother's] whereabouts saying that he was killed and his body handed over [to the family], however the body was not handed over. P17 said that instead, his brother [name redacted] told him that when he went to an employee of Branch 251, a direct subordinate of Anwar Raslan, he told him that their brother was killed and tried to hand over a corpse which was not their brother's corpse. When P17's brother did not accept the corpse, he was told that he should take a closer look, however he replied that first, he is a doctor and knows how to identify a dead person and second, he would recognise if it was his missing brother. P17's brother was then threatened and told by employees of Branch 251 that "colonel" Anwar said he should go to the cooling chambers in Harasta حرستا and Tishreen تشرين hospitals. That is where they then looked for their brother together with their cousin. P17 finally repeated his request to call his brother [name redacted] as a witness and plaintiff since he knows more details and has more information of "immense importance".

Kerber asked how they [P17's family] made contact with Anwar Raslan. P17 said that his brother [name redacted/involved in the search for their missing brother] was an officer in the military.

Kerber said that not every member of the military is automatically a member of the intelligence service and asked whether there were family members with higher military ranks who arranged contact with

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P17 later said that this person used a fictitious name to cover his real identity.

Raslan. P17 denied that there were family members with higher ranks, only his brother and cousin arranged the contact. P17 said one of his father's cousins was a retired officer in the general intelligence service for many years, nonetheless he was unable to help, even though the family approached him. However, he gave an overview of the methods of the Regime and said that it is common that detainees get numbers and are then forgotten for decades.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Since P17 did not need a break, judge Wiedner asked him to provide some background on his personal development and whether he felt he was part of the opposition. P17 affirmed that he belongs to the opposition and said that he was arrested in 1990 by the "arbitrary intelligence service apparatus".

Wiedner asked whether this rather happened in 1991. P17 affirmed and said that when he quit his job, he began to participate in demonstrations, report writing and coordination of demonstrations.

Wiedner asked when this was. P17 said in 2011.

Wiedner asked whether P17 had experience in participating in demonstrations and if so, when and where. P17 said he has experience participating in demonstrations and that they were always peaceful. He said that even "the war criminal" Assad admitted that there were no weapons in the first six months. However, the "security apparatus" had a significant role in "pushing demonstrations in a corner of ethnic violence" using different means, one of them was shooting at demonstrators.

Wiedner asked whether P17 experienced this himself or how he knew. P17 said that everyone in Syria knows that peaceful demonstrators were shot. P17 said that a childhood friend of his, [name redacted], "a martyr", was killed in Damascus and that people were also shot at during his funeral with the use of government fire arms.

Wiedner asked whether P17 participated in demonstrations himself and if so, where. P17 said that he did participate in demonstrations. However, there was "no extensive violence" in [information redacted] since those were demonstrations by minorities and the Regime wanted to propagate that Sunnis are making a revolution which they [the government] must stop. This is why they [the government] were friendly towards minority demonstrations, to not contradict themselves.

Wiedner asked whether P17 was detained close to an airport during his first detention. P17 affirmed.

Wiedner then wanted to know if P17 saw dead bodies in the cell and asked him to talk about his first detention. P17 said that detainees were called for interrogation and taken out of a room of approximately 70 people. They [detainees] were usually tortured in the corridors. In the interrogation rooms there was a hangman called Somar سمر, who "was a real beast." P17 further said that he heard screaming and voices and saw corpses on his way to the toilet.

Wiedner recalled P17's statement with the German Federal Police (BKA) from 2019 where P17 said that he saw many people dying and that there were approximately 70 people in a cell measuring 4x4m and that dead bodies were left in the cells on purpose for two to three days. Wiedner asked P17 whether this is correct. P17 affirmed, however, he wanted to emphasise that his perceptions are based on a 10sec time frame on his way to the toilet, so he cannot say exactly how long the dead bodies he saw on the way to the toilet were left there.

Wiedner asked if there were also dead bodies in the cell. P17 affirmed explaining that two people were killed in his cell and only taken by the guards after 12 hours.

Wiedner wanted to come back to P17's brother and asked P17 if he personally knows Anwar Raslan. P17 denied.

Wiedner asked whether it is then correct that P17 never had direct contact to Anwar Raslan. P17 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P17 to explain why he is accusing Anwar Raslan of being responsible for his brother's fate. P17 said he is accusing Raslan because he was the head of interrogation at Branch 251 during his brother's detention. He [Raslan] was also the one providing information about his brother's death, before and after he deserted. P17 said he can provide more sensitive information: One of the employees at Branch 251, [name redacted (abbreviated as 'C1' for better reading)], who was a direct subordinate of Anwar Raslan and married to a cousin on P17's father's side of the family also smuggled information from Branch 251.

Wiedner asked P17 to detail (specify) information coming from Raslan. P17 said that they got this information from [C1], an interrogation officer at Branch 251, from detainees that have been released and were secretly in contact with P17's family. P17 added that this information also came from Raslan himself.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly Raslan himself said. P17 said that Raslan in his capacity as head of Branch 251 directly ordered to give the family a wrong corpse. When they denied, Raslan, via the head of his office, told them to look for their brother's corpse in the hospitals. [name redacted] (who is currently in [information redacted]) met with Raslan in Jordan, Raslan told him that [P17's missing brother] most likely died due to massive torture.

Wiedner asked P17 if he knows [P16 from day 34]. P17 said he only has a nodding acquaintance with her.

Wiedner asked whether she [P16 from day 34.] also met with Raslan. P17 said [name redacted] met with Anwar Raslan and that P17's brother [name redacted] was in contact with [P16 from day 34]. He contacted her to contact Raslan, as she was in Jordan. However, this contact was useless as they did not get any information from her. After that, P17's brother was not in contact with her anymore. P17 said that she was his neighbour in Damascus and that her brother [name redacted], a detained journalist, is a friend of his.

Wiedner wanted to know whether money played a role in the search for P17's brother. P17 said his family was exploited for every bit of information.

Wiedner asked when and to whom they paid money. P17 said that his brother [name redacted] can provide a more detailed answer to this question, since he himself left Syria in 2014.

Wiedner wanted to know about P17's personal knowledge of payments. P17 said that all people who offered to help always requested a certain amount of money. He does not know any details, but the family paid millions [Syrian lira]. P17 said he does not know to whom they paid money or any other details. However, he knows that the intermediaries were always a secret and that all efforts were dead ends.

Wiedner asked whether the family paid employees of Branch 251. P17 said he does not know.

Wiedner asked how the Facebook chat came about, when it happened and how P17 still has access to it. P17 said it happened on December 17, 2012. [Abu Akram] was also detained in Branch 251 and released. He said he was a revolutionary and had the duty to report about the conditions in Branch 251. P17 said they never heard from him again after they chatted, he was allegedly tortured to death.

Wiedner asked P17 who participated in this chat. P17 said that Abu Akram أبو أكرم was a fictitious name used by [name redacted] on Facebook to cover his real identity. P17 further said that three people were involved in the chat, P17 himself, [Abu Akram] as well as P17's brother, since he is a doctor and could therefore judge their missing brother's health situation according to what [Abu Akram] told them.

Wiedner asked P17 whether [Abu Akram] initiated the contact himself. P17 denied, saying that he [P17] contacted [Abu Akram] after he saw one of his Facebook posts which was published by Akkad Al-Jabal أكاد الجبل. P17 said he asked Akkad Al-Jabal to put him in contact with [Abu Akram].

Wiedner asked how this chat was available during P17's questioning by the BKA in 2019 and how P17 still has access to it. P17 said that he kept this chat since it was the first contact to a person that saw his brother.

***

[10 minute break in proceedings]<sup>4</sup>

***

Wiedner said he wanted to have a narrower time frame for [P17's missing brother's] detention and asked P17 whether they were arrested on the same day. P17 affirmed and added that they were arrested at two different places by two different services.

Wiedner asked when exactly they were arrested. P17 said on July 17 [16], 2012.

Wiedner asked what P17 heard about what happened to his brother after his arrest and that he might die shortly after his arrest. P17 said according to his information, his brother died after three days in detention.

Wiedner asked P17 who told him that. P17 said his brother-in-law "surprised" him with this information after his own release from detention.

Wiedner wanted to know where the 2-3 day time frame came from. P17 said it [his missing brother's death] happened only a couple days after his arrest as P17 himself was still in detention when his brother-in-law received a call from a former detainee at Branch 251 who has just been released and told him [P17's brother-in-law] that [P17's missing brother] was massively tortured and transferred to Najha [cemetery]. P17 said this [transfer] is a way of obscuring corpses, there are mass-graves in Najha. P17 further said that [C1] an employee/interrogator<sup>5</sup> at Branch 251 told P17's brothers during P17's detention that their brother is dead.

---

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: When translating a witness testimony, the translators are given a short break after no more than 60 minutes, according to international standards. The translators do not rotate per hour but per witness. This way, every witness is accompanied by the same translator during their entire testimony. When longer reports are read out, the translators receive a translation of the report beforehand and rotate every 15-30 minutes.

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P17 mentioned several times that [C1] worked as an interrogator, while the translator sometimes translated "employee".

Wiedner asked P17 whether the informant is still in Branch 251. P17 said he was an employee/inspector directly subordinate to Anwar Raslan, however P17 does not know his current whereabouts.

Wiedner asked P17 how the family was put in contact with Anwar Raslan and whether [C1] was involved. P17 said his cousin's husband was indeed involved. When his brothers called him [cousin's husband] the first time to ask about [P17's missing brother], he told them that he would be in Branch 251, his condition would be alright and that he would be released soon. Two days after this phone call, P17's cousin's husband told P17's brothers that [P17's missing brother] died and they should stop asking. P17's brothers were then threatened that they should stop asking about [P17's missing brother], in return their brother in Saudi Arabia would not be arrested on return to Syria and P17's release would also be accelerated.

Wiedner asked whether there was an intermediary between the husband of P17's cousin and Anwar Raslan. P17 denied and said that one of his cousins had connections to Damascus and one of his brothers is a former military officer as well. They had connections to get into Branch 251 and meet Raslan's employees.

Wiedner asked P17 whether the date of his brother's detention is also mentioned in the Facebook chat. P17 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what else P17 knows about his brother's detention. P17 said that [Abu Akram] met his brother in detention and told the brothers about [P17's missing brother's] last moments. According to him, [D1] attacked P17's brother and beat him (one hit). When P17's brother was woken up for breakfast, he did not breathe and had foam coming out of his mouth, so the detainees called the guards. The guards then took P17's brother to the corridor and shortly after called [Abu Akram] and told him to confirm that he died a natural death.

Wiedner asked P17 whether his brother was in detention already for some time when this happened. P17 said it happened one or two days after his brother's arrest.

Wiedner asked P17 who [name redacted (abbreviated as 'C2')] is and how he made contact with him. P17 said he saw [C2] on TV where he said that he has names of people that died in Branch 251. P17 said that he then contacted [C2] to check whether his brother's name was on this list with names.

Wiedner wanted to know how he contacted [C2]. P17 said via WhatsApp.

Wiedner asked how P17 got access to the list. P17 said [C2] sent a picture of it via WhatsApp.

Wiedner wanted to know how [C2] got access to this list. P17 said [C2] took it with him when he deserted from Branch 251, that is all [C2] told him.

***

[Below is a recreation of the structure of the above-mentioned list with names which was shown in the courtroom.]

***

No.	No.	Time frame	Name	No.
-----	-----	------------	------	-----

According to P17, his brother is listed in the second line:

100	1535	01/01/2012 01/09/2012	[name of P17's missing brother]	71
-----	------	--------------------------	------------------------------------	----

Judge Kerber asked P17 to provide some explanation on the numbers on the list. P17 said that [C2] told him that it is a register in order to document detainees within a branch in a certain period.

Kerber asked if it is consequently a list of detainees in Branch 251. P17 affirmed and said that it does not say anything about the death dates.

Kerber asked P17 to clarify this statement. P17 said that the dates on the list indicate that a certain group of detainees, amongst them his brother, died.

Kerber asked one of the court translators to translate the names on the list. The translator read out the names and numbers on the list.

Judge Wiedner asked P17 when he contacted [C2] and when he sent the list. P17 said it was around 2016.

Wiedner asked what P17 knows about [C2]. P17 said he deserted from Branch 251 and is currently living in [information redacted].

Wiedner recalled the BKA asking P17 whether [C2] would be willing to testify. P17 recalled [C2] saying that he would not testify because he is on Raslan's side and because he is a Sunni so he has ethnic reasons for not testifying. [C2] further said that after he deserted, he has to forget everything and "finish off" his past.

Wiedner asked P17 whether he can remember that he told the BKA how the regime explains the deaths of detainees. P17 did not understand the question.

Wiedner explained that P17 previously said something about the circumstances/cause of death which are declared when someone [a detainee] died, maybe got killed. P17 said he knows from his brother [name redacted] that [C1] told him that he can receive their brother's personal belongings and a death certificate saying that he died of kidney or heart failure.<sup>6</sup>

Wiedner asked whether P17 or his brother took their brother's personal belongings. P17 denied.

Wiedner said he indicated something different with his previous question and recalled P17's statement with the BKA saying that the death certificate indicated the wrong cause of death and that the doctors belonged to the intelligence service. P17 said that this is correct, everyone in Syria knows that [wrong death certificates], it is common knowledge.

Prosecutor's Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge asked whether the respondent in the previously mentioned Facebook chat described P17's brother so well that they could assume that he was actually talking about him. P17 affirmed.

Klinge asked how the respondent described P17's brother; his body and/or character. P17 said that he [respondent, Abu Akram] described [P17's missing brother's] face and said that he spoke with him.

---

<sup>6</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P17 said "or" when talking about the cause of death indicated on the death certificate.

Klinge asked whether it is for sure that P17's brother died from the consequences of a fight. P17 said that if the story [what [Abu Akram] told him in the chat] is true, there is a small chance that [P17's missing brother] is alive, because after he was taken from the cell, no one saw him again, so he might still be alive. P17 said there is a chance that [P17's missing brother] was rescued and taken to a hospital. Forcing statements [other detainees had to declare that he died a natural death] might be a way to veil a person's real fate. Their [government] methods are unbelievable, no human being with a bit of common sense knows how one can come up with such methods. P17 said the [regime's] way of thinking was "mafiosi-like".

Prosecutor Polz asked whether [Abu Akram] described facial items or the job of P17's brother. P17 said he described facial items and his brother's job, his brother was a cardiologist.

Polz asked P17 about the reasons for the fight that his brother got in and why he was beaten. P17 said fights amongst detainees are normal. [Abu Akram] said [D1] bullied his brother by saying that doctors are being paid too much.

Judge Wiedner intervened and asked whether employees of Branch 251 were involved in the fight. P17 said that [Abu Akram] did not mention that.

Wiedner wanted to know whether [Abu Akram] described the conditions of detention in Branch 251. P17 said [Abu Akram] described the general conditions: it was very narrow and there were many detainees. P17 said he further told him that a ventilator was installed after [P17's missing brother's] death, that the cell measured 4x7m and that in addition to P17's brother 7 detainees died in the cell.

Wiedner recalled a statement with the BKA made by another witness saying that Branch 251 employees were whispering and pointing at [P17's missing brother]. [D1] then waited a bit before beating [P17's missing brother]. The witness said that the fight was provoked by the regime. P17 said that that is exactly what [Abu Akram] told him. P17 said did not understand the previous question correctly, but from an objective point of view, he cannot say that Al-Khatib wanted his brother to be beaten up, however, that is what [Abu Akram] told him.

Wiedner wanted to know what [D1] position was and whether he was a detainee as well. P17 said there is a certain language in prison, you would call him the cell boss. People in charge grant him certain privileges, so he talks to other detainees in their name and "manages things", so that detainees hate each other. He also tortures and beats and takes over some tasks typical for guards. P17 said that is common knowledge.

Wiedner asked whether [D1] is such a person. P17 affirmed.

***

[70 minutes lunch break]

***

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense counsel Bodenstein asked P17 whether [C1] is still working at Al-Khatib. P17's counsel Mr. Bahns said that his client already answered this question.

Bodenstein asked why they [P17's family] did not talk to [C1] directly but instead to Raslan via [C1]. P17 said that he himself was in prison when his family contacted, [C1], his brother [name redacted] knows more about this.

Bodenstein recalled P17 telling the BKA in September 2019 that [C1] is still working at Al-Khatib and asked whether this is correct. P17 said that [C1] and others working at Branch 251 keep their distance to people who become suspects, so that they are not becoming suspects themselves. P17 said he has no contact with [C1] but heard that he retired, however, he cannot say that for sure.

Bodenstein asked P17 how he got the information that their brother is dead. P17 said he knows from his brother, who in turn knows from [C1].

Bodenstein recalled P17 telling the BKA that he got this information from [C3]. P17 said that they were told by several sources that their brother was dead. [C1] was the first, only a few days after P17's brother's arrest. [C3] told them after Anwar Raslan deserted and went to Jordan. That was when the family contacted [C3] who then contacted Anwar Raslan.

Bodenstein asked P17 about [C3's] job. P17 said he was employed by an oil company. He lived in Egypt and worked with political organisations arising from the revolution.

Bodenstein asked P17 whether his hometown was rather pro or contra regime. P17 said at the beginning [of the revolution in Syria] there were 100,000 residents, of which 15,000 were demonstrators.

Bodenstein concluded that P17's hometown was rather pro regime. And asked him to say whether this is correct. P17 asked whether he should give a lecture on sociology.

Judge Kerber intervened saying that Bodenstein's question is admissible and P17 should answer. P17 said from his point of view, his hometown was rather against the regime.

Bodenstein asked P17 whether his family was against the regime from the beginning [2011]. P17 affirmed.

Bodenstein recalled that P17 affirmed when the BKA asked him whether there were family members in favor of the regime as well some against the regime. P17 said it is impossible that that some of his family members were in favor of the regime. However, it might be the case in Salamiyya.

P17's counsel Mr. Bahns intervened saying that Bodenstein's quote was put out of context and it is unclear whether Bodenstein was talking about family in a narrow or wider sense. P17 said that his family in a narrower sense was against the regime, however, a cousin of his father was the head of an intelligence service branch.

Since no plaintiff counsel had questions for P17, he was dismissed as a witness.

Proceedings adjourned at 13:15pm.

The hearing began at 9:30am with 6 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience.<sup>7</sup> P17, the witness from the previous day was present as plaintiff. Plaintiff counsel Reiger was replaced by Attorney Bessler. Judge Kerber said that a detention complaint was issued by one of the defendants and that the prosecution has the chance to provide a response to this.

Testimony of P18

P18 was accompanied by his counsel Mr. Bahns who told the court that P18 formally requests not to provide his name and personal information in court because his family in Syria was threatened. Bahns further said that more detailed information can be found in the case file and deducted from the overall context.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker intervened and asked where the threats on P18's family came from. Bahns said they came from "pertinent intelligence service circles", that is all that is known.

The prosecution agreed to P18's request. Judge Kerber found that concerns about the safety of P18 and his family are reasonable and she approved his request to not provide his name and personal information in court.

Böcker intervened again saying that if there are already threats then it is already known that P18 is about to testify before the court hence the precautionary measures are needless. Kerber replied that the judges do not want to enhance the risks and therefore take these precautionary measures.

After taking off his cap, advisements were read out to P18 and he was informed about his rights as a witness and his right to not provide his name and personal information.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber had to think about how to put her questions without revealing P18's personal information. She said that [P17's missing brother] was arrested and his family had no information about his whereabouts and started searching for him. Kerber went on to ask P18 what he knows about all this. P18 said he got to know about [P17's missing brother's] arrest in July 2012 and tried to act fast so he [P17's missing brother] would not be killed. P18 said he enlisted [name redacted (abbreviated as 'C4')] from Latakia who had contacts to officers. P18 said he also spoke to P17 who was already in detention with the air force. [name redacted], P17's other brother was stationed in Latakia as a doctor, however his situation in the military was difficult due to his involvement in his brother's case. That is why P18 asked [C4] for help. He was the one who put P18 in contact with [name redacted (abbreviated as 'Brigadier General')] a Brigadier General at the government palace (P18 said this position is actually higher as a regular brigadier). P18 further said that [Brigadier General] tried to help them and provided the information that [P17's missing brother] is in Al-Khatib. P18 met with [P17's brother] on July 26, 2012 in Damascus. [P17's brother] was also the one with whom, together with [Brigadier General], P18 coordinated everything. P18 said that [Brigadier General] also arranged access to Al-Khatib and P18's cousin [name redacted] coordinated with [C1]. P18 further explained how they<sup>8</sup> met with [C4] one morning in Damascus and used his vehicle to travel to Al-Khatib. They tried to get information at an information desk situated in a small glass cabin in a residential area. P18 said that all roads were blocked and further explained that they [guards at the info point] made several calls to arrange for P18 and his companions to get access to Al-Khatib, before they were allowed to go to the second gate. According to P18, it [Branch 251] is a very big compound and the second gate was 600-770m, maybe even 1km from the first gate. There was a glass info point as well, where they asked for permission to enter again and the guards also made several calls. However, P18 and his companions were sent back to the first gate and able to enter Al-Khatib approximately 3 hours later. P18 said they “went upstairs several steps” and were on the ground floor [as there have previously been translation difficulties regarding floors, judge Kerber asked whether P18 meant ground floor rather than first floor, as it was translated] and that they could not move right or left, the corridor was about 200-300 meters long where they arrived at some steps and got to another corridor. P18 said that [C1] was always with them. P18, [C4] and P18’s cousin then had to wait on a wooden bench in a waiting area which was rather a corridor. P18 said they had to wait to intimidate them. On the left side of the waiting corridor were three rooms in which detainees knelt on the floor with their hands tied and their eyes covered. According to P18, the detainees had water poured on them (P18 did not see the act itself but said that the detainees were wet so he assumed that is what occurred) and P18 heard screaming.

---

<sup>7</sup> No accredited Arabic-speaking journalist who requested access to translation was present.

<sup>8</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It is clear from the context that "they" involved P18, [C4] and P18's cousin, [name redacted]. However, it is not clear whether [C1] accompanied them as well or joined them later in Branch 251. None of the parties asked further questions on this.

Kerber asked whether the detainees were also beaten. P18 said he only saw the detainees when they entered the waiting corridor and heard them screaming. However, he and his companions were not allowed to move and see what was happening around them. P18 said he entered a room together with his cousin, in which the head of the office (maybe Raslan’s assistant) was waiting. According to P18 it was Raslan’s office. P18 further explained that this meeting was only possible thanks to [C1], [C4] and Brigadier General [name redacted]. They [explanation below] were given [P17’s missing brother’s] personal items, such as his laptop, wallet and phone. P18 and his cousin also received a report saying that [P17’s missing brother] died of kidney failure, however P18 and his cousin were not convinced and requested to see [P17’s missing brother’s] corpse.

Kerber asked who “they” were. P18 said these people were waiting in the office, probably Raslan’s office, and were Raslan’s assistants, one of them maybe the head of the office.

Kerber asked how many they were. P18 said there were [C1] and [C4] plus three more people. And it was obvious that one of them was the head of the office.

Kerber asked what the name of the Head of the office is. P18 said it was eight years ago, so he cannot remember.

Kerber said there will be a five-minute break for counseling and P18 should think about if he cannot remember for sure.

***

[5 minutes break in proceedings]

***

Kerber asked who was in the room [office]. Witness counsel Bahns said there was a misunderstanding and P18 said that he and his cousin were not convinced of what they were told on their first visit to Al-Khatib, so he went there again 3-5 days later. [C4] wanted money, 300,000 [Syrian lira].

Kerber asked whether it might have been 400,000 [Syrian lira]. P18 affirmed, adding that his family paid 5,000,000 [Syrian lira] in total to search for [P17's missing brother] and that [C4] also took money from other people. P18 said the money they gave [C4] was allegedly for [Brigadier General] to arrange a meeting with Raslan, the head of interrogation at Baghdad street. P18 then, together with [C4] had a meeting with Raslan in Al-Khatib. He was again on the first floor [ground floor] in a similar waiting area, [C4] had to wait outside. P18 was then told by two guards to go into a certain room, which he did. P18 said that a man was sitting there in a weird position, he was sure that it is colonel Anwar Raslan. Raslan asked him "What do you want?" and mentioned P18's cousin in Saudi Arabia and P17 who was in prison as well and told P18 that things did not look good. Raslan told P18 to take any corpse without causing trouble before saying that he should leave the room. P18 said that all this happened despite previous mediation efforts. P18 further elaborated that later on, a friend<sup>9</sup> approached him because of his cousin, though he actually did not know about this. P18 met with him in the evening in Damascus. P18's friend told him that one of his neighbors has information about [P17's missing brother] and the situation in the prison cell. When P18 met with his friend and his friend's neighbor in Harasta, the situation was very dangerous as there were barrel bombs everywhere and the town was under fire. However, P18 insisted on going despite these dangerous conditions, but they met in a house to be safe. P18 said he met a very thin man who showed signs of torture and hunger. This person did not want to talk at first, but P18's friend assured him that P18 was a friend. The person, his name is [Abu Akram], then told them strange things, amongst others that a military boot was put in his mouth to punish him for allegedly saying bad things about Alawites...

Kerber interrupted and said to ease things for P18, she wants to know whether they found his cousin's corpse. P18 said that they [people at Branch 251] tried to hand them the wrong corpse. P18 wanted to add a few things on what [Abu Akram] told him about his cousin: He went crazy because of the intense torture and almost lost consciousness. He told the guards that he wanted the keys to his car to go and see his mother. That is why he was continuously beaten and eventually taken out of the cell and almost beaten to death. P18 said he passed this information to his family and they together continued searching for his cousin's corpse or information about his fate. They went to hospitals in Tishreen and Harasta, [C4] arranged that. P18 recalled that they saw many corpses who looked like the people on the Caesar-photos. They were again told to just take any corpse so "the matter would be finally dealt with". P18 said that a week (3-4 days) later 3 very strong persons from the general intelligence service came to visit him and told him that Anwar Raslan wants to meet P18. P18 said he replied "If you are told to arrest me, fine. But I will not meet him [Raslan] if there is no order". P18 went on and said that [P17's brother] did not tell him everything, however P18 only realized that a week ago, when [P17's brother] arrived in [information redacted]. P18 said [P17's brother] did not want to pass a lot of information, even though there was a 1% chance that [P17's missing brother] was still alive, his brother did not want to take a risk, According to P18 [P17's brother] was in great danger back in Syria, but this changed now that he is in [information redacted], so he can now reveal all the information; he took notes of everything including dates and timestamps.

Kerber asked when the three persons from the intelligence service came to P18. P18 said it was around August 2011 [2017], however he cannot remember the exact date.

Kerber wanted to know whether P18 then went to meet Anwar Raslan. P18 denied, adding that he only met him once because he knew that if he would go, he would never come back. P18 said that his boss who had good relations told him that P18 should not leave his work place and should not talk to anyone.

---

<sup>9</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P18 did not want to mention his friend's name to ensure his friend's safety, however then clarified that he is called [name redacted] and is now living in [information redacted].

Kerber asked P18 what he meant by “not leave the workplace”. P18 said he spoke to his boss who told him not to go to Anwar Raslan.

Kerber asked P18 if anything unusual happened. P18 said that the political security directorate from Salamiyya and Damascus constantly called P18’s wife and asked about P18. P18’s wife always told them that he would be at work. P18 said that his wife was afraid, so he came to see her in Salamiyya once a week. Every time he went there, he had to pay money and fill in forms. P18 further told the court that he was constantly monitored and they [people from the intelligence services] took photos of his car and tried to take pictures of his father. P18 said they did this to create an atmosphere of surveillance and put pressure on him.

Kerber wanted to know when the calls happened, before or after the search for P18’s cousin’s corpse. P18 said after.

***

[15 minutes break in proceedings]

***

Raslan’s defense counsel, Böcker, said that P18 spoke to one of the plaintiffs during the break and now has a sheet of paper in front of him. P18 said he wrote this himself for better orientation. Judge Wiedner confirmed that the sheet was already there before the break.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner said he wants to clarify some things to get better orientation of P18’s memories. His first question would be when exactly P18’s cousin was arrested. P18 said he does not know the exact date, but that they started searching for him on July 25, 2012; only a few days after they first got information about his arrest/detention. P18 said his cousin was a doctor at Al-Mojtahed hospital. Eyad Shbat [P18’s cousin’s flatmate] told the hospital’s director that [P17’s missing brother] was rescuing wounded but that he was not allowed to do that, instead he should simply put them in the cooling room because they are all terrorists. The hospital then informed Al-Khatib.

Wiedner concluded that [P17’s missing brother] was consequently arrested before July 25. P18 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know from where P18 and his family got the information that P18’s cousin was in Branch 251. P18 said he knew from [P17’s brother] who knew from [C1].

Wiedner asked from where P18 and his family knew [C1]. P18 said he is the husband of one of his cousins and works at Al-Khatib.

Wiedner wanted to know who spoke with whom. P18 said he did not know [C1], but his cousin arranged this contact. After July 25, 2012, P18’s cousin introduced him to [C1] and they met with him in his home.

Wiedner asked what [C1] told them at this meeting. P18 said he told them that [P17’s missing brother] died of a heart attack, that it was a natural death. However, he changed his statement after this meeting, saying that [P17's missing brother] might be alive or dead and they should search for him in Tishreen and Harasta hospitals.

Wiedner asked whether this [meeting] was before or after their visits to Branch 251. P18 said it all happened afterwards.

Wiedner said in that case, to stay in the correct order of events, he wants to come back to P18's meeting with his cousin and [C1]. Wiedner asked whether P18 spoke to [C1] and whether [C1] told them that he saw [P17's missing brother] in Branch 251. P18 said [C1] spoke to his cousin. P18 was present at the meeting but [C1] only addressed P18's cousin.

Wiedner wanted to know how Raslan came into play and why he wanted to contact him. P18 said they had information from [C1] and [C4] saying that Anwar Raslan was the head of Branch 251 and in charge of his cousin's file.

Wiedner asked where the information about competencies came from. P18 said that all their contacts/intermediaries, [C4] and [Brigadier General] told them that Anwar Raslan was the head of interrogation at Branch 251.

Wiedner said [C4] consequently acted as an intermediary and was paid by P18's family. Wiedner asked what exactly they paid him for. P18 said the money was allegedly for [Brigadier General] to organize a meeting with Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner asked whether [Brigadier General] and [C4] were in contact with each other. P18 said they were in contact with each other, adding that they were related. P18 further said that his family was willing to pay a lot of money.

Wiedner wanted to know who organized the meeting/visit with Raslan. P18 said his cousin told him that [C4] organized it through [Brigadier General]. P18 was told that [Brigadier General] spoke with Raslan and that the meeting with Raslan might have a positive outcome. P18 repeated that Raslan was in charge of his cousin's file.

Wiedner asked when exactly they met Raslan. P18 said it was end of July 2012. P18 went to Branch 251 with his cousin on 26 July where Raslan was not present. According to P18 about 3-5 days later, after they paid money [to [C4]], he was able to meet Raslan.

Wiedner recalled P18's statement with the police saying that P18 could meet Raslan around 5-6 days after the first visits to Branch 251. P18 affirmed, adding that it was possible after they paid money and that one can get anything in Syria by paying money.

Wiedner asked who was there on that day. P18 did not understand the question.

Wiedner said he wants to know how the meeting with Raslan was and who was there. P18 said that [Brigadier General] made the meeting possible, but that they [P18 and [C4]] were not able to go there in [C4's] car as for the first visit to Al-Khatib. P18 recalled that they had to go by foot and that the entire living area was blocked. P18 told the court that [C4] was not allowed to meet Raslan and that he had to wait outside. P18 said he insisted that [C4] would wait for him as it was a very dangerous place. Wiedner reassured that P18 went inside alone.

Wiedner asked what happened next. P18 said the meeting took approximately 5 minutes.

Wiedner asked whether P18 had to wait before the meeting. P18 affirmed saying that he had to wait for an hour on a wooden bench in a waiting area, which was similar to psychological torture.

Al-Gharib's defense counsel Schuster intervened by complaining that the translation was confusing and he did not understand what P18 said. The translator clarified that P18 had to wait for at least an hour, maybe longer.

Wiedner wanted to know where (on which floor) P18 had to wait. P18 said he was on the ground floor and that the office he was sent to was a regular, unspectacular office. He assumes that this was Raslan's working office and that he might have had another additional office.

Wiedner asked P18 why he felt that the waiting period felt incriminating. P18 said there were detainees and torture taking place. He heard voices and screaming. P18 said it was a lot of psychological pressure and he did not expect to get out of this place.

Wiedner asked P18 what kinds of torture he witnessed. P18 said he saw detainees kneeling with their arms tied behind their backs and their eyes covered. They were wet and P18 heard loud voices. He felt as if they [people at Branch 251] wanted to send him a warning saying "you are next". P18 said he was wondering why he met Raslan in this particular office, where one could see all this, Raslan was an officer after all. According to P18 this [meeting at this particular office] was intended.

Wiedner asked P18 whether the detainees were beaten. P18 said he heard noises of beatings but he was only able to squint and did not see enough since he had to sit on a wooden bench with his back to the rooms where the detainees were and he was not allowed to turn around.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly P18 witnessed. P18 said he already explained everything he saw.

Wiedner recalled P18's statement with the BKA saying that his cousin, [C1] and [C4] accompanied him and had to wait outside. P18 said the both of them only went with him at the first visit to Branch 251 and that he was alone at the second visit.

Wiedner further recalled P18 telling the BKA that at that place [the waiting area at Branch 251] there were rooms on the left and right side with doors open, so one could see naked detainees and interrogators in these rooms. Wiedner asked P18 whether this statement is correct. P18 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know if the situation was the same at his meeting with Raslan. P18 said it was almost the same, the detainees were tied up in the same manner, but P18 was very cautious as he did not want to get in trouble so he did not dare to look around.

Wiedner asked whether it was loud. P18 said it was very loud.

Wiedner asked P18 how the meeting with Raslan was and whether he would recognize him.

Judge Kerber offered P18 to cover his face with a folder. Böcker complained that one could skip this farce, since P18 would also stand in front of the court building without a folder covering his face. Kerber replied that the court room and public sphere are two different things and that P18 is allowed to cover his face in this particular situation in court. P18's counsel added that P18 also covers his face outside the court room. Böcker said that it would complicate the defense's work when witnesses do not act thoughtfully.

P18 requested to ask a question. Kerber allowed it.

P18 started mentioning personal information, when Kerber stopped him to give him the chance to talk to his counsel to “save the situation”.

After P18 spoke with his counsel, Wiedner asked again whether P18 recognizes anyone. P18 affirmed saying that he recognized the guy in the beige sweater (Raslan).

Wiedner asked P18 to describe his conversation with Raslan. P18 said it was very short unfortunately and took place eight years ago. P18 recalled that he was told to take any corpse and remain silent, this was the main content of their conversation, said P18. He was then told to leave.

Wiedner asked how P18 got into the room and to describe the situation in this room. P18 said two people held him and brought him to the room, he was taken out of the room the same way and escorted through the building when leaving.

Wiedner asked about the content of the meeting and what was said about P18’s cousin. P18 said he was given the information that if his cousin had been at Branch 251, he was now gone.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P18 spoke directly with Raslan. P18 said Raslan told him to just take any corpse.

Wiedner asked about any conditions or suggestions being mentioned during the meeting. P18 said that his cousin [P17’s brother] back then...

Wiedner interrupted, specifying that he wants to know whether Raslan mentioned conditions or made suggestions. P18 said that Raslan told him everything will be fine if P18’s cousin from Saudi Arabia returns.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan mentioned other names. P18 said that Raslan told him that P17 will also be released. Those are all the names Raslan mentioned.

Wiedner recalled P18’s statement with the BKA in which P18 said that he was about to leave, when Raslan told him to come back and said that he had two conditions for {P17’s missing brother’s} case: First, [P17’s brother] should return to Syria, second [P17’s brother/involved in the search for their brother] who was on the run at that time, shall render himself and if this happened, P17 would be released and P18’s file would be deleted. P18 affirmed and added that the translator at the BKA was “Persian” [Iranian] and did not understand everything, P18 had to discuss with him all the time.

Wiedner asked P18 to say whether his statement with the BKA which Wiedner just read out was correct or not. P18 said it is correct, adding that the questioning with the BKA took 7 hours and he felt like an accused not a witness.

Wiedner again asked whether P18’s statement was correct. P18 affirmed.

Wiedner then asked if P18 was given [P17’s missing brother’s] corpse during his meeting with Raslan. P18 denied. However, Raslan told him to search the corpses in the hospitals in Tishreen and Harasta.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly Raslan said. P18 said he only said to search the corpses.

Wiedner recalled P18’s statement with the BKA where P18 said that Raslan sent them to the hospitals in Harasta and Tishreen and asked P18 whether this was correct. P18 recalled Raslan saying “look for the corpse”. The corpses are either in Tishreen or Harasta.

Wiedner asked whether P18 assumed that the corpses are in these particular hospitals. P18 said he assumed this after he spoke to [C1].

Wiedner asked P18 about the outcomes of his talk with Raslan. P18 said he wished he never went to this meeting, it did not help at all.

Wiedner referred to P18's previous testimony, saying that he was told to take his cousin's personal belongings such as a laptop and phone with him and asked P18 whether he saw these items. P18 said he did not see them. He said that [P17's brother], [C1] and [C4] were with him when they were asked to take these items and a death certificate saying that [P17's missing brother] died of kidney failure.

Wiedner asked if they took these items with them. P18 denied.

Wiedner asked why they did not accept the items. P18 said his cousin did not want them since he still hoped to find his brother and wanted to keep searching. P18 added that his cousin [name redacted] has important information as P18 recently found out when his cousin arrived in [information redacted] P18 said his cousin did not reveal this information since he did not want to risk his brother's life, in case he was still alive.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan said that [P17's missing brother] was dead. P18 recalled Raslan saying "take the corpse" and P18 was not in the position to discuss this with Raslan.

Wiedner wanted to recall the overall situation by saying that P18 waited on the ground floor where he could see rooms in which detainees were tortured, and then went to Raslan's room/office. P18 said so far everything was correct.

Wiedner asked P18 whether one could hear the screaming in Raslan's room. P18 affirmed saying that the room looked like an observation room.

Wiedner then asked to describe the situation in Tishreen hospital later on, when P18 and his cousin were searching for the corpse of P18's cousin. P18 said the corpses were all naked and numbered.

Wiedner asked where these numbers were. (He had to repeat the question as P18 seemed to not understand) P18 said the numbers were either on the corpse's chest or forehead. P18 said the corpses were black and he assumed that they were tortured maybe ten days ago but there were also corpses from the same day.

Wiedner asked whether P18 could see how these people died. P18 affirmed, explaining that he can remember corpses from the same day, some showing signs of torture, some not. However, some also had a gunshot in their head or something else. P18's cousin was told to take one of seven corpses. P18 said his cousin was there to make a decision [identify his own brother] because he is an emergency doctor.<sup>10</sup> P18 said regular hospital employees told them to just take any corpse. He said they would not have done that if they did not have orders to say so. P18 further said that [C4] is usually pro regime but was disgusted by how they were treated at the hospital.

Prosecutor's Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge said he has a question regarding the situation in Raslan's office: How did P18 get there and how was he treated. P18 said he can explain how he was treated and asked the prosecutor to specify his question. Klinge asked P18 to describe his personal impressions in this situation. P18 said he was treated harshly right from the beginning. P18 said the message that they wanted to send him was “be careful”

---

<sup>10</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P18 got very emotional at this point.

Klinge asked whether Raslan also sent this message. P18 said Raslan was harsh as well. He thumped the table and told P18 to take the corpse. P18 said it was obvious that Raslan wanted to end the meeting. P18 added that he wished he never met Raslan.

Klinge recalled P18’s statement with the BKA where P18 said he was quasi kicked and pushed into the room where Raslan took off his glasses. Klinge asked P18 if that was correct. Böcker intervened and said he has a question. Klinge wanted P18 to answer the question he just asked. Böcker said that Klinge used the word “quasi” and asked him to be more specific, since P18 did not say in court the exact same he told the BKA.

Klinge repeated his question, asking P18 whether his statement with the BKA was correct. P18 said it is partially right. He was not kicked, however he was held at his shoulders and pulled into the room where Raslan took off his glasses and thumped the table.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Raslan’s defense counsel asked P18 whether he was alone at Al-Khatib on the day he met Anwar Raslan. P18 affirmed, adding that the branch is quite big, that [C4] had to wait at the inner gate of the compound and that they had to wait at the info point despite their connections and relations.

Böcker asked whether P18 was alone in the building. P18’s counsel Mr. Bahns said that his client already answered this question several times.

Judge Wiedner said that P18 told the BKA what he just answered.

P18’s counsel said that Wiedner also asked this question which his client answered and asked Böcker why he keeps asking. Böcker said he needs this for his final speech advocacy.

P18’s counsel said his client also recalled parts of his talk with Anwar Raslan in court, that the meeting was very short and answered all other questions on the meeting’s content.

Böcker said Raslan had certain conditions whose existence P18 also confirmed. P18’s counsel said there were no such conditions, Raslan only mentioned that he would delete P18’s file.

Judge Kerber intervened recalling P18’s statement with the BKA saying there were two conditions.

Böcker said it is either conditions or the order to take the corpse, only one of them can be true. P18’s counsel said his client already confirmed all this: two conditions, offer to delete P18’s file and order to take the corpse.

Böcker said either condition or corpse. P18’s counsel objected to the question. Böcker restated his question.

Kerber intervened by recalling P18’s statement with the BKA in which he said that on the 5th or 6th day, he met Raslan, they showed him how people were beaten, took him to a room where Raslan then told him to take the corpse. P18 was told to leave the room when he turned around to ask where his cousin’s corpse was. Raslan said he would tell him where the corpse was, release P17 and delete P18’s file if P18’s cousin in Saudi Arabia returned to Syria and [P17’s brother] surrendered to the police. Kerber asked which parts of the statement were correct and which were not. P18 said it is correct that his cousin should return from Saudi Arabia, [P17’s brother] should surrender to the police, that P17 would be released and his own file deleted. P18 added that he was told that his family should silently bury the corpse.

Kerber asked whether Böcker had any questions. Böcker said not for the moment.

***

[60 minutes lunch break]

***

[a sketch which P18 drew during his interview with the BKA was shown in the courtroom.]

***

Judge Kerber explained that P18 created this sketch during his questioning by the BKA. P18 added that he created this sketch under pressure solely from what he remembered.

Judge Wiedner asked P18 what kind of rooms are shown on the sketch. P18 said that the doors of the rooms on the right side of the waiting area were open and that people were tortured in these rooms. P18 said he saw detainees kneeling on the floor in these rooms. The people in the guard room told P18 to take the personal belongings of his cousin.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker intervened saying that P18 should come to the judge's bench in order to confirm his signature.

Judge Kerber asked Böcker what document he wants to present. Böcker asked P18 if it is his signature on the protocol of his questioning with the BKA. P18 confirmed.

Böcker concluded that P18 consequently confirmed by signing that he was shown a translation of his questioning and confirmed its content.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer intervened saying that the part of the document which Böcker is referring to would be insufficient and that Böcker should also read out the previous three sentences in this document.

Böcker read out: "06304/18 12.09.2019 page 14; comment: I was drawn attention to the meaning of my statements. I love German authorities and trust the German state. I would not trust the Syrian state. Approved and signed by [Böcker read out P18's full name].

Kerber switched off the microphone from which Böcker was speaking, said that this was "very bad style" on Böcker's behalf and ordered a 5 minute break in proceedings.

***

[5 minute break in proceedings]

***

Böcker said one should admit when making a mistake, he made one and wants to apologize for it. He added that he was annoyed by Scharmer's constant interruptions and mentioned P18's name by accident, he did not intent to do so and wants to apologize.

Kerber said she will leave things like that, proceedings can continue.

Böcker asked P18 whether he signed the protocol of his questioning by the BKA, confirming that he was shown a transcript of the protocol and a translation of it and confirmed both by signing. P18 said he trusts the German state and that he would have rights in Germany which he did not have in Syria. P18 said that is a fact. However, P18 said, his questioning by the BKA took more than seven hours. There were two officers, one of them did not intervene when the other put P18 under pressure. In addition, some topics that P18 wanted to talk about were blocked by one of the officers, whose method of working P18 did not understand. P18 said that he suffered from the translator, who was Persian/Iranian, when he tried to communicate his thoughts through him. The translator often provided short summaries of P18's statements so that P18 had to intervene in German to correct his statements. However, the protocol of his questioning was correct, only the translator... P18 said he did not do anything bad in Germany for five years but felt like a criminal during the questioning. Nonetheless he confirms the protocol.

Kerber asked P18 whether his statement was re-translated for him. P18 denied, saying he was offered a re-translation but he declined, as the translator was not capable of doing it in P18's eyes. P18 said he understood everything that was going on during his questioning and declined a re-translation. He was exhausted.

Raslan's other defense counsel Bodenstein recalled P18 mentioning some names and asked him where these people are today. He started with [C4]. P18 Said [C4] is from Latakia and works in Damascus as a merchant for medical supplies, his father is an officer.

Bodenstein then asked about [Abu Akram]. P18 said he does not know his job/position but that he lived in Harasta and, from what P18 knows, is now in Europe.

Bodenstein continued by asking about Brigadier General [name redacted]. P18 said that when he left Syria, [name redacted] was still a Brigadier General at the government palace.

Bodenstein asked about [P17's brother]. P18 said his cousin arrived in [information redacted] 8 or 9 days ago and that he was in great danger in Syria.

Bodenstein asked him to provide more details on his cousin's current whereabouts. P18 said he cannot.

Bodenstein asked whether he can tell the court outside this public session. P18 affirmed.

Bodensetein also wanted to know about [C1]. P18 said he is still in Damascus.

Bodenstein recalled P18 mentioning [name redacted] who is now living in [information redacted] and asked P18 whether he can provide his exact address. P18 said he can give it to the court in writing.

P18 was dismissed as a witness.

P17 who testified the previous day asked whether he can read out a statement. Judge Kerber affirmed.

P17 said "In the name of my mother, I want to ask Anwar Raslan what has happened to my brother". Kerber said he allows the question and poses it to Raslan's defense lawyers.

Böcker said his client will not answer this question, however it is planned to provide a declaration, not on this question in particular but more generally. They need some more time to provide the statement, the delay is not Raslan's fault but due to continuing talks within the defense team.

***

[15 minutes break in proceedings]

***

Judge Kerber asked the defense team whether they want to read out their client's declaration. Böcker said they have a short version of it, however not a proper one and that they will not read it out today.

Kerber said a German translation of a Human Rights Watch (HRW) report would be read out in court until the end of today's session at around 3pm after a short break.

***

[5 minutes break in proceedings]

***

Judge Kerber said the German translation of the HRW report will be read out in court according to §249 StPO.<sup>11</sup>

Böcker objected. Judge Kerber rejected this objection and explained that judge Wiedner ordered the translation of this report on 26 June 2020 and it will be read out in parts according to §249 StPO.

Böcker formally objected arguing that the origin of this report and translation would not be sufficiently identifiable to fall under §249 StPO, requesting a court decision.

***

[10 minutes break in proceedings]

***

Court decision:

Böcker's objection was rejected saying that origin and indicators of the report and its translation are sufficient to fall under §249 StPO.

Böcker agreed to the decision, saying that he just found a proper indicator of the report's origin in his documents and that his client's declaration would now be ready as well thanks to the recent breaks in proceedings.

Kerber asked P18's counsel Bahns if this declaration can be read out today, though his client is no longer present. Bahns agreed, saying that he will not be present the next day either.

Anwar Raslan's declaration was read out by his defense counsel Bodenstein:

"Despite further declarations which I will make during the course of these proceedings, I want to make the following statement: I did not have contact to witness P18, the and others did not contact me, I do neither know [C4] nor [Brigadier General]. Regarding the missing person, I cannot provide any information. At the end of July or beginning of August, [C1] came to my office telling me that the head of the medical association, [name redacted] said that a doctor was detained. The inspector was searching and asking about a doctor from the region of [information redacted] in the prisons, however unsuccessfully. [name redacted] from Dar'a who is now living in [information redacted], contacted me after my desertion regarding a doctor from al Mushrefa. I told him the same thing."

---

<sup>11</sup> Documents shall be read out in court for the purpose of evidence taking regarding their content. Electronic documents are considered to be documents when they can be read out.

Judge Kerber asked Raslan if this is his declaration. Raslan affirmed.

Kerber and Wiedner read out parts of the HRW report "We've never seen such horror" dated June 2011.

Proceedings adjourned at 2:15 pm.

Day 37 of Trial – October 8, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30am with 5 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience.<sup>12</sup> Plaintiff counsel Reiger was replaced by Attorney Bessler.

Testimony of Christoph Reuter

Christoph Reuter, a 52-years old German journalist living in Germany and Lebanon was summoned as a witness. Advisements were read out and Reuter was informed about his right to refuse to give evidence due to his work as a journalist. Reuter confirmed that he wants to testify.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber recalled Reuter's questioning by the BKA and asked him whether he knows Anwar Raslan. Reuter explained that he was in Jordan in 2013 together with his researcher at the time. They initially wanted to cross the border to go to south Syria, however there were many and thorough border controls by the Jordanian forces and only opposition members were allowed to cross the border but no journalists. That was why Reuter and his researcher started interviewing deserters. They met various officers, amongst them [name redacted], the former chief of police in Homs who recommended to talk to Raslan for detailed information on staging of Jihadist terror attacks. Reuter said that [name redacted] was the one who called Raslan to arrange a meeting between him, Reuter and his researcher at Raslan's flat in Amman. Reuter said they spoke about how Jihadis and Al-Qaida were seen through Syria to Iraq since 2004/05 as well as the events in winter 2011/12 regarding attacks by Al-Nusra. Reuter said he heard of inconsistencies surrounding attacks allegedly committed by Al-Nusra who did not exist at the time of the attacks and wanted to talk with Raslan about this. Reuter said they met two days in a row since Raslan has a photographic memory when it comes to details. Reuter also asked the questions put to Raslan to other people as well to cross-check Raslan's statements and validate them. Reuter mentioned an explosion in Damascus in December 2012 as an example: After an explosion on the intelligence service's compound, Ali Mamlouk, Anwar Raslan and some of Mamlouk's assistants met to discuss the situation. Raslan required an investigation, however Mamlouk did not want investigations. The head of the "cleaning crew" who later also deserted confirmed this story to Reuter. Reuter further said that he met Raslan once in Germany but did not stay in contact with him.

Kerber said that Reuter is summoned as a witness to provide information on two issues, the developments in 2011/12 and what Raslan told him about his position and activities and asked Reuter what he wants to talk about first. Reuter said he wants to start with the general matter and then come to the more detailed parts, so he would start by testifying about the general situation in Syria.

---

<sup>12</sup> No accredited Arabic-speaking journalist who requested access to translation was present.

Kerber asked Reuter how many times he has been to Syria. Reuter said that he had studied there in 1980/90 and then went there to do research from time to time without a journalist-visa. He got a first journalist visa in February 2011, since he was the only Syria/MENA expert at the magazine he was working for, but one could only travel there until late 2011. Reuter said the first time he went to Syria on a journalist-visa was in June 2011, then August and December 2011 and from then on without visa. He said he took about 20 trips to Syria, ranging from 3-days to week long trips. Reuter said that one could travel between the different areas in Syria in 2011, for example from a suburb of Damascus where deserted soldiers were, to other parts of Syria. Reuter said his stories were published without author citation since the Syrian government put pressure on his employer and other journalists to leave the country. Reuter said he always wanted to go to opposition-held areas, never to government-held areas, he was in Aleppo, Idlib, Zabadani, Deir ez-Zor, Yabrud and suburbs of Homs. Reuter said that he did not go to Syria from fall 2013 until spring 2014 due to ISIS. He was then in the city of Aleppo in 2014 and 2015 before the Turkish government issued a travel ban and he had to enter Syria through Iraq.

Kerber thanked Reuter for his explanations. Wiedner asked him what he studied. Reuter said he studied Islamic Studies, Political Science and German philology.

Kerber asked Reuter whether he speaks Arabic. Reuter affirmed.

Kerber asked whether Reuter conducted his interviews with a translator or not. Reuter said it was dependent on the situation. In cases where more people were involved or the topic was about technical details, he used a translator since he cannot speak Arabic fluently.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked Reuter whether he was tied to Syria from 2002-2004 due to family relations. Reuter affirmed, saying that he met his wife in Syria in 2003, so he was in Syria for private reasons from 2005. Reuter further said that he went to Syria in 2002 after Hussein was re-elected, as he had information that weapon imports to Iraq through Syria took place. Reuter said he was then in Syria in 2005 and 2006 for private reasons and to write a story on refugees.

Wiedner asked to what kind of people Reuter spoke in 2011/12, opposition member and/or members of the regime. Reuter said that at the beginning of 2011 when he could easily enter Syria, he mostly spoke with friends from university, some of the less famous members of the opposition and the head of analysis at the US embassy. Reuter said he then had successive contact to people organizing demonstrations and flash mob-style protests. He said he was in contact with a non-military opposition circles in Homs that organized night-time demonstrations from August till December 2011. Reuter said he basically spoke to everyone in shops and asked them how they felt and people were also actively approaching him. He said he also spoke to rebels, military commanders, doctors and basically everyone who wanted to talk. He asked them about what happened, how they were organized, their plans for the future of the country and how they treated deserters. Reuter said he was invited by opposition members to talk about their vision of the future of the country. He said he had all these talks in order to paint a better picture of events regarding massacres and assassinations; who killed whom, what exactly happened. Reuter said his talks then became more relevant as the Syrian government issued press releases that there was no opposition and that attacks were launched by Jihadist groups, financed by foreign states. He said that two witnesses told him about the things that were then revealed in the Caesar-files for Damascus; that the hospitals were a reloading point for corpses where corpses were registered with numbers and photos indicating where they were killed and that corpses were then packed and transported in trucks. Reuter said they never got as far with research on Homs hospitals (in terms of insight and evidence) as Caesar got.

Wiedner asked when Reuter got this information. Reuter said he met the first two witnesses in early 2013. Reuter then started researching, considering that there might be satellite images showing mass graves and also conducted open-source research. When Caesar published his photos, Reuter and his team built upon that.

Wiedner asked when Reuter first got hints/information about hospitals packed with corpses and mass graves. Reuter said he got first hints in March 2012 and then met a soldier in April 2012.

Wiedner asked when these practices began. Reuter said he met an 18 year-old soldier in Idlib. Reuter said he approached this young man as he seemed traumatized. He then told Reuter about nightmares he had as he had to register and pack corpses every day. He said he started this work in March 2012, people are constantly yelling 'hey Mohammad, can you pass me that leg, hey Yusuf I have an arm here' and that the corpses are piled up half a meter in the backyard of the hospital. Reuter said this soldier had to take photographs of the corpses and give them numbers indicating from which intelligence service they came. He had to do this in a military hospital.

Wiedner asked where exactly this happened. Reuter said that it happened in the backyard of a military hospital. They had two witnesses telling them this story. Reuter said he also met a doctor who confirmed this as he was on a work visit to Homs where he witnessed this practice, however Reuter and his team did not have further evidence.

Wiedner asked whether there were indicators as to where the corpses came from and the reasons for death. Reuter said many corpses came from Baba Amr, some from check points, many from so-called "centers" where detainees were brought. Reuter said they came from different services and agencies, sometimes 30 a day, sometimes 400. They were sometimes brought in trucks, sometimes in vans, other times by ambulance.

Wiedner asked whether there were other intelligence services despite the general intelligence directorate. Reuter said the military intelligence service and the air force intelligence were known as being "butchers". He added that they killed on a large scale.

Judge Kerber informed Reuter about his rights and duties as an expert, so he could testify as an expert-witness.

Wiedner asked Reuter to outline how the regime reacted to the demonstrations in spring 2011. Reuter said the reaction was depending on the city. In Damascus, people were generally rather "simply" arrested. However, in Al-Midan, a quarter with a disloyal reputation, it was more likely that the regime used violence than with demonstrations taking place in the center of Damascus. Reuter said that demonstrations in the center of Damascus were organized like flash mobs where people appeared with banners etc. for a very short time and then dissolved and disappeared, that is why there was generally no violence with demonstrations in the center of Damascus. Reuter said that things were different in Homs. The peaceful demonstrations there usually took place at night and all participants were aware that when military or intelligence services show up, they would use violence and shoot at the protesters. That is why they organized demonstrations in a certain way: young men were usually walking in the middle of the street while other groups walked at the side of the street, so that they could escape quickly in case the military or intelligence service opened the fire. Reuter said he remembers a demonstration in Homs where nothing happened, simply because the military stormed two hospitals at the same time as the demonstration happened. He explained that everyone participating in peaceful demonstrations were aware that they could be shot at any time. Reuter said this awareness was also present during the winter months and people always expected that the military would shoot at them also with the help of snipers. Reuter further told the court about the so-called “taxi of death”, a van rushing the street with 100km/h so that the demonstrators inside the van could escape quickly without being shot by snipers. Reuter said this was a practice mainly used in opposition quarters and that the city had a “schizophrenic division” at the time regarding the use of violence with demonstrations.

Wiedner asked whether there were different periods in the regime’s reaction and if this reaction changed/developed at one point. Reuter said the reaction of the regime changed indeed, saying that every time they shot at demonstrations, there were hundreds of dead people and that the situation evolved into an “open war” in Baba Amr where they [government forces] did not shoot occasionally, but used helicopters to shoot at demonstrators.

Wiedner said the court’s focus would be on the general reaction of the regime to demonstrations in February 2012 and asked Reuter what he knew about that. Reuter said that during the early months, whenever demonstrators were shot, it was argued [by the government] that those were Jihadists shooting at anyone. Reuter said that weapons allegedly belonging to these Jihadists were presented on TV and that these allegedly Jihadist shootings were staged by the government. Reuter further explained that there was no central answer to demonstrations, participants were sometimes beaten, sometimes not. He said that to him and his team it was unclear what exactly happened between March 2012 and late summer 2012. However, the usual circle of events was: demonstrations on Friday, causing death, funerals on Saturday, silence and peace from Sunday to Thursday and then the circle would start again. Reuter said that “it” steadily increased.

Wiedner asked Reuter what he meant by “it steadily increased”. Reuter said demonstrations became bigger and increased in numbers as well. He said that demonstrations were guarded by “demonstration protectors”, men with knives accompanying the demonstrations. Reuter further explained that the mindset of people participating in demonstrations changed; they no longer wanted to duck from the intelligence services but to defend themselves. He said there were no weapons only knives used at demonstrations.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Reuter was told about this or whether he had first-hand experience. Reuter said he and his team heard gunfire in the evenings in Homs and went to underground hospitals where they saw people that had been shot at. He said this was in August 2011.

Wiedner asked Reuter about the functions of the intelligence services beginning in spring 2011 and who was responsible for what. Reuter said that there was internal competition among the different services earlier, but that this changed from early 2011 on. He said they started to cooperate by exchanging arrest warrants. Regarding the brutality of the intelligence services, Reuter said that the air force was most brutal and that the military intelligence service was significantly involved in the staging of Jihadist cells which were considered as the “official evil”. He further explained that the general intelligence directorate was less dangerous, however, transfers of detainees between the different services were possible. Reuter also said that there were differences between the prisons regarding their “danger” which was dependent on the head of the prison. Reuter summarized that the air force intelligence and the military intelligence were brutal, the political security directorate was “rather civilized” and the general intelligence directorate was somewhere between the two brutal services and the more civilized one.

Wiedner asked Reuter about the functions of the general intelligence directorate and Al-Khatib. Reuter said that people were afraid of Branch 251 but detainees usually did not have to stay there for long. The fact that the government tortures and kills people was also nothing new. Reuter said he and his team were interested in new developments such as hospitals being used as transfer points for corpses and the staging of Jihadist terror as well as Ali Mamlouk’s role in this as a “highly intelligent” commander.

Wiedner asked Reuter about Mamlouk’s role and position. Reuter said that Mamlouk worked at the military intelligence service together with Assef Shawkat. Reuter said before 2011, Mamlouk was also involved in organizing the passing of Jihadists through Syria to Iraq. Mamlouk had talks with the Iraqi intelligence services which were recorded by a mole in the intelligence service so it is proven that Mamlouk was involved in this. Reuter said that Mamlouk further had talks with Hezbollah and Pasdaran on how to “handle” the demonstrations, which also involved a course in how to build car bombs. Reuter said Ali Mamlouk was the “brain” of the intelligence service and way more intelligent than others. Reuter said Mamlouk also received a Lebanese minister in Syria who was then arrested at the Syrian-Lebanese border with 21 explosive devices in his luggage, which Mamlouk told him to detonate in Lebanon.

Wiedner asked Reuter about Mamlouk’s formal position. Reuter said he was the head of the general intelligence directorate and if he remembers correctly had the rank of a major general.

Wiedner asked Reuter where people were brought to when arbitrarily detained. Reuter said he once witnessed an arbitrary detention himself. He and his team often traveled by bus as they deemed it to be least suspicious. When they arrived at a checkpoint, he saw how a man was taken out of the crowd. A bag was put over his head and he was taken away in a van.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he also heard reports about arbitrary detentions. Reuter affirmed saying they took place everywhere; at demonstrations, check points or at home. Depending on the social status of a person, they were being tortured or beaten. People were usually released and told not to insult the president and his family. Reuter said that people did not take this seriously enough and later on, they would not be released.

Wiedner wanted to know when the practice of not releasing detainees changed. Reuter said in 2011 people were usually released when arbitrarily detained. He recalled a big demonstration in April or May 2011 where 200 people disappeared which was reported everywhere. Then in December 2011 a person was shot in the head at a checkpoint, the family was able to get the corpse but it was still reported everywhere as it was rather unusual. Then in 2012 people would no longer be released when arrested and in late 2012 and early 2013 it was normal that people were being shot.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he was familiar with Tishreen and Harasta hospitals. Reuter affirmed adding that a witness (a rich businessman) told him that he was allowed to search for his brother’s corpse at one of the hospitals, accompanied by soldiers that helped him dig through the corpses.

Wiedner asked Reuter when the massacres in Houla happened and what exactly happened there. Reuter said it was on 31 May, however he is not entirely sure. He said a UN representative came to Homs the following day saying that evidence indicates that the military came from the Alawite hills to the Sunni villages and killed people in their homes. Reuter said he was not in Syria at that time but read an article in a well-known German newspaper approximately three weeks later which said that rebels from Homs were responsible for this attack. However, the sources and the article itself were quite dubious and one more sign for the second narrative spread by the Syrian government. Reuter said he and his team wanted to go to Houla (it took three weeks for them to get there) where they spoke with eyewitnesses for two days. These statements as well as the topographic background led Reuter to conclude that the massacre was launched by militias supported by the Syrian government, as they only killed people in houses that were in the firing line of the government-held military base on top of the hill. Reuter said all reports by eyewitnesses said the same: that a silver pick-up drove down the hill on the only street entering the village, which was also in firing line of the military base (Reuter recalled witnesses saying that they themselves often had to hide behind big trucks when entering the village so they would not get shot by the military), attackers killed everyone they could find inside their homes (Reuter recalled eyewitnesses saying that they thought the attackers were looking for young men, so all young men hid in stables, cabins etc. but the attackers just killed everyone they could find so all families were murdered, except the young men who hid in stables etc.)

Wiedner asked whether Reuter has findings that the attack was ordered by the government. Reuter said it was at least tolerated by the government and that there were great efforts to cover it up. He added that the militias would probably not have entered the villages without backup by the military.

Wiedner said he has a couple questions regarding the intelligence services. Can Reuter say how the activities of the intelligence services changed from 2011 on? Reuter confirmed and said the general connotation of intelligence services is to collect insights and usually has nothing to do with military activities. However, in Syria, intelligence services always collected insights and acted in a military manner. Reuter said people were also being tortured before 2011 but there were only a few places where detainees were tortured. Reuter said the infrastructure to torture people already existed in 2004 but that the behavior of the general intelligence directorate only significantly changed in 2011/12. He said they developed into “death stations” mainly torturing and killing people.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he knew Division 40. Reuter said he does not remember their precise activities but that he heard of it back then, however, did not conduct further research on what they did, as he focused on other aspects.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he knows the name Deeb Zaytoun. Reuter affirmed saying that to his knowledge, Zaytoun was the head of the Syrian intelligence service.

Wiedner then went on to ask Reuter about Tawfiq Younes. Reuter said he knows the name but cannot remember details.

Wiedner mentioned Hafez Makhoulf and asked Reuter whether he knew him. Reuter affirmed saying that in Damascus, Makhoulf had a reputation of being brutal and choleric. Reuter said he was the head of a division within the general intelligence directorate and brother of Rami Makhoulf. Even though Hafez Makhoulf had a relatively low rank, he was untouchable due to his family relations to the president. Reuter said Makhoulf had a “strange” role. He was later in the doghouse with the regime and went to Belarus.

***

[10 minute break in proceedings]

***

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he is familiar with the CCMC [Central Crisis Management Cell]. Reuter asked whether that is “the one that blew up in June 2012?”

Wiedner asked him whether he is sure that they are talking about the same thing. Reuter said they are, if CCMC is the one including Assef Shawkat and other heads of intelligence services, then it is the one that was blown up in June 2012.

Wiedner asked Reuter about the functions of the CCMC. Reuter said it was established to provide security related answers on how to deal with protests.

Wiedner asked about the date of establishment. Reuter said he does not know when it was established but he and his team were rather interested in the explosion. However, he thinks it was established relatively early on [spring 2011].

Wiedner asked what kind of decisions the cell made and what activities it pursued. Reuter said he is not able to differentiate what was decided outside the cell and what was decided by the cell.

Wiedner asked Reuter about the ending date of the CCMC. Reuter said he believes it ended in 2012 with the explosion in a meeting room inside the CCMC’s compound. Reuter said a group of rebels admitted to setting up the explosion, however the group did not have any insights into the attack. Reuter said he by chance met two people who were involved in the explosion, both of them officers working in the CCMC building. He said they had pictures and documents from the room where the explosion happened. Reuter said that there was not much surveillance on the compound as there were only a few employees. He said that it was no problem for these soldiers to be accompanied by other persons not working at the cell as there were barely any checks. This way they were able to smuggle small amounts of explosive substance into the building and place it in the ceiling as there were no cameras. Reuter said the bomb was ready long before the actual explosion but that the members of the CCMC always met in different rooms so it took a couple weeks before they came back to this room where the bomb was triggered via phone. Reuter said that the CCMC personnel first suspected the explosion originated from the buffet so “the first thing they did was to arrest and beat up the catering staff from the Four Seasons”. Years later rumors arose that the explosion was ordered by Assad himself, but there is no corroboration for this version. Reuter said he and his team never published their story on this.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he recognizes anyone on the accused’s bench. Reuter said “yes, him” [Reuter looked straight at Raslan nodding in his direction, without pointing at him].

Wiedner asked Reuter to talk about Raslan’s motives to talk to him and if Raslan was willing to provide information. Reuter said Raslan was observant and hesitant at the beginning. He said he was probably the first journalist that Raslan ever spoke to. Reuter said it was a new situation for all former high-ranking officials to talk to journalists. Western journalists were previously considered to be the enemy and officials would have probably not even told them what time it is, and now they are providing details about their work to them, which would have been the end of their careers. Reuter said the conversation became more open when Raslan realized that he was not asking dumb questions like “is it an unjust regime?"<sup>13</sup> or "what does an intelligence agency do?", but rather "what about that group?", "what about this attack?", "did an Al-Qaeda cadre really stay in a Syrian government's guest house?". Reuter said it was a conversation between forensic experts, people fascinated by details. Reuter said his researcher/colleague also had a "photographic memory for details." Raslan told them how he once arrested Jihadists who then told him to "call Assef Shawkat" and it turned out they were only staged by the regime. The same happened in early 2011 with Ali Mamlouk [as the person staging Jihadist attacks] when allegedly Jihadist weapons which were confiscated by Syrian forces were presented on TV. This practice was not very well known but nonetheless a popular means for Assad to present himself to the international community as a lesser evil. According to Reuter, they [government] also did that back in 2005 to make the occupation of Iraq more costly. Reuter said that he and his team were mainly interested in these orchestrations of Jihadist terror. Reuter said that he recognized the same disgust with Raslan as with other former Syrian officials about the fact that people were no longer arrested and investigations were no longer conducted upon probable cause (Raslan considered arrests as a legitimate way of preventing peaceful demonstrations) but instead hundreds of people were arbitrarily arrested. Reuter said Raslan did not support these grounds of arbitrary arrests (people being arrested and detained solely to scare them) and felt like his work being trivialized. Reuter said they had a long and open discussion as Raslan has an analytical memory and mindset and was able to present himself as a professional inspector.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he believes what Raslan told him. Reuter affirmed saying that they also met with the former head of the political security directorate in Latakia. This person also wanted to change sides without voiding his professional biography.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he spoke to Raslan about his daily work. Reuter denied, saying that they only had two days to chat with him and their focus was on staged terror attacks by the regime who then presented itself as victim of this terror. Reuter said they had lots of witnesses telling them about torture in detention facilities, but Raslan was one of the few people who could tell them about staged terror attacks.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether he himself still got an impression of torture taking place through his conversation with Raslan. Reuter said they spoke about his reasons for defecting and why he defected relatively late: Raslan first supported the system which then got out of control. Reuter said that it was commonly known that people were beaten at Al-Khatib however not that they went missing.

Wiedner recalled Reuter's statement with the BKA where he said that he was under the impression that Raslan bothered about a lack of professional behavior and only useless torture taking place. Wiedner recalled Reuter providing an example on a lawyer who was tortured at Al-Khatib for no obvious reason. Reuter said he remembers.

Wiedner wanted to know if Raslan was bothered by the treatment of detainees or the fact that his profession as an investigator was trivialized. Reuter affirmed the latter.

Wiedner asked whether this was also the reason for Raslan to defect. Reuter said that Raslan did not support mass killings and large-scale torture. He said that Raslan was a Sunni "career officer" who was under pressure as he came from a region with rebellious background. Reuter said in this position and due to his family being massacred, one either gives 150% or he has to leave. However, according to Reuter they did not talk in depth about Raslan's reasons for defecting.

---

<sup>13</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: the term "Unrechtsregime/Unrechtsstaat" as Reuter said has a strongly negative connotation in German language where it is the antonym to the "Rechtsstaat" (democratic state governed by the rule of law). The term "Unrechtsstaat" has its origins in 1952 when the famous German prosecutor Fritz Bauer first used it to describe the Nazi regime. To this day, the term is commonly used to describe the Nazi regime as well as the communist regime in the former German Democratic Republic.

Wiedner asked whether Raslan said that [give 150% as Sunni or leave]. Reuter denied, explaining that he knew that from other people as they conducted an environment analysis and that Raslan was widely known in the community of defected officers in exile.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan himself said anything on this. Reuter affirmed explaining that Raslan did not support "this". According to Reuter, Raslan did not support the fact that hundreds of people were arrested and that he on top was supposed to torture them. Reuter said that Raslan felt like his professionalism would be trivialized by this.

Wiedner asked why Raslan did not desert earlier and if Reuter asked Raslan about that. Reuter said it is common practice to ensure that one's family is safe before deserting, to not take any risks. Reuter thinks that this was an issue in Raslan's case. However, Reuter said that other people in exile thought that Raslan was an opportunist as at the end of 2012 the regime was about to collapse anyway. Reuter recalled that people defecting in late 2011 were considered heroes, people defecting early 2012 were considered to be "alright" and people defecting in late 2012 were considered to float with the tide as they might have been killed anyway.

Wiedner asked Reuter if Raslan had unsuccessful attempts to escape and recalled Reuter's statement with the BKA saying that Raslan was being observed as to why his preparations for escaping took some time but he did not have an unsuccessful attempt to escape. Reuter confirmed his statement with the BKA saying that there is simply no such thing as an "unsuccessful attempt to escape" as in case one got caught while trying to flee, he would have been killed and not been able to start a second attempt.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether they also spoke about Raslan's background as a Sunni. Reuter said they only spoke about this very briefly but that he spoke about Sunni backgrounds with others in more detail. These people told him about a general paranoid distrust by the Alawite leadership towards Sunnis. Reuter said there were allegedly meetings taking place regarding travel bans of retired Sunni officials during which Alawites allegedly supposed that Sunnis should never be able to leave the country. Reuter said there was a general distrust towards Sunnis.

Wiedner asked whether Raslan mentioned anything in this direction. Reuter denied, repeating that they only spoke about Raslan's Sunni background very briefly.

Wiedner recalled Reuter's statement with the BKA during which Reuter said that Raslan was deeply unsettled by the fact that his background as Sunni was a problem. Reuter said if it is noted in the file then it would be correct.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether Raslan told him about tensions with superiors. Reuter affirmed saying that Raslan wanted investigations after the Kafar Souseh attack but Ali Mamlouk declined.

Wiedner recalled Reuter saying that Raslan felt threatened due to his Sunni background and that there were tensions between Raslan and Hafez Makhoul due to a group of people who were arrested and beaten in early 2012 and whom Raslan allegedly released. However, according to Reuter's statement with the BKA, Raslan was supported by Tawfiq Younes in this matter. Reuter confirmed his statement adding that they were based on notes which he took during the interview but never used for publishing purposes and that the interview happened a long time ago.

Wiedner further asked Reuter whether it is true that he asked Raslan about an alleged truth serum which Raslan thought was useless as people were not able to say anything, since they did not know anything. Reuter confirmed this statement.

Wiedner wanted to know what Raslan said about the alleged release of the previously mentioned group of detainees. Reuter said he remembers that the group was beaten with metal tubes however, he does not remember if he specifically asked Raslan about whether he released this group or whether he can remember this instance from another context.

Wiedner concluded that the torture did not happen in Raslan's Branch but that he indirectly confirmed that he released them. Reuter affirmed.

Wiedner recalled Raslan saying that he was neutralized and asked Reuter about his knowledge on this claim. Reuter said they did not talk about this in specifics as they were focused on other issues and there was no opportunity where the metal pipe incident from 2012 came up again.

Wiedner asked whether they specifically spoke about the treatment of detainees. Reuter denied, adding that he does not remember every detail of the conversation, since he never used the notes he made during this interview for any publication.

Wiedner asked whether Reuter's statements with the BKA are based on his notes. Reuter affirmed.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether the following statement he made during his questioning by the BKA would consequently be correct: "We spoke about torture and beating of detainees with regards to Raslan's attempts to release some detainees". Reuter confirmed his statement

Wiedner wanted to know whether they also spoke about Raslan's potential role within the opposition. Reuter said that Raslan was hoping to fulfill a role in a new Syrian state. Reuter said it might sound strange nowadays but back in 2012 no one would have thought that Assad would remain in power. People expected that Assad would not be able to secure his power "with only Alawites and some opportunists". Reuter added that the higher-ranking deserters were in the regime, the warmer the welcome by the opposition was, as these former high-ranking officials were key to overthrow the regime.

Wiedner asked whether Raslan had documents with him when he deserted. Reuter denied, saying that they knew from others that they were waiting on a list with missing detainees but with regards to Raslan his photographic memory was more promising to them than documents.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Reuter spoke with Raslan or other people about cooperation with the opposition. Reuter said they spoke about this with everyone. Reuter recalled that at that time [late 2012] the opposition coalition was only about to emerge. They had talks with Saudi Arabia or Jordan trying to figure out which government can support them and what the US's role would be.

Wiedner asked Reuter whether Raslan told him about contact with the opposition during his "active" time [while working at Branch 251]. Reuter said Raslan only told him about alleged observation which made it hard for him to leave. He also told Reuter that the general suspicion towards Sunnis would have made it very dangerous for him to contact the opposition.

Wiedner recalled parts of Reuter's statement with the BKA saying that it took weeks for Raslan to leave Syria. Reuter affirmed, adding that it rather took months than weeks.

Wiedner asked whether they also spoke about the possibility for Raslan to return to Syria. Reuter said Raslan wanted to continue working in his field of profession (as investigator or head of police forces) either in Syria or somewhere else, however only once Assad would have been gone.

Wiedner wanted to know if Reuter also spoke with Raslan about his plans for the future when they met in Germany. Reuter said they touched upon that, adding that Petra Becker, at that time working for SWP<sup>14</sup>, had more frequent contact with Raslan. Reuter recalled Raslan expecting to be questioned by the BKA and the German intelligence so his skills would be of use.

Wiedner concluded that Reuter's conversation with Raslan in Germany was not very fruitful. Reuter said he had many people to talk with in Germany and that their interest in Raslan was still focusing on the same issues but he did not provide much new information. Reuter said Raslan's role within the opposition was not of interest to them in their conversation as one would eventually hear about it any way. They were rather interested in information which is difficult to access and which only Raslan can provide.

Judge Kerber intervened asking whether Raslan was in contact with anyone else. Reuter said he thinks so.

Kerber asked whether Reuter heard that Raslan wanted to provide information or documents to someone. Reuter said he knows that some people were waiting for a list with detainees but he did not follow up on this. Reuter recalled that he assumed, since Raslan spoke to him and his team about damaging things [for the Syrian government] in so much detail, he expected that Raslan would also share information with other people.

Kerber wanted to know what Reuter means when talking about Raslan's "photographic memory"; whether he says that Raslan has an actual photographic memory in a narrow scientific sense or merely has a great memory for details. Reuter said he barely met interlocutors who were able to provide so much details without any file or notes. This is also why he and his researcher met with Raslan two days in a row.

Judge Wiedner asked Reuter how many hours they spoke with Raslan in total during these two days. Reuter said from morning to late evening on the first day and for half a day on the second day.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Reuter spoke to Raslan himself or with the help of a translator. Reuter said he researcher/translator also has great memory for details and immense knowledge so he asked questions as well. It was basically a three-person conversation.

***

[65 minute lunch break]

***

Prosecutor's Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge asked Reuter whether he has findings about events in March/April 2011 in Dar'a and Douma as well. Reuter said he has never been there so he has no firsthand knowledge but he knows about arrests in Douma and an increase in violence.

Klinge recalled Reuter saying that people were tortured even before 2011 but it changed in quality and quantity from 2011 on. Klinge asked how it is to rise [make a career] in 2011 with the constant presence of torture. Reuter says he knows from Iraq that if the only way to promotion is to adapt to a dictatorship, then there is no resistance (neither by the military, nor pilots, nor by the police); then there is only this one way. From 2011 on people changed sides and people were willing to forgive those people who changed sides. Reuter recalled a soldier who ran towards the protestors during a demonstration to change sides and join them. Reuter said people gave him a warm welcome and greeted him as a friend. Reuter added that not everybody in the opposition is a hero like Anwar Al-Bunni who has always been on the right side.

---

<sup>14</sup> "Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik": German foundation/think-tank acting as a consultant on security and foreign affairs related matter for the German parliament and government, EU, NATO and UN.

Klinge asked when the first desertions happened. Reuter said some time in 2011.

Klinge asked Reuter to provide names. Reuter said he does not know names but he knows of a pilot who flew his plane to Jordan and escaped that way. Reuter added he does not know about any intelligence service officers from the air force who deserted already in 2011. He said Nabil Dandal probably deserted in 2012, one person might have deserted in summer 2011. Reuter said it was all about changing sides, people wanted a different state. Reuter said army officers defected since 2011.

Klinge wanted to know whether these people joined any group after deserting. Reuter said they joined the Free Syrian Army (FSA) as soon as it was founded. However, according to Reuter the opposition was a cumulation of different groups which constantly grew and kept changing. Reuter said there was one constant - to overthrow Assad - and that they were raving about Turkey at that time [2011/12]. Reuter said deserters were proud of their rank within the regime, they just wanted a different state. That is also the reason why they recorded videos (as an initiation ritual) in which they appeared in their uniforms, publicly declared their desertion and said "Down with the regime".

Klinge asked Reuter to provide his opinion on Raslan, whether he was generally interested in his environment or not aware what was happening around him. Reuter denied the latter saying that Raslan is an extremely thoroughly observant human being, Reuter recognized that from his conversation and was also told by others. Reuter added that he does not know which things Raslan willingly ignored.

Klinge wanted to know whether Raslan made plans regarding Germany at the time Reuter met him in Jordan. Reuter said Raslan was generally optimistic but rather interested in contacting the German government regarding a change of regime in Syria.

Klinge asked Reuter about Raslan's relationship with western journalist and his main motivations for talking to them. Reuter said he spoke to them [western journalist] simply because he was able to. Reuter said Raslan and others were not able to speak at all for 30 years.

Klinge asked Reuter whether he knows other journalists who spoke with Raslan. Reuter denied, saying that what he and his team did was rather unusual; most journalists were in Idlib in 2012 conducting interviews there. However, he does not know to whom Raslan spoke later on.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker concluded that Reuter cross-checked all information regarding Raslan according to journalistic standards. Böcker then recalled a sentence from Reuter's testimony with the BKA saying that people in Syria engaged [opposed/demonstrated] within the margins of the dictatorship but it became too much at one point and went murderous, especially in the 1980s and was rather relaxed from 2000 onwards. Reuter said that there were endless rebellions at the end of the 1970s and beginning of the 1980s when Aleppo was besieged for one year. The uprising of the Muslim Brotherhood was violently shut down and 10,000 to 15,000 people were killed in the inner city. Everyone was now aware that they would be killed if opposing the government and that pilots were arrested and went missing. Reuter recalled the biography of a person whose father went missing at the air force. Reuter said this person wanted to know what happened and started researching in 2011. He was fine with everything and arranged with the regime previously, but realized in 2011 that the regime doesn't offer anything, so he started wondering what happened to his father. Reuter said when he himself was in Syria in the early 2000s there were already some deserters but they were rather free as there was only a small number of them considered to be harmless for the government.

Böcker wanted Reuter to clarify whether the fact that it was only a small number of deserters and protests was the main reason for relatively less repressions. Reuter said that the preconditions for repressions were existent within the regime but the number of demonstrations was relatively small so there were only a few killings.

Böcker recalled Reuter previously saying that if one wants to get promoted, he has to arrange with the regime and its rules and asked Reuter what one had to do to leave the position that Raslan had when he deserted in late 2012, what would be the consequences and which options one had if he wished to not get promoted but to leave. Reuter said Raslan's core family was in Houla....it would not be easy to provide a clear answer to this question. Reuter said there were suspicions on both sides [government and opposition] and one would certainly not have been able to simply resign and request pension.

Böcker asked whether a black and white picture [of government and opposition] would then be correct. Reuter said there were certainly shades of gray in ones' personality but not in the overall context. Reuter said too many people were tortured on both sides, by the opposition as well as by the government when people quit their loyalty.

Böcker asked if they paid Raslan for the interview. Reuter denied.

Böcker asked whether others [deserters] were interested in money (for interviews). Reuter denied.

Böcker wanted to know if Reuter heard from other people that Raslan requested money. Reuter denied.

Böcker wanted to talk about journalistic techniques to verify a source and asked Reuter whether Raslan's statements were coherent and corroborated by other sources and/or material or if there were limits to his coherence. Reuter said he cross-checked Raslan's statements and person as previously described. Reuter added that they had to find new corroboration for some of the things he told them as he was the only one telling them about this but that this information was plausible as they had similarities with other related stories.

Reuter asked Böcker whether he thinks that Raslan limited or made restrictions regarding his own position or whitewashed it or rather drew a proper picture. Reuter said he can confirm neither as they only spoke about his role from the uprising onwards [2011] very briefly. Reuter said they were mainly interested in him as a witness regarding orchestration of terror attacks etc. Raslan's role was therefore secondary. Reuter said they did speak about Raslan's reasons for changing sides but did not prioritize it as their research focus was different. According to Reuter it might be possible that Raslan did some whitewashing but they did not ask him about that as they preferred to use their time to talk about orchestration of terror etc.

Böcker asked whether Reuter or Petra Becker had information that Raslan was instructed by German authorities to stop talking to journalists. Reuter denied.

Böcker asked whether Becker has more information on this. Reuter denied.

Böcker asked whether Reuter has information that the German Foreign Office or the German intelligence service (BND) contacted Raslan. Reuter denied adding that one can read his books and articles to see that he had no more contact with Raslan in Germany than the one meeting he mentioned earlier and did not follow up on him. Reuter said of course he heard about Raslan going to the German police claiming that the Syrian intelligence service was observing him: Reuter said if this is true then Raslan would have been in great danger.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer recalled Reuter mentioning government-led attacks on flash mobs and asked him who exactly used gun fire. Reuter said that one could not tell as they [people that were shooting] were all wearing sneakers and camouflage clothing. Reuter further said that many times all of them [military, police, intelligence services] were mixed, even at checkpoints. The only instance in which one could tell who was shooting were instances where tanks were driving through the streets, so it had to be the military.

Scharmer wanted to know more about the distribution of competencies between the different agencies. Reuter said that if one would flee from a checkpoint, he would be shot by the intelligence service and people who refused [fled from checkpoints] were often Sunnis. The distribution of competencies between the different intelligence services varied from town to town.

Scharmer recalled Reuter saying that demonstrators defended themselves with knives etc. Reuter said that demonstrators carried knives with them at the beginning of the protests as they were often attacked and beaten up by Shabhiya, Reuter himself witnessed such an instance in August 2011 in Homs.

Scharmer wanted to know if that also happened in other places. Reuter said he was told afterwards that demonstrators started carrying weapons and to defend themselves.

Scharmer wanted to know when this development started. Reuter said it might have started in Douma already in August 2011 but in other places probably later, depending on the situation in the particular town. He said that demonstrators carrying knives and being attacked by the Shabiha was still common in Aleppo in June 2012 while at the same time it was a state of war in Homs. Reuter added that there were big demonstrations in Dara'a until 2012 due to a peaceful governor and after he was displaced, people left and went somewhere else.

Scharmer asked whether Hama was special and whether it is true to say that the more established the opposition the likelier they carried weapons. Reuter affirmed recalling a member of the opposition telling him that he admires Mahatma Ghandi but that he would already "be dead hanging on a fence". Scharmer said that might be true not only for Syria. Reuter affirmed.

Scharmer said Raslan allegedly opposed arrests and detentions. Reuter said that Raslan was in favor of arrests and detentions if there was probable cause that someone violated the law, however people were then allegedly round up in hundreds which Raslan opposed.

Defense counsel Kroker asked if, before 2011, certain state institutions were more likely to be involved in torture etc. Reuter said the air force intelligence service as well as the military intelligence service were infamous for their brutality, however it depended on the exact case and they were mainly targeting foreigners. Reuter further said that regarding brutality, these services were followed by the general intelligence directorate, the political security directorate and the police. The army was less likely to use torture.

Kroker asked whether there were possibilities of getting promoted within this system in a less brutal agency. Reuter said this was of course possible.

Kroker recalled Reuter mentioning a meeting between Raslan and Ali Mamlouk and heads of other services and asked Reuter which services/branches these people headed. Reuter said they were heads within the general intelligence directorate.

Kroker wanted to know what kind of people attended this meeting and if it was possible for a regular low-ranking soldier to attend this meeting. Reuter said that not everyone was allowed to meet with Ali Mamlouk. Reuter further explained that the explosion [reason for the meeting] happened relatively far away from the center of the general intelligence directorate in some annexes. The meeting was consequently attended by the heads of the targeted buildings.

Kroker asked if that would also include Raslan. Reuter affirmed, saying that Raslan was head of interrogation, however he does not know Raslan's exact motives for attending the meeting.

Kroker asked whether it would be realistic that a person who was allegedly neutralized and turned his back to the government attended such a meeting. Reuter said that it was exceptional circumstances so everyone whose Branch/division etc. was affected by the attack would attend such a meeting. However, both versions would be possible [meaning that Raslan was able to attend the meeting as he was in fact not neutralized].

Kroker asked whether Reuter and his team first got information regarding mass graves in 2012. Reuter said they met the first witness on this in 2013. The witness had contacts with the intelligence services and they assumed that there were graves in Tishreen. Before this conversation they only assumed that there were mass graves in Homs and later Damascus.

Plaintiff counsel Oehmichen asked Reuter whether Raslan felt bitterness due to the general suspicions towards Sunnis. Reuter said Raslan felt a professional mortification as he was no longer investigating but rather torturing and that clashes between biographies and ethnic backgrounds were increasing.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer cited one passage from one of Reuter's articles saying "they all made their careers within the dictatorship, but since the beginning of 2012 it was no longer about investigations against actual opponents of the regime, but about killing innocent civilians", and asked Reuter whether Raslan said that [beginning of 2012]. Reuter said he is not sure whether they spoke about a specific point in time as everyone was aware of the violence. Reuter said it is possible that he did not ask Raslan about a specific point in time.

Scharmer asked whether the passage he just read out was an indirect citation. Reuter said he does not remember whether they explicitly talked about the exact point in time on which the violence increased or whether they implicitly agreed on that.

Scharmer asked Reuter whether he does not remember if this is what Raslan actually said. Reuter said he remembers talking about the massacre in Raslan's hometown Houla and that the arrests and detentions started before Raslan deserted.

Scharmer wanted to know how they spoke about this. Reuter said he remembers that they did speak about it but not how.

Scharmer asked whether Reuter always has his notes at hand. Reuter said he usually has the most important ones at hand and also had them with him during his questioning by the BKA so the statements made in course of this questioning are based on the notes he took during his interview with Raslan.

Scharmer asked whether Reuter is sure about his citations saying that Raslan told him that he previously did not care about peaceful opposition being detained. Reuter said that Raslan told him that he did not have any loyalty conflicts before 2012 when things started happening which eventually led him to leave.

Scharmer concluded that Raslan did not bother about killings. Reuter affirmed, saying that Raslan stayed after all. Reuter added that Raslan explained that he was always loyal to the government until the revolution when things happened which bothered him and eventually led him to leave.

Scharmer asked whether this is a direct citation to a statement made by Raslan or Reuter's own conclusion. Reuter said it was a conclusion he made.

Scharmer wanted to know whether Raslan told the German Intelligence Service (BND) about this as well. Reuter said he only knows that he told everyone.

Scwarer wanted to know how Reuter knows. Reuter said he does not want to answer to protect his source.

Scharmer asked whether Reuter is sure it is true [that Raslan spoke to everyone about what happened since the beginning of the revolution and his reasons for deserting]. Reuter affirmed.

Scharmer asked whether Raslan told Reuter about his bitterness regarding the increasing negative importance of his ethnicity. Reuter affirmed.

Scharmer asked whether Reuter has reason to question this statement. Reuter denied, saying that they heard the same stories from other Sunnis.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker intervened by saying that the answer to this question falls under Reuter's right to refuse an answer in order to protect his source but that he at least wants to ask whether there is a source within the BND saying that Raslan was at the BND. Reuter affirmed.

Plaintiff counsel Mohammed asked whether Reuter has handwritten notes from his interview with Raslan. Reuter affirmed.

Mohammed asked whether the court can have access to them. Reuter denied.

Plaintiff counsel Schulz asked Reuter whether he tried to rebut Raslan's statements. Reuter affirmed, adding that he would be the first to say that things were even more brutal and more people have been killed.

Schulz wanted to know more about the interactions between the intelligence services. Reuter said the distribution of competencies between the intelligence services remains unclear and there are constants fights about who is entitled to do certain things. For example, Hafez Makhoulf would be more powerful than his mere rank allowed him to be.

Schulz wanted to know whether it is true that Bashar Al-Assad makes all decisions himself. Reuter denied, explaining that earlier Bashar's decisions were largely based on suggestions of long-serving generals, later on his mother became more important. Reuter said one of his sources confirmed that Bashar Al-Assad heavily relied on what his mother said. Reuter concluded that Bashar Al-Assad is not the brain of the regime.

Schulz asked Reuter to describe the architecture of the Syrian intelligence services. Reuter said that the concept of internal competition within intelligence services as seen in Syria is a relatively common concept as one can see from the Nazi regime and Iraq under Hussein.

Schulz said that the court translators as well as Reuter himself constantly used the term "Staatssicherheit" when talking about the general intelligence directorate and asked whether the two would be similar regarding competencies, structure etc. Reuter said the translation would be correct however "Erich Mielke would turn in his grave seeing so much competition between different services"

[meaning that the Staatssicherheit, the intelligence service in the former German Democratic republic, had more far-reaching competencies than the Syrian general intelligence directorate].

Reuter was dismissed as witness and expert.

The proceedings adjourned at 2:15 pm.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 16

Hearing Dates: October 27, 28, 29, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 38 – October 27, 2020

- Garance Le Caisne, a 54-year-old French journalist testified about her meeting with the former Syrian military photographer “Caesar” and provided details on the origin, content and structure of the “Caesar files.” Based on her personal conversations with Caesar, she gave insight into the Syrian government’s practice of documenting the corpses of tortured civilians.

Trial Day 39 – October 28, 2020

- During a brief session, the judges read out loud the translation of a 30-page report on the evidentiary value of the “Caesar files” commissioned by Carter-Ruck solicitors in 2014. The report puts forth a facial assessment of the Caesar photos.

Trial Day 40 – October 29, 2020

- Deußing, a 37-year-old criminal chief inspector from the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA), told the court about his interview with Sami, a crucial member of the Caesar Files Group who helped Caesar leak the pictures and escape from Syria. Deußing also presented on the technical aspects of the BKA’s analysis of the Caesar files.

Day 38 of Trial – October 27, 2020

The hearing began at 9:45am with 11 spectators and 5 members of the press in the audience.<sup>2</sup> Ms. Köhler served as the translator from French to German for the witness, Garance Le Caisne, who testified in French.

Judge Kerber said that the court summoned [name redacted] for the second time. He could not testify in court due to time clashes. Kerber asked [name redacted] counsel, Bahns, about his client’s reasons for not coming this time. Bahns said he had difficulties reaching his client who had changed his number. His client did not want to say where he is currently living, allegedly in Sweden. Bahns further said he told his client to respond to the summons and appear in court on 11 and 12 November because he risks not being heard at all.

Kerber said hearings scheduled for 11 and 12 November will consequently be cancelled as the witness will not appear, as well as due to the current pandemic.

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: No accredited Arabic-speaking journalists requested access to translation.

Testimony of Garance Le Caisne

Admonitions were read out to Le Caisne, a French journalist who wrote the book “Operation Caesar: At the Heart of the Syrian Death Machine” about the “Caesar files”. She was informed of her rights as an expert witness and her right to refuse to provide evidence to protect her journalistic sources.

Judge Kerber’s Questioning

Judge Kerber wanted to know who Le Caisne is, how she got in contact with the Caesar files, Caesar himself, and Caesar’s friends. Kerber asked her to tell her story. Le Caisne said she is a freelance journalist and has always worked on the MENA region. She asked how much detail she should provide.

Kerber asked her how many times she has been to the Near East, if she speaks Arabic and about the focus of her work. Le Caisne said she went to Egypt as a freelance journalist in 1992 after she finished her education, together with her future husband. She said she lived in Egypt, Palestine and the Near East but already spoke some Arabic before that as she always had an interest in the Near East. Le Caisne said she did a tour of the Near East in 2000 and wrote about migrant children in French suburbs for 10 years. In 2012 she started working for the French newspaper “Journal du Dimanche” and went to Tunisia “after Mohamed Bouazizi” who started the Arab Spring in Tunisia, Libya and Syria. Le Caisne said she watched the revolution in 2011 from Paris and went to Damascus in 2012 with a fake name on her passport. She went to the “liberated zones” in the north of Syria, as the revolutionaries called that area. She then travelled to Aleppo a couple times in 2013/14. “Then Caesar came”.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know during which months Le Caisne travelled to Syria in 2011/12. Le Caisne said she was there in January and February 2012. It was hard to enter the country as a western journalist but she managed to get in with a fake name on her passport.

Judge Kerber asked how Le Caisne got in contact with Caesar. Le Caisne said that there was an international press conference in May 2014 at which the members of the Caesar files group were introduced and presented the pictures. Le Caisne conducted an interview on that occasion. Her publisher called her the day after to ask her whether she would be willing to meet Caesar [the translator said meet Caesar “again” which was most likely a translation mistake]. Le Caisne said she had been interested in the situation in Syria for several years at this point and it seemed to her that a meeting with Caesar could be proof of what is happening there. She said she saw only destroyed cities during her visits to Syria and, with the help of Caesar, wanted to understand this destruction. Le Caisne said there were a lot of pictures circulating in the media of suffering people and destroyed cities, but these pictures were actually only the surface of what was really going on. She said there were no pictures of people being tortured at all. She recalled a visit to Aleppo with a photographer where she witnessed unarmed people in civil districts but underground bakeries (otherwise they would be bombed) and experienced 3 bombs within 30 minutes that exploded close to her. Le Caisne said that if one sees how people are torn up by bombs without a possibility of burying them, then one understands that this is a policy of exterminating people and every memory of these atrocities. She added that there is still a lot which was not visible and that destroying a city is the same as destroying a human being. She said that her stay in Aleppo in 2014 “was key”. She felt a lot of anger inside which helped her to find Caesar.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Note from the trial monitor: The translator seemed to get confused with the order of events a couple times and kept confusing 2011 and 2012. It is likely that this sentence is a translation mistake.

Kerber asked with whom Le Caisne conducted the interview. Le Caisne said she conducted the interview with Caesar in Aleppo. Kerber interrupted clarifying that she meant the press conference which Le Caisne mentioned at the beginning of her testimony. Le Caisne said she interviewed [name redacted] at this press conference.

Kerber wanted to know how things proceeded after Le Caisne's assignment [to interview Caesar]. Le Caisne confirmed that she was tasked with interviewing Caesar and that she started searching for him in the fall of 2014. She asked [name redacted] who was her most important contact and the head of a Syrian movement. He presented the files together with Caesar. Le Caisne said she met both men and that she knew that many other journalists wanted to meet Caesar. She translated three of articles into Arabic so Caesar could see her work. She said that [name redacted] told her that he cried reading her articles and that he thought that Le Caisne and Caesar would get along very well. He also told Le Caisne that he would get back to her within one week. Le Caisne said she made clear that she did not want to write a book about Caesar himself, but rather about the detention facilities in Syria. She said the book would not be without Caesar, however not about him only. She said she got permission to meet with him around September/October 2014 and then worked for some time without asking again for a meeting with Caesar. Le Caisne said she then met with [name redacted] regarding Saudi Arabia and went to Turkey to visit the photo archives of the Caesar group. In Turkey, she met with [name redacted] and [name redacted]. Le Caisne said she then asked for a meeting with Caesar in January [2015], however there was silence for weeks. At first, she did not understand why, but then she realized that Caesar and [name redacted] were no longer in contact. She said that it was actually not only Caesar, but two people. She said Sami is a pseudonym and that Caesar was only able to do what he did with the help of Sami. In January 2015, it was [name redacted] and [name redacted] on one hand and Caesar and Sami on the other. She realized that [name redacted] was not able to organize a meeting with Caesar. However, she got help from a person whom she met in Syria who was in contact with Sami. Le Caisne said she was then in direct contact with Sami who she also met several times together with a translator.

Kerber asked whether Le Caisne met Sami face to face or via Skype. Le Caisne said that they met via Skype without the camera on and that she only took notes instead of recording due to security reasons. She further said that after a couple of weeks, Sami called her to tell her that Caesar was worried because there were so many people and prosecutors who made him concerned.<sup>4</sup>

Kerber told Le Caisne that it is fine if she does not remember certain things, however she should let the court know. Le Caisne said that Caesar was worried that he had to testify and that he was very honest to Sami about that. Le Caisne said that Caesar did not like certain things and that she told them that the police will not come to arrest him but perhaps one day he will have to testify. She said that she heard Caesar's voice behind Sami.

Kerber asked whether they spoke via Skype with the camera off or on. Le Caisne explained that they spoke via Skype since back then they thought that Skype was secure.

Kerber asked when Le Caisne first heard Caesar's voice. Le Caisne said it was in March 2015. She remembered that it was around the anniversary of the revolution. Le Caisne said Caesar thanked her and confirmed that it was him. They met late on that day and she was together with [a translator]. She said that she was afraid that she was wrong and did not knew what to do. Le Caisne said she was in a bubble. She was aware that this meeting was important, but Sami already told her a lot about how she had to be mindful of what questions to ask Caesar so she would not scare him and give him the feeling of being interrogated. Le Caisne said she did not prepare many questions in advance. She recalled that she was together with her translator, and that they were a bit scared. She said they introduced themselves and tried to just let Caesar talk and tell his story. However, he did not like that and asked her to put questions. Le Caisne said she quickly tried to come up with questions and asked him a lot. Caesar felt as if he was interrogated, which was the end of their call. Le Caisne said they met for several days, every one or two days, and described Caesar as a simple and honest man, which she liked. She said people sometimes try to portray themselves as heroes, but not Caesar. Le Caisne said it was a working atmosphere, he spoke and she took notes. She said she sometimes felt his fear. From time to time, he made sketches but he did not want her to have a sheet of paper with his handwriting. She then met with survivors and continued her research.

<sup>4</sup> Note from the trial monitor: there were some serious translation issues which first caused the court to assume that Le Caisne was worried herself, however it turned out that she was directly quoting Caesar.

Kerber asked what Caesar told Le Caisne about his work, how he got in possession of the pictures and what was Sami's position. Le Caisne said that Caesar told her that he had been a military photographer in the center of Damascus since before the revolution. His job was to create files of soldiers who died in car accidents, drowned or committed suicide. Caesar had to take photos of the "crimes scene" or the place of events before going back to his office where he printed the photos and wrote a report for the military police. Le Caisne said Caesar liked his jobs as it served justice.<sup>5</sup> Le Caisne said that when the revolution began, one of the photographers had to take pictures of corpses, namely civilians who were shot. When the photographer came to Caesar's office and told him about that, Caesar realized that the corpses were demonstrators. Le Caisne said that happened in Dar'a and that the photographer was very agitated before it became their new routine. The photographers were called to the hospital in Tishreen, the headquarters of the military police. Le Caisne said that the corpses of civilians had names on them. Later, they were identified by numbers only.

Kerber asked whether Caesar told Le Caisne when [the policy of identifying corpses with numbers instead of names] changed. Le Caisne could not remember. She added that [Caesar and the other photographer] worked in Tishreen Hospital every morning, the hospital where Bashar Al-Assad once worked. Le Caisne said that many corpses were brought to hospitals where they were stored in refrigerators in the mortuaries, which was where the photographers took their pictures. At some point, the mortuary was too small, so the corpses were stored in the hallways. Le Caisne said that when the corpses arrived, they had two numbers. One was supposedly the detainee's number. Underneath the detainee's number was the number of the intelligence service branch (e.g. 248, 215, 225, 251). According to Le Caisne, the forensic specialist from the military allocated a third number to catalogize the corpses. The forensic expert had a note pad in which he noted these numbers, as well as the characteristics of the dead person, such as height, hair color, scars and reason for death. Reasons for death would say, for example, heart attack even though the corpses showed signs of different reasons for death. Le Caisne said that some of the corpses had no eyes or red marks on their throat. Some showed signs of starvation and chemical burns. She said amongst the corpses were kids as well as old people. Le Caisne further explained that at some point they moved from Tishreen Hospital to Mezzeh Hospital as there were so many corpses that there was not enough space in the hallways of Tishreen Hospital. Mezzeh Hospital was more practical since it had a wing left from the old hospital and garages. Le Caisne said that it was easier to hide the corpses in these garages, but that in 2012 people living in <sup>5</sup> Note from the trial monitor: There were again some translation issues from French to German as to whether the witness said "served justice" or "served judiciary".

Mezzeh started complaining about the smell because there were so many corpses. The corpses were piled up and every morning, Caesar and his colleagues took pictures of them without asking any questions. They were always accompanied by one guard. They took several photos of each corpse (3-4): face, bust and entire body. After that, they went back to their office. The corpses were marked with two numbers, which were written on sticky tape of bad quality with a marker. The forensic experts either attached a card with another number to the corpse, put the card on the corpse or held it for the picture. The number of the forensic expert was always shown in the picture, the counting system went from 1-10 on the first day and continued on the second day. It always went until 5,000 and then continued with 1/b2, 1/b3...until b5,000 so it was always counted from Arabic 1 until Arabic 5,000.

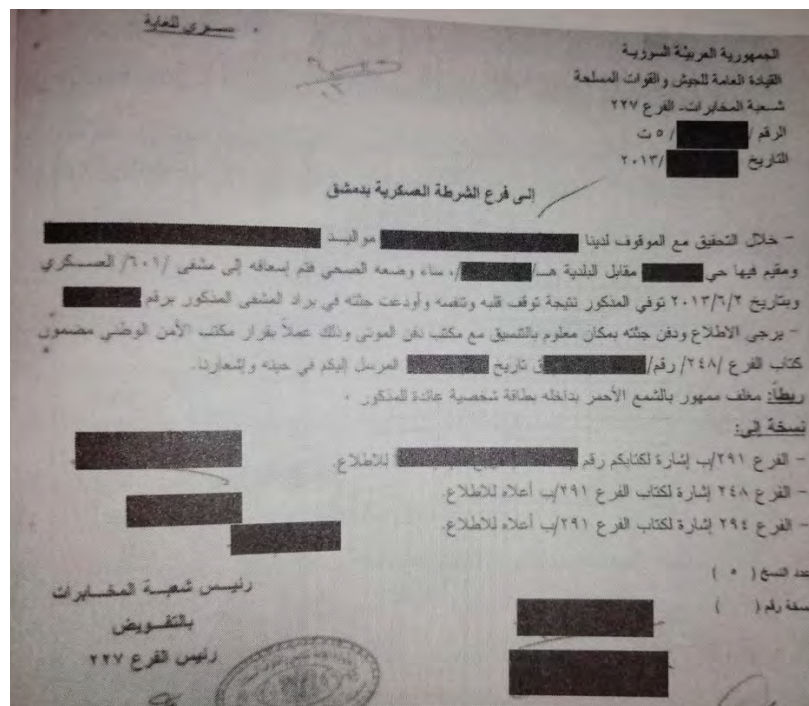

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether the number from the forensics experts was per corpse or per picture. Le Caisne said it was per corpse.

Wiedner further asked whether it was written on paper. Le Caisne confirmed adding that it was also noted in a notepad which was stored in the forensics expert's office. She further explained that after taking the pictures, the photographers went back to their office to print the photos. There was a form which was filled out and the photos were attached to this form. Le Caisne said she could not remember what exactly these forms looked like, but she could check in her notes.

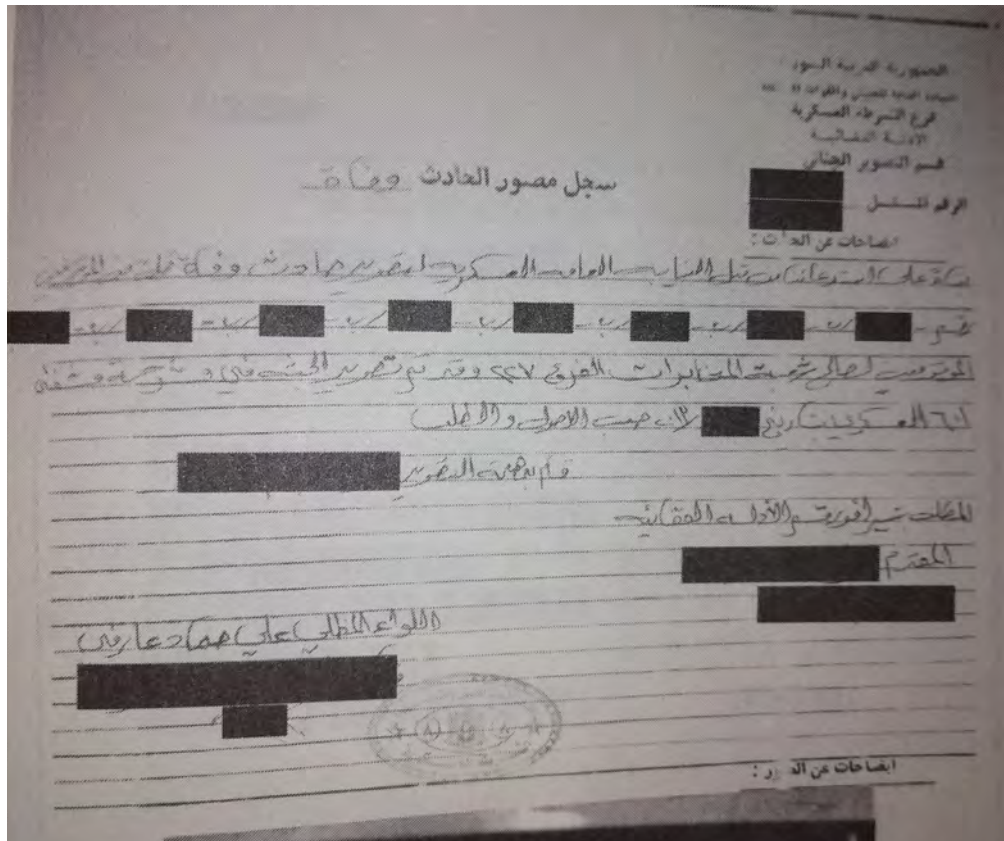

Judge Kerber asked what kind of forms were used. Le Caisne said the forms were numbered and photos were attached.

Kerber asked whether the court could have a look at one of these forms. Le Caisne confirmed.

The judges visually inspected Annexes 1 and 3 from Le Caisne's book.

Judge Kerber asked one of the court translators to translate the document:

Protocol

Photograph death/decease [written in handwriting]

On request by the military prosecution in order to photograph a decease [numbers and abbreviations]

On behalf of Branch 227 of the intelligence service the corpse was photographed at the military hospital 601 on [day]/[month]/2013.

Fulfilled accordingly and as order by [name]

Principal: taking of evidence

Syrian Arab Republic
General Commander of the Military Military Police Division
[...]
Division of Criminalistic Photography

Kerber decided that it was sufficient to inspect only one of the two annexes.

Wiedner asked from where Le Caisne got this document and if she got it from Caesar. Le Caisne affirmed saying that she saw a picture of it.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker intervened asking whether he could ask a question regarding the document which was just shown in court. Judge Kerber affirmed.

Böcker asked Le Caisne whether she got the picture [of the document] from Caesar. Le Caisne affirmed.

Böcker further asked whether Caesar took a photo of the document. Le Caisne affirmed.

Böcker then wanted to know whether Le Caisne got the picture of the document taken by Caesar. Le Caisne affirmed.

Böcker had a question for the court translators as he was uncertain who ordered the documentation of corpses: the public prosecutor, Branch 227 or the military prosecutor. One of the court translators read the first line of the document: on the order of the military prosecutor.

Le Caisne intervened saying that it is difficult to read the document, but that she had a translation with her. Judge Kerber said Le Caisne should read out the translation [translated from French to German by the Ms. Köhler] and the court translators should check whether it is correct.

Le Caisne read:

Details regarding the instance: ordered by the general military prosecutor to document the event of death. Detainee No. #. Detained by Branch 227 of the intelligence service. Pictures from the mortuary of hospital 601 requested 2013 (exact date filled in by hand). Signed by the representative for judiciary evidence (name redacted), paratrooper of the military police.

One of the court translators added that the document said 'paratrooper lieutenant colonel' before the signature and 'Major General Ali' on the left side. The other court translator added that the document said the pictures were taken in the autopsy hall of the hospital [not the mortuary as translated].

Plaintiff counsel Dr. Oehmichen intervened saying that the translation would be too complicated and prone to mistakes. Judge Kerber said that the judges made a thorough assessment of the pros and cons of different translation techniques and that it made the most sense to use this technique [Ms. Köhler as translator for the witness translating from French to German and vice versa and the court translator for the German to Arabic translation].

Böcker asked Le Caisne whether the year (2013) was in the document and the exact date had to be filled in. Le Caisne affirmed explaining that these forms were pre-printed and already used before the revolution. This routine was simply continued. Le Caisne further added that in the fourth line of the document, it says 2013 but the exact date and name would be redacted.

Böcker asked who made the redactions. Le Caisne said they [she, her publisher, Caesar and Sami] tried to redact as much as possible explaining that nowadays if someone in Syria recognizes a relative in the Caesar files, it means that the person in the picture is a terrorist and his entire family is considered terrorists as well. Le Caisne said that many people recognized their relatives but did not dare to tell anyone. She said that the cousin of a Syrian friend of hers recognized her husband in one of the pictures. Her husband never participated in demonstrations, but was arrested and tortured. Le Caisne said her friend's cousin lived in Dar'a and when she recognized her husband in the Caesar files, she called her friend in France using a Jordanian sim-card.

Böcker wanted to know whether the redactions refer to dead people. Le Caisne affirmed saying that the redactions include the number of the forensic experts and the number of the detainee. She added that somewhere in the archives of the regime one can find the names attached to these numbers.

Böcker asked who made the redactions. Le Caisne said "we" together with her publisher.

Wiedner asked Le Caisne to explain Caesar's course of action. Le Caisne explained that Caesar and his colleagues took pictures every day, then went back to their office where they had to fill out the documents. At the beginning, there was one document per corpse, however since the beginning of 2012, the number of corpses increased, so they had to use one form for several corpses with the relevant photos attached. These forms were then sent to the military police. Le Caisne said that the workload constantly increased. The pictures were sorted by the relevant branch of the intelligence services. She said that the corpses in Tishreen Hospital were hurt and not always sorted. The photographers took the pictures quickly, so initially they were not always in a certain order. The pictures were then put in order based on the relevant branch of the intelligence services, as well as the number given by the forensic experts. For example, there was a pile for 215, 225, 248, air force [المخابرات الجوية] (which had no number) and 251.

Wiedner said he heard that Le Caisne cannot remember one of the numbers. Le Caisne said every branch of the intelligence services has a number, however, the air force intelligence service is simply called "Jawiya" [الجوية].

Kerber wanted to know how Caesar reacted to his work. Le Caisne said that at first Caesar did not believe what others told him [about the corpses being civilians]. She said that Caesar then saw the corpses with his own eyes. From what she understood, it was really difficult for Caesar to show emotions because it was a regime of terror against all people. Le Caisne said she worked in Syria for a long time and still cannot imagine such horror. She said one is constantly worried about his family and she believes that Caesar was frightened and lost. Le Caisne said that when Caesar first saw the pictures [of the civilian corpses] he was scared and wanted to talk to Sami. She said Sami was an engineer with connections to the revolution and was much more involved in the revolution than Caesar. Le Caisne further explained that Caesar wanted to defect right away, but Sami convinced him to stay. Caesar was in a dilemma: If he stayed, he would be a complicit, if he left, his family would be in danger. Le Caisne said she thinks that Sami pushed Caesar to spread the pictures. Le Caisne said Sami wanted to help all the families, which is an important aspect of the Caesar files. She said that the people in the pictures only have numbers and names. They simply disappeared. Le Caisne said Syria is a country of absentees. She said people feel powerless when their family member is missing. It is like a black hole that encompasses more than just fear. She said that many people do not talk about their missing relatives out of fear. When someone is arrested, he is considered a terrorist. Le Caisne further explained that the pictures from the Caesar files came from detention facilities, which are black holes. If one is referred from a detention facility to a prison, he is lucky since it means that he re-appears. If one is in a prison, he still has a name and his family can request a visit or death certificate with the military police. In a detention facility, there is simply nothing. Le Caisne said Sami and Caesar wanted to show the pictures to the world and show the families what happened. Families who are able to recognize a relative in the pictures are lucky because it indicated that the person died fast. After months or years in a detention facility, people become unrecognizable. At the beginning, Sami told Caesar to stay. She thinks that Sami was aware of the evidentiary value of the pictures. With these pictures, the regime documented its own atrocities. Under Hafez Al-Assad, there were also many dead people, but no pictures. Under Bashar Al-Assad, there are pictures. Le Caisne said that this circumstance led Sami to convince Caesar to stay for around two more years.

Kerber wanted to know what exactly Sami and Caesar did with the pictures. Le Caisne said there was a USB stick with copies of the pictures. Caesar had access to the computer where the pictures were stored. He hid the stick in his belt or socks. Le Caisne said Sami was able to go home after work every evening and was travelling back and forth between his home and workplace every day. Le Caisne said Caesar gave the USB stick to Sami who then archived the pictures. This practice went on for one and a half years. She added that one has to understand that Syria significantly changed. At first, there was a peaceful demonstration, then the protests were violently squashed. Demonstrations became more and more violent. Contrary to what happened in Libya where there was one front, there were different groups in Syria. Le Caisne said some districts were controlled by the Free Syrian Army,<sup>6</sup> while some were controlled by Islamic groups.

Kerber asked whether Le Caisne meant the Free Syrian Army or the Syrian Army. Le Caisne said she meant the Free Syrian Army. She further explained that Caesar's daily commute home from work was difficult when certain districts were controlled by the opposition. According to Le Caisne, Caesar felt that he was working for the right thing. Le Caisne said that some people from Caesar's office defected. She added that the revolution was more about social and economic factors and not so much about ethnicity.<sup>7</sup> Many members of the military who were part of ethnic groups [fled] and the majority of the remaining military police were Alawites. Caesar felt more and more alone and there were less and less Sunnis. At some point, Caesar was asked to train someone, an Alawite. Le Caisne said things became more difficult for Caesar. The idea was to balance the number of pictures and the threat they posed. The more pictures, the higher the threat.

Kerber asked whether Sami or Caesar had the idea to leave. Le Caisne did not know.

Kerber asked where the pictures were when Sami and Caesar left. Le Caisne said Sami had all the pictures. Caesar was taken out of the country. He was entrusted to members of the opposition every 50 kilometers and was taken to southern Syria where he waited a month, hidden in a truck, then left the country. She said that Sami left the country through official channels and that the pictures were brought out of the country by a third person.

***

[15-minute break in proceedings]

***

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Wiedner wanted to narrow the time frame and recalled La Caisne statement that the corpses started to belong to civilians in March 2011. Le Caisne affirmed.

Wiedner asked when Caesar turned to Sami and who then started his "work" [copying and archiving pictures]. Le Caisne said she did not know the exact day but it was in the spring of 2011.

Wiedner wanted to know if they started copying pictures onto the USB stick right away or whether they started to do this later. Le Caisne said she did not know. She added that the copies were not very structured. The entire process took place under fear and there was no plan as to when to copy certain pictures. Le Caisne said she believes that some pictures were duplicated adding that one has to know that they were “amateurs” not professionals, so she did not expect to get a precise copy or professional work.

<sup>6</sup> Note from the trial monitor: The translator said "Syrian Army" instead of "Free Syrian Army", as the witness actually said. This led to some confusion, as to why presiding judge Kerber intervened.

<sup>7</sup> Note from the trial monitor: The translator said "ideologies" which was apparently a mistake, as the witness went on to talk about different ethnicities.

Wiedner summarized that they consequently started copying pictures in 2011. Le Caisne affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether it was spring or summer. Le Caisne did not know, but it was 2011.

Wiedner asked whether it went on for around 2 years. Le Caisne affirmed saying it lasted until summer 2013.

Wiedner asked whether this was when Caesar defected. Le Caisne said she thought so but had no evidence.

Wiedner asked whether Caesar told Le Caisne about his daily routine. She mentioned that he took pictures in the morning and then returned to his office. Caesar got a call every morning around 9am to come to the hospital to take pictures of corpses. At the beginning, there were relatively few corpses so he was done quickly. However, the number of corpses increased, so it took longer to take pictures. He went to Mezzeh Hospital and Tishreen Hospital in the north, close to the military police. Generally, he took pictures in the morning and then went back to the office.

Wiedner wanted to know when the number of corpses increased. Le Caisne said it was in 2012 but she was not sure whether it was spring or summer. She added that decrees were issued by the regime to empty cells.

Wiedner asked what kind of decrees. Le Caisne said she learned of the decrees from other sources [not Caesar or Sami].

Wiedner wanted to know when these decrees were issued. Le Caisne said 2012.

Wiedner wanted to know what hospital 601 stands for. Le Caisne explained that 601 is a code for the hospital in Mezzeh, a district in Damascus.

Wiedner asked how the pictures were taken. Le Caisne said the pictures were taken by a digital camera but she did not remember which model, maybe “DX50”. The pictures were then transferred to a computer from which Caesar copied them onto a USB stick that he hid in his belt or socks. Caesar then returned to his home district where Sami lived as well. He gave the stick to Sami who then further processed the pictures.

Wiedner asked about the size of the single files and wanted to know whether they were compressed or complete. Le Caisne said high definition (HD) pictures were given to Sami. He made two copies: one HD and one of lower quality to transfer them abroad via internet. However, she was not sure to where the pictures were transferred. A hard disk with HD copies was then smuggled outside of Syria by a third person.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the pictures were already of lower quality during Caesars work. Le Caisne said the lower quality pictures were sent via internet.

Wiedner asked when that happened. Le Caisne did not know.

Wiedner asked how they proceeded with the pictures after Caesar fled. Le Caisne said that Sami kept the pictures, however they were also sent to the Syrian National Council (SNC) via [name redacted]. Le Caisne further explained that Sami and Caesar were never in contact with the SNC. However, politicians with connections to the opposition were supposed to show the pictures to the world. Sami and Caesar went to Qatar. The country financed a commission of inquiry (Carter-Ruck solicitors) to write a report on the files. That happened at the end of 2013/beginning of 2014.

Wiedner asked Le Caisne whether the names Imran and Zachariah [codenames] sound familiar to her. Le Caisne affirmed saying that the two of them were in Turkey where the SNC has its headquarters. She further added that Sami and Caesar left Syria on different routes but rejoined in Turkey with Imran and Zachariah. Imran and Zachariah tried to document the 53,000 pictures by classifying them in order to say how many detainees came from each branch, e.g. 225.

Wiedner wanted to know whether they also considered the causes of death. Le Caisne explained that Zachariah worked as a pediatricist and tried to sort the pictures by injury and classify them by types of injuries.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the relationship between Imran and Zachariah and Sami and Caesar. Le Caisne said Imran and Zachariah were in contact with [name redacted] and met with the SNC. She was not sure whether Caesar met with the SNC.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Le Caisne met with Imran and Zachariah. Le Caisne affirmed adding that it was in November 2015 in Turkey.

Wiedner asked whether they met in person. Le Caisne affirmed explaining that they met at an office for two days. They showed her incredible things and she was able to work with them for two days. She said she learned a lot from them, like how the regime functioned, what the numbers (on the corpses) meant and from where exactly the pictures came.

Wiedner asked how Le Caisne knew where the pictures came from and if Imran and Zachariah told her. Le Caisne said she assumes that the pictures were disseminated somewhere. The two of them were the first people she questioned about the files and Caesar, about the use of excel sheets for classification purposes and about their story. She said that today, she would ask questions, but at that point, she did not think about certain things which are now obvious to her.

Wiedner asked whether Caesar told Le Caisne about his motivation and why he took pictures of corpses in the first place. Le Caisne said it is not entirely clear to her and explained that in Syria, everyone did his job and produced reports without knowing why or what the person next to him was doing. She said that Caesar did his job without exactly knowing why but she has three possible explanations for it. First, it was some kind of routine. He took pictures of dead soldiers before which still continued and in addition also took pictures of the corpses of civilians. Second, it is a fact that the regime archives a lot. One could compare the Syrian regime to the "Staatssicherheit".<sup>8</sup> Le Caisne explained that the Syrian regime learned to archive basically everything. Third, pictures of corpses allowed subordinates to show their superiors that they did a good job. Le Caisne added that it is fascinating how obvious the atrocities of the regime are, but at the same time not at all. Since the corpses only have numbers instead of names it is easy for the regime to claim that people are not actually Syrian. The regime archived everything while at the same time hiding everything.

<sup>8</sup> "Staatssicherheit" was the intelligence service in the German Democratic Republic, endowed with far-reaching competences regarding surveillance of civil society and detailed documentation.

Wiedner recalled that the Caesar files include 53,000 pictures. He asked Le Caisne how many dead people they include. Le Caisne said the files consist of three [categories of persons]: detainees, soldiers and civilians who are dead but have not been detained. There are about 25,000 pictures of detainees.

Plaintiff counsel Kroker intervened saying that from the initial French testimony of Le Caisne, he understood a different number.

Judge Kerber asked to wait for clarification between the translator and Le Caisne. Le Caisne checked her notes and clarified that the first group (detainees) includes 28,707 pictures of 6,786 detainees.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know how many corpses the other groups comprise. Le Caisne said the second group (soldiers) includes 1,036 people and the third group (non-detained civilians) includes 4,025 people.

Wiedner wanted to know which path the pictures took before they were made public, what happened in Qatar and why the pictures were connected to Qatar in the first place. Le Caisne said Qatar supported the opposition in Syria and financed a commission of inquiry, namely David M. Crane and Desmond de Silva, to inspect the pictures.

Wiedner asked why these people were paid to inspect the pictures. Le Caisne said they are both former prosecutors at the Special Court for Sierra Leone and experts in evaluating evidence. She said they were accompanied by forensic experts to examine “Caesar’s unaffectedness” and authenticate the pictures. Le Caisne said they issued their report in January 2014.

Wiedner asked Le Caisne about the British law firm Carter-Ruck solicitors. Le Caisne said this law firm hired David M. Crane and Desmond de Silva and paid for everything together with Qatar.

Wiedner asked how the pictures were presented to the public. Le Caisne said there was a meeting at the French foreign ministry in January 2014 attended by a “core group” who supported the Syrian opposition and approximately ten foreign ministers from France, Germany, U.S., Turkey, Jordan, Italy, Saudi Arabia and Egypt. A group within the SNC provided a video presenting the pictures. Le Caisne added that Laurent Fabius [French foreign minister at the time] agreed to make the pictures available to certain authorities. She also said that the pictures were put on table during peace talks in Geneva by Ahmad Jarba and representatives of Carter-Ruck. CNN, the Guardian and others reported on that.

Wiedner asked when Le Caisne last had contact with Sami and Caesar (in person), but noted that, as a journalist, she has the right not to answer.<sup>9</sup> Le Caisne said she prefers not to answer.

Wiedner recalled Le Caisne saying that Caesar and Sami were afraid. He asked if they are still in fear. Le Caisne said Sami “is afraid as well”.

Wiedner asked whether Le Caisne was able to ask Sami and Caesar about their fear. As far as she understood, they are afraid.

Judge Kerber said that the senate will look at a selection of pictures, on defense counsel Böcker’s request clarifying that they will inspect a random selection of pictures

<sup>9</sup> Note from the trial monitor: There were some serious difficulties arising from the French-German translation. Judge Kerber had to intervene, requesting the translator to only translate what the judges are saying and not interrupting anyone.

***

[65-minute lunch break]

***

Judge Kerber said they will now inspect some pictures, adding that she does not expect Le Caisne to recognize any of them, but asks her to say if they look similar to the pictures from the Caesar files and if it is likely that they belong to the Caesar files.

***

[a total of eight pictures were shown without further explanation]

***

On the last of the eight pictures, Kerber said that the photo is a bit different from the previous ones as the person is wrapped in a plastic bag. Kerber then asked Le Caisne if she thinks that these pictures are from the Caesar files or if she even recognizes any of them. Le Caisne said the pictures look very similar to the pictures from the Caesar files.

Kerber asked why they look similar. Le Caisne said they look similar due to the numbers on the corpses and the indication of the branch. They also have white cards with numbers from the forensic expert written on them as well as plastic bags in which some of the corpses are wrapped. She said that the people in the pictures shown in court experienced the same atrocities as the people in the pictures from the Caesar files.

Prosecutor's Questioning

Klinge asked Le Caisne if Caesar told her what he expected from the publication of the files. Le Caisne said Caesar was naive<sup>10</sup> to think that the publication of the pictures would stop the crimes from happening. She said Caesar assumed that when the crimes would be obviously visible, the international community would stop the crimes.

Klinge concluded that Caesar's expectations have not yet been fulfilled. Le Caisne affirmed.

Klinge asked Le Caisne how Caesar feels today. Le Caisne said it is difficult for her to speak on his behalf, adding that over the five years, he wavered from hopeful to desperate.

Klinge asked whether Caesar's statements and information are plausible. [After a rather long break,] Le Caisne explained that she saw the pictures before she met Caesar. She also saw the work of colleagues and experts about the matter who relied on Syrian NGO's. When she met Caesar, it felt as if the puzzle fit together. Since she already met two people who knew Caesar before she actually met him, she and Caesar quickly developed trust in each other and her doubts lessened.

Klinge recalled Le Caisne saying that the corpses were first stored and photographed in Tishreen Hospital 607 before it changed to Mezzeh Hospital 601. Le Caisne affirmed saying that they first took pictures in Tishreen but at some point, the corpses were taken to Mezzeh because there were simply too many and not enough space to store them in Tishreen. There were too many people in Tishreen while the hospital in Mezzeh was not open to public.

<sup>10</sup> Note from the trial monitor: The German-French translator said "frivolously" even though everyone in court could hear that Le Caisne used the French word "naïve" which can be directly translated to German as well as English.

Klinge wanted to know when the hospitals were changed. Le Caisne could not remember.

Klinge asked whether the photos were taken in other places as well. Le Caisne said photos were also taken in Harasta Hospital, adding that she has no further information on that particular hospital.

Klinge asked whether the pictures from the Caesar files were modified. Le Caisne said she does not know.

Klinge wanted to know why Zachariah, Imran and Sami categorized the pictures. Le Caisne said they did so to help outsiders better understand the pictures, including the injuries to corpses and the origin of the pictures.

Klinge asked whether the names of the files were changed. Le Caisne said she does not know.

Klinge wanted to know to whom the pictures were passed and to whom Caesar passed the pictures. Le Caisne said she is not entirely sure who got the pictures. According to her, [name redacted] got a copy and several copies were passed to different war crimes units: in France, one to you (Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General) and (some) to the FBI.

Klinge asked whether Liechtenstein also received a copy. Le Caisne affirmed saying that [name redacted] passed a copy to Liechtenstein to protect himself.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Böcker recalled Le Caisne talking about detention facilities and prisons. He wanted to know what she meant by the detention facility (fara') [فرع]. Le Caisne explained that there are four intelligence services in Syria, which are divided into branches. Some of them are represented everywhere. Some of them are for specific regions only. If someone gets arrested by one of the intelligence services, he gets transferred to a detention facility within a certain branch and he disappears. Someone can receive a "sentence" and be transferred to a "prison", either civilian (Adra) [عدرا] or military (Sidnaya) [صيدنايا]. Le Caisne said once one is in prison, he is back on the radar and can be released from prison. A court can acquit someone who can then be arrested again by a different intelligence service and disappear again.

Böcker wanted to clarify that if someone goes to a detention facility for a short time and is then transferred to a prison, that the person is lucky. Le Caisne affirmed, saying that this is not the case if someone gets arrested by the general intelligence service.

Judge Wiedner asked when Sami and Caesar left Syria. Le Caisne said they left in summer 2013.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Kroker recalled Le Caisne saying that Caesar worked at Al-Mezzeh Hospital where corpses were stored and people living in the area complained about the smell. He then asked her whether she knows, from her own knowledge or from Caesar's descriptions, the distance between Al-Mezzeh Hospital and the president's palace. Le Caisne said that the palace lies above the military hospital, directly above considering air-line. She added that in several of the pictures from the Caesar files, one can see corpses in the front and the hill on which the palace is situated in the background.

Kroker wanted to know when Sami started to copy pictures and when Caesar called him to say that he should start copying. He recalled Sami telling the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) that he started copying pictures in 2011. Le Caisne said that sounds plausible.

Kroker had a question regarding the correct translation of the explanation of how the pictures were sent when they were saved in Syria. He said he heard Le Caisne saying that they were saved on Sami's computer and then "partir sur l'Internet". His question would be whether they were sent via internet or uploaded in a cloud. Le Caisne said they were probably uploaded in a cloud.

Kroker asked when that happened. Le Caisne said she cannot say.

Kroker recalled Sami telling the BKA that they started uploading the pictures in 2012 and only categorized them once in Turkey. Kroker wanted to know whether that statement is plausible. Le Caisne affirmed.

Kroker asked Le Caisne how certain she was, and remains, that the pictures are authentic. He recalled her saying that the pictures were validated by people who recognized relatives etc. or saw corpses themselves. Kroker asked Le Caisne how many people recognized persons from the pictures. Le Caisne said that two years ago, the Syrian Association for the Missing and Prisoners of Conscience (SAFMCD), launched a website dedicated to the Caesar files. They received calls from families who recognized someone. As of two years ago, they received calls from more than 700 families who recognized their relatives in the pictures.

Kroker asked whether Le Caisne spoke to Najah Al-Bukai. Le Caisne affirmed.

Kroker asked her why she spoke with him and what his work indicated. Le Caisne said Al-Bukai is a graphic artist who was detained twice. She explained that his work seems bizarre, but if one sees Al-Bukai's sketches, he realizes how realistically they capture experiences. Le Caisne said when she first saw Al-Bukai's sketches of people only dressed in underwear, skinny, carrying corpses, she thought she was mistaken, as it seemed so unbelievable. She said his sketches are very important as they are alive. [Le Caisne started crying] She said his sketches and the people shown are alive. People in Caesar's photographs are already dead. Le Caisne added that there would be no photographs from inside the cell and so Al-Bukai's sketches are important as they show the detainees when they are still alive.

Kroker said there is link to a French newspaper which published Al-Bukai's sketches if the court wants to inspect them. Judge Kerber said they would not inspect them at this point.

Plaintiff counsel Schulz asked Le Caisne about the video "unveil, name and indict". Kerber asked him to give Le Caisne two minutes and to be thoughtful of the translator by using short sentences and to take breaks. Kerber clarified that Schulz was talking about the 8-minute clip in the Caesar files which was shown at the French Foreign Ministry on 12 January 2014.

Schulz asked Le Caisne whether she knew the content of the clip. Le Caisne affirmed.

Schulz asked her what the clip was about. Le Caisne said it explained the pictures from the Caesar files and the three different numbers.

Schulz asked who was in possession of the clip. Le Caisne said SNC showed her the clip.

Kerber asked whether any of the parties has further questions.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Böcker recalled the prosecution asking to whom Caesar passed the files. Böcker wanted to know more, like how the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General got ahold of the pictures. Le Caisne said they got the pictures from Sami.

Böcker asked whether Le Caisne spoke about that with Sami. Le Caisne said she and Sami spoke about that once.

Böcker wanted to know whether Sami told Le Caisne if the [he added that he does not like the term “files” because they are actually pictures] files for the German prosecutor were the original ones or were modified. Le Caisne said she did not know.

Böcker recalled Sami’s statement to the BKA in which he said that the version of the files to which the BKA has access is the original one. The original version would be sorted the same way as the pictures were uploaded to google drive. Some might be double, and all the names and numbers would be the same as the original files. Böcker asked Le Caisne about google drive. Le Caisne said that she does not understand the question.

Böcker clarified that according to what Le Caisne just told the court, the files were uploaded and transferred via google drive. He then asked whether Le Caisne could provide more details as to how and where exactly the pictures were saved on google drive. Le Caisne said that Sami did not tell her the exact location of the files.

Böcker wanted to know whether Sami told Le Caisne anything about whether the names and numbers of the files were modified. Le Caisne said that since she is no expert, it is difficult for her to provide information on the technical aspects. She can only differentiate between high-definition photos and non-high-definition photos.

Böcker concluded that Le Caisne cannot remember anything regarding his previous question. Le Caisne said that Sami did not tell her how the files were given to the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General.

Judge Wiedner recalled that the files were uploaded in a cloud via google drive and asked Le Caisne whether that was the same version or whether there were two different versions. Le Caisne said she does not know how the files were transferred. From what she understood, the files were uploaded in low resolution because the internet connection in Syria was “random”, so it was easier to transfer the files in low resolution.

Wiedner asked Le Caisne who told her that. Le Caisne asked whether Wiedner referred to the internet connection or the transfer of the files. Wiedner said “internet”. Le Caisne said she spoke to many people about the state of the country during the revolution. Sami told her that the internet connection was random, which sounded plausible to her.

Wiedner concluded that the files were transferred outside Syria in low-definition. Le Caisne affirmed.

Böcker asked whether the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General consequently got the low-definition pictures. Le Caisne said Sami gave comprised pictures to the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General.

Kerber asked Le Caisne whether she thinks that the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General received compromised pictures. Le Caisne said that from her understanding, the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General got the high-definition pictures, so they were probably not compromised.

Böcker thanked Kerber and Le Caisne.

Al-Gharib's defense counsel Schuster recalled Sami's statement with the BKA in which he said that [Sami and Caesar] assumed that the revolution would last for 2-3 more months before Assad would fall, so they wanted to collect as much evidence as possible to use it in future trials. Sami further said that Caesar felt endangered by both the Syrian Army as well as the Free Syrian Army. Schuster asked whether this statement makes sense to Le Caisne. Le Caisne said that Caesar was attached to the regular Syrian Army.

Schuster clarified that [Caesar's fear of RSA and FSA] is what Sami said about Caesar. Le Caisne said that Caesar was part of the regime and has always been working for the regime. He decided to copy pictures from the regime, which meant that he secretly worked against the regime. However, in the eyes of the Free Syrian Army, he was a man of the regime. Le Caisne said Caesar was trapped.

Schuster asked whether Caesar told Le Caisne of what he was afraid. Le Caisne said that he was afraid of two things. First, that he would end up like the people in his pictures if the regime found out what he was doing and arrested him. Second, he was afraid that the opposition would arrest him because he was officially part of the regime.

Fratzky said that Le Caisne was in contact with Caesar and asked her what type of person he is [in terms of his character]. Le Caisne said he is a military man and "simple"—he did not look into the future. She said he was honest.

Fratzky asked whether this was her subjective impression. Le Caisne said that everything regarding his question would be subjective.

Fratzky recalled that Le Caisne said that Caesar was trapped between the regime and the opposition. He asked Le Caisne whether Caesar was in contact with opposition forces. Le Caisne denied saying that Caesar was only in contact with Sami.

Fratzky asked whether Sami was in contact with the Free Syrian Army. Le Caisne affirmed adding that Sami was a so-called activist engaged in the revolution.

Fratzky wanted to know about Sami's background and whether he defected. Le Caisne said that Sami was a civilian – an engineer.

Fratzi asked whether it was possible for someone to just leave. Judge Kerber intervened [due to translation issues and Fratzky's vague question] and asked if it was possible to quit if someone no longer wanted to work for the regime. Le Caisne denied, saying that if someone wanted to leave, he had to defect and ensure that his family was safe. She explained that the Syrian regime does not like defectors and if someone cared about his family, he would ensure that the regime could not reach his family.

Fratzky recalled Le Caisne's statement that Caesar was brought 50 kilometers south, and asked her what happened with Caesar's family before that. Le Caisne said she could not answer.

Schulz recalled Le Caisne's statement to the French police on 4 December 2015 where she said that the "report"<sup>11</sup> includes more than 1,000 victims, mainly Syrians. The French police then asked her if Caesar told her anything about French victims. Schulz wanted to know whether Le Caisne remembers her answer to that question. Le Caisne did not remember exactly but when France received a copy of the Caesar files, they were looking for their own nationals in the files. She said there was a rumor that some of the victims were French. Le Caisne did not know whether she spoke with the police about it but she remembered that they were looking for French nationals amongst the victims in the Caesar files.

Schulz recalled Le Caisne's answer to the question of the French police where she said that at no point did any witness tell her about French victims amongst the people in the Caesar files or victims with French nationality. Le Caisne did not understand Schulz' question. Judge Kerber intervened and asked if Le Caisne remembered that she gave the answer which Schulz just read out. Le Caisne said she could not remember since it happened five years ago, however if Schulz says so, it might be true. She said she was asked many questions.

Schulz concluded that the question about French victims never occurred to Le Caisne at the time of her questioning by the French police and asked her whether she had asked herself that question by now. Le Caisne said she asked the question to the French police who told her that there were no French victims.

Le Caisne was dismissed.

Proceedings adjourned at 2:45 pm.

Day 39 of Trial – October 28, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30am with 7 spectators and 4 members of the press in the audience.<sup>12</sup> Defendant Al-Gharib withdrew his detention complaint.<sup>13</sup> Plaintiff counsel Kaleck was present.

Th German translation of a report on the evidentiary use of the Caesar files was read out. The report was issued in 2014 by the British law firm Carter-Ruck, and was compiled by forensics experts and experienced international prosecutors. The report is 30 pages long. It includes pictures, annexes and a table of contents. The report describes the pictures and does not provide any details about the technical aspects (metadata) or analysis.

The proceedings adjourned at 10:30 am.

<sup>11</sup> Note from the trial monitor: There was some confusion regarding the word "report" as well as the general translation. Judge Kerber had to intervene and Schulz clarified on Le Caisne's request that "report" means "Caesar files"

<sup>12</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: No accredited Arabic-speaking journalists requested access to translation.

<sup>13</sup> One of Al-Gharib's defense counsels, attorney Kägebein, appeared 15 minutes late due to traffic.

Day 40 of Trial – October 29, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30am with 8 spectators and 3 members of the press in the audience. Plaintiff counsel Kaleck was present.

Testimony of criminal chief inspector Deußing regarding the BKA's analysis of the Caesar files

Admonitions were read out to Deußing, a 37-year-old criminal chief inspector from the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) who already testified in court several times. He provided a PowerPoint presentation on the background of the structural investigation into Syria. The investigation began in 2019. It included witness interviews and an inspection of public reports, such as the Carter-Ruck report. The Carter-Ruck report was the first time Deußing was exposed to the Caesar files. Deußing provided his presentation to Judge Kerber and Wiedner, as well as to the parties of the case asking questions for clarification. After his presentation, Deußing testified about Sami's witness interview with the BKA, which Deußing led.

Deußing said that Ambassador Stephen Rapp informed the office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General about the Caesar files in Liechtenstein. The files were provided to Liechtenstein via [name redacted] through Carter-Ruck and the Syrian National Movement (SNM). Deußing provided the following timeline:

13 November 2015	Mutual Legal Assistance (MLA) request to Liechtenstein.
4 February 2016	Handing over of two hard drives to the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) and the German Federal Public Prosecutor General in Vaduz.
11 February 2016	Technical safeguarding and regeneration of the data by the BKA.
22 May 2017	Folder labeled "Sami" was given to the forensic division of the University of Cologne.

Kerber asked whether the BKA had two hard drives with pictures. Deußing affirmed, explaining that "Samsung Disk 1" was 16.75 GB, and included 56,185 files in 1,238 registers. "Samsung Disk 2" was 14.18 GB, and included 41,508 files in 1,971 registers. There were 97,693 files in total, of which 54,689 were duplicates. Overall, there was a high number of duplicates. Deußing provided an overview of the structure of the folders within the "Sami" folder:

Arabic name	German translation (which will be English in this report)	Number of files/pictures
الشرطة العسكرية	MP – Military Police	178
فرع المخابرات 215	Intelligence Branch 215	13,803
فرع المخابرات 220	Intelligence Branch 220	216
فرع المخابرات 248	Intelligence Branch 248	206
فرع المخابرات 216	Intelligence Branch 216	1,108
منوع	diverse	391
المخابرات الجوية	Air Force	1,115
غير معروف	unkown	601
فرع المخابرات 235	Intelligence Branch 235	482
فرع المخابرات 251	Intelligence Branch 251	446
فرع المخابرات 227	Intelligence Branch 227	8,003

Deußing said that this was also the folder given to the University of Cologne. He added that there were several excel sheets as well, one of which could not be opened. Deußing then provided an example of the structure within the folders using folder “251”:

Branch	Number of pictures	Number of people	Share in total pictures
251	446	99	1,49%

Deußing said they learned about this structure during their interview with Sami in November 2017 where Sami showed Deußing a chart which looked like the one that Deußing made. Sami then confirmed the structure and described how he structured the pictures. Judge Kerber said Deußing should first finish his presentation before talking about the witness interview with Sami.

Deußing went on to explain that Sami sorted all the pictures. First, he looked at the pictures when they were not sorted. Then, he changed the names of the files, put them into different folders and created the chart. Deußing explained this method with the help of two slides and said that he himself realized that the names of the files follow a pattern and allow for conclusions to be made on the content of the file. Numbers displayed in the pictures include: the detainee No., the branch No., and the examination No. The names of the file follow a similar pattern:

227-detainee No. [redacted]-462013(1)

Deußing explained that this code resembles a date, it was sometimes written as month/year: 52011

Kerber asked whether the last number was the examination number, allocated by the forensic experts. Deußing said no, explaining that only the detainee number is included in the file name.

Wiedner asked whether Deußing asked Sami what the series of 0s (00000) means at the end of some file names. Deußing thought about the structure and the meaning of the file names before he heard from Sami. He then asked Sami about it. Sami confirmed that the file names include the branch number, the detainee number, and the date. Sami sorted the files according to the names of the folders because he got them from Caesar in certain folders and then changed the names of the files accordingly. Deußing asked Sami about the series of zeros. Sami said that they were already there and he did not include them, but he realized that whenever there was no death or record date, the series of zeros was put at the end of the file name.

Wiedner concluded that the series of zeros are substitutes for missing dates. Deußing affirmed, saying that the zeros were included when there were no clues about the death or record date. Deußing said Sami first assumed that the dates in the initial file names represented the dates of death. Considering the names of the initial folders, Sami then realized that these dates are actually the dates on which the picture was taken (record date). However, death dates and record dates would have been close together. Deußing further explained that whenever there is a number in brackets at the end of a file name, multiple pictures of the same person exist.

Wiedner asked why the examination number allocated by the forensic experts consisted of a number and a “b” at the end [e.g., 123/b]. According to Deußing, Sami said that the number from the forensic experts was only allocated when the order to take pictures was given. When the corpses arrived at the hospital, they only had two numbers. After the forensic experts arrived, the third number was allocated and written in a notebook. The numbers went until 5,000 and then switched to letters. Deußing provided an example where the number was “26/b” and explained that there must have been at least 5,025 corpses before this one. Deußing provided examples from different folders to illustrate his point.

According to Deußing, the hard drives include pictures of corpses and pictures of reports. He provided an example from the folder labeled “Kuwait” [كويت] which included a total of five pictures of reports. Deußing provided a translation of the document.

[Below is an incomplete recreation of the document provided by Deußing based on what the court monitor could hear and see in court. Missing portions of the document are marked with [...].]

Syrian Arab Republic General Commander of the Military and Armed Forces Military Police Division [...] Report: No. 642/358 Records of the photographer who took the pictures of the event. Event: Death Explanation of the event: In the context of the order provided to me by the General Military Prosecution, corpses of the detainees from Branch 215 of the intelligence service with the following numbers were photographed: 2614/b, 2615/b, 2616/b, 2617/b, 2618/b, 2619/b, 2620/b, 2621/b, 2622/b, 2623/b, 2624/b on 24 May 2013 in the autopsy hall of the military hospital 601 by Sergeant [name redacted].
---

Deußing said that he provided this document as background information on the documentation process in Mezzeh Hospital 601.

Wiedner wanted to confirm where the document was found. Deußing affirmed that it was in the “Kuwait” [كويت] folder. Some pictures of reports were also found in the “Sami” folder.

Wiedner asked whether the translator from the BKA was sworn in. Deußing affirmed.

Deußing provided background on similar reports from the military intelligence which were not in the folder that the BKA got from Liechtenstein, but were given to the BKA by the Commission for International Justice and Accountability (CIJA) in July/August 2020 and were translated by the BKA.

[Below is an incomplete recreation of the document provided by Deußing based on what the court monitor could hear and see in court. Missing portions of the document are marked with [...].]

Syrian Arab Republic
[...]
[...]
Intelligence Service – Branch 227
Nr. 120460-22

Date: 05 August 2013

[...] Hassan Said.

Re: Request to terminate proceedings regarding [name redacted] who died in custody. (mother [name redacted], born 1988 in Hay Al-Na'ura/Idlib) funeral at a place known to the Damascus military police.

He was arrested on 23 March 2013. On 31 July 2013 his health condition worsened as to why he was brought to hospital 601 where his condition further worsened and he eventually died on the same day, due to breathing difficulties and heart failure. 2655/0 was stored in a cooling chamber.

Deußing said one can see from the document how the military intelligence used the detainee number to assign a name and hospital number to the person. He further said that the “death certificate” that he showed before this document was used internally while this “death certificate” was handed over to someone. Deußing explained that a witness who identified the dead person in one of the Caesar pictures provided such a certificate to the BKA. When they translated the document, they recognized several characteristics, such as: place of death – Tishreen hospital (607); date of death – 30 May 2013. These indicators fit the file name, which states 4 June 2013 as date of record/death date, and that the date of record and actual death date would always be around the same time.

Wiedner asked how the BKA was able to assign the death certificate to a picture from the Caesar files. Deußing said the witness [name redacted] brought the picture to his interview with the BKA. He apparently found it online and recognized the person. The witness then confirmed that he knows the person from the picture and the death certificate was given to one of his relatives in Syria.

Weidner recalled that the BKA received documents from CIJA. He asked how CIJA got the documents. Deußing said CIJA did not tell them and BKA did not ask. He explained that it is CIJA’s mission to collect and analyze documents related to Syria. He did not know how exactly they got these documents, but the documents seemed authentic. Cardiovascular collapse and breathing difficulties as cause of death are identical to the documents from the Caesar files.

Wiedner asked whether the translation of the document showed by Deußing referred to a document which was typically given to relatives. Deußing affirmed that the witness said they got the certificate but could not see the corpse at Tishreen Hospital.

Deußing explained the structure of the “Kuwait” [كويت] folder.

folders	German translation (name stays the same)	Number of files/pictures
6-2011		[...]
8-2011		[...]
9-2011		[...]
[...]		[...]
14.8.2013		[...]

Deußing explained that the name of one folder indicated the year 2013, but the other names were less clear. This folder also included duplicates found in the “Sami” folder. Deußing further explained that Sami used the dates from these folders as the dates for naming the single files. The structure of “Kuwait” was more detailed than the structure of “Sami” because “Kuwait” included 80 to 287 sub-folders.

Wiedner asked who created the “Kuwait” [كويت] folder. Deußing recalled that Caesar called Sami one or two months after the start of the revolution and told Sami about civilian corpses and their causes of death. Caesar then brought some pictures to Sami’s flat where they looked at them together. This happened around May 2011. Caesar was the head of a group of seven photographers in Qaboun, and he copied the pictures to a USB stick and brought them to Sami’s place where Sami then transferred copies to his computer. The pictures were not sorted. The file names allocated by the military police included dates. “Sami” and “Kuwait” [كويت] can be differentiated by file names. For example, a name in “Sami” might be J-201-05211, while a name in “Kuwait” [كويت] is DSCM – [continuing number]. The file name in “Kuwait” [كويت] would be typical for pictures taken with a digital camera, so those file names are most likely the initial name of the pictures. The above-mentioned picture was saved in folder “5-2011” in “Kuwait” [كويت]. The corpse in the picture had the number 201 and the word “air force” [القوّات الجوّية] written on it. These factors yielded Sami’s methodology for sorting.

Kerber asked whether “J” for air force was added manually. Deußing assumed that Sami added that based on the names and structure of the folders in “Kuwait”.

Kerber said she was familiar with the “DSCM” code for pictures from digital cameras. She wondered whether the folders and naming of pictures was done manually. Deußing affirmed that it was not done by Sami, but rather by the military police. So the folder names in “Kuwait” [كويت] are the initial names given by the military police. Initially, Sami did not change these names. He uploaded them randomly before he exported them and started sorting them in Turkey.

Deußing went on with his presentation saying that some of the pictures are “oversight” pictures of the military hospital in Mezzeh. He used these pictures during his interview with [name redacted]. The witness was working with the military and transferred to hospital 601 after his basic training. He confirmed that the picture was taken at 601 and he himself saw the corpses there. Deußing said he also showed another picture, which was publicly available, to the witness who confirmed that the person in the picture is an employee at 601, [name redacted]. It is not clear where this picture came from, so the BKA gave it to the German Aerospace Centre (DLR) to analyze where the picture was taken. They used satellite images and identified piles of either laundry or corpses on the premises of the military hospital in Mezzeh, Damascus. Other characteristics, such as trees and vehicles, on the satellite images were compared to the picture and it was confirmed that the picture was taken at hospital 601. Deußing went on to explain why the date modified on the pictures was more recent than the date of creation. This is an indicator that the original pictures were somehow modified, which can happen by copying, uploading, etc. Sami confirmed that four versions of the Caesar files exist:

1. Compressed data on google drive
  - Sami later used this version to sort the pictures: “Sami” folder.
2. Uncompressed data, later uploaded to google drive.
  - Sami told Deußing that Carter-Ruck asked for pictures with better quality, so the HD version was uploaded to google drive.
3. Compressed data
  - Safety copy from Sami’s computer to a hard drive then to a laptop. It was taken out of Syria by an intermediary.
4. Uncompressed data
  - Copied from Sami’s computer to a hard drive, still in Syria.

According to Deußing, the BKA has the compressed uploaded version as well as the HD uploaded version, which Sami gave to the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General who in turn gave it to the BKA where the technical division assessed whether the higher quality would be of use for the work and report of the BKA.

Kerber concluded that the metadata exists but would be useless. Deußing confirmed that the metadata exists for the uncompressed files. The dates of when the files were last modified are more recent than the file names suggest because of the copying and uploading processes which changed the original metadata. Deußing has a chart with all the modification dates which shows that the closer to 2013, the more changes occurred to the initial data. He provided an example from Branch 227:

- Date of last change: June 2012
- Date in file name: June 2011

Deußing said this might be a typo, but the fact that the file was saved in folder 6-2011 and that [Sami and Caesar] started uploading them in 2012 makes it plausible that the actual date of creation was June 2011.

Kerber concluded that the date 4 June 2013 indicated that the picture is from 2011 or 2012. Deußing said there are no pictures from 2011. For 2012, there are several pictures of one person labeled as file “052012.”

Wiedner said that a file’s date of last modification is the most recent date. He asked Deußing what else the date of modification indicates. Deußing said it is dependent on the time/date setting on the computer on which the file was processed. It generally indicates the last time something happened with this file. However, one cannot confirm the date and time without access to the original computer.

Wiedner wanted to know whether dates of last modification for the pictures of corpses from Branch 251 say 2011 or 2012. Deußing said that he did not see this date/file combination. However, there is a file for Branch 251 allegedly from May 2012 (052012) which was last changed in 2013. Sami told Deußing that Caesar and his colleagues were in charge of taking photos at Tishreen and Mezzeh hospitals, but there is also a hospital in Harasta, a suburb of Damascus, where Caesar did not take any pictures. Deußing's office has information from the International, Impartial and Independent Mechanism on Syria (IIIM) which indicates that guards said that Al-Khatib transfers people/corpses to the hospital of the Red Crescent where the cause of death is determined. From there, the corpses are brought to Harasta Hospital. Deußing recalled that Al-Gharib said that corpses from Branch 251 were brought to Mujtahid when they did not show signs of torture. If they showed signs of torture, they were brought directly to a mass grave in Najha.

Wiedner asked whether the German authorities got compressed files after their MLA request to Liechtenstein. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether the German authorities later got uncompressed files. Deußing affirmed.

Deußing continued with his presentation saying that the files were created by the military police in Qaboun in Mezzeh and Tishreen between May 2011 and August 2013. He added that the pictures were taken for documentation purposes regarding deceased detainees. They were used by security authorities for reports and for their decision-making processes.

Böcker intervened saying that he did not understand how metadata got lost when files were copied. Deußing referred to a study by the FBI which says that one can make conclusions on the type of camera used by looking at the EXIF (Exchangeable Image File) data. However, the Caesar files only carried a small amount of data. The data got cut when the files were uploaded. The technical photo division of the BKA told him that there is no EXIF data in the uncompressed files.

Klinge asked Deußing whether one can tell from the totality of data available when the earliest files were created. Deußing explained that he could tell from folder "052011" [May 2011] located in "Kuwait" [كويت]. He could also tell from a file in "Sami" entitled "air force 2011" [المخابرات الجوية]). There is also a folder called "042011" (April 2011) consisting of corpses from Dar'a.

Klinge asked how many files are included in the May 2011 folder and which branch the corpses are from. Deußing said they are from the air force intelligence [المخابرات الجوية] directorate, but he has to check how many pictures it includes.

***

[15-minute break in proceedings]

***

Wiedner referred to a note from September 11, 2020, written by the BKA regarding documents received from CIJA. He asked Deußing how many documents the BKA received from CIJA and how they were similar in content. Deußing said he is sure that they received four documents which were nearly identical with respect to content. They all refer to persons detained by the military intelligence directorate in 2013. The letterhead was identical, but some referred to Branch 227 and others to Branch 215. All documents described the reasons for death using similar wording: “health condition worsened,” “transferred to hospital,” “deceased at the hospital.” They also referred to the locations of the corpses and the decision-making processes behind deaths. According to Deußing, ¾ of all corpses were not given to relatives. Rather, they were buried at a place known to the military police.

Wiedner thanked Deußing for his explanation and referred to the conclusion of a report on the military police dated August 2020 which said that Caesar worked for the military police in Tishreen and Mezzeh hospitals. Wiedner wanted to know what this conclusion was based on. Deußing said it is based on reports by the military police, Sami’s testimony, witness’s [name redacted] testimony and death certificates.

Wiedner recalled the second part of the conclusion which stated that the process of taking pictures and filling out the documents was a procedure of the military police prior to 2011 that continued after 2011. Sami said that the reports were used by the military judiciary to issue death certificates and for other documentation purposes. Early on, supposedly one form was used per person, but later, one form was used for multiple people.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Böcker asked if Deußing looked at the pictures from Branch 251 dated 2012. Deußing affirmed saying that there were four pictures which included 28 May 2020 in the file name. All pictures showed the same person. The numbering system was unidentifiable and 433 or 432 was the only legible number.

Böcker asked about signs of torture. Deußing said that he saw injuries on the corpse but could not explain the background or causes of these injuries.

Böcker asked whether Deußing came to any conclusions. Deußing said no, he is not a forensic expert.

Böcker asked how and why the files got to Liechtenstein. Deußing said SNM and [name redacted] trusted Liechtenstein and chose it for neutrality reasons.

Böcker asked Deußing which files the Carter-Ruck report includes. Deußing said he did not look at the report, however, Carter-Ruck only had access to an excerpt from the Caesar files while the BKA had access to more files.

Böcker asked why Carter-Ruck had access to files in the first place. Deußing said when Caesar and Sami left Syria, they were looking for support. Deußing was not sure why exactly Carter-Ruck got files.

Böcker asked Deußing about the relation between Qatar and Carter-Ruck. Deußing said the office never conducted any specific investigation regarding the Carter-Ruck report. According to Deußing they knew about this report as it was available online and used it as a first starting point for their own analysis and investigations into the Caesar files.

Prosecutor's Questioning

Klinge recalled an MLA request by the Office of the German Federal Public Prosecutor General to the IIIM regarding a guard from Branch 251.

[Below is an incomplete excerpt of the BKA's note based on what the court monitor could hear and see. Missing portions of the note are marked with [...].]

The request was issued on 15 February 2019 and the protocol of the questioning of the guard from Branch 251 was handed over on 9 May 2019. The questioning referred to cases of death within the Branch. The guard said that whenever a detainee died, the guards were informed. The corpse was then brought to the hospital of the Red Crescent [...] there a heart attack was officially declared, and noted on the death certificate and in the detainee's file. The death certificate was often thrown away. If the certificate was not thrown away, it was passed to the head of the general intelligence directorate. The corpses were transferred to Harasta where the forensic expert in charge had a log book tracking the number of corpses and the respective branch from which the corpses came, as well as the codes for those details. From 2013 onward, the codes were no longer written directly on the corpses. Around 50 to 60 corpses, the hospital was completely packed, so they called the intelligence service who then told the hospital to bring the corpses to mass graves. At the beginning of 2013 the corpses in Harasta were buried right away due to complaints about the smell.

Klinge asked Deußing who the guard is. Deußing said he is a trustworthy source. Al-Gharib told the BKA about a guard named [name redacted]. Deußing saw a video in which [name redacted] presented documents. The IIIM provided the same documents alongside a source code. Deußing and his office came to the conclusion that the documents from the IIIM and the video are identical.

Klinge wanted to know whether Deußing had information about people who saw corpses at Harasta Hospital. Deußing affirmed. They got this information from the documents provided by the IIIM. One of the documents refers to Branch 251 and describes an internal proceeding regarding a complaint against a person/employee from the hospital who refused to accept corpses. This indicates that there have been corpses from intelligence branches at the beginning of 2013 if the report is correct. Deußing added that the former head of the hospital, [name redacted], said that there were corpses. He did not say where the corpses came from and why they were at the hospital.

Klinge recalled that Deußing previously mentioned a witness who identified a person from the Caesar files and wanted to know whether there are more people who identified someone from the files. Deußing affirmed saying that [name redacted], a lawyer, identified several people who were former colleagues. He said that one of them was arrested as he provided legal consultation to demonstrators. Deußing said the lawyer also identified people from his own family. Deußing further explained that all witnesses who identified people from the files said that none of them had connections to the armed opposition.

Klinge referred to the forensic report issued by the University of Cologne on behalf of the BKA and asked Deußing about the causes of death listed. Deußing said they are mentioned in a note, but he does not remember exactly.

Klinge asked whether the forensic report also mentioned unknown causes of death. Deußing affirmed.

Klinge asked Deußing about reports on the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC) and its tasks and structure. Deußing said his office knows about the CCMC from CIJA. CIJA provided reports from 20 April 2011 when the CCMC basically proclaimed a new level in dealing with the conflict. Deußing said members of the CCMC are high-ranking officials from the intelligence services, according to CIJA.

Klinge asked when the CCMC was founded. Deußing said the name “Central Crisis Management Cell” already indicated that the cell’s task is to manage the crisis on behalf of the Syrian state. According to Deußing, it was founded in March 2011.

Klinge wanted to know more about the analyses of the files by Carter-Ruck as well as by the FBI. Deußing said he already mentioned that the FBI inspected the files and tested their metadata and authenticity. The FBI examined the EXIF data and concluded that the content of the files was not manipulated. However, the number (of the forensic expert) which is written on the cards was made more visible on some pictures. These changes had no connection to the corpse and Deußing only saw pictures without any changes.

Klinge said since Deußing worked on the Caesar files, he wanted to ask Deußing whether he had any doubts about Caesar’s work and the authenticity of the files. Deußing said no, other witness statements confirmed the timestamp related to the file names. There are other congruent reports and satellite images especially of Mezzeh Hospital 601. Deußing concluded that so far, there are no facts indicating that the files are not authentic.

Plaintiff Counsels’ Questioning

Kroker referred to the death certificate which was provided by a witness and shown during Deußing’s presentation. Kroker wanted to know whether it was usual practice to give death certificates or if that only happened for individual cases. Deußing said it was for an individual case, however in this case the witness paid bribe money to get the certificate. Deußing further added that it was not always possible to identify the victims, so in many cases, no death certificate was issued. He went on to explain that many families only found out about their relatives through the Caesar files as they scanned through the website day and night.

Kroker asked Deußing how many death certificates he has seen. Deußing said he cannot provide an answer due to ongoing investigations.

Kroker wanted to know whether death certificates were the rule or the exception. Deußing said only a few death certificates were issued, so they are the exception.

Kroker asked if there was one particular point in time when a large number of death certificates were issued. Deußing said he knows about related public reports; however, he has not seen any document to verify this assumption.

Kroker asked about the precise point in time mentioned in these public reports. Deußing said that is only speculation.

Bahns referred to a report from September which dealt with decision-making processes [within the intelligence services] and asked who was involved in these processes and what exactly has been decided. Deußing said information was passed even to the head of the military intelligence directorate, however he is not sure whether this person actually signed any document.

Bahns asked whether these decisions concerned the return of corpses. Deußing said there was a proposal in the documents [in the burial order, for example]. However, it is not possible to assess whether these proposals were actually realized solely based on the documents.

***

[65-minute lunch break]

***

Testimony of criminal chief inspector Deußing regarding Sami's testimony with the BKA

Kerber asked the prosecution and plaintiff's counsel whether they have any news regarding Sami's appearance in court. Both said no.

Wiedner asked Deußing to describe the overall circumstances of Sami's testimony with the BKA before the judges try to "refresh" his memory concerning particular aspects by citing the BKA's minutes. Deußing said Sami's interview as a witness took place in the BKA's premises in Berlin in the presence of a translator from the BKA. Sami was asked at the beginning whether he understood everything and at the end of the interview asked to check the minutes. He had to sign every page of the minutes and had no difficulties understanding everything.

Wiedner asked whether the minutes were re-translated. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner asked how long Sami was heard. Deußing said he was heard for two days.

Wiedner wanted to know about Sami's personal background. Deußing said he lived in the suburbs of Damascus which were controlled by the Free Syrian Army (FSA). He left Syria because he was afraid of being arrested. He left before Caesar.

Wiedner asked when Sami left Syria. Deußing said he left prior to 2014.

Wiedner recalled Sami saying that he left on [information redacted] 2013. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know where Sami went after leaving Syria. Deußing said he believes he went to Jordan.

Wiedner asked where he went before he went to Jordan. Deußing could not remember.

Wiedner recalled Sami saying that he legally entered Lebanon and then left for Jordan on 22 July 2013. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner asked where Sami went after he left Amman. Deußing said he went to Turkey and is currently in a European country.

Wiedner again recalled parts of Sami's statement with the BKA where he said that after his stay in Amman he went to Istanbul on 14 November 2013 and then on 12 January 2014 he went to Qatar where he stayed for around three weeks before going back to Istanbul. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the relationship between Sami and Caesar. Deußing said they were already in contact prior to the beginning of the conflict and knew each other since 1997. They stayed in touch after the beginning of the conflict. Sami told the BKA how Caesar called him to tell him about the corpses and that they then met around May 2011.

Wiedner asked what Sami told the BKA regarding Caesar's position before the beginning of the conflict. Deußing said according to Sami, Caesar worked as a photographer with the military police in [information redacted] where he was the head of seven photographers.

Wiedner recalled Sami saying that Caesar had to take pictures of soldiers, accidents, suicides etc. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner recalled Sami saying that two months after 18 March 2011, at the end of May, Caesar called Sami to visit him because he saw civilian corpses and detected discrepancies between the conditions of the corpses and the official reports by the forensic experts. Wiedner asked Deußing in which hospitals Caesar worked. Deußing said Caesar worked in Tishreen and Mezzeh.

Wiedner asked about Harasta Hospital. Deußing said this hospital does exist, however Caesar did not work there.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened after Sami and Caesar met regarding the pictures. Deußing said Caesar told Sami about the corpses. When Sami asked for pictures, Caesar provided them. Deußing further said that according to Sami, Caesar wanted to defect but they jointly decided that it is important to collect evidence for the event of a possible overthrow of the regime. For that reason, Caesar smuggled pictures on a USB stick or SD card and the pictures were then saved on Sami's computer.

Wiedner went on to ask how exactly the USB stick was used in smuggling the pictures and if it was a new one for every instance. Deußing said Caesar always used the same USB stick. Sami copied the files on his computers as they were saved on the USB stick (same folder structure). The data on the USB stick was then deleted and the USB stick was used again.

Wiedner went on to ask how Sami dealt with the files. Deußing said at first, the pictures were saved in an unstructured manner on Sami's computer. In 2012, they decided to protect the data from the government (possible searches) and consequently uploaded a compressed version on google drive. Later three additional versions were created.

Wiedner concluded that the procedure described by Sami was repeated several times and asked Deußing about the number of files that were dealt with in that manner. Deußing said the number of files per day increased. At first, there were only several, then 20 to 30 and 50-70 towards the end.

Wiedner recalled that Sami told the BKA that the structure of the files/folders was not important. The pictures were saved on a standing computer, then a compressed version of files was uploaded onto google drive because the internet service was bad and they could only upload a compressed version. Also, they did not want to cause suspicion by uploading big amounts of data.

Wiedner asked whether the pictures were first put in some kind of order. Deußing said Sami started sorting them in Turkey.

Böcker intervened, saying that Sami's statement regarding the increasing number of pictures per day was not cited correctly. At first, he said there were 3 per day at the beginning, before he changed it to "several per day". Deußing affirmed that Sami changed his statement from "3" to "several per day".

Wiedner asked what happened next [with the files] and how they were passed to people abroad. Deußing said according to Sami, the files were sent to [name redacted] who then handed them over to Liechtenstein.

Wiedner recalled Sami's statement in which he said that they downloaded the compressed files in Jordan and [name redacted] handed over a compressed version to Liechtenstein. Wiedner asked which versions were compressed and which were complete. Deußing said Sami told the BKA that in order to reduce the volume of data due to the slow internet connection and to allow an unsuspecting transfer of data, they uploaded a compressed version of the files in Syria. Only after they left Syria, they were sent an HD version of the files.

Wiedner explained that the 250 KB files contain compressed data while the 1-1.3 MB files contain the original data, including original file names, and the uncompressed HD files were only uploaded once the FSA was in control [of the region from where the files were uploaded]. Wiedner then asked how the forensic experts [mandated by Carter-Ruck] got involved and which version they worked with. Deußing said Sami did not provide any details on how exactly the forensic experts came into play, however they were in contact with Carter-Ruck and had talks with them about the quality of pictures and eventually asked for "bigger" files to allow for a better inspection.

Wiedner asked about the connection between the files and the proceedings in Germany. Deußing said that the GBA was given an uncompressed version.

Wiedner recalled that the GBA got access to this version in September 2017. Wiedner asked Deußing which versions of the files exist. Deußing said there are four versions:

1. Compressed version which was uploaded and used by Sami in Turkey to sort the files and given to Liechtenstein by [name redacted].
2. Uncompressed version which was uploaded on a cloud and given to the GBA by Sami.
3. Compressed version which was copied from a Syrian computer to an external hard drive, smuggled out of Syria by the FSA, then transferred to a laptop.
4. Uncompressed version which is saved on an external hard drive and is still in Syria

Wiedner recalled Sami telling the BKA that they were afraid that they could no longer access the files [on the cloud] once they left Syria. This is why the FSA smuggled the files out of Syria. 98% of the files were uploaded on a standing computer. 100% of the files were uploaded as an uncompressed version. Sami said he uploaded and modified them from July until end of August 2013. When Caesar fled Syria at the end of August 2013, they had 5,100 pictures.

Wiedner asked Deußing about Caesar's emotional condition when he first met with Sami. Deußing said it was not safe to show emotions, but Caesar was upset about the corpses and false causes of death being recorded.

Wiedner recalled Sami saying that the version which was handed over to the GBA was sorted by him when people died from torture according to the intelligence branch. He sorted only the files from the military and air force. Sami further said that he no longer worked with [name redacted], so he does not know what [name redacted] did with the pictures before they were handed over to the GBA. Wiedner referred to the chart which detailed the structure of the relevant folder. Deußing said he already presented this chart in his presentation. Sami confirmed to Deußing that he made these changes by adding the branch number as well as the date to the file name.

Wiedner recalled Sami saying that there are three different kinds of pictures: detainees, martyrs and terrorists. According to Sami, that was how they were sorted by the regime, by Caesar himself because it was his job. Sami said that he only worked on the detainee pictures, however he also saw some of the martyrs' pictures, which included names of the dead persons. Sami said he was in a hurry, so he might have made some small mistakes in naming and sorting the files. Wiedner said that the BKA presented Sami with a sample file name for him to explain how he named the files:

xxx-xxxx-xxxxxx(1).jpg

Branch No.-Detainee No.-Date

Deußing said Sami confirmed to him what Deußing already realized: the first number indicates the number of the branch from which the corpse came, the second number indicates the detainee's number and the third number indicates a date. The number [in this case "1"] in brackets was inserted automatically by the computer and indicates that multiple pictures exist for one person.

Wiedner had a question regarding the date: Does it resemble the date of death or the date when the picture was taken, which would be shortly after the date of death as Deußing previously explained. Further, the folders were often named after the date of death. Wiedner also wanted to know what a series of "000" at the end of the file name means. Deußing said Sami told him that the series of "000" was inserted when neither a date of death nor the date on which the picture was taken was known.

Wiedner asked how the names and numbers of branches were allocated. Deußing said Sami told the BKA that he knew over 29 different branches, which he aligned with the pictures and then allocated the numbers accordingly. In cases where there was no number, the pictures were allocated to the air force using "J" or "JA" to indicate the air force intelligence directorate "jawiya" [الجوية].

Wiedner recalled that the BKA presented more pictures to Sami to ask him about the numbers on the corpses and cards. Deußing affirmed and explained the three-part numbering system which includes the detainee's number, the number of the intelligence branch [where the corpse came from and where the detainee was detained] and the number given by the forensic expert. Deußing said that according to Sami, the first two numbers were allocated at the hospital once the corpses arrive. The third number was allocated by the forensic expert once the order to take pictures of the corpse was given. Sami identified [name redacted], a forensic expert, in one of the pictures.

Wiedner asked what else Sami said regarding the detainees' numbers. Deußing recalled Sami saying that the detainees' numbers are allocated by the intelligence services. However, Deußing could not say whether numbers were allocated right away or after detainees died.

Wiedner recalled Sami's statement with the BKA where he said that the branch number is allocated at the beginning. Deußing explained that the branch number refers to the branch at which the detainee died.

Wiedner once again referred to Sami's witness interview by the BKA during which Sami said that [name redacted] lived at Tishreen Hospital and was also in charge of "601" [Al-Mezzeh hospital] as a forensic expert in Damascus until 2014. He was in one of the long shots, which were actually prohibited. Deußing said according to Sami, Caesar said that taking these long shots was prohibited. However, at some point there were so many corpses that Caesar needed long shots to get a better view.

Wiedner asked Deußing which picture they showed Sami. Deußing said it was a picture taken at 601 Mezzeh.

Wiedner asked whether Sami made any further changes except changing file names. Deußing said he believes that Sami changed file names, relocated files into certain folders and created the chart.

Wiedner asked whether Sami provided any information on the letter "b" which was used behind the number of the forensic expert. Deußing said Sami explained to the BKA that the number allocated by the forensic expert always ended at 5,000. It was never higher than that, instead a letter was used to continue the counting.

Wiedner referred to a gap in the numbers contained in the Caesar files and asked whether this has something to do with Caesar's arrest. Deußing affirmed, adding that Caesar was detained for a short while which is why there is gap in numbers. Deußing said he does not know whether they later caught up in terms of numbers/continuing counting.

Wiedner asked whether files were deleted. Deußing said he does not think so, however Sami did not know whether Caesar deleted some.

Wiedner again recalled Sami's interview with the BKA during which he said that he is not sure whether Caesar had further pictures and that Caesar was detained for 25 days. The BKA then presented further pictures to Sami. Deußing said they showed him pictures from the military police which were sent to the military judiciary where they issued death certificates.

Wiedner asked whether the BKA presented any other pictures to Sami. Deußing said he could not remember.

Wiedner confirmed that Deußing's statement matched the BKA's interview minutes. Wiedner then recalled the process of documenting the death of detainees. At the beginning there was one file per person, then later "collective files" were used. [name redacted] was the one who took the pictures [for the death certificates], not Caesar. First the forensic expert came and allocated a number, then the photographer took the pictures, which Caesar copied to a computer. Then the file was created. Wiedner asked whether Deußing asked Sami about the reasons for this documentation procedure. Deußing said this procedure was already established [before the revolution] and was routine.

Wiedner asked whether there was corruption. Deußing said the documentation of corpses is also a way of showing the whereabouts of corpses to ensure that people who are dead are not being released in return for money or that people are being released for money but claimed to be dead.

Wiedner quickly recalled Sami's statement on this with the BKA where he said that some people told their bosses that a detainee died when the person was actually released in return for money. Wiedner then asked what happened to the corpses [after pictures were taken]. Deußing said if he remembers correctly, Sami said that the corpses were brought to mass graves.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Sami said anything about corruption and the search for missing persons as well as activists and families who identified people from the files. Deußing said there was an organization who tried to identify the people from the files, around 300 people were identified. According to Deußing, Sami also identified someone – a doctor.

Wiedner noted that some corpses were unidentifiable. There was a list of identifications and an offer to contact [the organization who provided the pictures online]. Wiedner then showed a picture of a man with a cigar, talking on the phone. Deußing said Sami identified him as forensic expert. It was always the same [person/forensic expert on all pictures].

Wiedner said toward the end of the interview, the BKA asked Sami whether he witnessed international crimes himself. Deußing said he cannot remember. Wiedner said Sami told the BKA that at the beginning [of the revolution] he himself witnessed people being shot death at demonstrations with no possibility of collecting their corpses. He also witnessed people being arrested at demonstrations, one time 40 people were arrested at once. Sami said that his house was raided on one occasion and his computer was confiscated. Luckily, he did not have any files saved on that computer.

Wiedner asked Deußing whether he asked Sami about google drive and whether [the uploaded version of the files] still exists. Deußing said he thinks that it was deleted, however he does not know when.

Wiedner wanted to know more details about how the files were uploaded and what happened to the uploaded folders. Deußing said a compressed version of the files was uploaded in 2012 by an intermediary. Wiedner added that Sami also told the BKA that he was requested to check another account on which the files were uploaded so that it could be deleted.

Wiedner asked Deußing about the atmosphere during Sami's interview with the BKA. Deußing said it was calm. Sami was willing to talk. That is why they heard him for two days. Sami told him during a break that he was grateful that the BKA appreciated the information he provided.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the interview was structured. Deußing said it was “normal.” It followed protocol and Sami was structured and focused.

Wiedner asked whether Sami was afraid and how they dealt with his codename. Deußing said the GBA made the decision regarding the use of a codename so they did not talk about it in the interview.

Wiedner asked whether Sami showed signs of fear. Deußing said he was afraid of providing personal information, that is why they kept this part as short as possible.

Prosecutor’s Questioning

Klinge presented two pictures from the Caesar files. The first one showed two doctors. Deußing said the BKA showed this picture to Sami for identification of the two people. However, Sami could not identify them. Referring to the seal on their uniforms, Sami said that the picture was taken at Tishreen Hospital.

Klinge showed the second picture which showed two doctors in a hallway of what looked like a hospital with plastic corpses in the background. Klinge mentioned the file name: [information redacted]. Deußing said one can see from the file name that it is from April 2011.

Klinge asked whether Deußing at any point was under the impression that the person he was talking to was not Sami. Deußing said no. The person told him he was Sami and provided so much detail especially regarding the file names that Deußing never had any doubts.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

[The defense teams had consultations before they asked their first question.]

Fratzky wanted to know “what kind of guy” Sami is and what impression he made to Deußing. Deußing said he already told the court that Sami was very solid, calm and structured. He was never aggressive and always seemed to be motivated. He was always cooperative.

Fratzky asked about Sami’s educational level. Deußing said he does not know, maybe they did not talk about it for security reasons. However, from how Sami answered and reacted to the questions, Deußing was of the impression that Sami is educated.

Fratzky wanted to know about the connection between Qatar and London. Deußing said he and his office only built upon the public report [report by Carter-Ruck which was read out the previous day], however they wanted to get their own impression of the pictures and make their own findings. He said the report was only a beginning and they never tried to contact anyone involved in the creation of that report.

Fratzky asked whether they informed themselves about the connection [between Qatar and Carter-Ruck] anyway. Deußing said his office never conducted any financial investigation into Carter-Ruck solicitors. They wanted their own witnesses to confirm that these pictures were from Syria. The first witness, [name redacted], was heard after October 2015.

Fratzky asked why Sami was not [appearing before the court]. Deußing said maybe he is afraid. However, he can only speculate as he is not in contact with Sami.

Al-Gharib's defense counsel Schuster recalled that the files were initially divided in different categories (detainees, martyrs and terrorists) and asked whether there were any more division (such as reasons for detention). Deußing said Sami only worked on detainee pictures. Regarding the reasons for detention, Deußing and his office clarified that with the help of witnesses such as [name redacted] and [name redacted]. In general, people were arrested in connection to demonstrations.

Schuster wanted to know more about the category "regime/martyrs". Deußing said that Sami did not say anything on this. However, "Kuwait" [كويت] included pictures of crime scenes and suicides within the Syrian military. In these cases, there was often the name of the killed/dead person, while there was only a number for detainees. The term "terrorist" was allocated by the Syrian government. Deußing said it is known to the BKA that the term "terrorist" has a wide meaning for the Syrian government and is used for demonstrators and anyone opposing the government.

Schuster asked whether Deußing has any further recollection of those witnesses. Deußing said they heard many witnesses on reasons for arrests. With regards to dead people, he cannot answer that question.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Schulz asked Deußing whether he can evaluate if Caesar's real name is known to Syrians. Deußing said that Sami told the BKA that it is apparently easy to reveal real names.

Schulz wanted to know if other intelligence services provided information regarding Caesar's identity. Deußing said he and his office never tried to unveil their real names. He does not know how other services dealt with this matter.

Schulz concluded that it is easy to unveil Sami's real name. Deußing said that is the reason why they did not ask any questions about his identity.

Kroker referred to Schuster's question on information provided by witnesses and asked how many times witnesses spoke about accusations of terrorism by the regime. Deußing said he has to put this in context: of course, witnesses told them about such accusations as they came from certain regions, belonged to certain ethnicities or participated in demonstrations. It also happened that someone told the intelligence services something like that without having evidence for their accusations.

Kroker concluded that the label "terrorist" was similarly used as the labeled "heart attack". Deußing affirmed that the label "terrorist" was often used by the Syrian government and added that the German intelligence service (BND) also confirmed that.

Reiger asked Deußing whether the injuries in pictures regarding Branch 251 often indicated torture. Deußing said that Prof. Rothschild can provide more information on that.

Schulz again referred to the identification issue, mentioning that Caesar's or Sami's identity is known to the Syrian intelligence services. Deußing affirmed that it would be easy for them to identify Caesar and Sami adding that Sami said “if they did not find out by now, they are idiots who do not do their job properly”.

Fratzky said that Sami was granted asylum on [information redacted]2014 adding that the BKA as well as the criminal police offices of the federal states often have a look into the files of the German Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF). Deußing said he cannot provide information on this matter.

Fratzky asked whether the BKA internally conducted investigations regarding the identity of Sami and Caesar. Deußing said they did not check anything regarding asylum-seeking procedures.

Judge Kerber provided administrative information on the hearings next week.

The proceedings adjourned at 2:15 pm.

Next hearings will take place on November 3, 2020.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 17

Hearing Dates: November 3 &amp; 4, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 41 – November 3, 2020

Prof. Dr. Rothschild, a 58-year old forensics expert from the University of Cologne, testified on the forensic analysis of the Caesar files which he and his colleagues conducted on behalf of the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA). He provided detailed explanations on the various injuries, possible signs of torture, and starvation, one of which he and his colleagues identified on almost every corpse in the Caesar files. His testimony paid special attention to Branch 251 and provided detailed insights into torture, as well as the devastating sanitary and overall detention conditions in Syrian detention facilities. Comparing other witness' testimonies, Dr. Rothschild shared the evidence of certain torture mechanisms based on the medical examinations he and his team could conduct through the photos.

Trial Day 42 – November 4, 2020

Mr. Hörl, a 22-year old criminal inspector for the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA), provided a short testimony on an electronic copy of a CV, which was found during the search of Raslan's flat in Germany. He identified the name and experiences listed on the CV, which was verified by the court translators. The judges also read out a report by the German Intelligence Service (BND) on the structure, tasks and hierarchy of the Syrian intelligence services. The next day's witness was summoned but chose not to testify, due to their relation to one of the defendants.

Day 41 of Trial – November 3, 2020

The hearing began 15 minutes late at 9:45 am with 8 spectators and 3 members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists required access to the Arabic translation. There was no camera man recording before the beginning of the hearing, as usual. Attorney Arne Bodenstein was present as a replacement for Raslan's second Defense Counsel Fratzky. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Ritscher and Klinge. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared as replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Mohammed.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Testimony of Prof. Dr. Rothschild

Admonitions were read out to Professor Dr. Markus Rothschild, even though he already addressed all aspects in his introduction. Rothschild is a 58 years-old German forensics professor, specialized in forensic morphology. He is the head of the forensics department of the University of Cologne. On behalf of the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA), he and his colleagues analyzed [26,938 files] the Caesar files and put them in the context of witness testimonies describing torture, sanitary conditions, food and water supplies, and the overall situation in detention facilities of the Syrian Intelligence Services.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber asked Rothschild why he and his colleagues analyzed the Caesar files, what makes him competent to do so, and why they wrote a report on the analysis. Rothschild said he studied medicine in Berlin and pursued his doctoral degree in internal medicine. He specialized in ballistics and weapons and started as an assistant professor at the University of Frankfurt before becoming a full professor of morphology, toxicology, and DNA with a focus in forensic morphology at the University of Cologne.

Kerber asked what forensic morphology means. Rothschild said it includes "everything that you can touch. It is the classic forensics that you know from TV series."

Kerber said Rothschild's presentation will be printed out and attached to the case file. She went on to ask him how he received the mandate to analyze the Caesar files and how he got certain information and documents. Rothschild explained that he structured his presentation in three parts:

1. How he and his colleagues got the mandate to analyze the Caesar files and provided a report on it;
2. The plausibility-report regarding torture and detention conditions as well as combat actions (refers to a report by the BKA from November 22, 2017); and
3. Indicators for illness-related deaths and detention conditions at Branch 251 (refers to a report by the BKA from September 11, 2019)

1. Mandate and analysis of the Caesar files

Rothschild said Prosecutor Klinge ordered him and his colleagues to conduct a forensic analysis of the Caesar files. When Rothschild asked Klinge why he chose him, Klinge said he knows from the BKA that Rothschild provided forensic analyses and reports for them on several occasions. Rothschild explained that he and his colleagues were mandated on May 3, 2017. They received the files on May 22, 2017. On March 22, 2018, they received additional files and were asked to provide a short casuistic [analysis] for each person in the files. He said he and his team received sample files beforehand which were handed over by chief criminal inspector Kröger. Rothschild said he and his team created a report on every folder of the files as well as a single casuistic for each person. Their mandate included collecting:

- Short description for each person;
- General condition of the body;
- Indicators for mistreatment, torture and violence;
- Probable cause of death;
- Creation of a database;
- Allocation of certain results for specific branches of the Syrian intelligence services;

- Translation [of the numbers and writings on the corpses and cards on the picture] (Rothschild said they had no issues with translating at the beginning thanks to an Arabic-speaking colleague, however once she left, they had to reduce translations); and
- Document metadata as far as visible (Rothschild said it was clear that his institute did not have the technical capacities and knowledge to complete this task, as the files have been copied so many times).

Rothschild went on to describe that they used the following material:

- External hard drive
- Computer (stand-alone with only two people having access to it)
- LCD screen for text
- LCD screen for pictures
- Microsoft word and excel
- SPSS statistics (Support from the forensic statistics department of the University of Cologne)

Rothschild went on to describe the parameters which they used to label and categorize their findings:

- Case number
- Number of pictures per case
- Position of the body
- Surrounding on which the body was placed
- Clothes
- Signs of medical treatment
- Indicators for identification (tattoos etc.)
- Definite signs of death
- General condition of the body
- Type of injury
- Signs of fixation
- Indicators for external influence
- Special features

Rothschild added that he and his team faced certain limitations in conducting their analysis, including:

- Only one perspective (all pictures showed the front side of the bodies)
- Partially dressed (they could not see all parts of the body)
- Dust and sand on the bodies (covered certain parts/injuries on some bodies)
- Light and shadow (causing blind spots)
- Plastic bags and sheets (covered the bodies partially or even completely)
- Bad quality of the pictures
- Only one picture (in 40 cases there was only one picture per person)
- Turning around of the bodies wasn't possible (they had to rely solely on the pictures without any further inspection of the bodies)
- No internal or external examination possible

Rothschild said he and his team produced a total of 23 written reports: One for every folder of the files they received, one on the "Caesar files in total," and a plausibility analysis of a BKA report on detention conditions in facilities of the Syrian intelligence services. He went on to explain that he and his team analyzed a total of 26,938 pictures which showed 6,812 different people, maybe less.<sup>2</sup>He provided a chart including the number of pictures and persons per Branch [the following is only an excerpt of this list].

Folder [Branch]	# pictures	# people
251	446	110
"air"	1,515	352
215	13,801	3,551

Rothschild said that some of the pictures show a panoramic view or overview of the yard in which the corpses were photographed. He said that they did not analyze these pictures as they don't show individuals. The name of such files would usually end with a series of zeros. He went on to explain the typical naming scheme of the files using an example: 251-120-3-2013(3)

The first number would be the number of the branch, the second would be the number given by the forensics expert [Rothschild later mentioned a different number as the number from the forensics expert which is also in line with what previous witnesses said. These witnesses identified the second number as the detainee's number]. Rothschild said the third number is either a date or as in this case, a year. The last number in brackets is an chronological number if there is more than one picture per person.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether there was a relation between the number of the files and the numbers on the card in the pictures. Rothschild said he can only say that for pictures from the "air" [Air Force Intelligence] folder as it was obvious in these cases that the number from the card was also included in the file name.

Kerber further wanted to know whether there was a relation between the date and the numbers on the card. Rothschild said this was not the case for files from the "air" folder.

Kerber asked the translators about the relation between the numbers on the card in the picture shown in court and the name of the relevant file. The translator said that the card says: 120 "Ang" 694/b. Kerber concluded that the number 120 would also be in the file name.

Rothschild went on to explain that he and his team noticed inconsistencies in the numbering on the corpses. He said the numbers were written with markers either directly on the skin or on tape which was put on the corpses, usually, the numbers were found on the forehead. However, there was always a card which was either put on the corpse or held by someone [He showed a picture on which one could see the thumb of a person holding the card].

Pictures per Person

Rothschild further provided a diagram which indicated how many pictures were available per person:

---

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: As known from the testimony of the BKA inspector, this is not the total number of the Caesar files. All charts and statistics provided during this testimony consequently only refer to this particular part of the Caesar files.

of cases	# Pictures per Person
40	1
60	2
2,913	3
Most times	4

Kerber said that all of Rothschild's presentation is visually inspected.

Regarding the number of pictures per person, Rothschild explained that usually there were 3 to 4 pictures per person, in some cases even 5 pictures. However, 6 pictures or more would be the exception. Usually, the pictures showed a "quartet": face, upper part of the body until hip, entire body, and (if there were 4 or more pictures) lower half of the body. He said that 6,820 people were male and only one was female. The female corpse was found in the folder [Branch] "215" and fully dressed - even her throat was covered.

Age

Rothschild then went on to explain their findings regarding the age of the corpses in the pictures. He provided a chart on different age-ranges and percentage distribution among the persons from folder [Branch] "251".

percentage	age	definition
0	<18	no beard growth – very young
18.2	20-30	young
363	30-45	middle-age
19,1	45-60	old
9.1	>60	very old
17.3	undefinable	-

He explained that for some people he and his colleagues could not estimate an age as there was blood, dirt, vomit, or decay on their face. He further added that for all the pictures, 4.5% (ca. 300 people) were 18 years or younger while most were young or middle-aged. Regarding folder [Branch] "251" people were typically middle-aged or old (compared to the totality of pictures). Rothschild also provided age-related tendencies for the other folders [Branches]:

215, 216, MP [military police], diverse: rather young

248, 251, air: middle-age

220, 227, 235: middle-age and mostly old

People per Folder [Branch]

Rothschild went on to provide another chart, this time detailing the distribution of people per folder [Branch]. He added, however, that one can only compare the findings on the different folders [Branches] to a limited extent, as some folders included many thousands of pictures, while others only included dozens.

folder [Branch]	# people
251	110
"air"	352
215	3,551
227	2,049
216	292
235	127
'unknown'	116
'diverse'	74
248	54
220	50
MP [military police]	46

Judge Wiedner wanted to clarify whether, regarding 110 persons for Branch 251, 446 pictures included the number 251 in the file name. Rothschild affirmed.

Clothing

Rothschild explained the clothing of the people in the pictures by providing more charts.

clothing	percent total	Percent for 251
underwear only	57	ca. 33
Undressed	ca. 20	13.6
partially/entirely civilian clothing	ca. 20	ca. 50

He said the rest of them, a very small percentage, were wearing military clothes or hospital gowns. A third of the people were wearing inconspicuous clothes, a fourth of the clothes were dirty and in a fourth of the cases, the clothes were off-center. In the latter case, trousers were often pulled down, revealing the genitals. Rothschild further explained that the clothes were often slightly changed so they could be worn longer, such pieces that might not have belonged to the respective person in the picture. He showed two pictures, one from Branch 251 and one from Branch 215 in which jackets were worn as trousers. He added that many times ribbons were used instead of belts. He further provided a list with particular characteristics (accumulation of a certain type of clothing) of clothing among the different folders [Branches].

folder [Branch]	clothing
220, 235, "air"	civil
227	underwear
215	undressed
227, 248	very dirty
235	inconspicuous

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether there were any accumulations of specifics for Branch 251. Rothschild denied, adding that however, about 50% of the clothes were normal and relatively clean with rough repairs.

Signs of Medical Treatment

Rothschild explained that most of the people did not show signs of medical treatment but if they did, they usually had bandages indicating that they were done by people with a medical background. He added that people from Branch 251 notably often showed signs of medical treatment. He further provided a picture from “air” which showed a person with a vessel catheter and said that people from 215 showed the least number of signs of medical treatment.

Definite Signs of Death

Rothschild went on to explain that certain signs provide a definite indication that a person is dead. These are: lividity, rigor mortis, transformations due to decay [he provided a picture from the Caesar files to demonstrate], and so-called injuries that are incompatible with life (such as decapitation [beheading]). Rothschild went on to explain the above-mentioned terms to the court, using pictures from forensics textbooks as well as from the Caesar files.

- Lividity

Rothschild explained that lividity appears when gravity pulls the blood to the bottom, usually to the ears when one lies on their back. The blood then stays there once it thickens. He provided three pictures from the Caesar files for further explanation.

284: Lividity was present on the front, which indicates that a person was lying on his stomach for hours after he died.

251: “Regular” lividity which, if not faked, is a definite sign of death.

215: Lividity that usually occurs after someone died of a heart attack or suffocated. However, one can only determine the exact cause of death with an autopsy, which was not possible for the Caesar files.

- Rigor Mortis

Rothschild used diagrams and sketches to explain to the court how rigor mortis works. He said that once a person died, all metabolic functions stop working. ATP (adenosine triphosphate), which is needed to relax the muscles is consequently no longer produced. Right after death, the body gets sluggish, as all available ATP is used. Once there is no ATP left, muscles start getting hard. He added that rigor mortis is dissolving, once the corpse “is not so fresh anymore.” Rothschild further explained that the facial expressions of a dead person are consequently incidental, so one cannot see what a person might have felt when he died. Rigor mortis can also be dissolved if a body is moved/stretched. To illustrate, Rothschild showed a textbook picture which showed “regular” appearances of rigor mortis. He then showed a picture from the Caesar files, to explain that there were many such pictures which indicated that a corpse had been moved after rigor mortis occurred.

- Decay

Rothschild explained that there are two different types of decay:

Autolyse: so-called self-dissolution which occurs when there is no more oxygen as the body stopped breathing; and Heterolyze: so-called foreign dissolution due to bacteria.

Rothschild showed a textbook picture to explain that decay usually can be seen first in the right lower stomach, as the colon is closest to the abdominal wall. Decay starts there and then continues to the bloodstream. He also showed some pictures from the Caesar files. One was from folder 220 where one could see the typical green stain in the lower right stomach. Another one was from the “air” folder/Branch [Air Force Intelligence] where the entire body was green, so one could see that the decay had already significantly spread. Further pictures from “diverse” and the Military Police folder also showed bodies with signs of decay.

- Injuries incompatible with life

Rothschild explained that a typical injury of this category is a craniocerebral trauma. He showed an uncensored picture from “air” showing a person with an open brain and chest. He said that an explosion or a person being hit by a truck or vehicle could be a possible explanation for these kinds of injuries.

Rothschild further said that, overall, about 2/3 of the corpses showed lividity, while he and his colleagues were not able to identify definite signs of death for 11.4% of the cases.

Referring to Rothschild’s diagram on the signs of death, Judge Wiedner wanted to clarify whether they were able to identify definite signs of death in 90% of the cases regarding Branch 251. Rothschild affirmed.

Rothschild added that deadly injuries were particularly frequent in the “diverse” folder. He concluded that overall, 88.6% (6,042 people) showed definite signs of death, while 11.4% (779 people) did not show such signs. There would consequently be two different hypotheses for these numbers:

H1: These 779 people are dead as well.

H2: These 779 people were alive at the time they were photographed.

Rothschild explained that a person from the Caesar files is not automatically alive if the body does not show definite signs of death. For instance, the body can be partially covered, so it is not clear whether there are signs of death. The picture might be bad quality or heavy bleeding make it impossible to identify signs of death. The picture might also have been made close to the time of death, so signs of death would not yet be developed. Rothschild concluded that he and his colleagues had a strong tendency towards the first hypothesis based on the way the bodies were presented in the pictures, the fact that the people on the pictures did neither show interaction with their environment nor vital signs, as well as based on the overall context of the pictures.

Regarding signs of medical treatment, Judge Kerber wanted to know whether ECG electrodes shown on some pictures are actual signs of medical intervention or might have been used to “tease” someone with electric shocks. Rothschild said that the electrodes were located at the right places to be used for medical treatment.

General Appearance of Bodies

Rothschild went on to talk about the general appearance of the bodies by using pictures from the Caesar files to illustrate certain appearances. [The below chart was amended by the trial monitor to structure Rothschild's presentation]

appearance	description/signs	Shares of total files analyzed	Shares of 251	Folder [Branch] of the picture used for illustration purposes
inconspicuous	[Rothschild said that relatively many corpses fell within that category]	33%	33%	215
reduced condition	different proportions, bandages with blood	25%	20%	211 reduced nutritional condition	sunken cheeks, sunken abdominal wall, salient ribs	20%	10%	251 severely reduced nutritional condition	entire skeleton visible	15%	20%	215 injuries	scratches, bloodshot eyes	10%	20%	215
reduced sanitary condition	no hygiene, dehydration, scales, scars, keratoses, dark colored skin	5%	5%	215 partially covered	covered with plastic bags	0.8%	1.8%	-

Rothschild went on to list folders [Branches] in which a particular event occurred very often:

235, military police, 248: severely reduced nutritional condition

248, military police: reduced sanitary condition

Diverse, unknown: injuries

Enthrallment/Signs of Fixation

According to Rothschild, signs of fixation were often not openly visible. He showed three different pictures for illustration purposes: One from Branch 215, where one could see cables on the floor next to the corpse whose arms were tied behind the back; one from Branch 248 showing handcuffs; another one from Branch 215 where the corpse had bruises and scrapes on the on the wrist. These would only be indicators for fixation and no opens signs, according to Rothschild. A fourth picture from Branch 220 showed a corpse with swollen wrists which would also be an indicator for some kind of fixation. Rothschild went on to show more pictures from almost all of the branches with open signs or indicators of fixation. He summarized that no pictures from the MP [military police] and the 220 folders showed open signs of fixation, however, both folders would be relatively small. Rothschild provided another chart to summarize the findings:

Body parts tied together	Share in 251	Total Share
wrists	9.8%	1.8%
feet	0.1%	-
both	0.1%	-
neither (even when partially covered in plastic bags)	90%	98,2%

Blindfolds

According to Rothschild, 0.8% in total, and 1.8% of the corpses from Branch 251, were either blindfolded or showed signs of previous blindfolding. He said that the blindfolds were mostly dark grey and made from a rather rough textile. Some were camouflage. He and his colleagues assume that on some occasions, corpses were only blindfolded for the picture (those with camouflage blindfolds). He added that in general, the faces were always unveiled on the photos and showed three pictures, one from Branch 251 with covered eyes, one from “air” with a totally covered face, and the only picture from “diverse” with a covered face.

Judge Kerber asked whether Rothschild wanted to have a break. Rothschild said he did not need one. Kerber ordered a break so the translators could rest.

***

[20 minutes break in proceedings]

***

Injuries

Rothschild went on to explain [if not self-explanatory] different kinds of injuries that could be found on the Caesar files:

blunt violence: hit, kick, downfall

sharp violence: stab, cut ballistic exposure: shooting- or explosion- related (fragments)

soft part compression

electric or thermic exposure

He said that 90% of all injuries shown on the Caesar files were blunt violence, 47.8% of all files showed blunt violence. In total 3,509 out of 6,821 corpses were injured, for Branch 251 55 of 110 corpses were injured. In total 151 corpses showed ballistic trauma, 58 showed soft part compressions and 6 corpses showed unidentifiable injuries.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether this consequently means that 50% of the corpses from folder [Branch] 251 did not show signs of violence-related injuries. Rothschild affirmed.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked whether this statistic consequently does not include nutrition-related findings. Rothschild affirmed.

He went on to name different signs of injuries: hematoma; double-weal injuries which occurred relatively often and require high impulsive powers; scrapes; lacerations; stab wounds; cuts; electric marks; burns.

- Double-weal injuries

Rothschild said that this was one of the most common signs of injuries from the Caesar files. It occurs when a person is beaten with a longish object. It requires much power and one has to strike out, “flail” like one plays tennis or golf. He said that through this high impulse, a lot of energy is set free which creates some kind of “imprint” of the object that was used to beat the person. Usually a slim, even object is used. He also showed a sketch to illustrate the “negative-picture”:

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether this might be done by using a cable. Rothschild affirmed, adding that this would be logical in many cases from the Caesar file where one could see that the injury follows the convexity of the body.

- Formed injuries

Rothschild said these injuries are not random but show certain patterns. etc. For example from a pipe, the end of a belt or if one was beaten with a tire or run over by a vehicle.

- Grazes

Before Rothschild went on to explain grazes, Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether any of these injuries were found on the soles of people’s feet on the Caesar files. Rothschild said he will elaborate on this later.

- Dried-out skin

According to Rothschild, the skin of dead bodies dries out if the upper skin layer “gets lost”. This occurs some time close to death, either shortly before, at the same time, or postmortem. He added that the cause of such dry-outs is not identifiable and a rather unspecific finding.

- Stab injuries

Rothschild said that this was a rather rare finding regarding the Caesar files.

- Bullet wound

According to Rothschild, such injuries are usually characterized by an entry and exit wound, or, if the bullets stay inside the body, only an entry wound.

- Splinter injuries

Rothschild said that for some pictures from the Caesar files, he and his colleagues could not identify whether it was a bullet wound or splinter injury.

- Electric marks

According to Rothschild, this kind of injury was relatively rare for the Caesar files as it is generally difficult to identify on a picture.

- Burns

Rothschild concluded that a total of 3,506 corpses showed one or more of the above-mentioned injuries. He said that hematomas were most common, followed by dried skin, other soft part injuries such as an open abscess, then grazes, and double weal injuries. He added that cuts and stab wounds occurred relatively rarely.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether it would be correct to conclude that 100% of the people at Branch 251 showed hematomas for Branch 251 would be correct. Rothschild affirmed.

Rothschild went on to explain that it was remarkable that injuries in the majority of cases occurred on the legs, followed by arms and feet, and more generally on the torso. He added that the genitals were rarely hurt, though it seemed as if the genitals were exposed on purpose for the pictures. He added that in some exceptional cases, 20 in total, injuries of the back were documented.

Judge Kerber said she “is curious to know” where [in which folders] the cases with back injuries were saved. Rothschild said mainly “air”, 215 and 227.

Prosecutor Klinge also had a question regarding diagnosed injuries and wanted to know whether the small number of back and bottom injuries was due to the way the corpses were documented, namely lying on the back. Rothschild affirmed, explaining that he and his colleagues assume that the corpses were not moved much, just put there so the photographer could take some pictures. In some pictures you could see a helping hand or people in camouflage standing in the background, however, it did not seem as if the bodies were significantly moved into position.

Rothschild went on to summarize the findings of different injuries, providing a chart with the most frequent findings for different folders [Branches]:

Folder [Branch]	Most Frequent Injuries
220, 227, “diverse”	multiple injuries
235, 248 “MP” [military police]	least injuries
“diverse”	severe bullet wounds
215, 216	compression of the soft parts
248, 251	thermic and electro-thermic injuries

Judge Wiedner asked whether “electro-thermic” injuries mean burns due to electric energy. Rothschild affirmed, adding that he would shortly explain a bit more about the limitations of this finding.

Causes of Death

- Starvation

Rothschild showed a picture from Branch [folder] 215 to illustrate the “bird-like” face that is typical for deaths due to starvation.

- Suffocation due to throat compression

He showed more pictures to explain that the mark on the throat of most corpses indicates suffocation due to strangulation rather than hanging as there is no highest point of the mark. Rothschild added that considering the pattern of the stamp and the fact that a v-belt lied next to one of the bodies, he and his colleagues assume that in many cases, a v-belt was used to strangle people. He showed another picture to explain that in cases in which the entire throat is dark violet or black something was pressed against the front throat or it was beaten with an object like a stick. Another picture showed a corpse with blood running from the nose and mouth. Rothschild said this is a typical sign for an injury of the larynx, caused by someone standing on the throat or even jumping on it.

- Bleed to death

Rothschild said that due to the position of the bodies, he and his colleagues could not identify entry points of bullets at the back, however, if a person [like the one shown in the picture in court] is very pale, one can assume that they bleed to death.

- Pulmonary fat embolism

He showed another picture from the Caesar files to illustrate typical signs of pulmonary fat embolism. The front of the corpse was completely blue and the eyes were swollen. Rothschild explained that this is caused by opened blood vessels and squeezed fat cells. This causes drops of fat to move into the capillaries of the lung, so the blood can no longer be infused with gas [oxygen]. Eventually, the person suffocates. Rothschild said in light of the extent of blue color, it seems as if the corpses were “rather fresh”. He added that one can therefore diagnose pulmonary fat embolism as the cause of death.

- Traumatic brain injury

Rothschild said that regarding the Caesar files, almost every traumatic brain injury was of a ballistic nature.

- Polytrauma

He further explained that polytrauma include open fractures, weals, open injuries, and massive blunt violence. According to Rothschild this can be caused by a fall from a certain height or jumping on someone. However, he and his colleagues cannot say with certainty what has caused the polytraumas they diagnosed in the Caesar files.

Rothschild summarized that from all the cases they examined from the Caesar files, they could identify a certain cause of death in 954 cases. Most of the people died from starvation (8.2% in total and 7.3% in 251).

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether it is correct that, according to Rothschild's diagram, a certain cause of death was only identifiable in 15 of the 110 cases in Branch 251. Rothschild affirmed, adding that suffocation due to compression of the soft parts did not play a role regarding the cases in Branch 251 and most of them died from starvation. He went on to provide another chart with the most frequent findings per folder [Branch] regarding causes of death:

Folder [Branch]	Cause of Death
216, 235, 248, "MP" [military police]	starvation
215, 216	suffocation due to compression of the soft parts
220, "air", "diverse"	Bleeding to death/bullet wounds

Rothschild summarized that for all the cases they examined from the Caesar files [6,812], he and his colleagues were able to diagnose a certain cause of death in 14% of the cases. In 86% percent of the cases, they were not able to identify a cause of death with certainty. He showed a picture from folder [Branch] 251 to explain possible causes of death in cases in which they were not able to identify one with certainty. Explanations in cases with unobtrusive corpses include:

External causes of death:

- poisoning
- electric marks (when electric energy is conducted through water, one cannot see electric marks on the body of the person [this answers Wiedner's previous question])
- inner bleeding
- suffocation due to drowning
- suffocation caused by a lack of oxygen
- suffocation due to covering respiratory tracks with a soft object (e.g. pillow)
- "positional suffocation" caused by a forced position of the body (hanging with arms above the head, crucifixion, hyperextension)

Health-related causes of death (acute):

- heart attack
- pericardial tamponade (blood inside the heart sac)
- ruptured main artery
- cerebral infarction
- ruptured aneurysm
- status epilepticus
- status asthmaticus
- pulmonary embolism

Health-related causes of death (symptoms for weeks):

- pneumonia
- intestinal blockage
- blood poisoning
- pleurisy
- liver cirrhosis

[Rothschild showed different pictures from the Caesar files to illustrate possible liver cirrhosis or malnutrition and jaundice due to blood or liver issues.] He added that these exaptational circumstances occurred rather often.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen wanted to know whether jaundice would exclude death from starvation. Rothschild said it is not excluded, often a combination of different factors is possible.<sup>3</sup>

2. Plausibility-report regarding torture and detention conditions

Rothschild went on to explain the findings of their plausibility report regarding torture and detention conditions as well as combat actions (refers to a report by the BKA from November 22, 2017). He said that his presentation includes examples of typical witness statements from the BKA report [he also showed a few pictures from the Caesar files for every description to explain his findings].

“welcome parties”

Description : Detainees were beaten on arrival at the detention facilities.

Forensic Analysis: Plausible: signs of random beatings all over the body identified on the files, signs of kicks (pattern of shoe soles) also found, these findings were in general very similar to each other.

Judge Kerber intervened, saying that Rothschild’s entire second presentation is visually inspected by the court.

“Sexualized violence”

Description : Tied up penises, people were forced to bite each other’s penises.

Forensic Analysis: Incomprehensible as injuries of the genitals rarely occurred on the Caesar files, no indication for targeted violations of the genitals found Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker intervened, asking whether the bodies from the Caesar files were naked or dressed. Rothschild said they were mostly naked or barely dressed. He added that in some cases one can see blood in the genital area, however, the genitals would not be hurt. This indicates that the blood might come from the anus. Rothschild concluded that “sexualized violence”<sup>4</sup> would not be entirely exclusionary, however, there are no concrete findings.

“beatings without tools”

Description : People were beaten by the guards using their bare hands or walls/floor etc.

Forensic Analysis: Plausible, injuries often indicated that people were beaten with fists, heads were hit against a wall, etc.

“beatings with tools”

Description : People were beaten with sticks, belts, billets and green plastic tubes.

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: After reassuring, Judge Kerber said Rothschild shall provide the first of his two pending presentations before a lunch break.

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: For a discussion between Dr. Kroker and Rothschild about the meaning of “sexualized violence”, see below at “Plaintiff Counsels’ Questioning”.

Forensic Analysis: Plausible: injuries like the double weals indicate that people were beaten with plastic tubes (though he cannot say anything about their color), hoses, police batons or broomsticks.

Judge Kerber intervened saying that many times signs of such beatings would be horizontal on the body and asked whether this indicates that the victims were laying down. Rothschild explained that this indicates that the bodies either lay on a table and the person beating moved downwards or that the victims hung from the ceiling and the people beating stood next to them.

"stabblings"

Description : People were beaten and stabbed in the stomach five times.

Forensic Analysis: Such cases were amongst the Caesar files (stab wounds), Rothschild added that when he read such witness' statements he immediately had pictures from the Caesar files in mind.

"Falaqa"

Description : People were beaten on their feet [a sketch illustrating this practice was shown in court].

Forensic Analysis: Bodies on the Caesar files were photographed while lying on the back, so foot soles are in most cases not visible. There were many pictures with severe blunt violence centered at the legs. In general, the legs were hurt most frequently.

"Doulab (tire)"

Description : People were put in a tire and then beaten [a sketch illustrating this practice was shown in court]<sup>5</sup>.

Forensic Analysis: Not really assessable, however sometimes it seemed as if people were "folded" as if they were forced to sit in a tire. Descriptions of "tire" are generally not precisely assessable

"torture using electroshocks"

Description : People were tortured receiving electric shocks.

Forensic Analysis: No indications (neither excludable nor certainly identifiable). Thermic or electric impacts possible

Judge Kerber intervened, asking whether the electric medical patches can be used to torture people with electric shocks. Rothschild said it is generally possible to create electric shocks with such patches as electric energy enters and leaves the body.

Judge Kerber asked if such shocks were "worth it" (a sufficient torture method). Rothschild explained that such shocks cause pain and muscle contractions.

---

<sup>5</sup> For sketches, see SJAC's eleventh Trial Report.

“standing for hours”

Description : Detainees had to stand for hours due to overcrowded cells.

Forensic Analysis: Plausible: corpses from Branch [folder] 251 often showed extremely thick lower legs, which indicates venous insufficiency. The blood stays in the leg and stops circulating, most times only one leg was affected, as described by witnesses.

Rothschild added that they also found indicators for forced kneeling (hematomas and grazes of knees), however, that did not occur often.

“Shabeh (hanging)”

Description : People had to hang from the ceiling with their arms above the head for hours [a sketch illustrating this practice was shown in court].

Forensic Analysis: No direct findings, however conceivable considering signs of fixation at the wrists of many corpses, hematomas oftentimes in combination with random signs of beatings across the entire torso as well as dislocated shoulders as found in some of the pictures could have been caused by “Shabeh”.

Rothschild further explained that it is conceivable that people had to hang upside down or freely with arms above the head, as this severely hinders breathing. Diaphragmatic breathing is especially hindered by long-lasting hanging as the stomach is stretched and the position of the shoulders makes it hard to inflate the breast. He added that this causes a lack of oxygen and constitutes lengthy suffocation.

“German chair”

Description : People were tied to a chair so that their back was overstretched and their spine consequently broke [a sketch illustrating this practice was shown in court].

Forensic Analysis: No concrete indications found in the Caesar files.

“flying carpet”

Description : People were fixated to a board/gadget with hinges and then beaten.

Forensic Analysis: No direct indications, however many times particularly parallel weals were found, indicating that the victim had to be somehow fixated and beaten with a stiff object.

“use of chemicals”

Description : Use of certain acids to burn the skin.

Forensic Analysis: Not exclusionary in light of burns found on corpses from the Caesar files.

“burning”

Description : Use of gasoline and cigarettes to burn the skin of detainees.

Forensic Analysis: There were cases amongst the Caesar files in which one can assume that gasoline was used to cause burns, maybe poured on clothes and then inflamed (some pictures showed pieces of burned textile). Some pictures also indicate that gasoline was poured over the persons' lap and inflamed. Some people seem to have inhaled smoke before their death.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer wanted to know whether people were dressed or naked when gasoline was poured in their lap and inflamed. Rothschild said that in these instances, there were no burnt textiles on top or next to the corpses. It is possible they were either naked or covered with very thin cotton, which completely burnt.

"dragging finger and toe nails"

Description : Witnesses said that fingers and toenails were dragged as means of torture.

Forensic Analysis: Only one instance from the Caesar file where toenails were dragged; seemed relatively fresh and indicates that the nails were dragged violently.

"torture in context of medical treatment"

Description : Piece for piece amputations and targeted beatings on injuries.

Forensic Analysis: Piece for piece amputations cannot be assessed from the Caesar files. In general, partial amputations are not necessarily medically condemnable.

Signs of mistreatment and medical treatment were found on the same individuals (chicken or egg dilemma). One cannot say from the pictures whether these people were first mistreated and received medical treatment afterward or if they received medical treatment and were beaten afterward. However, some signs of beatings are "relatively fresh" while the surgical wounds of the same individual are older. Generally, there were some "strange combinations" of signs of medical treatment and signs of beating.

"psychological torture"

Description : Wooden stick was pressed against people's throats and then released. This procedure was repeated several times.

Forensic Analysis: One cannot see from the pictures whether the stick was pressed and released repeatedly. However, there are pictures in the Caesar file which indicate that peoples' throat was beaten with a stick or a stick was pressed against the throat. Releasing and pressing the stick repeatedly would also be a possible explanation for these signs. It is also possible that a bicycle chain was used to strangle people, in light of certain patterns on the throats

"inedible food and drinks"

Description : Food at the detention facilities was often rotten and drinking water was dirty as detainees had to get it from the toilet.

Forensic Analysis: The quality of food is not assessable from the pictures. Maybe one loses weight due to inedible food and drinks, however not every underweight person indicates that the food was inedible.

“executions and leaving people to die”

Description : Guards left detainees in the cells or on the hallways to die. Some detainees were executed.

Forensic Analysis: It is conceivable that people were left to die considering the state in which several of the corpses were in. It seems as if they were “left adrift”.

Regarding executions, Rothschild explained that from the witness’ statements he imagined that people were detained and then an order was given to execute certain people. Generally, the pictures show indications of killings such as cuts on the throat or fixations and stabs on the same individual, however, this would be the exception. Rothschild said that the bullet wounds found on corpses from the Caesar files are rather atypical for military combats, as those are usually found in the breast area. One individual showed a gunshot in the mouth, in light of the many other injuries of that individual, it seems as if the person was hurt in military combat and then received the finishing shot from someone else, rather than killing himself. Nonetheless, one cannot say that with certainty, execution and a finishing shot are both plausible explanations. Rothschild further added many corpses indicate extreme violence targeted at the throat. However, if this impact was made to kill someone, it would be an unusually intense form of execution. He added that the effect of this impact was obvious during the act and one was aware that what he was doing “cannot go well”.

“indicators for military combat”

Description : The BKA wanted to know whether injuries shown in the Caesar files could be a result of military combat.

Forensic Analysis: In general, one can see corpses with military clothing, bullet wounds, and fixations on the Caesar files. One picture [Rothschild showed it as part of his presentation] shows splinter injuries which might be caused by a grenade during military fighting, other explanations would be that someone threw a grenade into a prison cell or the victim stepped on a mine which caused an explosion and buried the person.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether Rothschild can say anything about the consequences of overcrowded cells with no oxygen. Rothschild said he will talk about that in more detail later.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker asked about the number of possible victims of military combat. Rothschild said that 53 individuals showed the consequences of an explosion, which could have occurred during military actions. Around 100 people had bullet wounds, which could be caused by military actions or executions.

Al-Gharib’s defense counsel Schuster intervened, saying that according to BKA Inspector Deußing, the three folders of the Caesar files were labeled ‘martyrs’, ‘terrorists’, and ‘detainees’. Prosecutor Klinge intervened, adding that the partition they got from Sami [which was analyzed by Rothschild] also included the folder “diverse”. Schuster concluded that this would consequently only include detainees. Klinge affirmed.

***

[65 minute lunch break]

***

3. Indicators for illness-related deaths and detention conditions at Branch 251

Rothschild explained that the BKA report on which the following forensic analyses are based mainly deals with general detention conditions at Branch 251. He said he will present short summaries of the main aspects of the report and then provide his and his colleagues' forensic analysis of these issues using pictures from the Caesar files as explanations.

"size of the detention rooms"

Description : Overcrowded cells: either two people in tiny rooms or 160 people in 4x5m cells, people had to stand (on one foot) for days, "elephant legs" were the result.

Forensic Analysis: Pictures from Branch [folder] 251 clearly indicate that the different thickness of legs was caused by standing on one foot for a long period. However, this is not the so-called elephant-syndrome (Elephantiasis), as the latter is related to the lymphatic system.

"cell of the dead"

Description : Many detainees died within a short period in their cells as there was not enough oxygen.

Forensic Analysis: One cannot affirm this with certainty from analyzing the pictures, however, it is generally possible. Rothschild and his colleagues first thought that the mushroom of foam, which could be seen around the mouths and noses of bodies from all Branches [folders], was caused by waterboarding. However, the bodies were dry. According to the BKA report, it is plausible that water entered the lungs after suffocation due to a lack of oxygen in cells. Nonetheless, this is only an indicator and not proof.

"general hygiene"

Description : Blankets provided in the cells smelled of urine and were contaminated with fleas; people had to wear the same clothes for years.

Forensic Analysis: There are indirect indicators regarding the clothes, as many trousers, etc. in the pictures showed rough fixes, many pieces were worn inside out and pullovers and jackets were used as trousers. However, these are only speculations and indications but there was no proof.

"toilet situation"

Description : People were not allowed to use the toilet or they only could at certain times of the day.

Forensic Analysis: No differentiated assessment possible. However, some corpses from Branch [folder] 251 seem to be daubed with excrement.

"parasites and hygienic circumstances"

Description : No access to hygiene; cells, blankets, etc. contaminated with parasites.

Forensic Analysis: Pictures from Branch [folder] 251 as well as from other folders show so-called vagabond's disease, which is dark and thickened skin due to lice and fleas' wounds. These pictures also indicate that people scratched these wounds with dirty fingers, which causes scabbed skin.

Prosecutor Klinge wanted to know how long it takes for the vagabond's disease to develop. Rothschild said it usually takes weeks, approximately 9 weeks. This would be something that does not develop within only a couple of days. He added that, as can be seen in the pictures, it typically starts at the feet and legs as fleas and lice reach these body parts first. Such wounds which were opened with shards or fingernails by the detainees themselves were categorized as "diverse injuries of the soft parts" in the forensic report.

"body hygiene"

Description : Heterogeneous witness statements: some said they were allowed to take showers, some said they were allowed but did not want to, others said there were no showers at all.

Forensic Analysis: Hygienic condition of bodies from Branch [folder] 251 was "rather OK"; however, in general corpses were often in a bad hygienic condition.

"nutrition"

Description : Heterogeneous witness statements: some "complained on a high level" as they simply said that the food did not taste good; however, others said that they only got food twice a day or even only once a day, some said they got food regularly but not a sufficient amount, e.g. one potato for 20 people and one bottle of water to share.

Forensic Analysis: The latter would definitely not be enough to survive. Some corpses from Branch [folder] 251 "look good from a nutritional perspective." This might, however, be due to the fact that they did not stay at the Branch for long. Others from Branch [folder] 251 are emaciated.

Judge Kerber asked how long it takes to get in such a shape [referring to the picture of an emaciated body from Branch 251]. Rothschild said it depends on how much food one gets aside from the main meals (bread, olives, potatoes). Generally speaking, he added, it takes 4-6 weeks. Rothschild further explained that the heterogeneous witness statements fit with the heterogeneous forensic findings from Branch [folder] 251. He also said that there are pictures of malnourished bodies from every Branch that indicates that these people died from starvation. It would seem somehow "systematic".

"hyperkeratosis"

Description : Referring to statements on malnutrition from above.

Forensic Analysis: Rothschild said he did not learn about hyperkeratosis in his 45 years of experience until he worked on the Caesar files. He explained that hyperkeratosis describes an extremely long-lasting vitamin deficiency. He added that as a European doctor one would only know this from past wartimes. However, there were no findings on hyperkeratosis in Branch [folder] 251.

“drinking supplies”

Description : Heterogeneous witness statements including dirty water from the toilet, one bottle per 10 detainees, irregular drinking supplies, etc.

Forensic Analysis: No findings regarding the lack of drinking supplies in Branch [folder] 251. However, pictures from other Branches [folders] show characteristic crinkles in skin that indicate exsiccosis (dry out).

“medical treatment”

Description : Heterogeneous witness statements: no doctor at all, military doctor was called and provided some basic treatment, detainees were transferred to military hospitals or public hospitals, some medication was provided, no access to medication at all.

Forensic Analysis: As a fact, pictures from Branch [folder] 251 particularly show many signs of medical treatment.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether electrodes were consequently used as medical treatment or to cause electric shocks. Rothschild said that in these cases [Branch 251] electrodes were placed correctly to provide medical treatment. He added that to cause electric shocks, they need to be placed differently.

Rothschild further explained that regarding Branch [folder] 251, as in other folders, one could also identify bandages as signs of medical treatment. However, these bandages were not changed or taken care of in any way after they were first applied. Rothschild further explained that some bandages were rather “primitive self-made” ones. Rothschild also showed a picture from Branch [folder] 251 which showed an external fixator with dirty splints, indicating that some medical treatment was provided, however, no follow-up care was evident.

Rothschild provided the following concluding assessment of his and his colleagues’ forensic findings regarding the Caesar files:

- all pictures show corpses
- many bodies show signs of mistreatment
- many bodies show signs of neglect
- many of the people died from mistreatment and neglect
- some few injuries can be explained by military fighting
- many pictures do not show conclusive findings
- witness statements from the BKA report are plausible from a forensic perspective
- certain differences in quantity and quality between different Branches
  - there are tendencies and trends, nonetheless, apparently similar things are often actually different
  - predominant similarities: blue legs, malnourishment, and beatings with sticks
  - seems as if all Branches have the same “basic equipment of sticks and plastic tubes” (same toolkit) which runs like a golden thread through all Branches
- similarities between most common findings
- seems as if things were conducted in a systematic manner

Judge Kerber asked whether there were many corpses without eyeballs. Rothschild responded that indeed eyeballs were often loose or missing. However, there was almost no blood. He explained that there is a lot of blood if someone removes the eyeballs of a person that's still alive. He concluded that one has to assume that the eyeballs (he showed one of 200 pictures with missing eyeballs) were either removed postmortem or the pictures were manipulated. He said that he and his colleagues assume that the eyeballs were solely removed postmortem as there were often traces from seagulls next to the corpses or wasp-like insects surrounding the eyes and nose.

Judge Kerber said that according to witness Deußing, there was only one file with the number "2012" in folder 251 [the picture was shown in court]. Raslan's defense counsel intervened, asking about the proposed procedure regarding questions, etc. Judge Kerber said that Rothschild shall explain the cause of death regarding this particular file before he can be questioned by the parties. She asked Rothschild to elaborate a bit more on this file or to refer to the short report if he remembers. Rothschild said he cannot remember exactly considering the number of files in total. He said if he remembers correctly, the cause of death was a ballistic trauma-series followed by blood loss.

Judge Wiedner cited from the short forensic report saying that "the corpse shows gun wounds on the torso and arms, the person is rather old, there are no signs of medical treatment, there are injuries incompatible with life, the cause of death is blood loss, a non-natural cause of death". Judge Kerber added that the numbers [2012] were also included in the file name. Rothschild said that they only had the file names, but no metadata.

The prosecutors had no further questions for Rothschild.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker recalled that after an individual examination, and with the highest diligence possible, the forensic expert diagnosed a bullet wound. He then asked Rothschild whether he can also say something about the bullet. Rothschild said that he already mentioned different firearms earlier. He added that in this case, he cannot define the firearm with certainty, as this depends on many parameters. Further, the injuries on the lower arm of the corpse cannot be explained with certainty.

Böcker asked about the possible shooting distance and kind of firearm. Rothschild said it can either be a 9x19mm Luger or a long arm, shot from a certain distance. Böcker asked whether both would be possible. Rothschild affirmed.

Böcker said that in general, gun wounds and blood loss could be explained by military fighting and asked whether this would also be the case for this picture. Rothschild said that it would be possible in general, however, signs of enthrallment would argue against that. He further added that there were no signs of enthrallment in this case.

Böcker recalled the short forensic report which found an "unobtrusive bodily condition" and asked whether the corpse showed signs of torture. Rothschild denied, adding that he also assumes that the body was not enthralled.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker asked Rothschild to explain the different colors of the corpse's upper body [still relating to the picture indicating the year 2012 from folder 251]. Rothschild said it hints at the corpse lying on its stomach. A head-down position could also be a possible explanation.

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking whether it is correct that with relation to people showing signs of medical treatment, one cannot determine a timely order for medical treatment and injuries. Rothschild affirmed, saying that it would be a “chicken or the egg question”.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker referred to the clothing on corpses and asked about the number of cases in which the genital area was uncovered. Rothschild said that it was remarkable that most corpses were undressed and in cases in which the upper body was dressed, the underpants were pulled down on purpose. He added that there was only one case where this did not happen and another one where one could even see someone’s hand pulling the underpants. Rothschild said he and his colleagues found this practice useless.

Dr. Kroker wanted to know why these instances were not quantified. Rothschild said that from a forensic perspective, these instances were irrelevant. Once he and his colleagues realized that this was a common practice, they did not want to go back through all the files to reassess them as it has no forensic value. He added that there are several pictures in which the card with the different numbers was put on the genitals as if the photographer wanted to cover the bareness.

Dr. Kroker concluded that the latter was however only speculation about reasons that Rothschild does not know. Rothschild affirmed.

Dr. Kroker asked Rothschild about typical signs of sexualized violence. Rothschild said that would be injuries of the primary and secondary private parts such as penis, testicles, nipples, and anus. However, the latter was not visible on the Caesar files. He added that there were only 30 pictures of rumps showing “only” beatings from sticks which were also found across the entire back. This was why they were not categorized as sexual violence.

Dr. Kroker cited from the forensic report saying that “genitals were not hurt primarily, when they were hurt, it was to inflict pain”. Rothschild affirmed, saying this is the only reason why he earlier showed the picture of the corpse with beatings across the entire back and sensitive areas. These beatings were targeted at all sensitive body parts, not only the genitals.

Kroker asked Rothschild whether he thinks that sexual violence only covers violence targeted at sexual organs directly, rather than more general violence. Rothschild said that for him, violence is considered sexualized if it is directed at the genital area or caused to humiliate someone. Kicking someone between one’s legs, from his understanding, does not count as sexual violence, whereas biting someone’s penis does. Nonetheless, regarding the Caesar files, violence affecting genitals and private parts would be of a more general nature.

Dr. Kroker recalled that Rothschild and his team received a second batch of Caesar files and asked whether there were any differences. Rothschild said this was in 2017 when they got around 400 additional pictures, but he cannot remember any more details. He said that he and his team were not surprised when they got these “Sami” files.

Dr. Kroker referred to “signs of death” and wanted to know at which point after someone’s death these signs would be visible. Rothschild said that livor mortis starts after 15-20 min and after 2.3 hours the corpse is stiff, they are clearly visible on the torso. He added that, at room temperature, decay usually starts 24 hours after the death.

Dr. Kroker wanted to know whether Rothschild can provide any conclusions regarding actions against females. Rothschild denied, adding that amongst the files he and his colleagues analyzed, there was only one female corpse, which was mostly covered.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked Rothschild, if possible, to estimate, based on his experience, when the photographic documentation of the corpses took place. Rothschild said that he cannot estimate. He and his colleagues always asked themselves whether there were certain cooling facilities. He said that corpses from all Branches [folders] “looked rather fresh”. They were either photographed in the afternoon or the following day or stored in a refrigerator in-between. He concluded that an estimation of the timeframe between death and the picture depends on the cooling of the bodies.

Plaintiff Counsel Reiger recalled that Rothschild mentioned that one can suffocate from hanging due to the position in which he is forced to stay. Rothschild affirmed. Reiger asked whether there are more ways of suffocating. Rothschild said one can also suffocate from the “flying carpets” and “German chair” when forced to stay in that position for hours.

Reiger asked about any other “possibilities leading to suffocation”. Rothschild said it depends on the body and how exactly it is positioned. He added that, in general, these [referring to the methods described in the BKA reports and assessed earlier] are all “treatments” that can lead to a lack of oxygen.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked Rothschild for his “impressive expert report”.

Prof. Dr. Rothschild was dismissed as witness and expert witness.

Proceedings adjourned at 3:05 pm.

Day 42 of Trial – November 4, 2020

The hearing began at 9:35am with 6 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutor Klinge. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared as a replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Mohammed.

Testimony of criminal inspector Hörl

Admonitions were read out to Mr. Hörl, a 22-year old criminal inspector from the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA), who testified on the content and discovery of an exhibit.

Judge Kerber asked Hörl to explain how he and his colleagues discovered and analyzed the exhibit. Hörl said he was assigned by criminal Chief Inspector Deußing to evaluate the exhibit, a CD and accompanying handwritten note, which was found during the search of Raslan’s flat in Germany. He said he examined it together with a translator, who confirmed that the file name of the only file on the CD was identical to the handwritten note. It said [information redacted]. Hörl said that according to the translator, it was probably a CV. However, it was written in single, disconnected letters, written from left to right. Once the translator got a right-aligned version, she confirmed that the document was indeed a CV. [Copies of the original file, the right-aligned version, and the German translation were shown in court]. Hörl said it first mentioned personal information: [name redacted], date of birth, mother’s name, and place of birth. He further explained that the CV was written from a first-person perspective. The career-path was described as follows: middle-school, university, military service, General Intelligence Directorate, political science studies, dissertation in Tehran, lecturer at the General Intelligence Directorate, and office for public service. Hörl went on to explain that according to the CV, the person was in contact with the opposition, was detained in Branch 285 in July 2012, and deserted after his release. Hörl said if he remembers correctly, it said that the person fled to Jordan and made his desertion public via two Arabic TV channels. The CV further said that he is seeking asylum and he and his family would be in danger as the refugee community would be infiltrated. According to Hörl, the CV also mentioned personal data of the alleged wife and dates of birth of the alleged children, as well as contact details such as the Skype name of the author of the CV. Hörl explained that he checked the information about this person and heard a witness in March, after the search [of Raslan's flat]. This witness said that he was in contact with [name redacted] and a similar person in Jordan in 2013/14. According to Hörl, the witness further said that he put this similar person and Raslan in contact and organized a phone call between the two of them. Hörl said he found out that two short term visas were issued for this similar person in 2016 with the destination listed as Switzerland. He added that the CV is similar to Raslan's vitae, which was also confirmed by the German Intelligence Service.

Judge Kerber asked about the name of the witness. Hörl said he is called [name redacted].

Judge Kerber said copies of the original CV, the right-adjusted version, and the German translation were visually inspected. She asked one of the court translators to confirm Hörl's statements on the content of the document. The translator said it says [name redacted]: overview, and career and confirmed what Hörl just said.

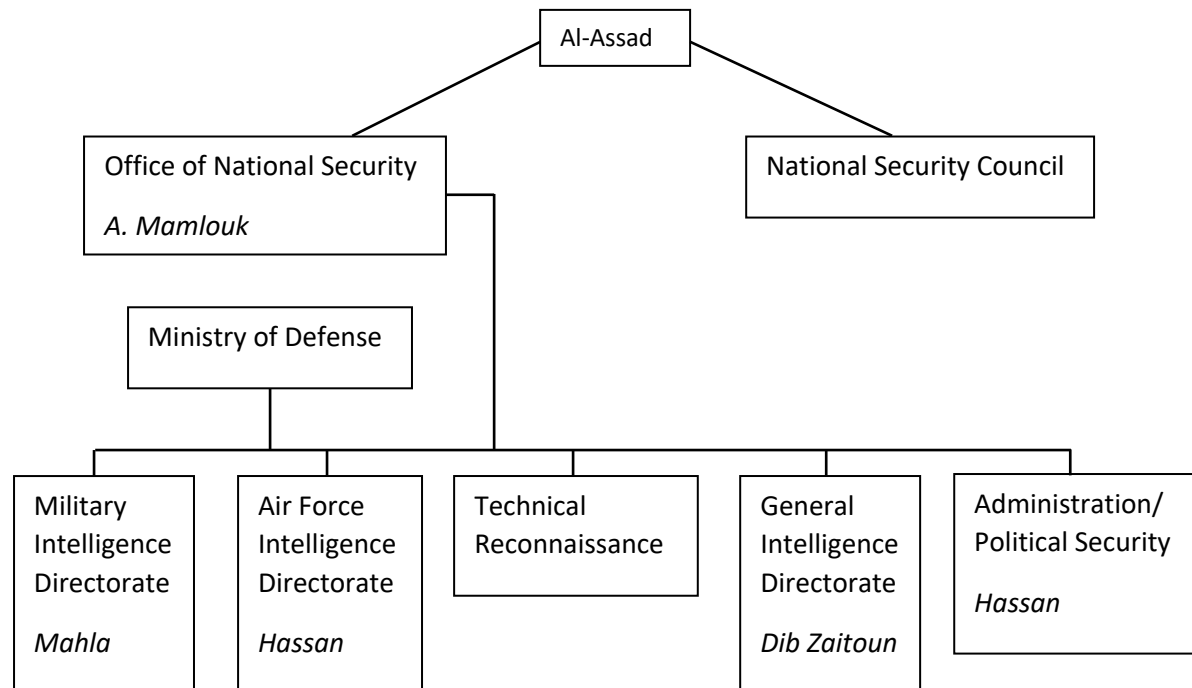

Hörl was dismissed as a witness.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker had a question regarding the picture dated 2012 from Branch 251, which was amongst the Caesar-files. He asked the court to have a look at it again and asked the translators to explain what exactly is written on the paper shown in the picture. The translators said it says 428 [one number could also read 421, When Judge Kerber asked the translators to clarify, both of them agreed that it reads 428] in all 5 lines.

Judge Kerber continued to read out a report from the German Intelligence Service (BND) from June 2016 which is in the case file. The report referred to the investigations of the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) regarding the Syrian civil war. It contains findings from the BND and BKA about the structure of the Syrian Intelligence Services and militias. The first part of the reports includes correspondence between the BND and BKA while the second part, in form of annexes, includes eight diagrams of the Syrian Intelligence Services and 15 diagrams of militias. The preface of the report explained that there were changes of personnel in leadership positions to explain why some names of leading figures are unknown. Judges Kerber and Wiedner began to read out the report while the respective diagrams were shown in court [please note that the following diagrams and descriptions are not an exact replication of the BND report, but based on what the Trial Monitor was able to note while the report was read out in court; all information as of 2016 if not otherwise indicated]:

As of February 2016: Structure of the Syrian Intelligence Service and its tasks in Germany and the EU:

- 1) Military Intelligence Directorate
- 2) General Intelligence Directorate
- 3) Administration/Political Security
- 4) Air Force Intelligence Directorate
- 5) Technical Reconnaissance

Relationship of positions:

Two Intelligence Directorates and the Technical Reconnaissance are subordinate to the Ministry of Defense, while the General Intelligence Directorate is subordinate to the President and one of the Intelligence Directorates is subordinate to the Ministry of Interior. The Office of National Security and the National Security Council are the control mechanisms of all Intelligence Services.

Mandate:

All Syrian Intelligence Services are tasked to fight activists who are 'hostile' towards the regime, terrorism and extremism. There are consequently overlapping competencies, however, certain areas of focus are visible. Main target abroad are the Muslim Brotherhood and the Kurdish community. Since the start of the revolution, Syrian Intelligence Forces are increasingly targeting regional and domestic aims. Since the beginning of refugee movements from Syria, Syrian Intelligence Services are also increasing their spy activities in Germany. The concept of 'terrorists' especially in a domestic context, has a very broad definition.

1) General Intelligence Directorate

Subordinate to and controlled by: President directly

Control Mechanisms : Office of National Security and National Security Council

Head : Mohammed Dib Zaitoun since July 24, 2012

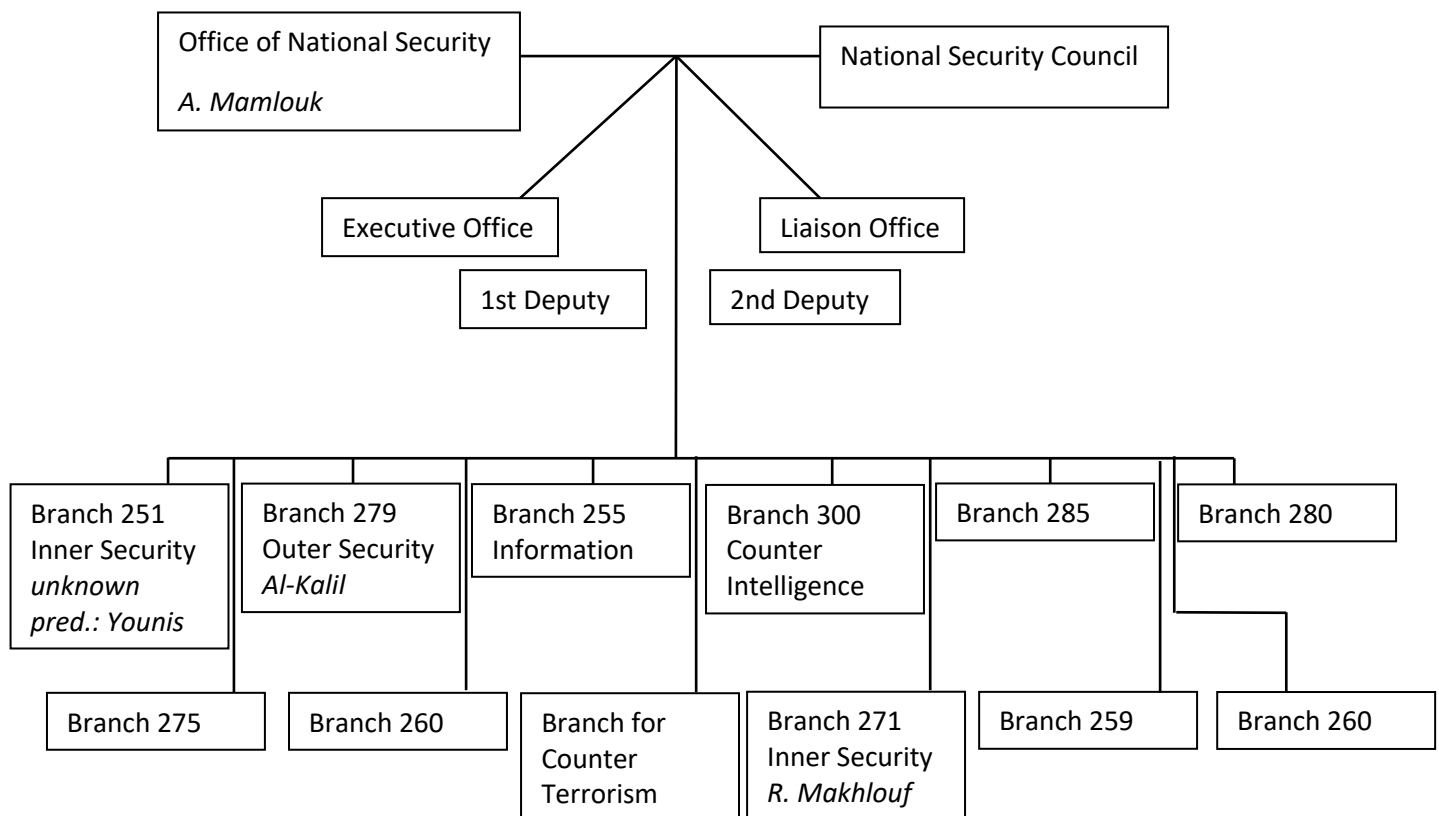

Predecessor : Ali Mamlouk from 2005 – 2012

Mandate : focus: general espionage and counter-espionage, domestically and abroad; fight against terrorism; executive powers

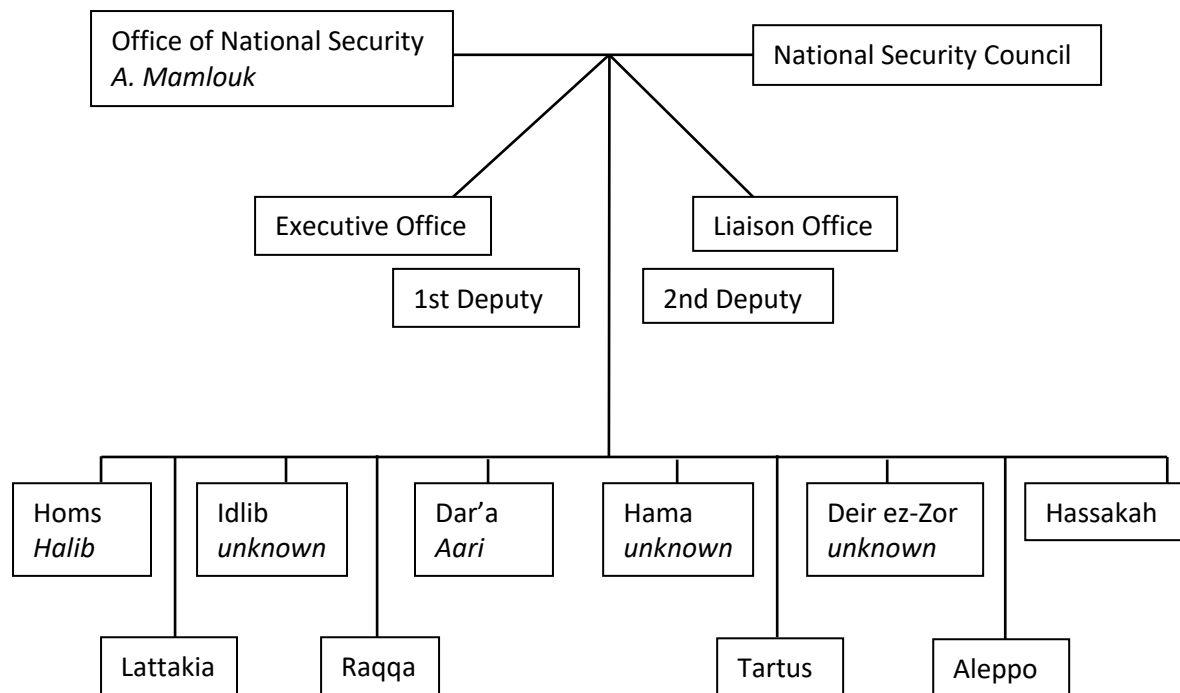

Capacity : ca. 8,00 – 10,000 people

Structure : central organizational division, followed by regional organization structure with field offices in different governates

Structure of the General Intelligence Directorate:

Regional Structure as of November 2015:

2) Military Intelligence Directorate ("Al-Askari")

Subordinate to and controlled by: General Staff of the Ministry of Defense

Control Mechanisms : Office of National Security and National Security Council

Head : Mohammed Mahalla since March 2015

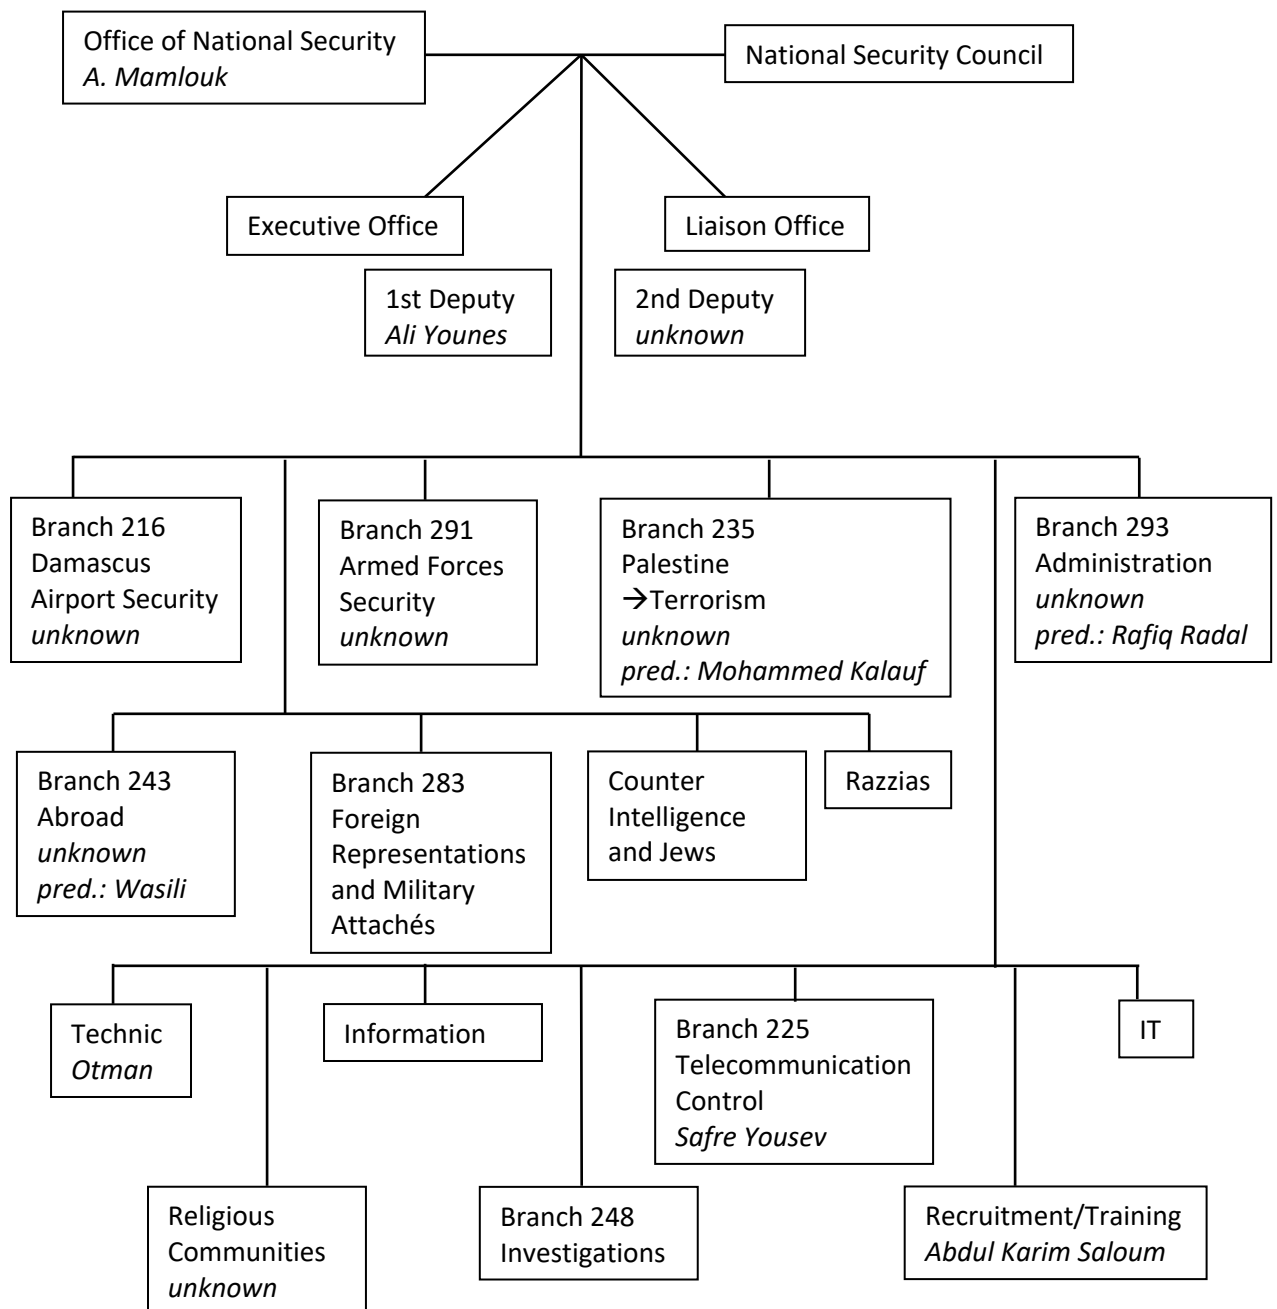

Predecessors : Rafiq Shahadah from July 2012 – March 2015;
Shafiq Masa from July 2009 – July 2012

Mandate : focus: fights against terrorism, mainly through "Palestine Branch" 235; foreign mandate initially only Lebanon, now more general; counter-espionage; security of armed forces; represented in embassies

Capacity : 8,000 – 10,000 people

Structure : regional structure, combining multiple provinces

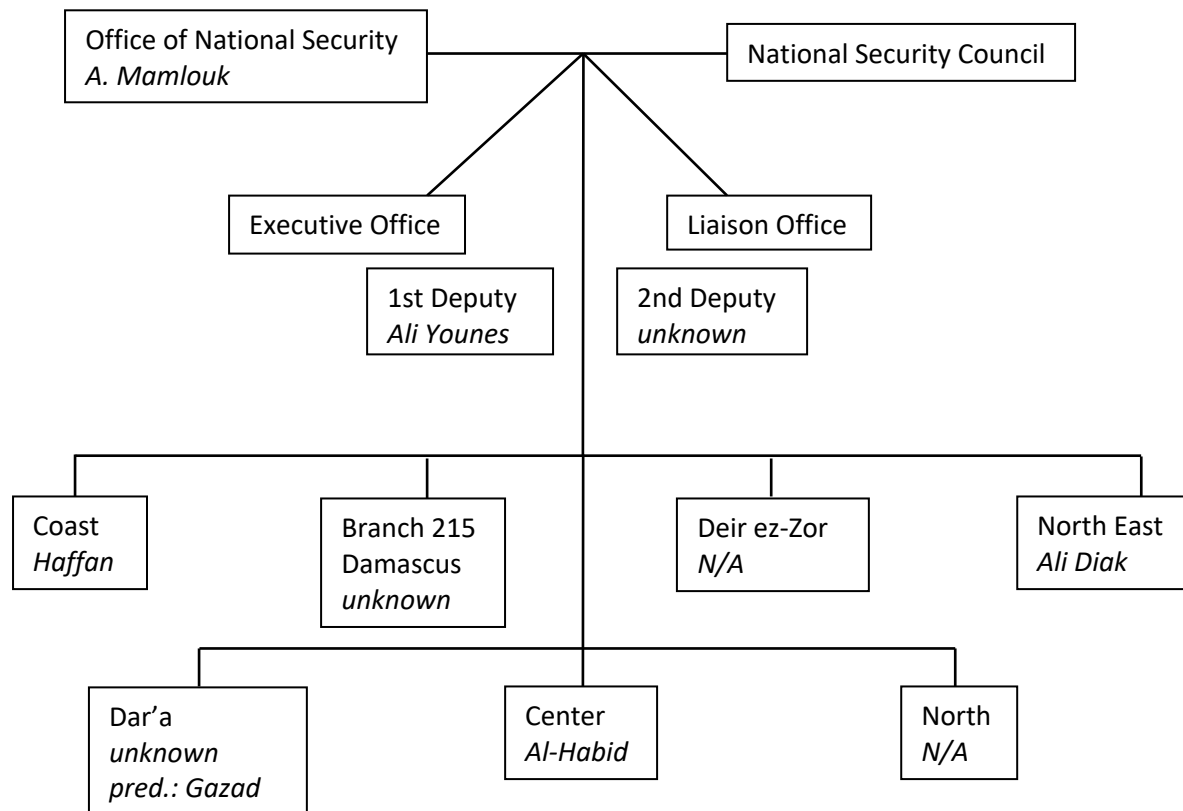

Structure of the Military Intelligence Directorate:

Regional Structure:

Regional structure might slightly differ as Damascus 218 was closed after withdrawal from Lebanon and allegedly combined with Branch 215 in 2009.

3) Political Security

Subordinate to and controlled by: Ministry of Interior and the President

Control Mechanisms : Office of National Security and National Security Council

Head : Naziih Hassoun (maybe Zuhair Hamad)

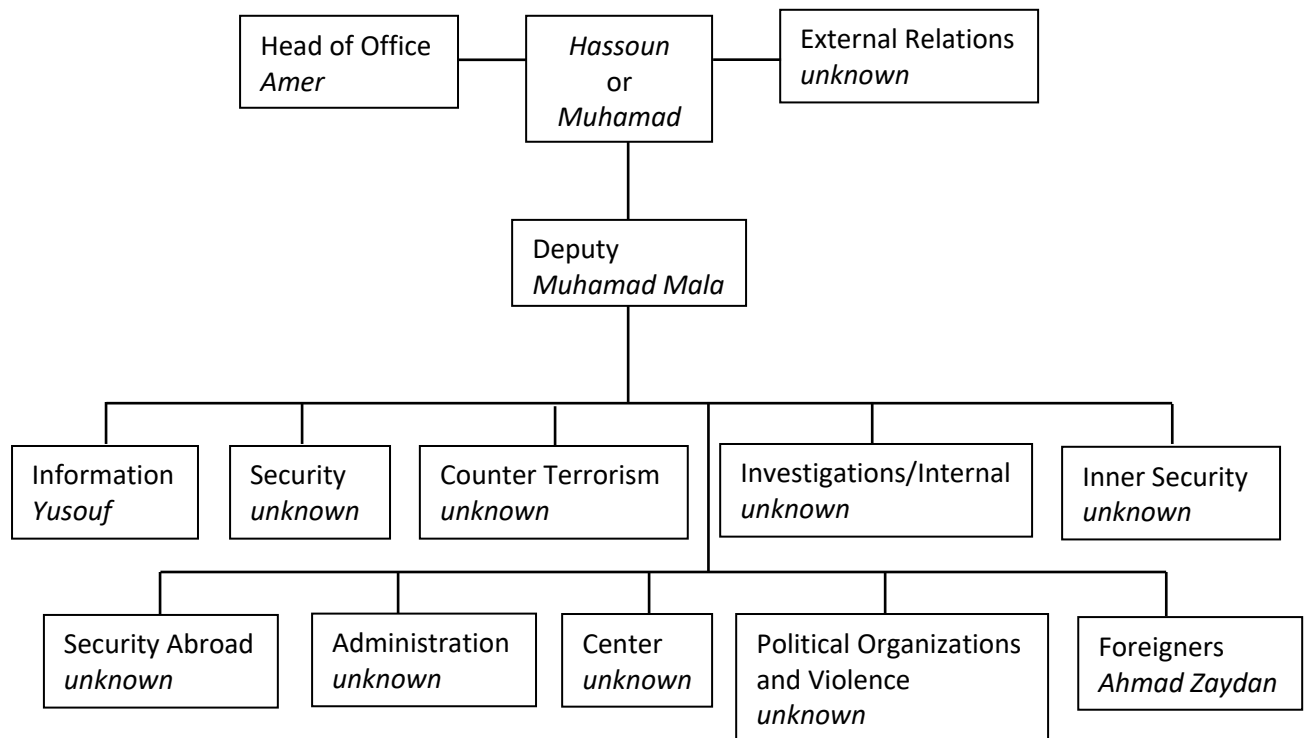

Predecessors : Rostom Ghazali from June 2012 until April 2015 when he died in an attack; Mohammed Dib Zaitoun from 2009 – 2012

Mandate : politically relevant topics e.g. Surveillance of general situation, parties/organizations, students, preachers, events, public service; fight against terrorism

Capacity : 5,000 – 6,000 people

Structure : organizational structure not definite, regional structure as well

Structure:

4) Air Force Intelligence Directorate

Subordinate to and controlled by: general Staff of the Ministry of Defense

Control Mechanisms : Office of National Security and National Security Council

Head : Jamil Hassan since 2009

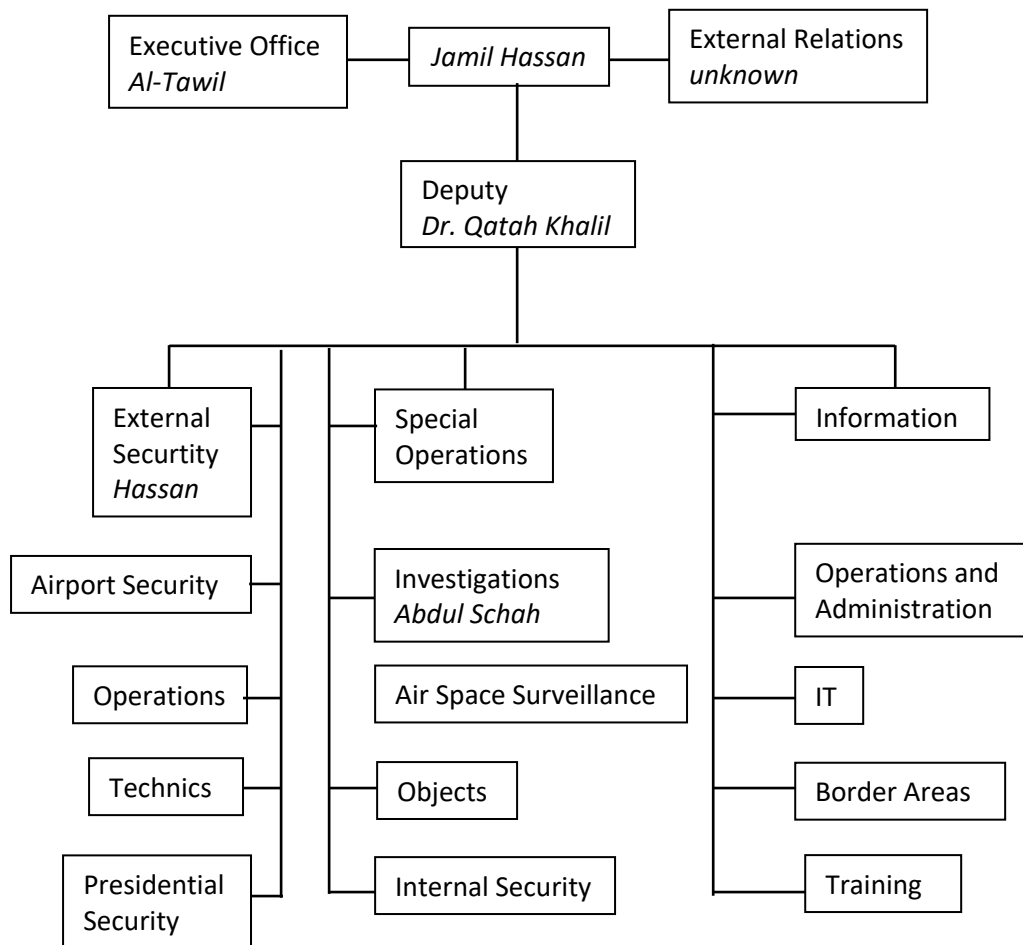

Predecessor : Abdel Fattah Suleiman from April 2006 – June 2009

Mandate : focus: safety of air traffic, airports and security personnel of the Syrian Arab Airlines, massive defense of armed oppositionist

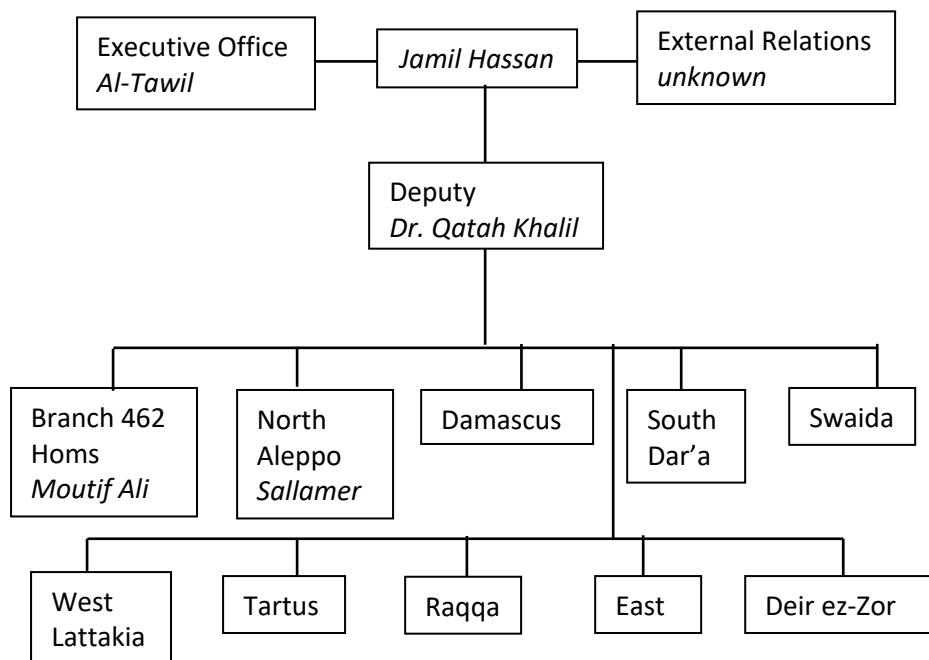

Capacity : 5,000 – 6,000 people

Structure : central organization with regional structures, according to airports

Structure as of November 2013:

Regional Structure as of August 2013:

5) Technical Reconnaissance

Was founded in 2011, the BND has only rudimentary knowledge about this Directorate. Its main tasks are communication intelligence and consolidation of different services. The precise competencies based on the person heading the Directorate, are unknown, due to certain self-comprehension.

Militias affiliated to the Regime:

Personnel capacities of the military were reduced, since 2013 militia structures are increasing, the BND assumes that there are three different types: NDF, which is paid by the Ministry of Defense and closest to a state-affiliated militia; Intelligence Service militias; private militias, which are often composed by an inner circle surrounding the leading figure, often financed by businessmen, high decision-making powers.

NDF : Members of the NDF are usually from the regional population. The ethnical composition therefore depends on the respective region. They are equipped with AK47 Kalashnikovs, heavy machine guns and ZU-23 anti-aircraft guns. Members are paid according to their tasks. The NDF is considered as the “first row” regarding pillages. They are allegedly taking bribes from buses at check points. Many state employees join the NDF due to attractive payment options.

Private militias: Private militias are led by Rami Makhlouf, affiliated with SANA TV channel and Samir Darwish aka. Dr. Samir. Members of private militias are usually Alawites. The militias are affiliated to the NDF, however, receive more money thanks to Rami Makhlouf

Shabiha : The term derives from the Arabic word “Shab” which means ghost. Shabiha is a loose network for organized crime, which after 2011 steadily developed into people’s militia. It was integrated to the “people’s committee” and sponsored by Rami Makhlouf and incomes from different criminal acts. Shabiha is composed mainly from Alawites and Christians and acts as an unofficial arm of state-cronyism. It remains unclear who is giving orders. Their treatment of opposition members shows that their acts are still not entirely compatible with the regime. The Shabiha started to merge with all other militias. The actual dissolving is not confirmed.

After the report was read out, Judge Kerber ordered a short break to call the witness who was scheduled for the following day, but did not respond to the summoning.

***

[10 minutes break to call the witness scheduled for tomorrow]

***

Judge Kerber announced that the judges were able to contact the witness, who was at home and did not know whether he would make it to the court in time. The witness further said that he wants to use his right under German law, which allows him as a relative of one of the defendants not to testify. Judge Kerber cancelled the session of the following day.

The proceedings adjourned at 11:00am.

Next hearings will take place on November 17, 2020.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 18

Hearing Dates: November 17, 18 &amp; 19, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 43 – November 17, 2020

Christopher Engels from the Commission for International Justice and Accountability (CIJA) testified as an expert before the Court. He explained that CIJA has collected evidence of crimes committed by parties in the Syrian conflict to use at future international criminal investigations. The material includes testimony from seven witnesses who confirmed that Anwar Raslan was the head of the Interrogation Unit at Branch 251 - “the most effective, dangerous, and secretive Branch.” Engels explained how CIJA acquires, corroborates, and preserves evidence, as well as the organization’s involvement with the trial in Koblenz.

Trial Day 44 – November 18, 2020

On the second day of Christopher Engels’ testimony, he discussed two reports compiled by CIJA pertaining to Anwar Raslan. Throughout the reports, which were requested by German authorities, Raslan was referred to by a codename: the Czech. Engels elaborated on the CIJA’s preparation of the reports, and also explained the hierarchy of Branches under the Syrian government.

The Court announced that the trial against Eyad would be separated on Feb. 17 with a final verdict to be delivered on Feb. 24.

Trial Day 45 – November 19, 2020

The witness, P19, was a 43-year-old female journalist from Damascus. She helped organize demonstrations across the city. As a result, she was detained in various security Branches, including Branch 251. The witness recounted the night when security forces stormed her family’s home, found medications she planned to send to activists in Homs, then detained her and her siblings. She described how security personnel perpetrated sexual violence against women, and told the court about the methods of torture she witnessed which resulted in the death of other detainees.

Day 43 of Trial – November 17, 2020

Bessler appeared for Reiger. Mrs. Köhler was the German-English translator. Scharmer asked if the witness could have headphones to hear better. Kerber said that the headphones were for Arabic translation, but Arabic translation was not provided during this session.

The proceedings began after 9:00AM. There were around five spectators and two individuals from the media in the audience.

Testimony of Christopher Engels

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

The witness was 45-year-old Christopher Engels who works for the Commission for International Justice and Accountability (CIJA), an NGO that collects evidence from conflict zones for future international criminal law investigations. Questions were posed in German and the witness testified in English.

Note from the Court Monitor: Translation inaccuracies were discussed several times.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Kerber asked Engels if he worked for CIJA. Engels confirmed and noted that he works in the Netherlands.

Kerber asked Engels if he was related to either of the accused by blood or marriage. Engels said no.

Kerber noted that Engels sent a PowerPoint to the Court, then asked Engels to tell the Court about his background. Engels explained that he is an American lawyer who studied in the United States and has two master degrees. He acquired international experience in the Balkans where he worked with international and local experts to establish a court in Bosnia and Herzegovina to deal with war crimes. This was a big step for international criminal law. Prior to that, he dealt with tribunals in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the Hague. However, when they built a court in Bosnia and Herzegovina, he decided to stay there before they gave it to local lawyers. Afterward, he became an advisor on war crimes and was engaged in different regions. For example, he worked as an advisor in Afghanistan with Afghani legal teams, as well as in south-east Asia and in Iraq.

Kerber asked Engels about CIJA. Engels asked if he could use the PowerPoint [which he started using]. Engels explained that he had been working with CIJA for six years as the Director of Investigations and Director of Operations, and he oversees the work at CIJA. CIJA began working in 2011 on issues pertaining to the situation in Syria and the Syrian regime. It was established as an NGO because it saw a gap in international criminal law investigations: The most important evidence is collected after a conflict, not during it because there is no court of law. The goal was to fill that gap since evidence was either lost or people disappeared. They worked with Syrian colleagues and collected evidence that could be important.

Kerber asked if CIJA began to work in 2011. Engels confirmed it was toward the end of 2011.

Wiedner asked if [the work undertaken in the beginning of CIJA] was also regarding Syria. Engels confirmed and noted that to accomplish this goal, CIJA worked with Syrian colleagues and provided them with its expertise, then made sure to hold the information until needed. They thought that it would be a short-term project (maybe a year) then give the information to a court. Unfortunately, that did not happen. Since 2011, CIJA has collected material and has interviewed people. The original thinking changed from working with an international court to domestic courts. It conducted investigations related to Syria and court procedures. It allied with other authorities related to criminal procedures. Some European agencies started to ask CIJA about information it had. The purpose was to support international justice and, on a smaller scale, to support investigations and so, they did it gladly. Later, they became proactive and prepared a document whenever they heard about a person in Europe or North America.

Scharmer corrected the translation and said that he did not contact the person. Instead, he filed a dossier about this person.

Wiedner asked if those dossiers were about people who came into consideration as possible suspects. Engels confirmed, pointed to the PowerPoint and explained that CIJA has a detailed scope of work.

The primary focus is collecting material. The second focus is interviewing witnesses. The third focus is collecting secondary material. CIJA has more than 800,000 documents from the Syrian regime (mostly from the intelligence services and the Syrian military) that CIJA smuggled out of Syria. When the material was outside of Syria, it was scanned, copied and stored. CIJA worked on the digital copies not to harm the original versions and to make the work efficient. It was important to them to answer to others, so a key point was to make the material searchable (for names, locations, etc). Engels said that CIJA wanted to preserve material so it was not lost, but was also [securely protected]. He explained that when one party leaves a conflict area, CIJA's people enter it and collect evidence. They package the material and move it to a safe location. They do not review the material there. They package it and securely move it elsewhere before they can get it outside of Syria. When the opportunity arises (it may take days or a year) to get the material outside Syria, it is brought out of the country. Then they scan the documents and store the originals in archive boxes. Each page is barcoded and examined afterwards by an analyst. No assessment is done about which documents belong together (e.g., if five pages belong to the same document). They do not make assumptions, which is important to preserve the work. Generally, that is how they handle the material. They also have other means of collecting evidence that are used less often: (1) collecting documents from a person with knowledge (e.g., if a person was there and left, then CIJA collected it), (2) interviewing people who handed over the material, and (3) an electronic format through electronic devices like laptops (but none of the material regarding the trial was collected that way) or electronic devices on which someone else collected material, then CIJA acquires the device, scans it, and gives back the devices (no material regarding the trial was collected this way).

Kerber asked if the documents were given barcodes. Engels confirmed that the documents were given barcodes and numbers. Every translation has the same number. CIJA conducted more than 2,500 interviews with witnesses, including: eyewitnesses, former regime members and victims (over 1,000 detainees). CIJA saw the need to speak with witnesses. The problem was that they often talked to a witness years after an incident occurred. CIJA is an NGO and not a government. Anyone working for CIJA has experience in the past with international organs and governments. CIJA does not write down the statements from witnesses word-for-word. Instead witnesses told stories to CIJA who accepted the information as a third party. The reason why CIJA was involved was so that witnesses can be helpful in several ways. First, documents showed information that was supported by the information from interviews. Second, information from witnesses helped fill the gap in evidence. Third, witnesses gave background information about the conflict. Some drew images of where and how the crimes happened which was important information for colleagues who were investigating. Finding witnesses is the key purpose of their work, because the vast majority are still in Syria which means that they do not have access to European authorities and their voices are not heard at all. Law enforcement authorities are not available to speak directly with witnesses during a conflict.

Kerber asked if CIJA informs witnesses of their rights or if it is simply a conversation between two persons privately. Engels confirmed that CIJA has a protocol for speaking to witnesses. CIJA staff members participate in mentor programs and are trained on how to speak with witnesses. The focus is whether the information is sensitive and not to ask leading questions. They explain to witnesses who CIJA is and why they are speaking to them. They say clearly that the witnesses' information may be used, then ask if they have any security concerns or if they talked to others. They guarantee that witness names will not be used without approval, otherwise names are redacted. If anyone wants to speak with a witness (e.g., prosecution authorities), CIJA asks why. CIJA noticed that there was tension between the court and the witness. For example, an investigator might tell the witness to testify in the Hague and when it does not happen, the witness loses faith in justice.

Wiedner asked if the documents of the witnesses were all anonymized due to security concerns or because witnesses did not approve. Engels confirmed and explained that open-source material would not be part of today's presentation. In this part, he wanted to attempt to clarify the structure of the military and other intelligence services, like political security and the Air Force Intelligence Services. It is important to understand that the main bodies are responsible and coordinate with each other. Engels expanded on the following:

1. National Security Bureau (governmental authority): Head of the single panels. Highest level panel regarding the coordination of intelligence services.
2. Central Crisis Management Cell: Ad-hoc panel that includes everyone from number 1 and other ministries. It was established to manage the crisis. Afterwards, it became the highest-level security body. First document was from March 2011 and the last from July 2012, which was the main period CIJA focused on. It was established by Al-Assad and informs decisions. It dictates the policy for other procedures.
3. Security committees in the regional governorates.

Kroker highlighted a mistake in the translation: "governorate" does not mean "government" but "province". Engels said that one can use "governorate" or "province" and that each governorate has their own security organizations.

Engels said that this slide was a summary. It showed how the collection of information escalated quickly in April 2011. The regime started using language like "the time for tolerance is over" and "use force against them." On August 05, 2011, the regime ordered more arrests and the use of the paramilitaries to control the situation.

Wiedner asked if CIJA had the relevant documents. Engels confirmed. He did not have the originals with him. They are archived. He only had copies. All of the scans have a number at the top left corner with "Et" (English translation). There is a barcode. Under the barcode is the number and the English translation. On the slide, the key point was the first highlighted line that said "18 April 2011" and "CCMC". The top left said "military intelligence." The document was exclusively for the head of the Branches. It said (1) "Time for tolerance is over. Time to use all means of weapons," (2) "Confrontation with demonstrators as follows: No release of detainees." There was also a point to train selected personnel to use weapons. Civilian party members were included. At the end of the document, there was the signature of the head of the military intelligence services, and a directive that the message should be sent to all Branches. It was indeed sent to all authorities in the country.

Wiedner asked if "party members" refers to the Al-Ba'th Party. Engels confirmed. He pointed to a slide on the PowerPoint which had a snapshot of the document from CCMC that was from April 20, 2011 and contained the phrases "new stage to fight conspiracy", "use of force", "orders to make plans", and "in coordination with the military apparatus."

Wiedner asked from where Engels got the document. Engels said that he would talk about it later.

Judge Kerber asked if Engels has hard copies of the document. Engels confirmed that he has hard copies of all the documents that are included in the slides. The first document was from April 18 [no year mentioned] and was collected in March 2015 from the office of the military intelligence in Idlib. In 2016, it was transported from Syria to Turkey. In March 2016, a colleague personally handed it over to the team. On May 23, CIJA received it among a collection of boxes. They had six boxes of material from the same day and location.

Wiedner asked if they took the original as a paper from the office. Engels confirmed.

Klinge asked if Engels has more information about the person who collected the six boxes. Engels said that the person who collected the boxes cooperated with CIJA for years. He was a Syrian and was at that location, which is why he had access to the office. He was responsible for handing the box to someone else in Syria.

Klinge asked if the person worked with the regime intelligence services or if he was there coincidentally. Engels said the person was only able to access the office after the regime left Idlib.

Wiedner asked about the document dated April 20, 2011. Engels said that the document is from the bundle (box number = SY.P013).

Wiedner asked if it was brought out of Syria the same way. P said yes, as part of the same bundle.

Kerber asked if Engels wanted a break. Engels said yes, after 10 minutes. Engels continued that “new phase, engagement of the army” lays out the idea that the regime was responsible for the detention. A document from August 5, 2011 from the National Security Bureau was sent to the security committees in the provinces and shows how the Bureau says that they should engage in collective security campaigns and on whom to focus, then defines what they see as the problem (generally, opposition of the regime). Here, it specifies the targets: people who finance the demonstrations, members of the coordinating committees, people with communication abroad and foreign media. The documents say what to do after getting control by joint committees and that the National Security Bureau should be informed.

Wiedner asked how it entered their possession. Engels said that it was collected in Ar-Raqqa at the military security detachment in Tal Abyad [تل أبيض] directly from the intelligence office, then personally carried to the headquarters to be scanned on November 18, 2013.

Wiedner asked if the person was a member of the regime. Engels said no, it was collected after the regime left the location.

Kerber asked if Engels had copies of these three documents with him. Engels confirmed.

***

[20-minute-break]

***

Engels explained that the next slide was a summary of another longer slide. Bigger circles represented CCMC. Smaller circles represented the National Security Bureau.

Judge Kerber read out the document which included the names:

- Mohammad Sa'eed Bekhtyan محمد سعيد بخيتان
- Hasan Turkmani حسن تركماني
- Dawoud Rajha داوود راجحة Minister of Defence
- Mohammad Ash-Sha'aar محمد الشعار Minister of Interior
- Mohammad Deeb Zaytoun محمد ديب زيتون head of political security
- Hisham Bekhtyar هشام بختيار head of the National Security Bureau
- Ali Mamlouk علي مملوك
- Abdelfattah Qodsiyya عبد الفتاح قدسية head of military intelligence
- Jamil Hasan جميل حسن head of the Air Force intelligence

Engels said that [these people were involved in] a chain of messages [that was forwarded] from the National Security Bureau (NSB) to the provinces, and from superiors to their subordinates. The key point here is that the messages were sent down.

Next were examples confirming that the messages were sent from the Branch level to members, starting with the NSB to heads of the Branches, then from the Branches to lower levels. The message said that “you are requested to arrest inciters/financers/who speak with foreign parties/members of coordinating committees.” Wiedner asked from where they got the original. Engels said that this document is from the detachment in Ar-Raqqa.

Next was an example of the response, which came from the head of the Political Security Branch in Ar-Raqqa (with his signature) and was forwarded to his superior. It informed him how the Branch “worked as requested, and arrested inciters and demonstrators.” The [original physical copy of the] document went from the Political Security Branch on April 5, 2013 to Turkey then to CIJA headquarters in March 2014. The original was scanned and archived.

Next, Engels showed a document with the instructions that were given to local-level authorities. For example, interrogators were instructed to ask the following questions: “You have photos in your phone from the demonstration, what did you do there? What was your role? Was it uploaded online? Was it shared with foreign media? Tell us who demonstrated and who incited others? Who are the members of the coordinating committees?” Engels said that the redacted information in the document was because [the detainee] was asked to mention names during the interrogation. The document was collected from the east region from a colleague, then came to CIJA.

[Oehmichen pointed out that the translation of “colleague” was wrong. He asked if “colleague” actually meant “team member.” Engels confirmed. It is from a team member.]

The next slide was an example of a wanted list from the Military Intelligence Service sent to the military commanders. It contained the names of wanted individuals. If someone was wanted, it was because his name was mentioned by someone else during an interrogation. The head of the Intelligence Branch gave instructions for the military commander. The document was handwritten and signed.

Wiedner asked from where Engels got the document. Engels said the document went from Dar’a, to Brigade 38’s headquarters in Sayda [صيدا] then to CIJA (after the regime withdrew from Sayda). Engels mentioned that a witness was detained in the Political Security Branch in Deir ez-Zor and was named in the document. CIJA interviewed 16 witnesses whose names appeared in the documents. CIJA knew the document was a list of detainees because one of the witness’s names appeared there. The document was received from the Political Security Branch in Deir ez-Zor and sent to the headquarters of CIJA. It is still there.

Engels described detention in the Political Security Branch, including the conditions there—solitary cells, no lights, general abuse, abuse during interrogations, forcibly signing and fingerprinting papers without reading them, and transfer to other Branches.

Engels then explained how statements of the witnesses were corroborated with information. In the Caesar photos, there are numbers indicating the Branch where the person was detained. CIJA was able to tie photos to the relevant numbers in four documents. Engels showed an example in which authorities said that the person died from heart failure or respiratory failure. The body had a number indicating that he was in Military Intelligence Branch 227.

Kroker asked about the translation of death certifications. Engels said that this is a report of Military Intelligence Services about the interrogation and death of a person, in addition to a document that certified the death, and a number. But this is not an official death certificate.

Kroker asked if Engels knew of similar documents. Engels confirmed. The origin of that document is the Military Intelligence Services in Idlib. It then went to CIJA headquarters.

Next, was a reference from a Caesar photo was shown.

Then a map was shown that displayed the movement of 200 detainees by the Military Intelligence Services. There is evidence that other intelligence services did the same. The map shows that the witness's description was consistent with the contents of the document. They were arrested and interrogated locally, and when needed, they were transferred to Damascus. This document also generally mentioned injuries. CIJA talked with 1,000 detainees who revealed that the patterns of abuse by the Intelligence Services were the same across Syria. It is important to clarify the widespread and systematic abuse from different offices [authorities] with the same purpose.

Kerber asked if a lunch break should be issued. Engels said whatever the best for the court.

***

[Lunch break]

***

The next slide was about the General Intelligence Directorate (GID) - Branches 251, 285 and section 40.

The head of GID:

Ali Mamlouk 2006 - 2012 (member of CCMC + NSB)

Mohammad Deeb Zaytoun 2012 - 2019

Hosam Louqa 2019 – Today

Kerber asked if Branch 251 was a regional Branch. Engels said Branch 251 is for Damascus and the surrounding area.

Engels said that CIJA has: 13,000 internal regime documents, around 180 linked interviews, 60 insider interviews, 100 victim interviews. They have around 600 documents that are linked to Branch 251 (showing how the regime's "opponents" were detained, and describing interrogations and periodic updates). They conducted interviews with 13 former Branch employees. Seven witnesses mentioned Raslan as the head of the Interrogation Unit in Branch 251. Branch 251 was described as the most effective, dangerous, and secretive Branch. It was responsible for Damascus and its surroundings. It has several sections. One of them is the Investigation Section. It has external sections, like the notorious Section 40. Branch 251 is responsible for interrogating detainees, as well as other responsibilities in different regions (e.g., checkpoints, search and raid campaigns, arrests).

Engels showed another example of documents from March 28, 2011 regarding Branch 255. It said, "in case found, kindly arrest the driver and refer him to us alive." It was signed by the head of GID. Similar requests were issued.

Engels then showed a document from 2012 in which the Military Intelligence Branch in Ar-Raqqa advised on the search for a person, then requested the person is referred to Branch 251. Similarly, another document requested a referral to Branch 285 for the person to be interrogated.

Kerber asked what the goal was for sending someone to Branches 251 or 285. Engels said that both Branches interrogated people who were perceived to be important. 285 is a central Branch with continuing interrogations. 251 is not only geographically allocated to Damascus, but also conducts further interrogations [of detainees transferred] from other Branches. Based on documentation from all over Syria, 251 searched for information and referred to other Branches. For example, if someone was searched for in Idlib, the information was shared by GID to all Branches.

Kerber asked if there is a central organ and a regional one. Engels confirmed. It is important to see that actual decisions were made. In this report, you could see the words: “From the head of Branch 251 to the head of GID... We found no evidence and recommend release... We found evidence against others and transferred to Branch 285.” The document came from GID in late 2016, then went to CIJA in June 2017.

Next, GID/251/Section 40 pertaining to city section of Al-Jisr Al-Abyad [جسر الأبيض]]. It has a reputation for being powerful and notorious. It is headed by Hafez Makhoul [حافظ مخلوف]. Normally, documents come from the head of the Branch, not from the head of the section. Therefore, it is rare to find documents from a section. The head of Section 40 would send information to the head of Military Intelligence Services (which is not usually the case), then to the head of the Branch.

The next document was sent by Branch 251 to the head of military intelligence. At the bottom, the document was signed by the head of Section 40. It had information about future attacks. The document went from Idlib in March 2015 to Branch 271, then to the headquarters in November 2016 where it was scanned.

Wiedner asked if there is information about the responsibilities of Section 40. Engels said that there was no direct evidence, but it was indicated from documents and insider witnesses that Section 40 has special independence. They did not attend all Branch meetings and could act before being given orders. There is “information about [Section 40’s] reputation”. But there is no information about the specific tasks because of the relationship between the head of Section 40 and Al-Assad.

Wiedner asked if Section 40 had their own locations/detention centers. Engels said that because it is a section, there is limited information. The types of abuse performed at Section 40 included: beating with sticks and cables; tied to chair/flying carpet and beaten; suspended in Shab and beaten; fingerprints and signing papers without reading; death in detention. There are 145 Caesar photos linked to Branch 251. The data is from 2011 – 2012 and focuses on detention in this period.

Wiedner asked if there is information about deaths and what happened to corpses. Engels said no, he did not have information on that.

Klinge asked about a report from July 19, 2018 and quoted “witness reported about a guard called [name redacted] who said that many died from suffocation from overcrowding and were then brought to Harasta [حرسا]. It seemed as if they died in the hospital. They had 50-60 corpses/week that were brought to the mass graves in Najha [نحها] by trucks.” Engels said he confirmed this information from a person whom he interviewed.

Klinge asked about the Shab torturing method. Engels described it as hanging someone, and there are variations. Sometimes toes touch the floor or sometimes the person is completely hung. People were also hung from their arms during interrogation.

Böcker asked when the conversation with the witness took place. Engels asked if the number was 218. Böcker said yes. Klinge said that was the footnote and provided the number [there was some discussion about the right number and footnotes, and p said eventually:] on March 1, 2018.

Böcker asked if the conversation happened as Engels previously described, and that there was no instruction of rights. Engels confirmed.

Kroker recalled that “detainees who died during detention in 251 were piled up and showed signs of torture. Some were so defaced that their facial features could not be recognized anymore.” Engels thought it was important to explain the difference between two points: [the document referenced] says “death in detention,” but people who CIJA talked with said that they saw corpses in the Branch. Only one witness used that example.

Branch 285 was discussed next. CIJA has approximately 300 documents about the role of this Branch. They received interrogation reports and some detainees were interviewed there. They conducted 12 interviews with insiders who mentioned Branch 285. Three people mentioned Raslan. 16 witnesses were detained there. 285 is a central Branch. It is operational rather than a field Branch. Some of its functions were stated in the documents. Its main purpose is interrogation and referral of detainees from other Branches who are then transferred to military or civil courts. An example was then shown of a document with the signature of the head of the Investigation Unit of Investigation Branch 331 in Idlib. It suggested the transfer of a detainee to Branch 285 to complete the interrogation.

Wiedner asked Engels to tell in his own words which cases were transferred to Branch 285. Engels said that there are two general scenarios: (1) the person was searched by Branch 251 and was transferred to 285 (when someone is wanted, he is sent to Branch 285), and (2) people in the field decide that a person is important enough to be transferred. The document is from the GID Branch Idlib. It was found in 2016, brought to Turkey, then to CIJA headquarters in June 2017.

Next, an investigation report was shown from Branch 285. It was sent to the head of GID. Raslan’s name was in it, in addition to the names of officials. It said “interrogations by conciliation committee.”

On the left side of the next document [in Arabic], Raslan’s name was visible. The name was replicated on the right name of the document. The document was not signed. Two other documents were signed. All had a similar structure. Engels wanted to show these because they corroborated the interview. The two signed documents are from GID in Idlib. The last one was collected from another person. They were found in March 2015 and were handed over to CIJA in 2016.

Next was an example of a person who was interviewed. There was a discrepancy between what the witness said and what was in the document. The witness said that he was detained in Aleppo while he carried a flag and a weapon given to him by his father. But the document said that he sold weapons to armed groups in Aleppo. There was also no mention of abuse in the document, though the witness described how he was abused during interrogation. The methods of abuse that were mentioned included: Shabh, fingerprints, multiple interrogations by that, beating upon arrival, kicking and beating with sticks and whips, tied to chairs/flying carpet, suspended in Shabh; Doulab [tyre] and forced confessions.

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:45PM. The next trial will be November 18, 2020 at 9:30AM.

Trial Day 44 – November 18, 2020

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were four spectators and two individuals from the media in the audience.

Continued Testimony of Christopher Engels

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Wiedner asked how CIJA prepared its report from July 19, 2018. Engels said that it was compiled in a similar way as other reports. First, information was requested, then CIJA initiated procedures when it had information in which the judiciary was interested. For this specific report, the authorities were interested in Raslan and CIJA had information. CIJA looked at their material and decided what was relevant to the case. They also gathered information from witnesses about the related Branches. The documentation related to Damascus did not actually come from Damascus—the Syrian regime did not leave Damascus; therefore, the information was from other Branches. CIJA took the information and worked with Arabic-speaking analysts. They then made the report for the authorities.

Wiedner asked if Raslan was code-named “Czech.” Engels confirmed.

Wiedner recalled that Engels referred to “insider witnesses” and asked what that means. Engels said CIJA utilized insider witnesses who formerly worked for the regime (CIJA does not engage with individuals who currently work for the regime). Information from insider witnesses was sometimes not supported by documents.

Wiedner asked if there was a chain of hierarchy. Engels confirmed. He explained that the background of the reports describes how there were massive efforts by the regime to arrest members of the opposition throughout Syria who were interrogated in various Branches. Each Branch has its own section responsible for interrogations. Branches 251 and 285 are examples of where interrogations were held.

Wiedner asked if releasing detainees was the decision of the head of the Branch. Engels confirmed that this was the case in Branches across Syria, including Section 40.

Wiedner asked if Engels was speaking of the head of the GID, not about 251 and 285. Engels said that the regional Branches had more independence from the head of the Branch, and they were responsible for giving information and making decisions.

Wiedner asked if there was knowledge about Ali Mamlouk. Engels confirmed.

Wiedner asked if Raslan was ever assigned specific tasks (related to abuse or detention) in the documentation. CIJA found evidence that Raslan was in charge of the interrogation units for Branches 251 and 285. These Branches were responsible for interrogation where abuse was happening, but the documents did not directly assign Raslan these tasks.

Wiedner asked Engels if he remembered his answer to the question of whether Raslan committed abuse. Engels did not remember, so Wiedner recalled Engels’ testimony that “yes, Raslan was the head of the interrogation unit in the Branch where abuse happened.” Wiedner said that he took that answer to mean that there was abuse in the Branch. Engels confirmed.

Wiedner asked about the independence of Section 40. Engels said that, based on information from witnesses and documents, Section 40 had independence, which means that it did not work under normal circumstances.

Wiedner asked if Section 40 was playing the role of the “commando.” Engels said yes, this was relayed by insider witnesses.

Wiedner asked about Section 40’s tasks. Engels said that Section 40 has its own missions – it was somewhat independent and worked alone. It conducted its own interrogations and made release decisions without higher level approval. Members of Section 40 did not attend meetings.

Wiedner recalled Engels' testimony from the day before that detainees were transferred to Branch 285 when their previous Branch was full. Engels confirmed.

Wiedner pointed to a footnote that said that many people died in Branch 251, and that two witness saw corpses whose faces were unrecognizable in June 2011. [Name redacted] said that in 2012 the cells were overcrowded and corpses were transferred to Harasta حرسا. Detainees died in the cells and they were transferred to Najha نجه during the weekend. Engels confirmed this information.

Prosecutor Klinge's Questioning

Klinge asked how CIJA was funded. Engels explained that CIJA was funded by (the ministries of foreign affairs of) States interested in these projects. The states include Germany, Canada, US, UK, and the Netherlands. These States do not have influence over CIJA and CIJA does not take money from States who interfere.

Klinge asked about the staff members and their training/education. Engels said that CIJA has approximately 150 staff members, most of whom worked on international justice issues. They have a large diversity of experience. Some are lawyers, analysts, etc. The majority of the staff worked internationally in locations like Yugoslavia, Rwanda, Cambodia, Sierra Leone, and the Balkans. Regarding projects in Arabic-speaking countries, CIJA has team members who studied Arabic and are able to engage directly with the texts. It is hard to translate all the documents. Another group who is the backbone of CIJA's work is in Syria. They collected the documents and the work would have been impossible without them. Some of them have legal backgrounds, and are lawyers and judges.

Klinge asked if Engels is in contact with them. Engels said that the majority of the contacts were from 2011 – 2012. It is a slow process and they worked with people on the ground. Broad networks are efficient for understanding the process and, as long as they were objective and motivated, it does not matter if they were Syrian or others.

Klinge asked if Engels has contact with other organizations. Engels is in contact with IIIM and the UN Commission of Inquiry.

Klinge asked how CIJA and IIIM cooperated. Engels said that IIIM has asked it to collect information on Syria. CIJA has allowed IIIM to access its database. The Commission of Inquiry is different.

Klinge asked about collecting information regarding Raslan and CIJA's cooperation with the Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA). Engels said that the one thing he got from all his contacts was that the person is in Europe and CIJA searched if they have information about him.

Klinge said that the prosecution had information from CIJA and asked Engels if CIJA worked on the matter before that. Engels said that the report in which "Czech" was used was done before the request. CIJA continued working on it. When CIJA finished the process, they answered the request about Raslan with the information they had. Raslan was in Germany at this time. This was confirmed by CIJA.

Klinge asked why CIJA used the name "Czech." Engels explained that one of his colleagues suggested it while they were thinking of a code-name unrelated to Raslan.

Defense's Questioning

Böcker asked if CIJA was founded in 2011. Engels confirmed that CIJA started in 2011 in relation to Syria work. The idea came to expand to the world when the organization changed its name in 2012.

Böcker asked if the evidence was secured in 2011 and if the system [of barcodes and number labels] was used from the start. Engels confirmed and added that the basic concept of the system is to collect evidence and store it so it can be used in 10 – 15 years. Evidence management set up the system based on their past experiences.

Böcker asked when Raslan was first referred to as “Czech.” Engels did not know. Böcker recalled Engels’ answer to the police about this question in which Engels said “mid 2017.” Engels said that he could “say with confidence” that his answer was based on documentation.

Böcker noted that Engels said he did not know who “Czech” was in the first version of the report, but that he addressed Raslan by name in the second report. Engels clarified that CIJA produced different drafts because of the updates from the BKA about Raslan. Then they answered with the name of the person the BKA was looking for. Böcker clarified that he was referring to the report from April 13, 2018. Engels said that he wanted to search the reference.

Böcker said that Engels could take a break.

Kerber asked about the number of the report. Böcker said the reports were from July 19, 2018 and April 13, 2018.

***

[15-minute-break]

***

Kerber said that the last question was about the development of the reports. Engels said that there are two version as far as he knew.

Böcker said that he had two versions: one with “Czech” and one with “Raslan.” Engels said that what CIJA has is the original request from December 24, 2017, a draft for the BKA on January 01, and the updated version from April 13. Then they continued their internal work to finish this project on July 19 and maintained the same name. They produced the reports and evaluated them, unlike the request from the BKA.

Böcker asked why they did not simply use “Raslan.” Engels said that he could say that the report from July 19, 2018 is the final product.

Böcker said that the report from April 13 was changed. He asked Engels about the States that finance CIJA and if Qatar was one of them. Engels said Qatar is not one of them.

Fratzki asked if the documents were lost and found in other locations. Engels said that the documents were not collected until the regime left the location.

Fratzki asked if Engels’ staff found the document in the building. Engels confirmed. Some of CIJA’s colleagues went to the location and took the documents. In general, there are other documents CIJA received from insiders who took the documents with them when they left Syria, but those documents were not part of this presentation. Documents were not collected from Damascus. In the early days of the conflict, CIJA had to explain to the opposition that the documents were important for future cases, so CIJA cooperated with them. This is what CIJA had to do to go inside the buildings.

Linke asked if Russia also funded CIJA. Engels said no.

Schuster asked if the information about GID was provided by insiders who worked with the regime. Engels said that CIJA corroborated documents through insiders and witnesses. There is not a formula for corroboration. But if they take a document from an insider, it holds the same value.

Schuster asked about witness protection and if insiders have concerns about testifying. Engels said that CIJA asks, during the witness interview, if the person has security concerns. Because CIJA does not offer witness protection, they only speak with people who do not have security concerns. The trust of the witness is taken seriously. Names are not shared.

Schuster asked if insider witnesses had concerns. Engels said yes, there was a fear of reprisal from the Syrian regime and sometimes concerns for the witness' family if he is from the opposition. But the dynamics changed enormously. Some witnesses were happy to talk in 2011 – 2013, but now they have concerns. So, “we” ask them again if they have concerns before publishing the information.

Schuster asked about insiders. Engels said the majority who left the regime left in 2012 – 2013 (general statement). Very few have left the regime over the last two years. Engels thought this was because: (1) many people already left (2) some people thought that “the regime is now winning, so there is no point to leave now.”

Schuster asked about the consequences of leaving the regime. Engels said it is clear that the regime is sending messages to people who seek out the opposition and who might be suspects. A document from a high-ranking official said that if people do not do their job, then they should be reported.

Schuster asked Engels why he laughed when Böcker asked whether Qatar funded CIJA. Engels explained that he laughed because Qatar finances other projects, not theirs.

Plaintiffs' Counsel Questioning

Schulz asked if there is transparency about who funds which project. Engels said that he did not know about public relations with the donors.

Schulz asked which projects Germany is funding. Engels said that Germany funded the discussion today. More specifically, Germany provided support for the technical elements, like scanning and copying material.

Schulz noted Engels' testimony that CIJA has videos. Engels confirmed there are around 400,000.

Schulz asked if there are video or audio recordings linked to this process. Engels said no. Audio is not possible to obtain. Material is from early and open sources. The reason video and audio are collected is because they are taken down and have metadata.

Schulz asked if there are videos or audio records linked to Raslan. Engels said that there is no documentation with Raslan's name or videos with metadata linked to him.

Schulz asked if CIJA has facial recognition technology. Engels said no.

Kroker asked if one can contact the witnesses. Engels said yes, CIJA wants to keep up with contacts so that they get contacts' approval before publishing information.

Kroker asked if witnesses are in Syria. Engels said that in general, the majority are in Syria or neighbouring countries, but a few are in Europe. CIJA focuses on the ones inside Syria not in Europe.

Kroker asked if Raslan contacted CIJA directly or through insiders. Engels said that he had no knowledge of this.

The Court Monitor could not hear Kroker's question, but Engels stated that all regime apparatuses coordinated the oppression. A checkpoint belonged to one apparatus, but the people who worked at the checkpoint were from another apparatus. At the beginning, one problem was that a person could be detained by one apparatus/location, but then released from another.

Kroker's next two questions were unclear, but Engels noted January 18, 2018 and Branch 251.

Kerber said that Engels mentioned that he had documents for the court to add to the minutes.

Schuster asked if the PowerPoint presentation would be included, too. Engels explained the documents that he brought, including the presentation.

Böcker quoted a report and asked Engels if it pertained to Branch 251. Engels confirmed and noted that the Branch was responsible for some checkpoints in Damascus and that it is difficult to disconnect Section 40 with Branch 251 because the section is a division of the Branch.

Böcker asked if more defectors were described in the report than just one. Engels read from the report that "eight defectors from GID were described."

The witness was dismissed.

Kerber said that the trial of Eyad will be separated on February 17, 2021. A final verdict for him will be announced on February 24, 2021. The timeline could change because of COVID-19. Starting January 2021, the trial will be moved to the building of the Higher Regional Court. The room is being built to maintain the COVID-19 distancing instructions, but has fewer seats for the public. For important sessions, the proceedings will be held in the current courtroom.

The proceedings were adjourned at 12:20 PM. The next trial will be November 19, 2020 at 9:30AM.

Trial Day 45 – November 19, 2020

Bodenstein appeared for Fratzki and Wessler appeared for Reiger. The witness entered the courtroom with her attorney Dr. Kroker.

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were six spectators and three individuals from the media present.

Testimony of P19.

P19 is a 43-year-old female journalist from Damascus who was called by Dr. Kroker. She is unrelated to the accused by blood or marriage.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Kerber asked P19 to talk about her background, her detention, and how she came into conflict with the regime.

P19 was raised in Damascus. She attended preparatory and secondary school, then studied mathematics and informatics at Damascus University. Before the revolution, she was a math teacher. Previously, she was not associated with the regime because the status quo in Syria was to be fearful and Syrians were not able to say anything. Her family was especially cautious because, when P19 was 10-years-old and in fourth grade, her father told her about an incident involving the regime. P19 told the story to her friends who then told their families. Afterward, the security forces came to school. They summoned her father and after that, her family was cautious. However, with the start of the revolution, she thought about being non-biased, not with the regime, not with the opposition. When the incidents started in Dar'a and two people were killed on the first day, she decided to be against the regime. She knew her stance would put her in a difficult position because she could get detained or die. She did not think that she would leave Syria. She was detained for participating in demonstrations several times. The first time was during a demonstration in Damascus in November 2011. The second time was on February 4, 2012 when she was taken to Al-Khatib Branch, then she was transferred to the General Intelligence Services. She did not remember the exact date of the third time, but it was for one day in 2012. She was also detained later in 2012 for two days. The last time she was detained was on June 9, 2013 and it was for ten months. After that experience, she decided to leave the country.

Kerber said that they were interested in the second detention. Kerber asked P19 to describe her first and second detention.

P19 said that her first detention was after a demonstration. Demonstrations on Fridays had more people than other days. P19 was in Al-Amara العمارة. The first minute [of the demonstration], there was a large number of security forces and they detained many people. Her group of detainees consisted of seven people and there was another bus with detainees [P19 did not know the number of detainees on the second bus]. The reason for her detention was that she and two other women saw security forces beating a small child. The child was around 12 or 13-years-old. P19 and the other women thought that because they were females, the forces would not approach them and they wanted to take the child. The security forces detained the women and the child. Then the forces took them to a police department in Al-Amara where there were members of the Air Force. P19 was there for six hours. The forces wearing military clothes were different from normal police. She and the six others were put on the floor and stepped on. After six hours, they transferred the group to the criminal police for three days and then to a court where she was released on a court decision.

Kerber asked about P19's detention in February 2012.

P19 said that on February 4, 2012, there was intense shelling by the regime on Homs, especially on Al-Khaleidiyyeh الخالدية. Her friends who were activists from Homs talked with her and said that there was a high number of injuries and not enough medicine. She had a friend who had another friend who could transport medicine through the Red Crescent if she gathered some. A group of six people, including P19, brought medicine from their homes, bought medicine from pharmacies, and collected medicine. P19 took everything home with her. She arrived home between 11:00PM-12:00AM and started sorting the medicine. Around 1:00AM, there was heavy banging on the door and it was slammed open. More than 20 forces entered the house from the first floor (P19 lived on the second floor and her flat had four rooms next to each other). Wherever P19 looked, she saw forces. Her brother woke up and they took him to their car while he was still in his pyjamas. After that, they searched every small corner of the house for an hour. Then they took P19 and her two sisters in a big car. Her brother was next to the driver while P19 and her sisters were in the back along with a staff member.

Kerber asked if P19 was on a mini-bus. P19 said that in Syria, it is known as a 7-passenger car. Later, P19's neighbours told her (they were blindfolded) that there were several cars and one was a DShK-mounted one. The forces took them to a place that P19 did not know at the time. She later learned she was at Al-Khatib. They arrived at 3:00AM. P19 stayed there for three days. She was interrogated each of those days. She was then transferred.

Kerber asked P19 if she wanted to talk more, or if she wanted questions. P19 said "as you would like".

Kerber asked if they were blindfolded. P19 confirmed.

Kerber asked how P19 knew that she was at Al-Khatib and what happened.

P19 said that when she got out of the car, she was blindfolded. She remembered being in a corridor, then the group was separated. She did not know where her siblings were. The forces wanted to search her, but they did not find a woman to do so. They waited about 30 minutes until they could bring a female to perform the search. P19 thought the woman was a nurse from the Red Crescent. When the nurse searched P19 in a room, she asked P19 to take off all her clothes. One of the male personnel opened the door to the room and told the nurse to search P19 well. The nurse closed the door and did not let him in. The nurse also told him that P19 was menstruating. P19 thought the nurse was not nice, but that this was a nice act. After she was searched, P19 was taken to the solitary cell.

Kerber asked if P19's brother was taken too. P19 said no, just her and her sisters. P19 never saw her brother [in detention]. Usually, they do not put males and females together. The sisters slept and then were taken to interrogation.

Kerber asked about the interrogation. P19 explained that the first day of interrogation was about the medicines and how she acquired them. When the interrogator opened her laptop, he found out that P19 was a member of a political party ("with us, for a democratic Syria" movement / "حركة" معنا من أجل سوريا ديمقراطية). The interrogator's interest shifted toward the movement. Each of the interrogations were relatively long (2 – 4 hours). The first day, P19 could not see the interrogator because she was blindfolded. The second day, the same interrogator instructed her to remove the blindfold. The third day, P19 was interrogated by a different person who asked her detailed questions. She was unable to hide details because he had her laptop. The interrogator then told P19 that he wanted to take her to another place. Usually, when someone is blindfolded, they can see a bit from the bottom of the blindfold, but she could not because her blindfold was tied tightly. The interrogator was not really interrogating, but rather was accusatory. He said "what have you done to the country? You sabotaged the country. You divided the country". The interrogator asked P19 why she did not go live with her brother who was in the Emirates (as if he was saying "why don't you just leave Syria and stop being our problem"). Because the interrogator knew about P19's siblings, she feared something dangerous would happen to them. The interrogator told P19 that she would be released the following day. But the next day she was transferred to another Branch.

Kerber noted that there were two people present during the interrogation and asked if there were more people there. P19 said that one or two military personnel escorted her to the interrogation and then the interrogator told the military personnel to leave. The door [of the interrogation room] stayed open and there were people passing by.

Kerber asked P19 if she was beaten or threatened during the interrogation. P19 said she was not beaten by an interrogator. However, she was beaten (1) in the car when she was taken from her house to the Branch, (2) when she was taken from the solitary cell to interrogation, and (3) when she was taken to the toilet. In any "route," there was beating. Even when one of the personnel brought her to the interrogation and hit her in front of the interrogator, the interrogator told him not to hit P19. But the personnel hit her again when he returned P19 to her cell after the interrogation.

Kerber asked P19 if she sensed that there was hierarchy between the interrogators. P19 thought that the first interrogator might have been a legal person and that the second one was “responsible” [a colloquial word in Syria to describe a high-ranked/important person. “Responsible” can be equated to “official”].

Kerber asked how P19 knew that the second interrogator was an officer. P19 said that a staff member told her that she was going to see an officer.

Kerber asked P19 if she saw the officer. P said no. The blindfold was tied tightly.

Kerber asked if P19 recognized the interrogator’s dialect. P19 thought the interrogator was a Kurd, but she was just assuming because his dialect was from the eastern area. In Syria, people usually speak a “white dialect” (joint dialect). However, he had some words he spoke that made her feel that he was a Kurd. What confirmed her feeling was that he asked her about a Kurdish oppositionist who was famous to Kurds and to oppositionists. He asked P19 about the Kurdish oppositionist with a kind tone - not as though he hated the person, so P19 felt that he was a Kurd.

Kerber asked P19 to describe the general conditions in detention, such as the cell, the food, etc. P19 said that on the first day, she and her sisters were in a narrow cell (1.4 meter or 2 meters).

Kerber asked if there were three people in the cell. P19 confirmed. After the interrogation, she was in a cell alone. In the solitary cell, there were two beds and blankets that smelled. P19 knocked on the cell door and told the staff member that it is impossible for one to bare these conditions. He replied that she should manage that herself [i.e., it was her problem to deal with].

Kerber asked about the size of the cell. P19 said that it was approximately the same size as the room where she was put with the others—it was 1x2 meters. There was a corridor and toilets near the cells. The toilets were in bad condition. Regarding food, there was enough but it was not good. Bulgur with red broth. Dinner was a loaf of bread with potato.

Kerber asked how many times food was served. P19 said three times, but she did not eat in the morning.

Kerber asked about liquids and water. P19 said that they were allowed to go to the toilet three times. She drank when she went there.

Kerber asked if P19 heard sounds of torture or screams. P19 said that the corridor between the solitary cell and the toilets or the interrogation room was where the staff members were because that was where they used to sleep. It was also the place where they tortured detainees. The sounds of torture were heard all the time, except at night. It started in the morning at 5:00AM, then was all the time. Usually, the sounds were from more than one person being tortured at the same time. In the corridor near the toilets, detainees being tortured were always in the squatting position.

Kerber asked if P19 meant in the corridor or in the cells. P19 meant the corridor near the entrance to the toilet. She had to pass through the detainees. What drew her attention was that their ages were between 18 – 25 years-old. One time, security forces were torturing someone. She could hear the detainee’s voice but then it vanished suddenly. On the same day when P19 went to the toilet, there were traces of blood. She didn’t know if the blood belonged to him, or if he passed out or died. But she knew that his voice/sound stopped.

Kerber asked about the condition of the detainees who were in the corridor (nutritional state, bruises, etc.). P19 said that they were wearing shorts. They appeared exhausted and had signs of beating. They were shaved bald.

Kerber asked about the signs [of torture]. P19 said that there were no signs of beating with cables/whips, but there were bruises. She noted that the space was dark; they were all in a basement, so it was hard to differentiate details. However, what drew her attention was that the detainees stayed in the corridor for 4 days.

Kerber asked what happened after that. P19 said that her sisters were released on the third day because they did not do anything wrong. The second interrogator told P19 that she would be released. They took her in a van in which she was the only female and the rest were young men. P19 thought they were going to take her home or at least away from the Branch, but she found herself in another Branch: the general intelligence. She stayed there for 21 days. During the first 15 days, no one asked her a question. After that, they interrogated her like before. Then she was referred to the military jurisdiction and to the civilian jurisdiction. The day before she was released, she was taken to a civilian prison. In the morning, she was presented before the judge and was released.

Kerber asked if P19 identified anyone at the court. P said no.

Kerber asked P19 to look to her right and if P19 recognized one of the accused. P19 said no.

Kerber asked whether P19 saw the accused in the Branch. P19 said that she did not see him in the Branch. She saw a “white” person who was wearing glasses.

Judge Weidner’s Questioning

Wiedner asked if P19’s first detention was in November 2011. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if it was because of the demonstration in which she participated. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner asked around when P19 started to participate in demonstrations. P19 began to demonstrate around July.

Wiedner asked how the regime reacted to the demonstrations. P19 said that the demonstrators used to organize “flying demonstrations مظاہرات طيارة” [demonstrations that abruptly began and didn’t last for long, usually 5 – 10 minutes]. When they planned the demonstrations (P19 became one of the demonstration planners), their purpose was to annoy the security forces. They did not want the government to think that nothing was happening in Damascus. They wanted to convey that the demonstrators were active. P19 clarified that she was talking about the centre of Damascus: Al-Midan الميدان, Al-Amara العمارة, and in sensitive locations like Al-Jisr Al-Abyad الجسر الأبيض where the Makhlof Branch is located. At most of the demonstrations, the security forces came in the middle and pursued the demonstrators. It was like a marathon. The ones who were captured were detained. There was a funeral in Al-Midan and there was shooting. P19 was injured in her hand/arm [same word] by a [hunting rifle]. At a funeral in Al-Qadam القدم, there was shooting. If the security forces captured someone, they beat the person a lot. In general, they were more violent with young men than with girls. In further away locations (closer to the rural areas/countryside), the detentions were violent and the shooting was violent. P19 participated in demonstrations in Barzeh برزة and Qudsayya قدسيا in 2011. In Barzeh, several people died.

Wiedner asked what time P19 was referring to. P19 said June 2011 to 2012 when most of the demonstrations took place. She remembered a demonstration in Barzeh. She was in the demonstration and saw that they detained people in a violent way. She went back home after the demonstration, only to find out that the security forces / pro-regime media filmed other places in the area to make it look like people were living normally and the birds were chirping [they filmed a calm/peaceful area and showed it on TV to make it look like nothing was wrong].

Wiedner asked if there was live shooting on the demonstrators. P19 said that in the center of Damascus, there was no direct shooting except with “metallic balls” [referring to the ammunition of BB guns خردق]. There were shootings in Al-Qadam and rural Damascus.

Wiedner recalled P19’s comment about how someone died at a funeral. P19 said the death happened in Al-Qadam. It was a strange funeral. The demonstrators wanted to hold the funeral in Al-Midan because the person who died was killed at a demonstration in Al-Midan. The security forces wanted his corpse (as a way to prevent the funeral from happening), but his family refused. His friends decided to hold the funeral in Al-Qadam. P19 looked behind her and saw that one of the forces [عنصر] fired. A demonstrator was injured in his leg, but she fled. Back then, the forces used gas or smoke bombs.

Wiedner asked if the forces wore uniforms. P19 said that they were not ordinary police. She assumed that they were security forces because they wore military clothes (like the ones stationed at the checkpoints). They used to chase the demonstrators.

Wiedner referred to P19’s first detention and asked if torture happened. P19 said that among her group were two girls with criminal charges. They were tortured, as well as the young men. There were always sounds of torture. P19 went to around 5 Branches and there was always torture.

Wiedner recalled P19’s statement to the police in March 2019 that “after they were tortured, the detainees had to step on water. There were always sounds of torture. The men were brought back to the cells and they were not able to walk”. P19 confirmed the statement. She did not know why the prison guards instructed the detainees to step on water. Later, she learned that they were tortured by Falaqa and the prison guards made the detainees step on water so that the detainees did not suffer. A female detainee with P19 said that she also stepped on water after Falaqa so the pain does not increase. In the Criminal Security Branch, torture did not happen in the corridors. It was in the interrogation rooms. This surprised P19 who thought that the Criminal Security Branch was [better], but it was actually bad [torture also happened there].

Wiedner asked if it was correct that P19 was not beaten during her interrogation in Al-Khatib Branch – only on the way to the interrogator. P19 confirmed. The interrogators’ treatment was better than she expected, especially because she could not lie because they had her laptop and email.

Wiedner asked if there were signs of beating on her body when she was taken to the interrogation room. P19 said that she had clothes on, so even if there were signs, the interrogator would not be able to see them. Neither Falaqa nor Doulab [tyre] were used on her. She was beaten with the prison guard’s hand or with a stick. He hit her hard on her head. Twice when P19 went to interrogation, there was someone who deliberately came close to her. He did not grab her from her hand/arm, but from [her waist]. Although there were many people, he always came next to her. P19’s sister said the same thing.

Wiedner asked if there were insults or verbal abuse of a sexual nature. P19 could not remember if she was called by her name once. [The least offensive term she was called] was “who**”. There were always insults, like “your mother...”, “your sister...”, “I’ll do this with you...”. Even when they detained her and her siblings and then took them to the car, the security forces talked to P19's brother about his sisters in an [inappropriate way], like "you are taking your sister to sleep with the rebels!?"

Wiedner asked if P19 was threatened sexually. P19 confirmed. The forces said "I'll do this with you, or your mother, or your sister...". She was explicitly threatened with rape in all of the Branches.

Wiedner asked if P19 was threatened or insulted [during interrogation]. P19 said the second time, after the interrogator told the guard عنصر not to hit her, the guard told her to "confess, otherwise you don't know what will happen to you." (This was the same person who got close to her in the corridor).

Wiedner asked if she took that seriously. P19 said yes, she was uncomfortable.

***

[15-minute break]

***

Wiedner asked how P19 knew she was in Al-Khatib Branch. P19 learned her location for certain later. But when she and her sister entered the Branch, her sister (who was a lawyer) told her that they were most probably in Al-Khatib. Also, when she was transferred to the other Branch, there was a girl who told P19 that most of the girls in Al-Khatib were transferred to the general intelligence directorate. When P19 was released, her sister confirmed that they were in Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked how P19 knew the second Branch was Branch 285. P19 said that a girl there told her that she was in Branch 285. She suddenly remembered something regarding the court's earlier question about how she knew that the forces who shut down demonstrations were from the intelligence services. P19 explained that on one of the 21 days when she was in the general intelligence directorate, there was a heightened alert in the Branch because P19's cell had a window that overlooked a big square. There was a gathering of armed forces. P19 saw them leave the Branch. When she was released, she learned there was a demonstration in Al-Mazzeħ المزعة that day. Wiedner asked if P19 was talking about Branch 285. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P19's statement that she was in a solitary cell in Al-Khatib Branch. He asked about the size of the cell. P19 said 2x1 meters.

Wiedner asked where the interrogation was conducted and if it was on the same floor [as her cell]. P19 said that she had to go up one flight of stairs, walk through a small corridor, then upstairs.

Wiedner asked if she went up one or two floors. P19 said one.

Wiedner asked if she was interrogated in the same room. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled P19's statement earlier that she heard detainees scream from torture. He asked if she could tell where [the screams] came from. P19 said that as far as she remembers, the solitary cells were "here" and "here" was a hall and there was one downstairs. The torture was in this place [P described by using her hands].

Wiedner asked if P19 meant the basement. P said yes, in the same place where she was.

Kerber showed a sketch on the screen.

P19 said that there were many solitary cells. The three of them were together, then P19 was transferred to [marked with black*]. At [marked with red!] were the members/personnel and the detainees. P19 was once going to the toilet and her blindfold was not tied well, then she saw a picture of Hafez Al-Assad حافظ الأسد. [marked with red*] is the corridor where she saw the signs of blood [of the man whose voice went away when he was beaten]. She thought [marked with black!] was the men's cell, but she did not see it because she and her sisters were the only girls in the Branch. At least, she did not hear voices of other girls, but it had been seven years since she was detained, so she mentioned that this might not be accurate.

Wiedner recalled P19's statement that she heard screams. P19 pointed to the corridor where the screams came from, then pointed to where the detainees were naked [marked with red!].

Wiedner asked if the sounds of torture could be heard in the staircase or the interrogation room. P19 confirmed she could hear the sounds when she was in the interrogation room.

Wiedner asked if she heard the sounds during the interrogation and if the door of the interrogation room was open. P said yes.

Wiedner said that P19 mentioned a man during the police questioning and that his voice (which was coming from the basement) vanished. P19 said the voice was clearly close to her in the corridor.

Wiedner said that during police questioning in March 2019, P19 was asked about that person. Wiedner asked if P19 remembered what she answered. P19 said that his voice just vanished. Maybe he fainted, died or was taken to another place.

Wiedner reiterated that P19 only heard that [sound]. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner asked where she saw the traces of blood. P19 said in the corridor on the floor and maybe on the wall. But she did not know if the blood was old or recent. It was dark and she was blindfolded. She only saw the floor and up to the knees of the prison guard.

Wiedner asked if she was talking about the basement. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner asked if P19 saw corpses. P19 said not in that Branch, but she did in the general intelligence directorate and in the Air Force Branch. In the general intelligence directorate in 2012, she was on the first floor but the men's cell was in the basement (she thought). The windows were usually open when there is an incident. One time, the windows were open. Four personnel carried a dead body on a blanket. P19 was struck by how they carried the corpse but talked about a totally different topic. As they walked downstairs, the corpse's head knocked against each step. It was as if they weren't carrying a human being. The corpse showed signs of torture and was thin. She could see because the place was lit and it was during the day. It was clear that the person died from torture.

Wiedner asked if this incident occurred during her first or second detention in Branch 285. P19 thought it happened during her second detention because she was in the Air Force Branch and was transferred. But it definitely happened in the general intelligence directorate. Wiedner noted that P19 gave the same answer during police questioning.

Wiedner asked if this could have happened in 2013. P19 said maybe. She was transferred there twice: one time from Al-Khatib to the general intelligence directorate and another time from the Air Force Branch to the general intelligence directorate.

Wiedner asked if P19 remembered whether there was torture in Branch 285 during her first detention. P19 explained that her cell was far from the other detainees. It was closer to where detainees handed over their belongings [when they arrived]. When the forces brought new detainees, they beat people at a "welcome party" before they even took the detainees belongings. She could hear the sound of people's heads being hit against the wall of her cell.

Wiedner said that P19 mentioned more methods of torture in Branch 285. P19 said the "welcome party." In the corridor near where she was interrogated, there were people being interrogated. They were tortured by beatings and Falaqa. When P19 was in the interrogation room in Branch 285, someone was tortured so he would mention a specific thing. The interrogator told him: "say that you raped Alawite women." The person told the interrogator: "I raped nine." The interrogator told him: "no, say four." It was clear that people were tortured to confess something they did or did not do.

Wiedner asked if there was air or windows in Al-Khatib Branch. P19 did not remember windows, but there was air. In general, the conditions were bad, including the health care. She did not get sick, but she asked for a painkiller. [She did not say whether they gave her the painkiller.] When P19 asked for sanitary napkins, they told her to manage her situation.

Wiedner recalled how P19 described the clothes of personnel during her second detention in February 2012. P19 said that some of the personnel were in full military clothes and some were wearing normal t-shirts and military pants. But almost all of them were heavily armed.

Wiedner asked if she was taken directly to Al-Khatib. P19 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P19 to look to her right and if she remembered one of the accused. P19 said that she remembered, but not from the Branch. [Eyad laughed]. P19 said his appearance was familiar. Maybe she saw him somewhere other than the Branch.

Wiedner asked if P19 could specify where she saw the accused. P19 couldn't because many forces came to her house, and in the Branch, she only saw the interrogator in the dark.

Prosecutor Polz's Questioning

Polz recalled P19's statement that there was a young person in her first detention, then asked if P19 knew why he was beaten. P19 thought he was with her at the demonstration, but she wasn't sure if he actually participated. Demonstrations often started near the mosque, so among the demonstrators were people praying.

Polz asked if P19 thought the boy was armed. She said no. They were in a working-class area with a market and a mosque. In Damascus, there are many checkpoints. If he was armed, he would have been killed, not beaten. Also, at that time, the demonstrations were peaceful and people were careful to avoid violence with the police.

Polz asked if P19 knew what happened to the child. P19 said no.

Polz recalled P19's statement that the intelligence services came to her house and detained her and her siblings. Polz asked if P19 knew to which Branch the forces belonged. She didn't know then that specific Branches wore specific uniforms, but she was sure they were intelligence services.

Polz asked P19 how she categorized Al-Khatib (e.g., if it belongs to the general intelligence services). She thought [it belongs] to the general intelligence services since direct transfers take place there.

Polz apologized in advance. He asked P19 if she was a victim of sexual abuse in Al-Khatib. P19 said that she was not raped, but faced verbal abuse of a sexual nature and was harassed. Her breasts were touched deliberately. She was searched by a female, but when a male opened the door, he saw her naked (the man who opened the door was not the same man who took her interrogations – she saw the first man, not the second).

Polz said that P19's sisters were released, then asked about her brother. P19 clarified that all of them were released after two days.

Polz asked if P19's brother was tortured in Al-Khatib. P19 said no. She understood that the focus was on her. Her brother did not tell P19 details, but the torture was only at the "welcome party" and when he was on the way to interrogation. "It was not torture torture" [i.e., not 'real torture']. Her siblings were interrogated and it was clear from the beginning that they had nothing to do with the medicine. P19 was careful to say that the medicine was for her and for the political party.

Polz recalled P19's statement that men were treated differently than women by the forces at demonstrations in Damascus. Polz asked if the treatment was different in Al-Khatib, too. P19 said that nobody was treated politely, but they were harsher with men. For example, women were detained and brought to the bus, whereas for men, 5 – 6 people would beat one male detainee who could die between their hands. Even in the Branch, they tortured men more. Maybe it had something to do with numbers. In the Air Force Branch, there were around 50 girls, but maybe 100,000 men (estimate). Men were always accused more often of carrying weapons. That did not mean that women did not get tortured. But in comparison, men were tortured more often.

Polz asked if P19 knew about the divisions in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad or Hafez Makhoul حافظ مخلوف. P19 said that there was another Branch that belonged to Al-Khatib (or they were related to each other). It was called Hafez Makhoul Branch, and he was its head.

Polz asked if P19 had more knowledge about it. P19 said that one of her colleagues was detained there for two months and was tortured. When he was released, he died. He was a champion bodybuilder in Syria.

Polz wanted to confirm that P19's colleague was the body builder, not Makhlof. P19 confirmed.

Polz asked if that division/Branch was in Al-Jisr Al-Abyad in Damascus. P19 said yes.

Linke asked if the interrogations in Syria were conducted like in Germany. P19 explained that there was always a signature, but nobody could see what they were signing.

Linke asked when P19 had to sign documents. She said that she signed something (she didn't know what it was) when the interrogation ended and she was transferred. She also signed a blank paper in the general intelligence services.

Plaintiffs' Counsel Questioning

Scharmer mentioned the names Ahmad Nauh أحمد نوح and Abdelmon'em An-Na'san عبد المنعم النعسان and asked P19 if she knew them or if one of them was her interrogator. She did not remember the names. Only one person interrogated her and she did not know his name because personnel did not mention their names in the security [apparatuses]. They only go by "Abo [name]" and nicknames.

Scharmer said that P19 mentioned criminal security, criminal police and intelligence services. He asked about the differences. P19 said that criminal security is under the Ministry of Interior. The intelligence services could theoretically be under the Ministry of Interior or the military apparatus.

Kroker asked if P19 heard about other cases of sexual abuse in the intelligence services. P19 said that she heard of other cases from women who were detained in the Air Force Branch, general intelligence directorate and in the civilian prison at Adra عدرا. She met many girls at Adra and more than one said she was raped. One girl told P19 that she was raped in the National Defense Branch, which is not an official Branch. It is actually part of a militia connected to the regime. Detainees there were transferred to other Branches. The girl told P19 that they were occupying a villa in Sahnaya صحنايا in rural Damascus. They raped women and engaged in prostitution. The girl specified the villa (it belonged to a person from the opposition but they occupied it). Even the forces [عناصر] had to pay 50 – 100 if they wanted to sleep with a girl. There were many cases of rape in Homs, mainly during raids and at checkpoints, even by the normal police. It happened to a girl who was with P19 at the police station: he haggled with the woman and told her that she could talk with her children if she slept with him. P19 considered this rape, even if the girl technically consented. In Adra, P19 met many girls and heard their stories. During the 4 – 5 year period of the revolution when P19 was in Syria, rape was systematically used to humiliate men. One woman from Homs was raped in front of her husband to make him confess.

The witness was dismissed.

Kerber said that a witness claimed not to receive the summoning to testify in court, but the witness could still participate. Kerber may consider inviting the witness again depending on the schedule.

Kroker and Scharmer read aloud a 40-minute-long statement explaining that the sexual abuse/violence/threats/ were systematic and should be charged as crimes against humanity and not just domestic crimes. They gave examples from plaintiffs' statements, witnesses' statements, and international reports. The following is a summary of the submission based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear.

Submission of plaintiff counsels Dr. Kroker and Scharmer regarding a change in legal reference under §265 (1) StPO in the proceedings against Anwar Raslan, submitted to the court on November 19, 2020.

Request:

In light of the indictment in form of the opening order and the facts detailed therein, a conviction based on the fulfillment of the element of the crime under §7(1) Nr. 6 VStGB<sup>2</sup> is considered suitable.

This request is based on two contexts:

1. The plaintiff counsels argue that the prosecutor charged Raslan with killings, torture and deprivation of liberty as crimes against humanity under §7(1) VStGB. This indicates that the prosecutor already considered the general existence of a systematic, widespread attack against the civilian population through systematic unlawful detentions at Branch 251 of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate (GID). Based on the fundamental findings of the investigation, complicity in sexual violence, with which Raslan is charged under German criminal law (§177(1), (2) Nr.1, (3) Nr.1 StGB [old version]), must be in context of the systematic and widespread attack and consequently charged as a crime against humanity.
2. The plaintiff counsels further argued that in addition to the facts already known from the case file, the introduction of evidence during the main proceedings indicated that the crime of complicity in sexual violence in the form of rape and sexual assault were committed in the context of a systematic and widespread attack against a civilian population.

On the legal evaluation of rape as crime against humanity (§7(1) Nr.6 var. 2 VStGB):

- Several witnesses which were already heard during the main proceeding,<sup>3</sup> spoke about rape which they either had to experience themselves or witnessed while in detention at Branch 251 as well as other detention facilities of the GID.
- Reports which were read out in court<sup>4</sup> during the main proceeding further detail systematic rape at detention facilities of the GID, committed between April 2011 and September 2012.
- Witnesses which were not yet heard in the main proceedings but whose testimony is on the case file also detailed rapes at detention facilities of the GID by vaginal and anal penetration of men, women and minors. Other witnesses as well as protocols of questionings by the UN Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic (COI) directly refer to rapes committed at Branch 251.
- Citing international case law, the plaintiff counsels argued that the search of body openings performed on detainees was incompatible with international standards: they were performed as a routine, without reasonable ground for suspicion, as a means of humiliation, in groups and unnecessarily violent.

On the legal evaluation of sexual assault as crime against humanity (§7(1) Nr.6 var. 2 VStGB):

<sup>2</sup> The translation of the German Code of Crimes against International Law (VStGB) can be found here.

<sup>3</sup> See SJAC Trial Monitoring Reports: TR#4, days 10 and 12; TR#14, day 34.

<sup>4</sup> HRW, “We’ve Never Seen Such Horror”: Crimes Against Humanity by Syrian Security Forces; AI, “It Breaks the Human”: Torture, Disease and Death in Syria’s Prisons; HRW, “Torture Archipelago”; OHCHR, “Open wounds: Torture and ill-treatment in the Syrian Arab Republic”.

- Sexualized torture:
  - During the main proceeding, witnesses testified on sexual violence in Branch 251 and other detention facilities of the GID, which they witnessed themselves or were committed on relatives: detainees were forced to drink water while their penises were tied off; detainees were forced to rape each other; detainees were forced to bite each other's penis; guards threatened male detainees to cut off their penis while tying a yarn around their penis.
- Forced sexual touches:
  - A female witness testified during the main proceeding<sup>5</sup> that she was subjected to forced sexual touches, witnessed that women were ripped naked and ripped off their hijab, threatened to be raped, insulted as a 'whore'. She further explained that former female detainees who were victims of sexual assaults and rape are considered disgraceful and isolated by society. Another witness told the court during main proceedings about sexual touches during body searches.
  - Witnesses whose testimonies are on the case file further said that they were subjected to forced sexual touches which they had to experienced themselves or witnessed.
- Other sexual acts of similar gravity:
  - Several witnesses told the court during the main proceeding<sup>6</sup> that forced nudity was a widespread practice at Branch 251 as well as other Branches of the Syrian Intelligence Services, especially during so-called 'welcome-parties'. Witnesses in the main proceeding also spoke about forced nudity in combination with violent searches of body openings or interrogations.
  - Similar indications are also found on the case file in form of witness testimonies.
  - Citing to case law from the ICTY as well as domestic case law from the German Federal Court of Justice (BGH), the plaintiff counsels argued that forced nudity at Branch 251 as described by various witnesses qualify as element of the crime against humanity.
- Verbal and other sexual abuse:
  - Two witnesses told the court during the main proceeding that female detainees were threatened to be raped at every possible occasion.
  - Witnesses whose testimony is on the case file, explained that they were threatened themselves to be raped or that family members would be raped. Other witnesses testified that they witnessed such threats against other detainees or were forced to watch rapes.
  - Reports from the COI, FIDH and HRW, which are also included in the case file deal with threats of rape at Branches of the Syrian Intelligence Services as well.
  - Citing to case-law from the ICTY, the plaintiff counsels argued that threats of rape constitute sexual torture.

---

<sup>5</sup> See SJAC Trial Monitoring Reports: TR#6, trial day 15; TR#14, day 34.

<sup>6</sup> See SJAC Trial Monitoring Reports: TR#4, day 10; TR#6, trial day 15; TR#7, trial days 19 and 20.

- The counsels further argued that in combination with the above-mentioned forms of sexual violence, verbal and other sexual abuse as described also meet the threshold of similar gravity and are consequently considered as sexual violence.
- Criteria of similar gravity:
  - Citing to German domestic case law as well as the intention of the drafters of the German Code of Crimes against International Law to 'better capture the specific injustice of crimes against international law as this was previously the case under regular German criminal law', the plaintiff counsels argued that sexual violence as described above, requires particularized assessment in light of the patriarchic society structure in Syria.
  - They further elaborated on the consequences of detention and rape in detention, particularly for women and girls, citing different NGO reports as well as proposing to hear an expert on this matter.

§7(1) Nr.6 alt. 2 VStGB in context of a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population:

- The plaintiff counsels argued that the judges, in form of their rejection of Al-Gharib's detention complaint, already found that evidence on the existence of a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population in Syria from April 2011 until far beyond 2012 is corroborating. The judges also found that this attack was taking place through arbitrary detentions and torture at detention facilities of the different Syrian Intelligence Services.
- Referring to witness statements, expert-witnesses, reports read out in court as well as by summarizing their previous arguments, the plaintiff counsel argued that sexual and gender-based violence at detention facilities of the Syrian Intelligence Services are part of a widespread and systematic attack, as found by the prosecutor in the indictment.
- In light of the above, the plaintiff counsels request the translation and public read-out in the main proceedings of the following reports:
  - 1st report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic - A/HRC/S-17/2/Add.1; 23 November 2011, paras 66-68.
  - 7th report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic - A/HRC/25/65, 12 February 2014, paras 62-69.
  - 12th report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic - A/HRC/33/55, 11 August 2011, paras 104-108.
  - “‘I lost my dignity’: Sexual and gender-based violence in the Syrian Arab Republic”: Conference Room Paper - A/HRC/37/CRP.3, 15 March 2018, paras 27-42, 43-50.
  - “‘They have erased the dreams of my children’: children’s rights in the Syrian Arab Republic”: Conference Room Paper - A/HRC/43/CRP.6, 16 January 2020, paras 59-65.
  - Forestier, Marie \(2017\) You want freedom? This is your freedom: rape as a tactic of the Assad regime. LSE Women, Peace and Security Working Paper Series \(3/2017\). Centre for Women Peace and Security, London School of Economics and Political Science, London, UK.

- Lawyers and Doctors for Human Rights: “The Soul Has Died”: Typology, Patterns, Prevalence and the Devastating Impact of Sexual Violence Against Men and Boys in Syrian Detention, March 2019, pp. 4-9, 16-52.

Procedural remarks:

The plaintiff counsels clarified that the request for a change in legal reference only refers to a clarification by the judges regarding the application of §7 (1) VStGB [crimes against humanity] for an act already included in the indictment. The duration of a possible sentence remains the same, as a possible sentence for crimes under §7 (1) Nr. 6 VStGB (5 – 15 years imprisonment) is the same as for the charges already included in the indictment.

The plaintiff counsels Dr. Kroker and Scharmer further noted on behalf of the plaintiffs whom they represent, that the main aspects of the submission are not the possible consequences regarding the sentence for Raslan. They rather think that findings by the senate on sexual violence as systematic instrument of power of the Syrian regime, are of ‘immense importance’ regarding the scope of the accused’s acts as well as the evaluation of the systematic persecution of the civilian population in Syria. At the same time, they acknowledge the difficulties in evidence gathering relating to sexual crimes, due to cultural and gender-specific aspects. However, they expressed their hopes that witnesses willing to testify on these matters will be heard by the court. According to the plaintiff counsels, sexual violence “is one of the most cruel, grievous and at the same time deliberately concealment-orientated, facts of crimes against humanity, committed by the regime which would be assessed during a criminal proceeding for the first time.”

The proceedings were adjourned at 1:15PM.

The next trial will be on November 25, 2020 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 19

Hearing dates of November 25 and 26, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 46 – November 25, 2020

P20, a former detainee at Al-Khatib, testified about his experience being treated for an injury and shared the conditions injured detainees were forced to endure without any proper medical assistance. During his two detentions in Al-Khatib, P20 was interrogated by an officer who he describes as “elegant,” and having distinctive features and a mole. However, P20 could not remember the interrogator’s accent. P20 made two sketches mapping out the interrogator’s office and the detainees’ chamber, noting the juxtaposition between the calm office and the overcrowded conditions in the chamber. P20 said that state detentions are secret and like abductions, as his family and friends were not informed of his whereabouts or if he was alive. After leaving Syria, P20 recognized the photo of Raslan during French and German police questioning. P20 recognized Raslan from an interrogation when his blindfold had shifted up and stated that he was “90% positive” that Raslan was his interrogator. During proceedings, P20 pointed at Raslan and said he was confident that he was the same man who interrogated and hit him in Al-Khatib.

Trial Day 47 – November 26, 2020

P20 continued his testimony clarifying the details of when he recognized Raslan’s photo during police questioning. There was concern that P20 felt under pressure during the court session, however, he stated he was willingly taking part in the trial. He did share that his first police questioning in France reminded him of Syria, but his second questioning was shorter and led to his identification of Raslan. Translation errors during court proceedings led to miscommunication and confusion over both the timeline of P20’s police questionings as well as over whether the interrogator, whom P20 named as Raslan, wore a uniform.

Trial Day 46 – November 25, 2020

The proceedings began at 9:30 am. There were four spectators and two individuals from the media present.

Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Patrick Kroker and Dr. Anna Oehmichen did not attend. Deputy Plaintiff Counsel Charlotte Foerster-Baldenius appeared for Khubaib Ali Mohammad.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

P12 attended and sat among the plaintiffs' representatives.

P20 entered the courtroom accompanied by his counsel attorney Mrs. von der Behrens and another unidentified woman.<sup>2</sup>

Judge Kerber said that if the woman would like, she can sit in the front, next to the witness [She followed these directions and sat at the front next to the witness and his attorney.]

Von de Behrens said that the witness fears for his family in Syria and does not want to give personal information. Defense Counsel Michael Böcker asked about the woman who accompanied the witness and inquired about the consequences of his testimony in Syria. Von de Behrens said that the situation is problematic and P20's name could cause his family problems. Judge Kerber said that she received a fax the prior day regarding the request to not share this information. Böcker said that he would like to have a look at that fax [Judge Kerber distributed copies of the document].

Von de Behrens asked if the accompanying woman could get a headset [she was given a pair of headphones].

Judge Kerber requested that spectators and media personnel leave the courtroom until the court takes a decision.

At 10:55 [after around 5 – 10 minutes] the spectators were allowed back in the courtroom.

Judge Kerber announced that P12 will be allowed to cover his face and abstain from giving personal information.

Instructions were read out to P20 and he was informed about his rights as a witness.

Testimony of P20

Judge Kerber asked if P20 wanted to indicate if he was related to the accused by blood or marriage. P20 responded, no, he is not.

Judge Kerber asked P20 to tell the court about his CV. She explained that the court knows that he was detained and wanted to know the reason why and how he came into conflict with the regime. P20 said that he will talk in general about his detention in Al-Khatib, where he was detained twice. P20 pointed out that he did not prepare anything, regarding his memory and numbers [he meant that numbers/dates could potentially not be very accurate]. The first detention was from March 25, 2011 until April 1, 2011. The second one was from April 5, 2012 through July 10, 2012. The reason for the first detention was participation in a demonstration in Duma (دوما), rural Damascus. The security forces began to attack along with militias and "order-preserving forces" [Most likely, he was referring to "riot control forces"]. They were beaten brutally and were taken in mini-buses to Al-Khatib. On arrival, there was a welcome party, like in other branches, where detainees are brutally beaten without being charged. P20 was beaten in the square/yard and the mini-bus - ten times on his eye with the baton/stick suffering serious injuries and broken teeth. Inside Al-Khatib, he was kicked by the member/personnel [عنصر] causing two rib fractures. He fell to the ground and was not able to breathe. P20 was carried up four steps and was brought, along with 70 detainees, inside a room with an iron ceiling, which was approximately 70m<sup>2</sup>. It was overlooked by interrogation rooms and administrative offices. The big dormitory/chamber [cell] looked as if it was recently/freshly painted white (behind the white was red blood). A few hours later, paramedics from the Red Crescent entered to succor the wounded and suture the wounds, which was done in an unhygienic way. After that, one of the paramedics registered P20's name and requested that he get transferred to the hospital. P20 was transferred there (to the hospital) along with five other people. They were tied to wheelchairs. They entered Al-Mojtahed (المجتهد) hospital and the emergency department [ER] where there were other people and visitors. There were five armed members [عناصر] with P20, who were telling people that P20 was a sniper. He was insulted and spat on [by people] in the hospital. After that, the doctor asked P20 for his name. The member intervened and requested that a triple-digit be registered (it was known to the public that if one dies, no name would be available). P20 was treated violently by the doctor and in the emergency department. If P20 needed to get up, the security member violently pulled him up. A chest x-ray was done and P20's eye was examined. He was told that he would not be able to see with that eye anymore. P20 was taken back to bed and was given an injection. On the bus, an Al-Khatib personnel member tore the prescription throwing insults at P20 saying that he and the other detainees should die.

---

<sup>2</sup> In accordance with § 406f StPO victims to a crime are allowed to be accompanied to their questioning by an attorney (paragraph 1), as well as another person the victim-witness trusts (paragraph 2) for psychological support.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 was told whether he had a chest problem after the x-ray. P20 said that he did not know, he was given medicine and a prescription which was torn up.

Judge Kerber asked if he had fractured ribs. P20 responded that he had fractures in two ribs.

Judge Kerber asked how he knew that. P20 said that he later went to Hamdan hospital (مشفى حمدان) and they told P20 that for some reason they could not examine his eye, because the doctor of Al-Mojtahed... [P20 was interrupted].

Judge Kerber interjected, "and now?" P20 said that it was a false piece of information. After six months of treatment with medicine, he was able to see again.

P20 continued saying that he went [was taken] back to Al-Khatib (after leaving the hospital) and was hit with rifle butts despite his health condition. P20 was summoned the following day for the interrogation. P20 does not know if it was on the second or third floor because he was blindfolded. P20 entered a room that was different from normal rooms. There was an officer with a suit [sometimes بدلة was translated to "uniform" and understood as "military uniform," which is not accurate as "military uniform" is بدلة عسكرية. This caused some misunderstanding later on] and glossy dress shoes. He [the officer/interrogator] asked P20 about his connections to one of P20's relatives saying [indirectly] that he [the family member] is affiliated with the [Muslim] Brotherhood. The officer/interrogator accused P20 of being part of an Islamic fighting group. It was somewhat of a shock, but P20 felt that it was a joke. P20 told him to ask logically because his family is completely non-religious atheists. The interrogator slapped P20 twice, hitting his abdomen with his knee. P20 was able to recognize/distinguish him. P20's eye was not alright and he was staggering, but the blindfold was pushed up a bit. The interrogator stood a distance from P20, but as he raised his head, P20 saw him and recognized/identified him. P20 said that he can assert 90% [he is 90% sure] that he [the interrogator] is the same person in the picture that was published in the media about Raslan.

Böcker wanted to make sure that he understood and asked if the witness said that he recognized the accused. [The translator repeated P20's above answer].

Judge Kerber asked what happened after that. P20 said that he was taken downstairs by members/guards [عناصر] to the same big dormitory/chamber [cell] with the iron ceiling. The following day, he was interrogated about participating in a demonstration in Duma (considering that he came from a different area) and he was tortured with Falaqa.<sup>3</sup> Within half an hour [it was not clear if P20 meant that he was tortured for 30 minutes, or if the whole interrogation plus the torture lasted that long], P20 went back to the room [cell]. He did not confess to participating in a demonstration. He was beaten two or three times. Later, P20 confessed to participating in a demonstration. They were released from detention after they were forced to sign a blank paper and another paper - a pledge to not demonstrate again. They were taken by bus to the Duma municipality square [and released]. That was everything concerning the first detention. Regarding the second one, an office was stormed on April 05, and he was detained along with...

Judge Kerber interrupted asking what year this occurred. P20 responded 2012. Five people were taken to Division 40 and beaten violently. There was an interrogation and violent beating because there were photos against President Bashar al-Assad on the laptop. The interrogation was violent. The following day, P20 and the other four were transferred to Al-Khatib to the same place (the same big chamber). Before that, they stayed in the corridor (that leads to the chamber) for a week. After a week [of sitting/staying there], the manager of the prison (this is a known term, but P20 didn't know who that person exactly was) let them enter the place. In the big dormitory/chamber [cell], there were around 350 detainees. P20 was not sure but counted approximately this many people. There was no place to walk – simply, one had to step on others or fall over them. After two weeks in that place (P20 was beaten several times by Abu Ghadab أبو غضب and Memati ميماتي), P20 was punished by being transferred to a dark room where there were 50 other detainees. He stayed there for five days, before being transferred back again to the big chamber. After four days, they [P20 and the four others he was arrested with] were taken for interrogation. They did not have the laptop and the accusation was obvious (when they were detained in Division 40, they took the laptops). The interrogator asked P20 why he came there and for the reason of his detention. P20 and the interrogator talked about the first detention and P20 said that he was from the honest opposition and that he supports the democratic dialogue with the president. Based on that, he [the interrogator] acknowledged P20's and the honest opposition's position that accepts Bashar Al-Assad ["Honest opposition" is a Syrian term referring to people who support Bashar al-Assad but publicly say they oppose the government. It is a nuanced term signifying that a person does not support the "Opposition," but they are not outwardly Assad loyalists]. Then, P20 was taken back to the chamber [cell]. He stayed there for 21 days in total. Four days after that interrogation, he was transferred along with four others to the General Intelligence Directorate in Kafar Souseh, كفرسوسة, which is a different story.

---

<sup>3</sup> Falaqa is a torture practice where detainees are beaten on the soles of their feet.

Judge Kerber asked P20 how he and his eye are today after that experience. P20 said that regarding his eye, he had a six-month treatment. He fixed his teeth and is breathing, but he suffers psychological problems. He shared that he does not have the guts to go to a doctor and tell his story, but he has gotten better and he draws [sketches/paintings].

Judge Kerber asked if P20 sleeps well or has nightmares. P20 replied no, he always has nightmares.

Judge Kerber asked if he continued his study. P20 replied that he studied and graduated, but he still has psychological problems, stress and panic attacks.

Judge Kerber asked if he works. P20 answered that he works from home.

Judge Kerber asked how he works. P20 said that he works on computers from home.

Judge Kerber asked when P20 participated in the demonstration in Duma. P20 replied that it was on Friday that preceded March 25th. They were in Duma (maybe March 19 – 20), which was the first demonstration in Duma.

Judge Kerber asked about the time between his first demonstration and first detention. P20 said that the question was not clear. Judge Kerber repeated the question. P20 responded that it was one week.

Judge Kerber said that she has different information. In the transcript, it says that P20's first demonstration was on March 25 and he was detained on April 1st. P20 said that the difference is that there were two successive Fridays. They finished a demonstration and prepared for the next one.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 was detained on March 25th or April 1st. P20 replied, March 25th.

Judge Kerber asked how P20 knew that it was Al-Khatib. P20 said that Syrians and activists, in general, know the names of the branches, especially Al-Khatib due to its location inside a residential area.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 was able to see while he was transported. P20 said that he was able to estimate/guess because he lived in the area for seven years. He saw the Red Crescent hospital branch at the corner of Al-Khatib. He has no doubt [that it was Al-Khatib].

Judge Kerber asked if he was blindfolded while transported. P20 said no, not on the way.

Judge Kerber asked how many times P20 was interrogated during his first detention. P20 said it was two or three times, aside from going upstairs to the office.

Judge Kerber said that she understood that it was four times in total. P20 replied, "ok."

Judge Kerber said that it is not about what she thinks, but rather what he experienced. P20 said that by "interrogation," he meant Falaqa with members/guards [عناصر] questioning him. Regarding the office, it was a question and two slaps.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 could remember when he went to the office for interrogation for the first time. P20 said after he came back from the hospital, he went to the office on the third floor, and there, he saw the officer that he recognized. That was the first time.

Judge Kerber refreshed P20's recollection saying that he had said in the police questioning that "I went to the office at 7:00 am for the interrogation, was tortured with Falaqa, then was brought back to the cell." Judge Kerber asked if P20 was tortured with Falaqa before he was brought back. P20 said that it happened [that he indeed told that the police], but now he remembers that he went upstairs to him [the interrogator] and the beating was the following day. Later on, he was summoned and interrogated because he participated in the demonstration and he was beaten.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 wanted a break. P20 responded, no.

Judge Kerber asked how P20 knew it was the second or third floor. P20 explained that he was on the staircase seeing the steps in front of him although he was blindfolded.

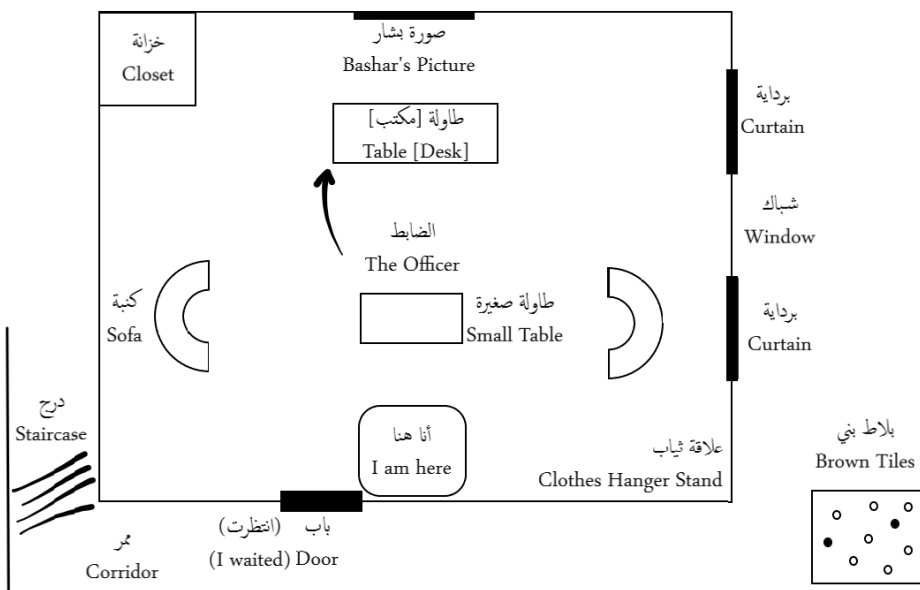

Judge Kerber asked how many steps he went up. P20 said he did not know.

Judge Kerber asked P20 to describe the office where he saw the interrogator. P20 said he sketched it for the French and German police. There were two sofas on the side, a wooden desk and a clothes-hanger-stand. The granite tiles [this was translated as "floor tiles," hence the next question] were brown with white dots. There were plants and a brown- or black-leathered chair.

Judge Kerber asked if the floor was wood. P20 said that it was not wood but granite tiles.

Judge Kerber asked if there were any pictures. P20 replied that, of course, all offices [in Syria] have pictures of Hafez al-Assad and Bashar al-Assad that he saw from a distance, but he remembers the flooring, window, and plants well. The window was to his right when he entered.

Judge Kerber showed a sketch on the projector then removed it as P20's attorney said that they wanted to check if there was a name on it. P20 and his attorney went to the judge's panel and checked the sketch and covered the signature. It was shown once again [and below].

Judge Kerber asked P20 to describe/explain what was on the sketch. P20 [explaining the sketch] said, "I waited at the door. I was taking a glance around when the interrogator was looking back at his table [desk]." P20 said the last time he looked, the interrogator came up to him and he could identify his face.

Judge Kerber asked P20 about the height of the interrogator. P20 said a bit taller than himself.

Judge Kerber asked whether he was taller or shorter than P20. P20 repeated that he was as tall or taller. It is not precise, because he was far away until he was provoked, then he came and hit P20. P20 cannot say precisely.

Judge Kerber asked P20 to give his height. P20 replied, 175 cm.

Judge Kerber asked if the interrogator had a beard. P20 said no, only a mustache. He was elegant and P20 smelled the scent of perfume.

Judge Kerber asked if there was a distinguishing feature on his [interrogator's] face. P20 said that he does not remember, but regarding the mole, it was 100% distinguishable. However, his facial features are also distinguishable, for example, his eyes, nose...etc (the mole was not everything).

Judge Kerber asked if he is the same person sitting to the right [Raslan]. P20 replied, "I am certain."

Judge Kerber asked which one. [P20 pointed to Raslan] P20 said, the person in the black jacket.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 was on his knees or standing up. P20 said he was standing up the whole time.

Judge Kerber asked how he hit P20 in the stomach. P20 said it was with his knee and before that he slapped P20.

Judge Kerber asked P20 if it was in the stomach or the abdomen. Judge Kerber said that she finds it hard to picture how he was able to hit P20's stomach with his knee. P20 replied that he finds it strange as well, but that is what happened.

Judge Kerber responded, "but on your abdomen." P20 affirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if the interrogator spat on P20. P20 said he did not remember at that moment [it was unclear whether P20 meant that he did not remember if he was spat on at that particular time or if he did not remember at that moment in court].

Judge Kerber refreshed P20's recollection and quoted the police hearing transcript from August 18, 2016 [The court monitor recorded this as 2017 previously, so it is unconfirmed whether the police hearing took place August 18, 2016 or August 18, 2017] "I was tortured with Falaqa, then beaten, blindfolded and taken to an officer in an office who accused me of being an Islamist". P20 responded that he was talking about the same interrogation.

Judge Kerber repeated the question of whether P20 was spat on. P20 repeated the same answer ["I do not remember at that moment"].

Judge Kerber asked what the interrogator was wearing. P20 said a suit.

Judge Kerber refreshed P20's recollection and quoted from the second French police hearing on April 2, 2019, "I was beaten on the way and was blindfolded and went upstairs to the second or third floor. I waited half an hour. He accused me of being an Islamist." P20 said this was correct.

Judge Kerber continued, "He punched/hit me in the jaw." Judge Kerber asked if it was a punch or if he was kneed. P20 said he was hit with the hand and the knee.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 recalls if the officer had a certain dialect. P20 said he did not remember.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 remembers his answer concerning the question about the dialect in the Federal Criminal Police Office hearing. P20 said, "At this moment, I do not remember my answer."

Judge Kerber quoted from the hearing transcript, "It was an Alawite dialect." P20 responded no, he does not recall that it was an Alawite dialect.

Judge Kerber asked if it was a Damascene dialect. P20 said he did not remember.

Judge Kerber asked if it was a dialect which everybody understands, similar to standard German. P20 said perhaps he [the officer] had a "white dialect" [This is the same term used by P19], but he does not remember. But he remembered that it was not an Alawite dialect.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 saw corpses during his first or second detention. P20 said he saw some in the second detention. P20 mentioned the sketch of the cell, saying he was not sure if it was available. In the toilet, there were some blankets that were in bad condition. In a small corner was an injured person who was bleeding from his abdomen. The blood turned orange in color and his legs were infected. P20 remembers that there were worms on his leg because of the infections and pus. The injured individual was unable to climb on the toilet seat and "made it on himself" [defecated/wet himself]. He was brought outside the dormitory/chamber and they [the detainees] told the prison guard that he died. The prison guard told the people [detainees] to throw him [the injured/dead] outside. Also, P20 remembered two people who died under torture. Moreover, there were two under-aged (15 or 16-year-olds) who were in that cramped place and their condition was very bad. In general, in that place [where the injured individual was, near the blankets] were the people whose condition was the worst, because if one could move, one would not stay there.

Judge Kerber asked if the two people died under torture, or if that was a guess. P20 said his memory is connected to several branches, so he cannot remember if it was in Al-Khatib or another branch.

Judge Kerber asked if P20's second detention was in 2012 or 2013. P20 replied, 2012.

Judge Kerber said that in the August 18, 2016 hearing P20 had said that it was in 2013, in the middle of June. P20 said that he thinks that there was a memory mistake, as sometimes his memory fails him. His detention was documented by VDC [Violations Documentation Center] and he asserted that his second detention was in 2012, not in 2013.

Judge Kerber asked if it was May or April. P20 replied, April.

***20-minute-break***

Judge Kerber said that the court will continue for an hour, then take a lunch break, and continue afterward.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 recognized the officer whom he described as Raslan, when he was asked in the Federal Criminal Police Office. P20 said at the beginning he answered that he [Raslan] was just an officer. A group/collection of photos of different people were shown to him. He thought that they were detainees who were with him in Al-Khatib. He put Raslan's photo among the photos of people he recognized. It was very likely that he identified Raslan in that first moment. Later, P20 remembered that this person is indeed the person he saw [during the interrogation].

Judge Kerber said that she wanted to show the photos from the minutes of the April 2, 2019 hearing. She asked P20 if she should cover his signature on them. P20 said that he does not know if it was his signature or his initials. Judge Kerber said that she would cover the signature.

[2 photos were shown, one was Raslan's]

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 remembered the photos that were shown to him. P20 said a group/collection of photos were shown to him by the French and the German police. These were from the German police.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 remembered what he said in the police hearing about how "the officer was taller than me." P20 said he remembered saying it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 saw pictures of Raslan before the questioning/hearing. P20 said no, the first time was during the questioning by the French and German police.

Judge Wiedner said that he meant before that. Böcker interrupted saying that he did not understand the answer. P20 explained that he was saying that these pictures were first shown to him during the police questioning.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 saw pictures of Raslan before the police questioning, for example on the internet. P20 said he did not see any picture of Raslan on the internet.

Judge Wiedner reiterated that P20 said the same thing in the questioning. Judge Wiedner said that P20 mentioned the name Raslan in the Federal German Police Office questioning and asked P20 how he knew the name or related it to the photo. P20 said the name was not related at the beginning. He [Raslan] was just the officer who hit him (the question P20 was asked was similar to: "Have you seen these faces, has anyone of them tortured you or hit you?").

Judge Wiedner said that he was asking because Raslan's name was mentioned in the German police questioning. P20 said this was what happened at the French police questioning: He was shown photos and he said that he might know this person [Raslan]. However, it happened [mentioning the name "Raslan"] later at the German police. The news afterward [after the French police questioning] on the internet was that Raslan was caught [arrested] and his name was circulated. Talking about Raslan had been done with the German police.

[The part that is supposed to show the signature was covered and the sketch was shown].

Judge Wiedner asked how big the window was. P20 said it was 1.5 x 2 meters.

Judge Wiedner asked if it was opened or if one could see through it. P20 said there was glass and iron [bars/mesh], but one could not clearly see through it.

Judge Wiedner asked if they got air inside the cell through the door. P20 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were other sources of ventilation. P20 said he remembered that here [marked with black!] was a gap between the iron ceiling and the wall. We [the detainees] could differentiate day from night [through it], but it was not a source of ventilation.

Judge Wiedner asked if the cell was underground in the basement. P20 said that the place was [originally] a garden, but it was a bit lower than ground level.

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that at the top left [of the sketch] is where the person died. P20 said that the question was not clear. Judge Wiedner repeated the question. P20 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner refreshed the recollection of P20 by quoting that he had said that the hygiene was bad and that detainees easily contracted infections. P20 said yes, due to the high temperature, any small wound turned into inflammation/infection in one or two days. One time, P20 and other detainees did a small operation: they took a piece of the paint and incised a toe of a person, because it was so inflamed/infected. He was in a lot of pain. P20 and the other detainees were forced to hold the man down to make the incision. There was no medicine and they were not able to get medicine or disinfectant.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P20's recollection quoting that he had said that the person who died remained next to the door for days. The corpse stank and they were not able to go to the toilet. P20 said yes, he used to wet himself.

Judge Wiedner quoted P20 saying that he had said that next to the door it stank. P20 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner quoted "they put the person near the toilet. It was damp and molding. The person was wounded." P20 responded, correct.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P20's recollection quoting, "when he died, he was carried out and relocated." P said yes, a number of people struggled to carry/relocate the body.

Judge Wiedner once again refreshed P20's recollection that P20 had said that "It was difficult to see through the windows. P20 was interrogated in the room to the right." P20 said yes, in the first detention he was interrogated there. It was difficult to see, but P20 remembers that when he was in the room, he was able to see the inside of the [cell].

Judge Wiedner asked if that happened in 2011 and if it was in the first, second or the third interrogation. P20 said it was the second or third.

Judge Wiedner said that P20 had answered the question, "how he knew that the person was dead" by saying that "the detainees said that and he had wounds in the abdomen that looked like a gunshot wound." P20 replied that he cannot affirm that it was a gunshot, but based on the color of blood and there was a spot that looked like it. Therefore, it was possible that it was a gunshot wound.

Judge Wiedner asked if the person got help. P20 said he never did, but he was bandaged.

Judge Wiedner asked if the personnel were informed that the person needed help. P20 said that the officers and members/personnel/guards [عناصر] could always see the person as he was next to the door [marked with the red question mark on the sketch]. It was clear that there was a wounded person. It was difficult to see him when he was in the area with the blankets, but here [marked with red] he was clearly noticed. His condition became bad and the member/guard [عنصر] was like "he [the person] is stinking and has to be relocated inside."

Judge Wiedner refreshed P20's recollection saying "P20 did not speak with him and he was stowed inside." P20 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner once again quoted, "there was an elderly detainee in the second detention." P20 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P20 stated, "there was no medical care until he died. P20 was asked how he knew that the person died. P20 answered that people said that and carried him. P20 witnessed them carrying him." P20 said that he does not have anything to add.

Judge Wiedner asked how big the external cell was and how many detainees were there. P20 said I think that it was five or six meters by ten meters. The distance between the pillars was three meters. With that logic: if one can estimate that between two pillars there were 75 people, then the total number would be 350 people. People were literally on top of each other.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 had a place to sleep. P20 said no. The problem was that if one wanted to sleep, another person would sleep on top of him and then another person...after half an hour, one could not breathe because there were three people on top of him.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 heard something from the rooms overlooking the cell. P20 said that he does not remember hearing anything or anyone speaking.

Judge Wiedner said that P20 said in the police hearing that he used to constantly hear the screams of detainees. P20 said they used to always hear the torture sounds. In a certain room, sometimes the sounds were so close and it seemed that they came from here [P20 pointed at the sketch, though the court monitor could not see which area he pointed to]. But, the Damascene person, for example, they heard his voice coming from a more distant place.

Judge Wiedner asked about the general condition of the rooms, the detainees, and the injuries. He also asked if the food was sufficient and about P20's body condition. P20 said that, in general, the situation was bad in comparison to other branches. P20 stated that he can say that being at Al-Khatib during his second detention period, was very bad. There was no medical care nor medicine. Food consisted of a piece of potato, a piece of bread, and cucumber. At night there was tahini halva or a piece of bread with olives. It was bad. For anyone who had wounds or inflammations, it was very bad. If one entered the blanket area, it was hell - the end/terminal point. In short, it was hell.

Judge Wiedner asked what torturing methods P20 witnessed or was told about by other detainees. P20 said the ones he saw/witnessed were the normal sticks; the "tire stick" (made from tires) was too thick.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 experienced being beaten with it himself. P20 said yes, Memati hit me with it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 experienced other methods of torture or if he heard about them. P20 said he did not know [if he heard about] torturing methods other than sticks.

Judge Wiedner asked about getting hit on the feet with sticks. P20 said yes, Falaqa: a belt was tied to a stick and wrapped around the legs to fixate them. Perhaps the method of torture is changed to a device that fixates the legs for the beating.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 witnessed or was told about hanging someone from the hands. P20 said that personally no, not in Al-Khatib. It happened with him in other branches.

Judge Wiedner repeated, asking about Al-Khatib. P20 reiterated that in Al-Khatib he was not hung.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 heard if anyone experienced it. P20 replied that right now, he does not remember.

***Lunch break***

Judge Wiedner said that he understood that P20's first detention was in March 2011. P20 replied, correct.

Judge Wiedner asked how long it lasted. P20 said one week, until April 1, 2011.

Judge Wiedner asked how long P20 stayed in Al-Khatib in his second detention. P20 said approximately 21 days.

Judge Wiedner reminded P20 that he had said that the second detention was in 2012 and asked if P20 could confirm that. P20 confirmed, yes in 2012. There was a celebration of the anniversary of the Syrian revolution and other personal details, e.g. Al-Houla الحولة massacre happened when he was in prison in 2012. There were incidents in Syria and some personal things that P20 relates to that time [to his detention].

Judge Wiedner asked P20 to talk about it in general. P20 said that after his release, the Al-Houla massacre was a shock because it was a massacre in an area that he knows. There were also personal events in 2012 [P20 counseled his attorney] regarding a person. It concerns where P20 comes from and it can identify him.

Judge Wiedner asked if the Al-Houla massacre happened before or after P20's detention. P20 said he got the news when he was in detention. There was a new detainee who told the other detainees that. Additionally, the activist Basel Shehadeh باسل شحادة was targeted by the Syrian regime and was killed in Homs in 2012. Some detainees who entered the prison had participated in the memorial prayer of Basel, but P20 was in the military police services.

Judge Wiedner asked how the name of the mentioned person [Basel Shehadeh] is written. [The translator spelled out the name].

Judge Wiedner asked when P20 left Syria. [P20 counseled his attorney] and said he left Syria in July 2014.

Judge Wiedner said that he was asking because P20 specified the date to the French police. [P20 counseled his attorney] P20 replied that frankly, it is related to the memory and the years, it is connected to a certain event. When the questioning is in a normal context, he remembers the event better, unlike when it is in a direct question (when did you leave?). It has to be in a certain context to remember it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 did not think about it now. P20 said yes, he did not think about it. He cannot say which day exactly, but most probably, it was July 16th.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P20 went to another place after Al-Khatib in his second detention. Judge Wiedner asked when that was and how long it lasted. P20 said what he remembers is 21 days in Al-Khatib; one day in Division 40 (before Al-Khatib); three weeks in the General Intelligence; two weeks in the political security in Al-Maysat الميسات and Al-Fayha' الفيحاء (near the stadium).

Judge Wiedner asked if the General Intelligence Directorate was in Kafar Souseh. P20 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked when that was. P20 responded that he thinks it was on July 5, 2012.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P20 mentioned Basel Shehadeh and asked if P20 was in the military intelligence services when the incident happened. P20 said he was in the military police services before the transfer to the military jurisdiction.

Judge Wiedner asked whether it was the military police or intelligence. P20 said the [military] police.

Judge Wiedner asked where that was. P20 said in the military police in Al-Qaboun القابون.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P20 said that his second detention was in Division 40 and asked how P20 knew that it was Division 40. P20 said he knew by the way they took them from As-Salehiyyeh الصالحيّة to Division 40. There are places/locations that the public know well. There is a detail related to Division 40: as a result of the crazy beating, P20 thought about committing suicide and jumping from the fourth floor. There was an iron staircase or a door. He was tied near that place. It was clear that there was a sound coming from a window and he was not blindfolded. He looked through the window and saw Al-Jisr Al-Abyad, الجسر الأبيض, which he knew. It was a crazy thought and P20 abandoned it.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 was transferred to Al-Khatib a day later. P20 said yes, with a group of people.

Judge Wiedner asked if the personnel who transported P20 to Al-Khatib stayed in Al-Khatib. P20 said he cannot specify that [he does not know].

Judge Wiedner wanted to go back to P20's first detention in March 2011. Judge Wiedner said that P20 participated in two demonstrations. Judge Wiedner asked what P20 experienced in them and if there were injuries or death. P20 said that on the Friday that preceded his detention, he was in Duma. When the demonstration emerged, it was attacked (the civilians) and a group of people was detained. The demonstration continued and there was a sit-in at the municipality square. The security [forces] stormed the people and beat them at night/in the evening. In the demonstration that led to P20's detention, there was violent beating and he heard that 11 people from Duma died. Their funerals were on the same day.

Judge Wiedner asked whether P20 saw the dead, or heard about them. P20 said they were being detained and after that, they opened fire on the demonstrators. Later, after he was released, P20 knew about what happened and watched videos (that are still available today) that show the shooting on the demonstrators.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 witnessed that himself. P20 replied no, his friends told him that and he watched videos, one of them was filmed by his friend. He also participated in the funeral of 11 people on the third day, April 3 or 4 [It is unclear if he meant the 11 people who died during the demonstration, as the timeline of his arrest does not indicate that].

Judge Wiedner asked if that was before or after P20's detention. P20 replied after he was released.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P20 said that he saw security forces attacking the demonstration and watched videos. Judge Wiener asked what P20 witnessed and if he can specify which security forces they were: e.g. soldiers, Shabiha, Intelligence services. P20 said he saw security gatherings (in Duma) during the demonstration. Some of them had the uniform of the riot control police (oil-green color) and were alone in a set place. On the other side, there were security forces with their cars with the street between them. A few meters away was another group who started beating [demonstrators]. Next to them were security cars, which were known from their numbers [license plates] and the pictures of Bashar and Maher [al-Assad] on their rear windows. There were Shabiha on the sides who were carrying chains without weapons. The civilians were attacked and some of the people who were beating them in the square took people to Al-Khatib and some of them stayed with the demonstrators there.

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 saw weapons or shooting. P20 said they had Kalashnikovs.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P20's recollection that in the French police hearing he had said that there was systematic beating in the first detention. P20 said the question is not clear.

Judge Wiedner said that P20 mentioned a person who was beaten. P20 said that there were security forces who brought them and were inside Al-Khatib branch. While the detainees were in the corridor, one of the forces kicked P20 fracturing P20's ribs. There were witnesses and security forces were with them.

Judge Wiedner said that he meant something else. Judge Wiedner said that P20 mentioned in the French police hearing that a person fell on the ground and perhaps died. P20 replied that he does not remember now.

Judge Wiedner refreshed P20's recollection quoting, "some detainees fell on the ground and P20 thought that one of them fell and P20 was not sure if he died". P20 said that in the "welcome party," some people died. His friend died under torture in Homs during the "welcome party" and something else could have happened to P20 [in another scenario] and he could have died. He lost his breath [was not able to breathe well] until the evening.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 wanted a 10-minute break. P20 said, ok.

***10-minute break***

Questioning by Prosecutor Polz

Polz asked if P20's family or friends were notified about P20's detention. P20 said never, there was no notification from the authorities to his family.

Polz asked if P20 was able to communicate with them. P20 said never, the communication [with the outside] was through the new detainees. In both detentions, the authorities told [P20's family] nothing about his situation, although his family tried to communicate and find out about his fate, there was no answer.

Polz refreshed P20's recollection stating that he was asked during the French police questioning whether his family was notified and P20 said "no, they knew through my friends, but the authorities did not notify them. The detainee has no right to communicate and the detention was secretive." P20 responded, correct.

Polz asked if it is true that the detention was secretive. P20 said, exactly. In Syria, it is a secret and there is no information about the detainee. The more correct term is abduction. His example is relatable: in both detentions, there was no charge and if the detainees asked a question about the reason for the detention, there would be no answer. And there is no right to communicate with the outside, nor whether the outside knows about us. Sometimes, [body] searching the detainee by the security [personnel] is done at the beginning, so that the family does not get information [It was not clear what P20 meant by this statement. The court monitor conjectures that maybe P20 meant that security searches are done at the beginning so that one's phone is taken away to avoid calling].

Polz said that P20 mentioned Falaqa and asked how many people were there during the procedure. P20 said essentially two people tie the feet and each one holds the person down on each side. One asks the question and the other one beats. Sometimes, the one who asks the question beats.

Polz asked which occurred with P20. P20 said the one who was asking, also beat him.

Polz asked if P20 could tell if there was hierarchy between the individuals. P20 said that usually in Al-Khatib, there are personnel/members [عناصر] and then people who could be officers (but for sure not a regular member/personnel). This person [who might be an officer] hit P20 twice. In other branches, an officer would be with a member/unit [عنصر] and the officer hit. He knew the hierarchy because of the title/form of address "Sidi."

Polz asked who addressed whom. P20 responded that the lower in command addressed the higher in command saying "Yes, Sidi [yes, sir]."

Polz asked if P20 was exposed to sexual abuse in Al-Khatib. P20 said no, he was not.

Polz asked if P20 heard from other people or if someone told P20 about sexual abuse against men or women. P20 said yes, he heard about it but asked Polz if she meant in Al-Khatib or other places?

Polz said that she is interested in Al-Khatib at the moment. P20 said no one told him personally about Al-Khatib.

Polz asked if in general this was known in Syria. P20 said, in general in Syria, this method exists. At least, he heard from [female] friends about verbal sexual abuse.

Polz asked if P20 also heard about physical in addition to verbal. P20 said he does not have any information.

Polz said that Judge Wiedner asked P20 about torturing methods and mentioned Falaqa and Tire. Polz asked if P20 saw people who were tortured like that. P20 said that within his testimony he mentioned the person from Damascus, who had blood from his fingernails and toenails.

Polz recalled that in the Federal Criminal Police Office hearing P20 said "There was a person with long hair who was taken outside the cell for an hour and the detainees heard screams. When he returned, the detainees could not recognize him, he was bruised and his fingernails were extracted." Polz asked if P20 remembers that. P20 confirmed he remembers.

Polz asked if the person was transferred because of his injuries. P20 answered that he does not remember that he was transferred, but remained in his place and did not move. P20 talked about a person who lost his mind and did not sleep for four days. He was standing on his feet for four days. They [P20 and other detainees] requested that the security personnel help this man (his name was most probably Khaled خالد or Abu Khaled (أبو خالد)), saying that there is a problem happening with this person. On the fifth day, he started to talk to himself and wet himself.

Böcker said that he had two questions.

Judge Kerber said that they will take a five-minute break.

Böcker said that the questions are short.

Judge Kerber said that they will continue after five minutes.

*** 5-minute break***

Judge Wiedner asked if the person who could not sleep was in P20's first or second detention. P20 replied that it was in the second one.

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that P20 had not seen a picture of Raslan before the photo-array in the police questioning. P20 confirmed. He did not see any pictures of Anwar Raslan.

Judge Wiedner asked if the French police showed P20 any photos. P20 said that they showed him a large group of pictures of different people.

Judge Wiedner asked if Raslan was identified at that hearing. P20 said at that questioning, Raslan's name was not raised. They showed me pictures and asked me if I can identify officers. The question was "Have you seen these people in the branch?"

Judge Wiedner asked whether P20 recognized Raslan in the French police questioning or just in the German one. P20 said he remembers that one person was a probable [suspect]. He told them that it was probable that he had seen this person. There was a group of photos with people he had probable cause to believe he had seen. In the German police questioning, P20 directly said that he knows him [Raslan].

Judge Wiedner asked if P20 did not recognize Raslan during the French police questioning. Judge Kerber clarified the question. P20 answered, "About Anwar, I said, 'this person, I have seen him.'"

Judge Kerber asked, "without a name?" P20 confirmed that he knew without a name.

Judge Kerber asked if the person P20 recognized back then is the person (Raslan) P20 recognized in the courtroom. P20 confirmed.

Klinge said that there is another accused and asked if P20 recognizes him. [P20 looked at Eyad A.] P20 replied, no, he has not seen him.

Böcker said that he had questions for later. Judge Kerber asked if he had any clarifying questions. Böcker said no.

Judge Kerber dismissed P20 and announced that the hearing would be carried into the following day.

Böcker asked von der Behrens if she could stay in the courtroom.

[Von der Behrens talked with P20 before the latter left.]

Böcker said that he had a problem regarding the second police interrogation in 2019. Böcker does not know whether P20 recognized Raslan before the photo-array in that interrogation, because nobody knows which photos were shown in the French police questioning.

Judge Kerber said that these photos are not available in the files/records, as far as she knows.

Böcker asked if the court can get these photos. Judge Kerber said that they will try.

The proceedings were adjourned at 3:00 p.m.

The next trial will be on November 26, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

Trial Day 47 – November 26, 2020

The proceedings began at 09:30. There were four spectators and two individuals from the media present.

Mrs. Friedrich appeared for Oehmichen. Mrs. Foerster-Baldenius appeared for Mohammad Judge Kerber asked the lady who accompanied P20 who she was. She answered that she is [name redacted] P20's fiancée.

Judge Wiedner said that they contacted Deußing to find out whether the French police could send the photos they showed the witness in the questioning, but the French police are not willing to share them. These photos however were not identical to those used in the Federal Criminal Police Office questioning.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 was understanding the translation. P20 said not that much. Yesterday, he had slight problems, but he thinks today is better.

Judge Kerber said that P20 was shown photos in the interrogation and asked whom he recognized. P20 asked if Judge Kerber was asking concerning the French or the German questioning.

Judge Kerber clarified she was referring to the photo-array in the French police questioning.

Böcker said that P20 was interrogated twice in France.

Judge Kerber asked P20 to confirm that. P20 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if he was shown photos in both questionings. P20 said no, only in the second one.

Judge Kerber asked whom P20 recognized in that questioning. P20 said he just wanted to point out that the conditions of the questioning were very bad. During the previous times, the questioning was too long with no clear reason. He [presumably the interrogator] opened an interrogation about the incidents in Syria. The interrogator was from the military, which caused a lot of psychological pressure during the first interrogation. He asked questions in a violent way that reminded P20 of interrogations in Syria. P20 shared this experience with many friends who had the same experience as well. P20 told the officer that he did not want to carry on the interrogation because of the officer's behavior. The last French police questioning, before showing the photos of the people, P20 wanted to refuse to follow through because of their behavior. So, they said "ok, last thing" with these photos. They showed a large group of photos of different people from yesterday [P20 seemed to be referring to the previous day in court (as they showed photos in the courtroom)]. They questioned whether P20 knew or had seen any of these people. P20 pointed to the people whom he probably knew. That was everything.

Judge Kerber asked if P20 recognized someone for certain. P20 said no, not 100%.

Judge Kerber asked if Raslan's photos were among the photos during the French police questioning. P20 said he does not remember.

Questioning by Defense Counsel Böcker

Böcker said that it was not comfortable for P20 during the French questioning and asked P20 if he was feeling well today. P20 responded that he is in a good health and very well and feels no pressure. No law forces him to come [to court in Germany].

Böcker clarified that he meant is if the atmosphere in court is good or is it similar to what P20 experienced in France. P20 said yes, it is very good.

Böcker stated that they have a problem with the photos from the French police and recalled that P20 said that the second questioning in France was too long and the behavior was bad reminding him of Syria. Böcker asked P20 if the atmosphere during the second questioning was bad. P20 said he did not say that the second questioning lasted too long, only the first one. He took a position during the second questioning as a result of the first one. P20 refused to continue and at the end, they showed him the photos.

Böcker stated that the first questioning lasted four hours. P20 said it was short, he does not know if was four hours, but it did not feel to be that long [There was confusion over which police questioning Böcker was discussing].

Böcker said that he and his colleague [Fratzki] heard that P20 said that the questioning was long and then they showed the photos. Böcker asked P20 whether he heard P20 wrong. Von der Behrens said that P20 did not say that, but rather that “There was pressure in the first questioning, then they showed the photos” and that “He was taking a position in the second questioning because of the pressure in the first one.”

Böcker asked if the first questioning lasted for 3 hours and 47 minutes. P20 said the first one lasted longer than this. He did not know about the second one, but it was shorter.

Böcker asked if the second questioning was longer than the first one or shorter. P20 replied that he does not remember exactly.

Böcker recalled that P20 said, “longer, shorter...”

Judge Kerber interrupted wanting to clarify the question. Judge Kerber asked P20 if the first questioning was longer than the second one. P20 replied that the first questioning was “long”.

Judge Kerber said that in the transcript, it is mentioned that it started at... [The court monitor could not hear what time was stated]. Judge Kerber asked what happened then. P20 said he handed over his mobile phone and went and waited for the translator. They went to a far-out location in Paris. He did not have the phone on the way to check the time. He handed over his belongings and when he went outside [after the questioning], P20 saw the time. P20 does not have information about the complete time.

Judge Kerber said that means that the questioning ended at 3:55 pm. Judge K asked if it was longer than this. P20 said he felt that it was longer than that.

Judge Kerber asked Böcker if his question was answered. Böcker confirmed that it was.

Böcker recalled that P20 said that he did not see photos of Raslan on the internet. P20 said never, he did not see the photos of Raslan and Al-Gharib.

Böcker asked if, before the questioning on April 2, 2019, P20 had the name Raslan in his mind. P20 said never, he did not have information about the name, nor any detail. However, during the interrogation, they said that the interrogation was concerning Raslan and Al-Gharib.

Böcker asked if, before that, P20 was using the internet. P20 said he was working at home.

Böcker summarized that the questioning atmosphere in France was bad, P20 shared that with his friends who told him the same, P20 works on a computer, and P20 says that he did not know about Raslan before the questioning. Böcker said that he is wondering whether P20 is certain of that, although Raslan’s name was available and known on the internet for years.

Klinge said that he should be specific and not say “years.” Böcker argued that it was indeed years. Klinge asked since what date. Böcker said 2014. Klinge asked where one can find that. Böcker said that he can get the picture from the internet.

Von der Behrens interjected that they do not know what Böcker wanted [Von der Behrens talked with P20]. P20 said he understood the question. In short, the mere existence of a name does not mean an association to a case. If he heard the name Raslan in 2011, he would not have associated it with Al-Khatib. On the internet, there are many names that P20 could not know them all. However, in the German police questioning, it was mentioned that Raslan was an officer in Al-Khatib. It was the first time P20 heard his name and saw his picture.

Böcker said that P20 was asked yesterday about the photos and P20 said that they reminded him of this person and the court now understands that P20 is saying that a photo from the French police questioning reminded him of Raslan. Böcker stated that P20 is saying something different today. P20 said that the error/mistake is first that the French photos are not available, which pointed people in Al-Khatib without context. The second time when they showed the pictures during the German police, he recognized them [the photos].

Böcker recalled that P20 said that it was bad that the photos were not shown, but now P20 said that he recognized the photos. Böcker asked if he misunderstood P20.

Von der Behrens said that they did not understand the question. Böcker repeated his question and asked whether P20 said something different. P20 responded, “I think that you [Böcker] did not understand me.”

Böcker asked if it is correct that P20 said yesterday that he recognized Raslan. P20 responded that he is saying that Raslan’s photo might have been in the French police questioning and he recognized it in the German police questioning.

Böcker said it is clear now. Von der Behrens asked Böcker to differentiate between his statements and questions.

Böcker said that during the questioning by the Federal Criminal Police Office on April 2, 2019, P20 was shown eight photos and said that he did not know seven and recognized one (photo number two). Böcker said that P20 also said that Raslan is taller than him. P20 responded that he remembers that the answer was that he does not know the number of the photo.

Böcker said it was number two. P20 responded that he said that this is Anwar and he was wearing a suit; he was thin/slim not overweight; he was P20’s height or a bit taller. P20 can not specify the height.

Böcker said, regarding the uniform, P20 said that he did not see a uniform in Al-Khatib. P20 responded that he did not understand the question. Böcker repeated the question. P20 asked Böcker if he could shorten the questions.

Böcker said no, but he would try. Böcker repeated that P20 said that he did not see uniforms.

[Scharmer objected, but Scharmer’s reasoning was not clear to the court monitor]

Böcker said that P20 was asked what the personnel was wearing and P20 replied that they were wearing t-shirts and jeans and he saw no uniforms. Böcker asked about the difference between the official uniform and the military uniform. P20 replied that he will repeat what he said, "In Al-Khatib, the security personnel whom I saw and recognized later as Raslan, was wearing a suit [there was a lot of mistranslation of "suit" and "uniform"] with a tie, however, the guards were wearing civilian clothing, like jeans and t-shirts. There were no military uniforms." [After saying it in Arabic, P20 also said "uniform" in English.]

Böcker recalled that in the police questioning, P20 said that "There was a high-rank officer on the third floor. P20 knew that he was an important person from his clothes. Today, P20 does not remember his face. When P20 sees photo number two, it reminds P20 of him." Böcker asked if P20 said that in the questioning.

Von der Behrens objected. P20 asked if Böcker meant before or after he was shown the photos.

Böcker said after. P20 answered, "I said that I remember the face of this officer Raslan, he was with me (I was asking myself)." [It is unclear what P20 meant by that].

***10-minute-break***

Böcker asked if P20 said that when he saw photo number two, it reminded P20 of the accused. P20 said yes, he remembers.

Böcker said that P20 was asked how he knew Raslan and quoted P20. [The court monitor did not understand the quote]. P20 answered that he does not remember precisely.

Böcker quoted P20, "He [Raslan] was with the opposition, and I talked about him with my friends." P20 responded that he does not remember precisely.

Böcker recalled that P20 said, "My friends were in Al-Khatib and think that..." [The court monitor did not understand the full remonstrations]. P20 said he does not remember precisely. He does not remember the transcript of the questioning, but he does remember the things that he lived and the situations, details, feelings... he does not remember 100 or 200 pages.

Böcker said that he had no more questions.

Questioning by Plaintiff Counsel

Plaintiff Counsel Reiger referred P20 to his first detention in Al-Khatib and asked where P20 was directly before the interrogation happened (if he was in a corridor). P20 said he was always in the big chamber/dormitory that was in the sketch. He was interrogated twice in a room that overlooks the big chamber/dormitory. The conditions were very bad. Many of the detainees were wounded and P20 remembers that there was blood on the walls. When the doctors from the Red Crescent came, he remembers that the detainees hid their wounds, because it was obvious that it was not medical care and to avoid problems [complications]. The situation was bad from day one.

Reiger asked if P20's name was called before that. P20 said yes, they called my name to get out/exit.

Reiger asked P20 if he was told where he was taken. P20 said no, never.

Reiger asked if P20 remembers what he said in the questioning about the floors and the officer's room. P20 answered that he remembers that the discussion was about the staircases and he said that it was the second or the third floor. When one smells the fresh air, then one knows that he is in a good place, in addition to the quietness, one feels that it is a place for officers. When one enters an office and smells a scent of perfume and sees glossy dress shoes, then they knew that they were in front of an officer, not a normal member/personnel/unit [عنصر].

Reiger said that Raslan mentioned in his defense statement that his office was 3x3 meters, but a simple one. Reiger asked if P20 had that impression as he entered Raslan's office.

Böcker said that it was the interrogator's office. P20 answered that he entered an interrogator's office. To be precise, [he entered] the room where this officer was.

Reiger asked when the Al-Houla massacre happened. P20 said he cannot remember the date, but he thinks it was in June or July 2012. Probably in June, because he had just celebrated his birthday with the detainees. He saved a loaf of bread [back then, for the celebration]. The following day, we [the detainees] knew about the massacre – children were slaughtered with knives. P20 has a relation with this city [Al-Houla] and visited it several times.

Reiger asked if there was an improvement of treatment within the branch after the massacre took place. P20 said the behavior in Al-Khatib never changed, not even once. He visited [was detained in] it twice. The treatment was bad both times and there is no medical care.

The witness was dismissed.

[There was a brief discussion between Scharmer and Böcker about plaintiff [name redacted]]

The proceedings were adjourned at 10:55 a.m. The next trial will be December 1, 2020 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 20

Hearing Dates: December 1 &amp; 2, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 48 – December 1, 2020

P21, a 55 year-old former employee of the Syrian General Intelligence Directorate (GID), who worked at different Branches for almost 30 years, testified on the hierarchy and structures of the GID. He said that Raslan as head of the interrogation division at Branch 251 signed orders to torture detainees. P21 was very hesitant in providing answers. His answers in court often contradicted previous statements he made with the German police. At one point, P21 told the judges that he will have to pay a high price for his appearance in court, explaining that three letters from the court were opened in his mailbox. Journalists appeared at his door requesting interviews and friends gave him “advice” not to testify. Presiding judge Kerber said that unfortunately, the court cannot do anything about P21’s current situation and he has to continue his testimony. She further warned all journalists and people in the audience to be very careful about the information they publish. [This report has redacted the witness’ personal identifying information]

Trial Day 49 – December 2, 2020

P21 continued his testimony, which included contradictions between his testimony in court and his interview with the BKA as well as contradictions between what he said this day and the previous day.

Hannah Hille, a 30 year-old employee of the German Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) testified on P21’s interview with her Office. The Defense Counsels questioned her on the policies of conducting interviews and forwarding information at the BAMF.

Day 48 of Trial – December 1, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30 am with 4 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience. Neither of the accredited journalists required access to the Arabic translation. There was no camera man recording before the beginning of the hearing. The prosecution was represented by prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared as replacement for plaintiff counsel Mohammed.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that due to a change of rooms, the hearings scheduled for January 20 and 21, 2021 will be cancelled and the trial will take place at a different building from January 27, 2021 onward.

Testimony of P21

P21 was accompanied by his counsel, Ms. Roth. Instructions were read out to P21 and Presiding Judge Kerber reminded P21 that he has the right to not provide an answer if the answer would incriminate himself. She added that, if necessary, he can consult his counsel at any time and asked him to briefly provide some personal information.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

After reassuring that P21 is from Syria, Judge Kerber wanted to know which job P21 had in Syria. P21 said he worked for the General Intelligence Directorate (GID) for 30 years.

Kerber wanted to know in which Branches P21 worked. P21 said he worked at Branch 251 for 13 years, at the 'storming Branch,' at a Branch in Dar'a and the information Branch in Damascus.

Kerber asked P21 whether he wanted to tell a bit more about his duties and what exactly he did. P21 consulted his counsel and said that he did not want to elaborate on this.

Kerber asked P21 what he can say about Branch 251. After P21 consulted his counsel, Judge Kerber asked him about the tasks of Branch 251 and whether "they" had a prison, P21 said that "of course" they had a prison and that there was a "center for collation of information" which dealt with interrogations and investigations. P21 asked what else he should tell the court.

Kerber wanted to know whether Branch 251 was responsible for interrogations. P21 affirmed.

Kerber further asked whether the Branch had a sub- division. P21 again affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know the name of this subdivision. P21 said it was the Interrogation Division. When asked about the number of this Division, P21 said he could not remember.

Kerber asked P21 who the head of Branch 251 was. P21 said there was more than one and asked Judge Kerber about which date or time frame she was talking.

Kerber said she was referring to 2011/2012 when the revolution started. P21 said he thinks that Major General Younes was the head of Branch 251 at this time.

Kerber recapitulated that Branch 251 had a prison, which P21 affirmed again, and asked P21 whether "they" consequently interrogated people. P21 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know who the head of the interrogation division was, clarifying on P21's request that she was again referring to 2011/2012. P21 said it was Colonel Anwar Raslan.

Kerber wanted to know what tasks the head of the interrogation division had. P21 said regarding the head of Branch 251, there were several sub-divisions. However, in practice, Makhoulf, the head of Sub-division 40 was the head of Branch 251.

Kerber asked whether Branch 251 consequently belonged to Division 40, whether it was subordinate to it. P21 said that in practice, Makhoulf is the actual head of the GID. He explained that even though he saw that Mamlouk was the head of the GID, Mamlouk came down from his office to greet Hafez Makhoulf.

Kerber asked about specific instances or changes regarding the hierarchy. P21 explained that Hafez Makhoulf is related to Bashar Al-Assad and was in practice the actual decision-maker.

Kerber wanted to know whether he [Makhoulf] assessed individual detainees and made a decision in their cases or whether he rather dealt with a bigger structure. P21 said he does not think so [that Makhoulf assessed individual detainees].

Kerber asked what he [Makhoulf] decided. P21 explained that one can say that Raslan or any other member of the GID cannot make a decision without the approval of Hafez Makhoulf, when he was there.

Kerber wanted to know whether Hafez Makhoulf dealt with individual detainees. P21 denied, explaining that there were general guidelines which everyone had to follow.

Kerber asked P21 to provide an example. P21 said for example arrests of demonstrators or duration of detention.

Kerber asked whether this happened for every detainee individually. P21 denied, adding that there were for example orders to arrest several demonstrators.

Kerber said she wants to understand how such orders looked like, whether they were rather general or including names or framed like "get everyone you can". P21 said that the first arrest where he was also personally present was at Ar-Rifa'i mosque. They had the order to arrest all people and surround over 1,000 people.

Kerber concluded that Makhoulf [she initially said Mamlouk, which plaintiff counsel Scharmer corrected] was responsible for the bigger structure. P21 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to reassure that the head of sub-division 40 was involved in the bigger structures [of the GID]. P21 affirmed.

Kerber went on to ask P21 about the daily work and tasks of Raslan. P21 said that when someone was arrested, he was brought to Raslan, who had to interrogate the person.

Kerber wanted to know whether Raslan could decide freely and how things went. P21 said that Raslan could not make decisions but proposals.

Kerber wanted to know what kind of proposals P21 was talking about. P21 said he was talking about proposals on whether someone gets detained or not.

Kerber asked whether Raslan was free in deciding how to conduct interrogations. P21 said that in general, there was always someone who worked on this information and made conclusions. He added that Raslan's assistant was directly appointed by Hafez Makhoul. He thinks that his [assistant's] name was Taleb Hassan. According to P21, he was the person who wanted all the information, regardless of how.

Kerber asked when Taleb Hassan was appointed/deployed. P21 said it was when Raslan was transferred to the Inner Branch [Branch 251].

Kerber asked which Branch P21 is talking about, which number this Branch has. P21 said he referred to Branch 251.

Kerber concluded that since Raslan was at Branch 251, Taleb was there as well. P21 said he thinks so.

Kerber asked P21 whether he saw documents which were signed by Anwar Raslan.

P21 turned to the translator sitting next to him. The translator said that P21 wanted to talk to him but that he told P21 that he is only the translator and he should consult his counsel.

Judge Kerber told P21 to consult his counsel Dr. Roth and that the work with documents would be of no harm. She asked P21 whether he needed a break.

After a short consultation between P21 and his counsel, Kerber asked again whether P21 saw any documents, which were signed by Anwar Raslan. P21 said that he worked in the Information Branch of the GID, so he saw documents.

Kerber asked P21 what he did there, whether he inspected documents. P21 said that due to his work at the information Branch, he received different documents from the head of the interrogation division. However, P21 said he was not informed about the content of these documents. He said that his Branch was rather an archiving division and he himself was never present at demonstrations. He added that he has knowledge about "these things" only from his work at the Information Branch.

Kerber asked whether P21's Branch collected documents. P21 affirmed.

Kerber went on to ask P21 about the rough content of these documents. P21 said he cannot remember.

Kerber wanted to know where the documents went to. P21 said the documents were passed on to the center for collection for information.

Kerber asked whether they stayed there. P21 affirmed, adding that this was the IT division and the documents were stored on a generally accessible computer at the Information Branch [255].

Kerber asked P21 if he knows where the building of Branch 251 is, since he worked at Branch 251. On P21's request, Kerber clarified that she wants to know whether Branch 251 had a separate building. P21 said "of course" it had its own building.

Kerber wanted to know whether P21 was there. P21 said he worked for almost 13 years at the Inner Branch [Branch 251].

Kerber wanted to know how the building looked like, whether there were any special details. P21 said it is at Baghdad Street next to the Al-Hilal hospital with two buildings.

Kerber asked whether the buildings were modified at some point. P21 said it was the headquarters of Branch 251, adding that several sub-divisions in and around Damascus belong to Branch 251.

Kerber wanted to know whether there were two or one buildings belonging to Branch 251 on Baghdad Street. P21 said there were two buildings.

Kerber wanted to know whether the buildings were renovated at some point. Raslan's defense counsel Böcker interrupted and asked during which period P21 worked at Branch 251 for 13 years. Kerber passed the question on to P21 who said that he worked at Branch 251 from [REDACTED].

Kerber asked P21 whether the building was modified in any way since 2011. P21 said as far as he knows, the prison was extended.

Kerber asked P21 whether he could describe this in more detail. P21 denied.

Kerber went on to ask at which floor the offices of the interrogation officers were situated. P21 said they were on the left side of the building on the ground floor. The head of the division has one office upstairs and one downstairs at the prison.<sup>2</sup>

Kerber asked where the offices were in 2011/2012. P21 said what he just described was the location of the offices in 2011/2012.

Kerber wanted to clarify what P21 meant by "upstairs", which level he was talking about. P21 said there [REDACTED]. Another office is in the basement in the prison.

Kerber asked whether there are also offices on the second and third floor. P21 affirmed.

Kerber concluded that these offices would not be the ones of the head of the division. P21 affirmed, explaining that the offices on the second and third floor are for example archives or offices that are used when needed.

---

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: For the purpose of the Trial Monitoring Reports and in accordance with German language (and the reassuring of the judges whenever witnesses talk about levels and buildings), the following order is used (low to high): basement, ground floor, first floor, second floor, third floor etc.

Kerber went on to ask P21 whether the name [REDACTED] see [TR#15, days 35 and 36] sounds familiar to him. P21 said this person was a doctor in residency at the Al-Moujtahed hospital in Damascus.

Kerber wanted to know what happened to him. P21 said he was detained at Branch 251.

Kerber asked whether P21 ever heard about him again. P21 said he was at Branch 251 in 2011/2012.

Kerber asked whether [REDACTED] was released. P21 denied.

Kerber wanted to know whether P21 can provide more detail. P21 said he followed up until 2012 and did not get information after that.

Kerber asked P21 about religious affiliation within the administration and wanted to know whether it played any role. P21 said it was the case “during the events” [affiliation was of relevance].

Kerber asked P21 to describe the role of religion. P21 said that with the start “of the events” people were allocated according to their confession. People with a lower rank could command a big group because of their confession. He added that a single confession seized power.

Kerber gave the example of a Sunni colonel with an Alawite subordinate to him and asked P21 whether the Alawite could give orders to the Sunni. P21 said “of course” he can. However, in general no one can make a decision without the approval of an Alawite. According to P21, this means that an Alawite also cannot make a decision without the approval of the respective head.

Kerber concluded that every Alawite has to ask the respective leading person for permission. As P21 was confused by this question, Kerber asked him to explain the ranking of religions he provided during his interview with the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA). P21 said that the Alawites were “biggest for sure”.

Kerber further recalled that P21 told the BKA that the religions initially lived together more or less in peace. P21 said that there was no other group below/close to the Alawites [for some rankings before the other religions that were below the Alawites].

Kerber wanted to know how the ranking would then look like and where the Ismailites would be ranked. P21 said Ismailites and Druze would be at the same low rank, as they would be the same in the eyes of the Alawites.

Kerber asked about Christians. P21 said they would be on the same low rank, adding that “when the events started” Alawites seized power and had no trust in other people.

Kerber wanted to know about people [non-Alawites] with a high rank and other people, asking whether they were able to continue their work or if they were somehow restricted. P21 said such people existed of course. He added that everyone was able to continue his work, however, under surveillance by Alawites. P21 said he can assure the court that Raslan was afraid of Taleb Hassan, even though Hassan was far below him.

Kerber recalled that P21 told the BKA a slightly different rank. P21 said that back then, he just answered the BKA's questions as they were put to him.

Kerber said that is fine and she just wants to make sure that she got his ranking of religions right. Kerber cited from P21's interview with the BKA during which he was asked whether "Sunnis were treated differently in the Intelligence Services." He told the BKA that "earlier, they were not treated differently but with the beginning of the conflict, decision-making positions were only given for certain confessions. Alawites were always favored, followed by Shiites. 'They' got all the senior positions in the Intelligence Services." P21 said this is a correct recollection of this interviews and the answer he gave back then was his honest opinion at that time.

Kerber continued recalling P21's interview with the BKA where he further said "people from other confessions also got some positions, however, the head was always an Alawite. They were followed by Christians, Sunnis, Druze and Shiites and the Ismailites were at the very bottom." P21 affirmed that this was how he saw things at the time of his interview with the BKA.

Kerber asked him whether he thinks differently today. P21 said that after the experience he made, he thought like that.

Kerber wanted to know how he thinks today. P21 said that his view of thing completely changed and that he sees things [ranking of religions] as he just explained to the court.

Kerber concluded that in P21'S current opinion, Alawites are at the top while all other religions are way down below. P21 affirmed.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled P21 telling the BKA that he worked at the archive and asked him what exactly he did there. P21 said there were several offices, his office was responsible for scanning and archiving information from different Branches.

Wiedner wanted to know the number of the Branch at which P21 works. P21 said it was Branch 255.

Wiedner asked when he worked there. P21 said he worked there from [REDACTED].

Wiedner asked whether P21 had a leading position or was rather one of many. P21 said he was in a "normal" position. He said he was working as an administrative officer who was responsible for a certain group of people. According to P21, there were several computers and people in his office. Their task was to scan and archive information.

Wiedner asked about his rank. P21 said he was a [REDACTED].<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translators now have a list with military ranks and their respective German and Arabic translations.

[P21 had issues with his headphone and turned down the volume. Presiding Judge Kerber said he can adjust the volume anytime and let the court know if he has difficulties. She added that P21's face already looked distorted with pain]

Judge Wiedner recalled P21 telling the police that 20 people were assigned to him. P21 denied, explaining that 20 people were not assigned to him but that he "had certain responsibilities".

Wiedner wanted to know what kind of documents P21 reviewed and where they came from. P21 explained that the GID has several Branches and that the information came from the GID. He added that when information came on paper from the provincial Branches of the GID, they were digitalized at his office.

Wiedner asked P21 about the content of the documents. P21 said that they got "tons of information and documents" and that it is impossible to know their content. According to P21 he scanned around 1,000 sheets per day.

Wiedner said that according to the minutes of P21's interview with the BKA, he provided more information on that to the BKA and asked P21 if he remembers. P21 wanted to know which minutes Wiedner was talking about.

Wiedner said that according to the BKA's minutes of his interview, P21 saw reports from interrogations of detainees at GID prisons. P21 said that they had a difficult time and lived in fear. He said he planned his departure from Syria. He said that everything inside him broke. P21 explained that he has been learning German for three years now, but cannot remember a single word. He stressed again that "everything inside us" broke, adding that what he wants to say is that he has difficulties with his memory.

Wiedner asked P21 to remember his interview with the BKA a year ago. He asked him whether he can remember interrogation protocols from Branch 251. P21 said that during the three years he just mentioned, more things inside him broke than during the previous seven years in Syria. He said sometimes he thinks that he might forget his own name.

Wiedner said that a year ago, P21 was able to remember a specific protocol from Branch 251.

P21 turned to his counsel.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer requested a break to allow P21 to consult with his counsel.

Presiding Judge Kerber ordered a 10-minute break, telling P21 to consult his counsel Dr. Roth, who is an expert with a lot of experience in witness counseling in court.

---

Note from the Trial Monitor: The translations of ranks are based on what has been said in court in German. The German terms are then translated to US and UK rank, according to the official NATO code. Whenever the Trial Monitor is able to hear the original Arabic term from the witness, the Arabic term will be used as a base to get the most appropriate translation.

***

[10-minute break in proceedings]

***

Presiding Judge Kerber said she hopes that the break was sufficient and that P21 had time to recollect.

P21's counsel Dr. Roth said her client is under pressure and tries to suppress things. He is in fear for his family in Syria.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer requested a break to consult with all parties.

Presiding Judge Kerber ordered an interruption of the main proceedings.

***

[10-minute break; all journalists and members of the audience had to leave the court room]

***

Once the "publicity of the trial was resumed" the main proceeding continued.

Judge Wiedner asked P21 what kind of documents passed his desk and if there were documents from Branch 251. Wiedner added he cannot spare P21 this question. P21 said most of the information was related to arrested people or wanted persons.

Wiedner asked whether that was also related to Branch 251. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P21 whether he can remember the content of these protocols. P21 said it was "actually most times" dealing with opposition demonstrations or "simply opposition". It included statistics of people participating in demonstrations.

Wiedner asked whether it also dealt with how people were questioned. P21 said it also dealt with what people did [committed], how much influence they had and whether they should be arrested.

Wiedner asked whether it also dealt with how and if people should be interrogated. P21 said that was "actually by application of any means and methods".

Wiedner wanted to know if P21 read such a phrase. P21 affirmed, adding that Branch 285 would be the Interrogation Branch.

Wiedner asked whether this [phrase regarding application of any means during interrogation] also referred to Branch 251. P21 said he already said that such documents existed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about Branch 251. P21 said there was a "god", the main leading figure and decision maker. He made decisions that were binding for everyone.

Wiedner asked for the name of this "god". P21 said it is Bashar Al-Assad.

Wiedner asked about the role of the heads of the Branches. P21 said they were "one of the angels".

Wiedner recalled P21's interview with the BKA during which he said that "Branch 251 had special competencies. It was usual that protocols were circulated within the Branch. However, what he wants to say is that protocols from Branch 251 always came [to P21's office] very late. Proposals etc. only reached P21's office when everything was completed. Usually, proposals were issued to the Branches by the relevant interrogation divisions." Wiedner asked P21 whether he can remember and if this would be correct. P21 said it is correct.

Wiedner asked what kind of proposals P21 was talking about. P21 said they were proposals to either arrest someone or "extend" the interrogation. Sometimes they also proposed to transfer a detainee to a different Branch.

Wiedner wanted to know whether "extending the interrogation" included torture. P21 said that from time to time an "extension of the interrogation" was proposed.

Wiedner cited from P21's interview with the BKA during which he said that "it was not explicitly written that torture methods were meant but simply said 'methods to gain information', which is a code for torture methods that everyone knew." P21 further added that "actually, it was not necessary to mention that as people were tortured constantly, anyway." P21 affirmed his previous statements.

Wiedner wanted to know how many times the release of a detainee was ordered. P21 said he did not understand the question. Wiedner recalled that P21 said that sometimes the release of a detainee was ordered. P21 said this was the case from time to time.

Wiedner again cited from P21's interview with the BKA during which he was asked if "protocols from Branch 251 more often ordered/proposed the 'extension of information-gaining' or the release of a detainee". P21 told the BKA that "a release was rather rare; however, this could also mean that someone was transferred to another Branch or, relating to 2011/12, that one was put on trial". P21 affirmed, explaining that sometimes many people were arrested at the same time. Depending on what these people did, such proposals were issued right after they were "captured". He said that once one was in detention, it was difficult to get out.

Wiedner asked P21 whether he remembers that he drew a sketch during his interview with the BKA. P21 said he remembers.

[the sketch was shown in court; below is a recreation of the sketch]

General Intelligence Directorate Branch 251 On interrogation of XY: It was determined that the above-mentioned person XY/XYZ participated in demonstrations. Sheets for the person's file. Proposal: Extension of detention/arrest. _____ unreadable signature Head of the Interrogation Division
---

P21 explained that Branch 251 had far reaching competencies regarding interrogations, without reassurances from the main administration. He added that the conclusion would only be two lines.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked who would make the conclusion. P21 said usually the investigator would make it for the head of the interrogation division.

Judge Wiedner asked whether Raslan signed the protocol. P21 said he already mentioned that Raslan did not sign with his own name but with “head of the interrogation division”. Based on the date, one can see who was the head of the interrogation division at that time.

Wiedner did not understand and asked again whether Raslan signed the document. P21 said that “of course he did”. Based on the date, e.g. 2011/12 they knew who was the head of the interrogation division.

Wiedner asked whether the name Raslan appeared somewhere on the document, P21 denied.

Wiedner recalled that the BKA asked P21 whether the document was signed by Raslan and proposed torture. P21 said that there were no proposals for torture.

Wiedner wanted to reassure whether there was a code for torture as P21 just mentioned. P21 affirmed, adding that torture was not explicitly mentioned. It rather said gaining of information by whatever means.

Wiedner said that in answering the above-mentioned question by the BKA, P21 said that “this was often the case” He added that he “cannot remember but can make a sketch”. P21 said remembers that as well.

Wiedner said that P21 told the BKA that Raslan personally signed these documents. Wiedner further said that in repetition of his previous question, he wants to know how P21 knew that Raslan signed the documents. P21 explained that everyone knew that Bashar Al-Assad is the president of Syria. So, it would be obvious that every signature from 2000 until 2011 by the president would be Bashar Al-Assad.

Wiedner again cited from the minutes of P21’s interview with the BKA during which he said that he can “generally remember documents from Branch 251.” He further said that he “knows that Raslan was the head of interrogations, it must have consequently been him who signed. However, his name was never written in full length. The signature next to the title of the position was unreadable.” P21 affirmed that this is correct.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P21 ever had contact with Raslan in person and knows him. P21 said that he knows him from his position as an officer within the administration, however, not in a private capacity.

Wiedner asked P21 to turn to his right [defendant’s bench] and tell the court whether he knows one of the people. P21 said it is “the brother over there”<sup>4</sup> whom he already identified on the internet.

Wiedner asked whether P21 was questioned by Raslan. P21 affirmed.

---

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translators immediately clarified that the expression “brother” was used by the witness to avoid saying “the guy over there”.

Wiedner wanted to know the reason for this questioning, adding that this would not incriminate P21, so he could answer. After a short consultation, P21's counsel Dr. Roth said her client refuses to answer.

Presiding Judge Kerber said that this only applies when P21 would incriminate himself or members of his family. Dr. Roth said that she told P21 that.

Wiedner referred to P21's interview with the BKA during which he was asked to provide more detail on the circumstances under which he was questioned by Raslan. P21 told the BKA that "in the information division I mainly worked on the computer. Sometimes, we were told to quell demonstrations. This is the reason why I was questioned. I was questioned by different people, one time by Raslan himself". On Wiedner's request, P21 affirmed that this is correct.

Wiedner wanted to know P21's reasons for refusal. P21 said he was, in principle, for change and transformation. He was not willing to seek confrontation with anyone.

Wiedner asked how P21 knew that "it was Anwar Raslan". P21 said he knows from the internet. He saw his face and picture on the internet. He added that he knew Raslan but not his face, so he searched for him on the internet.

Wiedner recalled that P21 told the BKA that [when P21 was questioned about his refusal to quell demonstrations] Raslan introduced himself by name and that P21 did not have to wear blindfolds. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner said he is surprised that P21 openly spoke about being against the regime and that it was accepted. According to Wiedner, P21 told the BKA something different.

Judge Kerber asked P21 what reasons for his refusal he told the administration. P21 explained that he was once shot in his legs and the bullets are still inside his right thigh. That "saved him". At that time his wife was in Germany while his two children were living with him in Syria. P21 said he could not leave them alone and that he had issues with his leg.

Kerber asked whether Raslan accepted this excuse. P21 said Raslan did not ask him about that.

Kerber wanted to know what other topics Raslan questioned him about. P21 said it was about participation or non-participation [in quelling demos] but not about his leg.

As P21 was confused when Kerber asked him whether he apologized to Raslan, she instead asked whether it is correct that P21 was questioned by Raslan one time. P21 affirmed.

Kerber went on to ask P21 what he told Raslan. P21 said he told him that he was injured but did not talk about details.

Kerber wanted to know how Raslan reacted, whether it was alright with him or if he kept arguing with P21. P21 said that since he was not directly assigned to Raslan, the latter reacted positively towards him.

Kerber summed up that they "will leave this matter as well as it stands."

Judge Wiedner went on to ask P21 whether he knew or heard of people dying in the prisons of the Intelligence Services starting in 2011/12. P21 said that "of course" there were prisons and wanted to know what the question would be about.

Wiedner asked P21 if he knows of people that died in these prisons. P21 affirmed, saying “of course” he knows.

Wiedner asked about people that died in the prison of Branch 251. P21 said he knows about that from Branch 285 which was the interrogation Branch. He said he “saw it”. P21 added that he also saw the cooling trucks, which carried the corpses. They collected the corpses from all Branches and brought them to the administration center. According to P21, whenever someone died at a Branch, the corpse was brought to Branch 285.

Wiedner cited from the minutes of P21’s interview with the BKA during which he said that “one chats with his colleagues and hears about the many cooling trucks from Branch 251.” He further said that he himself “never saw them.” As he assumes that “they drove at times when no one else was working.” P21 also told the BKA that they “only knew about Branch 285 at the beginning and only later knew about all the corpses.” P21 confirmed his statement to the court, adding that he did not see the corpses but everyone knew about it. He further said that dead bodies were seen in different Branches and the yard where the interrogations took place. He himself saw one or two corpses which were to be transported.

Wiedner wanted to know what yard P21 was talking about. P21 explained that Branch 285 was the general administration, where he himself was located. He said it was next to Branch 251.

Wiedner asked whether, since the beginning of the conflict, P21 saw any trucks from Branch 251 and at which date he saw them. P21 said he is surprised when he hears “conflict”. That would be a wrong translation and he always said “revolution”. He further said that it was March 2011.

Wiedner wanted to assure whether that was the date when P21 saw trucks from Branch 251. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether, as an archiving officer, P21 knew about deaths at Branch 251 from documents. P21 said that when he told that to the BKA, he did not know that he has to tell all that in front of a court. He said he will “have to pay” for his presence today. P21 further said that he knows the structures of the Syrian regime for more than 30 years, especially during 2011 until now. He added that there “was revenge” against his acquaintances and friends, against children, families and women. According to P21, there was a lot of revenge. He said that his brother was of a different opinion only once and consequently detained for one year. Three years ago, his sister’s husband was summoned by the state security in Hama and also questioned about him [P21]. Apparently, he was questioned in a “friendly” way. According to P21, the officer who conducted the questioning and another person told his sister ‘let’s put a shoe on [P21’s] mouth and remind him that his siblings are still here’. P21 said he knows the composition of the regime; they take revenge on everyone. He said he knows that very well, as he himself was part of the regime. He further said that friends in Germany as well warned him and told him not to talk. Lawyers also told him not to talk as he has to pay a high price for that.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P21 whether he was explicitly threatened. P21 said he was threatened via friends.

Kerber concluded that intermediaries were used to threaten P21. P21 affirmed.

Kerber wanted to know what they told P21. P21 said it was rather advice from his friends, however, with some threats. He said he knows friends in Syria who paid a high price. P21 said he reminds the court that he will have to pay for his presence here. He explained that since he was in a sensitive position, “they” think that I will disclose information.

Kerber concluded that ‘they’ are people other than P21’s friends and asked him whether someone threatened him not to testify in this trial, tried to tell him what to say or threatened him that he should be cautious of what he says. P21 said he received advice which carried a threat, as he knows the influence of the regime on his family. He added that his sister’s husband has been in detention for eight years and that his sister was threatened. Since he left Syria, he has received letters from her.

Kerber wanted to know whether only Syrians ‘gave him advice’. P21 affirmed.

Kerber asked whether they are fighters of the militant opposition. P21 denied, saying that they were opposition but not fighting.

Kerber further wanted to know whether P21 knows every single person who ‘advised’ him. P21 affirmed.

Kerber asked whether they were Syrian, Lebanese or Iraqi. P21 said they are Syrian.

Kerber wanted to know whether they are members of any militant organization. P21 said as far as he knows “they are only opposition”.

Kerber asked whether any of them is affiliated with the FSA, Hezbollah, ISIS or the SNA. P21 said they are definitely not affiliated with any of these groups.

***

[65-minute break]

***

[When the defendants re-entered the court room, Eyad Al-Gharib was handcuffed. One of the court guards who accompanied him went to the judge’s office]

Presiding Judge Kerber said she heard that there were difficulties with Al-Gharib during lunch break and offered him to have a chocolate bar from the judge’s office in order to be fit to stand trial. Al-Gharib’s defense counsels kindly turned down the offer.

Witness counsel Dr. Roth said her client told her that P21 found three letters from the court open in his mail box. He told her that it seemed as if they were opened and copied and that he told Anwar Al-Bunni about it. According to Dr. Roth, several journalists appeared at P21’s home after that and requested an interview. P21 also told her that a former Syrian officer threatened him in Greece. In Germany, threats were more general, but in Greece, P21 was openly threatened. Dr. Roth then questioned if a testimony from P21 is actually feasible.

Presiding Judge Kerber said that P21 still has a duty to testify in court, so she cannot spare him his testimony. She also gave a stern warning to all journalists and everyone in the public gallery to be very cautious about which information they publish. She concluded that the court is well aware of possible dangers of witnesses and finds itself in a position that she does not like, but there would, right now, neither be a way out of this situation. Kerber said they will continue P21’s testimony and questioning by the parties.

Judge Wiedner continued his questioning by asking P21 whether he had knowledge of deaths at Branch 251. P21 said he knows for sure of two people, [REDACTED] and [REDACTED].

Wiedner asked P21 what makes him believe that [REDACTED] died at Branch 251. P21 said he has no certain information; however, he once saw a letter from Branch 251 to hospital 601 (Al-Mezzeh hospital) which said that [REDACTED] was transferred to the hospital in bad condition. That would be everything P21 knows.

Wiedner asked P21 about [REDACTED] professional occupation. P21 said he was a resident at Al-Moujtahed hospital.

Wiedner wanted to know what P21 knows about [REDACTED] arrest. P21 said he was arrested and interrogated by Branch 251.

Wiedner asked why he was arrested. P21 said he was arrested because he openly gave his opinion.

Wiedner asked who interrogated [REDACTED]. P21 said it was certainly during Raslan's period.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P21 knows for sure who interrogated [REDACTED] or if he concluded from documents. P21 said he is sure that it was Raslan.

Wiedner asked how he came to that conclusion. P21 said, after all, he would know who was the head of the interrogation division at that time. No one else was allowed to conduct interrogations.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P21 consequently made conclusions based on Raslan's position or whether he has knowledge that it was in fact Raslan who interrogated [REDACTED]. P21 said there was explicit information and that he was in constant contact with [REDACTED] brother and sister and kept them informed about all news.

Wiedner wanted to know where Raslan's name appeared. P21 said he was the head of interrogation.

Wiedner asked whether other people at Branch 251 also conducted interrogations or how P21 knows that it was Raslan himself. P21 explained that the head of interrogations gives orders on all interrogations. Regarding gaining information and "other things", Raslan would always "be there", according to P21.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan would 'be there' in the interrogation room or only on paper. P21 said he is referring to all documents. They are all signed by the head of the interrogation division, who, one can say, supervises all interrogations.

Wiedner recalled that P21 previously told the BKA that he could remember [REDACTED] as he was from the same village as P21. He saw from documents that Raslan himself interrogated [REDACTED]. He later died from torture. Wiedner stressed that P21 said "Raslan himself". P21 said that he does not know whether it was Raslan himself in person, but that he was in contact with [REDACTED] family. [REDACTED] was transferred to the hospital in bad condition. The family was informed about his death and told to pick up his corpse.

Wiedner asked whether P21 consequently knew about [REDACTED] death from his family. P21 denied, explaining that he told them.

Wiedner referred to the same section from P21's interview with the BKA as above, where P21 further said that as head of the archive, he had access to documents which said that [REDACTED] was arrested by Branch 251 and that he was interrogated by Raslan himself and there were several interrogations. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner again stressed that P21 told the BKA that Raslan himself signed these documents. P21 explained they were signed by the head of the interrogation division.

Wiedner asked whether P21 meant the same signature as previously. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner once again recalled that P21 told the BKA that he was sure that Raslan conducted the interrogation. Wiedner went on to recall additional parts from P21's interview with the BKA where he said that after an interrogation, Branch 251 requested information regarding a doctor from Al-Moujtahed who allegedly delivered medicine to the opposition and was himself a member of the opposition. This request from Branch 251 was related to several persons, among them [REDACTED]. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner referred to the other dead person that P21 mentioned earlier. P21 said he is sure that this person is dead as well.

Wiedner asked what happened and why P21 is sure that this person is dead. P21 explained that usually information stays within Branch 251, information relating to interrogations as well. The information would only get out once things are finished. That is when information is passed to the administration. According to P21, whenever a person dies, the person gets listed in a register of deaths. This register usually says that one was interrogated and died due to "a crisis".

Wiedner asked whether the person was consequently arrested by Branch 251. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know what P21 knows about dead people in general and whether he has seen files that document deaths. P21 said that his office usually received lists with ten or more names and the note that their file will be closed. Sometimes, another Branch requests information on a certain person, that is when his office would tell that Branch that this person is dead. P21 said that the Branches do not exchange information between them.

Wiedner asked whether these lists also say a cause of death. P21 said it usually only states that people are dead without providing a reason.

Wiedner asked if relatives of these people were informed about their death. P21 said this was sometimes the case.

Wiedner recalled P21 telling the BKA that one was cautious that nothing about the deaths of detainees would become public. Lists that were shown to the families of dead detainees usually said that they died a natural death. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner said that sometimes families who did not know about the whereabouts of their loved ones would come to the prisons to search for their family members. He asked P21 whether there were orders to ignore or deny such requests. P21 said they sometimes received such requests. In such cases they had the explicit orders not to provide any information. Usually, their existence was simply ignored. He said that he only learned about his brother's arrest from documents at work.

Wiedner said the BKA further showed P21 a picture of a corpse. P21 said he does not remember.

Wiedner said the BKA asked him about such corpses, especially in relation to military hospitals. P21 affirmed that he saw corpses at Harasta Hospital. They were lying on the floor and in the hallways. P21 said he already wondered why they put the corpses in the sun. He first thought that they would be transferred with cooling trucks but they actually lied in the sun for hours. He said that he saw signs of torture on one of the corpses and most of them only wore shorts.

Wiedner asked when P21 saw these corpses. P21 said it was at the end of 2012, definitely in 2012.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P21 has knowledge of such things in other hospitals as well. P21 said he knows about such things at 601 (Al-Mezzeh hospital). A friend of him was there as well.

Wiedner asked about Tishreen. P21 said he only knows from Al-Mezzeh.

Wiedner asked P21 whether he knows if mistreatment in prisons of the Intelligence Services increased during the revolution. P21 said that his office got a lot of information - digital and analog. He knows of many people who were tortured and the torture was brutish. He said that it already started with the arrest. When people were arrested at the Ar-Rifa'i mosque [he mentioned that instance at the beginning] they were beaten on the entire way from the door of the administration office to the interrogation division at Branch 285, which was around 200m. P21 said that some people even died on that way. They were beaten with rifle butts, batons and metal poles. He said he saw more than 15 people who died and were then kicked aside, covered in blood.

Wiedner wanted to know when that happened. P21 said it was in 2011.

Wiedner wanted to know when exactly. P21 said it was at the beginning of the uprising. He added that people were carried away as they were dead and lined up next to each other against the wall. Many of them died before their interrogation. P21 said he saw that every day.

Wiedner asked if there was an order from the very top to “take drastic measures”, to be more violent. P21 said he knows that with the beginning of the revolution, the order was to be very harsh and strict. Some officers tried to be milder but the order was to apply the highest level of violence, particularly at the Military Intelligence Directorate and the Air Force Directorate. He added that the GID was actually not so harsh as before the revolution, they were rather Sunnis. P21 explained that due to the composition of the administration, the head of the GID usually was a Sunni. He added that he refers to the administration of the GID.

Wiedner wanted to know who exactly was a Sunni. P21 said all heads [of the GID administration], or at least most of them. The Air Force Intelligence was rather led by Christians, the Military Intelligence by Alawites solely and the administration of the GID by Sunnis.

Wiedner said he will leave it like that and asked P21 which date he means when talking about the ‘beginning of the conflict’. P21 said it is the revolution/uprising and he is talking about March 15, 2011.

Wiedner asked whether P21 knows if there was more torture at the Branches since the revolution. P21 affirmed, adding that the order was to apply more violence.

Wiedner recalled that when the BKA asked P21 about torture at Branch 251, he said that people were tortured to death only since the conflict. Before that, according to P21, people were not tortured to that extent. He added that he knows of many people who were released and told him that. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner went on to ask about Raslan's function and competencies. P21 said "Mr. Anwar Raslan" was the head of the interrogation division at the Inner Branch [251], but in that position assigned to Hafez Makhlof. P21 added that in his opinion, Raslan was not able to do anything on his own without asking Hafez Makhlof. He added that with all respect towards Raslan, he thinks that Raslan was afraid of the lowest member of the Alawites.

Wiedner recalled that P21 told the BKA that Raslan was the deputy head of the Branch [251]. P21 affirmed, adding that one is not always the head of the interrogation division. Sometimes, one is the deputy head if the Branch and sometimes the head of the interrogation division.

Wiedner further recalled that P21 told the BKA that he does not know Raslan's exact competencies but that the head of the interrogation division would be the second powerful person after the head of the Branch. P21 affirmed that this would be the case for Branch 251.

Wiedner again cited from P21's interview with the BKA during which P21 said that there was an official deputy but actually, the head of the interrogation division was more powerful. P21 affirmed that this is true if there is an interrogation division.

Wiedner wanted to know where Division 40 belonged. P21 said administration-wise, it belonged to Branch 251. However, as Hafez Makhlof was the head of Division 40, he was the actual head of Branch 251, so that Tawfiq Younes could not do anything without asking Hafez Makhlof. P21 said the same was true for the head of the administration; Makhlof was always the actual head. He added that Makhlof had several militias with thousands of people as opposed to the hundreds of people at the Branch.

Wiedner asked whether Division 40 had its own prison. P21 affirmed, adding that this was the case when "the events" began.

Wiedner asked whether there were interrogation offices in the basement of Branch 251. P21 said that there were offices indeed.

Wiedner further asked where Raslan's office was. P21 said it was in the basement.

Wiedner asked whether that was Raslan's only office or if he had another one. P21 said his main office was upstairs and the interrogation office was in the basement.

Wiedner wanted to know what exactly 'upstairs' means. P21 said he already mentioned that there were four steps upstairs from the ground floor and the office was on the right side upstairs of these four steps. The other office was on the left side of the basement, down the stairs.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Raslan used his office in the basement. P21 said he saw him there.

***

[15 minute break]

***

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge recalled P21 talking about lists of dead people. He requested to visually inspect and read out a document, which was already shown in court on trial day 35.

***

[Below is a recreation of the structure of the above-mentioned list with names which was shown in the courtroom.]

***

No.	No.	Time frame	Name	No.
-----	-----	------------	------	-----

Klinge asked P21 whether he once saw something like that. P21 said he saw something similar.

Klinge asked what exactly he saw and where he saw it. P21 said he saw a document with numbers, names and dates behind it, where detainees were listed with numbers.

Klinge asked whether that could be a list of dead people. P21 said he thinks so.

Klinge further asked whether one of the names sounds familiar to P21. P21 said he knows the name [REDACTED].

Klinge wanted to know whether he knows about [REDACTED] from his brother [REDACTED] of if he saw the name somewhere else as well. P21 said that might be the case.

Klinge asked him if he was sure. P21 asked whether Klinge wanted to know if he saw this explicit list. Klinge affirmed. P21 said he did not see this particular list.

Klinge showed another document.

***

[Below is a recreation of the structure of the above-mentioned list which was shown in court.]

***

	No. refrigerator compartment	No. unreadable signature	date of death	Name	No.
	17	2312	10/21/2012	[name redacted]	1
	18	[...]	10/20/2012	[name redacted]	2
	20	2317	10/23/2012	[name redacted]	3
	21	2308	10/27/2012	[name redacted]	4
	24	[...]	10/29/2012	[name redacted]	5
	23	3323	10/29/2012	[name redacted]	6

P21 said this looks familiar, however without the number of the cooling element on the left side.

Klinge asked what P21 meant by "cooling element". P21 said that the corpses were put in refrigerator compartments.

Klinge wanted to know if one can tell from this list the date of death of certain persons. P21 said the list includes name, detainee number and death number.

One of the translators read out the list on Klinge's request and confirmed what P21 said.

Klinge asked from which Branch the list would be. P21 said he thinks it is from one of the hospitals, as on "our"<sup>5</sup> lists it usually only said name, date and detainee number.

Klinge asked P21 whether he has seen such lists before. P21 denied, adding that he only saw lists without the number of refrigerator compartments.

Klinge asked the same question referring to the first list he had just shown in court. P21 said he did not see this exact document. "Our" lists only included name, date of arrest, sometimes the date of death and the detainee number. He said that these would be the only information his office would get. P21 said in [REDACTED] case for example, the list said that he died. People were then put in special death registers so they would no longer appear on warrant lists.

Klinge asked him if he knows where these lists are from. P21 said that every Branch sent lists.

Klinge wanted to know whether P21 knows where the lists he had just shown came from. P21 said that they came from one of the Branches. He added that the administration got lists from the Branches.

Klinge asked again about the specific lists he had just shown. P21 said they came from a hospital.

Klinge concluded that P21 was talking about the first of the two lists. P21 said he thinks it came from a hospital.

Klinge wanted to know to what extent Raslan was responsible for torturing detainees at Branch 251. P21 said it fell in his responsibility, adding that he is not sure what else to say. He said he is not sure if Raslan directly dealt with torture. Sometimes P21's office got requests regarding certain people and whether they carried arms. The "people" would gather information about that. P21 said he does not think that Raslan himself tortured anyone to get information from that person.

Klinge asked whether Raslan ordered torture. P21 said he thinks so, however, he is not sure as his office only got complete information.

Klinge cited from the minutes of P21's interview with the BKA during which he said that "Raslan as the head of interrogations, was directly responsible for interrogations and torture. He ordered all of them. Others conducted interrogations as well, however, Raslan signed all the protocols." P21 said he thought Klinge was talking about whether Raslan personally tortured people.

Klinge asked P21 whether what he told the BKA would be correct. P21 said he does not think that Raslan tortured people with his own hands, but he was responsible for interrogations.

Klinge again asked whether P21's statement with the BKA would be correct. P21 affirmed.

---

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P21 often referred to "us" or "our" when talking about his work at Branch 255.

Klinge went on to ask P21 about the reasons for Raslan's defection and asked him to provide some context. P21 said that at the beginning of the revolution, many people were not convinced of the regime's reaction, as it was so brutish. P21 said "we" were in a difficult situation and therefore forced to leave. He added that "we" were against killings and torture.

Klinge said that P21 told the BKA something different. He recalled that when P21 was asked about the reasons for Raslan's defection, he told the BKA that "it was known. When someone worked for the Intelligence Services it [defection] was usually top secret." However, according to P21, "there was much speculation. According to rumors, Raslan got help from men from the opposition." P21 further told the BKA that "such cases existed; I saw such documents". Klinge asked if P21 remembers that statement. P21 affirmed.

Klinge asked him whether he has further insights. P21 said that many officers defected and re-joined the regime. Regarding Raslan, people speculated about that. There was information about contacts between Raslan and "the Branch".

Klinge wanted to know if P21 knows more details. P21 denied.

Prosecutor Polz had another question regarding the death register and asked P21 whether people were listed in such registers in order to not appear in warrant registers. She further asked whether such registers were only used by the regime and employees or to provide information to relatives as well. P21 said that the registers of death were solely used by the administration. It included names of people who died "outside" (during fights etc.), so that the Branches would know they were dead and not search for them.

Prosecutor Klinge concluded that the relatives could not ask any questions. P21 affirmed that they had no options.

Judge Wiedner also had another question regarding Raslan's escape and asked P21 to remember when the BKA asked him about his own escape. P21 said that at the beginning, he was worried about his son and wanted to get him out of the country first. He said his son was in danger and the arrest of his brother was the evidence thereof. He further explained that it was his only son, so he brought him out of Syria and then brought his wife to Germany. His wife then requested a family reunification for their daughters. P21 said, since he knows the regime, he was afraid to leave before his children were safe. Only when they were safe, he left as well.

P21 said he is still being threatened and therefore has a question: he got three letters from the court. Two days after they arrived, journalists appeared at his door, saying that they know everything. Every time that happened, he called a friend, who is a lawyer. His friend then told the journalists not to talk to P21. P21 said he sees this as a direct danger to him. At least four journalists appeared after the letters, who allegedly knew everything. P21 said, after all, he knows the regime from 30 years of experience. He added that many people are pro-regime for a long time. Syrians in Germany who saw all the destruction are still in contact with the regime.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked whether that was again "advice" from journalists and friends. P21 said he found the journalist appearing after the letters as a direct threat.

Kerber said they also do not know where the journalists got their information from, the court did not leak any information or parts of the file. Kerber added that she vouches for the prosecution as well.

She said there are many parties to this case that are neither the court nor the prosecution, and that she does not know what any of them are doing. Kerber added that there are many things going on in the background, people requesting a list of witnesses and that the position of the court would not be heard in the public discussion.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker said that the defense did not leak any information.<sup>6</sup>

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer added that, speaking on behalf of all plaintiff counsels, of course, none of them leaked any information either.

P21 said he wants to explain: his friend is Anwar Al-Bunni. Every time journalists knocked on his door, he called Al-Bunni. He added that the journalists called him and came to his home.

Presiding Judge Kerber said she understands P21's concerns and at least it is good that his friend can help him.

Judge Wiedner continued with his questions regarding defection and escaping from Syria. He wanted to know what role money plays when one wants to leave Syria. P21 said he sold his house after his son and wife left Syria. He sold all his belongings as well and then left Syria.

Wiedner recalled that P21 told the BKA that he continued working because he was organizing his escape and did not have enough money, so consequently money would play a role. P21 said that would be true and the reason he sold his house.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker said P21 just mentioned Anwar Al-Bunni and contacts to the press. He wanted to know if it was always Al-Bunni who spoke to the press. P21 said he is the only one he knows.

Böcker wanted to know whether the press people introduced themselves. P21 affirmed.

Böcker wanted to know who they are and whom they are working for. P21 said he does not have their names right now.

Böcker wanted to know if it is right that Al-Bunni was able to contact them. P21 said that every time they came, he immediately called Al-Bunni who then spoke with them directly and told them that P21 will not say anything.

Böcker asked if these calls always happened when P21 was present, so when the journalists were still at his door. P21 affirmed.

Böcker went on to ask P21 about his escape and wanted to know what he meant by "needed time to prepare the escape" as he told the BKA in answering the question why he kept working despite 'things happening'. P21 said it does not really mean "preparing". He explained that first, he had to collect money and then needed time and security so his wife could get out. He said it took 1.5 years for the family reunification to happen.

---

<sup>6</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Plaintiff counsel Scharmer replied without switching his microphone on, saying "of course". As Judge Kerber did not hear Scharmer's reply, she offered him to provide a statement if requested.

Böcker asked whether the 1.5 years was the time between him making the decision to leave and eventually leaving. P21 said that he was worried about his family, revenge and their living, already at “the beginning of the events”. He was forced to get his family out first.

Böcker wanted to know which period the 1.5 years covered. P21 said he does not exactly know.

Böcker recalled P21’s interview with the BKA during which he said that he did not want to fight. “As a former member of the Intelligence Services who deserted, one always has to fight in the opposition”. P21 further told the BKA that “in the end, we are one people.”. Böcker wanted to know whether this means that there was actually no possibility for him to stay and live in Syria. P21 said at least for him, it was impossible. He was forced to fight for the regime as requested and stay.

Böcker recaptured that P21 first brought his son and wife out of Syria. He wanted to know whether that remained undetected or if he was questioned about his family leaving Syria. P21 affirmed that he was questioned, adding that most of the officers from his division brought their families out of the country.

Böcker recalled that Judge Wiedner asked P21 several times about interrogation protocols from Branch 251. In answering these questions, P21 said that he is in fear and has difficulties with his memory since he lived in Germany, he would...

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer intervened, saying that P21 used the present tense of the word ‘living’, Böcker, however, used the past tense. After a short discussion between the defense and plaintiff counsels about the correct tense, Judge Kerber intervened and asked P21 whether he lived or is right now living in fear. P21 said ‘lived’ in past tense.

Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker asked P21 to explain how he felt as an employee of the Intelligence Services. P21 said as a member of the Intelligence Services, he lived in fear his entire live. Raslan would be in great fear as well. P21 said he was aware that he can be questioned at any time. He is sure that Raslan feared that as well.

As there were no more questions for the moment, Presiding Judge Kerber ordered to continue P21’s testimony the following day.

Proceedings adjourned at 3:15 pm.

Day 49 of Trial – December 2, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30am with 4 spectators and 2 members of the press in the audience. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared as replacement for plaintiff counsel Mohammed.

Continuation of P21’s testimony

Instructions were again read out to P21 and he was informed about his rights as a witness.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense had no further questions.

Al-Gharib's defense counsel Schuster asked P21 whether he was once detained. P21 affirmed. When Schuster asked him about the reasons for his detention, P21 replied that he does not know what he is supposed to answer.

Schuster again asked P21 why he was detained. P21 said most people in detention are members of the opposition.

Schuster asked P21 what was the case with him. P21 did not understand Schuster's question. The latter then asked if there were concrete accusations against P21. P21 said that his brother was detained at the administration where P21 was working. He explained that his brother was detained because he participated in demonstrations. P21 said that consequently the attitude towards him was rather negative from time to time and he was questioned because of his brother several times.

Schuster wanted to know whether P21 was tortured. P21 affirmed.

Schuster asked P21 to explain that in more detail. P21 said he thought that he enjoys some trust as a member of the security forces. When he was put in solitary confinement, he was surprised about that. He said he started yelling and cursing, the guard then beat him up, even though they were actually colleagues.

Schuster asked whether any concrete questions were put to P21. P21 said he was questioned about his brother.

Schuster wanted to know when that happened. P21 said he was questioned about his brother several times at the beginning of 2012. He was then detained in 2015 and 2014, once for ten days and the other time for 20 days.

Schuster recalled that P21 told the BKA that his own cousin was tortured and killed at Branch 285 which was just next door [to P21's workplace], but P21 could not do anything about it, as he would have died as well. P21 affirmed.

Al-Gharib's second defense counsel Linke asked P21 whether it is correct that he worked at the archive from [REDACTED]. P21 affirmed.

Linke wanted to know what exactly P21 did there. P21 said they received paper files which they had to scan.

Linke asked what happened to this data afterwards. P21 said "nothing happened, what should have happened?".

Linke recaptured that P21 and his colleagues scanned documents which were then saved on a computer and asked whether this computer was part of a network or connected to the internet. P21 said that "a net[work] was in play" and that his division was also the office responsible for saving files.

Linke asked whether it is correct that P21 had 20 subordinates. P21 said it is correct that there were around 20 people, maybe more. However, he was supervising them, not responsible for them.

Linke asked if he nonetheless, had a superior position. P21 said he had no rank or position. He said it [supervising role] was due to his experience as he had been working there for a long time.

Linke asked whether he had access to the data. P21 said of course he had access.

Linke wanted to know what happened next to the data, how it was processed. P21 said that paper documents from regional Branches came to “us”. His office had the task to save these names on the computer.

Linke provided the following example: When he was in his office, his secretary or “even” he himself scanned documents, which then appeared as a file on the computer. The file is then re-named as it previously only had a short description. Linke went on to ask what exactly P21 and his colleagues did with the files of the scanned documents. P21 explain that all case files had numbers and names. He was consequently able to search for casefiles using a name or number and then added the relevant sheets to the case file.

Linke asked whether they consequently processed the data. P21 affirmed.

Linke asked where the database is and who has access to it. P21 said that the technical Branch 285 [most likely Branch 280, as stated at a later point] was responsible for the database.

Linke wanted to know whether P21 himself had access. P21 affirmed, adding that he and several other people had the code for the database and were able to access it.

Linke asked whether P21 was then able to search for particular names e.g. “Ali Osman”. P21 affirmed.

Linke concluded that P21 added new data to the database and directly allocated that new data. P21 affirmed.

Linke asked where the database was. P21 said it was at the general administration as they had the Technical Branch 280 (correcting his previous answer that it was Branch 285).

Linke wanted to know whether the scanning division and the database division were in the same building, city etc. P21 said he does not know what Linke gains from such questions as to why he does not want to answer.

Linke asked whether the scanning division and database division were located in the same building. P21 denied.

Linke asked whether they were in the same city. P21 affirmed.

Linke wanted to know how the divisions were connected; via cable or internet. P21 said he does not want to answer technical questions.

Presiding Judge Kerber told P21 that she can object to certain question, however, he cannot. She added that she leaves the defense “a wide field”. Kerber further said that P21 has to answer the question if he can and does not incriminate himself.

Linke repeated the question on P21’s request, asking whether the scanning division and Branch 280 were connected via cable or internet. P21 said it was certainly a cable, noting that he is not familiar with technical aspects.

Judge Wiedner had additional questions about the questioning that P21 “had to endure himself” due to mistrust and to intimidate him. P21 said that was not directed against him but that he was only questioned to put pressure on him because of his brother.

Wiedner asked whether there was mistrust towards P21 due to passing information. P21 denied, saying that was not the case at all. It was rather the case that he was supposed to pressure his brother as he was in places where he had influence on the opposition.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the opposition contacted him in Syria regarding his defection. P21 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether the opposition asked him to leak information to them. P21 affirmed.

Plaintiff Counsels’ Questioning

Plaintiff counsel Schulz asked whether it is correct that P21 worked at Branch 250 [251] for 13 years. P21 affirmed that he worked at Branch 251 for 13 years.

Schulz wanted to know if he had to undergo trainings. P21 affirmed, explaining that they did not take place at the same Branch but at the Patrols Branch 290 [خَفَر].

Schulz recalled P21 telling the BKA that his initial training lasted 8 months, after that there were several additional trainings. Schulz asked P21 whether all of the trainings took place at Branch 251. P21 denied, adding that his initial eight-month training was conducted at the training Branch which was specialized in providing trainings. He added that special trainings existed, however, not within Branch 251.

Schuster asked who conducted the trainings, if the trainers were Syrians. P21 affirmed.

Schuster asked whether there were non-Syrian trainers as well. P21 explained that for his initial training before he was deployed, all trainers were Syrians with some Lebanese officers. For the following trainings, there were Iranian trainers as well.

Schulz asked whether that is everything. P21 said that when one is hired, he has to complete the training. Once one started working, during the employment, there are several trainings in all kinds of areas e.g. photography.

Schulz asked whether P21 paid a high price for emigrating. P21 said of course he did.

Schulz asked what his motives were to do so [emigrate despite the high price]. P21 said he worked for the GID for 30 years, five of them during “the events”. He saw revenge against friends of him. Some of them were detained, some died. Many of them tried to separate [from the regime] and suffered revenge. P21 said that people died from torture at their Branch and many families of employees of his Branch were detained.

Schulz asked P21 if that would be his answer. P21 said he does not know.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Oehmichen recalled that the BKA asked P21 whether the recommendations regarding torture or release on interrogation protocols, which he mentioned, were related to protocols in general or protocols from Branch 251. Dr. Oehmichen wanted to know if P21 remembers his answer to that question. P21 said it was generally, respectively related to all Branches, particularly those with interrogation divisions.

Dr. Oehmichen said that P21 told the BKA that it [recommendations] were related to Branch 251. P21 said, maybe the BKA’s question referred to Branch 251 in particular.

Dr. Oehmichen repeated the citation from P21’s interview with the BKA. P21 again said that maybe, the BKA’s question was related to Branch 251.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Dr. Oehmichen whether she has further questions or if she wants to leave it like that. Dr. Oehmichen said she will leave it like that.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer recalled that P21 mentioned the previous day that the administration of the GID was mainly composed of Sunnis and asked him which religion Ali Mamlouk, the head of the GID, belonged to. P21 explained that “before the events” no one thought in such categories. Mamlouk should be a Sunni, however, he thinks Mamlouk is rather Shiite.

Plaintiff counsel Reiger wanted to know in which year P21 was questioned by Raslan. P21 said that Raslan did not ‘question’ him. He said he was officially questioned after his arrest at the interrogation division at Branch 285. P21 explained that at any other point, any officer was able to ask him questions about why he did not do certain things.

Reiger asked whether P21 was at Raslan’s office at Branch 251. P21 said he was there once.

Reiger wanted to know how the office looked like. P21 said it was the main room in the basement.

Reiger clarified that he did not mean the building but Raslan’s office. P21 said there were two rooms next to each other. The room on the right had a desk, while the room on the left was empty. Raslan sat opposite to him, with a telephone in front of him. Behind that was an office desk. P21 said it was basically a second office in this room. He said there was another room with a door to the first office. That room might have been a relaxation room.

Reiger wanted to know whether there were sofas in that room. P21 said there was only a chair on which Raslan sat.

Reiger mentioned the second office in the basement and asked P21 if he knows why Raslan had a second office in the basement. P21 said maybe it was used to relax from time to time.

Judge Wiedner asked P21 when he was questioned/interviewed by Raslan. P21 said it was at the “beginning of the events” in early 2011, he cannot remember the exact date.

Wiedner asked how P21 knew that it was Raslan. P21 said at that time the entire administration of the GID knew that it was Anwar Raslan.

Wiedner recalled that P21 previously said that he knew it was Raslan, as he introduced himself by name, they were colleagues after all. P21 said he did not say that. Raslan did not introduce himself. There was a captain working for Raslan, who spoke with P21.

Presiding Judge Wiedner intervened, recalling that P21 told the court the previous day that Raslan introduced himself and he saw him as he did not have to wear blindfolds. P21 said that is correct, but he needs to explain a bit more. He added that in the administration, everyone knew where they were going anyway. There was also a captain who told him that it was Raslan. Nonetheless, “we” [people from the administration] knew that it was Raslan’s office anyway.

Kerber asked whether there were three people in the room. P21 affirmed, saying that he [Raslan] was there first when the two of them [P21 and the captain] entered the room.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer said that from P21’s testimony the previous day, he understood that this took place in Raslan’s office in the basement. P21 affirmed.

Scharmer recalled that P21 yesterday told the court about visits of journalists and asked P21 whether he was able to find out who those people were and name them to the court. P21 said he has to look at his phone.

Scharmer told P21 that he can write the names down. P21’s counsel Dr. Roth said they will write down the names. Böcker asked whether they were talking about names or phone numbers. Dr. Roth said it is one name and one number.

Scharmer said P21 can also tell the names.

Presiding Judge Kerber ordered a short break for P21 to look for the names and numbers in his phone and write them down.

***

[5 minute break]

***

Presiding Judge Kerber asked whether the sheet in front of her is the list of names and numbers. P21’s counsel Dr. Roth affirmed, explaining that there were more people, however P21 changed his phone, so some of the names or numbers are lost.

Kerber added the sheet to the case file and ordered to note it in the protocol.

Raslan's defense counsel requested to have a look at the list.

Judge Kerber ordered another break to allow all parties to have a look at the list.

***

[5 minute break]

***

Al-Gharib's defense counsel requested to make a "comment on grounds of § 257 II StPO": he already wondered during the testimonies of the BKA inspectors about the criteria for opening criminal proceedings in Germany.

Prosecutor Klinge said, Linke should have a look at § 152 \(2\) StPO.<sup>7</sup>

P21 was dismissed as a witness.

Hannah Hille, a 30 year-old employee of the German Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) appeared as witness to testify on her interview with P21 during his asylum-seeking process. Instructions were read out to Hille.

Testimony of Ms. Hille

Presiding Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber wanted to know how many times Hille interviewed P21. Hille said she interviewed him once.

In answering Kerber's question about the time, Hille said it was in 2018.

Kerber clarified that it was on June 6, 2018 and asked Hille if she remembers the interview situation. Hille said P21 was calm but nervous and she felt that it was burdening him. She added that P21 got along well with the translator and there were no communication issues. According to Hille, P21 had a dizzy spell the day before the interview.

Kerber asked Hille what P21 told her about his journey to Germany. Hille said he came via Greece where he was when his wife requested family reunification. He then went from Greece to Germany.

Kerber also wanted to know what P21 told Hille about his work with the Intelligence Services. Hille said he worked for the Intelligence Service since 1985 at different Branches, the last Branch he worked at was Branch 255.

Kerber asked Hille whether she had a look at the protocol of the interview before her testimony. Hille affirmed.

---

<sup>7</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: This is the basic norm obliging the public prosecutor to start prosecutions, given that "there are sufficient indications" that a person committed a crime. However, this leaves the prosecutor with a considerable margin of discretion, regarding the practicability and fairness of proceedings.

Kerber wanted to know whether P21 told Hille anything about his injury. Hille said she read that when she had a look at the protocol and remembered that she found it strange when he told her. He said that a friend wanted to show him a weapon when a shot discharged and hurt his hand and leg.

Kerber asked about P21's relation to the regime. Hille said that P21 spoke very diplomatically, nevertheless his position became clear and he was rather distant to the regime.

Kerber asked whether P21 told Hille about imprisonment. Hille said he told her that he was detained twice for short periods but she did not really understand the reasons for these detentions.

Kerber asked whether he told her more about his detention and questioning. Hille said she cannot remember exactly but he told her about a talk before he left Syria.

Kerber wanted to know whether P21 told Hille about his reasons for leaving Syria. Hille said he told her that he did not want to fight. He was under pressure "from both sides".

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked Hille if she can remember the Branch numbers. Hille said the last one was 255 and he worked almost 20 years for Branch 251.

Wiedner cited from the protocol of P21's interview with the BAMF/Hille where he said that he worked at [different branches]. Hille said that would be correct.

Wiedner wanted to know what P21 did at Branch 255. Hille said she asked him many questions about that. As far as she understood, P21 and his colleagues collected and forwarded information which have also led to arrests of people. She added that he maintained a low profile on these questions.

Wiedner asked whether P21 said something about being "caught between two stools". Hille said he clearly explained the pressure coming from the opposition who wanted information from him. He also told her that the regime questioned him about his departure. Overall, he described a reciprocal pressure.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P21 said anything about his participation in the armed conflict. Hille said that he told her that he always used excuses as he did not want to participate and escape participation.

Wiedner further asked about P21 speaking about corpses and dead bodies that he saw. Hille said he told her that the number of corpses on the side of the streets on his way to work as well as in the building [workplace] increased, already at the beginning of ....

Wiedner again cited from the protocol of the interview, where P21 said that the situation got even worse. At the prisons from Branch 285 which he saw from the building of his office, he could witness corpses and executions. He further added that he did not see the executions but trucks carrying corpses out of the prison. He said this increased from 2011/12 on. Hille said that is indeed what he told her.

Wiedner asked whether P21 told her that he himself was detained. Hille said he told her that he was detained for a rather short period, 1-3 weeks, but the reason for that was not plausible. She said it was apparently some kind of pressure to force people to stay.

Wiedner again cited from the protocol of the interview, during which P21 told Hille that he was detained twice, once for 10 days, and another time for 20. He was detained due to the arguments he brought forward to excuse his non-participation in quelling demonstrations. He said that once his children left, he could no longer use them as an excuse. Hille said that is correct.

Wiedner referred to P21 talking about people being executed and asked Hille whether he mentioned names of certain people who died. Hille said she remembers that P21 told her about a doctor from the same village as his mother. The doctor had a “disagreement” and was reported dead at the prison.

Wiedner said his name was [REDACTED]. Hille said that is correct.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Raslan’s defense counsel Böcker asked Hille whether as part of her duties, she received orders regarding crimes and questioned whether they were too much focused on names. He asked Hille whether she told P21 that the protocol of the interview would not be given to third parties. Hille said protocols are not forwarded to non-parties to the proceeding [asylum-seeking proceedings].

Böcker said and yet, he got the protocol. Hille admitted that she certainly did not explain it perfectly to P21.

Böcker asked her if she conducted more such interviews prior to that particular interview. Hille affirmed.

Böcker asked whether other people were involved in forwarding the protocol. Hille denied.

Al-Gharib’s defense counsel Schuster recalled that P21 told Hille that he has the choice between dying or being killed by the opposition and asked her if she remembers that. Hille said she cannot remember every single sentence but thinks that it is correct.

Schuster wanted to know whether BAMF interviewers have a set of numbered questions that they ask or ask non-numbered questions as well. Hille said they have templates with questions number 1-13. Other questions are asked by the interviewer as well.

Schuster asked about the criteria of choosing questions. Hille said it is all about checking the asylum-seeking process.

Schuster wanted to know whether there are guidelines concerning Syria-related questions. Hille denied, adding that it depends on the person.

Schuster asked about criteria of reporting interviews. Hille said there are different criteria e.g. Crimes against humanity.

Schuster asked who sets these guidelines. Hille said she cannot say that, but there would be a reporting system in place.

Schuster wanted to know whether she reported this particular interview. Hille said she thinks so.

Schuster wanted to know to whom she reported it. Hille said they are reported to the security office.

Al-Gharib’s second defense counsel asked Hille how long she has been with the BAMF in 2018. Hille said she started in 2016.

Fratzky wanted to know how many of such interviews she conducted between 2016 and 2018. Hille said she did countless interviews, usually 1-3 per day.

Fratzky asked her about her professional training. Hille says she holds a master's degree in sociology.

Fratzky wanted to know whether she got some kind of introductory training at the BAMF. Hille said all employees receive trainings on the legal basics regarding asylum law.

The proceedings adjourned at 11:00am.

Next hearings will take place on December 9, 2020.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 21

Hearing Dates: December 9 & 10, 2020

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 50 – December 09, 2020

The court heard the testimony of 38-year-old, P22, who was a doctor in Syria. He recounted the day when he was detained by two plain-clothed officials at the hospital where he worked and accused of organizing his friends to demonstrate. He spent 77 days in Al-Khatib Branch, then was transferred to Kafar Souseh. P22 described the physical conditions of his fellow detainees and his inability to address their medical needs as a detainee himself.

Defense Counsel Schuster read a statement from Eyad Al-Gharib in which the defendant said he was filled with “pain and grief” after seeing photos from the Caesar Files during the court session on November 4, 2020. He explained that his only option for defecting was to wait until the Syrian/Jordanian border opened and he could flee with his family.

Trial Day 51 – December 10, 2020

The witness was P23, a 31-year-old who managed a carwash/repair shop in an area of Damascus frequented by government officials and their families. He emotionally recalled the brutality he faced throughout his detention: from the 10th Division in Qatana to Al Khatib Branch to the Military Hospital in Harasta. Shortly before P23 was thrown into the street by officials and found by a taxi driver, he had been chained to a bed where he laid in excruciating pain caused by relentless beating.

Trial Day 50 – December 09, 2020

The accused arrived late and the proceedings began at 9:40AM. There were five spectators and two individuals from the media present. Plaintiff Counsel Kroker did not attend. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared for Plaintiff Counsel Mohammad.

Defense Counsel Böcker read aloud a statement about the alleged death of P17’s brother. It included statements from P17, P18, and P21. He then requested: (1) a translation of a message from P18, (2) that the interrogator from the Federal Criminal Police (BKA) be summoned as a witness, (3) that the BKA officer who analyzed the letter/Facebook chat be summoned as a witness, and (4) a translation of the Facebook chat.

Testimony of P22

P22 is 38-years-old and was a doctor in Syria. He was accompanied by his attorney, Dr. Anna Oehmichen.

Judge Kerber asked if she should address P22 as Doctor [redacted]. Oehmichen clarified that P22 is not yet an accredited doctor in Germany.

Instructions were read, and P22 was informed of his rights as a witness.

Judge Kerber said that P22 was questioned on May 1, 2020. She asked P22 to say who he was, how he was detained, and his experience in detention [in Syria]. P22 explained that he studied medicine from 2001 to 2007 in Damascus. After that, he specialized in urology at Al-Mojtahed المجتهد Hospital until [redacted]. Then he worked in the nephrology surgery department at Ibn An-Nafis ابن النفيس Hospital until he was detained.

Judge Kerber asked how, when, and for what reason was he detained. P22 said that he was detained on [redacted]. He was working in the emergency department of the nephrology unit at Ibn An-Nafis Hospital. Judge Kerber interrupted to ask which year P22 was referring to. P22 clarified 2011. He was summoned by the [female] hospital manager. In the office [of the manager], there were two people wearing civilian clothes. They told P22 that he participated in the operation of a [female] patient who died, and her family filed a complaint. He knew about this [female] patient whose name and story was known throughout Al-Mojtahed Hospital, but he did not participate in the operation. The two authorities told P22 “yes, you did. Some doctors said that you participated and we want to question you for a quarter of an hour. Please come with us!” There was a car 50 meters away from the hospital. In the car, there were two people, one of whom had a Kalashnikov. They took P22 without tying up his hands. He sat between them in the backseat, and they told him that they were going to a criminal security branch. In Damascus, everyone knew that there were two criminal security branches: one in Bab Mosalla باب مصلى and another in Customs Square ساحة الجمارك. P22 anticipated a certain route. They went down from Ibn An-Nafis Hospital [unclear to the Trial Monitor if the witness meant down from the hospital or the street]. P22 thought they were headed to Bab Mosalla in the direction of the Al-Thawra الثورة Tunnel.

Judge Wiedner asked if P22 was blindfolded. P22 said no. When they arrived at Al-Thawra Street, they took another route [toward the street on which there was a well-known mosque] at a roundabout. P22 had a feeling [that something was wrong] and asked the authorities where they were going. They said that it would not take long [to reach the destination]. After that, they took the Al-Adawi العدوي [Street] route and arrived at a building that P22 did not know. Outside the building there were many military people and guards. P22 got out of the car [he was not blindfolded or tied up at this point]. The authorities told him to climb down the steps [the Trial Monitor did not know if the steps were inside or outside of the building]. An authority [downstairs] asked the authorities [who detained P22] how they brought P22 [to detention] without blindfolding him. One replied that they “[just] took him [referring to P22].” At the end of the stairs to the right, there was a small room. A person came in, frisked P22, and took his belongings. P22 stripped down to his underwear. The authority screamed at him and told him to take his [underwear] off. Another authority held P22 by his neck and lowered his head downwards, then took him to a solitary cell. P22 remembered that there were one or two military blankets (as they were known in Syria). He waited two or three hours, then was taken to his first interrogation after they tied his hands and blindfolded him. He heard the interrogator, but could not see him. The interrogator started with general questions (name, age, etc.). The interrogator said, "if you want to study medicine in Jordan (a neighbouring country), how much would you pay?" P22 responded that it might cost half a million Lira/pounds. The interrogator said, "then this means that Mr. President gave you a certificate of six years for 3 million Lira/pounds as a gift, and after all of that, you talk bad about the government?!" The interrogator explained what P22 had discussed with [redacted] and [redacted]. P22 initially denied everything. He was very afraid because he was standing in front of an [interrogator] who could do anything [to him] and because he did not want to implicate other people. The interrogator told him that he would not do anything [to P22] and then [ordered guards to take P22 back to the cell]. As far as P22 remembered, the second interrogation was on the second or third day [there were many details that P22 said he did not remember precisely]. As always, he was blindfolded and his hands were tied. The interrogator said, "you met with [redacted] and [redacted] in the cafeteria of the university [dormitory] and told them that they must protest." The demonstrations had only started in Dar'a درعا at that time. The army was there. P22's friend was from Dar'a and wanted to do something for his family. The interrogator mentioned details that P22 did not remember [during the interrogation]. He then told P22 to lay down on the floor and raise his [feet] upward. The interrogator beat P22's feet. P22 did not see what was used to beat his feet, but he thought it was a cable. During the interrogation, the interrogator asked P22 which contacts he had outside of the country. The interrogator mentioned Borhan Ghalyoun برهان غليون (a known opposition figure). P22 told the interrogator that he did not know Borhan or have contact with him. [Before he was detained] P22 talked with his friends and told them that anyone who was detained would inform on the others [under torture]. They established small cells, each with only a few [members], so that if one person was caught, he would not inform on [everyone else] under torture. The interrogator told him that P22 came up with this idea. P22 did not know how they knew this. The interrogator said that these were ideas from outside [the country] and from the Israeli Mossad. When one says Mossad, it is a big [accusation]. [The authorities] try to make a big accusation so that one says "no, I am not. I only participated in a demonstration." After the beating, the interrogator ordered P22 to be taken back to his solitary cell. P22 remained there for a few days. His friends were detained, but he did not know that until after he was released. [The interrogator] had interrogated each one of them separately to collect information. P22 did not remember how many times he was interrogated. Perhaps it was 6 – 10 times. On the 25th day, they transferred him to the group dormitory/chamber. The solitary cell was like a grave. There was no contact with others. In the solitary cell, he heard other prisoners (also in solitary cells) talking to each other. P22 did not have the guts to talk to them because he would be beaten [by the guards] if he was heard. There was someone who always insisted on talking to him. P22 thought the man was in [cell] number 25. But P22 was afraid. When he felt that nobody was around, he spoke with the man who told P22 that he was part of the [redacted] family and was a relative of [an opposition figure]. In another solitary cell, there was a person named [redacted] from Duma دوما (P22 could only hear his voice). Most of the detainees in Al-Khatib were from Az-Zabadani الزبداني, Madaya مضايا, Duma and Harasta حرستا. [Redacted] was well-known to the demonstrators. He told P22 that this was his fifth detention. P22 noted that there were usually around 25 [detainees] in the group dormitory/chamber which was considered a low number of people. When they brought people from demonstrations, the number was 35-40 detainees. During the time when P22 was in this dormitory/chamber, he was summoned for interrogation two or three times. During the interrogations, he was beaten. One time, they asked for his Facebook account password. In fact, he forgot it. During the interrogation, he was sitting on his knees and the [soles of his feet were upwards]. When he said that [he did not know the password], [the interrogator] hit P22's feet. P22 remembered the password, then gave it to the interrogator. He was taken back to the chamber. The new detainees said that there would be a resolution from the president to terminate the state of emergency in less than 60 days. [They were hopeful that in] 60 days the torture and the interrogations would end. Around day 61 or 62, P22 was summoned to interrogation. [In the interrogation room,] he faced the wall. The officials were interrogating someone. P22 recognized the person by his voice: it was [redacted]. [Redacted] confessed that they were participating in demonstrations. At the end of [redacted] interrogation, [the interrogator] said: "did you hear that [redacted], [redacted], and [redacted]?" (as if the interrogator was speaking to P22 and the others). After that, P22 was not interrogated. He had a feeling that it had been 61 – 62 days [since he was detained] and that something would happen, but he stayed 77 days in Al-Khatib Branch, then they transferred him to a state security Branch in Kafar Souseh كفر سوسة. When P22 was in the solitary cell, he asked about his whereabouts and was told that he was in Al-Khatib Branch. In the group cell, a detainee said that he was a journalist (P22 was not sure whether to mention the journalist's name, so he did not). It was around the middle of September [2011]. The journalist told the other detainees that there were statistics about the number of people who died under torture in different branches and, according to him, only one person died in Al-Khatib Branch in comparison to other branches. P22 saw many people who were detained.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was interrogated up to 16 times. P22 said no.

Judge Kerber asked how many times he was interrogated. P22 said that he could not remember exactly because of [the fear he experienced while he was detained], but he thought 7 – 10 times.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was blindfolded. Oehmichen asked when Judge Kerber was referring to. Judge Kerber clarified that she meant during the interrogation. P22 said that he was blindfolded during all interrogations.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 could see anything while he was blindfolded. P22 said no, his head was always downward. Maybe he could see a bit from [the bottom of the blindfold], like the tiles or the floor.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 saw the interrogator. P22 said no.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was interrogated by the same person each time or by different interrogators. P22 said it was always the same person, but the interrogation about his Facebook account could have been another person.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was always interrogated by Abu Ghadab. P22 clarified that all the prison guards were called Abu Ghadab.

Judge Kerber asked what the name Abu Ghadab means. [The interpreter explained this. In English, the literal translation is father of anger/rage]. P22 said the detainees could hear [the guards] voices and knew where the guards were from based on their dialect.

Judge Kerber asked about the dialect of the interrogator. P22 said the interrogator was not from the coast. He was likely from Damascus or Homs.

Judge Kerber asked whether the interrogator hit P22 or if another person hit him. P22 said that sometimes [he was hit by] the interrogator and sometimes by the prison guard. One time, the interrogator questioned P22's friend (this was funny). P22's friend had bought a new mobile phone that did not use Arabic. An SMS appeared in symbols, not in Arabic. The interrogator wanted him to confess that it was an English code. He [the Trial Monitor was unsure if P22 was referring to the interrogator or the prison guard] beat P22's friend with a cable. Then the friend told the prison guard that the cable was not [hurting him] and asked the guard to bring "wood." The position during beating was always laying down on the floor. When the guard hit with wood, the floor shook.

Judge Kerber asked how P22 knew this. P22 noted that he was blindfolded, but he heard [the conversation and the hitting].

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was in the same room. P22 confirmed. There was another person who was being interrogated and beaten.

Dr. Oehmichen explained what P22 said.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was always on his knees when he was being interrogated. P22 said that sometimes he was on his knees and his feet were backwards. Sometimes his feet were upwards. Sometimes his face was to the wall.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was hit on an area other than the feet. P22 said he was only hit on his feet.

Judge Kerber asked how many times P22 was beaten. P22 said he was only beaten once.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 was slapped. P22 said he was slapped one time. The interrogator had asked him a question and P22 did not answer.

Judge Kerber asked about the general conditions in detention and the condition of the detainees. P22 said that the solitary cell was like a grave, but you could sleep there. Whereas in the group cell, this was not always the case. In the group cell, the number [of detainees] was high. One night, they brought many detainees and no one could sleep on their back. P22 lost weight. The quantity and the quality of food was bad, especially when the number of the detainees increased.

Judge Kerber asked about the health conditions. P22 said that he was detained in August. There were some blankets (two or three in the dormitory/chamber). When it was cold [later during his detention], [the guards] brought blankets with lice, then the detainees all got lice.

Judge Kerber asked if there were signs of torture on the detainees. P22 said that the people who were beaten in Al-Khatib Branch returned from interrogations with redness on their arms/hands and legs/feet. He saw many people beaten outside at the checkpoints. In Al-Khatib Branch, there was only beating/hitting. He did not see more than that (e.g., he did not see people with wounds or who were hit on the head). Maybe they were beaten outside. One time, he saw a “psychopath” beaten in the group cell. The person’s behaviour was not balanced. He used to scream and put his feet in his food. He did not let the other detainees rest. Two or three prison guards came, laid the detainee on the floor, tied his hands and feet to the back and started to beat him. His head was on the floor and they beat him.

Judge Kerber asked how the detainee was beaten. P22 said he was beaten with a cable on his feet/legs and with the guards’ hands.

Judge Kerber asked if P22 saw corpses in Al-Khatib Branch. P22 said no.

***

[15-minute-break]

***

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked about the solitary cell and its size. P22 said the cell’s length was 160-180cm and its width was 80-100cm. It had a metal door. At the top of the door, there was a small [hatch]. Outside, there was a yellow light that was on for 24 hours. The light reflected onto the metal bars on the door.

Judge Wiedner asked whether P22 remembered that he drew a sketch when he was questioned by the police. P22 confirmed.

P22 said there were three or four solitary cells with prisoners to whom P22 talked [marked with black *]. The sketch showed that the length of the cell was 1.8 meters, but P22 thought that he could lie down and stretch his legs. He thought there was a TV whose sound he used to hear [marked with red*]. Perhaps it was a resting area for the prison guards and whenever new detainees were brought, that area was empty. P22 showed the spot where he was first detained [marked with ?], before they told him to go downstairs. The external cell had a window, part of it was above ground [level].

Judge Kerber asked what the shape [in the sketch] under the cell indicated. P22 said the shape indicated the cell door so he could show the window/hatch.

P22 said that the window had a sill that was used to climb up to an “attic” where some detainees laid down. He used to talk with people in cells [marked with?]. The dashed-line showed where P22 thought the toilet was located.

Judge Wiedner asked about ventilation in the solitary cell and in the group cell. P22 said that ventilation was better in the solitary cell because the person was alone. In the group cell, ventilation was initially bad because of the number of detainees and their sweat. There was only a fan on the window. Then a ventilation system (turbines) was installed, so it got better (the detainees could hear the workshop).

Judge Wiedner recalled that P22 mentioned an incident during [BKA] police questioning regarding a short circuit. P22 said the detainees were using the fan. They had no clothes except the ones they were wearing. They would wash their clothes, hang them on the window, and use the fan to dry them. Some of the young men were electricians and knew how to switch the fan on using the wires. They could hear the Azan [prayer call] sometimes and knew the time. One time, at dawn, a person washed his clothes and wanted them to dry. He connected the wires, a short circuit happened, and the alarm was triggered. The prison guards moved in a terrifying way. They wanted to know what happened. They opened all the rooms until they reached P22's cell. They smelled the odour and knew [the problem came from] his cell. No one confessed. Around 7:00 – 8:00AM, "Abu Ghadab" ordered all [the detainees in P22's cell] to bend their knees, face the wall with their backs to the door, put their hands behind their heads and raise their buttocks [as if they were half-way squatting]. They formed two lines. The guards took two people from the back line outside the cell and beat them to confess. Then it was time to for the guards' shift rotation, so the punishment stopped.

Judge Wiedner asked how long the punishment lasted. P22 said it lasted from 1-1.25 hours.

Judge Wiedner recalled P22's statement during [BKA] police questioning that the punishment lasted for two hours – until 8:00AM. P22 clarified that he could not estimate the time [back then]. Some of the men urged, "come on guys, confess."

Judge Wiedner asked P22 how the detainees slept. P22 said they slept in a well-known position called "Tasyeef" تسيف ["swording"- the term was used in TR#09]. You lay on your side with one arm under your head and the other arm on the side. They slept in two lines and their legs were interlocked (a line near the wall and a line opposite to it).

Judge Wiedner asked if people slept while sitting. P22 confirmed that sometimes new detainees slept while sitting with their backs against each other for support if there was no place for them to sleep.

Judge Wiedner asked about signs of torture and malnutrition from P22's point of view as a doctor. P22 said that most of the wounds belonged to people who were tortured outside of Al-Khatib Branch, but care for wounds was poor inside of Al-Khatib Branch. One person entered [prison] with a fractured hand that went untreated. Another person from Az-Zabadani الزبداني had Type 1 Diabetes. He was taken outside to get insulin. It was his second detention. He told P22 that he had complications (ketoacidosis) during his first detention and was transferred to the hospital, then he went out [the Trial Monitor did not know if "went out" referred to leaving the hospital or being released from prison]. A 19/20-year-old had a severe toothache and [the guards] gave him a cup of water and salt (to alleviate the pain). The detainees could not trim their fingernails, so they used their teeth and scraped their nails against the wall.

Judge Wiedner asked P22 if there was medicine. P22 did not remember. He mentioned something that he thought might be irrelevant: in the state security directorate, there were people with chronic diseases like blood-pressure, etc. Those detainees used to routinely stand by the window so the guards could give them medicine. One person had pain in his abdomen and asked for a doctor several times. When a doctor came, they took the person to him. P22 was unsure if he mentioned this during [BKA] police questioning.

Judge Wiedner asked about nutrition and recalled P22's statement that he lost weight in prison. P22 said of course. The quantity of food was better in the solitary cell. In the group cell, nutrition changed according to the number of people in the dormitory/chamber. It was not enough. [The guards] used to bring a plate that was only enough for five or six people. It was insufficient. Some people hid pieces of bread, which was prohibited. Food came at 6:00AM and 6:00PM. If the detainees were hungry, the guards sometimes gave them pieces [of bread]. If one dared to ask [for more], sometimes the guards gave more, like lentil soup (it depended on who the prison guard was).

Judge Wiedner asked about the nutritional state of the other detainees. P22 said that he did not see people who stayed [in detention] for a long time. He became the oldest one [the person there for the longest time]. Other detainees were in and out.

Judge Wiedner recalled a line from the police transcript which said that "food was insufficient. P22 lost 12 kg, but did not see extreme cases of other detainees." P22 confirmed the statement and reiterated that other people went in and out, but he stayed. After he was released on [redacted] [2011], P22 weighed himself. His pants were loose, so he fixed them with a [plastic] bag.

Judge Wiedner asked if this was the case for other detainees too. P22 referred to himself personally.

Judge Wiedner asked if P22 heard screams or the sounds of abuse. P22 said yes, several times.

Judge Wiedner asked how often he heard this. P22 said he heard this daily - during interrogations and sometimes at night when [the guards] brought new detainees to the yard at the "welcome party" which took place in front of the dormitories/chambers. He heard the voices of the prison guards insulting [the new detainees] and beating them. One time, he heard what sounded like [redacted] voice in front of the dormitory's/chamber's door. During the interrogation, he heard sounds from other rooms, including screams.

Judge Wiedner asked if P22 was beaten on his way to interrogation. P22 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was beating in the chamber. P22 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked about the toilet. P22 said there was no toilet in the solitary cell. He had a certain amount of time to run to the toilet with his head downward. He had to put his plate in a certain place, then go to the toilet and drink water. There was no water inside the solitary cell.

Judge Wiedner recalled P22's statement during police questioning that "we were allowed to go to the toilet twice a day. If one wanted to go to the toilet [at a different time], [the guards] insulted him on his way to the toilet and hit him on the back of his neck." P22 said that the guards normally told them "quickly!" [to make him hurry up]. During the day, other than these two times, one had to ask several times to use the toilet.

Judge Wiedner said that P22 mentioned a story about someone who had a relative. P22 said that he would mention the story if he recalled it.

Judge Wiedner asked if there were beatings. P22 said there were no beatings inside the chamber, only during interrogation. Perhaps there was one time when someone knocked several times on the door and then the guard opened the door and kicked him in the chest.

Judge Wiedner recalled P22's earlier statement that a journalist mentioned an incident of death in Al-Khatib Branch. Judge Wiedner asked if P22 knew how the journalist got that information, if it was official for example. P22 did not know. He thought the journalist was a legal activist who heard that information from somewhere, but he did not know from where.

Judge Wiedner asked if, as a doctor, P22 thought there were detainees who needed immediate medical intervention. P22 said no. There were no [detainees with severe conditions] who needed immediate treatment.

Judge Wiedner recalled P22's testimony that he was hit on his feet. Judge Wiedner asked P22 if he meant on the soles of his feet. P22 confirmed. The guards told people to run in place [to control] the swelling.

Judge Wiedner asked if this was the case for P22. P22 said [a guard] only beat him one time, then told him to run in place. P22 went one step forward or backward [he was not running in the same spot], so the guard told him "it seems that you haven't done your military service."

Judge Wiedner asked if [running in place] relieved the pain after the beating. P22 said of course.

Judge Wiedner asked if P22's relatives were informed of his detention. P22 found out after his release that his family tried to find him. Through connections and money, they figured out where P22 was held. He was detained during Ramadan (he did not remember when exactly, but the Eid [feast] was soon). P22 was in Damascus and his family was in the village. They wanted to know where he was. They called and P22 did not answer, but somehow, they were able to connect.

Judge Wiedner said that [communication with P22's family] was not official. P22 said no.

Judge Wiedner asked how long P22 stayed in Al-Khatib Branch. P22 asked if Judge Wiedner meant the whole period of his detention. Judge Wiedner said yes. P22 said he was detained on [redacted]. After that (it was the time of Eid Al-Adha [Al-Adha feast]), he was transferred to Kafar Souseh one day before Eid Al-Adha, around [redacted] [a note from the Trial Monitor: the first day of Al-Adha feast in 2011 was on November 6].

Judge Wiedner asked what happened after that. P22 said he and others were transferred to the state security branch in Kafar Souseh. They were gathered, their hands were tied behind their backs, and they were taken on a small bus. They were blindfolded, but someone on the bus told the military person to [remove the blindfolds]. Outside was the "welcome party". On the first day, the detainees took off all their clothes except for their underwear. They were then blindfolded and left standing there. From beneath their blindfolds, the detainees could see that the floor had tiles and that there was water [on the floor]. [The weather] was very cold. It was 9:00PM – 10:00PM. They sat on their knees with their hands tied behind their backs until around 11:00AM – 12:00PM the next day.

Judge Wiedner asked how long P22 stayed in Kafar Souseh. P22 said 15 days.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened and how P22 was released. P22 said that he was interrogated once in Kafar Souseh. The conditions in Kafar Souseh were more difficult than in Al-Khatib Branch. Sometimes, the detainees could sleep during the day in Al-Khatib, but that was impossible in Kafar Souseh. They woke up at 6:00AM (the guards banged on the door), then they went into sitting position until they were told to sleep [at sleeping time]. The guards looked at the detainees [checked on them] every two minutes, but that did not happen in Al-Khatib. Also, in Kafar Souseh, if one's voice was louder than a whisper, then the detainees faced collective punishment. Al-Khatib was more comfortable.

Judge Wiedner asked if P22 was released on [redacted] [2011]. P22 said correct. After 15 days in Kafar Souseh, he was transferred to Adra Prison where he stayed another 15 days until he was released.

Judge Wiedner asked P22 if he could recognize the accused to his right. P22 said no.

***

[60-minutes break]

***

Prosecutor Klinge's Questioning

Klinge said that P22 was brought to Al-Khatib Branch and had to take off his underwear. Klinge asked P22 if he knows why he had to do that. P22 had no idea, but he heard that one could hide a sharp object or an object used to commit suicide [in his underwear].

Klinge asked P22 what he had to do. P22 had to take off his clothes so the guards could see if there was anything there.

Klinge asked if P22 thought this was humiliating. P22 said of course.

Klinge asked why P22 was initially in the solitary cell before being transferred to the group cell. P22 thought this happened to prevent him from having contact with his friends and so he and his friends could not agree on something specific [to collectively say].

Klinge asked if P22 joined his friends in the external cell. P22 said no, they were separated.

Klinge said that P22 was interrogated in the presence of other people who could have been his friends. Klinge asked if P22 knew why. P22 thought this happened so that his friends would be put on the spot and confess if they heard P22 confess to something. Maybe his friends had denied something to which P22 was confessing.

Klinge asked if there was abuse during the group interrogation. P22 said the only time there was abuse in the group interrogation was when [the guards] beat [redacted] with a cable and wood. This happened during the second interrogation.

Klinge asked if P22's friend was beaten in front of them. P22 heard the beating, but could not see.

Klinge recalled P22's statement that, after a few hits, one does not feel anymore. Klinge asked how long P22 was beaten. P22 said the beating did not exceed one or two minutes, around 15 – 20 [hits].

Klinge asked if it was painful. P22 said of course.

Klinge asked P22 if his feet were swollen. P22 said they were red and lightly swollen.

Klinge asked if it was painful when P22 stood up afterwards. P22 said yes.

Klinge asked how long the pain lasted. P22 said that [the pain] was not easy. It lasted one or two hours. When he returned to the external cell, he massaged his feet and put them on the floor tiles which were a bit cool.

Klinge asked if there was a difference between the interrogator and the prison guard and how they interacted with each other. P22 said that there was an interrogator and a prison guard. The guard followed the orders of the interrogator.

Klinge asked if other detainees talked about torture. P22 said of course.

Klinge asked what methods of torture the detainees mentioned. P22 said "the same thing, on the feet." One person from Duma was accused of "carrying arms." According to him, they beat his whole body, not only his feet.

Klinge asked about other methods of torture, like the German chair and the flying carpet. P22 said he did not hear about those in Al-Khatib Branch. In Kafar Souseh, he heard about Doulab [tire]. Regarding the German chair, it is generally known in Syrian society that it exists.

Klinge asked if there were other group cells in Al-Khatib other than the one P22 was in. P22 said that the detainees in his cell knew there was another group cell. [They got the information from other detainees.] They heard sounds when the guards opened the door and took people to interrogation.

Klinge asked if P22 knew about the conditions there. P22 said no.

Klinge asked if P22 had the impression that he was privileged and was treated better than others. P22 said yes, perhaps because he was not accused of “carrying arms” like others.

Klinge asked if P22 saw or heard sexual violence. P22 said no.

Klinge asked about the psychological condition (like fear) in detention. P22 said the condition was psychologically difficult. He [had a total mental breakdown]. The detainees always thought about what they said [during interrogation] or if someone informed on them. They thought about their families and how their mother or father felt. Parents knew that, when someone was detained by the intelligence services, no one knows what will happen to him. In Syria, pardons were usually granted by the president during the holidays. P22 was detained during Ramadan, so there was Eid Al-Fitr [Al-Fitr feast] and Eid Al-Adha. The two holidays were separated by two months and ten days. P22 and the other detainees anticipated a pardon and expected to be released. The prison guards played with the detainees’ emotions. When the detainees asked the guards if pardons would be issued, they said yes. There was always hope and fear.

Klinge asked what the detainees were afraid of. P22 said that they did not know how long they would be in prison or when they would be released. This was especially the case for political detainees because [the accusations facing them were] against the government.

Klinge asked if P22 was subjected to insults. P22 said yes. He was called a “traitor” and other insults.

Klinge asked if P22 was subjected to threats. P22 recalled that the interrogator once asked him about P22’s medical specialty, to which P22 said urology. The interrogator asked if P22 was married. He said no. The interrogator then asked P22 “don’t you need children?” P22 was afraid because he perceived the interrogator’s question to be an indirect threat that he would cause damage to P22’s genitalia and P22 would not be able to have children.

Klinge asked if P22 was afraid. P22 said of course. He was intensely afraid.

Foerster-Baldenius asked if P22, as a doctor, helped other detainees. P22 said that other detainees asked him what to do when they had abdominal pain, a sore throat, etc. But P22 did not have the tools to help them. He helped by reassuring them that [the issue] was not bad or serious. He advised the young man with the toothache to speak with the guards so they would do something.

Foerster-Baldenius asked if P22 was afraid to talk to the other detainees and advise them. P22 said that one time, he advised someone (he forgot what was the person's problem). The person asked [the guards] for help. He spoke with the guards and told them that P22 talked with him. A guard came to P22 and nicely told him not to give people advice.

Oehmichen showed a document.

Document 1 [was shown in Arabic]

بيان

20/11/2011 تاريخ [redacted] تحقيق أول بدمشق. موضوع الادعاء رقم [redacted] بالرجوع إلى الإضبارة رقم أساسي ، بجرم النيل من هيبة الدولة وإذاعة أخبار كاذبة من شأنها أن 1983 بحق المدعى عليه [redacted] والدته [redacted] تولد ولا 2011 [redacted] وتم إخلاء سبيله بتاريخ 2011 [redacted] توهن من نفسية الأمة وللتظاهر ، علما أنه تم توقيفه بتاريخ تزال الدعوى قيد النظر

21/12/2011
أديب الأحمد

القاضي أحمد السيد

Notice

With reference to [case]file basic No. [redacted] first Investigation in Damascus. The subject of case/lawsuit No. [redacted], dated November 20 2011, against the defendant [redacted], his mother, [redacted], born in 1983, of the offense of undermining the prestige of the state and broadcasting false news that would undermine the psyche of the nation and for demonstrating, noting that he was arrested on [redacted], 2011 and was released on [redacted] 2011 and the case/lawsuit is still pending.

December 21, 2011
Adeeb Al-Ahmad

Judge Ahmad As-Sayyed

Judge Kerber asked P22 to explain the document. P22 said that he tried to work again after he was released from prison. Because he was absent from work for three months, the hospital asked P22 for an explanation [as to why he was gone for so long]. P22 went to the court in Damascus and asked for proof that he was detained. The court gave him this document.

[The interpreter translated the document and read it out loud.]

P22 said that Judge Ahmad As-Sayyed became the Syrian Minister of Justice.

Document 2

وزارة العدل
مجلس إدارة صندوق التعاون

إلى السيد المحترم قاضي التحقيق الأول بدمشق

مقدمه: [redacted]، تولد 1983
مقيم: [redacted]
2011 نوفمبر/تشرين الثاني] 20 تاريخ [redacted] سيدي الموقر، أرجو من سيادتكم الموافقة على إعطائي بيانا بالدعوى رقم
وذلك لتقديمه إلى مديرية صحة دمشق
وذلك للحاجة الماسة

ولكم جزيل الشكر

21/12/2011

ديوان
إجابة الطلب أصولاً

Ministry of Justice
Board of Directors of the Cooperation Fund

To the Honorable, first Investigating Judge in Damascus,

Applicant: [Redacted] son of [redacted], born in 1983
Resident in: [Redacted]

Distinguished Sir, I request your consent to be given a statement regarding case/lawsuit No.
[redacted], dated [November 20] 2011, to be submitted to the Damascus Health Directorate.
And that is for urgent need

Most profound thanks

December 21, 2011

Court Administrative Office
The request was duly answered

[The interpreter translated the document and read it out loud.]

P22 said that the document was an urgent request. Every year, he had to provide a deferral request so he would not be conscripted. His deferral was going to expire in March 2012. He only had three months left, so he wanted a statement that said he was working again.

Oehmichen asked her client about the professions of the people who were detained with him. P22 said that most of them were doctors. They did not know each other personally. He recalled there being five doctors and a journalist.

[There were no more questions from the parties.]

P22 asked if he could say something. Judge Kerber agreed. P22 said that he was in court to obtain the truth. He did not have anything personal against Raslan. Before he participated in the trial, he talked with his friends to get their opinions on whether he should participate. It was a moral matter because he left his job in 2012 and he left [Syria] in a relatively early phase [of the conflict]. However, “we” decided to participate to obtain the truth.

Judge Kerber thanked the witness.

Defense Counsel Fratzki asked P22 who he was referring to when he said “we.”

Oehmichen did not want to say the names for security reasons, but agreed to write the names down. Oehmichen asked which names were relevant to the defense.

Fratzki suggested writing down all the names, then the judges could sort them.

Judge Kerber said that, as a witness, P22 had to share names.

Böcker said that he would talk with [Fratzki] to determine which names were relevant to them.

***

[10-minute-break]

***

[P22 and his attorney returned and handed in a paper.]

Fratzki said that they wanted the names related to the trial.

[The witness was dismissed.]

Defense Counsel Schuster wanted to read a statement from his defendant, Mr. Al-Gharib. Judge Kerber asked how much time he needed. Schuster suggested ten minutes. Fratzki also wanted to read a five-minute statement.

[Schuster read the following statement out loud:]

On November 4, 2020, the painful photos from the Caesar-files were examined and displayed in court. The presentation by Prof. Dr. Rothschild was very clear and provided excellent explanations. I want to thank Prof. Dr. Rothschild for his remarks on psychological and physical torture. I also want to pay my respect and gratitude to the hero, Caesar, for his fight against the Assad regime.

I want to explain what I felt while seeing these photos; they broke my heart. I had to think of all the innocent victims of these bestial acts. The human mind cannot understand how humans can do such things to each other. I trembled during the entire presentation. Anger and hatred against Assad and his accessories filled my mind and heart. 99% of the pictures, I have not seen before. I only saw those that Al Jazeera and other news agencies already published. During the entire presentation, I had to think of all my relatives that are still in detention. Seven relatives, several friends and hundreds of people from my home town were arrested and their fate is still unknown. I was searching for familiar faces on the Caesar photos while at the same time, I was afraid to recognize anyone.

After this painful session when I was alone in the van back to the prison, I could no longer control myself and started to burst in tears. I was filled with grief and pain. I had to think about my family and tried to understand why people get arrested only because they demand equality, freedom and justice at demonstrations. I painfully realized that Bashar Al-Assad and the members of his [sect] are criminals that are still committing thousands of crimes, while the whole world knows about it but is only watching. The international community did not do anything about it.

I love my country and the people, that is why I hope to see the criminal regime, particularly the criminal and dictator Bashar Al-Assad, in front of an international court. As all Sunnis, I was entirely powerless. 90% of the revolutionists are Sunnis. After the outbreak of the revolution, there was mistrust against Sunnis and we were constantly threatened. The first month after the revolution, we were degraded and they took away our arms and ID's. We were under constant surveillance and they were only hoping for the smallest sign of partisanship to arrest us. I only had the following options:

- 1) Openly disobey orders, which would have led to my arrest and arrest usually ended with execution.*
- 2) Defect and flee. That would have been foolish and sheer madness. They would have tortured my family until I returned to Syria.*
- 3) The right option was to wait and prepare until the border was open, to then defect and flee together with my family.*

I chose this option on January 5, 2012, as many others did.

Is the love for my family – my wife and four children – a fault for which I deserve punishment? I hope this court will find an answer that will also serve as an answer for future soldiers who find themselves in a civil war in their home countries.

I want to thank all parties to this trial and everyone involved, and pay my respect to them.

*Tuesday November 10, 2020
Eyad Al-Gharib
[signature]*

Schuster said that the defendant wrote the letter alone, without his lawyers' assistance. Judge Kerber asked Eyad to confirm this. Schuster said that his client would remain silent. Schuster had no copies of the statement. Judge Kerber ordered a two-minute break to make copies of the statement and asked the parties to stay in the courtroom.

***

[2-minute-break]

***

Klinge said that a sample for the graphology expert was needed for a comparison, but was not available.

Judge Kerber said that a witness was invited from France to testify on January 6 and 7, 2021 but the witness was no longer willing to do so.

Fratki read a statement in which he referred to the plaintiff counsels' statement regarding sexual violence. He said that there is insufficient proof of the systematic nature of sexual violence (contrary to plaintiffs' [redacted] claim).

The proceedings were adjourned at 2:35PM.

The next trial will be on December 10, 2020 at 9:30AM.

Trial Day 51 – December 10, 2020

The accused arrived late and the proceedings began at 9:40AM. There were seven spectators and two individuals from the media present. Plaintiff Counsel Kroker was not present. However, Plaintiff Counsel Bahns was there. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared for Plaintiff Counsel Mohammad.

Testimony of P23

Instructions were read, and P23 was informed of his rights as a witness.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Judge Kerber asked P23 his age. P23 said that he was born on January 1, 1989. Judge Kerber asked if that meant the witness was 31-years-old. P23 said that 31 was his age approximately. He then apologized. His birthday was October 2, 1989. [A note from the Trial Monitor: it is common for birthdays to be registered as January 1 in Syria, regardless of when the person was born].

Judge Kerber asked about P23's current job. P23 said that he works in a supermarket.

Judge Kerber noted that P23 was interrogated by the criminal police in Oslo. She asked P23 if he was related to the accused by blood or marriage. P23 said no.

Judge Kerber asked if P23 was interrogated twice [by the BKA]. P23 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked if he was interrogated by the criminal police in Oslo and the BKA. P23 said yes.

Judge Kerber asked if the transcript of P23's questioning by the police in Oslo was re-translated. P23 thought so.

Judge Kerber noted that the transcript was not read aloud, so she assumed that it was not re-translated. P23 did not remember.

Judge Kerber said that P23 was detained in Branch 251, then transferred to a hospital. Judge Kerber asked about P23's detention, what he experienced, and how he was treated.

P23 said that he was in his workplace—a car shop [for washes and repairs]. He did not remember the date, but it was around 1:00 – 2:00PM. He was the manager and there were workers. He was sitting inside the office. Many security and military cars arrived. They entered the shop, then shouted and beat him. They flipped his t-shirt over his head [covered P23's head with his t-shirt] and put him in the car. They took him to the 10th Division in Qatana قطنا [a note from the Trial Monitor, the witness referred to a military "division," such as the 4th Division under the command of Maher Al-Assad, not a division like "section" 40]. Over four days, he was beaten and interrogated. He was asked questions, the answers to which he did not know: "what were you doing in Aleppo and Homs?" and "what place did you blow up?" P23 responded that he worked a lot, so he did not leave Damascus and did nothing of which he was accused. He had never left Syria in his life. P23 explained that his workplace was in a sensitive location. It was at a crossroads of security [forces and sites]. He told the interrogator that security officers, their wives, and their children left their cars at his shop and he delivered the cars back to their houses when he finished working on them. P23 told the interrogator to ask the officers if he ever caused problems; they all were his customers. He also knew a brigadier general عميد whose car needed repairs and who called P23 to see if P23 could send a worker to repair it. P23 sent people to help. The brigadier general thanked him the following day. P23 explained to the interrogator that he did not cause problems, and he served in the army. He was still in contact with the officer responsible for him – a colonel. He gave the interrogator phone numbers and said to contact them. There were also the numbers of officers in his phone. He told the interrogators to speak with his neighbours and ask them if he went to Aleppo or Homs. Each day after he was beaten, P23 said that he did not do anything [of which he was accused]. In prison, there was a military official who frequented P23's workplace. The official saw P23 from a distance as P23 was beaten. The official was surprised and asked P23 why he was [detained]. P23 said that he did not know. The official talked with the guards and told them not to hit P23 or get close to him. He then washed the blood off P23's clothes, took him outside [the witness did not say where], and brought him food. The official told P23 to hide [in that place] and that he could not do anything for P23 other than to wash his clothes, bring him food, and prevent him from being beaten. After two hours, the official returned with a blanket and told military personnel not to get close to P23.

Judge Kerber asked if [the official's word helped] and if P23 stayed [in that place]. P23 said no, he was returned to prison.

Judge Kerber asked if P23 was beaten again. P23 said that the beating continued at night.

Judge Kerber asked how P23 was beaten. P23 said that his mouth (his teeth) were broken. [The guards] hit him with a boot. They hit him on every part of his body. The following day, the [official who knew P23] told him that he could not help, but he knew that P23 was going to be sent to another place. He did not know which place. P23 asked if the officer could tell his family, his workplace, or his neighbours. The officer said that he would try, God willing. The following day, guards took [the detainees] in buses and put eggplants in their mouths. Their heads were down while they were on the bus.

Judge Kerber asked if [the detainees] were standing or sitting. P23 said that they were sitting with their heads down. It was prohibited to raise their heads. They were blindfolded and beaten on the bus until they arrived. They arrived at a place that P23 did not know was a Branch. He learned this later.

Judge Kerber asked which Branch. P23 said Al-Khatib Branch. The detainees were taken off [the bus] and laid down. The officers stepped on the detainees for approximately one or two hours. The detainees heard people coming and going in their cars. After that, the detainees went down to the branch one by one. When P23 went inside, he was hit and fell on the staircase. As a result, the blindfold was a bit displaced and he could see four people eating. When he fell, he was unable to adjust the blindfold. A person came, hit him, adjusted [the blindfold] and told him to take off his clothes. After each piece of clothing was removed, the man hit P23 and said, “next one.” P23 was put in prison with the other people. His hands were untied and his blindfold was removed. Nothing happened on the first day. On the second day, the guards took him outside/upstairs [a note from the Trial Monitor: the Arabic word used by the witness could mean either “outside” or “upstairs”] and told P23 that he was going to be interrogated. They tied up his hands and blindfolded him. The interrogator asked, “how did you blow up the convoy in Homs?” P23 told the interrogator that he never went to Homs before. The interrogator told P23 that he signed a statement in which he said this. P23 told the interrogator that he was beaten every day and was instructed to sign the paper while he was blindfolded. The interrogator asked, “what were you doing in Aleppo?” P23 gave the same answer—that he did not know what the interrogator was talking about. The interrogator accused P23 of lying and told the guards to take him outside. The guards beat P23 until he [almost?] fainted and brought him back to prison.

The following day, the guards took him upstairs/outside and P23 was asked the same questions. P23 explained his whole life [story] in details. The interrogator asked P23 who beat him. He was very bloody. He explained that the beating happened at the 10th Division. The interrogator told the guards to wipe the floor (of P23’s blood). He also told them to take P23 upstairs/outside to breathe some air. P23 smelled bad. After an hour or two (during this time, people stepped on P23 and more detainees arrived in cars), the guards took P23 back to the prison. The next day, many new detainees arrived. P23 asked them why they were there. They were wearing clean clothes. They explained that it was Eid [feast], so they were [in the streets]. A security bus came, [detained them] and brought them [to the Branch]. P23 asked them where [they were being held] and they said Al-Khatib Branch. At night, P23 smelled bad. In prison, there were many people and whenever he was slightly touched, it was immediately painful. He was in the corner beside the wall, so that no one would touch him. The [detainees] knocked on the [cell] door and said, “get this one out, his smell is too much.” The detainees could not always sit because there were too many people. Pus and black blood oozed from P23. The following day, the guards took P23 to interrogation. The interrogator asked the same questions and P23 gave the same answers. The interrogator could not stand P23's smell and told the guards to take P23 outside. They took P23 to another place (he did not remember what time), supposedly to get treatment because he was sick. But they continued to beat him daily.

Judge Kerber asked P23 the name of the place where he was taken. P23 said Harasta حريستا, a hospital in Duma دوما. He did not remember its name. They took him to that place and told him that his name was "17" and that if they called him [redacted] and he responded, then he would be beaten. Beating happened constantly. Detainees were tied to beds with chains. The guards brought a whip and beat the detainees while they were tied up. At night, someone came (while the guards were changing shifts) with a knife and stabbed P23's back.

Judge Kerber asked it was a regular knife or a surgical knife. P23 thought it was a regular knife or a razor. After that, P23 was beaten with hoses/tubes for three days.

Judge Kerber asked P23 how he got out of the hospital. [P23 remained silent]. Judge Kerber asked if P23 wanted a break. P23 asked for 5 –10 minutes.

***

[10-minute break]

***

Judge Kerber asked P23 how he got out of the hospital. P23 said that detainees fainted sometimes because of the constant beating and torture. [When] one said that his arm hurt, the guards took him, cut it off and returned him. Many people died. P23 thought this place was where they took detainees to die. There were many wounded people and no medical care. It was a hospital only for torture. Every day, a guard asked P23, "what's your name?" P23 told him "17." The guard continued to beat P23 and ask about his name. Eventually, P23 asked the guard if he wanted to know P23's real name or his number. The guard said, "the real one" while he continued to beat and insult P23. P23 told the guard his name, then the guard replied, "didn't I tell you not to say your name, only the number?" and beat P23. The torture was severe. [There were no words to] describe it. From the time when they detained P23 until he went to the hospital, he was tortured using many methods.

When he first entered Al-Khatib Branch, he heard screaming and beating. He reached a point where he could not bear the beating. They hit him on his head and he fainted, then he could not remember anything [a note from the Trial Monitor: this sentence was not interpreted because P23 used colloquial words which the interpreter did not understand]. The guards splashed water on everyone and beat them. Anything that happened to P23 also happened to the person next to him [meaning that everyone was subjected to the same things]. P23's condition was critical in terms of his head, back, and blood [loss]. P23 remembered that someone said, "this man is done. Get rid of him [using the same term used for garbage]." They threw P23 somewhere (he did not remember where). Flies were on him while he laid on the ground and he could not get them off him. He wished he would [sink into] the ground so no one would see him. He wanted to disappear. A taxi came. The driver lifted P23 slightly and asked what happened, who he was, and the location of his house. P23 wanted to speak, but he could not. The driver brought a bottle of water, washed P23's face, and took P23 into the taxi. P23 said that he knew his mother's phone number. The driver called P23's mother/family and told them that he found P23. They told the driver to bring P23 to them and that they would pay the driver whatever he wanted. The driver took P23 home. P23's brother, paternal uncle, and siblings were there. They carried him from the car to the house and thanked God that he was alive. P23 was unable to talk. They immediately took him to the doctor who told them that he could not do anything and that P23 had to go outside the country [for treatment]. The doctor gave P23 an injection, pain-killers, and medicine. The following day, P23 and his family went to Jordan by car. They went directly to a speciality hospital where P23 stayed for three months. He had many injuries to his back. He had a video and pictures.

Judge Kerber asked if P23 was photographed by the Norwegian police. P23 did not remember that much, but he had a video from before the operation (that his family filmed) and after the operation. [Judge Kerber showed a picture of P23's back which had scars and signs of injuries.]

Judge Kerber asked P23 if he could confirm that the picture was of him in 2017. P23 confirmed.

Judge Kerber asked when P23 was detained. P23 said in 2011 approximately.

Judge Kerber asked if P23 remembered when his mother was called [by the taxi driver]. P23 did not understand the question.

Judge Kerber noted that P23 mentioned the date of his transfer during police questioning in 2019. She wanted to know if P23 remembered that date. P23 said in 2011, there was an Eid [feast], but he did not remember the date. P23 knew this because he asked the new detainees when they arrived. They told him it was Eid and that they were in the market [when they were detained].

Judge Kerber said that August 26, 2011 was mentioned in the transcript. P23 thought that date might be correct because it was Ramadan and after Ramadan, there was an Eid. [A note from the Trial Monitor: in 2011, Ramadan ended on August 29 and Al-Fitr Eid was on August 30.]

Judge Kerber asked if [the date mentioned] could be that feast. P23 said correct.

Judge Kerber asked if P23 could continue because she noticed that he seemed unsettled. Judge Kerber asked [if P23 wanted a break]. P23 said [no, he did not want break].

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked if there was an occasion when people were detained with P23. P23 said that many people were detained with him.

Judge Wiedner asked P23 if he knows how long he stayed in Al-Khatib Branch. P23 said approximately four or five days.

Judge Kerber told P23 to let her know when he wanted a break. P23 said okay and thanked her.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23's injuries shown in the picture were inflicted at Al-Khatib Branch. P23 said that not all the injuries were from Al-Khatib Branch.

Judge Wiedner asked which injuries were inflicted at Al-Khatib Branch. P23 noted [the injuries caused by the] beating on his back and [from when he was] hit in the flank when he went down the stairs.

Judge Wiedner asked when P23 was beaten (e.g., on the stairs, in the interrogations, etc.). P23 said that [a guard] stood behind him during the interrogation and beat him. When [the interrogator] did not [hear the answer he wanted], he told [the guard] to take P23 outside, discipline him, and then bring him back.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened. P23 said [the guard] took him outside, beat him, then took him back to interrogation. He was taken [to interrogation] again the following day.

Judge Wiedner asked what P23 was wearing in Al-Khatib. P23 said that he was not wearing [clothes]. His clothes were full of blood and smelled, so he took them off.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 was naked when he was beaten. P23 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked whether P23 was beaten in Al-Khatib Branch on his wounds. P23 confirmed and said that [the detainees] were beaten and taken outside. People stepped on them.

Judge Wiedner asked if that happened during interrogation or in the cell. P23 said that there were a lot of people in a small room. P23 was unable to sit unless he tucked his legs and somebody else's legs were over his. It was crowded and no one could enter, so [the guards] did not beat people inside the cell. If they wanted somebody, they called him and took him outside.

Judge Wiedner asked how [the guards] dealt with P23 and his injuries when they took him upstairs/outside. P23 said they took him upstairs/outside because of his smell. When he was upstairs/outside, everyone who came in or out beat him. They knew that he was a detainee and that he was waiting [to go back inside].

Judge Wiedner asked if that happened outside. P23 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 saw detainees outside and how they were treated. P23 said that he was laying down and could see a little from underneath the blindfold. People were taken out of the vans. The [van] stopped far away and the door was opened. The guards kicked and insulted the detainees.

Judge Wiedner asked how many times P23 was interrogated. P23 said he was interrogated two or three times.

Judge Wiedner asked how often P23 was beaten during interrogation. P23 said he was beaten twice: each time he was interrogated. The guards took him upstairs/outside, the interrogator did not like P23's answers, then they took P23 outside and beat him.

Judge Wiedner asked if the interrogator hit P23 or if P23 was beaten in the presence of the interrogator. P23 said that there was a person standing behind him who once said, "it appears that you are not understanding and not going to confess." He then hit P23 from behind on his back and hauled him outside. P23 was not standing. He was always on the floor.

Judge Wiedner asked where the interrogation took place (e.g., the floor above his cell or the floor below it). P23 said he was taken upstairs. He remembered an office that was two steps to the left. Once, they hauled P23 to the kitchen.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 was interrogated in the kitchen. P23 said that he was questioned there and then was taken back to interrogation.

Judge Wiedner asked what floor the kitchen was on and if there was a window there. P23 said that he was unable to see because of the blindfold. There would be a big problem if the guards saw that the blindfold was displaced.

Judge Wiedner asked if the cell was underground. P23 confirmed and noted that the detainees could not differentiate between day and night.

Judge Wiedner asked how many people were in P23's cell ["10 or 15 for example?"]. P23 said there were approximately 400 people. One could not sit down. People were on top of each other. If one wanted to go to the toilet, one had to step on people.

Judge Wiedner asked if there was a window or a ventilation system. P23 did not remember any windows, but many people went to the toilet to breathe. All the windows were internal, but he did not remember.

Judge Wiedner recalled P23's statement during police questioning that "in the cell, there was a window, but one could not see light. There was no place to sit. It hurt if someone touched me." P23 said yes, there was a window. He remembered trying to look [through] the window to know the time [a note from the Trial Monitor: it seems that there was a clock on the wall in the room behind the window, but vision was blurred because of the window itself].

Judge Wiedner asked about food. P23 did not remember 100%, but he recalled eating soup and apples. He then said, "no actually, it was boiled potato maybe."

Judge Wiedner asked about the condition of other detainees (if they had injuries). P23 said that not all of them had injuries, but some people were beaten. There were new people who came from the street to the cell. Not all [the detainees] were the same.

Judge Wiedner asked if [the guards] called for injured detainees. P23 said that there were injured people who were called. One time, [the guards] called for someone and gave him two pills through the hatch.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 talked with other detainees about their interrogations. P23 did not remember that. But they talked about how many days they were detained and what happened to them. When P23 was initially put in the cell, another detainee advised him to confess [during interrogation] so [the guards] would not beat P23 and kill him ["confess and talk, before they beat and kill you"].

Judge Wiedner asked P23 if he heard people being tortured. P23 explained that he heard beating and screaming when he went downstairs. He also heard [talk from other detainees] that so-and-so was being tortured.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 heard those sounds in the interrogation room. P23 did not remember hearing the sounds in the interrogation room, but he recalled hearing screams when he was downstairs.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 was detained in the 10th Division, Al-Khatib Branch, and Harasta Military Hospital. P23 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked P23 if he saw dead bodies and, if yes, where. P23 said that he saw dead bodies daily while in the hospital.

Judge Wiedner asked how many dead bodies P23 saw. P23 said there were many dead bodies in the hospital.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 saw dead bodies in the 10th division. P23 said no, only in the hospital in Harasta.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 saw dead bodies in Al-Khatib Branch. P23 said that he did not see any dead bodies in Al-Khatib Branch. He only saw torture.

Judge Wiedner asked P23 if his family was informed about his detention. P23 said no. There was an officer who knew his father. His father went to the officer who told him that "your son is with us and is well." But P23 was not [at the officer's Branch], nor was he well. When P23 arrived home, his mother told him "your father was going to an officer and was giving him money, so that they would take care of you." [P23's father paid the officer who was lying about P23's location and condition.]

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 fainted in Al-Khatib Branch. P23 remembered one time when the other [detainees] knocked on the door [and told the guards to] "come and see [P23]."

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 wanted a break. P23 said yes.

Judge Kerber asked how much time P23 wanted. He said 10 minutes, then started to cry. He apologized and said that he remembered his father who died last year and who he had not seen in a long time.

***

[30-minute-break]

***

Judge Kerber said that she hoped P23 calmed down and was refreshed during the break. P23 said thanks and apologized for the disturbance.

Judge Wiedner asked how long P23 stayed in the 10th Division. P23 said approximately three days.

Judge Wiedner asked if P23 or the other detainees received treatment in Harasta Hospital. P23 said there was no treatment.

Judge Wiedner asked how many people were with P23 in the hospital. P23 said that each bed had two people [chained to it]. He thought there were 20 beds and approximately 40 people.

Judge Wiedner asked if others were abused like P23 was abused. P23 said yes. If one asked for something, they replied [to the question] with pain [if someone asked for medicine, they beat him instead].

Polz thanked P23 for coming to court and said that the Prosecution had no questions. Böcker said that the defense shared the same opinion. Scharmer said the same too.

The witness was dismissed.

The proceedings were adjourned at 11:00AM.

The next trial will be December 16, 2020 at 9:30AM.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 22

Hearing Date: December 16, 2020

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 52 – December 16, 2020

P24, a 41-year-old female witness testified on her detention at Branch 251 and Division 40. Due to concerns about her and her family's safety, P24 was allowed to conceal information that would put her or her family at risk. P24 told the court that she did not endure [physical] torture, most likely due to the social status of her family in Syria. Nonetheless, she constantly heard people screaming from torture, and she witnessed torture in the hallways of Branch 251 through a gap in her cell door. She also spoke about the treatment of female detainees at Branch 251 based on her experience of sharing a solitary cell with a pregnant woman, as well as being detained in an overcrowded cell with several women and girls.

Day 52 of Trial – December 16, 2020

The hearing began at 9:30 am with four spectators and two members of the press in the audience. None of the accredited journalists required access to the Arabic translation. Presiding Judge Kerber announced that she will no longer ask about accredited journalists who require access to Arabic translation in the new year. There was no camera man recording before the beginning of the hearing. The prosecution was represented by Prosecutors Klinge and Polz. Attorney Foerster-Baldenius appeared as replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Mohammed.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Plaintiff Counsels Scharmer and Kroker about the appearance of their client as a witness, which was scheduled for the following week. Dr. Kroker told her that their client is currently in Sweden and cannot come to Koblenz due to COVID-19 related restrictions. Nonetheless, Dr. Kroker added, the client would be willing to testify via video if one of his counsels is present with him in Sweden. Kerber said that a video testimony would generally be an option and asked Scharmer and Dr. Kroker to inform the Judges about the relevant Swedish authority which they need to contact in order to arrange a video testimony. Kerber canceled the sessions scheduled for the following week (December 21 and 22) as there was no other witness scheduled and a court session only to read out reports from the case file would not be feasible in light of the pandemic.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Testimony of P24

P24, who wore a scarf over her head, was accompanied by Witness Counsel von der Behrens. Von der Behrens told the court that, according to her request to assist the witness as legal counsel, she requests that her client, P24, does not have to provide personal information due to possible dangers for her and her family in Syria.

Raslan's defense counsel Böcker requested to look at von der Behrens' request. Kerber allowed him to inspect it informally and look at the document on von der Behrens' computer.

Prosecutor Klinge said the prosecution has no objections to the request in accordance with the relevant procedural rules.

Kerber ordered that the witness is allowed to not provide personal information as this would endanger the life, limb or liberty of the witnesses' family who is still living in government-controlled areas in Syria. As to why the prerequisites for §68 (3) StPO [not provide personal information for the above-mentioned reasons] are met, Kerber added that the judges are well aware from previous testimonies that the government has a crucial interest in the loyalty of current and former employees and other people.

Kerber told P24 that she can take off her scarf if she feels safe since no one will see her, as long as she does not turn around.

Instructions were read out to P24 and she was informed of her rights as a witness. P24 said that she is 41-years-old, but prefers not to reveal her professional occupation.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Kerber mentioned that P24's testimonies with the French and German police are on the case file. She said that according to these transcripts, P24 was arrested and detained at different prisons for a certain time. Kerber asked P24 to explain why she was detained and how she was treated at the prisons. She added that the focus of the court would be on Branch 251. P24 thanked Kerber and said that in May 2012, around May 5, 2012, she met with friends at a private space. This place was then stormed, and she and her friends were arrested. She explained that the place was in Damascus, between [information redacted]. She and her friends were taken to Division 40 where they had to stay for one night. On the next day, they were brought to Al-Khatib Branch. P24 further told the court that she spent time at Al-Khatib before she was transferred to Kafar Souseh Branch. She was then the only one from the group who was re-transferred to Al-Khatib. She said she was released by Division 40 on June 9, 2012.

Kerber wanted to know details about how P24 and her friends got to the first detention facility. P24 explained that she and her friends were at an office when someone knocked on the door. When she opened the door, a person dressed in civilian clothes pointed a gun at her. Other people accompanying him said that they are from the security forces and wanted to come in. P24 said she requested an ID-card from these people, as she and her friends were "within the law". Nonetheless, the people stormed the office. P24 said this happened when she and her friends were having lunch together. The group of friends first asked about the reason why the office was being stormed, as they were only friends having lunch together. P24 remembered that they were a group of eight people. The officers, all dressed in civilian clothes, searched everything and wanted to see all their ID-cards. They carried radio devices which they used to check their names. They then decided to take the group with them to their Branch. P24 said that apparently, the officers were bothered by the computers in the office. She further explained that, as usual for guys, the guards put the men's t-shirts over their heads, so that their back was naked. "Of course" they did not do the same to her. She said she requested to drive [to the Branch in] her own car, so two of the officers got in her car and they drove to Division 40. When they arrived there, her car was searched, and they started to torture the guys.<sup>2</sup> P24 said she was brought directly to an office for interrogation. They told her to open her e-mail and Facebook accounts. She was then brought downstairs where one of the men was tortured with electroshocks and beaten. P24 said they forced her to watch.

Kerber asked whether this man was from her group of friends. P24 affirmed, adding that they forced her to watch in order to make her testify against him. P24 said that, after all the interrogations, they had to wait in an office. A female officer was brought to the office to frisk her. P24 said that, upon her request, the female officer frisked her in the bathroom. P24 then had to spend the night in that office, while the door was locked. P24 further explained that early in the morning on the next day, they were taken to Al-Khatib in a minivan. She said that one of the people from Division 40 was called Yamen. She added that she was not blindfolded, but her hands were tied behind her back and she had to look down at the floor. P24 said it was early in the morning so the streets were almost empty and the minivan drove "incredibly fast". According to P24, the group was cursed and yelled at on the entire trip to Al-Khatib. She said that Yamen stayed with her when they arrived at Al-Khatib and accompanied her downstairs to the basement. She explained that they went into some kind of office. She was then called into another room, which looked like a bathroom. In that room, which was closed, a woman told her to undress. She had to take off all her clothes and was not allowed to leave anything on. She was then told to squat and get up three times. P24 said it is normal that her body makes cracking noises when she kneels or squats, but the woman did not believe her. P24 said she was allowed to re-dress and the woman went to the office, while she had to stay in the room. After that, she was taken to another room. P24 said she cannot remember where exactly the room was, however, she remembers that it was on the same floor which had many solitary cells. She said she was taken to a solitary cell measuring 2x1 meters, where an eight-months pregnant woman was waiting. P24 said she stayed there for 21 days, adding that she forgot the initial question.

Judge Kerber told her everything is fine and she did very well. Kerber asked her to go on and offered P24 to take a break whenever she needs one. P24 explained that the woman in the solitary cell had been there for quite some time already. She does not know how long exactly, however, there were three other women in the cell with the pregnant lady before P24 came. P24 added that the woman was very exhausted. She further said that she does not remember how much time passed until she was first interrogated, but it was at least several days. She said there is something she cannot understand, so she wants to give more explanation: P24 explained that there was no toilet in the cell. She said that there were more solitary cells on that floor, two on the right and two on the left side of their cell, and one opposite to them on the left. There were also several bigger cells which looked like "halls", as well as a room for the guards. P24 said that the guards decided when the detainees were allowed to use the toilet. She said that she and her cellmate always went together. They had to lower their heads and were not allowed to look at anyone. According to P24, she could only see the floor on her daily walk to the toilet, but she saw men sitting and lying on the ground. P24 said they got their drinking water from the toilet; it was of very bad quality. P24 described that at the toilet, there was a small window (a gap)<sup>3</sup> in the wall where one could get some fresh air. She said that ironically, the toilet was the only room where one could breathe different air. Everywhere else smelled like sweat and urine. P24 said she remembers her first day at Al-Khatib when she decided to eat in order to keep up her strength. She added that two daily meals were provided to her at Al-Khatib, one in the afternoon, around 3:00 pm or 4:00 pm and one at the end of the night or early morning. She said the food had no salt or sugar. They had no cutlery to eat and the bread was most times rotten, but she still ate the food.

---

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P24 often used the term guys/young men instead of men.

Judge Wiedner asked her about the quality of the food and whether it was enough. P24 said that one of the meals (night/morning) was jam, olives and bread. P24 added that they sometimes got Halva or an egg. Nevertheless, it was always only one plate, regardless of the number of people [in the cell]. For lunch, they got rice and a side dish. It was generally very bad food. P24 assumed that there were rations allocated for every person, but they did not reach the detainees. She further said that it felt like a dream when they once got cucumber and another time an orange.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P24 lost weight. P24 said she lost 8kg in 35 days, even though she ate.

Wiedner wanted to know how many days P24 was at Al-Khatib and how many days she was at Kafar Souseh. P24 said she was at Al-Khatib for 21 days together with the pregnant women, who then left the prison. After that, P24 stayed in that cell for one more night with another woman, before she was transferred to the big collective cell. P24 explained that [on that day] all the women were transferred from solitary cells to the collective cell. The reason for this was that many women were detained that day due to demonstrations in Damascus about the massacre in Al-Hama. According to P24, the men were taken out of the collective cell, however, she did not know where they were taken. She further said that the condition of that collective cell was “unbelievable”. The cell had a toilet, but the entire cell was dirty. There was no oxygen and a strong smell. P24 said she stayed there for two days before she was transferred to Kafar Souseh where she stayed for a couple days before she was transferred back to Al-Khatib. P24 went on to tell the court that at the beginning, she was interrogated by inspectors at Al-Khatib. However, she could not see the person, as she was blindfolded. She said she was only interrogated once and the room where the interrogation took place was more of passage than a room. She said she remembers that there was certain equipment, maybe kitchen tools. P24 explained that her hands were tied and she was blindfolded and had to kneel, while the interrogator sat on a small chair. She said that one of the guards was Abu Ghadab, who was responsible for “insane acts”. She said that every time that one of the guards was angry, Abu Ghadab started to torture people. She described him as tall and thin and said that she felt like he was “weird”. P24 added that during her interrogation, Abu Ghadab was present and held a whip. However, he was not there because of her specifically. He was coming and going again and again and lashed the floor right next to her. She added that it felt as if he wanted to let her know that “I am here [with a whip] if you do not want to talk”. P24 said the interrogator played the role of the ‘good cop’, telling Abu Ghadab that his assistance was not necessary. She concluded that they “played the good cop – bad cop game throughout her interrogation. However, the interrogation did not deliver any results, as she did not say anything that would incriminate her. She said that the interrogator insisted on personally accompanying her to her cell and patted her on her back on the way, as if he wanted to tell her “stay calm”. She said as far as she recalls, there were no more interrogations at Al-Khatib. P24 said the same interrogator wanted to talk to her on the day she was transferred to Kafar Souseh, however, it was rather meaningless. When she returned from Kafar Souseh, she had no more interrogations at Al-Khatib.

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translator consulted P24 to clarify what exactly she meant. During a break at a later point, they were able to clarify that it was not a window, but a light shaft.

Presiding Judge Kerber said that this trial is about Raslan and asked P24 whether the interrogator was Raslan. P24 turned to the defendants' bench and, after a short break, said she does not think that Raslan was the interrogator.

Kerber wanted to know why she thinks that. P24 said that the entire situation surrounding the interrogation and the room do not fit with a man of his rank. She added that guards were constantly entering and leaving the room.

Kerber wanted to know whether P24 noticed anything about the language/voice of the interrogator and if she identified his dialect. P24 said she tried to remember the interrogation. There were some indications about the person but she does not remember.

Kerber recalled that P24 told the German police (BKA) that she thinks she was interrogated twice at Al-Khatib. She was not beaten or bound. However, she was blindfolded and could not see who was interrogating her. She said it was the same person for both interrogations and he spoke a Sweidan dialect. P24 told the BKA that she can consequently preclude that it was Anwar Raslan. Kerber asked P24 whether she remembers anything about the dialect. P24 said it might be possible that he had an accent from Sweida.

Kerber said that is fine. P24 said she cannot remember right now, but if she told the police that information, it is probably true. She added that the interrogator [at Al-Khatib] told her he would go and visit her [if she was released] and unveil his identity to her.

Kerber asked if he did visit her indeed. P24 denied.

Kerber wanted to know what happened after P24 came back to Al-Khatib from Kafar Souseh. P24 said that on her last day at Al-Khatib, she thinks it was June 9, 2012, she was put in a car. She was not blindfolded or bound. She was taken to Division 40 to the office of the person who interrogated her on her first day. She said she was even offered coffee, which she drank after her experiences [bad food] at the detention facilities. P24 told the court that she was then taken to another place where she had to wait before she was "handed over" to her father, however, without any of her personal belongings. She said she was sent home without her car or papers. P24 further explained that at this time, there were many checkpoints in Damascus, so it was difficult to move around freely without papers. She said she consequently returned after ten days to ask for her belongings. P24 said she started at Al-Khatib where she was told at the checkpoint at the gate to wait while they search for her things. They asked for her ID-card but she only had her mother's phone. P24 said she did not take the phone with her inside the building. She then went upstairs (not downstairs where the detainees are) and told the man at the desk who she was and that she wanted her personal belongings. P24 said she was told to wait on a broken sofa. People at Al-Khatib were friendly and greeted her. According to P24, she thought that the man at the desk knew her. He was sitting behind the desk when he got up to say hello, then sat on the sofa opposite to her. P24 explained that he asked her how he could help after he said "[t]hat's what happens when you're released". She said that sentence referred to her appearance: she was dressed normally but he meant that this is what people look like after they were released. According to P24, she told him that she wanted her personal belongings. The director of the prison, who is responsible for all cells, came with a file for signature. He asked how "can we help, Ms....?”. P24 explained that she left the room with the prison director, but did not find her belongings at Al-Khatib. She then went to Division 40, where she was handed her belongings.

Kerber asked P24 to describe the room in which she was with the two people. P24 described a square room with a window opposite to the door. She also said that there was a desk, two leather sofas and a picture of the president. She remembered that there were curtains but could not remember the color.

Kerber asked about a shelf or coat stand. P24 said she does not think that there was any of these items, however, there were many things in the room, including a TV.

Kerber said that P24 already drew a sketch of the room, which she can explain later. Kerber went on to ask P24 if she has any assumptions about the identity of the second person. P24 denied, saying that she cannot remember.

Kerber asked her to look at the defendants and wanted to know whether she recognizes one of them. P24 denied, saying she does not think so.

When Kerber asked her whether she needed a break, P24 denied. Raslan’s defense counsel intervened, requesting a break to get some fresh air.

***

[5-minute break]

***

The translators clarified that the window by the toilet in Al-Khatib, which P24 previously mentioned, was a light shaft.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner wanted to know more about the guard that P24 previously described, Abu Ghadab. The translator said Abu Ghadab can be translated as “father of anger”. P24 affirmed, adding that in this case “nomen est omen” and the name would perfectly describe the person.

Wiedner said this question might sound stupid but he wants to know how P24 knew that she was in Al-Khatib. P24 explained that she did not have to wear a blindfold, though she had to look down. She added that she saw the streets and knows the area very well.

Wiedner concluded that P24 knew before she was detained there that Al-Khatib is somewhere in that area. P24 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know how big the solitary cell was. P24 said it was 1x2 meters, but had a high ceiling.

Wiedner concluded that it was actually only the size of a bed, yet there were two people inside. P24 affirmed, adding that there was no bed though.

Wiedner clarified that he was only talking about the size to make a comparison. P24 said they slept on the floor. She slept on her side, while the other woman, who was pregnant slept on her back.

Wiedner asked P24 to describe the situation when the pregnant woman did not feel well. P24 said that one time, the pregnant woman had to use the toilet urgently. They knocked on the door, but no one answered, so they knocked several times. She said the woman was afraid when one of the guards came. Nonetheless, she was allowed to use the toilet. P24 was punished by not using the toilet for 24 hours. P24 said she does not know to which instance Wiedner is referring. She said another time, they heard the sound of torture and screams at night, coming from upstairs. It sounded as if one's head was hit against a wall or floor. That was the night when the girl collapsed. P24 said the screams reminded her [the pregnant woman] of her home, as her father used to beat her. She told P24 that she will never forget that noise.

Wiedner affirmed that P24 told the same story to the police. He recalled that she further told the police that the woman was released and able to give birth. P24 denied, explaining that she met the woman two weeks after her own release. After two weeks that P24 and the pregnant woman were detained together, the woman's belly got hard. They agreed to tell the guards that the child stopped moving, so she would be transferred to a hospital and examined. They then told the guards that the child was probably dead. The woman was transferred to Red Crescent Hospital where the doctors found that the child was still alive, and she was close to giving birth. They accelerated that process and a court transferred her to Adra Prison.

Wiedner wanted to know how the air in the solitary cell was, whether it was ok and enough oxygen. P24 laughed, saying that there was simply no air, not in any meaning of the word.

Wiedner concluded that the air was bad. P24 said there was no ventilation or anything like that.

Wiedner recalled that P24 told the BKA that the only place with fresh air was the toilet, as there was a tube to the outside, so one tried to breathe through that. He wanted to know whether that is correct. P24 affirmed, adding that one has to bear in mind that this toilet was used by countless people. There were rats and no towels. She explained that she and the pregnant woman are both afraid of rats. Whenever they went to the toilet, one of them was using the toilet while the other one put her feet in front of the whole from which the rats came. P24 said this would be the place where they breathed fresh air.

Wiedner wanted to know how many people were in the collective cell. P24 said there were no less than 25 people. She said she remembers that not all of them were able to sleep at the same time. They had to sleep in shifts.

Wiedner asked about dirt, rats, lice, and insects inside this cell. P24 explained that in the same cell, when used for men, there were even more people inside. The toilet in the cell was dirty. P24 told the court that the women offered to clean the toilet themselves. Three of them volunteered to clean it if they were given cleaning supplies. P24 further said that this was when she met the prison director, as they detected cockroaches in the cell. According to P24, there were at least 60 big cockroaches. When the women started screaming, the guards asked them if everything is fine. When P24 told them that nothing would be ok, the guards yelled at her. However, the director of the prison came to solve the cockroach issue. He sprayed some chemicals, which only caused more cockroaches to enter the cell. When he got a more effective spray, the women inside the cell almost suffocated while the guards laughed at them. P24 said the director himself had to leave the cell and threw up. He immediately ordered for all the women to be taken outside, until the dust was gone. She said the cockroaches were gone, however, when she came back to Al-Khatib there were cockroaches again.

Wiedner recalled that P24 said she was taken to Division 40 upon her arrest and asked her how she knew that she was at Division 40. He also asked her to tell a bit more about the Division personnel, how they were dressed, and if she knows anything about the tasks of Division 40. P24 said that Division 40 was familiar to them [her and her friends], especially in the context of the revolution. She said that “such divisions” usually were at remote locations, as she did not wear blindfolds on her way to the Division, she was able to see where they were going. She further explained that, despite a few exceptions, they [Division personnel] were usually dressed in civilian clothes. One person from Aleppo was wearing camouflage, but he did not look like he was in the military. He was not wearing a uniform, however, his clothes made him look angrier than someone in a regular uniform. P24 said she saw a similar person when she picked up her belongings. They looked like they belonged to a militia. She said the person who interrogated her at Division 40 had a big office with many arms, including many big rifles. It was a high-profile office. P24 said there was another person, Yamen, who accompanied her. According to P24, it was obvious that he [the man from Aleppo] was supposed to unofficially talk to the detainees. She said that other women spoke with him as will. He was apparently one of the main people, but his behavior towards people varied from person to person. P24 said that Yamen was relatively young; he was born in 1989. In addition to him, there were 3 or 4 additional people [when she was arrested at the office]. The one who knocked on the door and pointed a gun at her was wearing a jogging suit. This person was downstairs as well and opened the “guys” computers and questioned them. The person who was tortured next to her was tortured by a young man from Aleppo, who according to P24, was the most brutal one of them. She further explained that when she was walking down the hall in Division 40, people were beaten in the halls and when she was brought to the guy wearing the jogging suit, she heard screams from a man. When she asked where the guard was taking her, she was told not to ask any questions. P24 asked Wiedner what his question was.

Wiedner said everything is fine and recalled her explaining to the BKA that Division 40 was different, as some people wore camouflage and she assumes that some of them, who wore tight t-shirts, were Shabiha. Wiedner said she further told the BKA that she felt as if this [people wearing camouflage and tight t-shirts] would rather be a show to differentiate from others. P24 said that this is exactly what she meant when she spoke about uniforms and militias.

Wiedner recalled that P24 just mentioned that she saw one of them at a checkpoint. He cited from her interview with the BKA during which she said that “employees of Division 40 had several tasks, not only to arrest people”. P24 affirmed, adding that she saw one of them at a checkpoint in Damascus. He recognized her and did not look at her ID or search her car. After that, he was no longer at that checkpoint. She said that they were also strolling through the trendy neighborhoods, and it became apparent that they had a mission.

Wiedner wanted to know who led Division 40. P24 said it was Hafez Makhlof.

Wiedner asked her if she ever met him. P24 said she met him on the day she was released.

Wiedner asked P24 if it is alright for her to talk about her detention at Branch 251 rather than having a break. He went on to ask her whether it is correct that she was never beaten or mistreated. P24 said that is correct, adding that she was threatened during the interrogation.

Wiedner asked whether she was referring to the person who lashed the whip on the floor next to her. P24 affirmed.

Wiedner asked her whether she was simply lucky or if there might be reasons why she was not beaten. He told her that she only had to answer this question in a way that does not lead to conclusions about her and her family’s identity. P24 said she would rather not answer this question.

Wiedner wanted to know if P24 saw or heard how others were tortured. P24 said there was a “welcoming”. Regarding male detainees, this “welcoming” was in the area where the cells are located, a place where new detainees are received. She further explained that there are also “welcoming-beatings” which she heard from her solitary cell, but did not see them. She said she also saw beatings from a door gap in the collective cell. Other women with brothers, fathers, and husbands [in detention] had a breakdown when they heard the noises. She said that from her solitary cell she also heard screams and saw an elderly man who was forced to undress. When he told the guards that he was the same age as their fathers, they beat him. According to P24, the guards sometimes went into the men’s cell at night and started beating them. She further said that on her way to the toilet she could see bleeding feet of other detainees.

Wiedner said that P24 also explained to the BKA how other people were tortured when she said that there was a big gap under the door of her cell through which she could see incoming detainees. The guards knew about the gap, so the detainees were afraid to look through it. She said that people were beaten with sticks and elastic belts until they fell on the ground where they were then ‘properly’ tortured and beaten. She told the BKA that she only saw this once. P24 further told the BKA that she assumes that only men are beaten at Al-Khatib during “welcoming parties”. P24 affirmed, adding that women who were arrested at demonstrations were arrested and beaten at Division 40. There was no torture during interrogations [at Division 40], but they were beaten when they walked upstairs. P24 said they were told that everyone [the personnel] had the right to beat them [the detainees] at any time.

Wiedner asked whether that was at Division 40. P24 affirmed. Regarding Al-Khatib, she added that they never heard anything about women. She explained that in the area where the guards were working, people who were transferred or released were called by name at specific times. P24 said she could clearly hear the names from her cell, however, she never heard the name of a woman. She further recalled the time when she wanted to pick up her belongings and was sent to Al-Khatib by Division 40. She said she had to wait in a room to identify her belongings. During the situation, she spoke with a normal voice, but the guard yelled at her and told her to lower her voice, as they only hear voices of men, not women.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether this happened at Division 40 or Branch 251. P24 said it was at Branch 251.

Wiedner asked whether she could also hear men being tortured from the collective cell. P24 affirmed, saying “of course” she heard that.

Wiedner wanted to know whether this noise was non-stop, at certain times, and if so when and how many times. P24 said she heard it all the time.

Wiedner recalled that P24 was interrogated at Branch 251 and wanted to know where that [the interrogation room] was. He asked her if she had to go upstairs where the collective cells were or if it was further away. P24 said she was in a solitary cell and it [the interrogation room] was further away from that cell, however, closer to the collective cells.

Wiedner asked whether it was the same floor. P24 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know where she met the director of the prison when she returned [to pick up her belongings]. P24 explained that if one goes downstairs starting at the ground level, he gets to the cells. However, this time she was upstairs, at the first floor if she remembers correctly.

Wiedner said that P24 inspected the defendants extensively. He asked her whether she excludes the possibility of having met one of them, or if it would be possible that she met one of them but could not remember. P24 explained that her way of dealing with detention was to not resist, but to take action as much as possible. During her detention she did not look at anyone's face, regardless of whether she was blindfolded or not. She tries to understand why she cannot remember the face of the person at the office; she guesses that she looked down at the floor. According to P24 she cannot remember until this very day.

Wiedner recalled that P24 mentioned Anwar Raslan during her interview and said it [the person in the office] might have been him. He asked her why she thinks that and told her that she does not need to say who identified the person. P24 preferred not to answer.

Wiedner said there is a second defendant, Eyad Al-Gharib. He asked P24 if she knows him or can say anything about him. P24 denied.

Wiedner recalled that P24 told the BKA that people she knows and trusts only say good things about Eyad. P24 said that during [Al-Gharib's] detention, when his name went public, reactions amongst Syrians varied. Some said that he tried to help, however this would be a personal opinion. P24 added that she herself does not know anything about him and has no secure information.

***

[60 minutes break]

***

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P24 if either she or her family has close relations to the Syrian government, or if there was another reason why she was not treated that badly. Kerber added that she thinks this question does not harm P24, however, P24 can of course consult her counsel. P24 said it is a difficult question to answer, however, what she can say about her profile as a person is: as a woman she had her own car, which is a sign that she is rather well situated; she has a college degree; and she had a job back in Syria. These would all be indications that she was in the "best category" that enjoys some kind of special treatment.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Klinge wanted to talk about P24's arrest and the reasons for her arrest at the office. P24 said she does not know the exact reasons, however, it seemed as if she and her friends were being surveilled. P24 explained that the arrest happened on a Friday, and back then there was a curfew on Fridays which meant there was a heightened police presence. She said their meeting was not planned. They decided to meet on short notice due to the situation in Damascus. P24 added that they were a group of people who had access to a non-civilian place, which is suspicious. This is her suspicion of the reasons for arrest.

Klinge asked whether P24 and her friends were part of the civilian or military opposition or if their arrest was by mistake. P24 said they were certainly not members of the armed opposition. Actually, they were only a group of friends with common values, such as justice and equality. The aim of their meeting was to have a dialogue.

Klinge wanted to know whether P24 and her friends organized any events like demonstrations, etc. P24 said she can only speak for herself; she certainly had an attitude that opposed the regime at that time, but she did not attend any demonstrations.

Klinge asked how many people were arrested. P24 said five people plus herself.

Klinge asked about the number of men and women. P24 said she would rather not answer that question.

Klinge said it is fine for P24 to not answer the question and asked her to provide more details regarding the incidents when she spoke with Yamen at Division 40 and had to watch a person being tortured. P24 said she entered a room opposite to an office of the person who interrogated her. A young man whom she knew was lying on the floor behind her on the right side. "They" kicked and beat him and used electroshocks. P24 further explained that she was asked about her relationship to this man regarding "certain events".

Klinge wanted to know how long the torture lasted. P24 said she cannot say precisely but guesses that it took five to ten minutes. She said she saw the same person hours after that incident on her way to the toilet. He was lying on the floor, half dead. She said he opened his eyes and smiled as a sign that he was still alive. However, the marks of fist beatings on his face told her that he was dead.

Klinge recalled that P24 said she spoke to Yamen on her way from Division 40 to Branch 251 and that Yamen accompanied her to the basement of Branch 251. P24 said that Yamen was from Division 40, so she did not see him at Branch 251. She remembered that when they were waiting together in the office, he spoke to another officer about torture instruments. They spoke about which tools they had and which ones they needed to purchase. P24 said after that she was alone with him. That was when he told her that she was transferred to the place where she was before.

Klinge asked P24 whether there were blankets or other things in the solitary cell at Branch 251. P24 affirmed that there were blankets, which they put on the floor or used to cover themselves. She recalled that it was very cold, even though it was May. She added that all they got were blankets and a bottle of water from the toilet.

Klinge wanted to know more about the condition of the blankets, whether they were clean or not. P24 denied, saying that they were full of lice. She said she had lice everywhere from these brown blankets. She further added that during the 24 days she was in this cell, the blankets were not changed.

Klinge recalled P24 talking about a lack of sleep in the collective cells and asked her to tell the court how many collective cells she saw in the area. P24 guessed that there were four or five cells.

Klinge asked her to estimate the number of detainees in this area. P24 said that she heard screams from the male collective cells because the men yelled at each other when one of them could not sit down or sleep. She said that one time, guards entered the cell, however, that was actually not possible as there were so many people in the cell. P24 estimated that 100-120 people were in this cell, adding that they were not even able to sit down, all of them had to stand.

Klinge wanted to know whether P24 knows anything about torture methods used at Branch 251 or if she heard anything about that. P24 said that there were lashes at Branch 251. She remembered that people were beaten on their feet with lashes. She added that the detainees had to stand up while they were beaten on their feet and when they fell down, their entire body was beaten. She said people were tortured in the room above her, but she has no idea which tools were used there.

Klinge asked P24 whether she saw corpses or executions at Branch 251. P24 denied, adding that, though she does not remember how she found out, the pregnant women with whom she was detained requested a shower after certain days of detention. She was told that it was no longer possible to use the showers. There were certain indications that there was some kind of special situation in the shower room. P24 said there was no information more specific than that. She further told the court that the pregnant woman was arrested with her husband. When P24 asked her about her husband, the woman told her that when she asked about him, she was told that she should forget about him. P24 said the women acted as if he was dead.

Klinge recalled that P24 told the BKA that she knows nothing certain about executions and corpses but assumes that the situation for male detainees was probably horrible. P24 said all she can talk about is what she saw on the floor [in the hallway on the way to the toilet]. She saw men's yellow and red feet. The men had to stand up, facing the wall. P24 said she saw signs of torture on their feet and backs. She concluded that they were most likely tortured.

Klinge further recalled that the French police asked P24 about the relationship between Alawites and Sunnis within the regime. He wanted to know whether P24 remembers these questions. P24 denied.

Klinge asked P24 what she can tell the court about the representation of Alawites and Sunnis at the regime level. P24 wanted to know if Klinge was talking about the government. Klinge affirmed. P24 said it would only be her personal view, but that there are positions which are clearly allocated since Al-Assad [took power]. Sometimes they are allocated according to religion, sometimes according to party membership. She said that certain ministries go to the socialist parties and others to the Baath party. P24 added that she was talking about people with certain functions, representing the party. For example, the Premier Minister would always be a Sunni and high positions within the security forces would always be given to Alawites. She said that in her personal view, high administrative positions are always given to Sunnis, while high positions regarding security matters are always given to Alawites.

Klinge recalled that P24 told the French police that she cannot say that the regime would only consist of Alawites. She told the French police that the premier and president of the parliament were Sunni. Overall, there were around 60% Sunnis. P24 said that is correct.

Klinge asked about Ali Mamlouk's confession. P24 said she does not know.

Prosecutor Polz recalled that P24 was transferred from a solitary cell to a collective cell with around 20-25 women and asked P24 whether any of the women showed signs of torture or mistreatment. P24 said she already told the court that women were mistreated at Division 40. They showed signs of that on their feet and hips.

Polz wanted to know if P24's comments were based on her own conclusions, or if she knows that for sure. P24 said she cannot say with complete certainty.

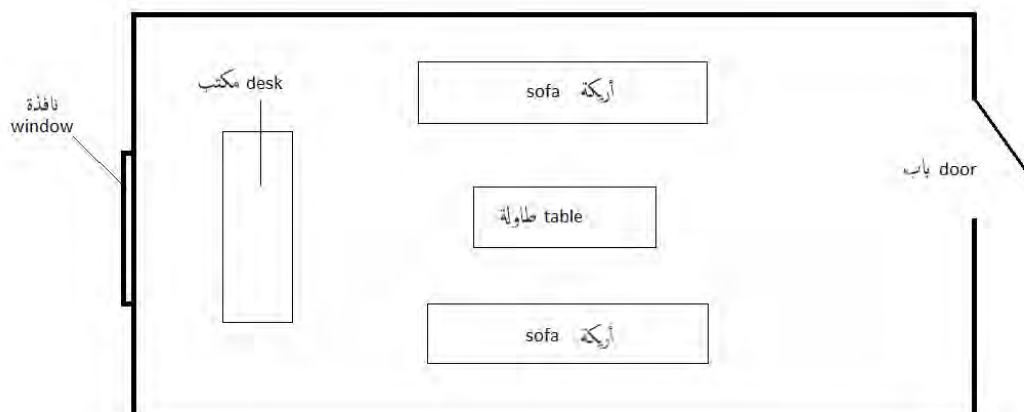

Polz asked P24 whether she spoke about that [torture or mistreatment] with anyone. P24 said that in the collective cell, the women were very careful about what they said and what they did not say. They were always afraid that "someone could be present" [one of the guards among the detainees]. That is why none of them said what they had to endure. P24 said women from Division 40 were shocked. She added that she was in the collective cell for two days before she was transferred to Kafar Souseh. She said she was so exhausted when she returned from there that she barely communicated.

Polz asked P24 whether she is a victim of sexual violence. P24 denied that she is a victim of sexual violence. She added that she did not hear anything explicit about that from others. However, there were two women: one of them wanted to smoke and showed her breasts to one of the guards to get a cigarette. The other one apparently had an addiction. She was only there for one night and kept walking up and down the room. She then spoke to one of the guards, so he could get her something. P24 said she could not hear what they said. P24 further said that there was a woman with her underage daughter. The woman told the daughter that she knows how to handle the guards.

Polz wanted to know whether there were more minors at Al-Khatib. P24 said that this one was a minor for sure, but she did not see other minors.

Polz recalled that P24 told the court that she had to undress and squat and that she had issues with her joints. P24 said theoretically, this practice was used to frisk people. In practice however, it was used to make people feel humiliated. She added that it [the act] was only viewed from that angle [of humiliation].

As the prosecution had no more questions, Presiding Judge Kerber referred back to the sketch which P24 created during her police interview. She said that P24's name and handwriting is redacted and asked her to describe the sketch.

P24 said that this was the room she was in when she picked up her belongings [at Branch 251]. She described the room's interior.

Prosecutor Klinge asked her about the color of the sofas. P24 said they were either brown or black, adding that she cannot remember precisely, but is sure that they were dark.

Defense Counsels' Questioning

Raslan's defense counsel Fratzky recalled that P24 mentioned a Sweida dialect and asked her in which region this dialect is common. P24 said it is spoken in Sweida, which is a governorate in the South of Syria.

Fratzky wanted to know more about the ethnicity of the people living in Sweida and who spoke this dialect. P24 said that most people there are Druze. However, the dialect is spoken regardless of the religious group, but dependent of the region.

Fratzky further recalled that P24 told the court that she was at Branch 251 to pick up her belongings and asked her about the name of the director of the prison whom she mentioned. P24 said she does not know his name but he was there during the cockroach incident. She described him as a small man.

Fratzky wanted to know whether it was the same man who was there when she picked up her belongings. P24 said this man entered the office of the person to whom she was talking about her things. The man who entered the office requested signatures from the person that was already there.

Fratzky asked P24 how she knew that he was the director of the prison. P24 said he was the one in charge during the cockroach incident. The guards told the detainees that the director would come.

Fratzky wanted to know whether the name Tawfiq Younes sounds familiar to P24. P24 said everyone knows this name.

Fratzky asked P24 whether she has any information on him. P24 denied, adding that some people simply become legends.

Fratzky further asked P24 whether he [Tawfiq Younes] had anything to do with Al-Khatib. P24 said she does not know.

When P24 was dismissed. She thanked the court.

Al-Gharib's defense counsel asked the judges about Inspector Knappmann's appearance in court. Judge Wiedner replied that, as usual with witnesses from abroad, the relevant BKA inspector will testify in court. Schuster wanted to know when that will happen and if he and his colleague will still have a chance to question him [considering that the court announced that it will issue a judgment for Al-Gharib by the end of February 2021]. Presiding Judge Kerber told Schuster that she is aware of the difficulties surrounding the witness's schedule and assured him that he will be able to question Knappmann sometime early next year.

Prosecutor's statement on the submission of the Plaintiff Counsels Kroker and Scharmer regarding a change in legal reference.

Prosecutor Klinge read out the prosecution's statement responding to the submission of Plaintiff Counsels Kroker and Scharmer regarding the inclusion of sexual violence as a crime against humanity to the charges, as well as the translation of certain documents [the following is a summary of the main aspects of the statement as noted by the Trial Monitor]:

- 1) The submission barely differs from the indictment. The indictment already found the existence of a systematic and widespread attack against the Syrian population. The criminal acts of sexual violence cited in the plaintiff counsels' submission were also included in the indictment.
- 2) If the judges share the plaintiff counsels' evaluation of the cited acts of sexual violence, the acts would merely qualify as one act under §7(1) No. 6 VStGB, in addition to the acts under §7(1) VStGB which are already included in the indictment.
- 3) Introducing as evidence the documents mentioned in the plaintiff counsels' submission, as well as the respective translations, would not serve the economy of the trial or due process interests. The judges already have knowledge of the facts that requires evaluation.
- 4) Sexual violence is already included in the indictment and was confirmed by several witnesses. The judges therefore already have enough evidence to judge this matter.
- 5) The documents mentioned in the plaintiff counsels' submission do not provide further information regarding a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population.
- 6) The evidentiary value of the documents is furthermore limited as they are solely reports.

Presiding Judge Kerber canceled the session scheduled for the following day.

The proceedings adjourned at 1:50pm.

Next hearings will take place on January 6, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 23

Hearing dates of January 6 and 7, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summary / Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 53 – January 6, 2021

- P25, a 30-year-old, who was detained in Al-Khatib and the state security branch, testified about how security forces stormed his village and indiscriminately arrested people they claimed participated in demonstrations. P25 was a student and had never attended a demonstration. The witness described Abu Ghadab as a tall man whom all the detainees feared. When asked if he recognized anyone from the defense, P25 said Eyad A. looked familiar, but it was Raslan that P25 said he recognized and knew. He said Raslan was not Abu Ghadab, but that he was confident that he knew Raslan. P25 admitted that he had seen both defendants' pictures online. P25 described a child who was ten to thirteen years old who was detained in his cell in Al-Khatib and suffering from a bullet lodged in his leg/foot. P25 was transferred to the state security branch where he became ill and was forced to stand under cold water as punishment. He provided three sketches showing the layout of Al-Khatib and the interrogation room.

Trial Day 54 – January 7, 2021

- Christian Knappmann, a 37-year-old police officer at the Meckenheim Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA), answered questions regarding P14 (SJAC Trial Report 12). P14 was questioned by the BKA in 2019. Knappmann and a colleague used satellite imaging to discover the coordinates of the Al-Qutayfa القطفة cemetery. The satellite imagery from 2011-2012 was missing and the earliest the BKA could find dated to 2014. P14 testified that there were about 1.7 million people buried in mass grave trenches in the cemetery. Knappman could not evaluate this assertion as the depth of the trenches is unknown and it would depend on how the bodies were buried.

Trial Day 53 – January 6, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30 a.m. There were two spectators and two individuals from the media present.

Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker was not in attendance. Deputy Plaintiff Counsel Charlotte Foerster-Baldenius appeared for Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammad.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our court monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Witness P25 sat at the witness panel accompanied by his attorney Andreas Schulz.

Judge Kerber asked whether P25 was going to take off his mask. P25 confirmed. Instructions were read to P25 and he was informed about his rights as a witness.

Testimony of P25, [Name redacted]

Judge Kerber asked P25 for his name. P25 said [name redacted]. Judge Kerber then asked P25 for his age. P25 replied, 30-years-old.

Judge Kerber asked where P25 lives. Schulz said that would rather not share that information.

Judge Kerber asked P25 about his job. P25 said that he is a salesman.

Judge Kerber asked P25 if he is related to the accused by blood or marriage. P25 said no, he is not.

Judge Kerber said that P25 was detained in Syria and asked him to explain his experience and discuss when and how he was detained. P25 said in the beginning, he was at home in [information redacted] area. One time, there was a storming of the village and the security forces wanted to take [detain] all of the people. P25 was a student and was not afraid to go to [pass through] the checkpoint. People were telling him that he could escape if they [e.g. the security forces] came to take [detain] him. P25 told them that he had nothing to be afraid of and that he passes through/by a hundred checkpoints every day. When the storming came to the house, they, unfortunately, took [detained] P25. The checkpoint guard asked him what his name was and he gave the guard his ID card. The guard told him that he was wanted. P25's family is big with around 2000 to 3000 individuals. He has a common name and everyone gives their children the name, [name redacted]. They put P25 on the bus and he sat in the last seat in the back. They flipped their [the detainees'] t-shirts over their heads, so the detainees could not see anything. The security forces took the detainees to the detention center and started to beat them. The forces were military people and one person hit P25 with a helmet until he lost consciousness. A person (one of P25's neighbors) told him to get up and woke him up.

P25 continued describing that they [the security forces] took the detainees to a place where they stopped for a bit and then proceeded to Al-Khatib. Many things happened, but there are many things that P25 said he does not like to remember. After that, they got off [the bus] in Al-Khatib and stood for a while as the forces tortured them. P25 remembers that they remained standing and their hands were hurting. There was a person who was P25's neighbor and he was a مسؤول [roughly translated as "a man who has responsibilities" or "Big official"] in the party [It is common to call Al-Ba'th party, just the "party"] and despite that, they detained him and were torturing him. They took the detainees inside, downstairs ("I remember stairs"). As P25 was going downstairs, someone hit him with an intense slap on the face. The detainees had to take everything off. One had to stand up and sit down [squat] to check if they were hiding anything and then they were taken downstairs. P25 does not remember in which room he and the others were detained. He wore his clothes inside and his legs were extended, as he did not know the rules. They were in a room with many people, P25 cannot forget it. There was a small toilet with no door. His legs were extended and someone called Abu Ghadab أبو غناب ("I do not know his real name") entered. He asked P25 why he was extending his legs and told him to take off his t-shirt and he whipped P25 ("I do not know") [This last quote was directed to the translator, saying "I do not know what you call this"]. Then the detainees waited for the interrogations. They used to hear sounds of torturing and people screaming “leave me!” and “for God's sake!” The nature of the prison was terrifying. The detainees could not differentiate day from night. They heard sounds of torture and people were coming inside to us [entering the prison]. At that time, an injured [The word P25 used “تَمَصَّ او يَلْبِصُ او ب” can be commonly used to refer to “shot.” He used the same term throughout the testimony] child entered (he was injured by the army). They [P25 meant “the child’s family”, but “they” was mistranslated as the Intelligence Services. This was not explained until the end.] wanted to take him to Tripoli [for treatment]. The child’s leg was injured and he was crying. They used to enter [the cell] and torture him. There was a 70-year-old man who had to take a pill for blood pressure. They used to hit his face with it [fling the pill at his face].

P25 was taken to the interrogation upstairs (using the stairs). P25, first, did not remember if his t-shirt was flipped over his head or if it was a blindfold. But then he remembered that it was a blindfold: he used to be able to see from underneath it. He entered a room where there was a table and behind it was an interrogator. To the right, someone was sitting with a stick and was doing this with his hand [P25 imitated when one holds a stick with one hand and hit his other hand with it lightly in a threatening manner as if they will strike someone]. He [most likely the interrogator] began by saying that P25 should confess. P25 did nothing. He does not remember what happened, but he [maybe the one with the stick] hit P25 on his leg/foot. To this day, it still hurts P25 and there is still a mark. After that, P25 confessed to something he did not do (demonstrations). He did not participate in demonstrations; he was a student. But P25 said he does not forget a tall man who was torturing and insulting him and the detainees with the worst insults. His name was Abu Ghadab and Memati (a character in a Turkish series. This is what people told P25, as he did not watch the series). When the prison guards used to come (there were two and they alternated), and when it was Abu Ghadab, P25 and the other detainees had a lot of fear/were fearful. They had to run to the wall (P25 did not remember if they had to take off [their clothes]). After that P25 stayed [there] for ten days (He said his memory is distorted, but previously said it was more than 10 days). The detainees did not differentiate day from night and when a new detainee came, they used to ask him about the time.

One day the prison guard came and called their names and P25 and the other detainees thought that they would be released. The guards took P25 and the others to a bus. Their hands were tied with plastic wires and they were taken to another prison: state security. P25 and the other detainees were fearful and horrified because they did not know anything about this branch. When they entered [the branch], the guards shaved the detainees’ heads, had them take off their clothes, and the detainees had to take a shower with very cold water. As a result, P25 had a severe flu and was unable to eat and drink. He knocked on the door [maybe to ask for medicine/help], and the guard came in [to the cell] and hit P25 on his abdomen and told him to take off his clothes and stand under cold water. P25 had a short break and then had to stand again under the cold water. To P25, it was easier than Al-Khatib. There were the same events: there was a single interrogation and the interrogator was good [The interrogator did not beat P25]. P25 stated that he forgot to say that in Al-Khatib, they had to sign blank papers (P25 corrected himself, “I do not remember if it was in Al-Khatib or the state security”). After the detention in the state security prison (P25 did not remember how long he stayed there), P25 and the other detainees were taken to court. They were put in jail with people who killed and stole. Before that, they took the detainees to a court and then took them on a bus to this [jail with criminals]. The judge was good. He told P25, “You are not one of them” and asked him if he participated in demonstrations. P25 told him no. The judge asked P25 why and he told him he did not demonstrate because he was fearful. They stamped P25's hand. He was released and went back home.

Judge Kerber asked P25 when he was detained. P25 said he remembers a big incident where someone (he did not want to say who) was injured. It was February 4th.

Judge Kerber asked P25 for the year. P25 replied that it was 2012.

Judge Kerber asked P25 how he knew that it was Al-Khatib. P25 said he did not know, but the people who were [detained] before and after him said that the process was the same: they take you to Al-Khatib, then state security. P25 knew that when he was released (that one goes automatically to Al-Khatib, then state security).

Judge Kerber asked P25 how he knew it was state security. P25 said that he is a bit confused/his mind is distorted. He remembers that there was a door that they went through/entered (He used to study French in Al-Mazzeah الجامعة [which is located close to Kafar Souseh, where the state security is located]). When they entered the state security branch, they saw many things. It was composed of squares/yards and they took the detainees inside with the bus. After he was released, P25 asked about it and the people said that it is Al-Khatib then state security [one is detained first in Al-Khatib then transferred to state security].

Judge Kerber asked P25 to describe Abu Ghadab. P25 replied that he cannot forget him. Abu Ghadab was tall and thin. His accent was not from Damascus (perhaps from Deir ez-Zor دير الزور or that area).

Judge Kerber asked P25 approximately how tall Abu Ghadab was. P25 said he was his height or taller. P25 was sitting and looking upwards and therefore, he might have felt that he was tall.

Judge Kerber asked P25 to look to his right and asked if he could recognize anybody from the accused. P25 said that the person in the back [Eyad A.] – “his face is familiar, but...” [“hmm”]. P25 said, “I saw this man [Raslan]: I know [recognize] his [facial] features, but he is not Abu Ghadab.” They had shown P25 photos during the police questioning, so, he told them that he had seen the one who is sitting in the front [Raslan]. P25 said that, as a Muslim, he cannot say something that he did not see. Honestly, when he returned home, P25 saw photos on the internet. P25 searched [researched] and knew that he chose right, but as a name...

Judge Kerber interrupted asking what was right. P25 said the right thing is that it is not him, but he is in P25's mind for years. But it was not him who hit P25 the first time.

Judge Kerber asked if he was not Abu Ghadab. P25 said he thinks that it is not him. Abu Ghadab's hair is black and he cannot forget his height. But this person [Raslan] is familiar.

Judge Kerber asked P25 about the child that they wanted to take to Tripoli. P25 said he was detained and they put a child whom he did not know with P25 and the detainees. He [the child] was crying a lot and P25 asked what was wrong with him. He said that a bullet was inside the bone in his leg/foot. He said that he was injured and wanted to go to Tripoli and they caught him on the way. They wanted to punish P25 because he sympathized with the child. The boy was crying and the guards used to enter/come inside [the cell] (P25 does not know if they beat him), but they used to tell him that if he did not shut up, then they would slaughter him.

Judge Kerber asked how old the child was. P25 said 10 to 12, maybe 13.

Judge Kerber asked P25 if he saw dead bodies in detention. P25 said he does not remember that he saw any in prison, but there was a case of someone who offered [members of the] Free Syrian Army tea. They took photos of him and brought him to the detainees. They tortured him so severely that his t-shirt got stuck in his flesh and P25 and the detainees were not able to get the t-shirt off him. He was crying from [because of] the pain. Not to mention the extensive sounds of torture.

Judge Kerber asked if P25 wanted a break. P25 replied, "all good now" [no].

Judge Wiedner recalled that P25 said that the child was shot in demonstrations and asked how P25 knew that. P25 said that at that time, there were demonstrations. He did not ask him, but the conclusion/deduction was such when one enters like that.

Judge Kerber asked if that was an assumption. P25 said that at that time, there were only demonstrations. He does not remember whether he asked him or not (P25 forgot with time). P25 said he does not remember all the details.

Judge Wiedner assured P25 that it is understandable as it was eight years ago and asked if they also knew that the child was injured. P25 said he did not understand the question.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 if the prison guards knew about the child's injury. P25 said yes, they knew. He does not remember if he saw it, but the child said that the bullet was in the bone and P25 remembers that when he used to move his leg/foot, he cried a lot. At that time, the child's older brother used to pay money and come inside [P25 did not elaborate if this was into the cell or the Branch] to see him [the child] and then go out. When P25 got out of Al-Khatib, he [the child] remained in Al-Khatib.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 knew what happened with the child. P25 said no, he got out before him. But he remembers that they [the child's family] wanted to smuggle him to Tripoli, but the smuggler was the one who handed him in. P25 said he does not know [but wonders] if the smuggler was from the police.

Judge Wiedner asked if the child received help. P25 said they did not offer help, only if someone had blood pressure or something, but no one offered him help. P25 does not remember if it was the child or an elderly person, but he remembers that they were stinging/piercing him with the needle [giving the injection violently]. P25 remembers the injection and that they used to toss/flip the pills.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 himself asked for help for his injury. P25 said no, he did not, because he was afraid to ask. The fear outweighed the pain.

Judge Wiedner asked what P25 feared. P25 answered that Abu Ghadab was terrifying and tortured people. P25 did not know what he would do. Before the prison [detention], people were talking about electricity and fingernails extraction.

Judge Wiedner said that many people were detained and asked P25 if there was a reason for the detention. P25 said that people used to do many demonstrations in their village. One time there were demonstrations for freedom and they [the regime/security forces] wanted to quell the demonstrations. They did not want anyone to express opinions. And P25 was detained for no reason. He used to go to the university and they used to take his ID card and do a check and there was nothing against P25.

Judge Wiedner asked if the detentions were indiscriminate or if it was for certain people. P25 said yes, it was indiscriminate.

Judge Wiedner said that P25 mentioned an incident that happened by the police. P25 said their house is big. The police entered and his little brother had a money box [piggy bank]. One of the police officers hid it or took it (many things happened that P25 said he does not remember), but he does not forget the way they entered and the bus.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P25 said that they were military people with uniforms. P25 confirmed. They were military uniforms, but in Al-Khatib, they were wearing civilian clothes [were plain-clothed] like the detainees.

Judge Wiedner asked about the trip on the bus to the branch and asked what happened and how long it lasted. P25 said while they were sitting on the bus, there was a military person who had a knife or a rifle with a bayonet and hit him [a person] on his leg, but he was a [P25 used same as the word mentioned earlier above “مسؤول,” meaning something like a big official/figure] in the [Al-Ba'ath] party in the village. P25 was hit with the helmet on his back and then on his head.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 lost consciousness. P25 said yes and his neighbor woke him up. He remembers that it was very painful being hit with metal on his head.

Judge Wiedner quoted from the transcript of P25's police questioning saying, “We were taken in the bus for an hour and were tortured. A person next to me was stabbed with a knife and I was hit with a helmet. They were punching and kicking us.” Judge Wiedner asked P25 if that was correct. P25 said yes it matched what he had said, but the one with the knife was not next to him, but maybe behind him. P25 does not remember if he was on the floor or behind him. But he [the military person] asked him “Who hit [stabbed] you?” He [the person that was stabbed] told him “you.” He [the military person] told him “Careful what you say.” He had to say that he wounded himself.

Judge Wiedner asked if other people were hit before going to the cell. P25 said, yes. He remembers that they were beating people and transporting boxes of arms/weapons (they sounded different from food boxes). He does not remember if they hit him while he was standing, but they slapped him once while he was going downstairs. However, among them was a mosque Imam, he was also beaten. Also, the chief of the [Al-Ba'ath] party [the same individual P25 mentioned earlier] was slapped once. P25 remembers that because it was something big [a big deal/ surprising] to the detainees. He was surprised because he supposed that they should be respected by the country [government].

Judge Wiedner asked if all the people on the bus were beaten and taken inside. P25 said he does not remember. He was blindfolded (it was prohibited to look around), but he remembers that all of them got off/went downstairs [The same term has both meanings and it was unclear which one P25 meant].

Judge Wiedner recalled that P25 said that there were more than 40 people in the square/yard. P25 said he does not remember and he was not able to see. However, on the bus, there were many, maybe more than 40. Perhaps after a while, he forgot some details. He used to remember how long he was detained, but now he has forgotten.

Judge Wiedner stated that P25 was transported to Al-Khatib on February 4, 2012. Judge Wiedner asked P25 how long he stayed in detention. P25 said he remembers that it was more than 10 days. Maybe 15, but he cannot remember.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 where he was taken, for example, upstairs, downstairs. P25 said the first time [when P25 arrived at the branch] they took him downstairs. When they interrogated P25, they took him upstairs.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 was frisked. P25 confirmed. They had to take off their clothes. He remembers that one person, who was brought in with them, had cannabis with him. They told him that he was a respectful man who does not participate in demonstrations and they took him to another criminal police station.

Judge Wiedner quoted the police questioning's transcript reiterating what P25 said. P25 said they do not want people to think/ponder. He was working to pay for his college. People were poor. They wanted people to stay ignorant and not ask about politics.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P25 said that it was a basement and asked if it was underground. P25 answered that he went down some stairs.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 to describe the cell. P25 said when he entered the room [cell], perhaps it was 3x3m or 3x4m (he did not measure it). The toilet was in the corner and had no door. P25 had no place and sat near the toilet. There were no means/tools for cleaning nor toilet paper. Behind the cell, there was a white light, and P25 thought that was the prison kitchen. He knew because one of the detainees used to go with them to help [e.g. in serving food]. They offered the detainee some meals. One was eating to live [just to stay alive].

Judge Wiedner asked about the food. P25 said there was a lot of jam, bitter olives (from the trees), sometimes cauliflower with bulgur [The translator did not know the name P25 mentioned as it was in Syrian dialect. Therefore, P25 explained] It is like broccoli but not broccoli. Also, each person got an egg and stale Arabic bread.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 if he was able to differentiate day from night. P25 said no he could not differentiate.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 how he used to sleep. P25 answered that there was no place to sleep. Sometimes, he slept on his side, then on somebody's leg or abdomen. Some people stayed sitting up.

Judge Wiedner asked about the air. P25 said there was absolutely none.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 if he noticed any injuries and about the condition of the detainees after the interrogations. P25 said, of course, he does not remember if it was before the interrogation or after it, but he saw tortured people. Normally/Naturally, it was after the interrogation. They ask the person and if he does not answer, they torture him.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 if he spoke with other detainees about torture. P25 said they talked about general matters such as, “where are you from?” and things like that. P25 remembers a Bedouin who was a shepherd. He was herding his sheep and the army shot them [the sheep] and brought him in. He was shouting “the sheep are gone” and we [P25 and other detainees] told him to drink [some water], but he cried and said, “What happened to me?”.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 heard sounds of torture from the basement. P25 said he used to hear, but he did not know if it was from the interrogation rooms or from other places, because there was a hatch under the door.

Judge Wiedner asked how often P25 heard the sounds, for example, all the day long. P25 said he does not remember if it was all day long.

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that P25 had said that the interrogation was not in the basement. P25 said after they took him out of the place where he was [the cell], they took him upstairs (steps/stairs). He does not know which floor, the first floor, or another one. But he went up the stairs, not into the basement.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 heard screams of torture when he was upstairs. P25 said he remembers a child who was with him and P25 recognized him. His name was [name redacted]. He also was young and cried a lot and was afraid. P25 entered [the interrogation room] and heard his voice.

Judge Wiedner asked if he heard something else. P25 said he does not remember. He would say if he remembered anything.

Judge Wiedner asked about the age of the child. P25 said he was under 15. P25 remembers him. [name redacted] and his father passed away. And now during the incidents [revolution], he [name redacted], his mother, and a girl [his sister] died. His brother is detained and his [other?] brother’s leg was amputated. A bomb fell on them.

Judge Wiedner asked if it is correct that it was not in prison. P25 confirmed.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 talked with him [the child]. P25 said he saw him crying but did not talk with him, because there were many people from their family. And there was also another one P25 knows, but he does not want to mention his name. His mother worries about him.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 how many people were present during his interrogation. P25 said maybe two or three, but [he was sure that] there was one behind the desk and one on the sofa.

Judge Wiedner asked if one of them was high-ranking. P25 said he could not know, even if he would have seen. He did not serve [in the military]. He just speculates that the one behind the table was a [P25 once again used the same Arabic word, as before مسؤول. Here, it could be translated as “highly regarded”/“high official”].

Judge Wiedner asked if there were orders/instructions for beatings. P25 said he does not remember that he [the interrogator] told him [the other person] to beat P25. Maybe he said [something] and P25 forgot it.

Judge Wiedner asked about the consequences of the beating on the feet. P25 said his foot was always hurting and turned blue. He does not remember how it was when he was released, but it was a little painful.

Judge Wiedner asked if P25 has long-term symptoms due to an injury. P25 said that he did not understand. Judge Wiedner repeated the question. P25 said he does not know if this is because of it [the injury/the beating], but when it is cold, it hurts him. When he walks, people ask him “Why are you limping like that?”. But P25 said he does not know if it is because of his leg/foot or something else.

Judge Wiedner recalled that during the police questioning P25 said that he had a fracture. P25 answered that after he was released from prison, he visited a doctor from [information redacted], but he does not remember if somebody told him if it was a fracture or a hairline fracture [incomplete fracture]. At that time, he did not feel much, because there were always storming/raids and they were fleeing/on the run.

Judge Wiedner recalled that P25 said that he was whipped another time. P25 answered that he was whipped the moment he entered the prison. The second time was when Abu Ghadab entered and the detainees did not take off their clothes quickly and he beat P25 and everybody like a flock/herd of sheep. There are also details that P25 is trying to forget.

Judge Wiedner asked if other detainees talked about other torturing methods. P25 said he does not remember, but mainly whipping. He saw only one person who was tortured a lot (the one who offered tea) and the elderly person from [name redacted] family from [information redacted] whose relative is in the parliament and did not help him. The one in the parliament is called [name redacted].

Judge Wiedner recalled that during the police questioning P25 said that some of the detainees talked about electricity and hot water, but P25 neither saw nor experienced that. P25 said this was correct, but mainly it was whipping. Similar to the water [P25 heard about it], but did not see it.

Judge Wiedner asked P25 if he suffers from psychological consequences to this day. P25 said now, he has a psychological phobia from what happened. Occasionally, his hands shiver/quiver when he sees people fighting. Perhaps it is fear or anxiety. But before prison, he did not have [complain from] anything.

Judge Wiedner said that P25 gave an example in the police questioning that he shivered/quivered when the police asked him for his ID card. P25 said maybe it was like that before, but now it is better. They are not like Syria’s police. This is a law-abiding country not like Syria, where the strong prey on the weak.

***10-minute-break***

Judge Wiedner asked P25 about the treatment in the state security branch, about prison guards, food, etc. P25 said the treatment from the prison guards and the food were both better than in Al-Khatib. P25 remembers that in the state security, they used to give each detainee a loaf of bread or two. There was more psychological relief/comfort.

Judge Wiedner said that P25 talked about collective punishment during the police questioning. P25 said there was collective punishment in state security. The detainees were not supposed to speak with each other and if they did, there would be collective punishment.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened during the collective punishment. P25 said he does remember he was beaten, but mainly, they had to stay standing (someone uttered two or three words and they beat him a lot). Another time because P25 got sick and asked for a pill. He was tortured using cold water.

Judge Wiedner asked what happened then. P25 said when he was sick, he could not eat for three days. He remembers that through the hatch there was an air conditioner directed on the detainees. It was snowing/freezing outside and there was a cat that P25 used to see [Most likely he meant “through the window”]. P25 was more hopeful there than in Al-Khatib, because he was able to see an animal.

Judge Kerber showed the sketches P25 drew during the police questioning.

P25 said that the sketch showed Al-Khatib.

P25 said that there was a grid that the detainees put their shoes on. Above it was a light.

Judge Kerber asked what P25 drew on the left side of the sketch. P25 said this was the cell door and the window [hatch] where the detainees used to get food.

P25 said that was the interrogation room in Al-Khatib. P25 said that there was a person with a stick sitting on the sofa. P25 said that he does not remember if he already mentioned it, but that person, Abu Ghadab, tortured him. There [Marked on the sketch with *] was [name redacted], whom P25 mentioned earlier [the name was written on the sketch].

Judge Kerber asked if there was another sofa. P25 answered that he only remembers one sofa, but he did not see one [P25 may have meant that he did not look around or that he could not see well because of the blindfold].

Judge Kerber asked if there was a small table in front of the sofa. P25 said he does not remember the details. P25 remarked that perhaps the last time [in the last questioning] he had mentioned it but he does not remember now.

Questioning by Senior Prosecutor Klinge

Klinge asked where [information redacted] is located. P25 said it is in eastern Ghouta لغواطى شرقية bordering [information redacted]. The Damascus International Airport is not far away. P25 used to see the planes landing from his house.

Klinge asked how many people were in the cell. P25 said he did not count them, but more than 30 to 40. Maybe 50 to 60, but there were many people. The detainees could not sleep, as there were three people on top of each other. P25 said he has a problem with numbers. He sometimes forgets his wife's birthday.

Klinge asked if there were insects and lice in the cell. P25 said he could not see. It was so cold.

Klinge asked P25 to describe some of the detainees' injuries. P25 said he talked about the child who had a leg injury, as well as a man who had been tortured that they [the personnel] brought in on his back. The detainees suffered insults as well.

Klinge asked how often detainees were taken outside the cell and brought back inside. P25 said he does not remember, but they used to take people daily and some of them were tortured. He added that they took the detainees out[side] [transferred them] because it got very crowded as they brought people from Al-Zabadani الزبداني. They took the detainees out[side] and brought the new detainees in. Of course, not all of them were taken out[side], but approximately 15 people.

Klinge asked what happened next. P25 said he does not know. He asked them and they said they are from Al-Zabadani and they took them out[side] the same day. P25 and the detainees did not ask them, because they knew it was because of demonstrations [the cause of their detention].

Klinge clarified that he meant what happened next to P25. P25 said sometime in the afternoon, they read out a list of names and told the detainees that they would be going home. P25 and the detainees felt reassured. The guards tied the detainees [their hands] with plastic wires and put them on the bus to the state security. On the bus, the detainees were beaten and tortured.

Klinge asked if P25 saw or heard about sexual abuse in Al-Khatib. P25 said he did not see it but maybe he heard about it.

Klinge asked what the worst thing was in Al-Khatib. P25 said the worst thing was the psychological pressure from the prison guards and that he and the other detainees did not know their fate.

Klinge asked whether the screams of torture P25 heard affected him. P25 said it became a psychological state/condition. Whenever there was a storming of his village, he got very scared. In the beginning, P25 used to say "I am not afraid, because I did nothing", but his view changed.

Polz recalled that P25 said that it was cold in February and asked P25 if there were blankets or a heating system. P25 said he does not remember the guards giving the detainees blankets and in the state security there was a freezing [system] [The air conditioners he mentioned earlier] not heating/a radiator/a heater.

Polz asked if they asked for blankets. P25 said he does not remember. P25 and the other detainees had so much fear/were very fearful.

Polz asked if the floor was made of tiles or wood. P25 said he does not remember, but normally in Syria they do not have wooden floors, but rather tiles.

Oehmichen said that P25 talked about the child who wanted to get help in Tripoli and asked if P25 was talking about the one in Lebanon. P25 said he has nothing to do with that matter. He did not help him [the child]. P25 did not know why he wanted to go to Tripoli.

Oehmichen clarified that she meant that there were two cities with the name Tripoli. P25 answered, Lebanon. [The translator explained to the court that in Arabic, Tripoli refers to the city in Lebanon, as default. The city in Libya is called "Tripoli of the west" طرابلس الغرب].

The witness was dismissed.

Klinge read out a statement that the prosecution requested that the trial of Eyad A. be severed.

Linke requested that statement in writing.

Klinge said that in response to Schuster's previous statement, there is no need for a handwriting expert.

Polz said that there is no need to summon the witness(es) the defense requested.

***20-minute-break***

Part of the Human Rights Watch report "We've Never Seen Such Horror" was read out loud.

The proceedings were adjourned at 1:30 p.m.

The next trial will be on January 7, 2021 at 9:30 a.m.

Trial Day 54 – January 07, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30. There were two spectators and two individuals from the media present.

Judge Kerber said that there would not be any reading out of reports today, because there is still some time until the end of February.

The witness was Christian Knappmann, a 37-year-old police officer at the Meckenheim Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA).

Judge Kerber asked the witness if he was willing to remove the face-mask so that they hear him better. Knappmann said that he would keep the face-mask on and asked the court to let him know if his voice was not clear. [Knappmann kept the mask on].

The hearing was concerning the testimony of Z30/07/19 [P14 from trial days 30 and 31, SJAC Trial Report 12].

Knappmann said that P14 was questioned about mass graves in July/August 2019 and did not identify specific satellite images from Google maps. In the investigation, they used images from Google, Apple as well as additional help from the German Aerospace Center (DLR).

Judge Kerber asked how they got the coordinations. Knappmann said that his colleague, Alexander Frey, helped him in the investigation.

Judge Kerber showed a satellite image of what appeared to be a cemetery. Knappmann said that it was from Google maps.

Judge Kerber showed two more satellite images that were zoomed-in on Al-Qutayfa <sup>القوتية</sup> on the lines.

Judge Kerber showed the last image. Knappmann said that the image shows an object that they assumed to be an excavator.

[The images showed parallel, straight lines]

Judge Kerber asked how long the lines were. Knappmann said they were at least 100 meters. He explained that they could chronologically track changes in the images. The surface area became larger from 2014 to 2019. One can notice that there were trenches in areas that became surrounded by walls. A line measured 120 x 3 or 4 meters.

Böcker asked if there were images from 2011 and 2012. Knappmann said there were no known images from that period. The first image was from 2014. Knappman said that there is a gap in time in which they have no images.

Schuster asked how many corpses are alleged to be buried there. Knappmann said that P14 said the number could be one to 1.7 million.

Schuster asked if that number of corpses would fit in the trenches found in the investigation. Knappmann answered that they could not define the burial area as it depends on the method of the burial [if the corpses were aligned or thrown indiscriminately]. The length and the width could be measured, but the depth is unknown.

Schuster asked if the witness could confirm the number given by P14. Knappmann said that he could not assert whether the number one to 1.7 million would be correct or not.

Scharmer asked whether the BKA looked around the area near these coordinates as well. Knappmann said that they only made a professional evaluation of the exact coordinates, but they have a whole investigation into mass graves during the structural investigation. They did not find anything in the immediate vicinity of the coordinates.

The witness was dismissed.

The proceedings were adjourned at 10:00 a.m.

The next trial day will be on January 13, 2021 at 9:30 a.m.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 24

Hearing Dates: January 13 & 14, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 55 – January 13, 2021

P26 was allowed to conceal personal information due to concerns about his family's safety and testified about twice being detained at Al-Khatib. He told the court about constant torture, overcrowded cells, as well as devastating nutrition and hygienic conditions. As none of the parties had any further questions for him, the judges continued to read out the translation of an HRW report.

Trial Day 56 – January 14, 2021

The judges continued to read out the last parts of the HRW report, before Alexander Frey, a criminal inspector with the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) testified on exhibits in Al-Gharib's case. Pictures of Al-Gharib's ID card for the General Intelligence Directorate were shown in court. Al-Gharib's statement, which was already read out in court on trial day 51 was officially added to the case file as evidence and read out again.

Day 55 of Trial – January 13, 2021

The hearing began ten minutes late at 9:40 due to technical issues and one of the judges being stuck in traffic. Five spectators and two journalists were present in the public gallery.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Peer Stolle appeared as a replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker and Charlotte Foerster-Baldenuis appeared instead of Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed.

Testimony of P26

P26 was accompanied by his counsel, Antonia von der Behrens, and a friend, who took a seat in the public gallery. Presiding Judge Kerber mentioned that Witness Counsel von der Behrens submitted a request to the court on January 8, 2021, requesting to allow her client to conceal personal information unveiling his identity, due to concerns about his family's safety. Judge Kerber read out the submission which stated that P26 wishes to conceal information about his identity as there are reasonable concerns about assaults against his family still living in Syria. There have been assaults in the past: P26's father was summoned twice and questioned about the whereabouts of his son, P26. The same happened to one of P26's siblings, who consequently fled Syria. The submission further detailed that since P26 left Syria, he has had no contact with his family so as not to pose any risk to them.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

<sup>2</sup> No one requested access to translation. As announced last year, Presiding Judge Kerber did not explicitly ask the public about requesting access to translation.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker said he did not receive such a submission and asked the court to send such things in due course to all the parties. He added that, for now, there was no issue about not receiving that particular submission.

None of the parties had any objections to P26's request. Presiding Judge Kerber announced that in accordance with §68 (3) StPO, the court allows P26 to conceal information leading to unveiling his identity as there are reasonable concerns to assume that life, limb, and liberty of his family still living in Syria, would be in danger. Kerber added that these concerns were repeatedly raised by previous witnesses. Instructions were read out to P26 and he was informed about his rights as a witness. P26 said he is not related to the defendants, neither by birth nor by marriage.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber started her questioning by recalling that P26 was heard three times by the French and German police. She added that he still needs to repeat everything relating to his confrontation with the regime in Syria and his imprisonments. Kerber asked P26 to just start telling his story. P26 said that he and his friends were a group of activists. They were peacefully active against the Syrian regime. He was first arrested on [information redacted], on 29 May Street in Damascus.

Judge Kerber interrupted, asking about the year of his first detention. P26 said it was in 2011.

Judge Kerber said there is no reason for P26 to be nervous, he should just keep on talking. P26 continued by saying that he was arrested with several other people, though he did not remember the exact number. He said they were put in a minivan, where they were beaten and tortured. According to P26, they were beaten without a break from the moment they entered the minivan until they arrived at Division 40. He said the beating was very painful, he was hit on his head several times and beaten all over his back, up to his head. P26 said that one of the guards in the van had to sit on him to beat another person. The guard told this person that he should let him know once the nail is stuck into his back. P26 said after that, the guard continued to beat P26, first on his head, then in his face. P26 recalled that several people hit him until they arrived at the first Branch, Division 40. According to P26, his first detention [station before being transferred] only lasted a couple of hours. The guards first requested the ID cards of all the detainees. They had to stand in line in a long corridor, blindfolded and with their hands tied behind their back. P26 further said that one after the other was called into a room with three people. There was constant movement. P26 said that [in this room] a person put his foot on P26's head and asked him about his name, though he already had his ID card. The person further asked for information and used electroshocks without any reason, P26 added. The electroshocks were attached to P26's foot and switched on for around one minute repeatedly. They asked him several questions and used the electroshocks several times before they grabbed P26 and threw him back into the corridor. P26 said he had to stand there, facing the wall, until they [guards] were done with everyone [new detainees]. P26 said he was then transferred to Al-Khatib. P26 further told the court that the entrance and exit to/from Division 40 was a staircase where the guards beat the detainees while they had to go up- or downstairs. They used all things available to them to beat the detainees, including fists and batons. P26 said they had to go downstairs [at Division 40]. According to P26, there was a woman, a fellow detainee, with them. According to P26, the group was then taken to Al-Khatib in a minivan, where beatings and arbitrary torture continued. When they arrived at Al-Khatib, they had to go downstairs a few steps and stand in a small area where they were frisked, while also beaten. He added that, no matter what one did, one was constantly beaten. He said even the people who cut their cable-strap handcuffs, used the scissors to beat or stab them. P26 said that everyone's belongings were taken away and meticulously noted in a protocol. After that, P26 recalled, they were brought into a cell. P26 added that if he remembers correctly, it was cell number 13. He further explained that the cell had high ceilings. P26 recalled that his hands were still tied when he was brought to the cell and he had to look down on the floor. The guard who took him there put P26's head up and hit it against a wall. P26 said he was thrown into the cell. That was when he first put his head up and looked around, but he then became unconscious. P26 explained that the other detainees in the cell put him aside and carried him to the toilet. P26 clarified that the toilet was inside the cell and that there was actually no proper toilet but a hole in the floor. P26 said that was where his fellow inmates carried him. Apparently, he was in the same condition [unconscious] for one or two nights. P26 said he was then taken to interrogation. He said he still remembers a 17-year-old boy who had a screw in his back and then was beaten on this screw in the bus [to Division 40]. He said that the same boy was beaten right behind him while he, himself, was interrogated. According to P26, the interrogation was very superficial and he was constantly beaten on his back with a whip. However, he did not know how hard the boy behind him was beaten, only that he was beaten. P26 said he denied having participated in a demonstration and told the interrogator that he only worked in a nearby office. P26 said all the other questions were superficial and he was beaten again. The interrogator left and when he came back, P26 was returned to the cell. P26 added that during and after this interrogation, he did not sign anything nor did he provide his fingerprints. P26 further explained that he was in the cell for around seven days, while many people from other regions [not Damascus] were put in this cell as well. He added that they were actually carried into the cell, with blood all over their bodies. According to P26, one of them was unconscious for three to four days. P26 said this person did not even know his own name. He further added that people of different ages were in the cell. One detainee was epileptic and had constant attacks, however, no one [from the guards] helped him. P26 said that after one week, he was transferred to the State Security Branch [285]. He asked the judges whether he should just continue.

Judge Kerber said that before that, she had one detailed question and asked P26 about the boy, whether it was the same person on the bus and during the interrogation. P26 affirmed, adding that they were around 16 people on the bus [minivan]. P26 further explained that he said opposite to the aisle in the middle of the bus. To get to the boy, one of the guards had to step on P26.

Judge Kerber wanted to know how exactly the boy was beaten and how the screw was used. P26 said that he did not see the screw but he [a guard] told the boy that he should let him know once it is stuck in his back.

Kerber wanted to clarify whether a screw or nail was used. P26 said he heard them talk about a screw.

Kerber said she thought [from the transcripts of P26's police hearings] that a stick with nail applications was used. P26 affirmed that they had a baton with nails on it on the bus. He added that they also had whips, plastic batons, electroshocks, and some kind of belt. P26 assumed that the boy was beaten with the stick with the nail applications.

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking whether the situation with the screw took place at a later point or in the bus as well. P26 said this situation took place on the bus, adding that he remembered that the boy behind him [during the interrogation] was the same boy from the bus.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether P26 was then released after his first detention. P26 denied, explaining that he was transferred to State Security [Branch 285]. He said that he met people there who had been at the same demonstration and arrested at the same time. However, he did not see the boy there, adding that he did not know what happened to the boy.

Judge Kerber asked what happened next to P26. P26 said that they did not do anything on the bus [guards did not beat the detainees], However, they were blindfolded and their hands were tied behind their backs. When they arrived at State Security [285], they received a “relatively normal” welcome. According to P26, their personal information was registered outside in some kind of back yard where an officer was sitting at a desk. One detainee after the other had to go to the desk where their information was registered along with their personal items. P26 said after that they were beaten “a bit” and put in a cell. He added that these were the “welcome-beatings”. P26 said he thinks that the cell was called the “Northern Cell” and was relatively small, however, overcrowded as more than 60 people were in this cell. He said there were many people who were never interrogated and nothing happened with them. P26 further explained that he himself was interrogated after one week. He was asked “weird” questions. For example, they wanted to know how much he paid for his house. He said it was strange that he was not beaten during this interrogation. P26 said they also asked him about his monthly salary, but nothing about demonstrations. He further explained that every time one returned to the cell after an interrogation, the guards entered the cell and all detainees had to stand up, facing the wall. The guards then picked one of the detainees and beat him up. P26 added that the same happened every time there was an argument in the cell or some kind of noise. According to P26, the guards sometimes entered the cell without any reason. One time they decided to beat a 70-year-old man. The detainee next to P26 said that they should beat him instead of the old man. P26 said, eventually, both of them were beaten. P26 explained that the beating took place in a manner that the detainee had to lay down and his feet were held up using a rifle. One was then beaten on the soles of his feet with a piece of wood. P26 further recalled that during his time at the State Security [Branch 285], there were executions. One time around noon, their cell was vibrating. Guards stormed the cell, shouting that everyone has to lay down and be quiet. P26 said they all obliged and did not make a noise. They then got their lunch. P26 explained that there was a hole, covered with a sheet of metal. This sheet of metal was ripped away and attached afterwards [after they got their lunch through that hole]. P26 explained that everything went back to normal after that incident. P26 further explained that one night, they could not sleep as many new detained arrived in the cell next to theirs and they were beaten all night long.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked where all that happened. P26 said it was at State Security [Branch 285].

Judge Kerber asked for another name for State Security. P26 said it is a Branch of the General Intelligence Directorate (GID) in Kafar Souseh. He further added that based on the different screams, he guessed that at least 45 people were in the corridor right in front of P26’s cell. P26 said that he and his inmates watched through the gap underneath the door of their cell. One of his inmates said that the new detainees were from Homs.

Kerber wanted to know whether Al-Khatib or Kafar Souseh was worse. P26 said regarding his first experience [detention], Al-Khatib was worse. With regards to his second experience, they were both the same. P26 added that in terms of beatings they were both equally bad.

Kerber asked P26 to tell the court about the end of his first detention and his second detention. P26 said in total he was in detention for 21 days at Al-Khatib and Kafar Souseh before he was released due to an amnesty. P26 corrected himself, saying that he was detained 28 days in total.

Kerber asked whether he then went home and when he was detained for the second time. P26 said his second arrest was on April 5, 2012. He was arrested together with a group of people. He recalled that they were at an office to work on a project when the office was stormed. P26 said the people storming the office carried rifles and searched the office.

Kerber wanted to know whether P26 was there when the office was stormed. P26 said he just arrived when the office was stormed, adding that one of them [armed men] stood by the door when P26 arrived. According to P26, the people storming the office carried arms. The office had the form of an “L” and people sat in the corner and P26 sat next to them. According to P26, there was another office next door, however, it was closed. P26 further explained that a woman from his group spoke to one of the armed men and asked him what they wanted from them. The men insisted on searching the office, so one of P26’s group tried to hide different things. P26 said this person threw laptops out of the window. P26 himself took an iPad, put it in a bag, and hid the bag in the office. P26 explained that the men at first did not find anything in the office, however, the head of the unit came back and looked outside the window where he saw the items on the street. One of the men went downstairs to collect the items and eventually, they also found the iPad. P26 explained that he said the iPad would belong to him when they found it, so he had to enter his password. At first, P26 refused, but as they continued to threaten him (although he was not beaten), he entered the password. P26 said that at the same time, messages from his friend popped up, showing pictures and short clips from demonstrations. According to P26, they then decided to arrest him, put his sweatshirt over his head, tied his hands, and put him in a car. P26 said they then came back with all of the devices and everyone from his group. They then went to Division 40, just as during his first arrest. P26 explained that this time, however, the Division was quite empty. He remembered that the first time, it was very crowded and the corridors were packed with people who were beaten up. According to P26, there were only two or three officers at the division at his second arrest. One could neither hear nor see anything. P26 said the officers asked about the devices and items even before they registered their personal information. P26 further explained that he was in a room with a Colonel, at least that was how the soldier addressed the person, according to P26. P26 went on to tell the court that the officers at Division 40 had all of the devices and items from the office and asked him and his friends questions about it. P26 said, even though they already had everything, they continued to ask questions. One after the other was interrogated. P26 said that there was a soldier behind him who hit him on his upper thigh with his knee. P26 said at some point, he fell down due to all the beating, the same person then picked him up again. P26 said he did not remember what the Colonel did, but he was picked up and questioned again. P26 explained that he gave a false answer before he was taken downstairs where he was told to enter the password for his Facebook account. P26 explained that usually if one of his group was arrested, the others would delete that person’s account. He further said that there were three people in the basement. The soldiers constantly hit them [P26 and his friends], as their backs were naked. P26 explained that the soldiers hit them and then poured alcohol on the injuries. He and his friend were then taken to different rooms and P26 was questioned about his passwords again. P26 said that he could not access the account, as it was already deleted. However, the interrogator did not believe him and “continued”. His soles were tied to a rifle and he had to endure Falaqa [beatings on the soles of one’s feet]. P26 said after that, he was taken to a space underneath the staircase together with some people from his group. He explained that they could not sleep as the space was so small. The next morning, the same procedure started again, however, they [the guards] were not allowed to touch anyone from P26's group. P26 said he did not know why this was the case. After that, his group, except for one woman, was taken to Al-Khatib. When they arrived there, they had to go downstairs and it was immediately clear, the people there did not know why P26 and his group were there. P26 explained that they were neither blindfolded nor were their hands tied, they just had to sit and wait. According to P26, one of the guards asked them for their names, however, he did not take any notes. The hallway in which they had to wait was relatively small and there were people against whom military punishment was imposed. P26 said these people were there for around five days. He mentioned again that the people at Al-Khatib did not know why he and his friends were there and that the interrogation was rather quick, however, he and two other friends were not questioned at all. P26 said that they were lectured to differentiate between capitalism and liberalism and it was obvious that they did not have a clue why he and his group were there. P26 said it was somehow funny, as they met one of the guys who "welcomed" them at Division 40. He said that he does not feel well if he cannot beat anyone, nevertheless, P26 and his friends were treated "normally" for five days, as P26 told the court.

Judge Kerber wanted to clarify whether P26 and his friend stayed in the corridor for five days. P26 affirmed.

Judge Kerber further wanted to know whether P26 spoke to the people who faced military punishment. P26 did not understand the question and Judge Kerber clarified that she was referring to the people in the hallway that P26 just mentioned. P26 explained that they were not necessarily employees from Al-Khatib or Division 40, but officers who received some kind of punishment. Two of them were soldiers, one was a policeman from a police office in Damascus and another one was an employee of Division 40.

Kerber asked whether P26 spoke with them. P26 said he only spoke to the one from Division 40.

Kerber wanted to know whether that person knew who the other people were. P26 said that none of them were blindfolded or had their hands tied, so they could talk to each other.

Kerber wanted to know what these people did and what kind of punishment they got. She added that she is interested to know more about what happened inside the regime. P26 said they did not talk about details. The policeman was punished with 14 days imprisonment as he stayed away from work without providing an excuse. P26 said he does not know anything about the others. One of the men did not want to talk at all. In general, P26 said, they were all very cautious about what to say as they did not know who was listening.

Judge Kerber asked what happened next after they spent 5 days in this corridor. P26 said that one of his friends was close to being released, he went to pick up his belongings and leave. However, they could not find his belongings and eventually realized where he and his friends came from and requested their belongings from Division 40. P26 said that is when they found out why he and his friends were there [at Al-Khatib]. P26 explained that consequently, all of them had to stay. The officers asked everyone about which items belonged to them and then put the group in different cells. P26 said at first, he was in a cell together with two or three other people from his group. The cell they were in looked like a transformed canteen with a high zinc ceiling. According to P26, the cell also had a window showing to the office of the director of the prison. Further, there were three interrogation rooms and the cell actually did not look like a cell. P26 added that there was porcelain and more than 100 or even 200 people in the cell. P26 said that the toilet was broken, which led to a funny incident. He recalled that one of the detainees had to use the toilet but when he sat on it, the toilet broke underneath him and he cut his butt. According to P26 that was not the funny part, however, the toilet was then replaced and after that, the prison director opened the window and gave a speech about how great the government and Bashar Al-Assad is and how ungrateful the detainees were. P26 said it was a very bizarre situation. P26 further explained that his first interrogation did not take long. He was only asked about his name before he had to wait outside [of the room where he was interrogated] before he was taken to a different cell. The cell was relatively small, around 4x5 meters, however, 65 people were inside that cell. P26 said the cell looked like a former office with bricked-up windows. It was very tight and one could not even put both feet on the floor, so they had to stand on one foot and change to the other from time to time. He added that they could only sleep while standing on one foot and this situation lasted for three or four days. P26 summarized that it was a reason why some of the people in that cell went crazy.

Judge Kerber asked P26 to explain what he meant by “went crazy”. P26 said he can provide two examples. The first incident involves a 19 or 20 year-old man who suddenly started to yell at P26. P26 said this person yelled ‘I was not with you in that picture, look at my phone’. P26 said he did not understand what the person was talking about, as he said things without any clear context. According to P26 the person also said that ‘I did not betray you’. P26 said this situation lasted for two days and the person cursed a lot. The second incident involved a man who pretended to drive around inside the cell. That person acted as if he was taking passengers somewhere, saying ‘No, we cannot go that way. There is a checkpoint, we have to turn around’.

Judge Kerber asked whether that person pretended to be a taxi driver. P26 affirmed, adding that it was a very surreal situation.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether the people eventually turned normal again. P26 affirmed, explaining that usually people turned normal, however, if one told them what happened, they could not remember anything. P26 said such conditions sometimes lasted for two days. He further said that the detainees made bets amongst each other about who is the next one to go crazy. P26 said that one time he had high fever (40°C) and he did not know what was going on, that was when people told him that he is next to go crazy. According to P26, he apparently said he wants to go home, during his fever. He added that he does not know whether that is true, he could only remember that he had high fever and was lying in someone’s lap and this person also tried to cool his forehead. P26 went on to explain that he was in this cell for around two weeks before he was taken to interrogation. The interrogation took place on the first or second floor, according to P26, he only went up a couple of steps, so it must have been on the first floor [ground floor as P26 said that the cells were in the basement]. P26 further said that he was not blindfolded when he entered a room that looked like a kitchen (there was a sink in the room). He was then brought to the interrogation room. P26 said that one could hear screams from time to time. He assumed that some people were beaten, others not. P26 said he was blindfolded when he entered the interrogation room. He had to kneel and his hands were tied behind his neck. According to P26, he was asked for his name and whenever he denied anything, he was either whipped, kicked or beaten on his head, however, no electroshocks were used. P26 said he had to leave his fingerprint on a document without knowing what the document said before he was taken back to the cell downstairs. According to P26, a 14-year-old boy was brought to their cell, after he returned from his own interrogation. P26 said it was normal that one was beaten when taken to a cell. However, the boy was thrown inside the cell and then taken outside after 30 minutes. P26 explained that the boy was repeatedly taken and beaten every 30 minutes for two days. When he asked the boy why they did that to him, the boy said that when he arrived at the Branch, his hands were tied behind his back and he accidentally knocked over the inspector's chair, that was the reason why he was repeatedly beaten. P26 said that every time the boy returned to the cell, his feet were bleeding. P26 tried to cool his feet and comfort him. The boy told P26 that they were looking for his brother, that was why he was initially interrogated. P26 said that one day, the boy disappeared. According to P26, after 21 to 23 days, he [P26] was taken to State Security [Branch 285] again. He said that his group was split up when they arrived there and only one person from his group was with him when they took P26 aside and asked him for his name. P26 said he was then taken to a solitary cell measuring 2x3m with around 20 people inside. He added that, just like at Al-Khatib, there was an incontinent person in the cell, who constantly urinated at the other detainees. P26 said he was released after a week.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked P26, adding that she only had a few more questions. P26 said what he just told the court was a brief summary of his experience in detention.

Judge Kerber said his summary would be sufficient and wanted to know whether he saw the interrogator during his second interrogation at Al-Khatib. P26 denied.

Kerber asked him the same question regarding his first interrogation. P26 again denied.

Kerber wanted to know whether he saw one of the interrogators at all. P26 denied.

Kerber asked whether the detainees had any nicknames for certain guards. P26 affirmed, adding that one guard from Homs was called Ali. Another one, who used to pick up the boy every 30 minutes, was called Abu Ghadab. P26 added that Abu Ghadab was known as the most brutal guard.

Kerber wanted to know whether P26 knows about any other torture methods at Al-Khatib, such as Doulab [tire], German chair, or hanging people by their arms with their feet ten centimeters above the floor. Kerber added that the court heard about such methods from other people who were detained at Al-Khatib. P26 said he did not see the German chair, however, he witnessed the tire in his cell. P26 said the guards, Abu Ghadab and another guard, entered the cell and randomly started beating people. That was when they also forced a detainee to squeeze into the tire. P26 said that was when he witnessed Doulab, adding that he heard many screams from different people.

Kerber asked if he saw a device to hang people from the ceiling. P26 denied.

Kerber wanted to know more about medical treatment at Branch 251. P26 said that there was some kind of medical treatment, however, they did not receive adequate treatment. He added that when someone needed anything, they just got what was there in terms of medicine.

Kerber asked P26 if he received any treatment when he had a fever. P26 said he got an injection.

Kerber asked him whether he knew what substance they injected him with. P26 denied.

***

[20 minute break]

***

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner thanked P26 for his detailed descriptions and said he would try to ask his questions chronologically, focusing on Al-Khatib and his interrogations there. Wiedner first asked P26 about the reason for his first arrest and wanted to know what P26 witnessed at demonstrations in 2011, regarding arrests and shooting. P26 said his first arrest was during a demonstration on 29 May Street. He said these demonstrations were called 'net-demonstrations'. P26 explained that he was part of a group that organized demonstrations at a cinema in Damascus. They started shouting their slogans when security forces came and started beating up people. P26 explained that usually, whenever male demonstrators were arrested, the women told the security forces that these men were their brother, companion etc. P26 further said that on this day, he first ran away but when he heard shots, he knew that the girls would try to snatch the boys from the security forces, so he came back. According to P26, everyone was beaten and they [security forces] were armed. P26 recalled that one had a gun, another one a rifle. That was when everyone at the demonstration was arrested.

Wiedner recalled that P26 mentioned that people died at demonstrations and asked him whether he ever witnessed such an incident himself. P26 affirmed. Wiedner asked him to provide more detail. P26 said that once they had to take one of them [his corpse] to his family by car. P26 explained that they saw a red dot from a sniper on that person's body, so everyone ran away. Shortly after, the person was dead. According to P26 that was during Ramadan.

Wiedner asked about the year that incident happened. P26 said it was after his first arrest and prior to his second arrest, however, he did not remember the exact date, only that they carried his corpse in the back of a car to the person's family.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P26 saw corpses during his detention. P26 denied, adding that he saw many people in "very, very bad condition", however, none of them were dead.

Wiedner recalled that P26 mentioned detainees that were covered in blood and asked P26 to describe the condition of fellow detainees at Al-Khatib. P26 explained that, as he already mentioned, he was in a big old cell during his first detention at Al-Khatib. More than a hundred people were in this cell, simply lying there. P26 described that there was enough space for some to sit down (explaining why some were lying on the floor). He further added that one Friday, new detainees were brought to the cell. One of them was covered in blood, his clothes were ripped. According to P26, he was still conscious and simply put in the cell. P26 further told the court about a detainee who suffered epileptic attacks, but the guards refused to provide medicine. According to P26, another detainee was physically present, but unable to move. P26 did not know the reason for his condition. P26 concluded that the overall condition of the detainees was very bad. Some had signs of beatings on their face and were covered in blood. P26 added that the food was very bad and the detainees had to fight about the food, as there were sometimes only five small pots for everyone in the cell. The detainees gathered at the door and one of them received the pots to distribute them among everyone. They had to break everything into small pieces in order for everyone to get at least some food. P26 summarized that this was their lunch. For breakfast, they got olives, around 3 to 4 per person. From time to time they also got some jam and a small piece of bread. P26 explained that the bread itself was of normal size but since they had to share it, each person only received a tiny piece.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the nutritional situation was the same for both of P26's detentions at Al-Khatib or if one of them was worse. P26 said they were both equally bad.

Wiedner asked whether P26 lost weight. P26 affirmed, adding that he sometimes wishes that he would still have the same weight.<sup>3</sup>

Wiedner wanted to know whether the condition of the people that P26 just mentioned worsened or if they received medical treatment. P26 said until he left the cell, their condition stayed the same and they did not receive any treatment.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether this was during P26's first detention at Al-Khatib. P26 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P26 how long he had to stay at Al-Khatib for his first detention. P26 said he had to stay around one week for his first detention and around 23 days for his second detention.

Wiedner wanted to know how P26 knew that he was at Al-Khatib. P26 said that the people who were already there told him and the second time, he already knew the place.

Wiedner recalled that P26 mentioned that he fell unconscious at the beginning of his first detention and wanted to know if this was due to the beating or other reasons. P26 affirmed that his unconsciousness was due to beatings, adding that he was continuously beaten from his arrest until he was put in the cell. According to P26, the beating was most intense on the bus. Later at the Branch and in the Cell, they were "only beaten occasionally."

Wiedner further recalled that P26 told the French police that his head was smashed against a wall. P26 explained that he was beaten on his head multiple times on the bus. When he was taken to the cell, he was also beaten on his head and the guard smashed his head against the wall. P26 said he stumbled into the cell and when he raised his head, he fell unconscious.

Wiedner wanted to know more about P26's first interrogation during his first detention: What did the interrogator want to know, what was the aim of the interrogation? P26 said he was asked why he was there and what he did at the demonstration. According to P26, he stuck to his answer that he only wanted to buy a sandwich in a nearby shop, despite continuous beating. P26 said he was then taken away and did not have to sign anything nor leave his fingerprint.

Wiedner asked if the interrogation took place in the basement or somewhere else. P21 said that the place of interrogation during his first detention was in the basement, adding that he was never upstairs. He further explained that the room was completely dark and had a strong smell of blood and alcohol (disinfectant). P26 said he heard many screams from people who were beaten harshly. The room was not too far away from the entrance of another room which was on his way back to the cell.

Wiedner recalled that P26 told the court about an interrogation where a 17-year-old boy was beaten behind him and wanted to know whether that was the same situation. P26 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether P26 was interrogated on another occasion during his first detention. P26 denied, explaining that he was only interrogated once during his first detention.

Wiedner referred to P26's interrogation during his second detention and asked him where the interrogation took place. Wiedner added that P26 should first describe the situation before the sketches that he created during his police hearings will be shown and discussed in court. P26 said that during his second detention he was also only interrogated once. He added that he was actually interrogated twice, however, the first interrogation was only about superficial questions while the second interrogation was an “actual interrogation”. P26 went on to explain that the prison cells were on one side of the basement with stairs leading up to where the interrogation rooms were. He was taken upstairs (he assumed it was the first floor [ground floor]) where the detainees first had to wait in some kind of kitchen. They were all standing around a sink, which was in the middle of the room, with their hands tied behind their back. P26 said they were then taken into the interrogation room. The room had a window on the left side and the interrogator was sitting opposite to the window at a desk. According to P26, there were also two sofas in front of which he had to kneel on the floor. He added that there were one or two people behind him, considering the screams, he assumed it was one person.

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: P26 seemed to feel comfortable and often used visual language (imitating the sound of the rifles of the security forces) and used his hands to explain three-dimensional aspects of certain situations. The comment on how weight cannot be considered as trivializing the nutritional situation at Al-Khatib but rather as illustrating the judges how thin he was back then.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P26 noticed that the beatings were ordered. P26 denied, explaining that he was always beaten as a reaction to his answers.

Wiedner asked whether P26 noticed other interrogations taking place, whether he heard screams. P26 said he heard many screams from torture when they were in the kitchen.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the screams came from the same room or if there was more than one room for interrogations. P26 said that when he was interrogated on the first floor [ground floor] he only heard screams coming from one room. He recalled that it was in the evening and several officers were present, but the light was switched off. P26 said he assumed that only the interrogators were there and that only one interrogation took place at that time. During his first detention, he could hear screams coming from all directions when he was in the cell, adding that he even heard female voices. At that time [first detention] one could also hear when the new detainees arrived and were beaten. There was a small gap under the door of the cell where one could see people being beaten in the corridor. P26 said they constantly hear people being beaten.

Wiedner asked how many times P26 heard torture when he was in the cell. Was it only once or twice a day or for longer periods? P26 said it was never at a certain time but daily.

Wiedner asked P26 about “the result” and wanted to know whether it was burdening him to hear such things. P26 said he was in constant fear that he might be the next to be in this position. He was constantly worried about how long he would be alive, how long he might have to stay in prison, what they knew about him, and when they might call his name. He said the fear was always present.

Wiedner asked P26 to look to his right [defendants’ bench] and tell the court whether he recognizes someone. P26 said he did not recognize anyone.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the court will now visually inspect one of the sketches P26 created during his police hearings.

[the following sketches are recreations of P26’s sketches based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear and see in court]

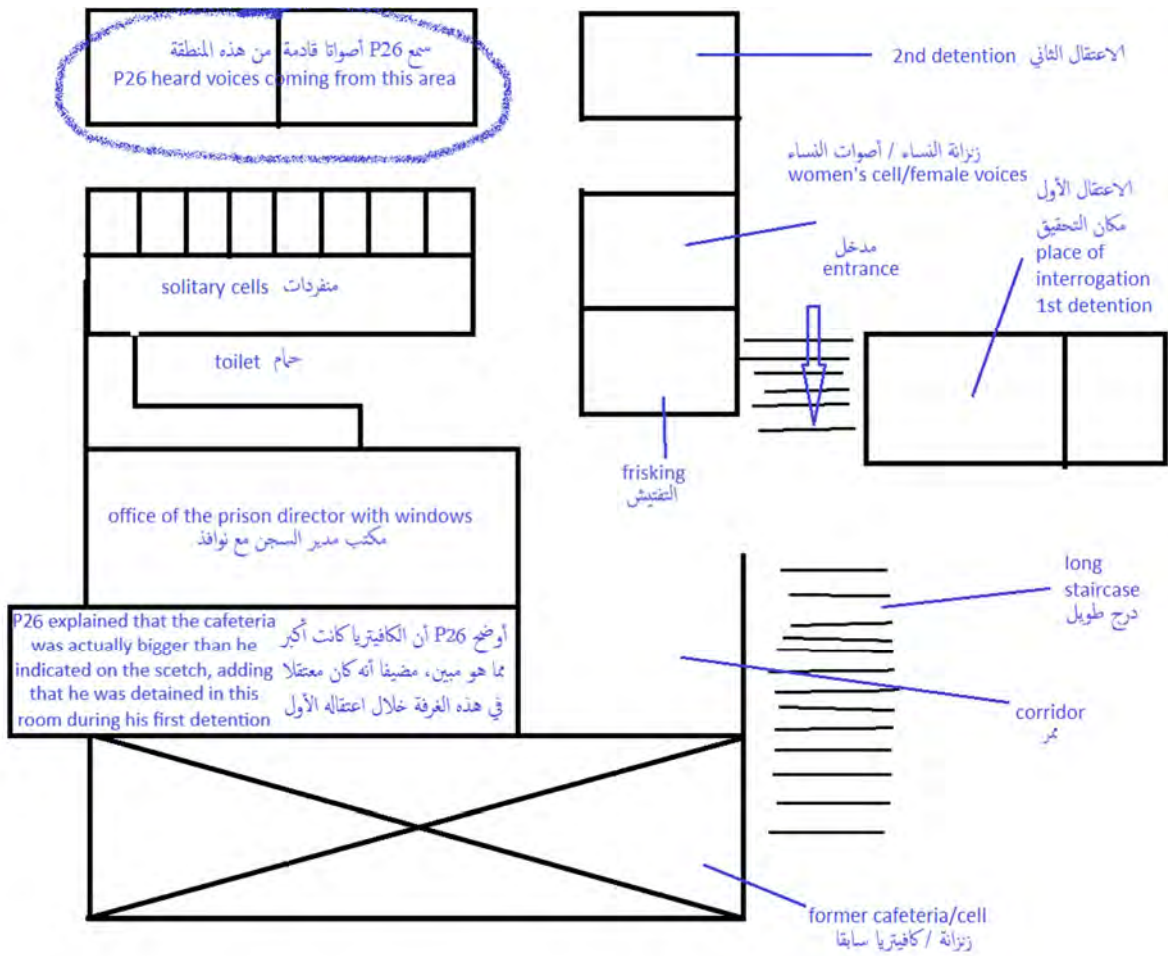

Judge Kerber asked P26 whether he remembered the sketch and where exactly Al-Khatib would be. P26 said he remembered creating the sketch and pointed at the area where he located Al-Khatib [circle in the sketch above].

A map was shown in court and P26 was asked to point to the area where he located Division 40.

Judge Wiedner asked P26 whether he was able to see the locations himself or if he knew from somewhere else. P26 said that when he arrived at Division 40, he could see a unique rooftop. The location of Al-Khatib was commonly known, although he did not see the entrance when he arrived there.

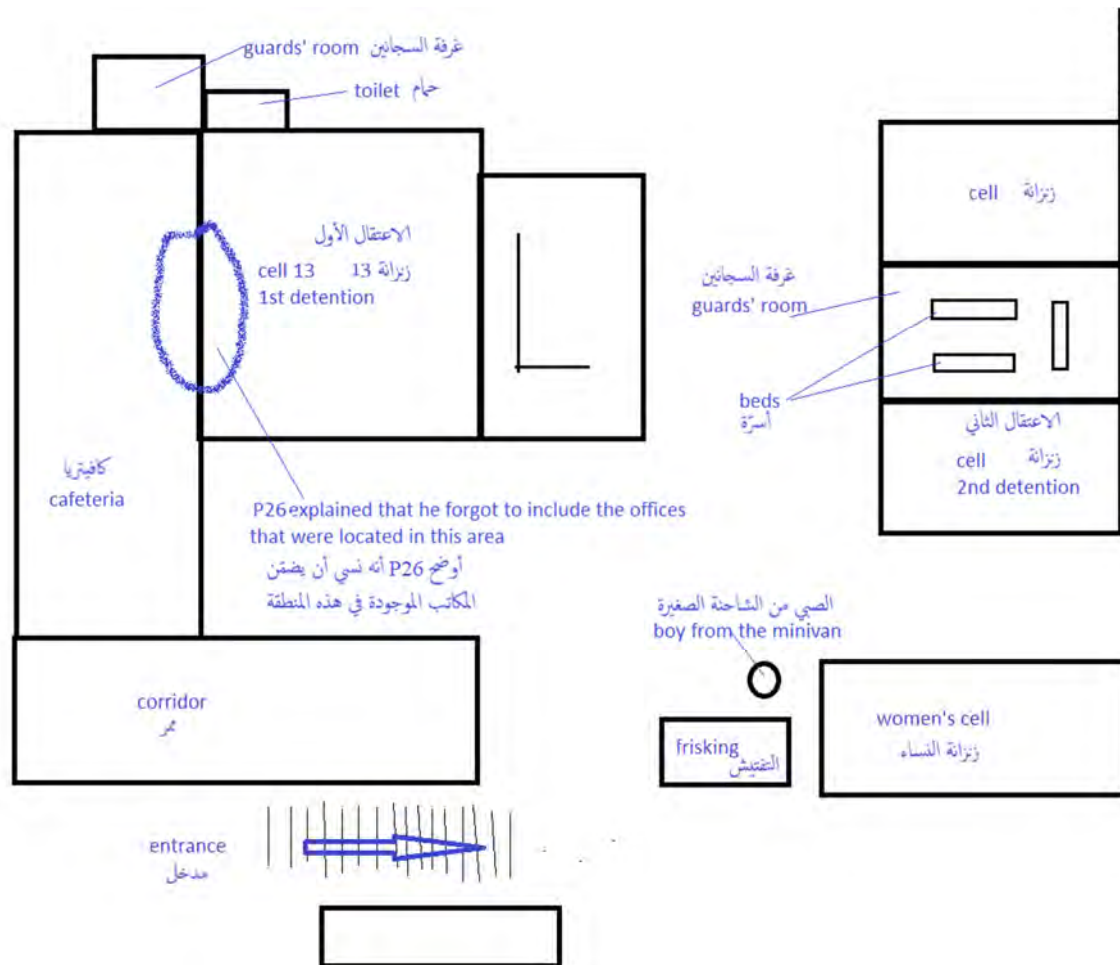

Before Judge Kerber showed a second sketch, she asked P26 to come to the Judges' bench and check whether his name was somewhere on the sketch.

[The following sketch was included at the bottom right corner of the previous sketch]

Judge Wiedner wanted to know whether the cafeteria was already there during P26's first detention or only modified later. P26 said he did not know, as he did not see this area during his first detention.

Wiedner asked whether all the sketches showed underground areas. P26 affirmed, adding that the staircase would be relatively long and the cafeteria had a 4m high ceiling and bricked windows only at the very top of the room.

Wiedner wanted to know how the detainees could tell whether it was day or night and asked if the lights were switched on and off. P26 explained that there were no windows and no light inside the cell. They simply trusted their estimate of time.

[Another sketch that P26 created was shown in court]

Judge Wiedner asked whether this area was on the first or second floor. P26 said he was not sure, however, he assumed that it was on the first floor [ground floor] as he only had to go upstairs to the first landing [coming from the cell in the basement].

As none of the parties had questions about the sketches, Judge Kerber announced a one-hour break.

***

[70 minute break]

***

Presiding Judge Kerber explained a few administrative issues regarding the following day before Judge Wiedner continued his questioning. He asked P26 whether his detentions had any physical or psychological consequences. P26 said he did not experience physical consequences but still lives in fear. He added that it took some time for him after his second detention to deal with nightmares about being arrested and beaten.

As none of the other parties had questions for P26, Judge Kerber ordered a short break for the judges and translators to prepare for the read out of the HRW report.

P26 was dismissed as witness.

***

[10 minute break]

***

After a part of the translation of the report was read out, Judge Wiedner announced that the witness who was summoned for January 27 was not willing to come to Koblenz, so the BKA officer who questioned the witness before, will be summoned instead.

Raslan's Defense Counsel, Böcker, said he wanted to informally discuss something before the hearing was adjourned for the day: Raslan's defense team was not satisfied with the expertise provided by Laura Thurmann [\[TR#1, trial day 3\]](#) and required a broader knowledge provided by experts. Raslan's defense said the situation was improved by certain journalists [\[TR#15, trial day 37\]](#) and [\[TR#16, trial day 38\]](#), however further experts are needed, particularly to cover the important aspect of the ethnic composition and dynamics in Syria. Böcker said he tried to think of an adequate expert and came to the conclusion that Guido Steinberg [Böcker was not sure about his last name] would not be suitable, as he specialized in Islamist terror. Instead, Böcker proposed to hear Michael Lüders. He added that, with all due respect, he is sure that Thurmann will provide better expertise in ten years. Böcker further said that before officially submitting an evidence request, he wanted to informally discuss this with all other parties, as he was sure that others felt the same. Böcker concluded by saying that he thinks this would be an important issue to discuss before the two cases are severed.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the other parties to the case whether anyone wanted to comment on Böcker's informal suggestion.

Prosecutor Klinge said the prosecution side does not see any necessity in hearing another expert. If Böcker is of a different opinion, he should make an official request.

Plaintiff Counsels Dr. Oehmichen and Scharmer both said that they might comment on this at a later point.

Raslan's second defense counsel Fratzky added that Michael Lüders would provide deep academic expertise on the matter, while Guido Steinberg's expertise would rather focus on ISIS. Fratzky added that Raslan's defense team noticed insufficient coverage of the issue surrounding religious groups, which would be important in Raslan's case as "he did not belong to a group with any power" [belongs to a minority group].

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer asked whether Raslan's defense team had already contacted Lüders. Böcker denied, adding that his proposal was rather spontaneous, however, he would contact him before making an official request. Fratzky added that they first wanted to get everyone's feedback and address the issue before the severance of the trial. He said it would be sufficient timing as the expert does not need extensive preparation and can provide his expertise in court on short notice.

Presiding Judge Kerber said "short notice would be the heading here" and explained that the judges need time to provide a statement that would not happen before the following day.

The proceedings adjourned at 2:25 pm.

The next hearing will take place on January 14, 2021.

Day 56 of Trial – January 14, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 am with six spectators and two journalists in the public gallery.<sup>4</sup> Dr. Peer Stolle appeared as a replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker and Charlotte Foerster-Baldenuis appeared instead of Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed.

The Judges continued to read the last part of the translation of the HRW report “We’ve never seen such horror”.

***

[20 minute break]

***

Criminal Chief inspector Alexander Frey, who led the investigation in Al-Gharib’s case and had already appeared as a witness on previous trial days see [TRs 3,5, 11], was summoned to testify on an exhibit that was found during the search of Al-Gharib’s flat in Germany. Instructions were read out to Frey and Presiding Judge Kerber informed him that today’s focus will be on a smartphone and accompanying SIM-card and SD-card which was found in Al-Gharib’s flat.

Testimony of Alexander Frey

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Frey to summarize the note he wrote on the above-mentioned exhibits. Frey said that in his position as lead-investigation against Al-Gharib, he inspected almost all exhibits, amongst others a Huawei smartphone. The BKA’s IT-department tried to refurbish the phone, however, it was not possible. Together with this phone, the officers also found a SIM-card and an SD-card, both of which could be refurbished. The inspectors then had a look at all the pictures that were saved on these cards, as well as text-files. Frey explained that the text-files were automatically created by the phone. Four pictures - two pairs - were of special importance: One pair showed an excerpt of a family-register in German and Arabic. The other pair showed the front and backside of an intelligence service ID card.

Judge Wiedner asked Frey to describe, in his own words, where the phone came from and how it got to him. Frey said it was found during the search of Al-Gharib’s flat.

Judge Kerber announced that the first two pictures regarding the family-register will be shown in court.

[two pictures of an excerpt of a family register in Arabic and German were shown in court]

Frey explained that both versions were found on the SD-card and the BKA’s translator confirmed the correctness of the translation. Frey added that the register was issued in Damascus, if he remembered correctly, it was issued in February 2016.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the pictures were found together with the phone. Frey confirmed.

Judge Kerber said two more pictures will be shown in court. Frey said the pictures show Eyad Al-Gharib’s intelligence service ID-card. Kerber asked the translators to confirm, which they did.

---

<sup>4</sup> No one requested access to translation. As announced last year, Presiding Judge Kerber did not explicitly ask the public about requesting access to translation.

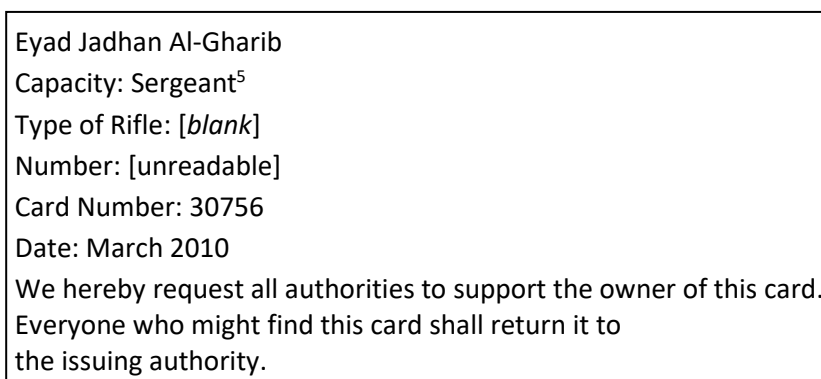

[two pictures (front and backside) of an ID card were shown in court]

Kerber asked the interpreters to read out what was written on the card:

[front of the card including a picture of Al-Gharib]

[back of the card as translated by the interpreters in court and cross-checked with the BKA's notes:]

Judge Kerber wanted to know how the two pictures relate to each other. Frey explained that both were saved on the SD-card that they found in Al-Gharib's flat. Frey assumed the pictures show the front and back of the same ID card.

Judge Kerber thanked Frey for his testimony, adding that it was short but important. Frey was dismissed as a witness.

Judge Kerber went on to explain that the court will now deal with the application to take evidence, issued by Al-Gharib's defense. She said first the application will be read out, after that the court will visually inspect and read out the Arabic Annex and the translation of this document, which was also attached to the application. While it would be read out, the translators should check whether the translation was correct.

[The following is a recreation of the application to take evidence, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court]

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translations of ranks are based on what has been said in court in German. The German terms are then translated to US and UK rank, according to the official NATO code.

December 9, 2020

Attorney
Matthias Schuster

Higher Regional Court Koblenz

Regarding: Criminal Case against Eyad Al-Gharib

Application to take evidence

The signatory hereby requests to take evidence in form of an expertise of a graphic expert regarding the handwriting of the statement [which was read out on trial day 51] and Eyad Al-Gharib's signature.

Reason:

On November 4, 2020, Prof. Dr. Rothschild provided an impressive oral expertise of the so-called Caesar-files, which showed photos of emaciated corpses. During a talk between defense counsels and client, Eyad Al-Gharib mentioned that he was deeply shattered by the photos and the expertise. The counsels asked him to write down his feelings, which he did. The counsels received the handwritten statement on November 17, 2020.

The counsels explicitly declare that they had no influence on the content of the statement, nor did they make any changes. The statement, subject matter of this application, provides authentic insight into the defendant's innermost thoughts.

Matthias Schuster

Presiding Judge Kerber asked one of the court interpreters to interpret what she was reading out, while the other interpreter should check whether what she read was a correct translation of the Arabic document shown in court.<sup>6</sup>

[The following is a recreation of the statement, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court. The statement can also be found in TR#21]

On November 4, 2020, the painful photos from the Caesar-files were examined and displayed in court. The presentation by Prof. Dr. Rothschild was very clear and provided excellent explanations. I want to thank Prof. Dr. Rothschild for his remarks on psychological and physical torture. I also want to pay my respect and gratitude to the hero, Caesar, for his fight against the Assad regime.

---

<sup>6</sup> Note from the Court Monitor: After Kerber read out the statement, she addressed the court translators to confirm the correctness of the translation. The translators said that the translation was correct, however there was an issue with the numbering of the pages. The last paragraph on the second page which was highlighted with an arrow and asterisk, would actually be the last paragraph of the entire statement, following the last paragraph of the third page.

I want to explain what I felt while seeing these photos; they broke my heart. I had to think of all the innocent victims of these bestial acts. The human mind cannot understand how humans can do such things to each other. I trembled during the entire presentation. Anger and hatred against Assad and his accessories filled my mind and heart. 99% of the pictures, I have not seen before. I only saw those that Al Jazeera and other news agencies already published. During the entire presentation, I had to think of all my relatives that are still in detention. Seven relatives, several friends, and hundreds of people from my hometown were arrested and their fate is still unknown. I was searching for familiar faces on the Caesar photos while at the same time, I was afraid to recognize anyone.

After this painful session when I was alone in the van back to the prison, I could no longer control myself and started to burst into tears. I was filled with grief and pain. I had to think about my family and tried to understand why people get arrested only because they demand equality, freedom, and justice at demonstrations. I painfully realized that Bashar al-Assad and the members of his [sect] are criminals that are still committing thousands of crimes, while the whole world knows about it but is only watching. The international community did not do anything about it.

I love my country and the people, that is why I hope to see the criminal regime, particularly the criminal and dictator Bashar al-Assad, in front of an international court. As all Sunnis, I was entirely powerless. 90% of the revolutionists are Sunnis. After the outbreak of the revolution, there was mistrust against Sunnis and we were constantly threatened. The first month after the revolution, we were degraded and they took away our arms and ID's. We were under constant surveillance and they were only hoping for the smallest sign of partisanship to arrest us. I only had the following options:

- 1) Openly disobey orders, which would have led to my arrest and arrest usually ended with execution.*
- 2) Defect and flee. That would have been foolish and sheer madness. They would have tortured my family until I returned to Syria.*
- 3) The right option was to wait and prepare until the border was open, to then defect and flee together with my family.*

I chose this option on January 5, 2012, as many others did.

Is the love for my family – my wife and four children – a fault for which I deserve punishment? I hope this court will find an answer that will also serve as an answer for future soldiers who find themselves in a civil war in their home countries.

I want to thank all parties to this trial and everyone involved, and pay my respect to them.

Tuesday, November 10, 2020

Eyad Al-Gharib

[signature]

Judge Wiedner said that the cover sheet from Al-Gharib's questioning with the BKA will be shown in court next to the signature under the handwritten statement to compare the handwriting.

[Both signatures were shown in court, indicating that they belong to the same person]

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Al-Gharib's counsel Schuster, to tell the court how he obtained the written statement. Schuster asked Judge Kerber whether he should stay at his seat or testify from the witness stand since he would answer her questions as a witness. Kerber said Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker had already pointed at the witness stand, so Schuster should come to the front. Schuster replied that, with all due respect, Böcker is not the one leading this trial and repeated his question for Judge Kerber. Kerber told Schuster to come to the witness stand to get all the formalities right.

Once Schuster went to the front to take the witness stand, Judge Kerber read out instructions to him and reminded him that as Al-Gharib's defense counsel, he is allowed not to testify at all. Schuster replied that he would provide a narrow testimony, adding that his client released him from his professional secrecy regarding the written statement. Schuster further said he assumes that everyone could still remember the expertise provided by Prof. Dr. Rothschild, the impressive presentation, and the photos. Schuster explained that after this court session, he and his colleague Linke had a short consultation with their client, Mr. Al-Gharib, during which attorney Linke asked Mr. Al-Gharib about his thoughts on the presentation and photos. According to Schuster, Mr. Al-Gharib replied that he was deeply shattered and kept looking at the photos to search for his relatives. Schuster further said that at the following court session or shortly after, Mr. Al-Gharib gave him the written statement, adding that since he neither speaks nor reads Arabic, he did not realize that there was an issue with the numbering of the pages. Schuster explained that he forwarded the statement to their translator [every defense team has one translator allocated to them]. According to Schuster, the translation of the statement took a while, he got it back via e-mail at the end of November. Schuster said he simply copied and pasted this translation to his application or evidence which the court received.

Judge Wiedner asked whether he received the written statement from Al-Gharib on November 17, 2020. Schuster affirmed.

None of the other parties had any questions for Schuster. Prosecutor Klinge jokingly asked to comply with all formalities, whether Schuster is related to the defendant by blood or marriage. Schuster denied.

Schuster was then formally dismissed as a witness.

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer said he would now be ready to make a statement on the proposal to hear another expert that was brought forward by Raslan's defense counsel the previous day.

Presiding Judge Kerber said she first would like to ask whether the defense can provide more details on their suggestion and be more concrete about how another expert would benefit the trial. Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker said that, basically, they had two things in mind. (1) They want to hear an expert who specializes in ethnicity and religion. (2) The expert Ms. Thurmann barely said anything about international entanglements in Syria, the point in time from which parties in the Syrian conflict were "actually repressed," and when civilians started to carry arms. Raslan's second Defense Counsel Fratzky added that the additional expert should also provide more information about the relation between the different confessions.

Judge Kerber asked the Defense Counsels whether they can be more concrete. Böcker said they could not, at least not on the present day. Kerber replied that the judges, for now, will not comment on the matter.

Plaintiff counsel Scharmer, on behalf of Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Kroker and himself, explained that the expertise of another expert would be dispensable in their opinion and there would be no indication to hear another expert. Scharmer added that while they agree that Thurmann's expertise alone was not sufficient, they think that the court heard enough from other experts and witnesses such as Anwar Al-Bunni, Mazen Darwish, or Chris Engels from CIJA. He added that these witnesses and experts painted a clear picture of different confessions in Syria and their relation to each other. According to Scharmer, the defense should be more precise about their envisaged benefit from hearing another expert if they actually request to hear one. Scharmer went on to explain that if the Judges consider hearing another expert, he and Dr. Kroker both have serious concerns regarding the suggested expert, Michael Lüders. While he had published several books and articles about Syria and the MENA region, he is a very polarizing academic, as he published certain things with insufficient factual background. Scharmer added that this can be verified in various newspapers and magazines. According to Scharmer, Michael Lüders said on a well-known German talk-show that there is no civil society in Syria. Scharmer concluded that while there is nothing wrong with hearing a polarizing expert, there are certainly better alternatives. He and his colleague Dr. Kroker, for example, suggested Bente Scheller, Kristin Helberg, or Dr. Muriel Asseburg, all of whom speak Arabic.

As none of the other parties had any further comments, Presiding Judge Kerber announced the building and room where the hearings will take place from January 27, 2021, onwards. Kerber asked the interpreters to interpret this information for everyone in the public gallery

The proceedings adjourned at 11:30 am.

The next hearing will take place on January 27, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 25

Hearing Dates: January 27 &amp; 28, 2021

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 57 – January 27, 2021

Mr. Hörl, a criminal inspector with the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA), testified about his questioning of an anonymous witness who was twice detained and tortured in Al-Khatib Branch. Prior to the hearing, the witness who was initially summoned for the day informed the court that he would not provide in-person testimony for private reasons.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the trial against Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib would be severed on February 17, 2021. A judgment in Al-Gharib's case would be rendered on February 24, 2021.

Trial Day 58 – January 28, 2021

Plaintiff and witness P27 [name redacted], a 32-year-old Syrian, testified about his detention at Al-Khatib Branch and the various interrogations he had to endure. His testimony confirmed what many other witnesses previously told the court: detainees at Al-Khatib were beaten upon their arrival until they reached their cell. The conditions were overcrowded, inhumane, and unhygienic. Detainees were given insufficient food. P27 further told the court that he was beaten during both his interrogations at Al-Khatib, however, he could not identify Raslan as his interrogator because he was blindfolded during interrogations.

Day 57 of Trial – January 27, 2021

The hearing began twenty minutes late at 9:50AM. It was held in a new courtroom located in the actual building of the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz. Moving forward, all hearings for the trial of Anwar Raslan/Eyad Al-Gharib will take place in this room, which was specifically refurbished for this trial. Five media representatives and five spectators were present.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Peer Stolle appeared as replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Patrick Kroker and Charlotte Foerster-Baldenuis appeared instead of Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed. Defendant Eyad Al-Gharib, handcuffed and accompanied by two court officers, entered the room through a side door leading to the public gallery. He had to walk through the audience to take his seat. Defendant Raslan entered through a different door located between the plaintiff counsels and the court interpreters.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

<sup>2</sup> No one requested access to Arabic interpretation. As announced last year, Presiding Judge Kerber did not explicitly ask the public about requesting access to interpretation.

Before officially opening the hearing and while the cameraman was still inside the courtroom, Judge Kerber thanked all the people involved with refurbishing the former court library and turning it into a courtroom. She specifically thanked the court's administration that "massively" pushed for the refurbishment, the court officers who helped build and erect the glass walls between every seat, the court officers who "had the back" of their colleagues while they were busy with the refurbishment, and the technicians.

Once the cameraman left the room and Judge Kerber officially started the hearing, she asked one of the court interpreters to update the parties on his correspondence with the witness who was summoned for the day but who previously told the court that he would not be able to attend the hearing. The interpreter explained that when he first contacted the witness on behalf of the court, the witness said that he would only be able to come to Koblenz once he dealt with some private matters. According to the interpreter, the witness got back to him after a while and said that he would not come to Koblenz for private reasons, but that he would inform the interpreter immediately if anything changes. The interpreter further said he told the witness that he would inform the court of his decision.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked the interpreter and said that, as already announced, the court would instead hear the testimony of Mr. Hörl, a Criminal Inspector from the BKA, who was present during the witness's questioning.<sup>3</sup>

Testimony of Criminal Inspector Hörl

Instructions were read out to Hörl and he was informed of his rights as a witness. When he tried to affirm that he understood everything, there were technical issues with the sound.<sup>4</sup> Judge Kerber asked Hörl to speak up and told the audience to signal to her and the other judges whenever they had difficulties with the acoustics.

---

<sup>3</sup> According to §48(1) of the German Code of Criminal Procedure (StPO), every witness must follow the court's summons. If a witness does not appear in court to testify, he/she may be ordered to pay the costs of his/her absence as well as a fine or to serve administrative detention. The witness may also be forced to appear in court (§51(1) StPO). However, this is not applicable if the witness excuses his/her absence in a timely and sufficient manner (§51(2) StPO). Family reasons or a threatening situation are considered to be sufficient excuses. In accordance with German procedural law (§250StPO) it is, however, not possible to simply read out the transcript of the witness's previous questioning, in case the witness does not appear in court. Instead, the authority who previously questioned the witness – in the present case the BKA – can provide a more direct testimony. The court therefore decided to hear the BKA official to include the witness's descriptions into the main hearing without the witness testifying in court himself.

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Technical issues relating to sound occurred during the entire hearing. Presiding Judge Kerber already told the audience at the beginning that they should raise their hand if they were unable to understand what was being said. The audience, including native German speaking spectators, had to raise their hands several times. The court's administration assured during a short break that the problem will be solved timely. Nonetheless, it posed additional difficulties on interested Arabic speaking public to follow the proceedings.

Judge Kerber's Questioning<sup>5</sup>

Presiding Judge Kerber expressed that Hörl knew why he was summoned as a witness for that day. Hörl affirmed, adding that he was summoned to testify about the BKA's questioning of [name redacted].

Judge Kerber asked Hörl to describe why the witness was questioned, when the questioning happened and how it took place. Hörl explained that he was completing his training at the BKA at that time and his supervisor, Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing, told him and a colleague to travel to France to hear a witness who was previously questioned by the French Police. According to Hörl, the witness was able to communicate well with the interpreter. The witness confirmed this to Hörl and his colleague in English. The witness was then informed of his rights and duties under German law.

Judge Kerber thanked Hörl for this information and turned to Judge Wiedner to avoid duplicated questions.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner asked Hörl about the reasons for the BKA's decision to question the witness themselves, despite previous questionings conducted by the French Police. Hörl said that he received the translations of the relevant interviews from the French Police in preparation for the BKA's interview. However, since he himself did not make the decision to question the witness again, he could not elaborate on the reasons behind that.

Judge Kerber intervened to inform the parties where they could find the transcripts of the interviews in the case file.

Judge Wiedner continued by asking Hörl to describe how the questioning took place and recall what the witness said. Hörl explained that they first informed the witness about his rights and duties under German law. They told him to ask for a break whenever he needed one and to help himself to drinks and snacks that they provided. Hörl then cross-checked the personal information provided by the witness with the translations of the French transcripts. Hörl's colleague asked the witness about this information (studies and professional occupation in Syria) and if anything changed since he was last questioned. The witness told them that he was still [in 2019] doing his PhD, and his mother and sister now live in France as well. Hörl's colleague then asked the witness about his arrests. The witness explained that he was first arrested in May 2011 in a relatively unusual manner. He received a call telling him to come to Jisr Al-Abyad [where Division 40 is located] the following day. The next day, his girlfriend drove him. He had to turn over his personal items to the officers once he arrived. He was taken to another room and had to wait in a hallway. He was then taken to a "hectic room". The witness explained to Hörl and his colleague that people were entering and leaving this room while a TV was on in the background. He was questioned about his Facebook posts, which he found confusing since he was previously invited by the government's spokesperson, Ms. Shaaban, to attend a meeting in March 2011. The witness could not understand why he was being questioned. He was eventually told to return to the first room and then allowed to go home. The witness went home with his girlfriend but was told to come back the following day.

---

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: For the purpose of this report, the term "witness" will be used to describe the person who Hörl and his colleague interviewed in their capacities as criminal officers of the BKA. The actual witness of this court session, Criminal Inspector Hörl, will be called by his name.

Judge Wiedner asked Hörl whether the witness mentioned the name of the head of this Branch. Hörl recalled that the witness could not remember the name. Hörl and his colleagues showed the witness pictures of the defendants, however, the witness only heard about Anwar Raslan from friends and acquaintances at a later point.

Wiedner asked whether the witness could not recognize the defendants in the pictures. Hörl affirmed, adding that the witness knew the name of the defendants from friends.

Wiedner wanted to know the names of these friends. Hörl said the witness mentioned Anwar Al-Bunni who was already questioned as a witness by the BKA when they interviewed the witness. The second name he mentioned was Mazen Darwish.

Wiedner said he wanted to come back to the witness's first interrogation and asked Hörl whether the witness knew the name of the head of the Branch. Hörl explained that the witness knew that Hafez Makhoulf was the head, but Hörl was not sure whether the witness identified Makhoulf as the head of this Branch or head of the General Intelligence Service.

Wiedner cited from the minutes of the witness's interview with the BKA when the witness told Hörl and his colleague that Hafez Makhoulf was the head of the Branch. The witness assumed that he was arrested because he posted negative things about Bashar Al-Assad and Hafez Makhoulf's brother, Rami, on Facebook. Hörl affirmed that the witness said that.

Wiedner recalled that the witness was in contact with Bashar Al-Assad's spokesperson and asked Hörl about the witness's relation to the government. Hörl explained that the witness saw himself as a member of the opposition. The spokesperson invited young people to discuss how a revolution in Syria could be avoided.

Wiedner wanted to know about the witness's story after his first arrest. Hörl recalled that the witness was told to return to Jisr Al-Abyad [Division 40]. The proceedings were faster than on the first day. According to Hörl, the witness was taken to the first room again. He was not blindfolded, and his hands were untied. He was then taken to another building where he had to provide his personal details. After that, he was blindfolded and put inside a car with four guards. They transferred him to another building and humiliated and beat him during the entire ride.

Wiedner asked whether the witness mentioned the number of the first Branch. Hörl recalled that the witness mentioned the numbers 40 and 41, however, Hörl was not sure at what point of the interview the witness mentioned these numbers.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness endured violence at these [ 40 and 41] branches. Hörl said he cannot assign the numbers to certain statements. Hörl added that the witness did not describe the treatment as violence, but rather explained that the beatings were used to intimidate the detainees. They were also beaten when they had to wait in the hallway, however, the witness did not view this as actual violence.

Wiedner asked about the number of the Branch. Hörl said the witness said he was in Al-Khatib. The witness did not provide a number, and explained that he only found out where he had been, at a later point.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness identified his place of detention as Al-Khatib. Hörl affirmed, adding that the witness said that he first found out about Al-Khatib during his trial, then again after his release when friends told him about it.

Wiedner asked Hörl about the overall situation surrounding his interview with the witness. Hörl explained that he himself wrote the minutes of the interview and therefore cannot say much about how the witness behaved during the interview. However, he could tell the court that the witness had a hard time talking about torture at Al-Khatib. According to Hörl, the witness first spoke very freely during the interview and provided long answers. When he was asked about torture at Al-Khatib, however, he provided very short answers and had to correct himself several times.

Wiedner asked Hörl to explain to the court what the witness told him and his colleague about the situation and conditions in Al-Khatib. According to Hörl, the witness said that he was first taken to a room by two guards. An officer and one guard were already waiting in this room. The witness recognized that the guard spoke a dialect that is typical for the coastal region in Syria. The witness then had to take off his trousers and belt, and was frisked. Hörl further explained that the witness told them that he had to squat while being frisked. He showed Hörl and his colleague the move he had to make. After that, he had to stand up and face the wall. When he made a compliment to a bald guard, the guard hit him. When he was taken to the cell by this guard, the guard told him that he hit the witness because he gave him a compliment. The witness concluded that the guard had a lower rank than the other people in the room.

Wiedner wanted to know how the witness described the cell. Hörl explained that the witness told them that the cell measured 1x1.5m and the only item inside the cell was a dirty blanket. The toilet was outside the cell. The food was pushed inside the cell through a small gap underneath the door. According to Hörl, a rat once entered the cell through this gap, so the witness decided to cover it with the blanket.

Wiedner asked whether the witness was interrogated in Al-Khatib. Hörl affirmed, adding that the witness was taken from the cell during the first night and was questioned about his Facebook posts, his relationship to demonstrators, and his participation in demonstrations. He was taken back to the cell, then taken to interrogation again the next morning. The guards asked the witness for his Facebook password but did not write it down correctly. He was then tortured. Hörl said the witness explained that he was tortured during his second interrogation and he remembered that it was already daylight, so it had to be morning. Torture included beating, kicks to his head, beatings with whips, and Falaqa.

Wiedner asked for more details about the kicks. Hörl said the witness told them that he was kicked on his head.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness mentioned that he recognized anyone. Hörl explained that his colleague asked the witness the same question several times. He replied that he would recognize the bald guard, whom he also described as being as tall as him (around 1.75m).

Wiedner asked if the witness said anything about the interrogators. Hörl said the witness told them that he was interrogated by two different interrogation officers. One for the interrogation at night and one in the morning.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the second interrogation and the questions about the witness's Facebook password. Hörl explained that the witness told them that when he first arrived at Al-Khatib, he was questioned about his Facebook posts and then later about the passwords during the second interrogation. However, the witness could not find an explanation for why he had to endure two separate interrogations.

Wiedner went on to ask Hörl if the witness recognized whether other detainees were tortured as well. Hörl explained that when his colleague asked the witness about Al-Khatib, she also asked him to create a sketch of the place. That was when the witness identified the direction from where he heard screams and differentiated between rooms for interrogations and rooms for torture. The witness only heard male screams from that direction, but there were female screams coming from a different direction at night as well. According to Hörl, the witness further explained that he mostly heard male screams and that he could hear interrogations from his cell. He observed that if someone admitted to the interrogator's accusation, "the torture escalated."

Wiedner asked when the witness was detained. Hörl said he was detained twice. The first arrest was in 2011. The witness mentioned a precise date during his questionings with the French Police, but during the questioning with Hörl and his colleagues, he often could not remember exact dates. The second arrest was in April 2012 and the witness was detained for one month. He was detained from April 12, 2012 until May 12, 2012, according to what the witness told the French Police.

Wiedner wanted to know which detention Hörl's just described. Hörl said he was referring to the Witness's first detention.

Wiedner recalled that Hörl mentioned sketches that the witness created. Hörl affirmed, explaining that his colleague asked the witness to make a sketch of the cells and to identify where he was detained on a map. Hörl added that the witness often identified a general region on the map and identified the Branch's location based on the surrounding buildings.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Hörl and his colleague asked the witness about certain statements he previously made to the French Police. Hörl could not remember, but they definitely referred to the French questions when they asked the witness about his personal details. Hörl further explained that he did not remember if his colleague asked additional questions related to the French questions. Hörl also did not know which documents the BKA had already received from the French Police at the time of the questioning.

Wiedner said that this would have been his next question, relating to which documents the BKA received from the French Police. Hörl said that he received two translations of the transcripts of the French questioning and two attachments that the witness provided to the French Police: the minutes of an interrogation and some kind of indictment.

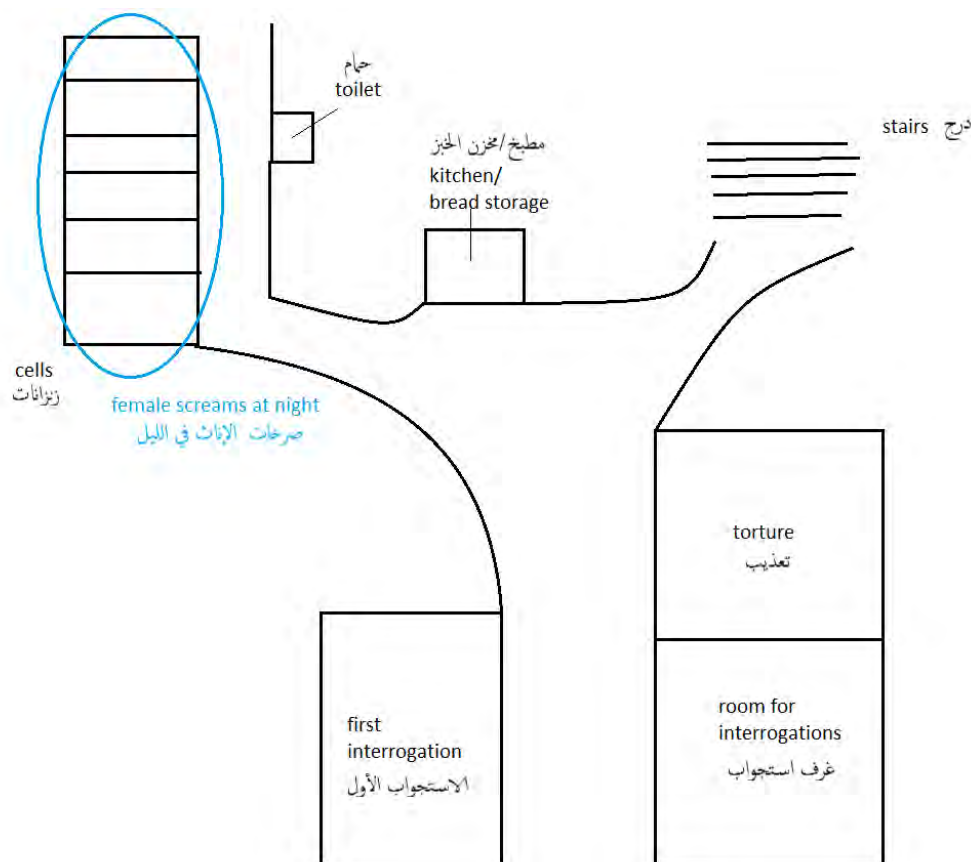

Wiedner asked Hörl to continue describing the witness's detention. Hörl said that after the witness was taken back to the solitary cell, he was interrogated again after three days. He was interrogated about certain people and his car. However, he did not have a car at the time of his detention and was confused about this question. He later found out that someone allegedly shot from his car at a demonstration. According to the witness, this interrogation indicated that the people at Al-Khatib did not know the reasons for his detention.

Wiedner wanted to know what happened to the witness after he was detained and interrogated at Al-Khatib. Hörl said the witness was transferred to Kafar Souseh on the day he was interrogated about his car. The witness was taken to a bigger cell in Kafar Souseh (some kind of big hall) where he was constantly kept awake. He was then taken to the Palace of Justice where he asked a person to inform his brother, who eventually arrived at the Palace of Justice with an attorney and the witness's girlfriend. The witness was then released. The second time the witness was detained, he was meeting with two friends at a café when security forces stormed the place.

He was taken to a detention facility of the Air Force Intelligence, close to the embassies of the United Arab Emirates and Qatar, as well as the Assad library. He was interrogated about his laptop and then transferred to the Air Force Branch in al-Mezzeh. Shortly before the witness was released (after one month in detention) he had to endure another interrogation. Before his own interrogation, however, he was forced to kneel and witness the interrogation of his girlfriend, [name redacted]. After his interrogation, he was taken to a collective cell for two weeks where he had to write down and sign a confession. After that, he was not interrogated again. He was transferred to another place for three nights and four days. The witness asked another detainee to contact his brother and inform him of the witness's whereabouts. By paying high bribes, his brother was able to visit the witness, who was then interrogated once more. The witness's brother paid additional bribes to arrange the witness's release. However, the witness was told to come to the Palace of Justice once more. The people there told him that they would not be in charge of his case and that he needed to come back to the palace again. The witness did not go to the Branches or palace again because he was afraid of being arrested once more.

Wiedner mentioned that the witness is not present in Koblenz. He asked Hörl whether he knows why the witness is not present and if the witness was somewhat hesitant during his questioning with the BKA. Hörl recalled that the witness told him and his colleague that he wanted to forget about everything and therefore cannot remember details. The witness did not elaborate further.

[The following is a recreation of the witness's sketch based on what the Trial Monitor was able to see in court.]

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness mentioned if all of the rooms he included in the sketch were situated on the same floor. Hörl said he understood it that way.

Wiedner asked whether the rooms were located in the basement. Hörl said the witness described that he had to go down some steps.

Presiding Judge Kerber said she had two more questions. The first was to clarify whether the witness was blindfolded during his interrogation. Hörl wanted to know to which interrogation Judge Kerber was referring. Kerber said she was talking about the second interrogation at Al-Khatib. Hörl could not remember. He could remember the witness's descriptions regarding Jisr Al-Abyad [Division 40] very well, but not the descriptions of Al-Khatib which were quite unstructured. Hörl's colleague and the interpreter had to ask for clarification several times.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether the minutes of the witness's interrogation [the document he provided the French Police] was discussed during the questioning by the BKA. Hörl said he could not remember. He looked at all the documents in preparation for his testimony in court, but did not remember which documents were available to the BKA at the time of the questioning in 2019.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Polz wanted to know whether the witness mentioned which injuries he had from Al-Khatib. Hörl said the witness told the French Police that he had injuries all over his back, for which he needed medical treatment after his trial [first detention]. However, in the interview with the German Police, the witness only mentioned Falqua and beatings he had to endure. Hörl added that the witness said nothing about precise injuries.

Polz asked whether the witness saw dead people or people dying in Al-Khatib. Hörl explained that the witness mentioned to the French Police that generally, he would be sure that people died there, however, he never saw corpses. Hörl added that the witness further explained that sometimes other detainees from his cell never returned to the cell. However, he could not say for sure what exactly happened to them.

Polz wanted to know whether the witness described the nutritional situation in Al-Khatib. Hörl denied.

Polz asked the same question regarding medical treatment. Hörl recalled that the witness told the French Police about this, however, his colleague did not ask further questions about it.

Polz wanted to know whether the witness mentioned sexual violence in Al-Khatib. Hörl explained that he and his colleague did not explicitly ask about it. Hörl added that the witness said he asked male detainees in Kafar Souseh about it [sexual violence], however, they did not mention anything.

Defense Counsels Questioning

Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker recalled that the witness knew Raslan's name from Anwar Al-Bunni and Mazen Darwish and asked Hörl whether the witness also got information [about the case] from the media. Hörl explained that the witness told them that he knew about Raslan from Arabic media and from friends.

Böcker cited from the minutes of the witness's interview with the BKA during which he said that he knew about a colonel who defected from the regime, named Anwar Raslan. Hörl replied that if it is written in the minutes like that, it must be what the witness told them.

Böcker summarized that the witness mentioned minutes of his interrogation, injuries on his back and dead people, however, he only told the French Police about it. Böcker wanted to know why the BKA did not ask any questions about these issues.

Hörl said that he does not know, as he only wrote the minutes of the questioning. If Böcker wants more information about the reasons behind certain questions, he should ask Hörl's colleague.

Böcker asked whether Hörl consequently only knows about certain things from the minutes of the French questioning. Hörl affirmed, adding that the BKA received the German translation.

Böcker concluded that the witness did not make concrete statements with the BKA. Hörl said the witness indeed made more general comments, adding that he was not certain whether the BKA knew all these details before they interviewed the witness.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer wanted to know whether the BKA cited from the minutes of the French interview during the BKA's interview of the witness. Hörl affirmed, adding that they only referred to the French interview regarding personal details of the witness.

Scharmer concluded that Hörl's colleague consequently did not use the French minutes to ask the witness about actual subject matter. Hörl said he cannot remember everything that was said during the interview, but if his colleague referred to the French minutes, then there would be notes about it in the German minutes.

Scharmer cited from the German minutes which said that Hörl's colleague cited from the French minutes regarding the witness's personal details and that the witness was asked whether he wanted to add or change anything. Hörl explained that his colleague conducted her own interview about the subject matter, so she did not refer to the French minutes then.

Scharmer recalled that the witness told the BKA that he had to take off his belt and trousers and had to do squats. Scharmer wanted to know whether the witness was completely naked. Hörl said the witness told them that he had to take off his belt and trousers.

Scharmer wanted to know which parts of the witness's body were frisked. Hörl said the witness's legs were frisked.

Scharmer cited from the BKA's minutes of the interview during which the witness said that he had to take off his belt and trousers and do squats. He further explained that the guards frisked him to check whether he hid anything between his legs. According to the minutes, the witness stood up to demonstrate the frisking. Scharmer added that the witness also told the French Police that he was naked. Hörl said the witness told the BKA that he had to take off his belt and trousers.

Scharmer wanted to know whether Hörl's colleague asked more questions about the frisking. Hörl said he could not remember.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked whether the minutes of the BKA's interview were re-translated and read out to the witness. Hörl affirmed, adding that they went through every sentence and he himself corrected the German minutes according to the witness's comments.

Hörl was dismissed as a witness.

Judge Kerber explained that after a short break, a 2.5-page report from the Max Planck Institute about Syrian Criminal law will be read out and the Judges will make their statement on the submission of Al-Gharib's defense to hear a graphic expert to confirm the authenticity of Al-Gharib's handwritten statement.

***

[10-minute break]

***

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that Judge Wiedner will now read out a report from the Max Planck Institute for the Study of Crime, Security and Law from 2019.

[due to the above-mentioned technical difficulties, the Trial Monitor was unable to understand the details of the report]

The report was based on a request from Attorney Böcker directed to the Max-Planck-Institute for a description of the legal situation in Syria, specifically regarding murder and bodily injury.

The report detailed the relevant penalties for murder and bodily harm under Syrian Criminal Law, ranging from compulsory labor to the death penalty. It also explained the legal situation regarding bodily harm with fatal consequences. According to the report, the relevant laws have been in place since January 2011.

After the report was read out, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the Judges will now read out the court order regarding the request submitted by Al-Gharib's defense counsels to hear an expert witness who can confirm the authenticity of Al-Gharib's written statement.

[the following is a recreation of the court order based on what the Trial Monitor was able to understand in court]

Court order regarding the request from Al-Gharib's defense counsel dated December 9, 2020 to hear a graphological expert in order to confirm the authenticity of Al-Gharib's handwritten statement.

The request is denied because the fact that was supposed to be proven has already been proven for the following reasons:

1) The submission with which the statement was submitted as evidence on December 9, 2020 already detailed how Defense Counsel Schuster received the handwritten statement. Schuster's testimony describing the reasons for Al-Gharib to write the statement, as well as how Schuster received the statement and ordered its translation, was plausible and detailed. The signature on the handwritten statement is apparently the same as Al-Gharib's signature on the minutes of his questioning with the BKA. The content of the statement was further confirmed by the court interpreters. The court therefore has no doubt about the authenticity of the statement.

2) The defendant himself acknowledges that he is the author of the statement. The handwritten statement, in avoidance of an oral statement, details the emotions of the defendant, as well as aspects of the trial.

3) It is almost impossible that the statement is plagiarism. Further, there was no reason for plagiarizing the statement.

For these reasons, the court denied the request to hear another witness, while confirming the authenticity of the handwritten statement.

Presiding Judge Kerber recalled that the Prosecutors requested a severance of the trial. She said that the court will grant this request and sever the trial on February 17, 2021. Regarding the proceedings for the severance day, the court will continue to hear both cases together and read out documents before formally severing the trial.

The dates for the trial against Anwar Raslan that were scheduled for February 18, 24 and 25, 2021 will be cancelled. The trial against Anwar Raslan will continue on March 10, 2021. The court will finish taking evidence in the trial of Eyad Al-Gharib on February 18, 2021. On the same day, the Prosecutors will provide their final speech. The court will hear the final speech of Al-Gharib's defense on February 18, 2021 and will give the defendant the opportunity to make his own final statement. The judgment in the case against Eyad Al-Gharib will be announced on February 24, 2021. Judge Kerber summarized that this plan could still change in light of the overall uncertain situation [pandemic]. [Judge Kerber told the interpreters to provide everything she says on this issue to the public audience.]

Kerber further announced that Al-Gharib's defense will receive a digital copy of certain parts of the casefile in preparation of their plea. All other parties can access the hard copy of the case file as usual.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker wanted to clarify the schedule for February 17, 2021. Judge Kerber said that the court will read out reports regarding CCMC [Central Crisis Management Cell] on that day.

The proceedings adjourned at 11:30 am.

Day 58 of Trial – January 28, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30AM with four spectators and four journalists present in the public gallery.<sup>6</sup> Before officially starting the hearing, Presiding Judge Kerber apologized for the technical issues and asked the audience whether they could hear her, and told them to raise their hand whenever they have difficulties following the proceedings.<sup>7</sup>

Testimony of P27

P27, who wore a beanie and Covid-mask, was accompanied by his counsel, Dr. Anna Oehmichen. Presiding Judge Kerber informed P27 about his rights and duties as a plaintiff and witness. She said it is fine that P27 does not want to be recognized and to therefore wear a beanie and a mask. She further said that he can leave them on, however, to identify himself, he must take them off for a second. After identifying P27, Judge Kerber asked P27 for his personal details. P27 said he already told his counsel that his family is still living in Syria, as to why he would prefer to write down his details instead of mentioning them in court. P27's counsel, Dr. Oehmichen, spoke to P27 before requesting a short break.

Judge Kerber ordered a 5-minute break and told Dr. Oehmichen to again inform P27 about the relevant procedural regulations.

***

[15-minute break]

***

After counseling her client, Dr. Oehmichen approached the Prosecutors and had a short discussion with the Presiding Judge, Plaintiff Counsels and Defense Counsels.

---

<sup>6</sup> No one requested access to Arabic interpretation. As announced last year, Presiding Judge Kerber did not explicitly ask the public about requesting access to interpretation.

<sup>7</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Technical issues surrounding sound in the public gallery were fixed the following session, see TR#26.

Presiding Judge Kerber said Dr. Oehmichen made a good proposal on how to deal with the situation.<sup>8</sup> Kerber recalled that the court already knows P27's name as she just mentioned when informing him about his rights and duties. Kerber asked P27 how old he was. P27 said he was 32-years-old. Kerber asked him whether he was related to the defendants by blood or marriage. P27 denied.

Kerber explained that she would ask rather broad questions and whenever P27 would feel uncomfortable answering, he should consult his Dr. Oehmichen. Kerber recalled that P27 conflicted with the "Syrian Regime" and asked him to provide a rough overview about how he came into conflict with the regime and where he was detained. P27 explained that in 2011 at the beginning of the revolution, he was involved in coordinating demonstrations [as the sound was low, Judge Kerber asked the audience if they were able to understand everything and asked P27 to pull the microphone closer towards him]. P27 went on to explain that he was involved in coordinating demonstrations at the beginning of the revolution in 2011. He added that in his province, there was no real coordination center. He was still a student at that time and was 23-years-old. He said he had an office with recording devices. P27 further explained that they announced demonstrations via "posts", small sheets of paper with information about the date, time, and location of the demonstrations. P27 said he was in charge of printing these sheets of paper, explaining that this took place in 2011. P27 further explained that the situation in 2012 was similar. The coordination of demonstrations at that time took place on social media. P27 said he supported different local organizations at that time and at the beginning, supported the organization in his hometown. [P27 had a short consultation with his counsel, Dr. Oehmichen]. P27 told the court that he continued his work in the following years. In 2013 [2014]<sup>9</sup> the activities slightly changed, according to P27. He said that the entire organizational work was done at a local level. He himself worked at different local organizations and with the interim government. P27 said he continued his work in Germany as well.

Kerber said she wanted to come back to the events in 2011 and asked P27 what happened to him back then. P27 said he was first arrested on May 1, 2011 and then a second time in late 2011. He explained that his first and second detention were both in the same city and he was not transferred to other Branches. According to P27, his first detention lasted a couple of days and was with the Military Intelligence Service, while his second detention lasted one month.

Kerber wanted to know where exactly and how P27 was arrested. P27 explained that both arrests took place in Raqqa. Compared to his third arrest, these two arrests however were not that bad. P27 further said that he was detained at the General Intelligence Service both times, however, there were differences in treatment. The first time, he did not have to endure Shabb, nor did the guards use "any hard tools."

Kerber asked at which Branch P27 was detained and how he learned where he was detained. P27 clarified that his last arrest took place in 2012, he was arrested in Raqqa and then transferred to Damascus via Deir ez-Zor and Homs. He said that this third detention was the worst and explained that he was transferred from Raqqa to Deir ez-Zor in May and had to stay in Deir ez-Zor for 4-5 days. P27 said he could not remember exactly, but he remembered that he was interrogated once or twice. He said "they" wanted to know a lot about his friends and their activities. According to P27, the questions were rather general, and "they" did not ask for specific information. P27 further explained that he was then transferred to Homs, where he was not interrogated at all. He was then transferred via a detainee transport by the police and had to stay with the military police in Homs for one night.

---

<sup>8</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: It did not become apparent what exactly Dr. Oehmichen proposed.

<sup>9</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The interpreter said 2013, while the audience heard P27 saying 2014.

P27 said he was then transferred to Al-Qaboun in Damascus. He explained that this Branch also belonged to the military police. He added that to his knowledge, it was an outpost. P27 concluded that all his descriptions were based on his personal experience and not of general nature.

Kerber reminded P27 to pull the microphone closer, so that everyone could hear him. P27 went on to explain that he was transferred from Al-Qaboun to the Air Force Intelligence Branch where he had to stay a couple days before he was transferred again, this time to the Palestine Branch [Branch 235]. P27 said that this was “the end of his journey.” He explained that he had to stay at the Palestine Branch for around three months before he was taken to a court in Damascus where he was released. P27 recalled that he mentioned general interrogations and said that the Palestine Branch was the only Branch where the interrogators asked specific questions and apparently knew many details about him and his friends and family. P27 said that his detention in Al-Khatib was relatively short, only 3-4 days. He said he only found out later that he was detained at Al-Khatib, however, he could not say whether he found out on his way there or on his arrival. P27 concluded that he had to stay at Al-Khatib for 3-4 days and was interrogated twice. The first interrogation took 2-3 hours and the second around one hour.

Judge Wiedner’s Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled that P27 only found out later that he was detained at Al-Khatib and wanted to know from where he knew that. P27 asked Wiedner to repeat the questions because he could not understand due to technical problems. Wiedner asked who told P27 that he was detained at Al-Khatib. P27 said he could not remember exactly. However, during their transport, their names and the number of the Branch was attached to the detainees. He could therefore not remember whether he found out about his place of detention from these sheets or upon his arrival. P27 added that it was a fact that he found out late that he was detained at Al-Khatib, Branch 251.

Wiedner cited from the minutes of P27’s interview with the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) where he said that other detainees at Al-Khatib told him where he was. P27 affirmed.

Wiedner explained that he would ask his questions regarding the Syrian revolution in chronological order. He recalled that P27 told the BKA that he was one of the first people to engage in the revolution. Wiedner wanted to know when “this” started, what exactly P27 did and how the security forces reacted to the demonstrations in the beginning. P27 said he was in Raqqa where the first demonstration took place on April 25, 2011. He said he participated in all demonstrations, explaining that they coordinated the demonstrations through different internet forums. P27 said they coordinated that, for example, a demonstration would take place on Wednesday, [and his task was to print flyers]. These flyers were small sheets of paper detailing information about the demonstration.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P27 participated in the demonstrations. P27 confirmed, adding that he participated in almost every demonstration.

Wiedner asked about the reaction of the security forces, whether there was a development [in their response to the protesters] and how they used violence. P27 explained that at the beginning of the demonstrations, the security forces in his province were afraid of the reaction of the people on the streets. According to P27, the security forces were not that violent towards demonstrators for one year. He added that only some Shabhia came to some villages from time to time.

Judge Kerber reminded P27 to pull the microphone closer, as some people in the audience could not understand what he was saying. P27 explained that the security forces were always supported by Shabhia.

Judge Wiedner wanted to know what exactly the security forces and Shabha did, whether they intervened. P27 said that young and old people participated in the demonstrations and no one could dissolve them. However, the [security forces and Shabha] tried to dissolve the demonstrations, and often succeeded as they were informed about the details beforehand.

Wiedner asked what P27 meant by “dissolving”, whether the security forces used weapons or simply spoke to the demonstrators. P27 explained that the security forces always carried arms, but did not use them until Ali Al-Babensi [ألي البابنسي] was killed. According to P27, Ali Al-Babensi [ألي البابنسي] was the first person in Raqqa who died from the use of arms.

Wiedner wanted to know when that happened. P27 said it happened in March 2012, explaining that the security forces knew that demonstrations were coordinated to take place at mosques. P27 said they usually took place after Friday prayers or on religious holidays. P27 further explained that once the date of the demonstration was announced, he and his colleagues took their flyers. Usually, in cases where the date, time, and place of demonstrations were publicly known, security forces and Shabha were already waiting, trying to prevent the demonstrations from happening. According to P27 the security forces and Shabha tried to dissolve the demonstrations right after they started by arresting people and even using batons.

Before Judge Wiedner asked his next questions, Presiding Judge Kerber reminded P27 to pull the microphone closer and speak up, so that everyone in the back could hear him.

Judge Wiedner asked P27 whether he saw injured or dead people at demonstrations, caused by the security forces. P27 said he saw several injured people in front of him. Regarding deaths, he explained that the first person who died at a demonstration in 2012 was the one he just mentioned.

Wiedner went on to ask P27 about the time he arrived at Al-Khatib, how he was brought there and how he was received. P27 said, as he just mentioned, the detainees were tied to a long chain and transported in a cooling truck. He explained that they had to wear blindfolds all the time. P27 further said that he could not remember the number of his cell, however, other detainees told him the number.

Wiedner recalled that P27 mentioned a bus earlier and wanted to clarify whether he was transferred by bus or on a truck. P27 explained that he was not talking about a bus like one finds here [Germany] but rather a white car. All detainees in Syria would know what he was talking about. The vehicle looked like a cooling truck used to transport meat.

Wiedner mentioned the term “welcoming party”. P27 said that he can only describe his own experiences. He explained that all detainees were tied to one chain through their handcuffs. They left the truck/bus tied to this chain and once they were untied, they had to stand in a row facing a wall. According to P27, they had to stand like this for several minutes until the registration process was completed. However, they had to endure “assaults” from the guards during the time when they had to wait in line. P27 said the detainees were then taken to the gate of the Branche’s yard where they were beaten. The beating was not “hard.” Rather, it was used as a means of intimidation. Once they were inside the building, they were frisked and had to take off their clothes until they were naked. P27 said they had to make a certain move and squat during this procedure. They were intimidated all the time until they reached their cell.

Wiedner asked how exactly they were intimidated. P27 explained that every guard had some kind of tool, like a baton, piece of leather, etc. P27 said he does not think that the distribution of tools was structured or organized.

He described that there was a guard every five meters, beating the detainees with his tool. P27 concluded that from the moment they left the bus/truck until they reached the cell, they were constantly beaten, arbitrarily all over their body.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P27 was inside or outside when he was naked. P27 said he was inside.

Wiedner asked whether they got their clothes back. P27 affirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know where P27's cell was, what kind of cell it was and how many people were inside. P27 said he could not remember exactly; he could not even say whether it [the cell] was on the ground floor or basement. He explained that once they went inside and had to leave their personal items, they went down a relatively long hallway. He assumed that there were stairs at the end of the hallway. According to P27, the cell was around 4x3m (just like the space in front of him in the court room).

Wiedner recalled that P27 told the BKA that the cell measures 3x5m and asked P27 how many people were inside the cell. P27 said there were around 100 people inside.

Wiedner wanted to know whether there were further cells and who was detained in these cells. P27 said he could only describe what he felt. Based on screams, he guessed that there were more cells, including a female cell right next to his cell.

Wiedner asked whether he heard if someone was mistreated. P27 said he heard screams and voices around the clock. The screams were particularly loud in the morning hours and around noon. P27 explained that he cannot provide a precise time, however, he guessed it was around 10am, 2pm and 6pm.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the screams came from inside the building or outside. P27 said they came from the inside.

Wiedner asked P27 whether anyone in his cell told him what had happened to them. P27 said it was difficult to talk. Everyone was so afraid that none of them said anything. P27 added that no one spoke about whether they were beaten or the duration of their interrogation. However, P27 saw the injuries all over the bodies of his fellow detainees.

Wiedner wanted to know whether it was the rule that everyone was tortured, recalling that P27 said that everyone in his cell was tortured. P27 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know how P27 knew about this. P27 said he could of course not provide a statistic; it was rather an estimate. He added that almost everyone in the cell showed signs of torture. He knew one of them, [name redacted].

Wiedner asked what signs of torture P27 saw. P27 explained that one could see signs from the clothes, which were ripped in many cases, and two people had bone fractures. P27 said that many people showed signs of Shabb at their wrists.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P27 saw people bleeding, or signs of beatings or bruises. P27 said that of course many people had bruises, most times caused by the harsh beatings. He himself was bleeding from an ear injury, however, others were not covered in blood. P27 said that he himself did not witness any grave or deadly injuries.

Wiedner asked P27 what happened to him during his interrogation. P27 said that his first interrogation lasted around 3-4 hours. He was blindfolded, facing a wall. According to P27, there were one or two people who interrogated him. One of them had a dialect typical for people from the Northeast.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the interrogation happened on the same floor or whether P27 was taken somewhere else. P27 said he guesses that he had to go down or up some stairs. However, there were only five steps, so it must have been on the same floor.

Wiedner asked whether P27 was mistreated during his interrogation. P27 explained that actually, the interrogators only wanted to know general things. P27 assumed that they had no idea why he was detained. The questions were rather general, regarding what he did, who he was friends with and why he went to certain places. P27 added that he told the German police that he was not tortured. He told them that he was beaten during his second interrogation where he also had to endure electroshocks. P27 recalled that he also told the German police that he was beaten with a piece of leather.

Wiedner wanted to know what P27 remembered about his interrogation in this particular moment. He asked P27 whether he was mistreated and if so, how. P27's counsel, Dr. Oehmichen, intervened and said that according to P27 torture and mistreatment have to different meanings.

Wiedner asked P27 to simply describe what happened. P27 said that Dr. Oehmichen explained what he wanted to say, adding that he already explained what happened during the interrogations in Al-Khatib. At the Palestine Branch, however, he was interrogated on more occasions.

Wiedner said he wanted to focus on Al-Khatib, asking P27 whether he was beaten during his interrogations there and what he can remember from the interrogations. P27 said he already mentioned that he was beaten with different tools. He just wanted to explain to the police that he was also beaten with a tool made of hard plastic, maybe a v-belt. P27 further said that he was also beaten in the car/bus/truck and beaten all over his body. He said one could tell that the beatings were not supposed to kill anyone but to cause severe injuries.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the beating occurred as a reaction to P27's answers or just happened arbitrarily. P27 said sometimes they were a reaction and sometimes he was beaten just like that.

Wiedner cited from the minutes of P27's interview with the BKA where he said that before his interrogation, he had to wait for 2 or 3 hours. He had to stand during this time and was beaten and kicked harshly. He further told the BKA that he did not know whether the beatings were a reaction to certain things, however, he was under the impression that whenever the person got tired, the guard used a v-belt to continue his beating. According to P27, he did not suffer bone fractures, but other detainees did. P27 confirmed the statement.

P27's counsel, Dr. Oehmichen, asked for a 10-minute break.

***

[25-minute break]<sup>10</sup>

***

---

<sup>10</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: during the break, the judges approached the audience to ask them for feedback regarding sound. After a short discussion, the only Arabic-speaking spectator, a non-accredited journalist, received a device to hear the witness's original testimony. However, she could still not understand the German statements, as she did not get access to the interpretation. Presiding Judge Kerber added that handing out the device would not be a precedent for future requests, as it was only due to the situation and the fact that the number of people in the audience was very small. Access to devices for the German channel, as the parties use them, was denied for the audience.

Presiding Judge Kerber reminded all parties to always pull the microphone close when speaking, so that everyone in the audience could understand them.

Judge Wiedner said he has some more questions about P27's first interrogation in Al-Khatib. He wanted to know whether the interrogation room was close or away from P27's cell. P27 said they walked there for about one or two minutes.

Wiedner cited from the minutes of P27's interview with the BKA where he said that the place of interrogation was far away from the cell. The area where the cells were had a strong smell, however, the place of interrogation did not smell. P27 confirmed.

Wiedner recalled that the BKA further asked P27 about the floor on which the interrogation took place. According to the BKA's minutes, P27 explained that he assumed that the cells were in the basement, as there was no daylight. Even though he was blindfolded, he felt that it was brighter at the place of the interrogation. P27 again confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know the number of people present at P27's first interrogation. P27 said there were one or two people.

Wiedner asked whether they spoke with one another. P27 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether there were orders to beat him. P27 said there were orders, however, he could not remember exactly. He added that he was interrogated by only one person.

Wiedner asked about the hierarchy between the two people. P27 said he assumes that one of the people at his second interrogation had a certain rank, as the others called him "Sir" [sidi/sayyidi].

Wiedner wanted to know whether P27 had to squat at his first interrogation. P27 said the BKA asked the same question, however, he could not remember whether he had to stand or kneel.

Wiedner recalled that when the BKA asked P27 which of his body parts were beaten, he replied that he was beaten everywhere, adding that at every break, he had to squat three to five times. He was then beaten and kicked so the guards could instill fear and terror. He further told the BKA that he was also beaten in reaction to his answers. P27 confirmed.

Wiedner asked P27 what the interrogators wanted to know from him. P27 said that he was under the impression that the people at the interrogation did not know what he allegedly did and had no information about him or the people in his group. P27 added that this, however, was only his personal impression.

Wiedner recalled that P27 was interrogated a second time. P27 confirmed.

Wiedner asked about the procedure. P27 explained that it was similar to the first interrogation, but shorter.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P27 was beaten/mistreated during the second interrogation. P27 affirmed.

Wiedner asked whether there were again two people who interrogated him. P27 said there were two people, maybe more.

Wiedner concluded that there were three people. P27 confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether there was anything special about the third person. Raslan's Defense Counsel Böker intervened, saying that P27 did not confirm that there was a third person. Wiedner said he understood that P27 clarified that there was a third person.

P27 explained that during his first interrogation, there was definitely one or two people. The two of them were not both present all the time. At his second interrogation, there were two people and a third person. P27 explained that he did not know whether the third person was present the entire time. He could not see them and only differentiate between them by their dialect and voice. He said one of them had a dialect typical for the coastal region. Two other people did not have such a dialect.

Wiedner confirmed that P27 told the BKA the same information, as he explained to them that he could not say with certainty that all three people were always present. Wiedner further cited from the BKA's minutes saying that P27 mentioned that the third person came from time to time and was called "Sir" [sidi/sayyidi]. According to P27, this person also asked him questions and was the boss of the two other people. P27 confirmed this statement.

Wiedner went on to ask P27 about the general detention conditions at Al-Khatib, especially related to air, food and hygiene. P27 said that the hygienic situation was very bad. The air was very humid due to the high number of people. P27 further said that many people had to wear their shirts inside-out because they were so dirty and covered with flies. According to P27, many detainees developed bad allergies. He said that he could not tell whether there was medical treatment in Al-Khatib, however, he never saw any medical treatment. Regarding the food, P27 mentioned that they only got two meals a day. Most times they got rice or potatoes or Syrian lentil soup. P27 added that there was no air conditioning in the cell. That was how he could tell whether he was inside the cell or somewhere else. He said that it was very hot and stuffy inside the cell, which had a strong smell. P27 explained that even though the cell was only separated by a door, there was a big difference regarding quality of air inside the cell and in the hallway. P27 said there was only one toilet inside the cell, which was only separated with a piece of textile. All detainees had to drink from the same plastic bottle.

Wiedner asked about the general condition of other detainees and wanted to know whether some of the detainees were sick. P27 said that many people had certain signs on their body, however, he could not tell whether there were people with chronic diseases.

Wiedner cited from the minutes of P27's interview with the BKA, during which he said that detainees were detained for different durations of time lasting from days to months. Many were very thin and one had diabetes but did not receive medicine in Al-Khatib. P27 confirmed the statement.

Wiedner recalled that P27 mentioned signs of Shabh on the wrists of fellow detainees. Wiedner asked P27 how he knew that these signs were caused by Shabh, whether he heard about it from others or whether he witnessed it himself. P27 said he did not see it himself.

Wiedner asked whether P27 saw any gadgets like rings or hooks. P27 denied, explaining that with his blindfolds he could only see batons and the pieces of hard leather that he already described. He added that in the collective cell, there were gadgets on the ceiling, but no one hung there.

Wiedner wanted to know how P27 knew about this method [Shabh - hanging people by their arms with their feet above the floor]. P27 explained that he himself had to endure Shabh at the Palestine Branch, adding that this was where he saw all the torture methods and was then able to differentiate between them.

Wiedner asked whether anyone in Al-Khatib mention anything about torture. P27 affirmed, explaining that most of them were tortured during interrogation. P27 said he did not ask anyone directly; they spoke about it in general. He said that every time people returned from interrogation, he could see signs of torture on their bodies. P27 further explained that detainees also gave each other advice.

Wiedner wanted to know whether anyone explicitly told P27 about Shabh. P27's counsel, Dr. Oehmichen, said her client already answered the question. Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, saying that P27 did not answer the question yet. P27 said "yes".

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether P27 meant that someone indeed told him about Shabh. P27 said that they were talking about things that happened nine years ago, however, if he remembers correctly, someone explicitly told him about Shabh.

Wiedner asked whether anyone explicitly mentioned other methods [of torture] such as electroshocks. P27 affirmed.

Wiedner asked P27 to turn to his right and wanted to know whether P27 recognized one of the defendants from "back then." P27 denied, explaining that he does not recognize anyone from back then, however, as he already told the BKA, he recognizes one of them from the media.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, asking what exactly P27 saw on 'social media.' P27 said he saw Raslan's picture in the media.

Wiedner went on to ask P27 whether his relatives were informed about his detention and knew about his whereabouts. P27 denied, adding that his family only knew that he was in Al-Qaboun once he was released from Palestine Branch. According to P27, they knew from third parties.

Wiedner recalled that P27 was detained at different detention facilities and asked P27 - admitting that this would be a strange and difficult question - to compare Al-Khatib to Palestine Branch and say whether Al-Khatib was better or worse regarding overall condition and mistreatment. P27 said that his arrival at both Branches, from the time he left the bus to when he entered the cell, was the same. However, one difference related to the number and duration of interrogations, which was greater and longer at Palestine Branch. P27 added that beatings at Palestine Branch were also more intense and involved deadly beatings.

Wiedner wanted to know whether P27 heard anything about sexual assault at Al-Khatib. P27 said he did not hear anything about that matter when he was there, but he did once he was released.

Wiedner recalled that P27 told the BKA that he heard from fellow detainees at Palestine Branch about sexual assault in Al-Khatib and instances where detainees were raped at Al-Khatib. P27 explained to the BKA that he only heard about such instances. P27 confirmed the statement.

Wiedner said he had one more question for P27, if he felt comfortable answering. Wiedner asked P27 whether he suffered any physical or psychological consequences from his time in Al-Khatib. P27 said he had no physical damage from Al-Khatib and that his psychological damages related to his entire time in detention. Wiedner said he was aware of that. P27 added that, if the court allowed, he wants to add that while he might get confused from time to time regarding certain details such as whether he went upstairs or downstairs or the number of people, he is sure that Al-Khatib is a horrible place and that calling it horrible would still be a nice description. After a short consultation with his counsel, P27 added that Dr. Oehmichen reminded him that he received psychological treatment for 1.5 years after his detention.

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Polz recalled that P27 saw Raslan's picture on social media and asked him whether he had any knowledge about what Raslan did after he left Syria or about what he did at all. P27 asked whether Polz wanted to know whether he knew what Raslan did. Polz confirmed. P27 said he was the head of interrogation at Al-Khatib.

Polz wanted to know how P27 knew that. P27 said that in 2013 or 2014 he spoke to a friend in Turkey. This friend told him that Raslan joined the opposition and previously worked at Al-Khatib.

Polz asked whether P27 believed his friend when he told him that Raslan joined the opposition. P27 explained that he did not realize the information, because the word “interrogator” was already scary itself.

Polz wanted to know whether Raslan, during his time with the opposition, “supplied anything or was of worth for the opposition”? P27 said he cannot provide an answer.

Defense Counsels’ Questioning

Raslan’s Defense Counsel Böcker wanted to know whether P27 can imagine that Raslan participated in an opposition conference in Egypt. P27 said he heard about it through the media.

Böcker asked when P27 heard about it. [Judge Wiedner had to remind Böcker to speak up so everyone could hear him.] Böcker recalled that P27 previously mentioned that he heard about Raslan around 2013/14 and asked P27 to confirm this. P27 did not know to what Böcker was referring. Böcker clarified that he was talking about Raslan’s participation in a conference in Egypt. P27 explained that he heard about a defected person who had the rank of an investigator. However, he was not sure whether this was in 2013 or 2014.

Böcker recalled that P27 told the police that he learned about Raslan joining the opposition at the time “of the liberation of Raqqa”. Böcker asked P27 whether he remembered the statement and if he could explain when he heard about it. P27 asked whether Böcker wanted to know if he heard about the statement in 2013 or 2016. Böcker explained that he wanted to know when in 2013 or 2014 did P27 hear about [Raslan joining the opposition]. P27’s counsel, Dr. Oehmichen, asked Böcker to provide more context. Böcker recalled P27 saying that he heard about Raslan, so his question was when exactly he heard about it. Böcker repeated the citation from the BKA’s minutes. P27 said he cannot remember the exact date; however, it was between the end of 2013 and mid-2014.

Böcker wanted to know whether it is correct that P27 got information about the conference around the “time of the liberation of Raqqa”. P27 did not know whether he previously phrased it like that. Böcker asked Dr. Oehmichen to take over. Dr. Oehmichen read out the relevant section from P27’s interview with the BKA. P27 said that [as reflected in the BKA interview citation read by Dr. Oehmichen] he did indeed learn about the conference at the time of “the liberation of Raqqa”.

Raslan’s second defense counsel, Fratzky, wanted to know why P27 felt that Anwar Raslan joining the opposition was unusual. P27 said that he did not personally know Raslan, but he wondered why Raslan joined the opposition when he heard other names [of people who joined]. He added that the defection of the head of interrogations at an intelligence branch would not be strange per se, however the rank/title sounded scary to P27 and his friends.

Fratzky wanted to know whether P27 knows of former “employees of the regime” who joined the opposition. P27 affirmed.

Fratzky asked why it sounded strange to P27 that Raslan joined the opposition if P27 heard of similar cases. P27 said it often happened that people defected and joined the opposition. However, he did not want to believe that an interrogator who might have interrogated him did such a thing. P27 concluded that he could not say whether Raslan actually was the person who interrogated him or not.

Al-Gharib’s defense counsel, Schuster, recalled that the BKA asked P27 about demonstrations and he told them about tribes that ruled the area. Schuster asked P27 to explain what he meant by that. P27 did not understand the question.

Schuster pointed to P27's statement that the security forces tried to be careful at the beginning of the demonstrations because they knew that the region was ruled by tribes. P27 explained that "ruled" would probably not be the best term, however, the region was dominated by tribes. P27 added that this was not his own opinion; one could google it.

Schuster said he tries to understand all the aspects of the Syrian conflict but does not always get them. That is why he asked P27 this question. He asked P27 for more details on the relationship between the tribes and the government's careful reaction. P27 said that after a while, the government became more confident in its reactions. He added that in 2011 the government was rather careful due to the tribes in the region. P27 explained that if, for example, someone from one of the tribes was killed, the government feared the reaction of the tribe and that the tribe might oppose the government.

Schuster wanted to know which tribes P27 was talking about and asked him about their names and ethnicities. P27 said there are people who know more about this topic than him.

Schuster asked whether it was correct that the majority in Raqqa were Sunnis. P27 said that if Schuster wants statistics, he must ask someone else because he could not really answer the question.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Schuster whether he was fine with the answers. Schuster affirmed.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

P27's counsel, Dr. Oehmichen, asked P27 whether he thinks that Anwar Raslan actually joined the opposition. P27 said it would be difficult to answer this question.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, saying that the question was already answered and that all questions should relate to facts, not speculations. Dr. Oehmichen said she is fine with the answer anyway.

Böcker further stated that the schedule for the coming weeks was confusing. He asked the judges to clarify it. Presiding Judge Kerber and Judge Wiedner repeated the schedule for the coming weeks.

The proceedings adjourned at 12:15PM.

The next hearing will take place on February 3, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 26

Hearing Dates: February 3, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 59 – February 3, 2021

Deußing, a criminal chief inspector with the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA), testified about the content and background of a questioning with a witness, who was detained twice and tortured in Al-Khatib. Earlier, the witness told the court that he would not come to Koblenz in person for private reasons.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the cases against Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib will be severed on February 17, with a judgment in Al-Gharib's case following on February 24.

Day 59 of Trial – February 3, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 am with 3 media representatives and 4 spectators present.<sup>2</sup> Attorney Ms. Friedrich appeared as replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Dr. Anna Oehmichen, Plaintiff Counsels Khubaib Ali Mohammed and Manuel Reiger were not present.

After starting the session, Presiding Judge Kerber asked the audience whether the changes they made to the sound system were successful so everyone could hear what is said and is able to follow the proceedings. The audience affirmed.

Presiding Judge Kerber mentioned that the court summoned the witness [name redacted] twice. His counsel Mr. Bahns said the first time that the witness had other commitments and the second time, that the witness could not make it to Koblenz. Judge Kerber said the court interpreted the latter statement as a final refusal of the witness to testify in court and therefore summoned Mr. Deußing, the Criminal Chief Inspector of the German Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) who previously interviewed the witness.

---

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

<sup>2</sup> No one requested access to Arabic interpretation.

Testimony of Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing<sup>3</sup>

Presiding Judge Kerber said that since Deußing already testified several times in this trial, she will keep the instructions short and only remind him of his duty to tell the truth. She went on to ask him for his personal information and whether he was related to the defendants by blood or marriage. Deußing denied the latter, repeating his personal information and confirming that he can be summoned through his employer's address.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber explained that she has only a few questions that she would like to clarify before handing it over to Judge Wiedner. Kerber asked Deußing about the last name of the witness, mentioning that he apparently had two last names. Deußing affirmed, explaining that from the witness's passport and the documents which the BKA received from their Swedish counterpart, prior to their own [the BKA's] interview with the witness, indicated that the witness had two last names [name redacted].

Judge Kerber asked Deußing to describe the circumstances that led to the BKA's interview with the witness. Deußing explained that the BKA sent a mutual legal assistance request (MLA) to their Swedish colleagues after they met at an international conference in The Hague. There, the Swedish police said that they interviewed a human rights activist who mentioned the name Anwar Raslan during this interview. Deußing said he forwarded this information to the German Federal Prosecutor General (GBA), asking him to issue a mutual legal assistant request to the Swedish counterparts in order to get the transcripts of their interviews with the witness and the opportunity for the BKA to question the witness as well. The GBA then issued the respective request through a European Investigation Order. Deußing further explained that when he, himself, tried to arrange a date for a witness interview with his colleagues in Sweden, attorney Dr. Kroker approached him, and told him on behalf of his client, the witness, that he would agree to a BKA interview in Germany. Deußing said the witness eventually came to Berlin at the end of August 2018, where he was interviewed by the BKA in their premises. The interview was conducted with the help of an interpreter and lasted around 10 hours. Deußing added, that they had several breaks in between, one of them for around ninety minutes due to technical issues.

Judge Kerber wanted to know whether the witness was informed about his rights and duties. Deußing affirmed.

Kerber asked whether communication between the interpreter and witness worked well. Deußing affirmed, adding that in his interviews, he always asks the interpreter to introduce himself to the witness, so the witness gets to know the interpreter and feels comfortable talking to him.

Kerber said her last question (for now) would be whether everything was re-translated to the witness. Deußing affirmed again, explaining that the re-translation took around ninety minutes and the witness made several changes to the transcript, which indicated that he thoroughly followed the re-translation.

---

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: For the purpose of this report, the witness in court, Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing, will be called by his last name, while the witness who was initially summoned and interviewed by Deußing will be called "witness".

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner recalled that the witness was interviewed in Berlin and asked Deußing whether the witness was generally willing to cooperate when they were in contact. Deußing explained that he was not in contact with the witness, as his Swedish colleagues arranged everything. Deußing said he was then approached by Dr. Kroker who told him that the witness was willing to come to Berlin. According to Deußing, the witness was willing to testify during their interview, however, he was worried that Anwar Raslan might get to know about his testimony. However, the witness was willing to testify in court as well.

Wiedner wanted to know why the witness did not want to come to Koblenz to testify in court. Deußing said he cannot answer this question, as he was not in contact with the witness after the interview in Berlin. All he could say is that the witness was worried about Raslan knowing about his testimony.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the overall situation of the interview; whether the witness provided detailed descriptions or was rather hesitant. Deußing said regarding the witness's cooperation, he could say that the witness was willing to testify. At the beginning of the interview, the witness's counsel at the time, Dr. Kroker, said that the situation in Syria was still very stressful for the witness and asked Deußing to start, if possible, with questions about the detention in Al-Khatib before talking about the witness's arrest.

Wiedner asked Deußing to tell the court about the content of the witness's testimony. Deußing said he first wants to add that the witness took his time to check the re-translation and made several corrections to his testimony. Regarding the content of the testimony, Deußing said that he called the witness by his second last name, as that was easier. He asked the witness about his personal information: he was born in 1991 in Damascus and studied IT and engineering. The witness worked for UNHCR before the conflict in Syria started. After the conflict started, he worked with "Syrian Youth for Change" where he was responsible for disseminating flyers on the internet and via SMS; informing people about upcoming demonstrations. According to Deußing, the witness first did this work only related to Damascus, then all of Syria. He was arrested in February 2011. Deußing explained that, as Dr. Kroker asked, they detailed his arrest at a later point of the interview. Deußing further added that the witness said that he had family problems after his arrest and detention, due to his activities. According to Deußing, the witness went to Darayya, a region that was not under government control, after he was released. He worked for "Witness" at the time, an NGO collecting information and documentation to be used in future criminal cases. The witness was part of their training program. After that, the witness went to Deir ez-Zor and from there he moved to Turkey in 2013. In 2015, he left Turkey for Sweden, where he successfully applied for asylum. Deußing said the witness was heavily involved in the work of an organization called "Syrian Archive" and through this work, was in contact with Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch. Deußing said that regarding the subject matter of the witness interview, the witness was one of the first victims who was interviewed during the investigations in the case against Anwar Raslan.

Judge Wiedner intervened, asking whether it was correct that the interview took place on [information redacted]. Deußing confirmed, adding that the witness's detention in Al-Khatib started in February 2011 when he was arrested together with friends at a raid and taken to Al-Khatib. Deußing said the witness told him that he had to undress until he was naked and was frisked at his arrival at Al-Khatib. He was then taken to a solitary cell (Deußing did not remember the size of the cell). According to Deußing, nothing happened to the witness during the first days at Al-Khatib.

The guards only threw empty sheets of paper in his cell for him to write down his information. He was taken to interrogation after five days. The witness told Deußing that he was taken to an officer who interrogated him for less than thirty minutes. Deußing recalled that the witness did not understand the purpose of this interrogation as he was not asked any “actual questions.” He was then taken back to his cell. There, again, nothing happened for several days.

Wiedner cited the BKA’s transcript of the witness’s interview during which he told Deußing that he was detained in Al-Khatib for around 58 to 63 days and taken to his first interrogation after approximately one week. The interrogation lasted around twenty minutes. Deußing confirmed the statement.

Deußing mentioned that he sometimes does not understand the judges very well. Judge Wiedner and one of the court officers explained to Deußing how to switch on the loudspeakers at the witness stand and how to coordinate that with his microphone.

Deußing went on to explain that the BKA questioned the witness only about four of his interrogations. However, the witness said that he was interrogated fifty times, always varying in terms of intensity and duration. Deußing explained that they simply did not have the time to go through all the interrogations and wanted to spare the witness unnecessary suffering, so they focused on four interrogations. According to Deußing, the witness’s second interrogation in Al-Khatib took place within the first month after his arrest. The witness told Deußing that the interrogation lasted several hours and was conducted by the same officer as the first interrogation. The witness was able to recognize the officer from his voice. Deußing explained that the second interrogation was very focused, detailing the witness’s participation in the movement “Syrian Youth for Change”, his role, and the names of other members, especially foreigners. Deußing further told the court that the witness “apparently made an ironic comment about the President”, which was the reason why the officer called a guard to “teach him some manners”. The witness said the guard was called Abu Al-Mot [father of death]. The witness could not tell Deußing whether the interrogation officer stayed in the room while he was beaten by Abu Al-Mot. According to Deußing, the witness was first beaten in his face, then forced into a tire and beaten, before enduring Falaqa [beatings on the soles of his feet]. Deußing said he cannot remember whether this was after the witness’s first or second interrogation, however, after one of them, he had to stand in the hallway for several hours before he was taken back to his cell. The witness described that his way back to the cell was very painful because his feet were hurting and he could barely walk.

Judge Wiedner said he had one short question regarding the time between the witness’s first and second interrogations. He asked Deußing whether the witness mentioned anything about the capacities and occupation in Al-Khatib at that time. Deußing said the witness mentioned that it got more hectic and later said that he heard people being tortured particularly on Fridays.

Wiedner cited from the BKA’s transcript of the witness interview that the witness described that he was not interrogated for a time period of a few weeks, but less than a month. At some point during this period, it got more hectic in Al-Khatib, the witness assumed that this was when the demonstrations got more intense. People were tortured and interrogated daily. Wiedner concluded that Deußing’s statement confirmed this description.

Wiedner said, based on Deußing’s previous descriptions, he assumed that the witness was blindfolded. Deußing confirmed, adding that he was blindfolded especially during interrogations and on his way to interrogations. He did not have to wear blindfolds in his cell. The witness further told Deußing that there was a small gap in the door of his cell, through which he could see the area in front of his cell.

Deußing explained that during interrogations, the witness was blindfolded most times. However, one time, when he was interrogated by Anwar Raslan, he did not have to wear blindfolds, as he was shown pictures of a girl allegedly affiliated with “Syrian Youth for Change”. The witness was told to identify her, which he could not do.

Judge Wiedner recalled that regarding mistreatment and torture, the witness told the BKA the following: “After they slapped my face, I was beaten on my back three times, before being beaten on my legs. They then squeezed me in a tire, so it was easier for the torturer to torture me. They then beat my feet with some sort of cable. I was blindfolded; however, I could recognize that there were two people. One who held the tire and one who beat me. I cannot say how long this went on. Afterward, I had to stand in the hallway, facing the wall. Everyone who came past me hit me. On my way back to the cell, I fell down several times.”

Wiedner asked Deußing what happened next during the witness interview, whether Deußing showed the witness pictures of certain people. Deußing said they showed the witness pictures of Anwar Raslan. While the witness was not sure whether the person in the first picture was actually Raslan, he identified Raslan on the second picture. Deußing explained that, according to the witness, Raslan was not the one who interrogated him at his first and second interrogation in Al-Khatib, however, he coincidentally met him at another occasion in Al-Khatib. Deußing said he and his colleague then detailed this incident with the witness.

Raslan’s Defense Counsel Böcker intervened, asking whether Deußing showed the witness a picture of Raslan. Deußing confirmed.

Böcker complained that Deußing’s descriptions regarding the identification of Raslan would not entirely be congruent to the transcript of the witness’s interview with the BKA. Böcker asked the judges to allow him to ask a couple of questions on this matter. Presiding Judge Kerber allowed Böcker to ask a few questions.

Defense Counsels Questioning

Raslan’s Defense Counsel Böcker recalled that Deußing mentioned that the witness identified Anwar Raslan. Böcker wanted to know whether Deußing’s statements were based on his memory of the interview or whether he read the transcript of the interview in preparation of his testimony in court.

Presiding Judge Kerber intervened, reminding Böcker that he is only allowed to ask short questions at this point.

Böcker asked Deußing whether the witness definitely identified Anwar Raslan on the pictures or whether there were certain limitations to his identification. Deußing said that he just provided a summary of the witness’s testimony in his own words. He added that, if Böcker wants to know the witness’s exact word in this situation, he had to take a look at the transcript of the interview. Deußing further explained that the transcripts represent the witness’s exact words as they were re-translated during the interview and checked by the witness. The degree of identification would also become apparent from the transcript.

Böcker said he is aware of all that, however, he wanted to know from Deußing whether the witness said something like ‘I think it is him. I am not sure but he looks like him’. Deußing said if that is what the transcript says, then the witness said it like that.

Judge Wiedner's Questioning

Judge Wiedner told Böcker that he would have asked these questions in due time. Böcker said he was aware of that. However, he left another statement from Deußing uncommented and could not do that a second time. He added that he feels better now that he asked this question and clarified the matter.

Judge Wiedner cited the BKA's transcript where the witness said that the person in the second picture looked like Anwar Raslan. Deußing confirmed, explaining that the transcript always says exactly what the interpreter said.

Wiedner cited another paragraph from the BKA's transcript where the witness said that he thought that Raslan was the person in the second picture, however, he was not sure and he added that the person in the picture looked like Raslan. The witness further added that the person in this picture had the same birthmark as Raslan. According to the witness, the person in the first picture looked similar to Raslan as well, however, the longer he looked at the picture the more certain he was that the person in the first picture is not Raslan, because Raslan was a bit heavier. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Deußing and his colleagues asked the witness about the situations where he met Raslan before they were talking about the degree of identification. Deußing said they went on to talk about the coincidental encounter between the witness and the person whom he identified as Anwar Raslan. The witness explained that an unknown guard came to his cell and poured water over him. The guard then took him to a hall where he had to stand and wait. From this hall, the witness was able to look into another room. He saw three people in this room, all of them wore suits, the person whom he later identified as Anwar Raslan wore a tie as well. The witness described that this person yelled at him to look down at the floor and asked him for his cell number. When he said that his cell number was No.8, this person yelled at the guard, telling him that he asked for No. 13 and ordered to take No. 8 back to his cell to get No. 13 instead. Deußing recalled that regarding the situation of other detainees, the witness described that he saw this detainee (No. 13, the Iraqi) passing his cell (No. 8) when he was taken to a hall by some guards. These guards then tried to squeeze the person in a tire, however, the person was too thick, so the guards started beating him anyway. Deußing said the witness then never saw this person again.

Wiedner wanted to know more about "the Iraqi" and asked Deußing whether the witness identified other people as well. Deußing said he remembered that the witness identified this person as Iraqi, however, he could not remember why the witness identified him as such.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript of the witness interview, during which, in context of the witness identifying Anwar Raslan as one of the interrogators, the witness described that this person shouted at him to look down at the floor and asked whether he was Iraqi. The witness denied and the person whom he identified as Anwar Raslan (all three wore suits, two of them wore a tie as well) [see context above] asked for his cell number and when the witness said it was No. 8, the person called a guard, yelled at him and told him to get No. 13 instead. Wiedner said that later during the interview, the witness said that he identified a detainee as Iraqi due to his language. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know more about the second situation in which the witness met the person he later identified as Anwar Raslan. Deußing explained that the second situation was no coincidence. He recalled that the witness told him that he was again taken from his cell. However, this interrogation was different. Previously, he was first questioned and then beaten. This time, he was taken to a big hall where he was beaten.

The witness described to the BKA that he had to lay down on his belly and put his legs up. He was then beaten on his feet with an iron stick, studded with nails or other sharp items. According to Deußing, he further described that he was taken to a different room afterward, where he was given a sheet of paper to write down his activities [regarding demonstrations]. The witness told Deußing that he also met a well-known journalist there, however, he forgot his name. The witness further described that he was then taken to a room where the same interrogation officer from his previous interrogations and the person he later identified as Anwar Raslan waited for him and showed him pictures of a girl allegedly affiliated with “Syrian Youth for Change” whom the witness was supposed to identify, however, he said that he could not identify her. Deußing told the court that the witness was then taken to another room where he had to hang from the ceiling for a long time. The witness said that while he hung there, someone burned him with a hot item, probably a cigarette, and he was exposed to electroshocks.

Wiedner wanted to clarify whether the witness told Deußing that he had to endure torture/mistreatment while the person he identified as Raslan was present. Deußing confirmed, adding that after the witness had to hang from the ceiling, he was taken back to the room where Raslan was before, however, he was not there this time, only the previous interrogation officer was there. Deußing said the witness told him that this interrogation officer said that ‘a bird told me that you will sing today’. He then called Abu Al-Mot to make the witness talk, telling Abu Al-Mot that ‘if necessary, make him talk with blood on the walls’. The witness was then beaten with a metal pole until he fell unconscious.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness was blindfolded when he saw the person whom he identified as Anwar Raslan, or if he saw him directly. Deußing said that the witness was shown pictures in this situation, so he was not blindfolded. He was told to look down, but he was able to look up once and see the person.

Wiedner cited the BKA’s transcript according to which the witness said that he was once tortured in a hall prior to an interrogation. He was beaten with an iron stick studded with nails and beaten on the soles of his feet with a cable. The witness said that three people were present during this torture, however, Raslan was not one of them. He was then taken to an interrogation and after this incident, taken to the room where he had to hang from the ceiling for several hours at least. The witness said that his hands were swollen from this procedure [Shabh]. A person burned his arm with a hot item, probably a cigarette, he had to endure electroshocks, was beaten, and was kept from sleeping, maybe for several days. According to the BKA’s transcript the witness showed Deußing and his colleagues the scar on his arm. Deußing confirmed the statement.

Wiedner asked whether it would be correct that the scar was on the witness’s right elbow. Deußing said that if it is written in the transcript like that, it would be the case.

Wiedner wanted to know whether Deußing remembered if he asked the witness to provide a narrower time frame for his encounter with Raslan. Deußing said he could not remember.

Wiedner recalled that, according to the BKA’s transcript, the witness said that he met Raslan in April 2011, however, he could not provide an exact day. He was interrogated afterward and transferred to another Branch. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether the witness said anything else about Anwar Raslan. Deußing recalled that at one point, he asked the witness how he got to know Raslan's name. The witness answered that he did not know his name when he was still in Al-Khatib but found out later. The witness mentioned that a person in Syria was known because he appeared at a demonstration in Douma and later gave a radio interview after he defected. Deußing said the witness told the BKA that he recognized the voice from this radio interview as the voice of the person who interrogated him in Al-Khatib and yelled at him on another occasion. The witness then started to do research on the internet and eventually found Raslan's Facebook profile with his picture.

Wiedner asked what the witness said about the time he first assigned the name Anwar Raslan to the person he knew from Al-Khatib. Wiedner wanted to know whether this was before or after the witness's research. Deußing said as far as he remembered, the first assignment happened after the radio interview, which also was the reason for the witness to start doing more research. The witness also mentioned that he spoke to Anwar Al-Bunni who mentioned that he met Raslan in Germany.

Judge Wiedner cited another paragraph from the BKA's transcript. When the witness was asked about when he first came across the name Anwar Raslan, he said that he heard a radio interview that Raslan gave after his defection. He recognized Raslan's voice as the voice of the person who interrogated him at Branch 251. The witness added that he recognized the voice from its volume and an accent typical for people from Hama. He then searched for his face on the internet. According to the witness, he found him on social media two years after that. The witness further told the BKA that Raslan was introduced as Anwar Abbas Raslan in the radio interview. When the witness was asked about Anwar Al-Bunni, he told the BKA that he spoke with Dr. Kroker and Anwar Al-Bunni about Branch 251. That was when Al-Bunni told him that Raslan is in Germany and that Al-Bunni saw him there. Deußing confirmed the statement.

Wiedner asked Deußing whether the witness also mentioned something about Raslan's position and his rank. Deußing said the witness called him "boss" if he remembered correctly, he called him "boss of investigations". Deußing said the witness explained that the guards and interrogation officers from his first and second interrogation called Raslan "Sir" [sidi/sayyidi]. Deußing further said that the witness told him that the guards saluted in front of the person whom he identified as Anwar Raslan. However, the witness also said that he did not hear that this person (whom he identified as Raslan) gave any orders during his interrogation.

Wiedner went on to ask about the location of the witness's interrogation by the person whom he identified as Raslan. Deußing said, according to the witness, the room was better equipped than the room of his first interrogation. He explained that the room where his first interrogation took place had only one iron table, while the room of the person whom he identified as Raslan, had a bigger table.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript of the witness interview during which the witness explained that the person he later identified as Anwar Raslan was leading the interrogation and had the position of the Head of investigations at Al-Khatib. The witness further mentioned that whenever this person (Raslan) was there, everyone was wearing uniforms, while when he was not there, guards wore "pajamas/sweatsuits." However, the witness added that he did not witness any orders coming from Raslan. He only witnessed him yelling when he got angry at one of the guards and that people called him "Sir" [sidi/sayyidi, سيد]. Deußing again confirmed the statement.

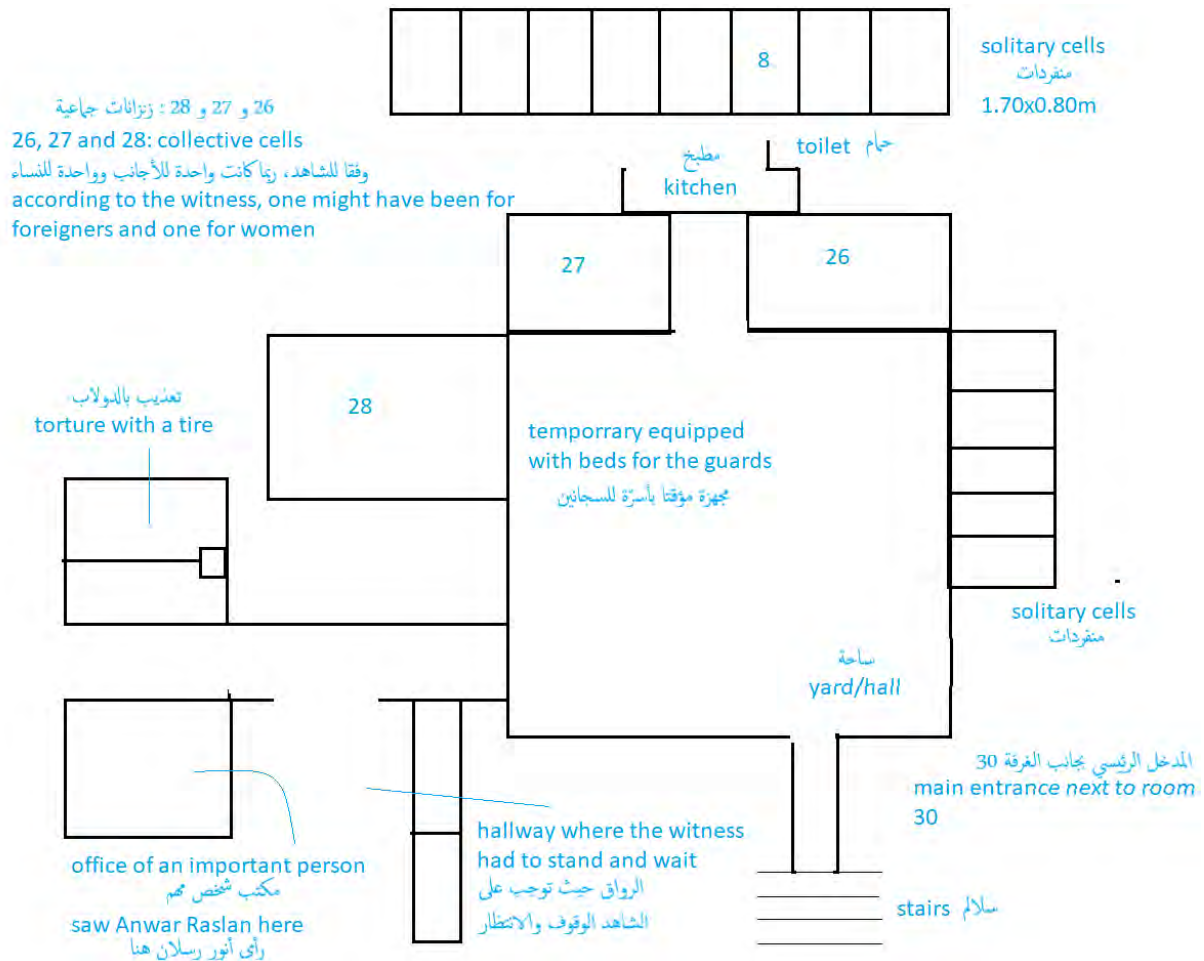

Wiedner wanted to know whether Deußing further questioned the witness about how he knew Raslan's position. Deußing said he could not remember whether he asked any details, if he did ask for details, one could find it in the transcript.

Wiedner went on to ask Deußing about the witness's descriptions of the overall detention situation and mistreatment and torture of other detainees. Deußing said he explicitly asked the witness whether he saw people being mistreated/tortured at Al-Khatib. In answering this question, the witness explained that he could see the area directly in front of his cell through a gap in the door of his cell. That was where he saw 9 to 15 people being tortured. He did not witness further torture, however, he heard screams, especially on Fridays. Deußing recalled that he asked the witness how he could tell that it was Fridays, the witness then explained that there was a certain timeframe during which he was allowed to use the toilet three times. He assumed that this time frame was one day. Deußing summarized that the witness counted the days this way, as his cell was completely dark.

Wiedner cited from the BKA's transcript, according to which the witness explained that he saw a person, "the Iraqi" being tortured by four guards in front of the witness's cell. Amongst others, they used electroshocks, after they poured water over the person. The witness further described that he could only see a hall and kitchen from his cell. He witnessed nine to fifteen people being tortured in this area. The witness also mentioned that he did not see torture in the interrogation rooms, however, he realized a difference in Al-Khatib between the time before the start of big demonstrations and afterward: after the start of big demonstrations, he heard screams from torture several times a day, especially on Fridays and Saturdays. Wiedner said from reading this, he would wonder whether the interrogation rooms were close to the cells or not, since the witness said he could hear screams but not see people being tortured. Deußing said that the witness created a sketch of the underground detention facility during his interview with the BKA. On this occasion, he described that there was some kind of hall in front of his cell. He had to leave this area to get to the interrogation rooms and the room he identified as the office of the person he later identified as Anwar Raslan.

Presiding Judge Kerber said the court will now inspect the sketch that the witness created:

[below is a recreation of the sketch which was shown in court. The recreation is based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear and see in court]

Plaintiff Counsel Bahns intervened, asking for a break to let some fresh air inside the court room.

Judge Wiedner said he had only two short questions before making a break. He first wanted to know how long the witness was detained in Al-Khatib. Deußing said that if he remembered correctly, he was there for around two months.

Wiedner confirmed that, according to the BKA's transcript, the witness was in Al-Khatib for more than two months. Wiedner further wanted to know what happened to the witness after leaving Al-Khatib. Deußing explained that the witness was transferred to Branch 285. The witness said that he also received the "welcoming party" there and was interrogated as well, however without the use of torture. Deußing said that the witness told the BKA that the interrogators at Branch 285 apparently had the results of his very first interrogation and asked respective questions. He was then taken to a court from where he was transferred to Adra prison where he was detained until his release in September or October 2011.

***

[15 minute break]

***

Prosecutors' Questioning

Prosecutor Polz wanted to know whether the witness provided details about his cell in Al-Khatib. Deußing said that the witness described the size of the cell, however, he could not remember exactly.

Deußing added that the witness also said that there was no daylight. However, Deußing did not remember whether the witness said that directly or indirectly by talking about the scheduled times to use the toilet.

Polz cited from the BKA's transcript where the witness was asked when his next detention was. He replied that it was less than a month after his first interrogation. However, it was difficult to count the days because it was always dark inside his cell. He was allowed to use the toilet three times during a certain period of time. He assumed that this was per day, so he kept track of time by counting these periods. Deußing confirmed.

Plaintiff Counsels' Questioning

Plaintiff Counsel Scharmer wanted to know what the witness said about the communication between the person he later identified as Raslan and himself during the interrogation when he had to identify the girl from the pictures. Deußing asked Scharmer to cite from the transcript as he could not remember. Scharmer cited that the witness described that when he had a look at the people around him, Raslan yelled at him, telling him to look at the pictures, otherwise he 'would slam him'. Deußing said these would indeed be the witness's words if the transcript says so.

Judge Kerber's Questioning

Presiding Judge Kerber said she was not sure whether this was already mentioned, so she wanted to clarify how the witness knew that he was in Al-Khatib. Deußing said he described the location of the building, mentioning its proximity to the red crescent hospital and Baghdad street.

Kerber cited from the BKA's transcript where the witness explained that he was arrested on February 19, 2011 and taken to Baghdad street. He added that the detention facility there would be known as Branch 251, but people would just call it Al-Khatib. He further said that it was close to the red crescent hospital. Deußing confirmed.

Kerber recalled that the witness mentioned a gun during his interview with the Swedish police and asked Deußing whether he and his colleague asked the witness about this incident. Deußing explained that they had a look at the transcript of the Swedish interviews. He added that that the witness's first interview with the Swedish police lasted three hours and the second interview was less than thirty minutes. From these interviews, it seemed as if the witness was threatened with a gun by the person leading one of his interrogations. Deußing said that when he asked the witness about it, he clarified that this incident happened at Branch 285.

Kerber cited the relevant section from the BKA's transcript where the witness was asked about an incident where an interrogator put a gun against his head. The witness clarified that this incident took place at Branch 285, not Branch 251. He added that the interrogator was not Raslan but someone else, whose name he knew, but could not remember.

Judge Kerber said that if none of the parties had further questions about this matter, they would go on to ask Deußing about another issue. She added that none of the parties should mention the name of the witness about whom they would now talk, as the witness was allowed to conceal personal information [P20 TR#19, day 46].

Judge Wiedner recalled that the witness who testified in Koblenz on November 25, 2020, was shown pictures for identification during her interview with the French police. If he remembered correctly, Raslan's Defense Counsel Böcker had asked to clarify certain aspects, which was the reason why he contacted Deußing. Deußing explained that he had a look at the relevant file and remembered that the BKA found out about the witness's interview with the French police in December 2018.

The BKA then requested a transcript of the interview and asked to hear the witness again, themselves. The French police showed the witness several pictures during their questioning, a total of five pages. However, these pictures were not the pictures that the BKA used to identify Anwar Raslan and Eyad Al-Gharib. That was why the BKA then asked the French police to do another presentation of pictures.

Judge Wiedner said he wanted to clarify the chronological order and recalled that the witness was twice interviewed by the French police and one time by the BKA. Deußing confirmed.

Wiedner wanted to know whether it was correct that the first interview was in 2017 and the witness was not shown any pictures on this occasion. Deußing affirmed.

Wiedner referred to an interview from [information redacted] during which the witness was shown five pages of pictures. He asked Deußing whether it was correct that these were not the BKA's pictures. Deußing confirmed, adding that he contacted his French colleagues after Wiedner approached him with this question. His French colleagues told him on the phone that they presented the witness a sample of pictures of suspects from French investigations.

Wiedner asked whether it was correct that the BKA's selection of pictures was presented [information redacted]. Deußing affirmed, adding that he remembered that it would have been unnecessary for the BKA to travel to Paris only to show the witness their pictures if the French police would have told them earlier that they would conduct a second interview.

Deußing was dismissed as a witness.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the Parties whether anyone had administrative things to clarify.

Al-Gharib's Defense Counsel Schuster said he already told Judge Wiedner that he would like to submit an application to take evidence, adding that this application would in his opinion not prolong or hinder the proceedings.

Presiding Judge Kerber told Schuster to read out his application.

Schuster explained that he is making an effort to always keep his record complete. As he did not have relevant notes and documents on his record, he asked colleagues for clarification. As they also did not have relevant notes, he decided to submit the following application to take evidence.

[The following is a summary of the application to take evidence, based on what the Trial Monitor was able to hear in court]

Application to take evidence:

Request to partially read out the transcript of Eyad Al-Gharib's asylum-seeking interview with the German Federal Office for Migration (BAMF) to prove the following facts:

- 1) In answering questions about his former professional activities in Syria, Eyad Al-Gharib described that he worked at the Religion Branch where he received a five-month training and was tasked to collect information from mosques and attend prayers, especially Friday prayers to observe what the Imam was preaching.*
- 2) When asked about his superiors at the Intelligence Service, Al-Gharib said that he was reporting to Kamal Al-Ahmad.*

- 3) In answering questions about his defection, Al-Gharib explained that he did not want to work an office job and wanted to work at another Branch. He, therefore, started working in Al Zabadani. However, his boss Kamal Al-Ahmad asked him to return, so he stayed at the religion Branch for two more months. Al-Gharib then explained that he then worked at Division 40 starting in June 2011. According to Al-Gharib, Division 40 was only one kilometer from [Bashar] Al-Assad's house.

Reasoning:

There has been a misunderstanding based on Klaus Wöllner's testimony on May 18, 2020, which needs to be resolved. Witness Wöllner told the court that Al-Gharib went from the Religion Branch directly to Division 40. This is incorrect. The taking of evidence showed that Al-Gharib only wanted to be transferred to al-Aswad. He then only returned to the Religion Branch on Kamal Al-Ahmad's request. Al-Gharib worked for the 'mafiosi-like' Division 40 only after that. It was not Al-Gharib's own instance to work at Division 40, as the Prosecutor claimed. Al-Gharib never said that. Citations from Al-Gharib's asylum-seeking interview were read out to Wöllner, however, he made partially contradictory statements. The Prosecutor concluded from this instance that Al-Gharib voluntarily joined Division 40 because he wanted to do 'something exciting'. This needs to be disproved.

Presiding Judge Kerber thanked Schuster and asked if any of the parties wanted to make a statement on this.

Prosecutor Klinge said the essential parts of Al-Gharib's asylum-seeking interview were already read out in court by making remonstrations. Everything else would be a matter of evaluating evidence.

Judge Kerber said the judges would examine Schuster's application and make a statement at the next hearing.

Raslan's Defense Counsel Fratzky asked whether he and his colleague Böcker had to be present on February 18. He wanted to know in advance to cancel his hotel booking and save the German treasury some money. Judge Kerber assumed the treasury would be grateful for Fratzky's efforts and explained that it seemed as if the court was able to follow the schedule meaning that Fratzky and Böcker did not have to come on that day.

Al-Gharib's Defense Counsel Schuster asked for permission to talk to his client in the courtroom for five minutes after the hearing was closed. Presiding Judge Kerber asked the court guards for their availability and allowed Schuster to talk to his client.

The proceedings adjourned at 11:20 am.

The next hearing will take place on February 17, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL-GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 27

Hearing Dates: February 17 & 18, 2021

CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.

Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>

Trial Day 60 – February 17, 2021

German translations of three documents regarding the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC), provided by the Center for International Justice and Accountability (CIJA), were read out in court, and introduced as evidence. The judges then severed the trial.

In the trial against Eyad Al-Gharib, the prosecutors provided their closing statement. They acknowledged the bravery of survivors who testified before the German police and/or in court, despite the threats this posed on them and their loved ones. The prosecutors further concluded that the Syrian government has been conducting a widespread and systematic attack against their own people since 2011. They put Al-Gharib's acts in the context of this attack and concluded that he is guilty of aiding and abetting crimes against humanity (CAH) in form of torture and severe deprivation of liberty according to the German Code of Crimes against International Law (VStGB). Weighing in on the totality of evidence as well as mitigating and aggravating factors, they requested 5.5 years imprisonment.

Trial Day 61 – February 18, 2021

Al-Gharib's defense read out their closing statements. After thanking the judges for their "elegant" handling of the trial, they paid respect to all survivors as well as insiders who were willing to testify in court. They then provided two alternative statements. The first one was "hypothetically assuming that their client was found guilty". In this statement, they concluded that Al-Gharib significantly contributed to the prosecution against Raslan and called for a sentence of two years on parole. In their second alternative statement, the defense claimed that Al-Gharib acted under duress, calling for an acquittal.

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Day 60 of Trial – February 17, 2021

The hearing began at 9:40 with 6 media representatives and 13 spectators present.<sup>2</sup> Attorney Mr. Sattelmaier appeared as replacement for Plaintiff Counsel Khubaib Ali Mohammed. Plaintiff counsels Manuel Reiger and Andreas Schulz were not present.<sup>3</sup> One of the court interpreters was excused from the session.

After starting the session, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the court would grant the prosecutors' request to sever the trial, but first the translations of three documents regarding the CCMC would be read out in court. She added that the translation of one of the documents was already on the case file, as it was part of the German Federal Criminal Police's (BKA) structural investigations. The court interpreter would translate it ad hoc in court to check the existing translation. The two other documents were already translated, and these translations would be read out by the judges.

Judge Wiedner explained that the first document was a facsimile dated April 21, 2011. He read out the translation:

[the following is a recreation of the document based on what the court monitor was able to hear in court]

Syrian Arab Republic

[...]

Branch 294 of the Intelligence Services

No. 38846/294

Date: April 20, 2011

Top secret

Urgent

Circular

Letter 378 from April 18, 2011

CCMC meeting under the lead of the general secretary of the region regarding the security and political situation. Results:

- 1. Phase of tolerance is over: The saboteurs relied too heavily on our tolerance and requested too much. They equipped themselves with arms and possess a hostile political disposition.*
- 2. Demonstrators and saboteurs need to be confronted with the following means:*
  - a) no releases and transfers to judicial bodies for detainees*
  - b) use of arms against armed people, however no civilians should be harmed*
  - c) confiscate motorcycles that are used by armed people*
  - d) arrest people without raids*

<sup>2</sup> No one requested access to Arabic interpretation.

<sup>3</sup> Presiding Judge Kerber mentioned that she only was informed about attorney Sattelmaier's appearance yesterday evening. When asked about the names of the plaintiffs that he is supposed to represent, he did not know and added that his appearance was due to an emergency on plaintiff counsel Mohammed's side. Judge Kerber added the names of the relevant plaintiffs and said that Sattelmaier would be the fifth person to substitute for counsel Mohammed.

- e) regarding demonstrations, especially at mosques: police need to be prepared, if necessary, confrontations shall be conducted, armed forces shall be contacted for support if necessary
- 3. high committees regarding planning and conducting need to be formed for: middle region, coastal area. CCMC is responsible for Damascus city and rural Damascus.
- 4. the middle region requires special attention.
- 5. the party's apparatus has the following tasks:
  - a) training of [armed] forces
  - b) presence of the party members
  - c) constant availability
  - d) preparedness for confrontations with demonstrations
  - e) surveilling, flagging and arresting people
  - f) [...]
- 6. labor unions shall make clear that any disobedience will have consequences.
- 7. Presidents of the university shall inform their students that they are not allowed to participate in demonstrations, otherwise they will be expelled.
- 8. Regarding the role of media: civil and military media shall send their coverage in due course. They shall comment on their footage centrally and be in constant contact with security forces. Criminal and inadequate banners shall be cut from footage. The media shall further develop creative methods for dealing with hostile media. Civilians and saboteurs need to understand that this is a phase where the law has to be applied with all due force.
- 9. Special meeting of the CCMC regarding preparation and approach to Friday demonstrations required.

Head of the Branches of the Intelligence Services

[seal]

[signature]/4

*To: Director of the Intelligence Services for reference
Deputy director of the Intelligence Services for reference
Branches for reference and implementation*

Judge Kerber asked the interpreter whether the translation was correct and complete. The interpreter affirmed.

Judge Wiedner went on to read out the German translation of a facsimile dated August 11, 2011.

[the following is a recreation of the document based on what the court monitor was able to hear in court]

*Syrian Arab Republic
Bureau of National Security*

*Secret
urgent*

8/8 AQ date: August 6, 2011

Director General of the Branches Hama, Homs, Deir ez-Zor and Dar'a

Regarding the meeting on August 5, 2011 of the CCMC Damascus on [unreadable] handling the crisis, dangers, insufficient coordination regarding exchange of information, continuation of events and losses.

The armed try to compensate for their failures by plundering and terrorizing people.

Request:

Daily joint campaigns shall be organized. The military and security forces shall participate in all these events and storm the places where saboteurs and murderers meet, and arrest them. They shall particularly arrest those who instigate demonstrations, collaborate with foreign forces and deform Syria's image abroad. [unreadable] cleansing of all sectors.

Members of the party and security forces shall be present everywhere.

Install a joint committee for every governorate to which the arrested shall be transferred.

Arrests shall be carried out particularly meticulously to ensure that all members of the relevant groups are spotted.

Daily status reports shall be sent to the Bureau of National Security.

The names of members of the security forces who are neglecting their duties and participating in confiscating arms shall be reported periodically.

All measures need to be implemented in due course to ensure peace.

Signed: Director of the Bureau of National Security

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the interpreter to check the translation. The interpreter confirmed the correctness.

Judge Kerber said that a third document was already on the case file alongside its German translation, However, the interpreter was asked to translate it ad hoc, in order to confirm the existing translation.

[the following is a recreation of the translation, based on what the court monitor was able to hear in court]

Ba'ath Party

Syrian Arab Republic

379 date: April 20, 2011

Top secret

To be stored by the recipient

Meeting minutes of the CCMC from April 20, 2011

Director of the Regional Directorate of Political Security Situation

Results:

- 1. Saboteurs improve their methods aimed at terrorizing civilians and destroying their trust in the Syrian state. They plan Friday demonstrations and might try to transfer their protest movement to other cities.*

2. A new phase has to start to counter this movement. From this day on, it is an open battle that we have to win. The state needs to show its immense power.
3. Detailed plans need to be developed to counter possible protests, especially in Dar'a, Damascus city, Homs and rural Damascus. These plans are to be developed immediately by the Bureau of Political Security. The support of the military and armed forces is requested.
4. Regional armies and armed forces need to develop plans, based on the scenario that hostile activities might spread to all districts. Respective counter measures need to be enforced and coordinated. According to the changing situation, the plans require regular adjustments.
5. Activate military forces.
6. Armed forces shall produce reports on the numbers of attacks and killed soldiers. Based on these reports, it is necessary to prosecute the perpetrators and put them on trial.
7. Relevant methods shall be applied according to the individual situation, as declared by the joint committee.
8. Catch all wanted suspects, amongst them saboteurs, murderers and criminals.
9. The security forces shall focus on gaining information and hunting down criminals with the aim to deliver concrete results.
10. Dead people shall be buried without any gatherings. Families have to commit to this practice before the corpse is handed over to them.
11. The CCMC shall hold daily meetings.
12. Students who participate in demonstrations shall be un-enrolled.
13. The use of motorcycles is prohibited, according to an order by the Minister of Interior.
14. No.8 stresses the importance of media to assist the military and the administration, according to an order by the Minister of Interior.
15. General resolutions shall be handed to the high steering committee and the committee in Dar'a.
16. In accordance with a resolution by the Minister of Defense, the Minister of Interior has to be supported with any means.
17. The deputy regional secretaries shall coordinate the role of the party according to the overall plan and deliver reports.
18. We have to respect the request of the people who wish for an intervention by the state in order to win the battle that is fought against them. They and their children shall live in peace.
19. The people's committee shall be suspended.

Signed: Deputy Regional Secretary

Once the interpreter finished his translation and the judges confirmed the correctness of the already existing translation, Presiding Judge Kerber said that two submissions were currently pending before the judges. She explained that one requested the severance of the trial, the other requested the introduction of additional evidence. Since the second request would only relate to Al-Gharib's case, the judges would first deal with the request to sever the trial. None of the parties had any comments on the prosecutors' request to sever the trial, so Judge Kerber read the judges' order regarding this request:

[the following is a summary of the court's order, based on what the trial monitor was able to hear in court]

Court Order:

The trial against defendant Eyad Al-Gharib will be severed in accordance with §13 (3) StPO. The trial will continue under court's file number 1 StE 3/21. The file number for the trial against Raslan will stay the same as before (1 StE 9/19).

Reasons:

The severance of the trial is functional, since the case against Al-Gharib is ready to be decided while the case against Raslan requires further taking of evidence.

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the trial against Raslan will pause until Wednesday March 10, 2020. She further explained that there will be a short break in the trial against Al-Gharib to allow Raslan and his defense team to leave and to make relevant changes in the courtroom.

The proceedings in Anwar Raslan's case adjourned at 10:40 am.

The next hearing in his case will take place on March 10, 2021.

***

[15 minute break]

***

As the Plaintiff Counsels stayed in their seats, Judge Kerber explained that there would actually be no plaintiffs in the trial against Al-Gharib, however, to prevent further disruption, the counsels would be allowed to stay.

Judge Kerber went on to address the defense's request to take additional evidence and read out the following court order:

[the following is a summary of the court's order, based on what the trial monitor was able to hear in court]

Court Order:

Defense Counsel Schuster's request dated February 2, 2021 to read out parts of the minutes of Al-Gharib's interview with the German asylum authority (BAMF) to prove the following facts:

- 1. Al-Gharib first worked for the "religion" Branch of the Syrian Intelligence Services where he received a five month training on how to surveil religious meetings and events and gain relevant information.*
- 2. In this capacity, he was subordinate and had to report to the head of the Branch, Kamal Al-Ahmad.*
- 3. On the reasons for leaving the "religion" Branch, Al-Gharib told the BAMF that he did not like the office-job, so he started working in Al Zabadani. After five months, his former boss, Kamal Al-Ahmad, asked him to return to the "religion" Branch where Al-Gharib stayed for two more months. He was then transferred to the dangerous and mafiosi-like Division 40 where he worked from June 2011 until his defection in 2012.*

Schuster's request is denied, as the facts that were supposed to be proven, are already proven.

Reasons:

The court already heard the BAMF employees Mr. Wöllner and the interpreter, both were present during Al-Gharib's interview with the BAMF. Several parts of the interview's minutes were read out to Mr. Wöllner who confirmed the correctness of the minutes. He further testified on the overall content and context. For these reasons, there is no doubt regarding the abovementioned facts.

Al-Gharib's Defense Counsel Schuster thanked the judges and apologized for his "apparently incomplete transcripts."

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to explain that the judges would now read out an excerpt of Al-Gharib's register with the German Ministry of Justice (BMJV) [his criminal register] from 2019.

Judge Wiedner explained that the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) requested information about Al-Gharib from the Ministry of Justice (criminal history). This information was provided on September 30, 2019:

[the following is a recreation of the register entry, based on what the trial monitor was able to hear in court]

Information regarding Eyad Alghareib [Al-Gharib]

Born in Damascus, Syria on May 25, 1976

Note: The office has differing information regarding the name of the abovementioned person. To ensure uniformity, the name will be spelled as written above.

Number of register entries: 1

Date: July 24, 2018 District Court [AG] Hermeskeil

Legally binding since September 1, 2018

Matter: Bodily injury on May 26, 2018 according to §§223 \(1\), 231 \(1\) StGB

Sentence: 20 day-rates per 5€ each

Presiding Judge Kerber said that according to the prosecutor's office in Trier, the fees were paid. She added that the matter would say "have been dealt with".

Judge Kerber went on to explain that the interpreters also acted as experts from time to time and asked if either defense or prosecutors had request to put them under oath. None of the parties had any request or additional submissions. Presiding Judge Kerber therefore declared the taking of evidence in the trial against Eyad Al-Gharib to be completed and ordered a short break before the prosecutors would deliver their closing statement.

***

[15 minute break]

***

[Below is a summary of the prosecutors' oral closing statement, based on what the trial monitor was able to hear in court. Direct quotes are marked with "" and additional observations are put in square brackets]

The prosecutors first referred to the overall context in Syria:

They opened their closing statement by saying that ever since the start of the Arab Spring, the Syrian government has been using massive violence against the civilian democratic opposition. This eventually led to an armed conflict that is still ongoing today. Garance Le Caisne described the situation in Syria “very adequately” by calling the country, ‘a land of the absent’. The prosecutors further noted that, however, not only armed non-state groups are committing crimes in this conflict. The “regime’s<sup>4</sup> will for self-preservation caused countless civilian victims and refugees.”

According to the prosecutors, Germany is investigating crimes committed in the context of the Syrian conflict since 2012. Nonetheless, this trial would not be one of many. It would be the first trial worldwide where employees of Bashar Al-Assad’s Intelligence Service stand accused.

Criminal Acts and Special Remarks:

The prosecutors further stressed that the defendant in this trial, Eyad Al-Gharib was not accused in representation of the entire regime. However, his alleged crimes could not be looked at without putting them in the context of the systematic and widespread attack of the Syrian regime against its own population.

The prosecutors added that “this regime is still very much in power today,” a fact that distinguishes this trial from the Nuremberg trials and the trials at the ICTY and ICTR. The effects of “the regime’s poisoned breath” were visible throughout this trial, considering scared witnesses. The prosecutors recalled many of them explaining how their families in Syria were threatened and that they were only willing to testify when anonymized. Nonetheless, the terror in Syria did not prevent the “hero” Caesar from smuggling thousands of pictures of corpses outside of Syria and unveiling how the regime tortures, kills and documents detainees. According to the prosecutors, the terror in Syria also did not prevent the victims from telling the world about their suffering. She added that it was only thanks to the courage of these people that the regime is not safe [Presiding Judge Kerber nodded acknowledging]. This trial, as the prosecutors explained, was only taking place in Koblenz because there is impunity for such crimes in Syria. The prosecutors therefore paid special gratitude to these witnesses; they “deserve our highest respect and acknowledgment.”

This trial has shown that unimaginable crimes can effectively be tried under universal jurisdiction, as the prosecutors further explained. In line with a recent decision by the German Federal Court of Justice \(BGH\) [January 28, 2021, 3 StR 564/19]<sup>5</sup> the prosecutors wanted to stress that “Germany was not, is not and will never be a safe haven for perpetrators of international crimes”. They added that this trial would not be the last of its kind, “Koblenz is only the beginning.” And concluded that there would be no limitation for crimes under international law.

According to the prosecutors, the trial did not show any facts that would significantly differ from the indictment. Prosecutor Polz explained that throughout the prosecutors’ closing statement, witnesses who were allowed to conceal personal information during the main trial would be named according to the trial day on which they testified [SJAC will use the respective codes from previous reports].

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The prosecutors always use the term “regime” instead of “government”. They also stuck to this practice throughout their final statement.

<sup>5</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: In this decision the German Federal Court of Justice found that functional immunities (at least for mid- and low-level perpetrators) are not applicable to core international crimes.

The prosecutors wanted to thank the Defense Counsels in particular. They defended their client with innovative ideas but never tried to re-traumatize witnesses by pressuring them or asking intimidating questions. According to the prosecutors, this was, “unfortunately, not always a matter of course.”

Subject Matter of the Trial:

The prosecutors went on to recall the very beginning of the revolution in 2011 in Dar’a, when the Syrian regime used massive violence causing many wounded and two dead. Live ammunition was used to target civilians and state-led violence was not only used from an early stage to prevent and dissolve demonstrations but to surveil and control civilians. Starting in Dara’a in April 2011, social restrictions were imposed, food was restricted, and hospitals were under surveillance. According to the prosecutors, the latter led to the setup of underground hospitals where wounded protesters received only insufficient medical treatment. The prosecutors further recalled how the flow of information was severely restricted and all [restrictive] measures were extended to other cities as well. The regime steadily increased violence. In April 2011, the CCMC gave the direct order that ‘the phase of tolerance is over’. The prosecutors recalled that following this order, military forces used deadly violence, however, even more strict measures were requested: security forces used tear gas and batons against protesters; people were forcibly displaced in prisons where they were massively tortured, humiliated, and abused.

The prosecutors went on by saying that detainees have been tortured in Syrian prisons already before [the revolution], however, since 2011 the quantity as well as quality of torture in Syrian prisons dramatically changed. Torture and inhumane detention condition were trivial. “To seek revenge and to suffocate” the movement from the beginning, the Syrian regime used physical and mental torture. Death rates significantly increased in detention facilities and military hospitals became a place of torture and killings. Regarding hospitals, the prosecutors referred to the situation in Al-Mazzeah, Tishreen and Harasta hospitals that became places where corpses were stored and registered before they were “disposed” in mass graves. Meticulous documentation of dead detainees was used as proof that these people were actually dead.

The prosecutors described the structure of the Intelligence Services in Syria, saying that it consists of the General Intelligence Directorate, The Military Intelligence Directorate, The Air Force Intelligence and the Political Security. All of them are further divided into Branches. According to the prosecutors, the central Branch in the present trial was Branch 251, also known as Al-Khatib, due to its well-known location in Damascus. This Branch oversaw Damascus, mostly related to arrests and checkpoints. It was supported by Division 40.

This subdivision was led by Hafez Makhoul, a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad, and “thanks to him it had a special position”, as the prosecutors further described. It was known as “clearing and punching squad”. Division 40 had its own detention facilities, however, people usually stayed there only for a very short time, before they were transferred to another Branch, usually Branch 251. The prosecutors described that people were already maltreated in Division 40 and employees of that division were selected carefully. They had to undergo a multilevel selection process, creating an “elitist circle”. Division 40 conducted “sudden arrests” at peaceful demonstrations and “started the hunt” on people fleeing the demonstrations.

According to the prosecutors, one had to bear in mind that no one was told why he was arrested or where he was brought. None of the arrested people were informed about their rights or presented to a judge. They further had no counsel, and no one was informed about their arrest or their whereabouts.

Regarding the treatment of detainees at Branch 251, the prosecutors described the following: Upon arrival at Branch 251, detainees received a so-called “welcoming party” during which they were beaten in a “wild and unleashed” manner. This procedure usually started in the yard or the way inside the building. Many times, detainees had to go through an “espalier of brutality” the moment they left the van that brought them there. It is reported that between July and September 2011, detainees were beaten on their heads with iron poles during this procedure. Once the detainees entered the building, they had to strip naked in the basement and were frisked. After that, they got their clothes back and were taken to their cell.

The prosecutors further recalled the massive violence which was used as means of revenge during interrogations. In general, interrogations were conducted without any specific purpose. Usually, one guard was present during interrogations and humiliated and maltreated detainees. According to the prosecutors, this included: electroshocks, beatings in the face, Falaqua, Doulab, German chair, Shabh, as well as threats and acts of sexual violence. The prosecutors concluded that detention conditions at Branch 251 were inhumane and degrading. Detainees did not receive any medical treatment. Cells were overcrowded and detainees did not have the chance to sit down, either sleeping while standing or sleeping in shifts. Food at the Branch was also insufficient, the hygienic situation was disastrous. Detainees were exposed to constant screams from torture of other detainees, many people simply lost their mind. Between April 29, 2011 and January 2012, hundreds to thousands of people were detained in Branch 251. They lived in constant fear for their lives. This fear was even worse than the physical torture. The prosecutors concluded that mere detention in Branch 251 qualified as torture.

Al-Gharib’s Criminal Contribution:

The prosecutors went on to describe the Accused’s work history: At the age of 20, Al-Gharib joined the General Intelligence Directorate as physical instructor. Since February 2010, he was a member of Branch 251. He first worked in the “Religion” Branch, in the building of Branch 251 before he worked in Al Zabadani for around one month, starting in June 2011. Because the office-job “was not really his thing” and because his superiors were apparently “perfectly satisfied” with his work, he started working at Division 40. By this time, the repression by the regime was already underway and Al-Gharib knew what the division led by Hafez Makhoulf was doing. The prosecutors found that he himself was directly involved in at least one incident at the mosque in Duma in September or October 2011. 3,000 – 6,000 people were peacefully protesting with around 250 members of Division 40 present when Hafez Makhoulf opened fire on the demonstrators from a car and gave the order to shoot at everyone; if one loves the president. The prosecutors explained that at least three people died right away, two were deadly wounded. Al-Gharib and his colleagues were told to catch the people who were fleeing and when they “opened the hunt” they arrested at least 30 people. According to the prosecutors, Al-Gharib and his colleagues forcibly put these people in buses and took them to Branch 251. He was on the bus where his colleagues beat up the detainees. At Branch 251, the detainees received the ‘welcoming party’; 30 civilian victims were gravely mistreated as a consequence. The prosecutors concluded Al-Gharib knew and recklessly accepted that these people were systematically tortured. Al-Gharib knew that the Branch was a mechanism to intimidate the people. He was aware of that and accepted it.

However, the prosecutors stressed that Anwar Raslan was the one accused of overseeing and ordering torture at Branch 251. The evidence available for Al-Gharib on the other hand could only prove his involvement in one crime on a single day in September or October 2011. The case against Al-Gharib was a mere snapshot, according to the prosecutors. Nonetheless, in evaluating the evidence in his case, one must also examine the evidence that proves a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population, as the prosecutors further explained. The prosecutors described that this attack was carried out on the streets as well as in the basement of Branch 251.

According to the prosecutors, in determining Al-Gharib's criminal responsibility, one must only look at the evidence against him and ignore everything else.

The prosecutors further recalled how the past 60 days of the trial "clearly" showed that at least since April 2011, the Syrian regime has been conducting a widespread and systematic attack "against actual and alleged members of the opposition." The prosecutors referred to several experts such as Ms. Thurmman, Mazen Darwish, Anwar Al-Bunni \(P2\), Christopher Engels, numerous witnesses as well as the Human Rights Watch \(HRW\) report "We've never seen such horror" who confirmed that [attack against actual and alleged opposition members]. According to the prosecutors, the attack started on April 29, 2011 latest, when the CCMC orders from April 20, 2011 were already carried out. 200 people who died in Dara'a shortly after this date, would prove the execution of this plan.

Regarding the existence and tasks of the CCMC, the prosecutors referred to testimonies from Mazen Darwish, Anwar Al-Bunni \(P2\), P10 and Christopher Engels. The minutes of a CCMC meeting dated April 20, 2011 would also provide further information about discussions during meetings of the CCMC. The wording of this minutes as well as the other two CCMC documents that were just read out in court would "cause one to shiver", as prosecutors Polz recalled. Witness [name redacted] testimony, that was introduced by Criminal Chief Inspector \(CCI\) Deußing as well as P16's testimony would also confirm the execution of the CCMC's plans. The prosecutor referred to [name redacted] statement when he called the situation an "orgy of violence" and when P16 testified about her arrest on trial day 34, she mentioned that continuous assaults and screams were "normal" at Branch 251. The prosecutors concluded that overall, the CCMC's instructions were "carried out properly" and the "hunt against the opposition was started".

Regarding the role of the Intelligence Services in the widespread and systematic attack, the prosecutors recalled the testimonies of several witnesses: Ms. Thurmman, Christopher Engels, Riad Saif, Mazen Darwish, Anwar Al-Bunni \(P2\), P10, P3 and CCI Deußing. The special function of Branch 251 was described by CCI Deußing and Al-Gharib's own statements with the BAMF and BKA. Explanations regarding Division 40 were provided to the court by P21, P5, P20, P24, P16 and the defendant himself during his hearings with the BAMF and BKA. According to P5, only those in excellent physical and mental shape, with relevant professional references who were unconditionally loyal were selected to work at Division 40, as the prosecutors recalled. P5 did not make it to Division 40. The prosecutors concluded that Al-Gharib was apparently even better suited than him.

According to the prosecutors, there could be no doubt that the Syrian regime has been conducting a widespread and systematic attack against the opposition civilian population. The German Federal Court of Justice has already confirmed that previously. Regarding killings of civilians by the regime, the prosecutors mentioned that this was confirmed in court by Ms. Thurmman, the HRW report, Mazen Darwish, P15 and P19. The prosecutors added that "industrial scope" of these killings was impressively proven by the Caesar files and the analyzes thereof provided by Prof. Dr. Rothschild, CCI Deußing and Garnace Le Caisne. CCI Deußing explained in his analysis of the Caesar files that the corpses were "carelessly and disrespectfully thrown" thrown in some backyard, "without any protection against the sun and scavengers". This practice was commonly used at least since May 2011, according to Deußing and Le Caisne. The latter confirmed this by recalling Caesar's biography.

The prosecutors regretted the court being unable to hear Caesar or Sami. Nonetheless, one could say that with this trial, the two of them finally achieved their goal, as prosecutor Polz concluded. The "apocalyptic extent" of crimes against humanity committed by the Syrian regime would be proven through these files. According to the prosecutors, there would be no doubt about the authenticity off the photos. According to Prof. Dr. Rothschild, 6,627 out of 20,948 photos showed signs of massive violence.

The prosecutors found people were systematically mistreated and medical treatment was obviously not provided. Based on these photos, a natural cause of death was precluded. Between 2011 and 2013, at least 6,627 people were “brutally murdered” and taken to the hospitals Al-Mazzeah and Tishreen. The prosecutors recalled how P23 and the defendant Al-Gharib himself spoke about people being killed and detainees that died during the ‘welcoming party’. P3 and P14 confirmed as insiders that detainees were “hastily buried” in mass graves. P3 further explained that two mass graves were dug up exclusively to bury the corpses from the General Intelligence Directorate. Z300719 also confirmed the existence of mass graves. These testimonies were corroborated by Criminal Inspector Knappmann on trial day 54, according to the prosecutors. Knappmann presented and analyzed open-source satellite images which showed mass graves close to Damascus. On one image, one could even identify an excavator used to dig the graves. Although these images are dated 2014 and later, it would not be surprising that there are no images particularly from 2011 for two reasons: First, in 2011 mass graves were not yet needed on such a large scale. Second, there would only be limited availability of such images, that further only show one particular area. The prosecutors further found the existence of mass graves was also mentioned in the HRW report.

The targeted and large-scale killings of oppositionists would therefore be part of a systematic and widespread attack by the Syrian regime.

[Prosecutor Polz requested a short break for the interpreters and to open the windows.]

***

[15 minutes break]

***

[Prosecutor Polz continued reading out the statement.]

Torture and deprivation of liberty

The prosecutors recalled that throughout the trial, many witnesses testified about torture and the inhumane conditions at Branch 251. On days 16 and 17, for example, an insider testified amongst others about “welcoming parties” at Branch 251. Defendant Al-Gharib himself told the BAMF in May 2018 that detainees were beaten on their heads. When he was questioned by the BKA, he provided even more detailed descriptions, explaining that detainees were beaten with metal poles. Al-Gharib himself said that the screams of torture even reached the cafeteria at Branch 251.

The prosecutors further said that many former detainees and victims testified about torture. However, these testimonies would only be a glimpse of what has been going on and is practiced until today. P1, P16, P23, P11 and P26 all described the setup of Branch 251 coherently as well as its location, that was also known among the public, due to its location in the well-known district Al-Khatib. Further, all the witnesses described the underground prisons at Branch 251. On day 34, P16 also explained that there were no legal proceedings to examine the rightfulness of detentions and family members were never informed about their loved ones being arrested and detained. The prosecutors mentioned that they would have liked to ask [name redacted] - whose testimony was [introduced by CCI Hörl \[day 57\]](#) - about how exactly he was arrested when he voluntarily followed a summons of Division 40. However, he was not willing to testify in court due to serious concerns about his and his family’s safety. Nonetheless, testimonies about constant torture and inhumane and degrading conditions at Branch 251 were corroborated by many other testimonies, according to the prosecutors: P1 described his own arrest and detention, how he had to endure the infamous “welcoming party” before he was taken to overcrowded collective cells and tiny solitary cells. He further testified about the inedible food and how guards put a baton in his anus.

P11 confirmed this image by testifying about what he himself as well as his inmates had to endure. P12's testimony about detainees being blindfolded, forced to sleep in shifts and not being able to tell night from day due to constant light in the cells, further corroborated these accounts. The experiences of P16 and [name redacted] [\[day 57\]](#) were also the same.

The prosecutors recalled P23 further telling the court how the 10th division of the General Intelligence Directorate was responsible for bomb attacks and how they knocked out people's teeth. According to the prosecutors, all witnesses spoke of "torture minions" at Branch 251 from their own experience as well as what they saw on other detainees. A lack of medical treatment at Branch 251 was also described by all witnesses. When detainees were transferred to a hospital "it was not an act of charity", as the prosecutors concluded. The prosecutors found that the only aim was to "finish" the 'patients' – "if one would call them patients at all". The prosecutors further recalled that the only reason one of the witnesses made it out of the hospital was because his condition was bad enough so that it could be used as a warning to others, when he was thrown on the streets and left to die. P26's testimony also corroborated these accounts regarding medical treatment.

Regarding the credibility of witness testimonies, the prosecutors mentioned that usually, the credibility of every testimony must be assessed individually. However, in this trial there would not have been a single sign that any of the witnesses did not say the truth or tried to falsely accuse the defendant. Every single detail of the testimonies was coherent. According to the prosecutors, certain difficulties remembering particular instances were only due to the natural refusal to relive these memories. One could see the horror on every witness's face. The prosecutors found that "these people survived Branch 251; they were not rescued." Nonetheless, there would have been no exaggerations, and all testimonies were corroborated by other evidence.

The prosecutors went on to recall day 2 of the trial when CCI Deußing spoke about torture being a common practice in Syrian prisons since at least 1976 and confirmed that during the structural investigation that his office has been conducting regarding crimes committed in the Syrian conflict, all witnesses provided the same description of torture, particularly Falaqa being a prominent method used at Branch 251. The so-called Caesar Files and particularly the forensic analysis thereof provided by Prof. Dr. Rothschild would be further proof of torture at Branch 251, according to the prosecutors. The prosecutors stressed that this forensic analysis found recurring common findings regarding systematic torture used by all Branches. Rothschild mentioned that it looks like "every employee has a standardized kit of torture tools". He further put his and his colleagues' findings in relation to witness testimonies and confirmed the plausibility thereof. General descriptions of torture used by the Syrian intelligence Services were also provided by Mazen Darwish and Anwar Al-Bunni \(P2\). The latter received the human rights award from the German Association of Judges and the German-French human rights award, as the prosecutors mentioned. Al-Bunni provided insights in his own experience as well as those of his clients and mentioned the "incredible number" of 73 years as the sum of all the years that he and his family had to spend in prison. The HRW report also described unlawful displacement and several instances of sexual violence by the Syrian Intelligence Services. The prosecutors concluded by saying there were absolutely no doubts about this additional evidence. The totality of evidence would "sadly" prove the existence of "a torture machinery of industrial dimension".

The prosecutors recalled defendant Al-Gharib himself describing on different occasions that he worked for the Intelligence Services for more than 16 years. According to the prosecutors, however, he did not really like his office job, it was "not his thing", so he started working at the "religion" Branch before he joined the "mafiosi-like" Division 40. The prosecutors found Al-Gharib's relevant descriptions at the migration office to be plausible. These descriptions were further detailed during his questioning by the BKA. Regarding the admissibility of these statement, the prosecutors referred to their statement from June 3, 2020.

On August 16, 2018, Al-Gharib was questioned by Criminal Chief Inspector Deußing and Higher Criminal Inspector Frey. The prosecutors explained that both were heard as witnesses in court since the defendant decided to stay silent. Both confirmed Al-Gharib's version of not liking the office job and then joining the "religion" Branch. They also confirmed him saying that he was involved in an incident with at least 30 civilian victims. According to the prosecutors, there was no reason to doubt these descriptions made by Al-Gharib to the BKA. They would present a continuation of and additional details to his previous statements with the BAMF. The prosecutors further found there were no issues with the interpreter and the minutes of the police questioning were re-translated to Al-Gharib. The admissibility of these statements would further be supported by a decision from the German Federal Court of Justice to uphold Al-Gharib's arrest warrant, as the prosecutors concluded.

Regarding Al-Gharib's professional path with the Intelligence Services, the prosecutors referred to the testimony of Al-Gharib's cousin P6. In addition, P3's testimony would also leave no doubt about the correctness of Al-Gharib's own descriptions. The prosecutors concluded by saying that Al-Gharib's military ID card shown in court on trial day 56 further confirmed his employment at the General Intelligence Directorate.

In sum, the prosecutors found that Eyad Al-Gharib voluntarily joined Division 40, the "catching squad of Branch 251", at a time when the regime took massive action against demonstrators and oppositionists. He joined the division because "he was bored" at his previous job at a time when the repression by the regime was already well under way. According to the prosecutors, Al-Gharib knew this from his work surveilling mosques and religious events and he knew about the kind of work at Division 40 from his own year-long employment at the General Intelligence Directorate. He was aware of the systematic and massive torture. He also did not care about people dying from torture and violence. His only wish was "to do something exciting".

Prosecutor Polz requested a break before continuing with the legal evaluation.

***

[65 minute lunch break]

***

Legal Evaluation

The prosecutors started the legal evaluation of the abovementioned findings by explaining that the trial was a trial under so-called universal jurisdiction, as provided under §1 VStGB. As the requirements of this article would be met, the prosecutors found the court to have jurisdiction over this case. The prosecutors went on to recall the indictment which detailed that the Syrian regime from April 29, 2011 latest started a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population. As set out in §7\(1\) VStGB, such an attack could be committed against any civilian population. The necessary requirements would be the widespread or systematic character of the attack. According to the prosecutors, the requirement of "widespread" would be the quantitative component and measured in number of victims as well as the size of the territory where the attack is committed. The "systematic" requirement would be the qualitative component and measured by a certain degree of organization.

Regarding the concrete situation in Syria, the prosecutors found the regime targeted actual and alleged oppositionists, persecuting, and intimidating them. The Intelligence Services played a central role in this. At least since April 29, 2011, when more than 200 people died at a demonstration in Dar'a one could say that the regime's targeting of oppositionists qualified as a widespread and systematic attack. The regime started to persecute alleged and actual members of the opposition across its state territory, causing a high number of victims.

Until September or October 2011, hundreds to thousands of people died through the Intelligence Services. The prosecutors therefore found the requirements of §7\(1\) VStGB, the existence of a widespread and systematic attack, to be met.

The prosecutors went on to explain that Al-Gharib was accused of aiding and abetting crimes against humanity under §7\(1\) Nr. 5 VStGB, meaning torture. According to the prosecutors, international jurisprudence details the duration and consequences of acts to qualify as torture. According to this jurisprudence, various acts qualify as torture: pulling of teeth, rape, beatings, pouring acid over someone's body, dunking someone under water, suffocation, forcibly administering psychotropics and psychological violence. It would thereby not be relevant if lasting damage was caused. The prosecutors concluded that evidence in the present trial proved that it had consequences to oppose the regime. There could be no disagreement that these "awful" acts qualify as torture. In accordance with jurisprudence from the ECtHR, the mere fear of torture, from a certain degree on, can also qualify as torture itself. In light of this, the prosecutors found there would be no doubt that during the entire time that the trial deals with – April 2011 until January 2012 – the mere stay at Branch 251 would be torture. This would be supported by numerous witnesses' testimonies. The hygienic conditions at the Branch also contributed to this fact. People further lost their sense of time as the light was either constantly switched on or detainees had to sit in the dark all the time. Detainees were afraid to talk to each other because they were afraid of spies being amongst them. This was a mere demonstration of power by the General Intelligence Directorate. Female detainees were sexually harassed and threatened to be raped. Referring to several witness testimonies, the prosecutors concluded the guards at Branch 251 wanted to break the detainees. One survivor told the court that "to die became a wish". Others described the psychological consequences of psychological torture at Branch 251. One could assume that these consequences are even worse than physical injuries, as the latter heal over time. In sum, the prosecutors found Branch 251 to be a "perfectly running torture machine" and from April 2011 on, the mere stay at the Branch qualified as torture.

The prosecutors went on to explain that the defendant was further accused of aiding and abetting severe deprivation of liberty according to §7\(1\) Nr.9 VStGB, adding that deprivation of liberty is legally qualified as "severe" when it is a particularly long period of time or a very drastic measure. Although this usually must be determined on a case-by-case basis, the prosecutors found in the present case, one could say that the treatment of detainees in Branch 251 was severe. They based this finding on "coherent testimonies describing violence, a lack of judicial remedies, no information about one's rights, no information of the relatives about a person's whereabouts; detainees simply disappeared." The brutal measures used during interrogations in the Branch would further qualify as severe human rights violations. For these reasons, the prosecutors found detentions at Branch 251 to qualify as severe deprivation of liberty.

Regarding Al-Gharib's contribution to these crimes as an aider and abettor according to §27 StGB, the prosecutors stressed that there were no indicators to believe that the arrest of thirty civilians in which Al-Gharib was involved in September or October 2011, was lawful.

Although the defense team introduced the defense of duress in an "innovative way," the relevant requirements of §35 StGB are not met, according to the prosecutors. They recalled that ever since the Nuremberg Trials, no trial regarding international crimes was conducted without dealing with duress as a defense. As in all these trials however, this defense would not be relevant in the present trial. The requirements of duress, imminent threats against one or one's family's live, limb or liberty that could have not been avoided other than by following criminal orders, were not given in the situation at the core of this trial. In this situation, the arrest of thirty civilians in September or October 2011 at a demonstration, it would be questionable according to the prosecutors, that the defendant had no other options but to follow illegal orders.

The situation was very unclear and Al-Gharib had the opportunity to withdraw from the situation. He himself described that he successfully avoided shooting at people. The prosecutors further described there were around 250 members of Division 40 and around thousand members of the security forces present, causing a big unclear crowd. A lesser means for Al-Gharib would have been to either escape, pretend to fall down or fake a serious injury. The prosecutors referred to German domestic jurisprudence: In 1951 the German Federal Court of Justice found that when one is facing imminent threats to life limb or liberty, he is not obliged to make heroic moves, nonetheless one can neither follow illegal orders because it is the easiest or most convenient way [BGH 26.11.1951, 1 StR 27/50, para.4]. In a decision regarding Nazi perpetrators, the Court found in 1971 that one has to make every effort, including certain risks, to try to escape the imminent threats for his life, limb and liberty [BGH 12.10.1971, 5 StR 103/71, paras 13ff.]. More recently, the Regional Court in Munich found that in a similar situation, one must flee [LG München II 12.5.2011 1 Ks 115 Js 12496/08, p. 366]. In Al-Gharib's case it was not unreasonable neither impossible for him to act differently than to follow orders: Al-Gharib knew about everything that was happening with protesters on the arrests and in detention. The prosecutors also recalled [witness P6 \[day 18\]](#) telling the court that Al-Gharib told him about this already in March 2011. Al-Gharib could have fled at this point. Instead, he moved from an office job to an operational job in May 2011 "because he was bored". When he was assigned to a "beating squad" in July 2011, he could and should have left. According to the prosecutors, he consequently caused the situation of duress himself. His claims that his family was in danger and it was not safe for them to flee or him to leave them behind, would also be disproved by facts: When he defected in January 2012, he first moved to another city without his family. The prosecutors described this as a time when the regime was even more suspicious and the danger for his family was even greater. In fact, Al-Gharib could have left earlier, according to the prosecutors. They therefore found the requirements for duress as defense not to be met.

The prosecutors went on to explain that §3 VStGB, which describes that one acts without guilt when acting upon orders and not realizing that the order is illegal or it is not manifestly illegal, would not be applicable to crimes against humanity. The facts in this case would also not support this justification: Recalling that Al-Gharib himself told the BAMF and the BKA that he felt that this was wrong, the prosecutors concluded that Hafez Makhoul's orders to shoot at demonstrators were obviously illegal.

According to the prosecutors, Al-Gharib consequently aided and abetted crimes against humanity in the form of torture and severe deprivation of liberty according to §7\(1\) Nos 5+9 VStGB, in one instance.

Sentence

The prosecutors went on to point out that the witnesses heard in the trial represented a much bigger number of victims. For the first time, crimes against humanity committed by the Syrian regime were on trial. Nonetheless, it would be against the foundations of a state based on the rule of law [Rechtsstaat] to hold the defendant accountable for all this, as the prosecutors explained. In accordance with §264 StPO, one can only be held accountable for his individual culpable acts. The prosecutors, however, described that it cannot be ignored that without people like him, crimes against humanity could not be committed to the extent that they are. Al-Gharib was a "cog in a big machinery." One can therefore not ignore the overall brutality. The prosecutors concluded by finding the excessive repression by the regime was solely aimed at taking revenge, exterminating and deterring people from opposing the regime.

Regarding the determination of sentence, the prosecutors first explained that §7 VStGB provides for a sentence of no less than five years for torture and no less than three years for severe deprivation of liberty.

The range of imprisonment therefore ranges from five to fifteen years. The requirements of a less serious offence which would lower the sentence were not given. According to the prosecutors, the mere brutality of torture as well as the “overall injustice” would forbid such a practice.

The prosecutors went on to explain that the sentence could be lowered if the defendant had substantially contributed to the detection of a criminal offense by providing information to the authorities, as provided in §46b \(1\) S.1 No. 1 StGB in conjunction with §49 StGB. In the present case, the defendant did indeed accidentally incriminate himself when questioned by the BAMF and BKA, however, he did not contribute to the detection of crimes. The prosecutors deplored the fact that after his second arrest, Al-Gharib did not take the chance to contribute to the detection of criminal offences. The sentence of an aider and abettor is to be mitigated according to §27 \(2\) StGB in conjunction with §49 \(1\) StGB. This would in Al-Gharib’s case lead to a range of sentence between two years and eleven years and three months imprisonment. However, the prosecutors found that in determining the sentence, one has to take into account the “overall injustice” of the widespread and systematic attack.

The prosecutors listed the following aggravating and mitigating factors in determining Al-Gharib’s sentence:

Aggravating factors: At the beginning of the conflict, Al-Gharib himself initiated his transfer from an office job to an operative job. He knew from his year-long employment at the Intelligence Services about the activities of his new place of work. He further knew about Hafez Makhlouf’s special standing and competencies, as well as his violent character. At the time, the offence at the heart of this trial was committed, he was already working at this Division for around 8 months and stayed there for two more months afterwards. At least 30 people were arrested during this incident.

Mitigating factors: He defected from the regime in 2012 during the most brutal phase. He further stressed his secession and condemnation for Bashar Al-Assad and those most responsible in a handwritten statement that he wrote in November 2020. However, upon request, the guards at the German prison where the defendant is in trial detention, did not recognize any tears or particular mental turmoil. The prosecutors believe that he did indeed condemn the regime.

The prosecutors found that committing crimes by following orders could not be used as justification or a defense in this case. They further recalled Al-Gharib voluntarily incriminating himself during his questionings by the BAMF and BKA. It was not at least to himself that prosecutions against him were initiated.

The defendant’s tendency towards physical violence would still be visible according to the prosecutors. This particular hardship would therefore entail an aggregated sentence.

Request

After weighing in on all evidence and conducting a thorough legal evaluation, the prosecutors requested a sentence of 5 years and 6 months imprisonment and to uphold the arrest warrant against the defendant.

The trial adjourned at 3:15 pm.

The next hearing will take place on February 18, 2021.

Day 61 of Trial – February 18, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 with 7 media representatives and 6 spectators present.<sup>6</sup> Since there were no plaintiffs in the case against Eyad Al-Gharib, Dr. Oehmichen was the only plaintiff counsel present, taking notes as a spectator.

After starting the session, Presiding Judge Kerber immediately handed over to the defense to deliver their closing statement.

[The following is a recreation of the defense's closing statement, based on what the court monitor was able to hear in court.]

Context:

Defense Counsel Linke started the statement by citing [Martin Luther King Jr.'s iconic "I have a dream speech". He went on to say that he had a dream - past tense. He had hoped that the atrocities committed by the Nazis would never be repeated, that humanity learned from this cruelty. However, history taught better. He recalled the 1972 Bangladesh war, the atrocities committed by the Khmer Rouge in the 1970s, the start of the war in Rwanda in 1994, as well as the Yugoslav war. Defense counsel Linke concluded by saying that today, he would be disillusioned considering that humanity learned nothing at all from these past atrocities. The so-called "regime" of Bashar Al-Assad "cowardly" kills its own civilian population and commits "targeted torture". It would be unbelievable that "sick minds" continue to come up with even worse cruelties. Linke recalled that during the 30-year-war, people were tortured with the so-called 'Swedish drink', nowadays in Syria, people would be tortured by using Falaqa. The Syrian regime could be put in line with previous perpetrators of atrocities crimes. Linke stressed that those most responsible for the crimes committed in Syria must stand trial just like all the perpetrators before them.

Having said that, and "assuming that alea iacta est (the die has been cast) in Eyad Al-Gharib's case," he went on to explain that he would need to make examinations regarding the determination of sentence. He referred to the June 2019 decision of the German Federal Court of Justice, finding Al-Gharib's self-incriminating statements to be admissible evidence; and the Court's January 2020 decision, confirming that so-called 'functional immunity' does not apply to crimes against international law. Linke said for these reasons, he would have to make relevant determinations regarding an appropriate sentence for Eyad Al-Gharib. Assuming, that he committed unlawful acts, Linke would need to examine aggravating and mitigating factors. He concluded that in this case, he would provide the following "hypothetical" closing statement:

<sup>6</sup> No one requested access to Arabic interpretation.

Closing statement:

Linke started his “hypothetical” closing statement by thanking judges, in particular Presiding Judge Kerber, for her “elegant” handling of this trial. The judges as well as the prosecutors created a very cooperative atmosphere that helped conduct this trial in a smooth and uncomplicated manner. He went on to point out that the trial and consequent sentence would be complete “virgin territory”. This case was nothing like a regular criminal trial, e.g. dealing with drunk-driving. The court in Koblenz was the first world-wide to determine the sentence for a former employee of the Syrian Intelligence Services. In determining the sentence, the prosecutors tried to navigate through a “sentencing haze” the previous day. Nonetheless, their request has a certain “anchor-effect” on the judges. Linke referred to studies showing that the prosecutors’ request for sentence has certain effects on the judges by setting a general “anchor” to which the judges usually stick. He further said that in an “hypothetical closing statement”, the defense would point out this anchor to the judges and request them to not be affected by the mark regarding length of sentence, set by the prosecutors the previous day.

Determination of Sentence:

Turning to the prosecutors, Linke mentioned that based on their year-long experience, a confession by the defendant is usually “worth one third”. Assuming the requested 5.5 years, 66 months, are two thirds, the full sentence would be 99 months, meaning eight years and three months. Linke questioned the prosecutors actually requesting eight years and three months imprisonment given that Al-Gharib would have not incriminated himself during the BAMF interviews, and instead any other witness came forward incriminating him. Linke said Al-Gharib had an “entirely clean slate”, aggravating the sentence due to particular hardship would not be necessary and the requested sentence would therefore be “exorbitantly high”. In such a case, the prosecutors would have most likely requested 5 years and 5 months imprisonment as well. However, in the present case, Al-Gharib delivered a far-reaching confession with the BAMF. The sentence therefore needs to be reduced to 44 months, meaning 3 years and 8 months. Nonetheless, this would still not be the correct sentence, as the prosecutors applied the wrong margin of sentence. Linke again stressed that the above-mentioned considerations would be part of the defense’s closing statement, assuming that Al-Gharib was to be found guilty.

Margin of Sentence:

In determining the length of sentence, the prosecutors allocated 5 to 15 years imprisonment for committing torture as crime against humanity and 3 to 15 years for committing severe deprivation of liberty as a crime against humanity. Linke explained that while they correctly applied the higher sentence due to the fact that more than one violation of §7\(1\) VStGB occurred, they erred in applying 5 to 15 years assuming that the defendant was the direct perpetrator. According to Linke, Al-Gharib only aided and abetted these crimes §§27\(1\) and 29 StGB. According to German law, the sentence would have to be reduced to 2 to 11.25 years imprisonment.

Linke further alleged that the prosecutors ignored that Al-Gharib contributed to the detection of crimes. In accordance with the decision by the Federal Court of Justice, Al-Gharib’s questioning with the BKA would only be admissible evidence until page 13 of the transcript; before he started incriminating himself without being informed that he will be questioned as a suspect.

While parts of this questioning are inadmissible in Al-Gharib's case, they would be admissible evidence in the case against Anwar Raslan. Linke mentioned the prosecutors themselves relied on these parts in their indictment. By providing many details about Branch 251 and Raslan's role, Al-Gharib significantly contributed to the detection of crimes committed by Raslan. Linke described that the prosecutors considered issuing an arrest warrant against Raslan only after Al-Gharib provided this information during his BKA questioning. Al-Gharib therefore significantly contributed to the discovery of crimes. The sentence would therefore require further reduction (§§ 46b and 49 StGB) to 6 months to 8.7345 years imprisonment, as Linke concluded.

He went on to explain that an "hypothetical closing statement" would now request further reduction of the sentence based the defense's detention complaint dated September 17, 2020 and the judges' respective decision dated October 19, 2020. The latter detailed that a sentence for Al-Gharib in the form of imprisonment would most likely significantly extend the time he had already spent in detention. At this point [September 17, 2020], Al-Gharib had been in detention for more than one year and seven months. Following this reasoning, a sentence would therefore entail at least one year and seven months imprisonment. Nonetheless, in determining the sentence, one also has to consider the defendant's behavior after the commission of the alleged crimes (§46\(2\)StGB).

Linke found that in light of this, one had to acknowledge that Al-Gharib provided an extensive confession – pp.1 to 12 of the BKA's questioning – at the earliest stage possible. And to consider Al-Gharib's reaction to the Caesar Files. The files, in particular Prof. Dr. Rothschild's forensic examination thereof, were crucial evidence in the trial. Linke referred to the videos that were taken by the U.S. when they entered the concentration camps at the end of World war two. These videos show piles of corpses and just like the Caesar Files, one wonders how men can do such things to men. Linke described how he felt paralyzed and was unable to talk to his client during the break, on the day the Caesar Files were shown in court. Linke further described how, after the hearing, he was wandering around Koblenz, constantly asking himself how Al-Gharib was able to do such things. However, Linke came to the conclusion that Al-Gharib did not kill those people himself. He acted as an aider and abettor of torture. Linke further described how the following day [after the Caesar Files were shown in court], the interpreter told the defense team how shocked Al-Gharib was during the presentation of the files and the forensic analysis. The defense then told Al-Gharib to write down his feelings. He did so and the handwritten statement was later introduced as evidence. This statement would show how shocked and distressed Al-Gharib was, said Linke. Al-Gharib said that he 'constantly had to think about all the innocent victims'. [Al-Gharib started crying at this point. His defense counsel Schuster handed him a tissue] Linke went on to explain that Al-Gharib was only waiting for the right time to defect. His handwritten statement detailed the three options he had. In caring about the safety of his wife and kids, one of them disabled, he chose the third option: waiting for defection until it is safe for all of them to leave.

Linke once again referred to the fact that this would only be an "hypothetical closing statement". He pointed out that when Al-Gharib continued his duties, one must not ignore his intentions. He did not want people to be tortured, he just wanted his family to be safe. According to Linke, it would simply be "improper" of the prosecutors to say that Al-Gharib joined Division 40 because he 'was bored' by his desk-job. First, he joined the "religion" Branch before he went to Division 40, Second, he did not apply for that position, he was transferred. Al-Gharib never wanted people to be tortured, he even sympathized with demonstrators.

He did not have the mindset of a “torture minion” but of a father who was deeply concerned about his family’s safety. His handwritten statement was further an attempt to apologize to all the victims. As far as the prosecutors doubt Al-Gharib’s emotions after he saw the Caesar files, it remained unclear to Linke, whom exactly the Prosecutors contacted at the prison and whether this person was actually trusted by Al-Gharib so that he would have openly shown his emotions to him.

Linke again referred to the judges’ order to uphold Al-Gharib’s detention, reasoning that he would be sentenced to at least one year and 7 months imprisonment. He mentioned that this order was issued in October 2020. However, the Caesar Files were shown in court on November 3, 2020 and Al-Gharib’s handwritten statement was submitted to the court in late November. The judges’ considerations regarding Al-Gharib’s sentence surely changed in light of these developments. Linke concluded that his “hypothetical closing statement” would therefore conclude by requesting a sentence of no more than 2 years on parole.

However, he stressed that the abovementioned was only an “hypothetical closing statement” and the actual statement, which Defense Counsel Schuster will deliver, would request an acquittal of the defendant Al-Gharib.

***

[15 minute break]

***

General Remarks:

Defense Counsel Schuster first mentioned that the following statement would be relatively short, to avoid any repetitions. Witnesses who were allowed to conceal personal information on the day they testified in court would be named after the day of trial on which they testified, in accordance with the prosecutors’ practice from the previous day.

Schuster started by saying crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanities are crimes committed against the fundamental elements of humanity. It is a single perpetrator against the entire of mankind. Schuster referred to a statement from Dr. Friedrich Kaul – hoping it would be eligible to quote him<sup>7</sup> – who said during the ‘Auschwitz trials’ that mankind cannot and must not allow such atrocity crimes to be committed again. According to Dr. Kaul, every individual must stand up to such crimes, one could not use superior orders or duress as justification or defense for their participation in such crimes. Schuster said the request to stand up to atrocity crimes would not be unrealistic per se, explaining that people like Anwar Al-Bunni and Mazen Darwish indeed stood and stand up to such crimes.

<sup>7</sup> There has been some dispute about whether Dr. Kaul’s involvement in the Auschwitz trials was due to his background as persecuted Jew or rather a propaganda act by the German Democratic republic to propagate a reputation as fighter for the rights of Nazi victims. He has also been criticized for his close cooperation with the governments and Ministry for State Security in the GDR.

Schuster explained it would be necessary to point this out, not only to acknowledge Al-Bunni's and Darwish's efforts as colleagues. However, one also had to acknowledge that duress can – and in the case of Eyad Al-Gharib should be used as defense. Schuster found the requirements of §35 \(1\) S.1 StGB to be met in Al-Gharib's case.

Duress:

According to Schuster, there was absolutely no doubt that at the time when Al-Gharib allegedly committed the crimes he is charged with, there was a state of emergency and duress in Syria. The Syrian Penal Code provides that traitors shall receive the death sentence. The regime created an aura of fear, which was confirmed by all witnesses and several reports that were read out in court. Schuster referred to the HRW report "We've never seen such horror" that detailed this aura of fear, as well as the COI report dated November 2011, which was also read out in court. According to Schuster, former employees of the Intelligence Service, like P5 and P21 further explained that the mere suspicion of disloyalty was reason enough to discipline members of the Intelligence Services. Witness P3 made similar accounts. All these coherent descriptions would be sufficient to conclude that there was not only a general state of emergency but imminent threats to life, limb, and liberty of employees of the Intelligence Services. Schuster said CCI Deußing and HCI Frey also confirmed that. In examining the imminent threats for the defendant Al-Gharib, it would also be important to mention Hafez Makhlof. P5 and Anwar Al-Bunni \(P2\) called him a 'choleric person' and Mazen Darwish said that he was 'untouchable'. Schuster recalled that on the day when Al-Gharib committed the alleged crimes, Hafez Makhlof was present at this particular demonstration. He was the one starting to shoot at protestors, simply for fun. He was also the one who gave orders to shoot at the protestors. There would be no doubt that in disobeying these orders, one would have had to fear for his life. He would have either been executed or interrogated and then killed. According to Schuster, Al-Gharib was even more endangered because he was a Sunni. Schuster concluded that Hafez Makhlof was unbound by law, if the prosecutors claim anything different, it would be mere cynicism.

Schuster further explained that even if Al-Gharib would have found a way to disobey orders to shoot and arrest protestors, he would not have been able to avoid the situation in the van when bringing detainees to Branch 251. There was only a very small number of people in that van and, according to various witness statements, the procedure of insults, beatings, and violence was a well-established routine that no one could escape. Al-Gharib therefore must have feared for his life, if he did not obey this violence. Regarding the above-mentioned statement from Dr. Kaul, Schuster stressed that according to the German Constitution, no one is obliged to give his own life or limb; not even if a high number of other life's are at risk. Al-Gharib was under no obligation to risk his own life and limb in disobeying orders, not even due to his year-long employment with the Intelligence Services, as the prosecutors claimed.

Role and Importance of the Intelligence Services:

Schuster explained that the defense would not intend to minimize the brutality of the Syrian Intelligence Services, however, it would still be important to examine their role in society. According to Schuster, the Intelligence apparatus in Syria is simply disproportionate. There would be one member of the Intelligence Services per 153 civilians. This rate would be higher than the rate of bakery shops per person in Germany.

Military and Intelligence Services are the only ways for people in Syria to make a decent living, especially when they are Sunnis. This was also the case for Al-Gharib, said Schuster. Al-Gharib's father died when he was only four years old, and the family did not have the means to allow him to continue his education after primary school. Nonetheless, Al-Gharib like every child in Syria was indoctrinated by the Syrian curriculum regarding loyalty to the regime. This eventually led Al-Gharib to join the Intelligence Services. His decision to do so does not therefore exclude the existence of imminent threats to his life, limb, and liberty, and him acting under duress.

False portrayal of Al-Gharib by the prosecutors:

Schuster stressed that Al-Gharib told the BAMF and BKA that he was transferred to Division 40, passive voice. He did not join the Division voluntarily as the prosecutors claimed. The judges dismissed the defense's [see above, day 60] request to take further evidence on this, reasoning that it already has been proven that Al-Gharib said that he was transferred. Schuster said that in claiming anything different, the prosecutors would intentionally distort the facts to paint the picture of Al-Gharib as a man of conviction. According to Schuster, the prosecutors also incorrectly evaluated P5's testimony regarding the selection procedure for Division 40. The situation that he described happened before 2010. Al-Gharib was only transferred in 2011. At this time, Division 40 simply needed more people to deal with the demonstrations and due to Al-Gharib's background as Sunni, he was no longer eligible for the "Religion" Division. However, the prosecutors did not mention these facts. Schuster added that even at this point, employees of the Intelligence Services were executed due to alleged disloyalty.

Considering that in July 2011, Al-Gharib was 34 years old, had four children and his wife was just pregnant with their fifth child, Schuster questioned why anyone in this situation would voluntarily join a division like Division 40. After 14 years of working with the Intelligence Services, Al-Gharib was still a staff sergeant/sergeant [Feldwebel]<sup>8</sup> without any prospects of being promoted, just like the witnesses P5 and P3 described as well. In light of this, one could not claim that Al-Gharib was a man of conviction, as the prosecutors stated in their closing statement.

Schuster explained Al-Gharib was under no obligation to accept imminent threats to his life, limb and liberty, not even in light of the gravity of crimes that he was aiding and abetting. A contrary position would also not be supported by jurisprudence from the German Federal Court of Justice that found even in case of a large-scale mass-murder involving thousands of victims, one cannot weigh any person's life against the life of many. The only relevant examination would be to determine if there was a situation of emergency, putting someone under duress. In this context, Schuster pointed out several differences between Nazis allegedly acting under duress, and members of the Syrian Intelligence Services claiming to have acted under duress: Nazis did not have to fear general collective penalties such as imprisonment of entire families. In Syria however, the regime is using families of alleged traitors to put them under pressure. Already in cases where there is a mere suspicion against anyone, their families are threatened. Z280716 told the court about this and Le Caisne and P21 also elaborated on the dangers a defection is posing on the entire family of the defector. Further, the policy of granting witness protection showed that the judges themselves acknowledged the existing imminent threats against life, limb and liberty for insider witnesses. Schuster said the same would be true for Al-Gharib and his family.

<sup>8</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translations of ranks are based on what has been said in court in German. The German terms are then translated to US and UK rank, according to the official NATO code.

His wife was also interrogated by the Intelligence Services, although she did not testify about this, one can imagine from the testimonies of other witnesses in this trial, how harsh this interrogation was for her.

According to Schuster, even if one would affirm the reasonableness of accepting imminent threats to one's own life in not participating in atrocity crimes, one could not say that it is reasonable to accept these threats for one's family. Such a conclusion could not even be made based on Dr. Kaul's postulate. Schuster concluded the requirements for §35\(1\) S.1 StGB [duress] are therefore met in Al-Gharib's case. As Al-Gharib himself explained in his handwritten statement, he had the choice between following orders and consequently participating in these crimes or endanger his and his family's life, limb, and liberty.

Acquittal:

Schuster described international criminal law and universal jurisdiction to be extraordinary developments in light of the atrocities in the history of mankind. He added that the present trial achieved that the widespread and systematic attack that the Syrian regime has been committing since 2011, is the subject matter of a fair and impartial trial. The trial also provided many witnesses the chance to tell the world about their suffering and give a face to the many more victims. According to Schuster, this is alone would already be worth a lot. It would, however, be wrong to think that a sentence for Al-Gharib would be the only reasonable outcome for this trial. Schuster explained that one had to be cautious of the Syrian community worldwide and the signal a conviction of Al-Gharib would send to them, especially to defectors. Without them it would be impossible to investigate and prosecute perpetrators of the crimes committed in Syria. Schuster further questioned what kind of signal a conviction would send to those still working for the Syrian Intelligence Services. Their only choice would then be limited to either continuing to participate in these crimes or to defect and be convicted.

Schuster mentioned the present trial caused discussions even within the Syrian opposition, as P24 explained to the court. While it might be morally demanded to defect, it would be in fact an active act of opposing the regime. Unlike the Nazis, Al-Gharib was only able to flee by risking his own and his family's lives. In January 2012, when Al-Gharib defected, the regime was very much in power. According to Schuster, it would simply be immoral to question Al-Gharib's responsibility by claiming that he defected five months too late.

Schuster went on to explain that while the Syrian regime is still in power and the conflict entered into its eleventh year, the present trial "unfortunately" could not contribute to transitional justice, unlike the ICTY or the Nuremberg trials. Nonetheless, for the abovementioned reasons, Al-Gharib should not be found guilty of the crimes he was accused of.

Schuster concluded by saying that in light of the judges' decision and reasoning to uphold Al-Gharib's detention, the defense was convinced that his conviction was already decided. And while one says that judges should close their ears after the taking of evidence, in order not to be confused, Schuster said he hoped he and his colleague were able to raise some doubts regarding Al-Gharib's culpability. Schuster requested an acquittal of Al-Gharib.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked the defendant Al-Gharib whether he wants to make use of his right to provide final remarks. Al-Gharib answered that he had nothing to say in addition to what his defense counsels just said.

The trial was adjourned at 11 am.

The next hearing will take place on February 24, 2021. On this day, the judgment for Eyad Al-Gharib will be handed down.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN and EYAD AL GHARIB

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 28

Hearing Date: February 24, 2021

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 62 – February 24, 2021

After severing the trial against Al-Gharib the previous week, the judges issued their verdict in the case. The judges found Eyad Al-Gharib guilty of aiding and abetting torture and severe deprivation of liberty as crimes against humanity. They detailed that he was involved in the arrest of at least 30 people and their transfer to Branch 251 in September or October 2011. According to the judges, he had several reasonable options to escape the situation, instead of staying and contributing to these crimes. It was found that he did not establish a defense of duress. After weighing in on aggravating and mitigating factors based on the totality of evidence (namely his self-incriminating interview with the German asylum authority), the judges sentenced Al-Gharib to 4.5 years imprisonment upholding his arrest warrant.

While the prosecutors declared they would not seek to appeal the verdict, the defense indicated that they would take applicable legal steps against the judgment.

Day 62 of Trial – February 24, 2021

The hearing began at 9:30 with 25 media representatives and 29 spectators present.

The Court issued the following verdict:

[THIS IS NOT THE OFFICIAL VERDICT. It is a detailed summary of the oral hearing in which the verdict was announced]

In the name of the people, the following judgment is delivered: The defendant Eyad Al-Gharib is found guilty of aiding and abetting torture and severe deprivation of liberty as crimes against humanity, in accordance with §7\(1\) Nos 5 and 9 VStGB. The defendant is sentenced to 4 years and 6 months imprisonment.

After reading out the verdict, Presiding Judge Kerber announced that there will be consecutive Arabic translation for the entire session, transmitted through the loudspeakers in the courtroom. She therefore read out the verdict again, to allow the translator to translate it for the audience.

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to read out the reasoning:

[Note: the following is no exact duplicate of the judges' reasoning which was read out in court. It is based on what our trial monitors were able to hear in court]

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and "information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel." Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Reasoning:

First, Presiding Judge Kerber on behalf of the judges mentioned that defendant Al-Gharib did not make an oral statement in court. She added that upon advice of his defense counsel, the defendant submitted a handwritten statement.

Judge Kerber went on to first provide details regarding the defendant: Eyad Al-Gharib was born on May 25, 1976 in Damascus. He is a Sunni and grew up in the governorate of Deir ez-Zor where he attended school, which he left without a degree after the 12th grade. From 1994 until 1996, he was living in Damascus with his uncle and two brothers. In 1996, he joined the General Intelligence Directorate in Najha, where he undertook a two-year long training. This training also included training on carrying and using arms. After that, he completed another training to become an instructor. The defendant worked for the General Intelligence Directorate from July 10, 1996 until January 15, 2012. From the end of 1997, he was working as an instructor. Kerber said that according to his own statements, he was very good at his job. He mainly worked as a physical instructor. Kerber again referred to a quote from the defendant who said that “one has to force people to endure more”. Kerber went on to explain that in 2004/05 the defendant received counter-terrorism training, adding that he was further trained to detect and create ambushes, abduct people, arrest people and work as a bodyguard. He was mainly focusing on street fights and storming. In February 2010, Al-Gharib started working at Branch 251 in Damascus as a warrant officer [Oberstabsfeldwebel]<sup>2</sup>. In this capacity, he worked in the “religion” division, overseeing four districts in Damascus regarding surveillance of mosques and imams. He had to report to his superior, Kamal Al-Ahmad. Following this work, he was transferred to Az-Zabadani in summer 2011. The judges further found that he did not like the office work there and accepted an offer from his previous boss to return to operative work. Al-Gharib first worked at the “religion division” of Branch 251 for one or two months, before he was transferred to Division 40 in July 2011, where he stayed until January 2012.

At this time, he went to Deir ez-Zor without his wife and children, the Intelligence Services were looking for him and interrogated his wife. According to the judges’ findings, the Intelligence Services, nonetheless, could not prevent Al-Gharib’s family from fleeing. His family later joined him using the ID card of his wife’s cousin. It was not clear to the judges, when exactly Al-Gharib left Syria. According to his own statements, he entered Turkey in February 2013. The judges, however, only knew for sure that he came to Germany via Greece on February 25, 2018. Al-Gharib came to Germany via the ‘family reunification program’. He first sent his 16-year-old son [to Germany], whom he consequently followed in February 2018. Judge Kerber summarized that meanwhile, Al-Gharib would have six children and receives a guaranteed minimum pension in Germany. He has a residence permit, allowing him to stay in Germany while his asylum procedure is pending.

Regarding his criminal record, the judges found that Al-Gharib had an entry to the criminal register regarding one instance of bodily injury. On May 25, 2018, at his place of residence in Hermeskeil, following a fight between his son and another child, he hit the other child in the face. He was sentenced to pay 20 daily rates [5€ per day, 100€ in total], which he paid.

Regarding the present trial, Judge Kerber recalled that Al-Gharib was arrested on February 12, 2019 and brought into pre-trial detention, he was released on May 17, 2019 and following an order from the German Federal Court of Justice dated June 6, 2019, again taken into pre-trial detention on August 15, 2019. Al-Gharib has been in pre-trial and trial detention since that day.

<sup>2</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The translations of ranks are based on what has been said in court in German. The German terms are then translated to UK rank, according to the official NATO code.

Evaluation of evidence:

On behalf of the judges, Presiding Judge Kerber provided some short statements regarding the evaluation of evidence in this trial. She explained that this trial was mainly based on the defendant's own statements he made with the German asylum authority (BAMF) and his statements with the German Federal Criminal Police (BKA) dated August 16, 2018. In its decision dated June 6, 2019, the German Federal Court of Justice addressed the question regarding admissibility of Al-Gharib's statements with the BKA. The Court affirmed the admissibility of the statement, even detailing the page number and paragraph: page 13, first paragraph. Kerber further recalled that during the main trial, the judges did not obtain any additional statements from the defendant.

Situation in Syria:

Presiding Judge Kerber first mentioned that the political situation in Syria was of significant importance for this trial. It would therefore be necessary to also address the events prior to Bashar Al-Assad's reign.

Kerber started by recalling the variety of religious groups in Syria. She said that prior to 2011, around 60-70% of the people were Sunni. Before the start of the conflict around 11% of the people were Alawites. The rest of the population consisted of different minorities such as Druze, Yazidi and Christian. Following Syria's independence, the military was the only opportunity of advancement for Alawites. They consequently represented the majority of members of the army.

Kerber further mentioned that following a coup by the Ba'ath party in the 1960s and another one in 1970 Hafez Al-Assad gained power. In 1973, the constitution was amended, declaring the Ba'ath party as the party of the state. Kerber stressed that it was not possible for people to oppose the Al-Assad and Makhlof families. One of their central means of retaining power was the Intelligence Services. According to the judges, the Intelligence Services infused the entire society and created an atmosphere of mistrust and fear. The state of emergency, which was in place since 1963, made it easy to arbitrarily arrest people, and detain them in prisons of the Intelligence Services. Despite the fact that torture was prohibited by the Constitution, there were no hurdles, already at that time, to torturing people.

Kerber went on by saying that Hafez Al-Assad further used the military, in cases where the Intelligence Services were "insufficient". Kerber added that this became prominent at the Hama massacre in 1982, when the city of Hama was bombed, thousands of civilians died, and resistance against the government was blighted. After Hafez Al-Assad's death, his son Bashar Al-Assad took over in 2000.

Kerber recalled the first months of Bashar Al-Assad being in office – this period is also known as Damascus Spring – when one could recognize some changes. Kerber added that political prisoners were released, and independent newspapers were founded. However, in Summer 2001, Bashar Al-Assad returned to his father's policy. Political freedoms were restricted again and in September 2001, many people were arrested. Kerber further referred to the war in Iraq which caused unrest in the region and led to a convergence of Syria towards Iran. However, Bashar Al-Assad renewed and normalized Syria's external relations.

Regarding the Arab spring, Kerber mentioned that it raised hopes amongst Syrians to gain more freedom. People started aligning via internet and organized demonstrations. Judge Kerber further recalled that at first, the government did not react much to the protests. However, the situation escalated in March 2011. Teenagers in Dar'a spray-painted slogans on a wall. They were consequently arrested by the Military Intelligence Directorate and the so-called Mukhabarat. Although they were released relatively soon, their bodies showed clear signs of torture.

This caused many demonstrations throughout Syria. On March 15, 2011, people protested in Damascus. Three days later, on March 18, people gathered to protest in Dar'a after the midday prayers. Security forces intervened and at least one or two people died. No reforms were announced after these instances. Instead, the presence of security forces in Dar'a were increased, claiming that they were on the side of the protestors. Judge Kerber referred to the events of March 23, 2011, when again shots were fired at demonstrators and mosques, causing many deaths. Protests meanwhile included thousands of people. On April 1, 2011, there were the first dead demonstrators in Damascus and rural Damascus. At least four people died at a demonstration in Duma, following the use of live ammunition by government forces. Some of the protestors threw stones at government forces, however, none of them carried firearms at that time. Judge Kerber concluded that most of the demonstrations were peaceful at the beginning. People for example carried palm leaves to show that they were peaceful.

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to explain that in order to handle these dynamics, the Central Crisis Management Cell (CCMC) was established in March 2011. The judges found that this was the place where the strategy and next steps of the security forces were discussed. It was headed by Bashar Al-Assad. Its members included the heads of the National Security Office, Military Intelligence Directorate, Air Force Directorate, Political Security and the General Intelligence Service, as well as the Ministers of Interior and Defense. The judges also found that from April 2011 on, the CCMC decided on how to deal with the opposition. In a letter to the armed forces and the Intelligence Services dated April 18, 2011, the CCMC stated that 'the phase of tolerance and cooperation is over'. It further provided details on how to deal with protestors: no releases of detainees, demonstrations are to be handled by the police, which is to be supported by the Intelligence Services in emergencies. According to the judges, the CCMC further said that 'those raising arms against the state, shall be opposed by the use of armed violence'. Following a meeting of the CCMC on April 20, 2011, those measures were further tightened. Citing the CCMC: "it is necessary to start another phase. We have to win this battle by the use of armed violence" and "detailed plans need to be prepared to confront unarmed and armed protests: specifically in Dar'a, Damascus and surrounding area, and Homs." These plans were to be designed not only by the Intelligence Services, but also by the army; based on the scenario that unrest spread throughout the entire country. Judge Kerber concluded that this was the time when the number of civilian victims significantly increased.

Kerber went on to detail the events starting on April 23, 2011, when people died at a demonstration by the use of water guns, live ammunition and tear gas. On April 25, the Syrian army stormed Damascus with the help of tanks and snipers. According to the judges, the following blockade lasted until April 29, causing up to 200 deaths by the security forces. When thousands of people in Dar'a protested against the lack of water and food supplies, they were shot with live ammunition, causing many deaths. Similar incidents occurred in other places as well at the same time. Kerber referred to an instance in Duma, where people were shot during a raid and many were arrested due to massive violence. In May 2011, the EU and U.S started sanctioning the Syrian government. Nonetheless, the number of wanted persons and arrests in Syria increased. Militias, mostly the government affiliated Shabiha, increasingly appeared at demonstrations.

The judges further found that around July 2011, the Free Syrian Army (FSA) was founded to allegedly protect the people from the government. Parts of the FSA consisted of defected soldiers, who formerly worked for the Syrian Army. The judges found that soldiers who disobeyed orders were shot. Presiding Judge Kerber recalled the escalation of the conflict, detailing that Hama was stormed at the end of July 2011 and many civilians were killed during this instance. Kerber added that the conflict further escalated in August 2011. After a meeting on August 5, 2011, the CCMC condemned the security forces' "lax" response to the demonstrations.

In the same letter, the CCMC told the National Security Office that daily raids shall be conducted by the military and the Intelligence Services. All supporters of the protests shall be found and transferred to the Intelligence Services. Demonstrations shall be crushed. Daily reports shall be sent to the head of the National Security Office. The judges found that in Fall 2011, further meetings and discussions followed. The smashing of peaceful demonstrations became increasingly violent. As an example for a military action against demonstrations, Judge Kerber mentioned an incident in Duma, where electricity, water and internet supplies were cut. At the end of September 2011, the city was encircled by the military.

Kerber concluded by saying that from mid-October 2011, the Arab League tried to mediate. The regime made certain suggestions, for example releasing 3,500 detainees, withdrawing tanks and allowing the League and the media to cover the situation in Syria.

Actions by the regime

The judges briefly shed light on the actions taken by the regime in this context. Presiding Judge Kerber mentioned that the regime tried to create the outward image of terror attacks taking place in Syria. They therefore “palmed arms off on the demonstrators” to have an excuse for their violent actions. Members of the Intelligence Services were taken to hospitals, pretending to be injured. Media representatives were then allowed to interview these allegedly injured people. When the Arab League visited Branch 251, all detainees were transferred, and guards pretended to be the detainees. Despite efforts by the League, violence continued in 2012.

Judge Kerber provided several examples: In February 2012, one person was shot at a demonstration in Al-Mazzeah, dozens were arrested. In the same month, Homs was attacked with rocket shells several times. At the beginning of March 2012, people were massacred in Homs. Children and adults were killed by government troops and militias. The judges found however, that the government continued to claim that it was only countering terror attacks. Kerber explained that these elaborations and recreation of events were significantly based on the expert testimonies of Ms. Thurmman, Christopher Engels from CIJA, who also submitted the above-mentioned CCMC documents to the court, and Christoph Reuter. The judges paid special gratitude to the experts Mazen Darwish and Anwar Al-Bunni.

Role of the Intelligence Services

According to the judges, the so-called Mukhabarat played an integral part in quelling the uprising. They were a crucial element in retaining power, already for Hafez Al-Assad. The judges found that there are five organizations of the Intelligence Services in Syria: the Office of National Security, which is the coordinating agency, the Military Intelligence Directorate, the Air-Force Intelligence Directorate, the General Intelligence Directorate and the National Security Council.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: Although some evidence [see the diagrams in Trial Report #17, day42] has indicated that there were two distinct agencies supervising the Intelligence services, it can be assumed that both terms (Office of National Security and National Security Council) refer to the same agency which, however, around 2013/14 changed its name. This change of name might have led to the assumption that there were two agencies, causing further confusion as to the role of this agency as a supervising body or organization within the Intelligence Services. While the difference between the two terms in Arabic refers to the word “national”, the translation into German presumably led to a differentiation based on the preposition and the term “office”.

The latter four are central,<sup>4</sup> with Branches in Damascus and regional Branches. According to the judges, depending on their mandate, the Branches had their own detention facilities, where people were already tortured when Hafez Al-Assad was in power. Torture methods included: arbitrary beatings using cables and sticks, Doulab and Shabh. Judge Kerber explained that Bashar Al-Assad adopted these structures and used them to intimidate and exterminate the opposition, particularly in 2011. Means to achieve this started in March 2011 including arbitrary detention, torture and arrests. Kerber added that in the course of the uprising, the number of detainees and dead people increased steadily. While the goal of arrests was previously to gain information, starting in 2012 at the latest, the main goal was to intimidate and exterminate the opposition.

The judges found that the conditions in the detention facilities continued to worsen. People not only had to endure torture, but starved and suffocated. The hygienic situation was catastrophic. Sicknesses and injuries from torture got worse and medical treatment was only provided at an extremely basic level, if at all. The judges recalled witnesses describing that pills were simply thrown inside the cell. According to the judges, people were so afraid of being transferred to a hospital that they tried to hide their health issues. It was particularly known that instead of receiving medical treatment, people were tortured and murdered in military hospitals like Tishreen, Al-Mazzeah and Harasta.

Presiding Judge Kerber went on to explain that the corpses of those who died while detained by the Intelligence Services were collected at hospitals. Shortly after the start of the uprising, military photographers were tasked with documenting the corpses. They had to take pictures of the corpses which were labeled with numbers. According to the judges, this practice was to ensure that there was proof that these people were not actually released. The number of people who died with the Intelligence Services was significantly increasing over time. The judges referred to reports of mass graves being dug in Najha [cemetery] in October 2011. These graves were 6m deep, 2-4m wide and 100-200m long. Similar reports exist for Al-Qutayfa [cemetery]. Refrigerated trucks carried the corpses, their numbers were documented on arrival at the mass graves, and they were then hastily buried.

Judge Kerber added that relatives of the detainees were never informed about the whereabouts and fate of their loved ones. If only, they were able to get information or sometimes even a release by using bribery or using their good relations with certain people.

Evaluation of evidence:

Judge Kerber mentioned that throughout the trial, the court heard several witnesses. She further added that Le Casine's testimony was particularly important, as she communicated information provided by Caesar and Sami. Sami's testimony was further introduced by the criminal inspector who interviewed him previously. The so-called Caesar Files included 26,935 photos of 6,821 people. They were also analyzed by Prof. Dr. Rothschild who presented his impressive forensic analysis in court. Presiding Judge Kerber stated: "I would like to make a personal statement about these files: I will never ever forget these photos."

<sup>4</sup> Note from the Trial Monitor: The judges did not mention "Political Security". In light of previous testimonies and evidence presented in court, it can be assumed that the judges intended to refer to "Political Security" instead of the "National Security Council" as one of the four main Intelligence Services with Branches in Damascus as well as regional Branches.

Regarding Branch 251:

Judge Kerber started by saying that the Branch “perfectly fits within the overall picture of Intelligence Services’ Branches.” She mentioned that Branch 251 is also called the ‘Inner Branch’ or ‘Al-Khatib’, Adding that it would be a Branch of the General Intelligence Directorate and was initially tasked with the general surveillance of the police, the general population, and the [Ba’ath] party. The judges found that Branch 251 was led by Tawfiq Younes توفيق يونس, the overall in charge of inner security. Regarding the location and facilities of the Branch, the judges found: The Branch is located at Baghdad Street in Damascus, close to the Red Crescent Hospital. The Branch consists of two buildings, opposite each other with a courtyard between them. In the basement of at least one of the buildings there is the prison for Branch 251. This prison has solitary and collective cells as well as interrogation rooms. Additional interrogation rooms are located on higher levels as well. Females as well as males are detained at the Branch, however, separated from each other.

Kerber went on to explain that whenever there was a demonstration, larger groups of new detainees arrived at Branch 251. They were forced to leave the buses in the yard of the Branch. Already at this point they received what was cynically called a “welcoming party”. According to the judges, this means that at the moment they departed the buses, guards started beating them with fists or certain objects like sticks, poles or batons. These beatings were so violent that some witnesses told the court about people suffering broken ribs. Detainees were kicked and their heads were smashed against walls, causing some to fall unconscious for hours. New detainees sometimes had to wait in the yard for hours before they were taken to an office where they had to strip naked and leave their personal belongings. To frisk detainees, they had to squat in order to ensure that they did not hide any objects. After that, they were allowed to dress again, at least to a certain degree, and taken to their cell.

The judges also found that solitary cells measuring 1x2m were occupied with several detainees. The conditions in all cells were catastrophic. All of them were so overcrowded, that people were only able to sit or lay down in shifts. Judge Kerber recalled that it was only possible to lay down and sleep if people crossed their legs, a practice that even had its own name [The name was, however, not mentioned at this point]. In cells equipped with a toilet, the toilet was usually not separated from the cell. If it was separate, it was only done by hanging a curtain, so overall, it was never sufficiently separate from the rest of the cell. The toilet was used by a high number of detainees. Judge Kerber further summarized that in cells that were not equipped with a toilet, detainees were only allowed to use the toilet outside the cell one or two times per day. Drinking water was only available from the tap close to the toilets. Due to the restricted access to use the sanitary area, regarding times per day and time per use, people were usually never able to wash or even shower. In most cases, there was no daylight inside the cells. It was either completely dark or the light was on non-stop. In both cases, detainees were not able to tell what time it was. According to the judges, the insufficient hygienic condition caused many skin conditions which were not treated. Medical treatment was factually not available. Judge Kerber said the air inside the cells was “miserable” and the nutrition was insufficient. The food rations were merely sufficient for people to barely stay alive. Detainees could hear screams and the sound of torture in their cells, day and night. They were also not informed about the duration of their imprisonment and whether they would make it out alive at all.

Regarding interrogations, Judge Kerber detailed that they usually took place with one interrogation officer and at least one guard present. She added that the people who were being interrogated were constantly mistreated. Either because the officer did not like the answer, before they answered or because they answered at all. The judges found there were orders to mistreat the person, but the guards also mistreated them without receiving specific orders. At Branch 251, detainees usually had to endure electroshocks and beatings with cables and poles. The Falaga method was used particularly frequent. Detainees further had to endure Doulab and Shabh.

The latter was not only used to hang people from the ceiling, but also to beat them while in this position. Judge Kerber recalled witnesses further testifying that they received threats against their family.

Regarding the defendant's role, the judges found that Eyad Al-Gharib worked at this Branch since 2010. Kerber detailed that he first worked at the "religion" division, and then at the office in Az-Zabadani, before he joined Division 40 in July 2011. Division 40 was formally subordinate to Branch 251. However, due to the fact that it was led by Hafez Makhoul, a cousin of Bashar Al-Assad, the Division enjoyed considerable independence. According to the judges, members of Division 40 acted as a rapid intervention force, and usually worked in the field, arresting people at demonstrations and checkpoints and conducting raids. Kerber mentioned that the defendant himself called Division 40 a "mafiosi-like alliance".

Offences:

The judges were further satisfied that during his work at Branch 251, the conditions there as well as the acts inside did not remain hidden from the defendant. He especially knew about torture. Kerber recalled him telling the German Federal Criminal Police that one was able to hear the screams of torture at the cafeteria of the Branch.

Detailing the offences that Al-Gharib was charged with, Judge Kerber first explained that at a demonstration at a mosque in Duma in September or October 2011, around 3,000 – 6,000 protestors demonstrated peacefully, sitting and dancing on the streets. Around 1,000 security forces were ordered to confront the demonstration. Among these forces were members of the Air Force Intelligence, the Ministry of Interior, several members of Branch 251, the military and around 250 people from Division 40. Kerber went on to explain that at least the members of Division 40 were ordered to shoot at people. Hafez Makhoul himself took the opportunity to take shots and order that 'everyone who loves the president shall shoot the traitors'. According to the judges, Hafez Makhoul arrived at the demonstration in his Mercedes Benz, insulted the demonstrators and opened fire with his machine gun. He hit at least five people who remained on the ground and 6-7 other people started shooting as well. However, the judges found that the defendant did not shoot and instead tried to step back. When demonstrators tried to flee, the security forces, among them Al-Gharib, followed them and arrested many. The judges were satisfied that at least two vans took people from Duma to Branch 251. Many of the arrested people were beaten on the ride and, once they arrived at Branch 251, they had to endure the so-called "welcoming party" on their way from the yard to the building. All detainees were severely beaten and hit with metal poles.

The judges were not able to determine whether Al-Gharib himself beat any of the detainees. The number of people and cases of torture in which Al-Gharib consequently participated was determined in favor of the defendant. As Al-Gharib mentioned "buses", the judges found that there were two buses [of detained persons]. Particularly after Friday prayers, people were taken to Branch 251 in buses. Judge Kerber recalled witness P5 telling the court that that there was space for around 15-20 people on these buses, however, they were usually overcrowded. In favor of the defendant, the judges found that there were 15 people in each van. All of them were tortured and had to suffer physical pain during their detention. All of them had to endure the "welcoming party" and suffer the indescribable detention conditions. They all had to hear the constant screams and sounds of torture. All of them were left in complete uncertainty regarding whether they would be able to get out alive.

Judge Kerber further explained that as a member of the Intelligence Service whose tasks were to suppress demonstrations, Al-Gharib knew about the widespread and systematic attack of the Syrian government. He was further aware of detainees being transferred to Branch 251 and the cruel treatment they had to suffer there. Kerber added that as a year-long employee of Branch 251, Al-Gharib knew about the torture practices and the fate of the detainees.

He worked at Branch 251 since February 2010, and ever since then had entered and left the building regularly and heard the screams that one could hear even at the cafeteria, as he himself explained. Overall, the judges found that he not only knew about people being tortured starting in March 2011, but he also even knew about changes that took place since March 2011. Kerber recalled Al-Gharib saying that “the punishment increased, and the guards just did whatever they wanted”.

Legal assessment:

Defendant Al-Gharib was found guilty of aiding and abetting crimes against humanity. The judges were satisfied that the requirements for a widespread and systematic attack were met at least since the end of March 2011. As part of this attack, Al-Gharib aided and abetted torture (§7\(1\) 5 VStGB) and severe deprivation of liberty (§7\(1\) 9 VStGB) in 30 cases. A defense of duress according to §35 StGB is not applicable.

While draconian punishment was possible in cases of disobedience, the judges could not say with certainty whether Al-Gharib indeed thought about leaving or involuntarily stayed due to possible consequences. Presiding Judge Kerber mentioned that Al-Gharib did not make any statements on these points.

According to the judges, it was also not the case that he would have had no chance to leave at all. In light of 250 members of Division being present at this particular demonstration, the judges found it questionable whether it would have been detected at all had Al-Gharib left the scene. The judges further found that he could have pretended to be injured by tripping or pretended to have a sprained ankle. He also could have faked a sickness prior to the operation. [As he did not show the defense of duress] Presiding Judge Kerber concluded that Al-Gharib therefore culpably committed an illegal act.

Sentence:

Stressing that Al-Gharib was not on trial for the atrocities committed by the regime, Judge Kerber explained that he was only accused of acts directly attributable to him and for his contribution to these acts. In light of this, the judges made the following determinations regarding the duration of sentence in his case:

In accordance with §7\(1\) VStGB one shall receive a sentence of no less than five years imprisonment for violations of §7(1) No.5 VStGB (torture) and no less than two years imprisonment for violations of §7(1) No.9 VStGB (severe deprivation of liberty). Kerber explained that in light of the main offence relating to aiding and abetting torture according to §7(1) No.5 VStGB, the sentence shall initially be between 5 and 15 years imprisonment. In light of the overall circumstances and number of people, the sentence would in a next step be amended to 2 to 15 years imprisonment, in accordance with §7\(2\) VStGB. Judge Kerber explained that this amendment in favor of the defendant was due to the following factors:

- Al-Gharib incriminated himself with the BAMF as well as with the BKA and his verdict is significantly based on these statements.
- At the time the offences were committed, he was integrated in a hierarchical structure where he was under certain pressure to act.
- After a relatively early defection in January 2012 – the judges could not find otherwise – he turned his back on the regime.
- At the time the offences were committed, he had no criminal record, as far as this could be determined.

Kerber went on to explain that these factors alone were not sufficient to lower the maximum sentence, assuming a less grave incident. However, the fact that he only aided and abetted the crimes was sufficient reason to lower the sentence as mentioned above. The judges referred to §49 StGB, providing that the highest sentence possible in such cases is set at 11 years and 3 months imprisonment.

Kerber said a further amendment of the sentence was required according to §46b StGB. She explained that while the defendant did not make any statements during the main trial, he indeed contributed to the discovery of [other] crimes in his questioning with the BKA. During this questioning, he elaborated on the actions of Anwar Raslan and in particular on the fact that he witnessed how people were beaten with metal poles at Branch 251 and beaten to death. He also stated that he witnessed five or six transports of around ten corpses from Branch 251 that happened in 2011. Kerber recalled that these instances are also included in the indictment against Anwar Raslan and could have not been proven and attributed to Anwar Raslan without Al-Gharib. For the above-mentioned reasons, the margin of sentence was set at 6 months to 11 years and 3 months imprisonment. In determining this margin, the above-mentioned aspect in favor of the defendant as well as the fact that he aided and abetted the crimes and contributed to the discovery of crimes, were taken into account. Kerber again stressed that without Al-Gharib's own statements, there would not have been a verdict.

The judges considered the following aggravating factors in Al-Gharib's case:

- He voluntarily worked for a repressive apparatus and voluntarily returned from an office job to the operative business.
- The number of people [30].
- Detainees were exposed to conditions that can hardly be put into words.
- He aided and abetted two variations of crimes against humanity according to §7\(1\) CCAIL: torture and severe deprivation of liberty.

The judges already mentioned mitigating factors and eventually sentenced Al-Gharib to 4 years and 6 months imprisonment and ordered to uphold his arrest warrant [to remain in custody].

Presiding Judge Kerber announced that the oral reasoning was concluded, and she would now ask the defense whether they want to be informed about their remedies and whether she should do a short or long version of that. The defense requested a short version.

One of the translators asked to have a break. Presiding Judge Kerber said that this would only take five minutes maximum and asked the translators to swap.

Presiding Judge Kerber provided the following information regarding remedies to the defense:

The judgement could be appealed [revision] within one week [notice of appeal]. This must be done in either in writing or taken to protocol at the office of the district court in Koblenz or the district court that oversees the defendant's imprisonment. The notice of appeal must be written in German. A written declaration must be submitted to the Higher Regional Court in Koblenz within the time limit. It is thereby not sufficient to merely have the post stamp within the time-limit. The revision needs to be reasoned. Therefore, a request detailing to which extent the judgment will be appealed must be submitted. A signed letter would be insufficient. Instead the request and reasoning must be taken to protocol by the office of the court. It needs to be signed by an attorney of law or the defense and submitted in writing. This must be done within one month after the judgment was received. Here again, the post stamp would be insufficient to meet the deadline.

Presiding Judge Kerber asked Al-Gharib and his defense whether they requested a more detailed information. Defense counsel Schuster denied.

Judge Kerber asked the prosecutors the same question, they also denied.

Presiding Judge Kerber concluded the trial by finding that Al-Gharib's imprisonment would continue, complaints against that should be submitted in writing in German language to the OLG Koblenz or the district court in charge of the prison where Al-Gharib is currently imprisoned.

The prosecutors said they would refrain from taking any legal steps against the judgment [appealing].

The trial against Eyad Al-Gharib at the OLG Koblenz ended at 11:15 am on February 24, 2021.

The next hearing in the trial against Anwar Raslan, will take place on March 10, 2021.

TRIAL OF ANWAR RASLAN

Higher Regional Court – Koblenz, Germany

Trial Monitoring Report 29

Hearing Dates: March 10 &amp; 11, 2021

*CAUTION: Some testimony includes descriptions of torture.Summaries/Highlights:<sup>1</sup>*Trial Day 63 – March 10, 2021

After the verdict in the trial of Eyad Al-Gharib was announced at the end of February, the trial of Anwar Raslan continued. The court heard the testimony of P28, a 55-year-old man who was a state employee at a laboratory for medical tests in Syria. He explained how he was detained at a checkpoint in his hometown of Harasta in 2012 for being on a wanted list. P28 was transferred to Al-Khatib Branch where he was held in the “Death Cell” with more than a hundred other detainees. He described the cell as being dark and airless, like a grave.

Trial Day 64 – March 11, 2021

The witness was P29 whose personal information was not disclosed. He described how checkpoint personnel asserted that a defect in his identification card was linked to a Sheikh who instructed people to damage their IDs in opposition to the Syrian government. On the way to Al-Khatib Branch, security officials stopped at a random location where they ordered P29 and other detainees off the bus. They then threw cigarette butts at the detainees backs and beat them. P29 described being sexually harassed by officials who fondled his hair and pushed the forepart of a rifle’s barrel up his anus.

Trial Day 63 – March 10, 2021

The proceedings began at 9:30AM. There were five spectators and two individuals from the media present.

Plaintiff Counsel Stephan Kuhn appeared for Bahns. One of the court interpreters did not attend for health reasons and was replaced by Al-Gharib’s former interpreter.

Testimony of P28

P28 [name redacted], was born on January 01, 1966. He was accompanied by his attorney, Manuel Reiger. Instructions were read and he was informed about his rights as a witness.

Questioning by Presiding Judge Kerber

Presiding Judge Kerber asked P28 if he wanted to share his address. P28 declined.

Kerber asked P28 about his job. P28 said that he used to work in a laboratory for medical tests. Currently, he is not working. He volunteered as a driver with the German Red Cross for two years.

<sup>1</sup> Throughout this report, [information located in brackets are notes from our trial monitor] and “information placed in quotes are statements made by the witness, judges or counsel.” Note that this report does not purport to be a transcript of the trial; it is merely an unofficial summary of the proceedings. The names of witnesses have been redacted.

Kerber asked P28 if he is related to the accused by blood or marriage. P28 said no.

Kerber asked P28 why he was in conflict with the regime and how he was detained. P28 said that he used to work at [information redacted] as a lab technician who performed medical tests. One day, he and his wife were driving home from work in their car. There were many checkpoints scattered around his town, Harasta حارستا, including at the entrances. There was—and still is—a state of security disturbance in Syria. One of the checkpoints that P28 normally travelled through always asked to see identification cards. P28 normally showed his work association card (he was a state employee). That day, however, one of the officials took P28's card to the commander of the checkpoint. P28 was surprised when the official came back and ordered him to get out of his car. They went together to the commander who told P28 that [he was wanted]. P28 asked for the reason why he was wanted. The commander did not know why, but P28's name was indeed on the wanted list. The commander found this strange and said that this could be an issue of similar names. He returned P28's identification card and let him go. P28 told the security personnel that they could visit the [police hospital where P28 worked - it was essentially a detention center from which people were transferred to the security branches] if there was a security issue [or to clear up any confusion].

P28 was surprised when the officer then instructed the personnel to tell P28's wife to leave (without the car), handcuff P28 behind his back and pull his shirt over his face, then go to the police hospital. P28 and other detainees were put on a bus that was used to transfer detainees and criminals. He remained handcuffed with his head covered. Someone approached P28, lifted the shirt off P28's face, and asked P28 his name. He then asked if P28 knew him. P28 thought the question was strange and said that he did not know the person. The man said, "I am the one whom you should know." When P28 asked why, the man replied, "you will know at the Branch." P28 and the others were taken to Al-Khatib Branch.

In the outside square, they were lined up facing a wall and remained handcuffed. The detainees heard one of the guards asking, "why are you troubling us, sir? Why don't we kill them and finish this?" Eventually, the detainees entered the Branch. The reception was bad. Abu Ghadab ordered P28 to take off his clothes then squat. He took P28's personal belongings and put him in the "Death Cell." P28 said he felt like he was still living in it now. It was like a grave—dark with 130-140 people crammed inside and no light or windows. The cell's width was 3 – 3.5m and its length was 5 – 6m. P28 stood on one leg for six hours, then alternated. There was also a toilet. There was a hatch at the bottom of the cell door that was 30x50cm. Air and dim light from the corridor entered through it. Ventilation happened through an air-suction device. The detainees felt like they were suffocating. The guards often punished the detainees by shutting the hatch on the door. When that happened, the detainees could not breathe. The cell's ceiling was so damp that it accumulated water droplets. Lice infested the cell too. The medical conditions were bad; everyone in the cell was sick. Most people had fevers and/or skin conditions. P28 was in the cell for a week and was interrogated twice. He was beaten during both interrogations. He still suffers from the damage caused by having his ear beat. He has tinnitus and hears noises in his head. He cannot sleep. Sometimes, he has to take anti-depressant pills. [P28 stopped talking and there was a moment of silence].

Kerber asked if P28 needed a break. P28 said yes and asked for water.

***

[15-minute-break]

***

Questioning by Judge Wiedner

Judge Wiedner returned to the topic of when P28 was detained at the checkpoint. He asked P28 what day that happened. P28 said it happened on May 19, 2012 at noon.

Wiedner recalled that P28 spoke about checkpoint facilities during the German police questioning (when they were established and how many there were in Harasta حراستا). Wiedner asked if P28 remembered speaking about this. P28 explained that the checkpoints were established around the end of 2011 and the beginning of 2012. There were many checkpoints in Harasta. Almost every street had one, including the street on which he lived. Checkpoints had tanks and machine-guns, so people could not fight back. The checkpoint personnel occupied places without asking for permission and nobody could object. The checkpoint near his house was formerly a shop that was looted. At the police station, there was a sniper (this was in 2012 after P28's detention). He killed people in the streets. P28 witnessed a young man being killed. [P28 and other people] could not evacuate the man who was shot because of the sniper. [P28 did not explain if the man was killed by the sniper.] The sniper was placed in that location because people demonstrated against the checkpoints. Eventually, the checkpoints remained scattered around the town's entrances, and the ones inside the town were removed.

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that there were approximately 200 checkpoints in Harasta. P28 said that, at a certain point, the checkpoints segmented the town. He might have exaggerated the actual number of checkpoints, but they really were on every street. You could not walk 300 meters without having to stop at one. Eventually, the checkpoints were removed after protests subsided. But the checkpoints at the town's entrance remained.

Wiedner asked when the number of checkpoints increased in relation to the demonstrations. P28 recalled that the number of checkpoints increased in 2012, but he did not remember the month. The number increased while he was detained, so maybe in March or April [2012].

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that the checkpoints were only on main streets at the beginning of the demonstrations, but were then placed everywhere. Wiedner assumed that more checkpoints were established after the demonstrations started. P28 said that he had a problem with dates. At some point, there were no checkpoints inside the town—only along its perimeter. However, P28 did not know for sure. It had been 10 years since then.

Wiedner asked if the number of checkpoints increased in 2012. P28 said that when the checkpoints increased, they were added around the same time, not gradually. One day, the Presidential Guard and the Fourth Division entered Harasta. There were at least ten soldiers on every street. The whole army was there from 6:00AM to 12:00PM. They were allegedly looking for armed people.

Wiedner asked what happened and if people were detained. P28 said people were detained throughout the country on a daily basis. When the demonstrations started, the security forces detained anyone in their way.

Wiedner said that P28 mentioned an incident in which someone died during a demonstration. P28 explained that there was a demonstration in As-Sabeel [a neighbourhood in Harasta]. The security forces surrounded the demonstrators. Four people were killed. One of the victims was a young man between 15-20-years-old. He died instantly from a shot to the heart. P28 tried to carry him away, but was forced to leave him because the security forces surrounded [the demonstrators]. The [security forces] went door-to-door and searched for [demonstrators] in people's houses.

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that this incident occurred in 2011. P28 did not remember the date, but the demonstrations happened in 2011 and the beginning of 2012. Checkpoints increased and people began to arm themselves [this sentence was not interpreted].

Wiedner asked whether detentions at the checkpoints were targeted or indiscriminate. P28 said that the detentions were indiscriminate at the time when he was detained. Anyone in the street was detained. When the security forces heard about a demonstration, they came and detained everybody in their way. It did not make any difference whether or not someone was actually involved in the demonstration. It was merely a retaliatory operation.

Wiedner said that P28 mentioned something during police questioning that bribes were paid. P28 said that he had a 70-year-old cousin whose son was around 40-years-old. Both the father and son were detained at a checkpoint. A bribe was demanded for their release. [Their family members] did not pay the bribe and the men were killed in a horrible way.

Judge Kerber asked if P28 knew which branch was responsible for detaining people. P28 said that the checkpoints were [operated by different branches]. He did not know to whom the checkpoint belonged. All security forces were involved, even the army, but especially the Fourth Division. There were checkpoints where the personnel wore military uniforms and others where they did not.

Wiedner asked P28 when he was released. P28 said that he was released in July 2012 in Kafar Souseh كفر سوسه in the evening.

Wiedner asked P28 how he knew that he was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. P28 said that people knew more information inside the prison than outside the prison. They received news from the outside before the people outside got it (he did not know why).

Wiedner asked if P28 meant that other detainees told him about Al-Khatib Branch. P28 said that, at the time he was detained, the detainees knew that the branch responsible for security in Harasta was Al-Khatib.

Wiedner quoted from the police questioning transcript: "P28 lived in Harasta and worked in Damascus, so he was familiar with Damascus. P28 knew the bus routes. Other detainees told P28 that they were at Al-Khatib." Wiedner asked P28 if that was correct. P28 confirmed and said that Harasta is not far from Damascus, around 9km away. He studied at the Health Institute which is 400 – 500m away from Al-Khatib Branch. He went back and forth for two years. He also worked as a taxi driver in Damascus and knows his way around the city with closed eyes. He anticipated that he would go to Al-Khatib Branch [when he was in the bus].

Wiedner asked for how long P28 was detained at Al-Khatib Branch. P28 said that he was detained for one month.

Wiedner asked what happened afterward. P28 said that he was sent to another place, which he thought was Najha نجها but was not sure. He was there for around a week. The other detainees there said that it was Najha. He was interrogated once during that week. He was beaten and lost consciousness. After one week, he was returned to Al-Khatib. After one week at Al-Khatib, he was taken out of the "Death Cell" and was put in another cell that was relatively better.

Wiedner asked about the conditions in the other cell. P28 said that the cell was crowded, especially when new [detainees] came. Sometimes [the guards] brought 20 or 30 [detainees] at once. The health conditions were bad.

Wiedner asked if P28 was transferred to Kafar Souseh toward the end of his detention. P28 confirmed. After he was returned to Al-Khatib from Najha, he was interrogated again, then transferred to Kafar Souseh. During the interrogation, he was beaten and the interrogator demanded that P28 sign [two or three white] blank papers. He was blindfolded during the interrogation. A prison guard stood behind him while P28 sat on his knees with his head down and his hands cuffed behind his back. P28 received blows from the person behind him and the interrogator asked questions. A person came into the room and talked with the interrogator. [The interrogator] told that person: “[the personnel] are bringing people who did not do anything [wrong].” After that, the interrogator [was annoyed] and asked why they brought people who did not do anything [wrong].

Wiedner asked if that happened at Kafar Souseh or Al-Khatib. P28 said Al-Khatib.

Wiedner asked if that was when P28 signed the papers. P28 said yes. He told [the interrogator], “I did not do anything and want to end this tragedy. If you want to kill me, then kill me. I did nothing [wrong].”

Kerber asked if there was a third person in the room. P28 thought that a third person, who was a friend of the interrogator, came in for a moment.

Kerber asked if P28 identified a certain dialect being spoken. P28 said that there is a problem in Syria regarding dialects: everyone who joins the army or the security services speaks a coastal dialect [associated with Alawites]. Therefore, detainees cannot tell where authorities are really from. It is as if speaking [the coastal dialect] made people more powerful within the regime.

Wiedner asked if P28 ever saw the interrogator. P28 said that he saw the interrogator when the interrogation ended. P28 told the interrogator to kill him or release him. The interrogator replied that he would not kill P28 and told him to sign the blank papers. At that moment, the interrogator took the blindfold off P28’s eyes [P28 saw the interrogator], then told P28 to leave.

Wiedner asked P28 to describe the interrogator. P28 said that he was in his 40s or 50s. His hair was white. He was not tall and had tan skin. He wore a suit of a similar color [P28 pointed to his own suit, which was grey].

Wiedner asked P28 whether he could identify the person who was sitting to his right [Raslan] as the interrogator. P28 said no, he did not think [Raslan was the interrogator].

Wiedner asked how P28 was released and if it was through a court. P28 said that, after his interrogation at Al-Khatib Branch, the prison warden came [to the cell] a day or two later. He usually came when people needed to be transferred. P28 saw him twice and he wore a mask to shield him from the detainees’ scent. He read some names, including P28’s name. P28 was transferred to Kafar Souseh. When he was leaving Al-Khatib Branch, P28’s hands were tightly tied using zip ties that almost cut his wrists. [One of the personnel] gave P28 his belongings (not his belt), then P28 was transferred to Kafar Souseh. P28 said that he stayed at Al-Khatib and Najha for approximately a month and a week, then he stayed at Kafar Souseh for more than ten days (perhaps 12 – 14 days). Kafar Souseh was worse than Al-Khatib. There were 54 people in a cell that was called “The Double” المزدوجة. The cell was named “The Double” because it only fit two people. There was a window but it was closed. He was interrogated three or four days after his arrival.

Wiedner was interested in whether P28 was released after a trial. P28 said that he was released from Kafar Souseh without a trial.

Wiedner asked about food and water during detention. P28 said that the food situation was indescribably bad. No one in the courtroom today would offer that food to an animal. For example, the soup was served in a plastic washtub without bread or spoons. The other food was also bad.

Wiedner asked if the food was sufficient. P28 said that the food was so bad that he lost 30 kg. He entered prison weighing 90 kg and was 60 kg when he was released. He was also insulted while he ate. Insults were constant and detainees were beaten. The medical condition was bad. He recalled how he got sick for 15 days and had a high fever. There was no doctor. His fellow detainees had to take P28's shirt, dampen it with toilet water, and put it on him to reduce his temperature. This was repeated multiple times a day. He had lice, scabies, and patches on the skin, some of which were the size of [the bottom of a cup]. There was no medicine. At that time, [news] spread that there was a death in the "Death Cell." P28 thought that [the personnel] were afraid [because of the alleged death], so they brought a doctor. That was the only time [a doctor came] and he was only there for around an hour. Among the detainees in the external [cell], there was a person who had foot and chest injuries. He was thrown [by personnel] near the toilet and was surrounded by toilet water which touched his wounds. The man did not receive medical care. When the doctor came, he wrapped the man's inflamed leg with a bandage. Other detainees had diabetes, hypertension, lice, and more. The prison guard would say "who wants to donate money to cover the cost of medicine for [other detainees]?"

Wiedner asked if P28 received medical care or medicine. P28 said no.

Wiedner asked if P28 saw anyone die. P28 said that he did not see anyone die, but he heard about people who died. [News was spreading amongst] the detainees that the doctor came because someone died. P28 thought that anyone who lived in such conditions would probably die if they were not released. When people were released, they were reborn.

Wiedner asked about the water situation. P28 said that the detainees all drank from a jug of water. Like the food, the water was insufficient.

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that the detainees were given a jug of water that was inadequate and that P28 washed himself with toilet water. P28 said yes. He bathed with toilet water because he had no other choice. [The detainees] were not able to wear their clothes due to breathing [difficulties].

Kerber asked P28 to clarify what he meant by "toilet water" and whether he meant water from the toilet itself. P28 said that there was a hose that was used to clean the toilet. They used it to bathe. The toilet sometimes overflowed. [The detainees] lined up to go to the toilet. P28 had to wait around four hours for his turn.

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that the air in the cell was bad and the detainees complained about it. P28 said that, in the "Death Cell", whenever they closed the ventilation hatch, [the detainees] suffocated within a few minutes, so they screamed. The prison guard would then beat them. [The guard] brought a cable with him. One time, the cable's ends were exposed and iron wires protruded. [The guard] beat detainees with it and caused many wounds.

Wiedner recalled that P28 mentioned a situation in which detainees complained [that they were suffocating] and the guard told them that he wanted them dead. P28 said yes, they complained to [the guard about the lack of air] and he told them, "we want you to die."

Wiedner asked if the detainees suffered from collective punishment. P28 said yes, whenever the guard heard a noise or something in the cell. No one could look at him and everybody had to make space for him to stand. There was no space to begin with, but they were forced to stack [their bodies] on top of each other. Then [the guard] beat people randomly.

Wiedner asked how often the detainees slept. P28 said that they were unable to sleep. [The guard] came at any moment. He had fun and his hobby was killing. He took people close to death, but did not kill them. [The guards] were literally criminals.

Wiedner asked how the detainees slept. P28 said that they slept from exhaustion on top of each other. There was not enough space, except for on a few occasions when people were released [and there was more room]. In the external cell, detainees suffered as they heard the sounds of other detainees being tortured. P28 heard sounds that resembled an electric shock. It was horrible.

Kerber reminded P28 to ask for a break whenever he wanted one.

Wiedner asked if there was enough space to sleep. P28 said that it was too difficult to sleep. If one wanted to sleep, then he had to do it while sitting. The room was 3x6m with approximately 120 people inside. When P28 wanted to go to the toilet, he stepped over people. There was a lot of psychological pressure. Every moment, one anticipated being killed. P28 wondered how he could have slept [under such difficult conditions].

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning about an Iraqi. P28 said that the Iraqi had a notable decline in psychological functioning. He was badly beaten. His body had black, blue, and dark red bruises. His hand was swollen. His skin pores oozed blood instead of sweat. He constantly screamed. The prison guard heard him banging on the [cell] door while he repeated that he did not do anything wrong and asked to be released. The prison guard came, took him out of the cell, then returned him [later]. [The Iraqi] was beaten so badly that he defecated and had bloody urine. He was unable to control [his bodily functions].

Wiedner asked whether other detainees talked about the various methods of torture used. P28 said that they talked about electric shocks, beating, and Shabh [hung by hands with toes barely touching the floor for many hours].

Wiedner asked P28 to which torturing methods he was subjected. P28 said that he was not tortured. There was one person who went to interrogation and had to be carried back to the cell. His situation was bad.

Wiedner recalled P28's comment that he was beaten during the first interrogation. P28 said that beating was normal, but his major problem was the psychological condition. He did nothing wrong. When he asked to clear up his security situation [when he was at the checkpoint], he never expected to be detained and badly treated, especially because he was a state employee. Unfortunately, he was humiliated and beaten like everyone else.

Wiedner asked P28 who asked questions and who beat him during the interrogation. P28 said that he was blindfolded. He could only see for less than a minute at the end of the interrogation.

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that "[he] sat on his knees, the interrogator was in front of [him], and [he] was beaten on his feet, body and legs." Wiedner asked if this was Falaqa. P28 said that there are many types of Falaqa, but essentially: one lays down and raises his legs.

Wiedner asked if what he just described happened to P28. P28 said that it happened, but it was not called Falaqa. He was just randomly beaten.

Wiedner said that P28 described how he was beaten from behind, then his ear was hit. P28 said yes, most of the beating was from behind.

Wiedner asked if the interrogator and the person beating P28 communicated with each other or if there were instructions or orders to beat P28. P28 said that, most likely, the interrogator and guard agreed in advance that the guard would hit P28 if the interrogator did not like P28's answer.

Wiedner recalled that P28 said in police questioning that the individuals referred to each other as "Sidi" and that one of them said "do this." Wiedner asked if that was correct. P28 said yes.

Wiedner asked if P28's family knew where he was. P28 said that nobody knew where he was. In general, people assumed that detainees from Harasta were taken to the Inner Branch (but they never knew for certain).

Wiedner asked P28 if the interrogations took place in the basement or somewhere else. P28 said that the "Death Cell" was underground and it did not have windows. The external chamber [cell] had a window at the top of the wall and [the detainees] were able to see the sky. However, it was closed and the detainees were not allowed to open it.

Wiedner asked if the interrogation room was on the same floor [as P28's cell] or if P28 had to go up or down stairs. P28 did not remember.

Wiedner asked if P28 heard screams during the interrogation. P28 said that it was normal to hear [the screams]. He thought that the interrogation rooms were close to each other, but he was not sure if the screams came from another room or another corridor. The prison was a place for torture, not for interrogation. In the external chamber [cell], the detainees could hear sounds of people being beaten and screams.

Wiedner said that P28 mentioned how he suffers from tinnitus. Wiedner asked him to elaborate. P28 said that his body is abnormal now. He has diabetes, high blood-pressure, backpain, and had a cardiac catheterization. He takes seven medications. He is not able to escape the psychological pressure. He remembers the detainees. No one did anything wrong. One of the detainees was a young man who was going to get married soon. He was detained at a checkpoint and is still not released. Accusations were made against everyone: from arms to terrorism to demonstrating. The young man was accused of being armed. He was one of five people detained in a group, none of whom have been released. P28 knew them personally. Three of the five were brothers from the same father. Even if they were not executed, then it is impossible for them to still be alive.

Wiedner recalled P28's statement during police questioning that 90% of the detainees did nothing wrong. P28 said yes. Everyone with whom he spoke in the [cell] said that they were not armed. [The security forces] brought people from the streets. But at that time, it was impossible for anyone who was armed to get caught by the security forces.

Wiedner asked P28 if the security forces knew that the detainees did nothing wrong. P28 said that when one hears phrases like "why would you bring them here if they did nothing?", then what do you expect? Indeed, people were brought from the streets and the detainees witnessed that.

Wiedner asked P28 if he heard detainees complain that they did nothing wrong. P28 confirmed.

Questioning by Prosecutor Klinge

Prosecutor Klinge asked P28 what other methods of torture he mentioned during police questioning [Klinge referred to the term “plastic”]. P28 said that he was hit with a plastic cable.

Klinge was referring to something else that P28 mentioned during police questioning. More specifically “melted plastic”.<sup>2</sup> P28 said that he saw a person on whom “they” dripped melted plastic on his head and back. The plastic drops seared the man’s shirt and flesh. Another person was burned with spray. “They” ignited the spray and burned him. P28 saw that in the external chamber [cell].

Klinge mentioned that P28 said during police questioning that there were suicide attempts. P28 said that someone attempted suicide. Due to psychological pressure, people lost their minds. Someone put his hands behind his back and rammed himself against the wall. The prison guard came and took the man for 30 minutes to an hour, then brought him back. The detainee was doing this movement all day [P28 demonstrated a jerking movement]. He was unable to talk. P28 thought that it was due to electric shock, but he was not sure. The detainee’s situation was bad.

Klinge mentioned sexual abuse. P28 said that he did not see sexual abuse, but he heard about it. P28 did not know whether it happened at this Branch or at another one. Detainees heard about electric shock being used on male genitals.

Klinge asked if it was correct that P28 did not know if sexual assault happened at Al-Khatib Branch. P28 confirmed.

Klinge asked if it was correct that there were female detainees. P28 said that in the “Death Cell,” he heard women’s voices. There was a women’s cell nearby. When P28 left interrogation, a female shouted her name to P28 and asked that he tell her relatives about her if he was released. P28 did not remember her name. There was also a young man who sat near the air hatch and could look through it. He told the detainees that the guards took naked women out of a cell.

Klinge asked what P28 meant by “naked.” P28 was naked due to the bad ventilation. All the detainees were naked. They sat naked on the tile floor. In the external chamber [cell], there were blankets, but no one used them because they were dirty and lice-infested.

Klinge asked again what P28 meant by “naked.” P28 said that “we” are a conservative Muslim society. In a sense, a girl who typically wears a hijab was considered “naked” if she was unallowed to cover her hair [during detention]. If a girl only wore her underwear during detention, then she was “totally naked” which usually meant that she was sexually assaulted.

Klinge recalled that P28 said during police questioning that the guards took women upstairs for their amusement. P28 said yes, the young man who sat next to the door told that to the [detainees].

Klinge asked if P28 heard women scream. P28 said that he heard one woman shout when he went to interrogation. She told P28 about her existence.

Klinge asked P28 if he heard about sexual abuse in Al-Khatib Branch. P28 said that he heard about women who became pregnant in prison, but not necessarily in Al-Khatib Branch. Sexual abuse was normal in the security branches.

